UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

Dar.
PR1171
A549
v. 8

Darlington Memorial Library

THE WORKS

OF THE

BRITISH POETS.

WITH

PREFACES,

BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL;

BY

ROBERT ANDERSON, M. D.

VOLUME EIGHTH.

CONTAINING THE WORKS OF

POPE,	PATTISON,	BROOME,
GAY,	HAMMOND,	PITT,
TICKELL,	SAVAGE,	AND
SOMERVILE,	HILL,	BLAIR.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR JOHN & ARTHUR ARCH, No 23. GRACE-CHURCH-STREET;
AND FOR BELL & BRADFUTE, AND J. MUNDELL & Co. EDINBURGH.

1794.

THE

POETICAL WORKS

OF

ALEXANDER POPE, Esq.

Containing

PASTORALS,	DUNCIAD,
ESSAY ON CRITICISM,	ODES,
ELEGY ON AN UNFORTUNATE LADY,	EPISTLES,
RAPE OF THE LOCK,	EPITAPHS,
ELOISA TO ABELARD,	IMITATIONS,
ESSAY ON MAN,	TRANSLATIONS,

&c. &c. &c.

To which is prefixed

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR.

Yet peace—new muſic floats on Æther's wings;
Say, is it Harmony herſelf who ſings?
No! while enraptur'd Sylphs the ſong inſpire,
'Tis POPE who ſweetly wakes the ſilver lyre,
To melting notes, more muſically clear
Than Ariel whiſper'd in Belinda's ear.
Too ſoon he quits them for a ſharper tone;
See him, though form'd to fill the epic throne
Decline the ſceptre of that wide domain,
To bear a lictor's rod in ſatire's train,
And, ſhrouded in a miſt of moral ſpleen,
Behold him cloſe the viſionary ſcene.

HAYLEY'S ESSAY ON EPIC POETRY, EPISTLE III.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED BY MUNDELL AND SON, ROYAL BANK CLOSE.

Anno 1794.

THE LIFE OF POPE.

THE life and writings of POPE, "the great Poet of Reaſon," and "the Prince of Rhyme," have exhauſted the copiouſneſs of Ruffhead, and received every poſſible illuſtration from the candid and well informed criticiſm of Spence, the elegant and claſſical taſte of Dr. Warton, and the acute preciſion of Dr. Johnſon.

The facts ſtated, in the preſent account, are chiefly taken from the narratives of Ruffhead, and Dr. Johnſon, whoſe copiouſneſs and accuracy leave little to be corrected or ſupplied.

Ruffhead's information was collected from original manuſcripts, communicated by Warburton, and Dr. Johnſon's intelligence from Spence's MS. collections, communicated by the Duke of Newcaſtle.

Alexander Pope was born in London, May 22, 1688. His father, Alexander Pope, was a linen-draper in the Strand, of a good family in Oxfordſhire, and a diſtant relation of the Earl of Downe. His mother, Editha Turner, was the daughter of William Turner, Eſq. of York. She had three brothers, one of whom was killed, another died in the ſervice of Charles I. and the eldeſt, on the diſcomfiture of the royaliſts, going abroad, and becoming a general officer in Spain, left her what remained of the family eſtate, after ſequeſtrations and forfeiture. Both parents were Papiſts.

About the time of the Revolution, his father quitted his trade, and retired to Binfield in Windſor Foreſt, worth about 20,000l. which he put into a cheſt, and ſpent as he wanted it; for, being a Papiſt, he could not purchaſe land, and he made a point of conſcience not to lend it to the new government; ſo that when Pope came to the inheritance, great part of the money was expended.

He was, from his birth, of a very delicate conſtitution, but is ſaid to have ſhown remarkable gentleneſs and ſweetneſs of diſpoſition. His voice, when he was young, was ſo pleaſing, that he was called in fondneſs "the little nightingale."

He was taught to read very early by an aunt, and when he was ſeven or eight years old, diſcovered an eager deſire for information and improvement. He firſt learned to write by copying printed books, which he executed with great neatneſs and accuracy; though his ordinary hand was not elegant.

At eight years old he was placed in Hampſhire, under Taverner, a Romiſh prieſt, who taught him the Greek and Latin rudiments together. He met with "Ogilby's Homer," and "Sandys's Ovid," which he read with a delight that ſhowed the bent of his genius. Ogilby's aſſiſtance he never repaid with any praiſe; but of Sandys he declared in his notes to the Iliad, that Engliſh poetry owed much of its beauty to his tranſlations.

He was ſent from Taverner, under whom his proficiency was conſiderable, to a private ſchool at Twyford near Wincheſter, where he continued a year; from this ſchool he was ſent to another at Hyde Park Corner, being then about ten years of age.

In the two laſt ſchools he conſidered himſelf as having made very little progreſs, of which he was ſo ſenſible, that among his earlieſt pieces, there is a ſatire on his maſter at Twyford; yet, under thoſe maſters, he tranſlated more than a fourth part of "Ovid's Metamorphoſes."

While he was at the ſchool at Hyde Park Corner, he was frequently carried to the play houſe, and was ſo captivated with the drama, that he turned the chief tranſactions of the "Iliad" into a kind of play, compoſed of a number of ſpeeches from Ogilby's tranſlation, connected with verſes of his own.

He prevailed upon his ſchool-fellows to take part in this play, and upon his maſter's gardener, to act the part of Ajax.

At twelve years old, he was called by his father to Binfield, and there he had for a few months the aſſiſtance of one Deane, another prieſt, of whom he learned only to conſtrue a little of "Tully's Offices," which, after having tranſlated "Ovid," he might certainly do without great advances in learning.

Hitherto, then, he muſt have known little more than what he learned during one year under Taverner; and from this time, till twenty, he became his own preceptor; and gained what other knowledge he had by reading the claſſics, eſpecially the poets, to whom he applied with great aſſiduity and delight.

His primary and principal purpose was to be a poet, with which his father accidentally concurred, by proposing subjects, and obliging him to correct his performance, by many revisals, after which, when he was satisfied, he would say, " These are good rhymes."

In perusing the English poets he soon distinguished the versification of Dryden, which he considered as the model to be studied, and was impressed with such veneration for his instructor, that he persuaded a friend to conduct him to a coffee-house which Dryden frequented, and pleased himself with having seen him.

" Who does not wish that Dryden could have known the value of the homage that was paid him, and foreseen the greatness of his young admirer ?"

The earliest of his productions is the Ode on Solitude, written when he was twelve, in which there is nothing remarkable.

His time was now wholly spent in reading and writing. He soon learned to read Homer in the original, as he himself records in one of his imitations of Horace.

> Bred up at home, full early I begun
> To read in Greek the wrath of Peleus' son.

As he read the classics, he amused himself with translating them ; and at fourteen made a version of the first book of the Thebaid of Statius, which, with some revision, he afterwards published. He translated likewise the Epistle of Sappho to Phaon, and Dryope and Pomona, from Ovid, which he afterwards printed.

He was also tempted, by " Dryden's Fables," to try his skill in reviving and imitating Chaucer's January and May, and the Prologue of the Wife of Bath, which he put into modern English.

He sometimes imitated the English poets, and professed to have written about this time, the poem upon Silence, in imitation of Rochester's " Nothing." He had now formed his versification, assisted by the rich melody of Dryden ; and the smoothness of his numbers surpassed his original.

When he was fifteen, having made a considerable progress in the learned languages, he went to London to learn the French and Italian, which, by diligent application, he soon acquired.

He then returned to Binfield, and delighted himself with his own poetry. He wrote a comedy, a tragedy, Alcander an epic poem in four books, with panegyrics on all the princes of Europe; and, as he confesses, " thought himself the greatest genius that ever was."

The subject of the comedy is not known, but the tragedy was founded on the legend of St. Genevieve. Most of his puerile productions were afterwards destroyed. The epic poem was burnt by the persuasion of Atterbury. Some of its extravagancies are produced in the Art of Sinking in poetry, signed Anonymous.

About this time, it is related, that he translated Tully on Old Age ; and that, besides his books of poetry and criticism, he read " Temple's Essays," and " Locke on Human Understanding."

Books were not the only means through which he acquired information. He early procured the acquaintance of men of talents and literature, and improved himself by conversation.

At sixteen, he acquired the friendship of Sir William Trumball, a statesman of sixty, who had been in the highest offices at home and abroad.

From that age, the life of Pope, as an author, may be properly computed. He now wrote his Pastorals, which were for some time handed about among poets, and critics, and at last printed in Tonson's " Miscellany," 1709, in the same volume with the " Pastorals" of Philips.

He had by this time become acquainted with Garth, Steele, Gay, Addison, Congreve, Granville, Halifax, Somers, Walsh, Wycherly, Cromwell, and other wits. He lost the friendship of Wycherly, by correcting his bad poetry, and of Cromwell, by correcting his bad taste.

Their correspondence afforded the public its first knowledge of Pope's epistolary powers; for his letters were given by Cromwell to Mrs. Thomas, and she, many years afterwards, sold them to Curll, who inserted them in a volume of his miscellanies.

Walsh was one of his first encouragers. He received an advice from him, which seems to have regulated his studies. Walsh advised him to correctness, hitherto neglected by the English poets, and therefore an untrodden path to fame.

He had now declared himself a poet, and thinking himself entitled to poetical conversation, began at seventeen to frequent Will's Coffee-house, where the wits of that time used to assemble.

Soon after the Pastorals, appeared the Essay on Criticism, which procured him, as it deserved, a very high character. It was praiſed by Addiſon, attacked by Dennis, and commented by Warburton, who has diſcovered in it ſuch order and connection as was not perceived by Addiſon, nor, as is ſaid, intended by the author. It has been tranſlated into French by Hamilton, by Robotham, and by Reſnel. It has alſo been tranſlated into Latin verſe by ſeveral writers; particularly by Smart, and Dr. Kirkpatrick, the author of a poem called "The Sea-Piece," which, though it is little known, has many very fine paſſages.

About the ſame time, he wrote the Ode for St. Cæcilia's Day, which he undertook at the deſire of Steele.

In the "Spectator" was publiſhed the Meſſiah, which he firſt ſubmitted to the peruſal of Steele, and corrected in compliance with his criticiſm.

The Elegy to the Memory of an Unfortunate Lady, was probably written about the time when his Eſſay on Criticiſm was publiſhed. Who the lady was, has not been aſcertained. According to Ruffhead, ſhe was a woman of high rank and large fortune, the ward of an uncle; ſhe was in love with a young gentleman of an inferior condition. The uncle diſapproved of her attachment, and propoſed another perſon as a match. Finding ſhe was determined to abide by her own choice, he ſent her abroad. Deprived of every opportunity of converſing or correſponding with her lover, ſhe became deſperate, and procured a ſword, which ſhe directed to her heart.

In the "Gentleman's Magazine," vol. li. p. 314, it is aſſerted, that the lady's name was Withinbury; that ſhe was in love with Pope, and would have married him; that her guardian, though ſhe was deformed in her perſon, looked upon ſuch a match as beneath her, and ſent her to a convent, where ſhe put an end to her life. How far this account is true, cannot be known. Pope certainly, from the Elegy, and the concluding lines of the Eloiſa, appears to have been very deeply affected by her fate. Dr. Johnſon has cenſured her conduct with unreaſonable ſeverity. Haſty and culpable ſhe was undoubtedly; but it ought to be conſidered, that no perſon ever has, or can be happy againſt violent inclinations, with conſtancy to a forced partner for life. To thoſe on whom love has made a deep impreſſion, nothing but its object can give happineſs or peace of mind; conſiderations, indeed, that weigh little with the family pride of parents. It is evident that an indulgence of paſſion may be attended with happineſs, but that the diſappointment of it cannot.

In 1712, he produced The Dying Chriſtian to his Soul, in imitation of the verſes of Adrian, and the fragment of Sappho, by the advice of Steele. It ſtrongly reſembles an ode of Flatman, of whom he was probably a reader, as he certainly was of Craſhaw, Carew, Quarles, and Herbert.

He contributed to the Spectator, Nos. 404, 408, and 409, and ſome other papers.

In 1712, he publiſhed The Rape of the Lock, in its preſent form. It was occaſioned by a frolic of gallantry, in which Lord Petre cut off a lock of Mrs. Arabella Fermor's hair. This trifling cauſe produced a ſerious quarrel between the two families. Mr. Caryll, Secretary to King James's Queen, and author of the comedy of "Sir Solomon Single," and of ſeveral tranſlations in "Dryden's Miſcellanies," ſolicited Pope to endeavour a reconciliation, by a ludicrous poem. The firſt ſketch was written in leſs than a fortnight, and publiſhed in 1711, in two cantos, without his name. It was received ſo well, that he enlarged it by the addition of the machinery of the Sylphs, and extended it into five cantos. At its firſt appearance, Addiſon declared it was "merum ſal," a delicious little thing, and gave him no encouragement to retouch it. This was imputed to jealouſy in Addiſon, but contains no proof that he was actuated by any bad paſſion. Pope fortunately did not follow Addiſon's advice; his attempt was juſtified by ſucceſs.

When the Guardian was begun, he contributed the paper concerning the little club, under the name of Dick Diſtich, a letter ſigned Gnatho, a deſcription of the Gardens of Alcinous, and a very ſevere ironical criticiſm on "Philips's Paſtorals," in which he pretends to praiſe Philips, but with great art takes the ſuperiority to himſelf.

About this time, he publiſhed The Temple of Fame, written two years before; which, as Steele obſerves, has a thouſand beauties.

In 1713, he publiſhed Windſor Foreſt, of which part was written at ſixteen, and the latter was added afterwards. It is dedicated to Lanſdowne, who was then high in reputation and influence among the Tories.

When the tragedy of "Cato" made its appearance, he introduced it by a ſolemn and ſublime prologue; and when Dennis publiſhed his "Remarks," undertook, not indeed to vindicate, but to revenge Addiſon by A Narrative of the Madneſs of John Dennis. Addiſon expreſſed no approbation of the ridicule of Pope againſt Dennis, and perhaps did not think he deſerved much by his officiouſneſs.

Two other pamphlets, publiſhed about this time againſt Edmund Curll, a bookſeller, who lived by the publication and ſale of productions on which reſpectable men of the profeſſion would have no intereſt, are aſcribed to Pope, and printed in "Pope and Swift's Miſcellanies." Curll was concerned in many libellous pieces, both againſt individuals and the ſtate; but it cannot be denied that Engliſh literature owes him conſiderable obligations.

About this time, he wrote the Epiſtle from Eloiſa to Abelard; in conſequence, as Savage told Dr. Johnſon, of his peruſal of Prior's "Nutbrown Maid," which it not only excells, but every compoſition of the ſame kind.

He had a ſtrong inclination to unite the Art of Painting with that of Poetry, and put himſelf under the tuition of Jervas, to whom, about this time, he addreſſed an encomiaſtic Epiſtle, with "Dryden's tranſlation of Freſnoy."

A picture of Betterton, copied by Pope from Kneller, was in the poſſeſſion of the late Earl of Mansfield, and is ſaid to be ſtill at Caenwood.

After Betterton's death, he publiſhed, under his name, a verſion into modern Engliſh, of Chaucer's prologues, and one of his tales, which were believed by Fenton to have been the performance of Pope himſelf.

In 1713, when he was in his twenty-fifth year, he circulated propoſals for publiſhing his tranſlation of the Iliad, with notes, by ſubſcription, in 6 vols. 4to, for ſix guineas.

The propoſals were very favourably received; and the leading men, political and literary, of both parties, were buſy to recommend his undertaking, and to promote his intereſt; but the Tories, in general, encouraged the ſubſcription much more than the Whigs.

To him the hands of jarring faction join,
To heap their tribute on his Homer's ſhrine. HAYLEY.

His contract with Lintot the bookſeller was very advantageous. It was agreed that he ſhould receive 200 l. for the copy-right of each volume, and that Lintot ſhould ſupply the copies to be delivered to ſubſcribers, or preſented to friends, at his own expence.

The ſubſcribers were five hundred and ſeventy-five. The copies for which ſubſcriptions were given, were ſix hundred and fifty-four; but only ſix hundred and ſixty were printed. For thoſe copies Pope had nothing to pay; he therefore received, including the two hundred pounds a volume, five thouſand three hundred and twenty pounds four ſhillings, without deduction.

At firſt he found himſelf embarraſſed with difficulties, which retarded his progreſs; but practice increaſed his facility of verſification, and in a ſhort time he repreſents himſelf as diſpatching regularly fifty lines a-day.

It is not very likely, as Dr. Johnſon obſerves, that he overflowed with Greek; but Latin tranſlations were always at hand, and from them he could obtain his author's ſenſe with ſufficient certainty. He had the poetical tranſlation of Eobanus Heſſus, the French Homers of La Valterie, and Dacier, and the Engliſh of Chapman, Hobbes, and Ogilby. With Chapman he had very frequent conſultations; and perhaps never tranſlated any paſſage till he had read his verſion, which, indeed, he has been ſometimes ſuſpected of uſing inſtead of the original.

Broome, in the preface to his "Poems," declares himſelf the commentator, "in part upon the Iliad;" and it appears from Fenton's letter, preſerved in the Muſeum, that Broome was at firſt engaged in conſulting Euſtathius, of whoſe work there was then no Latin verſion; but that after a time, he deſiſted. Another Cambridge man was then employed, who ſoon grew weary of the work; and a third, that was recommended by Thirlby, is now diſcovered to have been Jortin, a man ſince well known to the learned world, who complained that Pope having accepted and approved his performance, never teſtified any curioſity to ſee him. Broome then offered his ſervice a ſecond time, and was probably accepted, as they had afterwards a cloſer correſpondence.

Parnell contributed the Life of Homer, which Pope found ſo harſh, that he took great pains in correcting it; and by his own diligence, with ſuch help as kindneſs or money could procure him, in ſomewhat more than five years, he completed the Engliſh Iliad, with notes, which is allowed to be the beſt verſion of poetry that ever was written; and its publication muſt, therefore, be conſidered as one of the great events in the annals of learning. Halifax expected the dedication of his verſion; but he paſſed over peers and ſtateſmen to inſcribe it to Congreve. While the tranſlation was in its progreſs, Mr. Craggs, Secretary of State, nobly offered to procure him a penſion, which he thought proper to decline.

Proud of the frank reward his talents find,
And nobly conſcious of no venal mind;
With the juſt world his fair account he clears,
And owns no debt to princes or to peers. HAYLEY.

The original manuſcript of the Iliad, written upon envelopes of letters, and accidental fragments of paper, being obtained by Bolingbroke as a curioſity, deſcended from him to Mallet, and is now, by the ſolicitation of the late Dr. Mary, repoſited in the Muſeum.

The firſt volume of the Iliad was publiſhed in 1715, and a verſion of the firſt book by Tickell, was publiſhed the ſame year, which Pope ſuſpected was really written by Addiſon, with an intention to injure his character and intereſt.

In an advertiſement prefixed by Tickell, he profeſſes to have no "other view in publiſhing this ſmall ſpecimen of Homer's Iliad, than to beſpeak, if poſſible, the favour of the public to a tranſlation of the Odyſſey, wherein he had already made ſome progreſs."

Whether that was, or was not his motive, there is no evidence that Addiſon cauſed it to be publiſhed from envy and malice, as has been aſſerted, to injure Pope. Addiſon's oppoſition to Pope, at that time, could do him no particular injury; for his ſubſcription was full, and his contract with his bookſeller completed; and if he had been actuated by jealouſy, it is not probable he would have ſpoken ſo highly of Pope's Iliad in the "Freeholder" of May 7, 1716.

Pope, whoſe diſpoſition is acknowledged to have been irritable, was hurt beyond meaſure at this tranſlation; and it is probable that the character of Atticus was written in the heat of his reſentment on this occaſion, as he expreſſed the very ſame ſentiments to Mr. Craggs, in his letter of July 15, 1715. But it does not appear, as Ruffhead aſſerts, that there was any open breach between Addiſon and Pope upon this occaſion, and Pope expreſsly tells Craggs there was none.

Addiſon, therefore, unleſs better proof can be given, muſt be acquitted of this odious charge, which ſeems to have been founded on ſome miſapprehenſion in Pope; who, however excuſeable he may be thought in writing the character of Atticus in the firſt tranſports of poetical indignation, cannot be juſtified in ſuppreſſing it till after the death of Addiſon, and then permitting its publication; and at length, at the diſtance of eighteen years, tranſmitting it to poſterity ingrafted in his Epiſtle to Dr. Arbuthnot.

The inferior tribe of writers endeavoured to depreciate the Iliad. Dennis attacked it with his uſual bitterneſs and ſcurrility; and among others, Ducket and Burnet, who was afterwards a judge of no mean reputation, cenſured it in a piece called "Homerides;"

In 1715, he prevailed on his father, it is ſaid, to ſell the eſtate at Binfield, and purchaſed the leaſe of the houſe at Twickenham, ſo much celebrated for his reſidence in it. How his father could have ſaleable property in land, being a Papiſt, does not appear.

Here he planted the vines, and the quincunx, which he has celebrated in his poems; and being under the neceſſity of making a ſubterraneous paſſage to a garden on the other ſide of the road, he dignified it with the title of a grotto; the decoration of which was the favourite amuſement of his declining years.

In 1717, he collected his former works into one quarto volume, to which he prefixed a preface, written with great ſpritelineſs and elegance.

In this year his father died ſuddenly, in his 75th year, having paſſed twenty-nine years in retirement. He is not known but by the character which his ſon has given him in the Epiſtle to Dr. Arbuthnot.

In 1720, he was infected with the general contagion; but on the firſt fall of the South Sea Stock, was cured. He ſold out juſt in time to ſave himſelf from loſs.

The next year, he publiſhed the ſelect poems of his friend Parnell, with an elegant poetical dedication to the Earl of Oxford.

In 1721, he gave to the world his edition of Shakſpeare, in 6 vols. 4to.; for which Tonſon demanded a ſubſcription of ſix guineas, and was ſucceſsful in diſpoſing of moſt of the copies. This undertaking, to which he was induced by a reward of two hundred and ſeventeen pounds twelve ſhillings, is not reckoned to have contributed much to his reputation. Dr. Johnſon obſerves, he did many things wrong, and left many things undone.

Theobald, firſt in his "Shakſpeare Reſtored," and then in a formal edition, detected his deficiencies with all the inſolence of victory; from which time he became an enemy to editors, commentators, and verbal critics.

About this time, he publiſhed propoſals for a tranſlation of the Odyſſey, in 5 vols. 4to. for five guineas, and was aſſiſted by Fenton, and Broome; who, as Ruffhead relates, had already begun the work. He tranſlated only twelve books himſelf, his aſſociates the reſt. The account of the ſeveral ſhares, ſubjoined at the concluſion, is now known not to be true. The firſt, fourth, nineteenth, and twentieth books were tranſlated by Fenton; the ſecond, ſixth, eighth, eleventh, twelfth, ſixteenth, eighteenth, and twenty-third books, by Broome; but he reviſed their verſions. Broome wrote the notes, for which he was not over liberally rewarded. The agreement with Lintot was the ſame as for the Iliad, except that he was to receive but one hundred pounds for each volume.

The ſubſcribers were five hundred and ſeventy-four, and the copies eight hundred and nineteen; ſo that his profit, when he had paid Fenton 300 l. and Broome 600 l. was ſtill very conſiderable.

Spence wrote a criticiſm on the Engliſh Odyſſey, which was eſteemed impartial, judicious, and candid. Pope was pleaſed with it, and ſought the acquaintance of the writer, who lived with him from that time in great familiarity, compiled memorials of his converſation, and obtained, by his influence, very valuable preferments in the church.

In 1723, he appeared before the Lords at the trial of Biſhop Atterbury, to give an account of his domeſtic life, and private employment, that it might appear how little time he had left for plots. He had but few words to utter, and in thoſe few he made ſeveral blunders.

His letters to Atterbury, both before and after his misfortune, are full of eſteem, gratitude, and tenderneſs. He often viſited him in the Tower. At their laſt interview, Atterbury preſented him with a Bible. Whatever might be Atterbury's political principles and views, he certainly poſſeſſed a highly cultivated underſtanding, an elegant taſte, and a feeling heart.

In 1726, Voltaire having viſited England, was introduced to Pope, and wrote him a letter of conſolation, on his being overturned in paſſing a river, in the night, in Bolingbroke's coach, with the windows cloſed, from which the poſtillion ſnatched him, when he was in danger of being drowned, by breaking the glaſs; the fragments of which cut two of his fingers, in ſuch a manner that he loſt their uſe.

In 1727, Swift viſited England, and joined with Pope in publiſhing three volumes of Miſcellanies. Pope contributed the Memoirs of a Pariſh Clerk, Stradling verſus Styles, Virgilius Reſtauratus, the Baſſet Table, and the Art of Sinking in Poetry, deſigned as a part of the Memoirs of Martinus Scriblerus, a ſatire projected in conjunction with Arbuthnot and Swift, On the Abuſes of Human Learning, in the manner of Cervantes.

The year following, he publiſhed the Dunciad, one of his greateſt and moſt elaborate performances; the hiſtory of which is very minutely related by himſelf, in a dedication which he wrote to Lord Middleſex, in the name of Savage.

Pope appears by this narrative to have been the aggreſſor; for nobody can believe that the letters in the Art of Sinking in Poetry were placed at random. If his intention had been to expoſe to ridicule and contempt, calumniators either of himſelf or of others, he ought to have confined himſelf to ſuch libellers. If his deſign was to diſcourage bad writers from giving their productions to the world, he ſhould have ſatirized perſons of that deſcription only. Theobald, Euſden, Blackmore, Philips, De Foe, Bentley, Hill, Welſted, and Cibber, were not ſuch writers as deſerved to be ridiculed; they were not generally ſlanderous, and had not calumniated him in particular. There is much reaſon to believe that he compoſed the Dunciad, partly to be revenged on thoſe who had abuſed him, and partly to diſplay his own ſuperiority. He degraded himſelf by beſtowing on ſcribbling calumniators, even the notice of reſentment; to diſplay ſuperiority was totally unneceſſary, where there could be no competition.

In the ſubſequent editions, he thought fit to omit the name of HIM, who expoſtulated with him in a manner ſuperior to all mean ſolicitation, and obliged him to ſneak and ſhuffle, ſometimes to deny, and ſometimes to apologiſe. He alſo omitted the name of Burnet, and ſubſtituted cordial friendſhip in the room of pious paſſion, which was underſtood by Ducket to convey a ſcandalous aſperſion, and added a ſolemn diſavowal of his malignant meaning.

The Dunciad is addreſſed to Swift; of the notes, part were written by Arbuthnot; and an apologetical letter was prefixed by Cleland, but ſuppoſed to have been written by Pope.

In 1731, he publiſhed an Epiſtle to the Earl of Burlington, on Taſte, in which he ſeverely criticiſes the houſe, furniture, garden, and entertainments of Timon, who was ſuppoſed to mean the Duke of Chandos, to whom he had been obliged. He wrote an exculpatory letter to the Duke, who accepted of his excuſe, without believing his profeſſions.

The next year he loſt his friend Gay; who was a moſt amiable man, and loved by Pope with great tenderneſs.

The following year deprived him of his mother, who lived to the age of ninety-three; and did not die unlamented. His filial piety, Dr. Johnſon obſerves, was, in the higheſt degree, amiable, and exemplary; his parents had the happineſs of living till he was at the ſummit of his poetical reputation, till he was at eaſe in his fortune, and without a rival in his fame; and found no diminution of his reſpect or tenderneſs. Whatever was his pride, to them he was obedient; and whatever was his irritability, to them he was gentle. Life has among its ſoothing and quiet comforts few things better to beſtow than ſuch a ſon.

About this time, Curll publiſhed the ſurreptitious copy of Letters between Pope and his Friends; which were clandeſtinely conveyed to him for publication, as is believed, by Pope's direction, that he might decently and defenſively publiſh them himſelf. The meſſenger was Worſdale the painter.

From the peruſal of his Letters, Mr. Allen conceived the deſire of being acquainted with him. When Pope told him his purpoſe of aſſerting his property, by a genuine edition, he offered to pay the coſt. This, however, Pope did not accept; but, in time, with ſucceſs, ſolicited a ſubſcription for a quarto volume, which appeared in 1737.

In 1733, he publiſhed the firſt epiſtle of his Eſſay on Man, without his name, which, being favourably received, the ſecond and third Epiſtles were publiſhed; and being now generally ſuſpected of writing them, at laſt, in 1734, he avowed the fourth, and claimed the honour of a moral poet.

In the concluſion, it is acknowledged, that the doctrine of the Eſſay was received from Bolingbroke, to whom it is inſcribed, who is ſaid to have ridiculed Pope, as having advanced principles contrary to his own; and of which he did not perceive the conſequences. However that may be, it is manifeſt that the pleaſure of the taſte and fancy, from the peruſal of the Eſſay, is much greater than the information or conviction of the underſtanding.

The fame of the Eſſay on Man was very great; it was tranſlated into French proſe, and afterwards, by Reſnel, into verſe. The tranſlations were read by Crouſaz, a profeſſor in Switzerland. He believed that the poſitions of Pope were intended to repreſent the whole courſe of things as a chain of fatality, and made remarks on the Eſſay, tending to eſtabliſh the free agency of man.

The celebrated Warburton undertook the defence of Pope, againſt the imputation of fataliſm in "the Republic of Letters." Warburton, in his exculpatory comment, ſhowed very great ingenuity, but is not generally reckoned to have completely removed the objections.

From this time, Pope lived in the cloſeſt intimacy with his commentator, who had before favoured his adverſaries, and amply rewarded his kindneſs and zeal; for he introduced him to Mr. Murray, afterwards Lord Mansfield, by whoſe intereſt he became preacher at Lincoln's Inn, and to Mr. Allen, who gave him his niece and his eſtate.

He was now received with attention, not only by the nobility, but by the Prince of Wales, who honoured him with his friendſhip, and dined at his houſe. It is ſaid that Queen Caroline expreſſed an intention of viſiting him at Twickenham, but it was never accompliſhed.

In 1733, he publiſhed the Epiſtle to Lord Bathurſt, on the Uſe of Riches; in which he draws the celebrated character of Kyrl the Man of Roſs.

In 1734, he inſcribed to Lord Cobham his Characters of Men, in which he endeavours to eſtabliſh and exemplify his favourite theory of the Ruling Paſſion; but with ſo little ſkill, that in the examples by which he illuſtrates and confirms it, he has confounded paſſions, appetites, and habits.

He added, ſoon after, an Epiſtle on the Characters of Women; ſuppoſed to have been addreſſed to Martha Blount, to whom, during the greateſt part of his life, he had been very much attached. The character of the Ducheſs of Marlborough, under the name of Atoſſa, was afterwards inſerted, with no great honour to his gratitude.

Between 1730 and 1740, he publiſhed, from time to time, his Imitations of Horace, generally with his name, which modernize ancient ideas and characters, more ſucceſsfully than any which had before appeared.

His Epiſtle to Dr. Arbuthnot, was publiſhed in January 1735, about a month before the death of his friend. It is to be regretted, Dr. Johnſon obſerves, that either honour or pleaſure ſhould have been miſſed by Arbuthnot; a man eſtimable for his learning, amiable for his life, and venerable for his piety.

Arbuthnot was a man of great comprehenſion, ſkilful in his profeſſion, verſed in the ſciences, acquainted with ancient literature, and able to animate his maſs of knowledge, by a bright and active imagination; a ſcholar, with great brilliance of wit; a wit, who in the crowd of life retained and diſcovered a noble ardour of religious zeal.

In this epiſtle, Pope vindicates himſelf from cenſures, and, with dignity rather than arrogance, enforces his own claims to kindneſs and reſpect. In the character of Sporus he ridicules Lord Hervey, who had written an invective againſt him. Whether he or Pope made the firſt attack, perhaps cannot now be eaſily known.

In 1738, he publiſhed too ſatirical dialogues, named from the year of their appearance. In the firſt he degraded himſelf, by deſcending to party politics. In the ſecond he attacked ſeveral private characters, which had nearly expoſed him to the reſentment of the legiſlature.

The Memoirs of Martinus Scriblerus were publiſhed about this time, extending to the firſt book of a work, projected by the Scriblerus Club; the production, probably of Arbuthnot, with a few touches perhaps by Pope. Beſides its general reſemblance to "Don Quixote," there will be found in it particular imitations of "The Hiſtory of Mr. Ouffle."

In 1740, he publiſhed a collection of Latin poems, written by Italians, in 2 vols. 12mo. including the former collection made by Atterbury, but injuriouſly omitting his preface.

He publiſhed likewiſe about this time, a revival in ſmoother numbers, of Donne's Satires, which was recommended to him by the Duke of Shrewſbury, and the Earl of Oxford.

In 1742, he added, at Warburton's requeſt, another book to the Dunciad.

In the Epiſtle to Arbuthnot, as in the Dunciad, he had attacked Cibber with great ſeverity. Cibber, who well knew the irritability of Pope, and confident that he could give him pain, wrote a ſpirited pamphlet, containing ſeveral ſtories, tending to make him ridiculous. The inceſſant and unappeaſeable malignity of Pope, he imputes to his ridicule of the exploded ſcene of the mummy and the crocodile in The Three Hours after Marriage, ſuppoſed to be the joint production of Gay, Pope, and Arbuthnot. Pope enraged, publiſhed a new edition of the Dunciad, in which he degraded Theobald, and enthroned Cibber in his ſtead. By transferring the ſame ridicule from one to another, he deſtroyed its efficacy. Unhappily the two heroes were of oppoſite characters, and Pope was unwilling to loſe what he had already written; he has therefore depraved his poem, by giving to Cibber the old books, the cold pedantry, and ſluggiſh pertinacity of Theobald. Cibber repaid the Dunciad with another pamphlet, which, though he pretended to diſregard, really gave him great uneaſineſs.

From this time, finding his diſeaſes more oppreſſive, and his vital powers gradually declining, he wrote nothing new, but ſatisfied himſelf with reviſing his former works, in which he received advice and aſſiſtance from Warburton, whoſe hints, in the warmth of gratitude, he followed with all the blindneſs of infatuated affection.

He laid aſide his epic poem, on the ridiculous fiction of the arrival of Brutus, the Trojan, in Britain; which he had begun in blank verſe. The plan is exhibited by Ruffhead; but though the MS. was before him, he has given no ſpecimen.

In 1743, he began to conſider himſelf as approaching to his end. He had for at leaſt five years been afflicted with an aſthma, and other diſorders, which his phyſicians were unable to relieve. While he was yet capable of amuſement and converſation, his literary friends were almoſt continually with him, and endeavoured to alleviate his pain. His favourite, Martha Blount, is ſaid to have neglected him, with ſhameful unkindneſs, in the latter time of his decay. Of this, however, he does not ſeem to have been ſenſible, as he left her the greater part of his property.

In May 1744, his death was approaching; on the 6th he was all day delirious. He afterwards complained of seeing things as through a curtain. He said that his greatest inconvenience was inability to think. He received the Sacrament from a Romish priest; and expressed undoubted confidence of a future state. He died on the evening of the 30th day of May, 1744, in perfect tranquillity; having, a few days before, entered the 57th year of his age. He was buried at Twickenham, near his father and mother, where a monument has been erected to him, by his friend Warburton.

By his will, made in the end of 1743, he appointed Lord Bathurst, Lord Marchmont, Mr. Murray, and Mr. Arbuthnot, his executors, and left the care of his papers to Lord Bolingbroke; and failing him, to Lord Marchmont; and to Warburton, the property of all his works, on which he had written, or should write commentaries, except those of which the property had been sold. To his noble friends he left his pictures, and statues, with some of his favourite books; with other legacies to his other friends, and to his favourite domestics; and the residue of his fortune, to Martha Blount, for her life, and then to be divided among his relations.

The contemptuous mention made in his will of Mr. Allen, and an affected repayment of his benefactions with 150l., brought some reproach on his memory. Martha Blount had been invited with Pope to Mr. Allen's house at Prior Park. Having occasion to go to Bristol for a few days, he left her behind him. In his absence, she signified an inclination to go to the Popish chapel at Bath, and desired of Mr. Allen the use of his chariot; but he, being at that time Mayor of the city, suggested the impropriety of having his carriage seen at the door of a place of worship, to which, as a magistrate, he was at least restrained from giving a sanction, and might be required to suppress; and therefore desired to be excused.

Mrs. Blount resented this refusal, and told Pope of it at his return; and so infected him with her rage, that they both left the house abruptly. She parted from Mr. Allen in a state of irreconcileable dislike, and refused any legacy from Pope, unless he left the world with a disavowal of obligation to him. Pope complied with her demand, and polluted his will with female resentment. Mr. Allen accepted the legacy which he gave to the hospital at Bath.

He lost the favour of Bolingbroke, by a kind of posthumous offence. He had been desired by Bolingbroke to procure the impression of a very few copies of the "Patriot King;" and he assured him that no more copies had been printed than were allowed; but after his death the printer resigned a complete edition of 1500 copies, to the right owner, which Pope had ordered him to print, and to retain in secret. Bolingbroke delivered the whole impression to the flames, and employed Mallet, another friend of Pope, to expose the breach of trust to the public, with all its aggravations. Warburton undertook not indeed to vindicate the action, but to extenuate it by an apology. To this apology an answer was written, in "A letter to the most impudent man living."

His works were published in 9 vols. 8vo. 1751, with a commentary and notes by Warburton. Another edition appeared in 5 vols. 4to. 1769, with an account of his life, and observations on his writings, by Owen Ruffhead, Esq. An edition with notes, has been lately announced by Mr. Wakefield, the learned author of the "Silva Critica" and another by Dr. Warton, the elegant author of the "Essays on the Genius and writings of Pope," in 2 vols. 8vo. 1762, and 1782: A work abounding with information, learning and just principles of taste.

The person of Pope was diminutive and misshapen. In the "Guardian," he compares himself to a spider, and is said to have been protuberant behind and before. His stature was so low, that, to bring him to a level with common tables, it was necessary to raise his seat. But his face was sweet and animated, and his eye remarkably intelligent and piercing. One side was contracted. He wore a fur doublet under a shirt of coarse linen with fine sleeves. When he rose, he was invested in boddice made of stiff canvas, being scarce able to hold himself erect till they were laced. His legs were so slender, that he enlarged their bulk with three pair of stockings, which were drawn on and off by the maid; for he was not able to dress or undress himself, and neither went to bed nor rose without help. His weakness made it very difficult for him to be clean. The feebleness of his frame made him sickly and impatient. Both these causes made him a troublesome guest in the families which he visited. He was perpetually sending the servants on frivolous errands, but took care to compensate their trouble by pecuniary rewards. He expected that every thing should give way to his eaſe or humour. When he wanted to ſleep, he nodded in company, and once ſlumbered at his own table, while the Prince of Wales was talking of poetry. In familiar or convivial converſation he was not diſtinguiſhed by vivacity. In his eating, he was both dainty and voracious; and when he had eaten too much, if a dram had been offered to him, he pretended to be angry, but did not forbear to drink it. It does not appear that he was addicted to wine. His impatience and irritability often led him into little quarrels, that would make him leave the houſes of his friends abruptly. At Lord Oxford's he frequently met Lady Mary Wortley Montague, who knowing his peeviſhneſs, could by no entreaties be reſtrained from contradicting him, till their diſputes were ſharpened to ſuch aſperity, that one or other quitted the houſe. At home he was chiefly diſtinguiſhed for his frugality. It is ſaid that when he had two gueſts in his houſe, he would only ſet a ſingle pint of wine on the table. He ſometimes gave a ſplendid entertainment; and on thoſe occaſions ſhowed taſte, and magnificence. Of his fortune, which was very honourably obtained, he was proud. The great topic of his ridicule is poverty. He was accuſed of loving money; but his love was eagerneſs to gain, not ſolicitude to keep it. He aſſiſted Dodſley with a hundred pounds, that he might open a ſhop, and contributed twenty pounds a-year to the ſubſcription for Savage; and beſtowed conſiderable ſums on charity. He was a faithful and conſtant friend; and notwithſtanding the little defects of his conſtitutional temper, was beloved by them during his life, and remembered with the moſt tender affection after his death. His reſentment was too eaſily excited, and his revenge carried to too great a length. The provocation he received by no means juſtified, in many caſes, the ſevere ſatire of the Dunciad. His malignity to Philips, whom he had at firſt made ridiculous, and then hated for being angry, continued too long. Of his vain deſire to make Bentley contemptible, no good reaſon can be given. He was ſometimes wanton in his attacks, before Chandos, Lady Mary Wortley Montague, and Hill, mean in his retreat. Though, on the whole, a man of integrity, he frequently uſed artifices that bordered on diſingenuity. Thoſe, however, ſeem to have reſulted more from the idea of ſuperiority, than of impoſing upon others. Even that gratification was a weakneſs in the character of Pope. Artifice and cunning require very little ability. A man of ſuch exalted ſuperiority, and ſo little moderation, would naturally have all his delinquencies obſerved; thoſe who could not deny that he was excellent, would rejoice to find that he was not perfect.

Of his intellectual character, the conſtituent and fundamental principle was good ſenſe, a prompt and intuitive perception of conſonance and propriety. He had likewiſe genius; a mind active, ambitious, and adventurous, always inveſtigating, always aſpiring. He was endowed with a fertile invention, and brilliant wit. To aſſiſt theſe powers, he had great ſtrength and exactneſs of memory, which readily ſupplied the underſtanding with abundance of materials. Thoſe gifts he improved by indefatigable induſtry, and acquired a great compaſs of knowledge, completely digeſted.

Thus endowed with the means of acquiſition, he ſuperadded the moſt effectual and agreeable modes of communication. His language is clear, forcible and elegant, enriched with figures, that at once illuſtrate, adorn, and impreſs. He conſidered poetry as the buſineſs of his life, and however he might ſeem to lament his occupation, he followed it with conſtancy; to make verſes was his firſt labour, and to mend them was his laſt. He uſed always the ſame fabric of verſe. Of this uniformity the certain conſequence was readineſs and dexterity. By perpetual practice, language had in his mind a ſyſtematical arrangement; having always the ſame uſe for words, he had words ſo ſelected and combined as to be ready at his call.

On the general character and effect of his poems, it is the leſs neceſſary to enlarge, as little remains to be added to the diſtinct examination of his excellent biographer, Dr. Johnſon, and the maſterly criticiſm of Dr. Warton.

In his Paſtorals, Dr. Warton obſerves, there is not to be found a ſingle inſtance of a rural image that is new. The ideas of Theocritus, Virgil, and Spenſer, are indeed exhibited in language equally melliſluous and pure, but the deſcriptions and ſentiments are trite, and common. A mixture of Britiſh and Grecian ideas may juſtly be deemed a blemiſh. An Engliſhman ſpeaks of "celeſtial Venus, and Idalia's Groves, of Diana and Cynthius." They exhibit, however, a ſeries of verſification, which had in Engliſh poetry no precedent, nor has ſince had an imitation.

The deſign of Windſor Foreſt is evidently derived from Denham's "Cooper's Hill," with ſome attention to Waller's poem on " The Park ;" but Pope cannot be denied to excel his maſters in variety, and elegance, and the art of interchanging deſcription, narrative, and morality.

Of the Temple of Fame, every part is ſplendid; there is great luxuriance of ornaments. The original viſion of Chaucer is much improved; the imagery is properly ſelected, and learnedly diſplayed; yet, with all this comprehenſion of excellence, it never obtained much notice, and is ſeldom quoted or mentioned, with either praiſe or blame.

That the Meſſiah excells the " Pollio" of Virgil, is no great praiſe, if it is conſidered from what ſublime original the improvements are derived. Sometimes indeed the ſimple grandeur of Iſaiah is diminiſhed by florid epithets, and injudicious prettineſſes.

The Elegy on an Unfortunate Lady, as it came from the heart, is very tender and pathetic; nor has Pope produced any poem in which the ſenſe predominates more over the diction.

Of the Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, it is ſufficient praiſe, that it is only inferior to the inimitable " Alexander's Feaſt" of Dryden. The general effect is very pleaſing, and often ſtriking.

Of the Eſſay on Criticiſm, Dr. Johnſon obſerves, that if he had written nothing elſe, it would have placed him among the firſt critics and the firſt poets, as it exhibits every mode of excellence that can embelliſh or dignify didactic compoſition, ſelection of matter, novelty of arrangement, juſtneſs of precept, ſplendour of illuſtration, and propriety of digreſſion.

The Rape of the Lock is univerſally allowed to be the moſt attractive of all ludicrous compoſitions. The means employed are, vigorous thought, brilliant fancy, poignant wit, forcible ſatire, and refined humour, moſt agreeably interwoven and diverſified. The machinery is an ingenious expanſion of that in Shakſpeare's " Tempeſt," and the Roſicrucian dialogue of the Comte de Gabalis.

The epiſtle of Eloiſa to Abelard is replete with poetical fire, paſſionate language, picturesque imagery, and pathetic exclamation, which ſtrike the imagination with a captivating horror.

" Clouds interpoſe, waves roar, and winds ariſe."

It has certainly a charm hardly to be equalled; for who can read it without experiencing the alternate impulſe of deſire, pity, or rage; and laſtly, the freezing languor of irrecoverable deſpair.

" This epiſtle," ſays Dr. Warton, " is one of the moſt highly finiſhed, and certainly the moſt intereſting of the pieces of Pope; and, together with the Elegy on an Unfortunate Lady, is the only inſtance of the pathetic he has given us."

The tranſlation of Homer is a performance which no age or nation can pretend to equal. Such a verſion, the moſt perfect knowledge of the Greek and Engliſh languages could not have produced. It is not the work of a ſcholar or verſifier merely; it is the performance of a poet. The diction and verſification muſt vindicate to themſelves a very conſiderable ſhare of the merit of this maſterly work. " Pope ſearched the pages of Dryden," ſays Dr. Johnſon, " for happy combinations of poetic diction; but it will not be denied that he added much to what he found. He cultivated the language with ſo much diligence and art, that he has left in his Homer a treaſure of poetical elegances to poſterity. His verſion may be ſaid to have tuned the Engliſh tongue; for ſince its appearance, no writer, however deficient in other powers, has wanted melody. Such a ſeries of lines, ſo elaborately corrected, and ſo ſweetly modulated, took poſſeſſion of the public ear; the vulgar was enamoured of the poem, and the learned wondered at the tranſlation."

It has been objected by ſome, that it is not Homerical; that it exhibits no reſemblance of the original and characteriſtic manner of the Father of Poetry, as it wants his awful ſimplicity, his artleſs grandeur, his unaffected majeſty. This cannot be totally denied. Homer doubtleſs owes to his tranſlator many Ovidian graces, not ſtrictly ſuitable to his character; but to have added can be no great crime, if nothing be taken away. Elegance is ſurely to be deſired, if it be not gained at the expence of dignity. Pope wrote for his own age and his own nation; he knew that it was neceſſary to colour the images, and paint the ſentiments of his author; he therefore made him graceful, but loſt ſome of his ſublimity.

As a work of wit and ingenious ſatire, the Dunciad has few equals. The hint is confeſſedly taken from Dryden's " Mac Flecknoe;" but the plan is ſo enlarged and diverſified, as juſtly to claim the praiſe of an original, and affords, perhaps, the beſt ſpecimen that has yet appeared of perſonal ſatire, ludicrouſly pompous. Without approving of the petulance and malignity of the deſign, the vigour of intellect, and the fertility of fancy which it diſplays, are equally admirable.

" The beauties of this poem," says Dr. Johnson, " are well known; its chief fault is the grossness of its images. But even this fault, offensive as it is, may be forgiven for the excellence of other passages; such as the formation and dissolution of Moore, the account of the Traveller, the misfortune of the Florist, and the crowded thoughts and stately numbers which dignify the concluding paragraph."

The Essay on Man, is a didactic poem written on metaphysical ideas, which he did not perfectly comprehend. His intentions were evidently good, to show men that the existence of imperfection and evil is not inconsistent with the wisdom and goodness of God. Many of the facts are true, many of the observations are just, but do not tend to establish the truth of the proposed system. The adaptation of human senses, passions, and reason, to their ends, the co-operation of the principles of self-love and benevolence, in producing happiness, the uncertainty of physical good, that man's supreme felicity consists in moral good, that we are very weak in comparison to our Creator, are all positions which are undoubtedly true, but do not prove that partial evil is universal good; that whatever is, is right. Pope, like Addison, had considered man chiefly in active life. When he exhibits him in action, his exhibition is natural, beautiful, and just; but when he analyses his principles of thought, and of action, he is not always so successful. Voltaire ridiculed Pope's favourite position in his Candide. The consequences which Candide's application of the principle to various cases produces, are certainly such as Pope never intended, yet it must be acknowledged he did not sufficiently guard against his interpretation.

" This essay," says Dr. Johnson, " is certainly not the happiest of Pope's performances. It affords an egregious instance of the predominance of genius, the dazzling splendour of imagery, and the seductive powers of eloquence. Never were penury of knowledge, and vulgarity of sentiment so happily disguised, or recommended by such a blaze of embellishments, or such sweetness of melody. The vigorous contraction of some thoughts, the luxuriant amplification of others, the incidental illustrations, and sometimes the dignity, sometimes the softness of the verses, enchain philosophy, suspend criticism, and oppress judgment, by overpowering pleasure."

" This is true of many paragraphs; yet if I had undertaken to exemplify Pope's felicity of composition before a rigid critic, I should not select the Essay on Man: for it contains more lines unsuccessfully laboured, more harshness of diction, more thoughts imperfectly expressed, more levity without elegance, and more heaviness without strength, than will easily be found in all his other works."

The Characters of Men and Women, are the product of diligent speculation upon life and manners, and show a thorough knowledge of the human mind, engaged in action, and modified by the manners of the times.

" I recommend," says Dr. Johnson, " a comparison of his Characters of Women, with Boileau's satire; it will then be seen with how much more perspicacity female nature is investigated, and female excellence selected. The Characters of Men, however, are written with more, if not with deeper thought, and exhibit many passages exquisitely beautiful. The Gem, and the Flower, will not easily be equalled. In the women's part are some defects; the character of Atossa, is not so neatly finished as that of Clodio; and some of the female characters may be found, perhaps, more frequently among men."

Of his Epistle to Lord Bathurst, the most valuable passage is, perhaps, the eulogy on Good Sense; and of the Epistle to Lord Burlington, the end of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. Of the Epistle to Arbuthnot, no part has more elegance, spirit, or dignity, than the vindication of his own character. The meanest passage is the satire upon Sporus. The allusion to his mother is exquisitely beautiful and interesting. His translations from Ovid are rendered with faithfulness and elegance. The epistle from Sappho to Phaon breathe such passionate and pathetic sentiments as are worthy of the exquisite sensibility of the amorous Sappho; and the versification is in point of melody next to that of the Pastorals.

On his Epitaphs, the minute criticism of Dr. Johnson, printed in the " Visitor," is acute, and well enforced; but his examination is too rigorous, and the general opinion is much more favourable.

His Imitations of Horace, display a great portion of wit, as well as argument. He has the humour, and almost the ease of Horace, with more wit, and falls little short of the severity of Juvenal. In his Letters he is seen as connected with the other contemporary wits, and suffers no disgrace in the comparison. Those of Arbuthnot are written with ease and a beautiful simplicity. Swift's alſo are unaffected. Several of Bolingbroke's and Atterbury's are maſterly. There is ſomething more ſtudied and artificial in Pope's productions than the reſt. His letters to ladies are full of affectation.

" Pope may be ſaid," ſays Dr. Johnſon, " to write always with his reputation in his head; Swift perhaps like a man who remembered that he was writing to Pope; but Arbuthnot, like one who lets thoughts drop from his pen, as they riſe into his mind."

The compoſitions of Pope are perhaps a greater acceſſion to Engliſh literature, than thoſe of any other poet of our nation, except Spenſer, Shakſpeare, and Milton. Of thoſe poets who rank in the higheſt claſs after them, Dryden is generally allowed to be the firſt; but his claim to that diſtinction is at leaſt rendered doubtful by the pretenſions of Pope, who learned his poetry from Dryden, and whoſe character perhaps may receive ſome illuſtration, if he be compared with his maſter.

To regulate the ſcale, by which the comparative merit of poetical pretenſions is to be eſtimated, is one of the moſt difficult undertakings of criticiſm. Something of this kind, however, is attempted by Dr. Johnſon in his parallel between Dryden and Pope, of which it is ſcarcely hyperbolical to affirm, that it is every way worthy of its ſubject, and ſuch as perhaps the pen of Dr. Johnſon only could have written.

" Integrity of underſtanding, and nicety of diſcernment, were not allotted in a leſs proportion to Dryden than to Pope. The rectitude of Dryden's mind was ſufficiently ſhown by the diſmiſſion of his poetical prejudices, and the rejection of unnatural thoughts, and rugged numbers. But Dryden never deſired to apply all the judgment that he had. He wrote, and profeſſed to write, merely for the people; and when he pleaſed others, he contented himſelf. Pope was not content to ſatisfy; he deſired to excel; and therefore always endeavoured to do his beſt. He did not court the candour, but dared the judgment of his reader; and expecting no indulgence from others, he ſhowed none to himſelf. For this reaſon, he kept his pieces very long in his hands, while he conſidered, and reconſidered them. It will ſeldom be found that he altered, without adding clearneſs, elegance and vigour. Pope had perhaps the judgment of Dryden, but Dryden certainly wanted the diligence of Pope.

" In acquired knowledge, the ſuperiority muſt be allowed to Dryden, whoſe education was more ſcholaſtic. His mind has a larger range, and he collects his images and illuſtrations from a more extenſive circumference of ſcience. Dryden knew more of man in his general nature, and Pope in his local manners. The notions of Dryden were formed by a comprehenſive ſpeculation, and thoſe of Pope by minute attention. There is more dignity in the knowledge of Dryden, and more certainty in that of Pope.

" Poetry was not the ſole praiſe of either, for both excelled likewiſe in proſe; but Pope did not borrow his proſe from his predeceſſors. The ſtyle of Dryden is capricious and varied; that of Pope is cautious and uniform. Dryden obſerves the motions of his own mind; Pope conſtrains his mind to his own rules of compoſition. Dryden is ſometimes vehement and rapid; Pope is always ſmooth, uniform, and gentle. Dryden's page is a natural field, riſing into inequalities, and diverſified by the varied exuberance of abundant vegetation; Pope's is a velvet lawn, ſhaven by the ſcythe, and levelled by the roller.

" Of genius, that power which conſtitutes a poet, that quality without which judgment is cold, and knowledge is inert; that energy which collects, combines, amplifies, and animates, the ſuperiority muſt, with ſome heſitation, be allowed to Dryden. It is not to be inferred, that of this poetical vigour Pope had only a little, becauſe Dryden had more, for every other writer ſince Milton muſt give place to Pope; and even of Dryden it muſt be ſaid, that if he has brighter paragraphs, he has not better poems. Dryden's performances were always haſty, either excited by ſome external occaſion, or extorted by ſome domeſtic neceſſity; he compoſed without conſideration, and publiſhed without correction. What his mind could ſupply at call, or gather in one excurſion, was all that he ſought, and all that he gave. The dilatory caution of Pope enabled him to condenſe his ſentiments, to multiply his images, and to accumulate all that ſtudy might produce, or chance might ſupply. If the flights of Dryden therefore are higher, Pope continues longer on the wing. If of Dryden's fire the blaze is brighter, of Pope's the heat is more regular and conſtant. Dryden often ſurpaſſes expectation, and Pope never falls below it; Dryden is read with frequent aſtoniſhment, and Pope with perpetual delight."

The ſubject of this truly excellent parallel has been controverted by Mr. Weſton and Miſs Seward, in the "Gentleman's Magazine" for 1790. Both parties have ſhown much critical ingenuity in maintaining the pretenſions of their favourite poet. To give any adequate idea of the controverſy, would much exceed the limits of this preface. Mr. Weſton, with juſtice, cenſures the poetry of Pope, as too exquiſitely poliſhed, too uniformly muſical, and as glutting the ear with unvaried ſweetneſs. Judging perhaps by principles, rather than perception, he ſeems to think ſtudied diſcords, varied pauſes, triplets, expletives, and Alexandrines, eſſential to rhyme, becauſe they have been uſed by Dryden. But the poetry of Pope, though perhaps leſs impregnated with enthuſiaſm, leſs enriched with claſſical knowledge, leſs illumined by vivid imagination, and leſs diverſified by variety of cadence, is certainly more elaborately correct, more regularly harmonious, more delicately poliſhed, and more ſyſtematically dignified, than that of Dryden.

He has even ventured to aſſert, that Pope was not a poet, but only an elegant verſifier. When he affirms that the author of the Rape of the Lock, of the Dunciad, of Eloiſa to Abelard, and of the Engliſh Iliad, was not a poet, he muſt mean ſomething by the term different from the general acceptation.

"If Pope be not a poet," ſays Dr. Johnſon, "where is poetry to be found? To circumſcribe poetry by a definition, will only ſhow the narrowneſs of the definer, though a definition which ſhall exclude Pope, will not eaſily be made. Let us look round upon the preſent time, and back upon the paſt; let us inquire to whom the voice of mankind has decreed the wreath of poetry; let their productions be examined, and their claims ſtated, and the pretenſions of Pope will no more be diſputed. Had he given the world only his verſion, the name of poet muſt have been allowed him; if the writer of the Iliad were to claſs his ſucceſſors, he would aſſign a very high place to his tranſlator, without requiring any other evidence of genius."

A parallel, upon a more extenſive ſcale, is given by Dr. Warton, in which the poetical qualifications of Pope are as candidly examined, as they are judiciouſly diſcriminated.

"Of Pope's works, the largeſt portion is of the didactic, moral, and ſatyric kind; and conſequently not of the moſt poetic ſpecies of poetry: whence it is manifeſt, that good ſenſe and judgment were his characteriſtical excellencies, rather than fancy and invention; not that the author of the Rape of the Lock and Eloiſa can be thought to want imagination, but becauſe his imagination was not his predominant talent; becauſe he indulged it not, and becauſe he gave not ſo many proofs of this talent as of the other. This turn of mind led him to admire French models; he ſtudied Boileau attentively, formed himſelf upon him, as Milton formed himſelf upon the Grecian and Italian ſons of Fancy. He gradually became one of the moſt correct, even, and exact poets that ever wrote, poliſhing his pieces with a care and aſſiduity that no buſineſs or avocation ever interrupted; ſo that if he does not frequently raviſh and tranſport his reader, yet he does not diſguſt him with unexpected inequalities and abſurd improprieties. Whatever poetical enthuſiaſm he actually poſſeſſed, he withheld and ſtifled. The peruſal of him affects not our minds with ſuch ſtrong emotions as we feel from Homer and Milton; ſo that no man of a true poetical ſpirit is maſter of himſelf while he reads them. Hence he is a writer fit for univerſal peruſal, adapted to all ages and ſtations, for the old and for the young, the man of buſineſs and the ſcholar. He who would think "Palamon and Arcite," "The Tempeſt," or "Comus," childiſh and romantic, might reliſh Pope. Surely it is no narrow and niggardly encomium to ſay, that he is the great poet of reaſon, the firſt of ethical authors in verſe.

Where then ſhall we, with juſtice, be authoriſed to place our admired Pope? Not aſſuredly in the ſame rank with Spenſer, Shakſpeare, and Milton; however juſtly we may applaud the Eloiſa and Rape of the Lock; but, conſidering the correctneſs, elegance, and utility of his works, the weight of ſentiment, and the knowledge of man they contain, we may venture to aſſign him a place next to Milton, and juſt above Dryden. Yet, to bring our minds ſteadily to make this deciſion, we muſt forget for a moment the divine "Muſic Ode" of Dryden, and may perhaps then be compelled to confeſs, that though Dryden be the greater genius, yet Pope is the better artiſt.

"The preference here given to Pope above other Modern Engliſh Poets, it muſt be remembered, is founded on the excellencies of his works in general, and taken all together; for there are parts and paſſages in other modern authors, in Young and in Thomſon for inſtance, equal to any of Pope; and he has written nothing in a ſtrain ſo truly ſublime as the "Bard of Gray."

WORKS OF POPE.

EXTRACT FROM DR. WARBURTON'S ADVERTISEMENT

To the Octavo Edition of MR. POPE'S Works, 1751.

MR. POPE, in his laſt illneſs, amuſed himſelf, amidſt the care of his higher concerns, in preparing a corrected and complete edition of his writings; and, with his uſual delicacy, was even ſolicitous to prevent any ſhare of the offence they might occaſion, from falling on the friend whom he had engaged to give them to the public.

In diſcharge of this truſt, the public has here a complete edition of his works, executed in ſuch a manner, as, I am perſuaded, would have been to his ſatisfaction.

But it may be proper to be a little more particular concerning the ſuperiority of this edition above all the preceding; ſo far as Mr. Pope himſelf was concerned. What the editor hath done, the reader muſt collect for himſelf.

The firſt volume, and the original poems in the ſecond, are here printed from a copy corrected throughout by the author himſelf, even to the very preface; which, with ſeveral additional notes in his own hand, he delivered to the editor a little before his death. The Juvenile Tranſlations, in the other part of the ſecond volume, it was never his intention to bring into this edition of his works, on account of the levity of ſome, the freedom of others, and the little importance of any: but theſe being the property of other men, the editor had it not in his power to follow the author's intention.

The third volume, all but the Eſſay on Man (which, together with the Eſſay on Criticiſm, the author, a little before his death, had corrected and publiſhed in quarto, as a ſpecimen of his projected edition), was printed by him in his laſt illneſs (but never publiſhed) in the manner it is now given. The diſpoſition of the Epiſtle on the Characters of Men is quite altered; that on the Characters of Women, much enlarged; and the Epiſtles on Riches and Taſte, corrected and improved. To theſe advantages of the third volume, muſt be added a great number of fine Verſes, taken from the author's manuſcript copies of theſe poems, communicated by him for this purpoſe to the editor. Theſe, when he firſt publiſhed the poems to which they belong, he thought proper, for various reaſons, to omit. Some from the manuſcript copy of the Eſſay on Man, which tended to diſcredit fate, and to recommend the moral government of God, had, by the editor's advice, been reſtored to their places in the laſt edition of that poem. The reſt, together with others of the like ſort, from his manuſcript copy of the other Ethic Epiſtles, are here inſerted at the bottom of the page, under the title of Variations

The fourth volume contains the Satires, with their prologue, the epiſtle to Dr. Arbuthnot, and epilogue, the two poems, intitled M DCC XXXVIII. The prologue and epilogue are here given with the like advantages as the Ethic Epiſtles in the foregoing volume; that is to ſay, with the variations, or additional verſes, from the author's manuſcripts. The epilogue to the ſatires is likewiſe enriched with many and large notes, now firſt printed from the author's own manuſcript.

The fifth volume contains a corrector and completer edition of the Dunciad than hath been hitherto publiſhed; of which, at preſent, I have only this farther to add, that it was at my requeſt he laid the plan of a fourth book. I often told him, it was a pity ſo fine a poem ſhould remain diſgraced by the meanneſs of its ſubject, the moſt inſignificant of all dunces, bad rhymers, and malevolent cavillers; that he ought to raiſe and enoble it, by pointing his ſatire againſt the moſt pernicious of all, minute philoſophers and freethinkers. I imagined too, it was for the intereſt of religion, to have it known that ſo great a genius had a due abhorrence of theſe peſts of virtue and ſociety. He came readily into my opinion; but, at the ſame time, told me it would create him many enemies: he was not miſtaken; for though the terror of his pen kept them for ſome time in reſpect, yet on his death they roſe with unreſtrained fury, in numerous coffee-houſe tales, and Grub-ſtreet libels. The plan of this admirable ſatire was artfully contrived to ſhew, that the follies and defects of a faſhionable education naturally led to, and neceſſarily ended in, freethinking; with deſign to point out the only remedy adequate to ſo fatal an evil. It was to advance the ſame ends of virtue and religion, that the editor prevailed on him to alter every thing in his moral writings that might be ſuſpected of having the leaſt glance towards fate, or naturaliſm; and to add what was proper to convince the world that he was warmly on the ſide of moral government, and a revealed will: and it would be injuſtice to his memory, not to declare that he embraced theſe occaſions with the moſt unfeigned pleaſure.

The ſixth volume conſiſts of Mr. Pope's Miſcellaneous Pieces, in verſe and proſe†. Among the verſe ſeveral fine poems make now their firſt appearance in his works: and of the proſe, all that is good, and nothing but what is exquiſitely ſo, will be found in this edition.

† The proſe is not within the plan of this edition.

The ſeventh, eighth, and ninth volumes, conſiſt entirely of his Letters; the more valuable, as they are the only true models which we, or perhaps any of our neighbours have, of familiar epiſtles. This collection is now made more complete by the addition of ſeveral new pieces. Yet excepting a ſhort explanatory letter to Col. M. and the letters to Mr. A. and Mr. W. (the latter of which are given to ſhew the editor's inducements, and the engagements he was under, to intend the care of this edition), excepting theſe, I ſay, the reſt are all publiſhed from the author's own printed, though not publiſhed, copies, delivered to the editor.

On the whole, the advantages of this edition, above the preceding, are theſe: That it is the firſt complete collection which has ever been made of his original writings; that all his principal poems, of early or later date, are here given to the public with his laſt corrections and improvements; that a great number of his verſes are here firſt printed from the manuſcript copies of his principal poems of later date; that many new notes of the author's are here added to his poems; and, laſtly, that ſeveral pieces, both in proſe and verſe, make now their firſt appearance before the public.

RECOMMENDATORY POEMS.

TO MR. POPE,

ON HIS PASTORALS.

In thoſe more dull, as more cenſorious days,
When few dare give, and fewer merit praiſe,
A muſe ſincere, that never flattery knew,
Pays what to friendſhip and deſert is due.
Young, yet judicious; in your verſe are found,
Art ſtrengthening nature, ſenſe improv'd by ſound.
Unlike thoſe wits, whoſe numbers glide along
So ſmooth, no thought e'er interrupts the ſong:
Laboriouſly enervate they appear,
And write not to the head, but to the ear:
Our minds unmov'd and unconcern'd they lull,
And are at beſt moſt muſically dull:
So purling ſtreams with even murmurs creep,
And huſh the heavy hearers into ſleep.
As ſmootheſt ſpeech is moſt deceitful ſound,
The ſmootheſt numbers oft are empty ſound.
But wit and judgment join at once in you,
Sprightly as youth, as age conſummate too:
Your ſtrains are regularly bold, and pleaſe
With unforc'd care, and unaffected caſe,
With proper thoughts, and lively images;
Such as by nature to the ancients ſhewn,
Fancy improves, and judgment makes your own:
For great men's faſhions to be follow'd are,
Although diſgraceful 'tis their clothes to wear.
Some, in a poliſh'd ſtyle, write paſtoral:
Arcadia ſpeaks the language of the Mall.
Like ſome fair ſhepherdeſs, the Sylvan muſe
Should wear thoſe flowers her native fields produce;
And the true meaſure of the ſhepherd's wit
Should, like his garb, be for the country fit:
Yet muſt his pure and unaffected thought
More nicely than the common ſwain's be wrought;
So, with becoming art, the players dreſs
In ſilks the ſhepherd, and the ſhepherdeſs;
Yet ſtill unchang'd the form and mode remain,
Shap'd like the homely ruſſet of the ſwain.
Your rural muſe appears to juſtify
The long-loſt graces of ſimplicity:
So rural beauties captivate our ſenſe
With virgin charms, and native excellence:
Yet long her modeſty thoſe charms conceal'd,
Till by men's envy to the world reveal'd;
For wits induſtrious to their trouble ſeem,
And needs will envy what they muſt eſteem.
Live, and enjoy their ſpite! nor mourn that fate,
Which would, if Virgil liv'd, on Virgil wait;
Whoſe muſe did once, like thine, in plains delight;
Thine ſhall, like his, ſoon take a higher flight:
So larks, which firſt from lowly fields ariſe,
Mount by degrees, and reach at laſt the ſkies.

W. WYCHERLEY.

TO MR. POPE,

ON HIS WINDSOR-FOREST.

Hail! ſacred bard! a muſe unknown before
Salutes thee from the bleak Atlantic ſhore.
To our dark world thy ſhining page is ſhewn,
And Windſor's gay retreat becomes our own.
The eaſtern pomp had juſt beſpoke our care,
And India pour'd her gaudy treaſures here:
A various ſpoil adorn'd our naked land,
The pride of Perſia glitter'd on our ſtrand,
And China's earth was caſt on common ſand:
Toſs'd up and down the gloſſy fragments lay,
And dreſs'd the rocky ſhelves, and pav'd the painted bay.
Thy treaſures next arriv'd: and now we boaſt
A nobler cargo on our barren coaſt:
From thy luxuriant foreſt we receive
More laſting glories than the eaſt can give.
Where'er we dip in thy delightful page,
What pompous ſcenes our buſy thoughts engage!
The pompous ſcenes in all their pride appear,
Freſh in the page, as in the grove they were:
Nor half ſo true the fair Lodona ſhews
The ſylvan ſtate that on her border grows,
While ſhe the wond'ring ſhepherd entertains
With a new Windſor in her watery plains;
The juſter lays the lucid wave ſurpaſs,
The living ſcene is in the muſe's glaſs.
Nor ſweeter notes the echoing foreſts cheer,
When Philomela ſits and warbles there,
Than when you ſing the greens and opening glades,
And give us harmony as well as ſhades:
A Titian's hand might draw the grove; but you
Can paint the grove, and add the muſic too.

With vaſt variety thy pages ſhine;
A new creation ſtarts in every line.
How ſudden trees riſe to the reader's ſight,
And make a doubtful ſcene of ſhade and light,
And give at once the day, at once the night!
And here again what ſweet confuſion reigns,
In dreary deſerts mix'd with painted plains!
And ſee! the deſerts caſt a pleaſing gloom,
And ſhrubby heaths rejoice in purple bloom;
Whilſt fruitful crops riſe by their barren ſide,
And bearded groves diſplay their annual pride.
Happy the man, who ſtrings his tuneful lyre
Where woods, and brooks, and breathing fields inſpire!
Thrice happy you! and worthy beſt to dwell
Amidſt the rural joys you ſing ſo well.
I in a cold, and in a barren clime,
Cold as my thought, and barren to my rhyme,
Here on the weſtern beach attempt to chime,
O joyleſs flood! O rough tempeſtuous main!
Border'd with weeds, and ſolitudes obſcene!
Snatch me, ye gods! from theſe Atlantic ſhores,
And ſhelter me in Windſor's fragrant bowers;
Or to my much-lov'd Iſis' walk convey,
And on her flowery banks for ever lay.
Thence let me view the venerable ſcene,
The awful dome, the groves eternal green,
Where ſacred Hough long found his fam'd retreat,
And brought the muſes to the ſylvan ſeat;
Reform'd the wits, unlock'd the claſſic ſtore,
And made that muſic which was noiſe before.
There, with illuſtrious bards, I ſpent my days,
Not free from cenſure, nor unknown to praiſe:
Enjoy'd the bleſſings that his reign beſtow'd,
Nor envy'd Windſor in the ſoft abode.
The golden minutes ſmoothly danc'd away,
And tuneful bards beguil'd the tedious day:
They ſung, nor ſung in vain, with numbers fir'd,
That Maro taught, or Addiſon inſpir'd.
Ev'n I eſſay'd to touch the trembling ſtring:
Who could hear them, and not attempt to ſing?
Rous'd from theſe dreams by thy commanding ſtrain,
I riſe and wander through the field or plain;
Led by thy muſe, from ſport to ſport I run,
Mark the ſtretch'd line, or hear the thundering gun.
Ah! how I melt with pity, when I ſpy
On the cold earth the fluttering pheaſant lie!
His gaudy robes in dazzling lines appear,
And every feather ſhines and varies there.
Nor can I paſs the generous courſer by;
But while the prancing ſteed allures my eye,
He ſtarts, he's gone! and now I ſee him fly
O'er hills and dales; and now I loſe the courſe,
Nor can the rapid ſight purſue the flying horſe.
Oh, could thy Virgil from his orb look down,
He'd view a courſer that might match his own!
Fir'd with the ſport, and eager for the chace,
Lodona's murmurs ſtop me in the race.
Who can refuſe Lodona's melting tale?
The ſoft complaint ſhall over time prevail;
The tale be told when ſhades forſake her ſhore,
The nymph be ſung when ſhe can flow no more.
Nor ſhall the ſong, old Thames! forbear to ſhine,
At once the ſubject and the ſong divine.
Peace, ſung by thee, ſhall pleaſe ev'n Britons more
Than all their ſhouts for victory before.
Oh! could Britannia imitate thy ſtream,
The world ſhould tremble at her awful name;
From various ſprings divided waters glide,
In different colours roll a different tide,
Murmur along their crooked banks a while,
At once they murmur and enrich the iſle;
A while diſtinct through many channels run,
But meet at laſt, and ſweetly flow in one;
There joy to loſe their long-diſtinguiſh'd names,
And make one glorious and immortal Thames.

FR. KNAP.

TO MR. POPE,

By the Right Honourable

ANNE COUNTESS OF WINCHELSEA.

The muſe, of every heavenly gift allow'd
To be the chief, is public, though not proud.
Widely extenſive is the poet's aim,
And in each verſe he draws a bill on fame.
For none have wit (whatever they pretend)
Singly to raiſe a patron or a friend;
But whatſoe'er the theme or object be,
Some commendations to themſelves foreſee.
Then let us find, in your foregoing page,
The celebrating poems of the age;
Nor by injurious ſcruples think it fit,
To hide their judgments who applaud your wit:
But let their pens to yours the heralds prove,
Who ſtrive for you, as Greece for Homer ſtrove;
Whilſt he who beſt your poetry aſſerts,
Aſſerts his own, by ſympathy of parts.
Me panegyric verſe does not inſpire,
Who never well can praiſe what I admire,
Nor in thoſe lofty trials dare appear,
But gently drop this counſel in your ear:
Go on, to gain applauſes by deſert;
Inform the head, whilſt you diſſolve the heart;
Inflame the ſoldier with harmonious rage,
Elate the young, and gravely warm the ſage:
Allure, with tender verſe, the female race;
And give their darling paſſion, courtly grace:
Deſcribe the foreſt ſtill in rural ſtrains,
With vernal ſweets freſh-breathing from the plains:
Your tales be eaſy, natural, and gay,
Nor all the poet in that part diſplay;
Nor let the critic there his ſkill unfold,
For Boccace thus and Chaucer tales have told:
Soothe, as you only can, each different taſte,
And for the future charm us in the paſt.
Then, ſhould the verſe of every artful hand
Before your numbers eminently ſtand;
In you no vanity could thence be ſhewn,
Unleſs, ſince ſhort in beauty of your own,
Some envious ſcribbler might in ſpite declare,
That for compariſon you plac'd them there.
But envy could not againſt you ſucceed:
'Tis not from friends that write, or foes that read;
Cenſure or praiſe muſt from ourſelves proceed.

TO MR. POPE,

BY MISS JUD. COWPER, AFTERWARDS MRS. MADAN.

O Pope! by what commanding wondrous art
Doſt thou each paſſion to each breaſt impart?
Our beating hearts with ſprightly meaſures move,
Or melt us with a tale of hapleſs love!
Th' elated mind's impetuous ſtarts control,
Or gently ſooth to peace the troubled ſoul!
Graces till now that ſingly met our view,
And ſingly charm'd, unite at once in you:
A ſtyle polite, from affectation free,
Virgil's correctneſs, Homer's majeſty!
Soft Waller's eaſe, with Milton's vigour wrought,
And Spenſer's bold luxuriancy of thought.
In each bright page, ſtrength, beauty, genius ſhine,
While nervous judgment guides each flowing line.
No borrow'd tinſel glitters o'er theſe lays,
And to the mind a falſe delight conveys:
Throughout the whole with blended power is found,
The weight of ſenſe, and elegance of ſound:
A laviſh fancy, wit, and force, and fire,
Graces each motion of th' immortal lyre.
The matchleſs ſtrains our raviſh'd ſenſes charm:
How great the thought! the images how warm!
How beautifully juſt the turns appear!
The language how majeſtically clear!
With energy divine each period ſwells,
And all the bard th' inſpiring God reveals.
Loſt in delights, my dazzled eyes I turn,
Where Thames leans hoary o'er his ample urn;
Where his rich waves fair Windſor's towers ſurround,
And bounteous ruſh amid poetic ground.
O Windſor! ſacred to thy bliſsful ſeats,
Thy ſylvan ſhades, the muſes' lov'd retreats;
Thy riſing hills, low vales, and waving woods,
Thy ſunny glades, and celebrated floods!
But chief Lodona's ſilver tides, that flow
Cold and unſullied as the mountain ſnow;
Whoſe virgin name no time nor change can hide,
Though ev'n her ſpotleſs waves ſhould ceaſe to glide:
In mighty Pope's immortalizing ſtrains,
Still ſhall ſhe grace and range the verdant plains;
By him ſelected for the muſes' theme, [ſtream.
Still ſhine a blooming maid, and roll a limpid
Go on, and, with thy rare reſiſtleſs art,
Rule each emotion of the various heart;
The ſpring and teſt of verſe unrival'd reign,
And the full honours of thy youth maintain;
Soothe, with thy wonted eaſe and power divine,
Our ſouls, and our degenerate taſtes refine;
In judgment o'er our favourite follies ſit,
And ſoften Wiſdom's harſh reproofs to wit.
Now war and arms thy mighty aid demand,
And Homer wakes beneath thy powerful hand;
His vigour, genuine heat, and manly force,
In thee riſe worthy of their ſacred ſource;
His ſpirit heighten'd, yet his ſenſe entire,
As gold runs purer from the trying fire.
O, for a muſe like thine, while I rehearſe
Th' immortal beauties of thy various verſe!
Now light as air th' enlivening numbers move,
Soft as the downy plumes of fabled love,
Gay as the ſtreaks that ſtain the gaudy bow,
Smooth as Meander's cryſtal mirrors flow.
But, when Achilles, panting for the war,
Joins the fleet courſers to the whirling car;
When the warm hero, with celeſtial might,
Augments the terror of the raging fight,
From his fierce eyes refulgent lightnings ſtream
(As Sol emerging darts a golden gleam);
In rough hoarſe verſe we ſee th' embattled foes;
In each loud ſtrain the fiery onſet glows;
With ſtrength redoubled here Achilles ſhines,
And all the battle thunders in thy lines.
So the bright magic of the painter's hand
Can cities, ſtreams, tall towers, and far-ſtretch'd plains, command;
Here ſpreading woods embrown the beauteous ſcene,
There the wide landſcape ſmiles with livelier green;
The floating glaſs reflects the diſtant ſky,
And o'er the whole the glancing ſun-beams fly;
Buds open, and diſcloſe the inmoſt ſhade;
The ripen'd harveſt crowns the level glade.
But when the artiſt does a work deſign,
Where bolder rage informs each breathing line;
When the ſtretch'd cloth a rougher ſtroke receives,
And Cæſar awful in the canvas lives;
When art like laviſh nature's ſelf ſupplies,
Grace to the limbs, and ſpirit to the eyes;
When ev'n the paſſions of the mind are ſeen,
And the ſoul ſpeaks in the exalted mien;
When all is juſt, and regular, and great,
We own the mighty Maſter's ſkill, as boundleſs as complete.

LORD MIDDLESEX TO MR. POPE,

On reading Mr. Addiſon's Account of the Engliſh Poets.

If all who e'er invok'd the tuneful Nine,
In Addiſon's majeſtic numbers ſhine,
Why then ſhould Pope, ye bards, ye critics, tell,
Remain unſung, who ſings himſelf ſo well?
Hear then, great bard, who can alike inſpire
With Waller's ſoftneſs, or with Milton's fire;
Whilſt I, the meaneſt of the muſes throng,
To thy juſt praiſes tune th' adventurous ſong.
How am I fill'd with rapture and delight,
When gods and mortals, mix'd, ſuſtain the fight!
Like Milton then, though in more poliſh'd ſtrains,
Thy chariots rattle o'er the ſmoking plains.
What though archangel 'gainſt archangel arms,
And higheſt Heaven reſounds with dire alarms!
Doth not the reader with like dread ſurvey
The wounded gods repuls'd with foul diſmay?
But when ſome fair one guides your ſofter verſe,
Her charms, her godlike features, to rehearſe;
See how her eyes with quicker lightnings arm,
And Waller's thoughts in ſmoother numbers charm!
When fools provoke, and dunces urge thy rage,
Flecknoe improv'd bites keener in each page.
Give o'er, great bard, your fruitleſs toil give o'er,
For ſtill king Tibbald ſcribbles as before;

Poor Shakſpeare ſuffers by his pen each day,
While Grub-ſtreet alleys own his lawful ſway.
Now turn, my muſe, thy quick, poetic eyes,
And view gay ſcenes and opening proſpects riſe.
Hark! how his ruſtic numbers charm around,
While groves to groves, and hills to hills reſound!
The liſtening beaſts ſtand fearleſs as he ſings,
And birds attentive cloſe their uſeleſs wings.
The ſwains and ſatyrs trip it o'er the plain,
And think old Spenſer is reviv'd again.
But when once more the godlike man begun
In words ſmooth flowing from his tuneful tongue,
Raviſh'd they gaze, and ſtruck with wonder ſay,
Sure Spenſer's ſelf ne'er ſung ſo ſweet a lay:
Sure once again Eliza glads the iſle,
That the kind muſes thus propitious ſmile—
Why gaze ye thus? Why all this wonder, ſwains?—
'Tis Pope that ſings, and Carolina reigns.
But hold, my muſe! whoſe awkward verſe betrays
Thy want of ſkill, nor ſhews the poet's praiſe;
Ceaſe then, and leave ſome fitter bard to tell
How Pope in every ſtrain can write, in every ſtrain excel.

TO MR. POPE,

ON THE PUBLISHING HIS WORKS.

He comes, he comes! bid every bard prepare
The ſong of triumph, and attend his car.
Great Sheffield's muſe the long proceſſion heads,
And throws a luſtre o'er the pomp ſhe leads;
Firſt gives the palm ſhe fir'd him to obtain,
Crowns his gay brow, and ſhews him how to reign.
Thus young Alcides, by old Chiron taught,
Was form'd for all the miracles he wrought:
Thus Chiron did the youth he taught applaud,
Pleas'd to behold the earneſt of a God.
But hark! what ſhouts, what gathering crowds rejoice!
Unſtain'd their praiſe by any venial voice,
Such as th' ambitious vainly think their due,
When proſtitutes, or needy flatterers ſue.
And ſee the chief! before him laurels borne;
Trophies from undeſerving temples torn:
Here Rage enchain'd reluctant raves; and there
Pale Envy dumb, and ſick'ning with deſpair,
Prone to the earth ſhe bends her lothing eye,
Weak to ſupport the blaze of majeſty.
But what are they that turn the ſacred page?
Three lovely virgins, and of equal age;
Intent they read, and all enamour'd ſeem,
As he that met his likeneſs in the ſtream:
The Graces theſe; and ſee how they contend,
Who moſt ſhall praiſe, who beſt ſhall recommend.
The chariot now the painful ſteep aſcends,
The Pæans ceaſe; thy glorious labour ends.
Here fix'd, the bright eternal temple ſtands,
Its proſpect an unbounded view commands:
Say, wondrous youth, what column wilt thou chooſe,
What laurel'd arch for thy triumphant muſe?
Though each great ancient court thee to his ſhrine,
Though every laurel through the dome be thine,
(From the proud epic, down to thoſe that ſhade
The gentler brow of the ſoft Leſbian maid)
Go to the good and juſt, an awful train,
Thy ſoul's delight, and glory of the fane:
While through the earth thy dear remembrance flies,
"Sweet to the world, and grateful to the ſkies."

SIMON HARCOURT.

TO MR. POPE,

BY MR. HARTE.

To move the ſprings of nature as we pleaſe;
To think with ſpirit, but to write with eaſe;
With living words to warm the conſcious heart,
Or pleaſe the ſoul with nicer charms of art;
For this the Grecian ſoar'd in epic ſtrains,
And ſofter Maro left the Mantuan plains:
Melodious Spenſer felt the lover's fire,
And awful Milton ſtrung his heavenly lyre.
'Tis yours, like theſe, with curious toil to trace
The powers of language, harmony, and grace;
How Nature's ſelf with living luſtre ſhines,
How judgment ſtrengthens, and how art refines;
How to grow bold with conſcious ſenſe of fame,
And force a pleaſure which we dare not blame;
To charm us more through negligence than pains,
And give ev'n life and action to the ſtrains:
Led by ſome law, whoſe powerful impulſe guides
Each happy ſtroke, and in the ſoul preſides;
Some fairer image of perfection given
T' inſpire mankind, itſelf deriv'd from heaven.
O ever worthy, ever crown'd with praiſe,
Bleſt in thy life, and bleſt in all thy lays!
Add that the Siſters every thought refine,
Or ev'n thy life be faultleſs as thy line;
Yet Envy ſtill with fiercer rage purſues,
Obſcures the virtue, and defames the muſe.
A ſoul like thine, in pains, in grief reſign'd,
Views with vain ſcorn the malice of mankind:
Not critics, but their planets, prove unjuſt;
And are they blam'd who ſin becauſe they muſt?
Yet ſure not ſo muſt all peruſe thy lays:
I cannot rival—and yet dare to praiſe.
A thouſand charms at once my thoughts engage;
Sappho's ſoft ſweetneſs, Pindar's warmer rage,
Statius' free vigour, Virgil's ſtudious care,
And Homer's force, and Ovid's eaſier air.
So ſeems ſome picture, where exact deſign,
And curious pains, and ſtrength, and ſweetneſs join;
Where the free thought its pleaſing grace beſtows,
And each warm ſtroke with living colour glows;
Soft without weakneſs, without labour fair,
Wrought up at once with happineſs and care!
How bleſt the man that from the world removes,
To joys that Merdaunt*, or his Pope, approves;
Whoſe taſte exact each author can explore,
And live the preſent and paſt ages o'er;
Who, free from pride, from penitence, or ſtrife,
Moves calmly forward to the verge of life:

* Earl of Peterborough.

Such be my days, and such my fortunes be,
To live by reason, and to write by thee!
Nor deem this verse, though humble, a disgrace:
All are not born the glory of their race:
Yet all are born t' adore the great man's name,
And trace his footsteps in the paths to fame.
The muse, who now this early homage pays,
First learn'd from thee to animate her lays:
A muse as yet unhonour'd, but unstain'd,
Who prais'd no vices, no preferment gain'd;
Unbiass'd or to censure or commend,
Who knows no envy, and who grieves no friend;
Perhaps too fond to make those virtues known,
And fix her fame immortal on thy own.

THE TRIUMVIRATE OF POETS,

BY MRS. TOLLET.

Britain with Greece and Rome contended long
For lofty genius and poetic song,
Till this Augustan age with Three was blest,
To fix the prize, and finish the contest.
In Addison, immortal Virgil reigns;
So pure his numbers, so refin'd his strains:
Of nature full, with more impetuous heat,
In Prior Horace shines, sublimely great.
Thy country, Homer! we dispute no more;
For Pope has fix'd it to his native shore.

PREFACE.

I AM inclined to think, that both the writers of books and the readers of them, are generally not a little unreaſonable in their expectations. The firſt ſeem to fancy that the world muſt approve of whatever they produce, and the latter to imagine that authors are obliged to pleaſe them at any rate. Methinks, as, on the one hand, no ſingle man is born with a right of controuling the opinions of all the reſt; ſo, on the other, the world has no title to demand, that the whole care and time of any particular perſon ſhould be ſacrificed to its entertainment. Therefore, I cannot but believe that writers and readers are under equal obligations, for as much fame, or pleaſure, as each affords the other.

Every one acknowledges, it would be a wild notion to expect perfection in any work of man: and yet one would think the contrary was taken for granted, by the judgment commonly paſſed upon poems. A critic ſuppoſes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have failed in an expreſſion, or erred in any particular point: and can it then be wondered at, if the Poets, in general, ſeem reſolved not to own themſelves in any error? For, as long as one ſide will make no allowances, the other will be brought to no acknowledgments*.

I am afraid this extreme zeal on both ſides is ill-placed; Poetry and Criticiſm being by no means the univerſal concern of the world, but only the affair of idle men who write in their cloſets, and of idle men who read there.

Yet ſure, upon the whole, a bad author deſerves better uſage than a bad critic: for a writer's endeavour, for the moſt part, is to pleaſe his readers, and he fails merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but ſuch a critic's is to put them out of humour; a deſign he could never go upon without both that and an ill temper.

I think a good deal may be ſaid to extenuate the fault of bad Poets. What we call a Genius, is hard to be diſtinguiſhed, by a man himſelf, from a ſtrong inclination: and if his genius be ever ſo great, he cannot at firſt diſcover it any other way, than by giving way to that prevalent propenſity which renders him the more liable to be miſtaken. The only method he has, is to make the experiment by writing, and appealing to the judgment of others: now, if he happens to write ill (which is certainly no ſin in itſelf), he is immediately made an object of ridicule. I wiſh we had the humanity to reflect, that even the worſt authors might, in their endeavour to pleaſe us, deſerve ſomething at our hands. We have no cauſe to quarrel with them but for their obſtinacy in perſiſting to write; and this too may admit of alleviating circumſtances. Their particular friends may be either ignorant or inſincere; and the reſt of the world in general is too well bred to ſhock them with a truth, which generally their bookſellers are the firſt that inform them of. This happens not till they have ſpent too much of their time, to apply to any profeſſion which might better fit their talents; and till ſuch talents as they have are ſo far diſcredited as to be but of ſmall ſervice to them. For (what is the hardeſt caſe imaginable) the reputation of a man generally depends upon the firſt ſteps he makes in the world; and people will eſtabliſh their opinion of us, from what we do at that ſeaſon, when we have leaſt judgment to direct us.

On the other hand, a good poet no ſooner communicates his works with the ſame deſire of information, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame; when perhaps the poor man is all the while trembling with the fear of being ridiculous. If he is made to hope he may pleaſe the world he falls under very unlucky circumſtances: for, from the moment he prints, he muſt expect to hear no more truth, than if he were a prince, or a beauty. If he has not very good ſenſe (and indeed there are twenty men of wit for one man of ſenſe), his living thus in a courſe of flattery may put him in no ſmall danger of becoming a coxcomb: if he

* In the former editions it was thus——"For as "long as one ſide deſpiſes a well-meant endeavour, the "other will not be ſatisfied with a moderate approba-"tion."—But the Author altered it, as theſe words were rather a conſequence from the concluſion he would draw, than the concluſion itſelf, which he has now inſerted.

ſias, he will conſequently have ſo much diffidence as not to reap any great ſatisfaction from his praiſe; ſince, if it be given to his face, it can ſcarce be diſtinguiſhed from flattery, and if in his abſence, it is hard to be certain of it. Were he ſure to be commended by the beſt and moſt knowing, he is as ſure of being envied by the worſt and moſt ignorant, which are the majority; for it is with a fine genius, as with a fine faſhion, all thoſe are diſpleaſed at it who are not able to follow it: and it is to be feared that eſteem will ſeldom do any man ſo much good, as ill-will does him harm Then there is a third claſs of people who make the largeſt part of mankind, thoſe of ordinary or indifferent capacities; and theſe (to a man) will hate or ſuſpect him: a hundred honeſt gentlemen will dread him as a wit, and a hundred innocent women as a ſatiriſt. In a word, whatever be his fate in poetry, it is ten to one but he muſt give up all the reaſonable aims of life for it. There are indeed ſome advantages accruing from a genius to poetry. and they are all I can think of: the agreeable power of ſelf-amuſement when a man is idle or alone; the privilege of being admitted into the beſt company; and the freedom of ſaying as many careleſs things as other people, without being ſo ſeverely remarked upon.

I believe, if any one, early in his life, ſhould contemplate the dangerous fate of authors, he would ſcarce be of their number on any conſideration. The life of a wit is a warfare upon earth; and the preſent ſpirit of the learned world is ſuch, that to attempt to ſerve it (any way) one muſt have the conſtancy of a martyr, and a reſolution to ſuffer for its ſake. I could wiſh people would believe, what I am pretty certain they will not, that I have been much leſs concerned about fame than I durſt declare till this occaſion, when methinks I ſhould find more credit than I could heretofore, ſince my writings have had their fate already, and it is too late to think of prepoſſeſſing the reader in their favour. I would plead it as ſome merit in me, that the world has never been prepared for theſe trifles by prefaces, biaſſed by recommendations, dazzled with the names of great patrons, wheedled with fine reaſons and pretences, or troubled with excuſes. I confeſs it was want of conſideration that made me an author: I writ becauſe it amuſed me; I corrected becauſe it was as pleaſant to me to correct as to write; and I publiſhed becauſe I was told I might pleaſe ſuch as it was a credit to pleaſe. To what degree I have done this, I am really ignorant; I had too much fondneſs for my productions to judge of them at firſt, and too much judgment to be pleaſed with them at laſt But I have reaſon to think they can h ve no reputation which will continue long, or which deſerves to do ſo; for they have always fallen ſhort not only of what I read of others, but even of my own ideas of poetry.

If any one ſhould imagine I am not in earneſt, I deſire him to reflect that the Ancients (to ſay the leaſt of them) had as much genius as we; and that to take more pains. and employ more time. cannot fail to produce more complete pieces. They conſtantly applied themſelves not only to that art, but to that ſingle branch of an art, to which their talent was moſt powerfully bent; and it was the buſineſs of their lives to correct and finiſh their works for poſterity. If we can pretend to have uſed the ſame induſtry, let us expect the ſame immortality: Though, if we took the ſame care, we ſhould ſtill lie under a further misfortune: they writ in languages that became univerſal and everlaſting, while ours are extremely limited both in extent and in duration: A mighty foundation for our pride! when the utmoſt we can hope is but to be read in one iſland, and to be thrown aſide at the end of one age.

All that is left us is to recommend our productions by the imitation of the Ancients; and it will be found true, that. in every age, the higheſt character for ſenſe and learning has been obtained by thoſe who have been moſt indebted to them. For, to ſay truth, whatever is very good ſenſe, muſt have been common ſenſe in all times; and what we call Learning, is but the knowledge of the ſenſe of our predeceſſors. Therefore they who ſay our thoughts are not our own, becauſe they reſemble the Ancients, may as well ſay our faces are not our own, becauſe they are like our Fathers: And indeed it is very unreaſonable, that people ſhould expect us to be ſcholars, and yet be angry to find us ſo.

I fairly confeſs that I have ſerved myſelf all I could by reading; that I made uſe of the judgment of authors dead and living; that I omitted no means in my power to be informed of my errors, both by my friends and enemies: But the true reaſon theſe pieces are not more correct, is owing to the conſideration how ſhort a time they and I have to live: One may be aſhamed to conſume half one's days in bringing ſenſe and rhyme together; and what critic can be ſo unreaſonable, as not to leave a man time enough for any more ſerious employment, or more agreeable amuſement?

The only plea I ſhall uſe for the favour of the public, is, that I have as great a reſpect for it, as moſt authors have for themſelves; and that I have ſacrificed much of my own ſelf-love for its ſake, in preventing not only many mean things from ſeeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable. I would not be like thoſe authors, who forgive themſelves ſome particular lines for the ſake of a whole poem, and vice verſa a whole poem for the ſake of ſome particular lines. I believe, no one qualification is ſo likely to make a good writer, as the power of rejecting his own thoughts; and it muſt be this (if any thing) that can give me a chance to be one. For what I have publiſhed, I can only hope to be pardoned; but for what I have burned, I deſerve to be praiſed. On this account the world is under ſome obligation to me, and owes me the juſtice in return, to look upon no verſes as mine that are not inſerted in this collection. And perhaps nothing could make it worth my while to own what are really ſo, but to avoid the imputation of ſo many dull and immoral things, as partly by malice, and partly by ignorance, have been aſcribed to me. I muſt further acquit myſelf of the preſumption of having lent my name to recommend any miſcellanies, or works of other men; a thing I never thought becoming a perſon who has hardly credit enough to anſwer for his own.

In this office of collecting my pieces, I am altogether uncertain, whether to look upon myſelf as a man building a monument, or burying the dead.

If time ſhall make it the former, may theſe poems (as long as they laſt) remain as a teſtimony that their author never made his talents ſubſervient to the mean and unworthy ends of party or ſelf-intereſt; the gratification of public prejudices or private paſſions; the flattery of the undeſerving, or the inſult of the unfortunate. If I have written well, let it be conſidered that it is what no man can do without good ſenſe; a quality that not only renders one capable of being a good writer, but a good man. And if I have made any acquiſition in the opinion of any one under the notion of the former, let it be continued to me under no other title than that of the latter.

But if this publication be only a more ſolemn funeral of my remains, I deſire it to be known that I die in charity, and in my ſenſes; without any murmurs againſt the juſtice of this age, or any mad appeals to poſterity. I declare I ſhall think the world in the right, and quietly ſubmit to every truth which time ſhall diſcover to the prejudice of theſe writings; not ſo much as wiſhing ſo irrational a thing, as that every body ſhould be deceived merely for my credit. However, I deſire it may be then conſidered, That there are very few things in this collection which were not written under the age of five-and-twenty; ſo that my youth may be made (as it never fails to be in executions) a caſe of compaſſion: That I was never ſo concerned about my works as to vindicate them in print, believing, if any thing was good, it would defend itſelf, and what was bad could never be defended: That I uſed no artifice to raiſe or continue a reputation, depreciated no dead author I was obliged to, bribed no living one with unjuſt praiſe, inſulted no adverſary with ill language; or, when I could not attack a rival's works, encouraged reports againſt his morals. To conclude, if this volume periſh, let it ſerve as a warning to the critics, not to take too much pains for the future to deſtroy ſuch things as will die of themſelves; and a memento mori to ſome of my vain contemporaries the Poets, to teach them that, when real merit is wanting, it avails nothing to have been encouraged by the great, commended by the eminent, and favoured by the public in general.

Nov. 10. 1716.

VARIATIONS in the Author's Manuſcript Preface.

AFTER page 9. c. 1. l. 27. it followed thus: For my part, I confeſs, had I ſeen things in this view, at firſt, the public had never been troubled either with my writings, or with this apology for them. I am ſenſible how difficult it is to ſpeak of one's ſelf with decency: but when a man muſt ſpeak of himſelf, the beſt way is to ſpeak truth of himſelf, or, he may depend upon it, others will do it for him. I'll therefore make this Preface a general confeſſion of all my thoughts of my own poetry, reſolving with the ſame freedom to expoſe myſelf, as it is in the power of any other to expoſe them. In the firſt place, I thank God and nature, that I was born with a love to poetry; for nothing more conduces to fill up all the intervals of our time, or, if rightly uſed, to make the whole courſe of life entertaining: "Cantantes licet uſque (minus via lædet)." It is a vaſt happineſs to poſſeſs the pleaſures of the head, the only pleaſures in which a man is ſufficient to himſelf, and the only part of him which, to his ſatisfaction, he can employ all day long. The Muſes are "amicæ omnium horarum;" and, like our gay acquaintance, the beſt company in the world, as long as one expects no real ſervice from them. I confeſs there was a time when I was in love with myſelf, and my firſt productions were the children of ſelf-love upon innocence. I had made an Epic Poem, and Panegyrics on all the princes in Europe, and thought myſelf the greateſt genius that ever was. I cannot but regret thoſe delightful viſions of my childhood, which, like the fine colours we ſee when our eyes are ſhut, are vaniſhed for ever. Many trials, and ſad experience, have ſo undeceived me by degrees, that I am utterly at a loſs at what rate to value myſelf. As for fame, I ſhall be glad of any I can get, and not repine at any I miſs; and, as for vanity, I have enough to keep me from hanging myſelf, or even from wiſhing thoſe hanged who would take it away. It was this that made me write. The ſenſe of my faults made me correct; beſides, that it was as pleaſant to me to correct as to write.

At p. 9 c. 2. l. 26. In the firſt place, I own that I have uſed my beſt endeavours to the finiſhing theſe pieces: That I made what advantage I could of the judgment of authors dead and living; and that I omitted no means in my power to be informed of my errors by my friends and my enemies: And that I expect no favour on account of my youth, buſineſs, want of health, or any ſuch idle excuſes. But the true reaſon they are not yet more correct, is owing to the conſideration how ſhort a time they, and I, have to live. A man that can expect but ſixty years, may be aſhamed to employ thirty in meaſuring ſyllables, and bringing ſenſe and rhyme together. We ſpend our youth in purſuit of riches or fame, in hopes to enjoy them when we are old; and when we are old, we find it too late to enjoy any thing. I therefore hope the Wits will pardon me, if I reſerve ſome of my time to ſave my ſoul; and that ſome wiſe men will be of my opinion, even if I ſhould think a part of it better ſpent in the enjoyments of life, than in pleaſing the critics.

PASTORALS

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1704.

Rura mihi et rigui placeant in valibus amnes,
Flumina amem, ſylvaſque, inglorius.

DISCOURSE ON PASTORAL POETRY.*

THERE are not, I believe, a greater number of any ſort of verſes than thoſe which are called Paſtorals; nor a ſmaller, than thoſe which are truly ſo. It therefore ſeems neceſſary to give ſome account of this kind of Poem; and it is my deſign to compriſe in this ſhort paper the ſubſtance of thoſe numerous diſſertations the Critics have made on the ſubject, without omitting any of their rules in my own favour. You will alſo find ſome points reconciled, about which they ſeem to differ; and a few remarks, which, I think, have eſcaped their obſervation.

The original of Poetry is aſcribed to that Age which ſucceeded the creation of the world; and as the keeping of flocks ſeems to have been the firſt employment of mankind, the moſt ancient ſort of Poetry was probably Paſtoral †. It is natural to imagine, that the leiſure of thoſe ancient ſhepherds admitting and inviting ſome diverſion, none was ſo proper to that ſolitary and ſedantary life as ſinging; and that in their ſongs they took occaſion to celebrate their own felicity. From hence a Poem was invented, and afterwards improved to a perfect image of that happy time; which, by giving us an eſteem for the virtues of a former age, might recommend them to the preſent. And ſince the life of ſhepherds was attended with more tranquillity than any other rural employment, the poets choſe to introduce their perſons, from whom it received the name of Paſtoral.

A paſtoral is an imitation of the action of a ſhepherd, or one conſidered under that character. The form of this imitation is dramatic, or narrative, or mixed of both ‡; the fable ſimple, the manners not too polite nor too ruſtic: the thoughts are plain, yet admit a little quickneſs and paſſion, but that ſhort and flowing: the expreſſion humble, yet as pure as the language will afford; neat, but not florid; eaſy, and yet lively. In ſhort, the fable, manners thoughts, and expreſſions, are full of the greateſt ſimplicity in nature.

The complete character of this poem conſiſts in ſimplicity §, brevity, and delicacy; the two firſt of which render an eclogue natural, and the laſt delightful.

If we could copy nature, it may be uſeful to take this idea along with us, that paſtoral is an image of what they call the Golden Age. So that we are not to deſcribe our ſhepherds as ſhepherds at this day really are, but as they may be conceived then to have been, when the beſt of men followed the employment. To carry this reſemblance yet further, it would not be amiſs to give theſe ſhepherds ſome ſkill in aſtronomy, as

* Written at ſixteen years of age.
† Fontenelle's Diſcourſe on Paſtorals.
‡ Heinſius in Theocr.
§ Rapin, de Carm. Paſt. p. 2.

far as it may be useful to that sort of life And an air of piety to the gods should shine through the poem, which so visibly appears in all the works of antiquity; and it ought to preserve some relish of the old way of writing: the connection should be loose, the narrations and descriptions short *, and the periods concise: yet it is not sufficient, that the sentences only be brief; the whole eclogue should be so too: for we cannot suppose poetry in those days to have been the business of men, but their recreation at vacant hours . . . .

But with respect to the present age, nothing more conduces to make these compositures natural, than when some knowledge in rural affairs is discovered †. This may be made to appear rather done by chance than on design, and sometimes is best shewn by inference; lest by too much study to seem natural, we destroy that easy simplicity from whence arises the delight: for what is inviting in this sort of poetry proceeds not so much from the idea of that business, as the tranquillity of a country life.

We must therefore use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries ‡. Nor is it enough to introduce shepherds discoursing together in a natural way; but a regard must be had to the subject, that it contain some particular beauty in itself, and that it be different in every eclogue. Besides, in each of them a designed scene or prospect is to be presented to our view, which should likewise have its variety §. This variety is obtained in a great degree by frequent comparisons, drawn from the most agreeable objects of the country; by interrogations to things inanimate; by beautiful digressions, but those short; sometimes by insisting a little on circumstances; and lastly, by elegant turns on the words, which render the numbers extremely sweet and pleasing. As for the numbers themselves, though they are properly of the heroic measure, they should be the smoothest, the most easy and flowing imaginable.

It is by rules like these that we ought to judge of pastoral. And since the instructions given for any art are to be delivered as that art is in perfection, they must of necessity be derived from those in whom it is acknowledged so to be It is therefore from the practice of Theocritus and Virgil (the only undisputed authors of pastoral) that the critics have drawn the foregoing notions concerning it.

Theocritus excells all others in nature and simplicity, The subjects of his Idyllia are purely pastoral; but he is not so exact in his persons, having introduced reapers ‖ and fishermen as well as shepherds. He is apt to be too long in his descriptions, of which that of the cup in the first pastoral is a remarkable instance. In the manners he seems a little defective; for his swains are sometimes abusive and immodest, and perhaps too much inclining to rusticity; for instance, in his fourth and fifth Idyllia. But it is enough that all others learned their excellence from him, and that his dialect alone has a secret charm in it, which no other could ever attain.

Virgil, who copies Theocritus, refines upon his original: and in all points, where judgment is principally concerned, he is much superior to his master. Though some of his subjects are not pastoral in themselves, but only seem to be such; they have a wonderful variety in them, which the Greek was a stranger to *. He exceeds him in regularity and brevity, and falls short of him in nothing but simplicity and propriety of style; the first of which perhaps was the fault of his age, and the last of his language.

Among the moderns, their success has been greatest who have most endeavoured to make these ancients their pattern. The most considerable genius appears in the famous Tasso, and our Spenser. Tasso in his Aminta has as far excelled all the pastoral writers, as in his Gierusalemme he has outdone the epic poets of his country. But as his piece seems to have been the original of a new sort of poem, the pastoral comedy, in Italy, it cannot so well be considered as a copy of the ancients. Spenser's Calendar, in Mr. Dryden's opinion, is the most complete work of this kind which any nation has produced ever since the time of Virgil †: not but that he may be thought imperfect in some few points. His eclogues are somewhat too long, if we compare them with the ancients. He is sometimes too allegorical, and treats of matters of religion in a pastoral style, as the Mantuan had done before him. He has employed the lyric measure, which is contrary to the practice of the old poets. His stanza is not still the same, nor always well chosen. This last may be the reason his expression is sometimes not concise enough: for the tetrastic has obliged him to extend his sense to the length of four lines, which would have been more closely confined in the couplet.

In the manners, thoughts, and characters, he comes near to Theocritus himself; though, notwithstanding all the care he has taken, he is certainly inferior in his dialect: for the Doric had its beauty and propriety in the time of Theocritus; it was used in part of Greece, and frequent in the mouths of many of the greatest persons: whereas the old English and country phrases of Spenser were either entirely obsolete, or spoken only by people of the lowest condition. As there is a difference betwixt simplicity and rusticity, so the expression of simple thoughts should be plain, but not clownish. The addition he has made of a calendar to his eclogues, is very beautiful;

* Rapin, Reflex. sur l'Art Poet. d' Arist. p. 2. Reflex. xxvii.

† Pref. to Virg. Past. in Dryd. Virg.

‡ Fontenelle's Disc. of Pastorals.

§ See the forementioned Preface

‖ ΘΕΡΙΣΤΑΙ. Idyl. x. and ΑΜΙΕΙΣ, Idyl. xxi.

* Rapin, Refl. on Arist. part ii. Refl. xxvi.—— Pref. to the Ecl. in Dryden's Virg.

† Dedication to Virg. Ecl.

ſince by this, beſides the general moral of innocence and ſimplicity, which is common to other authors of paſtoral, he has one peculiar to himſelf; he compares human life to the ſeveral ſeaſons, and at once expoſes to his readers a view of the great and little worlds, in their various changes and aſpects. Yet the ſcrupulous diviſion of his paſtorals into months, has obliged him either to repeat the ſame deſcription, in other words, for three months together; or, when it was exhauſted before, entirely to omit it: whence it comes to paſs that ſome of his eclogues (as the ſixth, eighth, and tenth, for example) have nothing but their titles to diſtinguiſh them. The reaſon is evident, becauſe the year has not that variety in it to furniſh every month with a particular deſcription, as it may every ſeaſon.

Of the following eclogues I ſhall only ſay, that theſe four comprehend all the ſubjects which the critics upon Theocritus and Virgil will allow to be fit for paſtoral: That they have as much variety of deſcription, in reſpect of the ſeveral ſeaſons, as Spenſer's: That, in order to add to this variety, the ſeveral times of the day are obſerved, the rural employments in each ſeaſon or time of day, and the rural ſcenes or places proper to ſuch employments; not without ſome regard to the ſeveral ages of man, and the different paſſions proper to each age.

But after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to ſome good old authors, whoſe works as I had leiſure to ſtudy, ſo, I hope, I have not wanted care to imitate.

PASTORALS.

SPRING.

THE FIRST PASTORAL, OR DAMON.

TO SIR WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

FIRST in these fields I try the sylvan strains,
Nor blush to sport on Windsor's blissful plains:
Fair Thames, flow gently from thy sacred spring,
While on thy banks Sicilian muses sing;
Let vernal airs through trembling osiers play,
And Albion's cliffs resound the rural lay.
Youth at, too wise for pride, too good for power,
Enjoy the glory to be great no more,
And, carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustriously are lost!
O let my muse her slender reed inspire,
Till in your native shades you tune the lyre:
So when the nightingale to rest removes,
The thrush may chant to the forsaken groves,
But charm'd to silence, listens while she sings,
And all th' aërial audience clap their wings.
Soon as the flocks shook off the nightly dews,
Two swains, whom love kept wakeful, and the muse,
Pour'd o'er the whitening vale their fleecy care,
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair:
The dawn now blushing on the mountain's side,
Thus Daphnis spoke, and Strephon thus reply'd.

DAPHNIS.

Hear how the birds, on every bloomy spray,
With joyous music wake the dawning day!
Why sit we mute, when early linnets sing,
When warbling Philomel salutes the spring?
Why sit we sad, when Phosphor shines so clear,
And lavish nature paints the purple year?

STREPHON.

Sing then, and Damon shall attend the strain,
While yon' slow oxen turn the furrow'd plain.
Here the bright crocus and blue violet glow;
Here western winds on breathing roses blow,
I'll stake yon' lamb, that near the fountain plays,
And from the brink his dancing shade surveys.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 34. The first reading was,
And his own image from the bank surveys.

DAPHNIS.

And I this bowl, where wanton ivy twines,
And swelling clusters bend the curling vines:
Four figures rising from the work appear,
The various seasons of the rolling year;
And what is that, which binds the radiant sky,
Where twelve fair signs in beauteous order lie?

DAMON.

Then sing by turns, by turns the muses sing;
Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring,
Now leaves the trees, and flowers adorn the ground;
Begin, the vales shall every note rebound.

STREPHON.

Inspire me, Phœbus, in my Delia's praise,
With Waller's strains, or Granville's moving lays!
A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
That threats a fight, and spurns the rising sand.

DAPHNIS.

O Love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes;
No lambs or sheep for victims I'll impart,
Thy victim, Love, shall be the shepherd's heart.

STREPHON.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

DAPHNIS,

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green,
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen;
While a kind glance at her pursuer flies,
How much at variance are her feet and eyes!

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 36. And clusters lurk beneath the curling vines.

Ver. 49. Originally thus in the MS.

Pan, let my numbers equal Strephon's lays,
Of Parian stone thy statue will I raise;
But if I conquer, and augment my fold,
Thy Parian statue shall be chang'd to gold.

STREPHON.

O'er golden ſands let rich Pactolus flow,
And trees weep amber on the banks of Po;
Bleſt Thames's ſhores the brighteſt beauties yield;
Feed here my lambs, I'll ſeek no diſtant field.

DAPHNIS.

Celeſtial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves.
If Windſor ſhades delight the matchleſs maid,
Cynthus and Hybla yield to Windſor ſhade.

STREPHON.

All nature mourns, the ſkies relent in ſhowers,
Huſh'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flowers;
If Delia ſmile, the flowers begin to ſpring,
The ſkies to brighten, and the birds to ſing.

DAPHNIS.

All nature laughs, the groves are freſh and fair,
The ſun's mild luſtre warms the vital air;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 61. It ſtood thus at firſt:

Let rich Iberia golden fleeces boaſt,
Her purple wool the proud Aſſyrian coaſt,
Bleſt Thames's ſhores, &c.

Ver. 61. Originally thus in the MS.

Go, flowery wreath, and let my Sylvia know,
Compar'd to thine how bright her beauties ſhew:
Then die; and dying, teach the lovely maid
How ſoon the brighteſt beauties are decay'd.

DAPHNIS.

Go, tuneful bird, that pleas'd the woods ſo long,
Of Amaryllis learn a ſweeter ſong:
To heaven ariſing then her notes convey,
For heav'n alone is worthy ſuch a lay.

Ver. 69. Theſe verſes were thus at firſt:

All nature mourns, the birds their ſongs deny,
Nor waſted brooks the thirſty flowers ſupply;
If Delia ſmile, the flowers begin to ſpring,
The brooks to murmur, and the birds to ſing.

If Sylvia ſmiles, new glories gild the ſhore,
And vanquiſh'd nature ſeems to charm no more.

STREPHON.

In ſpring the fields, in autumn hills I love,
At morn the plains, at noon the ſhady grove,
But Delia always; abſent from her ſight,
Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight.

DAPHNIS.

Sylvia's like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
More bright than noon, yet freſh as early day;
Ev'n ſpring diſpleaſes, when ſhe ſhines not here;
But, bleſs'd with her, 'tis ſpring throughout the year.

STREPHON.

Say, Daphnis, ſay, in what glad ſoil appears,
A wondrous tree that ſacred monarch bears;
Tell me but this, and I'll diſclaim the prize,
And give the conqueſt to thy Sylvia's eyes.

DAPHNIS.

Nay, tell me firſt, in what more happy fields
The thiſtle ſprings, to which the lily yields:
And then a nobler prize I will reſign;
For Sylvia, charming Sylvia ſhall be thine.

DAMON.

Ceaſe to contend; for, Daphnis, I decree
The bowl to Strephon, and the lamb to thee.
Bleſt ſwains, whoſe nymphs in every grace excel;
Bleſt nymphs, whoſe ſwains thoſe graces ſing ſo well!
Now riſe, and haſte to yonder woodbine bowers,
A ſoft retreat from ſudden vernal ſhowers;
The turf with rular dainties ſhall be crown'd,
While opening blooms diffuſe their ſweets around.
For ſee! the gathering flocks to ſhelter tend,
And from the pleiads fruitful ſhowers deſcend.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 99 was originally,

The turf with country dainties ſhall be ſpread,
And trees with twining branches ſhade your head.

SUMMER.

THE SECOND PASTORAL, OR ALEXIS.

TO DR. GARTH.

A SHEPHERD's boy (he ſeeks no better name)
Led forth his flocks along the ſilver Thame,
Where dancing ſun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering ſhade.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. were thus printed in the firſt edition.

A faithful ſwain, whom love had taught to ſing,
Bewail'd his fate beſide a ſilver ſpring;

Soft as he mourn'd, the ſtreams forgot to flow,
The flocks around a dumb compaſſion ſhew,

VARIATIONS.

Where gentle Thames his winding waters leads
Through verdant foreſts, and through flowery meads.

Ver. 3. Originally thus in the MS.

There to the winds he plain'd his hapleſs love,
And Amyrillis fill'd the vocal grove.

The Naiads wept in every watery bower,
And Jove consented in a silent shower.
Accept, O Garth, the muse's early lays,
That adds this wreath of ivy to thy bays;
Hear what from love unpractis'd hearts endure,
From love, the sole disease thou canst not cure.

Ye shady beeches, and ye cooling streams,
Defence from Phœbus', not from Cupid's beams,
To you I mourn; nor to the deaf I sing,
The woods shall answer, and their echo ring.
The hills and rocks attend my doleful lay,
Why art thou prouder and more hard than they?
The bleating sheep with my complaints agree,
They parch'd with heat, and I inflam'd by thee.
The sultry Sirius burns the thirsty plains,
While in thy heart eternal winter reigns.

Where stray ye, muses, in what lawn or grove,
While your Alexis pines in hopeless love?
In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides?
As in the crystal spring I view my face,
Fresh rising blushes paint the watery glass;
But since those graces please thy eyes no more,
I shun the fountains which I sought before.
Once I was skill'd in every herb that grew,
And every plant that drinks the morning dew;
Ah, wretched shepherd, what avails thy art,
To cure thy lambs, but not to heal thy heart!

Let other swains attend the rural care,
Feed fairer flocks, or richer fleeces sheer:
But nigh yon' mountain let me tune my lays,
Embrace my love, and bind my brows with bays.
That flute is mine which Colin's tuneful breath
Inspir'd when living, and bequeath'd in death?
He said; Alexis, take this pipe, the same
That taught the groves my Rosalinda's name:
But now the reeds shall hang on yonder tree,
For ever silent, since despis'd by thee.
O! were I made by some transforming power
The captive bird that sings within thy bower!
Then might my voice thy listening ears employ,
And I those kisses he receives enjoy.

And yet my numbers please the rural throng,
Rough Satyrs dance, and Pan applauds the song:
The nymphs, forsaking every cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring!
Each amorous nymph prefers her gifts in vain,
On you their gifts are all bestow'd again,
For you the swains the fairest flowers design,
And in one garland all their beauties join;
Accept the wreath which you deserve alone,
In whom all beauties are compris'd in one.

See what delights in sylvan scenes appear!
Descending Gods have found Elysium here.
In woods bright Venus with Adonis stray'd,
And chaste Diana haunts the forest shade.
Come, lovely nymph, and bless the silent hours,
When swains from sheering seek their nightly bowers;
When weary reapers quit the sultry field,
And crown'd with corn their thanks to Ceres yield.
This harmless grove no lurking viper hides,
But in my breast the serpent Love abides.
Here bees from blossoms sip the rosy dew,
But your Alexis knows no sweets but you.
Oh deign to visit our forsaken seats,
The mossy fountains, and the green retreats!
Where'er you walk, cool gales shall fan the glade;
Trees, where you sit, shall crowd into a shade:
Where'er you tread, the blushing flowers shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes.
Oh! how I long with you to pass my days,
Invoke the muses, and resound your praise!
Your praise the birds shall chant in every grove,
And winds shall waft it to the powers above.
But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wondering forests soon should dance again,
The moving mountains hear the powerful call,
And headlong streams hang listening in their fall!

But see, the shepherds shun the noon-day heat,
The lowing herds to murm'ring brooks retreat,
To closer shades the panting flocks remove;
Ye gods! and is there no relief for love!
But soon the sun with milder rays descends
To the cool ocean, where his journey ends:
On me love's fiercer flames for ever prey,
By night he scorches, as he burns by day.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 27.

Oft in the crystal spring I cast a view,
And equall'd Hylas, if the glass be true;
But since those graces meet my eyes no more,
I shun, &c.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 79, 80.

Your praise the tuneful birds to heaven shall bear,
And listening wolves grow milder as they hear.

So the verses were originally written; but the author, young as he was, soon found the absurdity, which Spenser himself overlooked, of introducing wolves into England.

Ver. 91. Me love inflames, nor will his fires allay.

AUTUMN.

THE THIRD PASTORAL, OR HYLAS AND ÆGON.

TO MR. WYCHERLY.

Beneath the ſhade a ſpreading beech diſplays,
Hylas and Ægon ſung their rural lays:
This mourn'd a faithleſs, that an abſent love;
And Delia's name and Dori's fill'd the grove.
Ye Mantuan nymphs, your ſacred ſuccour bring;
Hylas and Ægon's rural lays I ſing.
Thou, whom the nine with Plautus' wit inſpire,
The art of Terence and Menander's fire;
Whoſe ſenſe inſtructs us, and whoſe humour charms,
Whoſe judgment ſways us, and whoſe ſpirit warms!
Oh, ſkill'd in Nature! ſee the hearts of ſwains,
Their artleſs paſſions, and their tender pains.
Now ſetting Phœbus ſhone ſerenely bright,
And fleecy clouds were ſtreak'd with purple light;
When tuneful Hylas, with melodious moan,
Taught rocks to weep, and made the mountains groan.
Go, gentle gales, and bear my ſighs away!
To Delia's ear the tender notes convey,
As ſome ſad turtle his loſt love deplores,
And with deep murmurs fills the ſounding ſhores;
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn,
Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn.
Go, gentle gales, and bear my ſighs along!
For her, the feather'd quires neglect their ſong;
For her, the limes their pleaſing ſhades deny;
For her, the lilies hang their heads and die.
Ye flowers that droop, forſaken by the ſpring,
Ye birds that, left by ſummer, ceaſe to ſing,
Ye trees that fade when autumn heats remove,
Say, is not abſence death to thoſe who love?
Go, gentle gales, and bear my ſighs away!
Curs'd be the fields that cauſe my Delia's ſtay;
Fade every bloſſom, wither ever tree,
Die every flower, and periſh all, but ſhe.
What have I ſaid? where'er my Delia flies,
Let ſpring attend, and ſudden flowers ariſe!
Let opening roſes knotted oaks adorn,
And liquid amber drop from every thorn.
Go, gentle gales, and bear my ſighs along!
The birds ſhall ceaſe to tune their evening ſong,
The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,
And ſtreams to murmur, ere I ceaſe to love.
Not bubbling fountains to the thirſty ſwain,
Not balmy ſleep to labourers faint with pain,
Not ſhowers to larks, or ſunſhine to the bee,
Are half ſo charming as thy ſight to me.
Go, gentle gales, and bear my ſighs away!
Come, Delia, come; ah, why this long delay?
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia ſounds,
Delia, each cave and echoing rock rebounds.
Ye powers, what pleaſing frenzy ſoothes my mind!
Do lovers dream, or is my Delia kind?
She comes, my Delia comes!—Now ceaſe my lay,
And ceaſe, ye gales, to bear my ſighs away! [mir'd;
Next Ægon ſung, while Windſor groves ad-
Rehearſe, ye muſes, what yourſelves inſpir'd.
Reſound, ye hills, reſound my mournful ſtrain!
Of perjur'd Doris, dying I complain;
Here where the mountains, leſſening as they riſe,
Loſe the low vales, and ſteal into the ſkies;
While labouring oxen, ſpent with toil and heat,
In their looſe traces from the field retreat;
While curling ſmokes from village tops are ſeen,
And the fleet ſhades glide o'er the duſky green.
Reſound, ye hills, reſound my mournful lay!
Beneath yon' poplar oft we paſs'd the day:
Oft on the rind I carv'd her amorous vows,
While ſhe with garlands hung the bending boughs:
The garlands fade, the vows are worn away;
So dies her love, and ſo my hopes decay.
Reſound, ye hills, reſound my mournful ſtrain!
Now bright Arcturus glads the teeming grain;
Now golden fruits on loaded branches ſhine,
And grateful cluſters ſwell with floods of wine;
Now bluſhing berries paint the yellow grove;
Juſt gods! ſhall all things yield returns but love?
Reſound, ye hills, reſound my mournful lay!
The ſhepherds cry, "Thy flocks are left a prey."
Ah! what avails it me, the flocks to keep,
Who loſt my heart while I preſerv'd my ſheep?
Pan came, and aſk'd, what magic caus'd my ſmart,
Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart?

VARIATION.

Ver. 48. Originally thus in the MS.
With him through Libya's burning plains I'll go,
On Alpine mountains tread th' eternal ſnow;
Yet feel no heat but what our loves impart,
And dread no coldneſs but in Thirſis' heart.

What eyes but hers, alas, have power to move!
And is there magic but what dwells in love?
Reſound, ye hills, reſound my mournful ſtrains!
I'll fly from ſhepherds, flocks, and flowery plains.
From ſhepherds, flocks, and plains, I may remove,
Forſake mankind, and all the world—but love!
I know thee, Love! on foreign mountains bred,
Wolves gave thee ſuck, and ſavage tigers fed.
Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlinds, and in thunder born!

Reſound, ye hills, reſound my mournful lay!
Farewell, ye woods, adieu the light of day!
One leap from yonder cliffs ſhall end my pains;
No more, ye hills, no more reſound my ſtrains!
Thus ſung the ſhepherds till th' approach of night,
The ſkies yet bluſhing with departing light,
When falling dews with ſpangles deck'd the glade,
And the low ſun had lengthen'd every ſhade.

WINTER.

THE FOURTH PASTORAL, OR DAPHNE.

TO THE MEMORY OF MRS. TEMPEST.

LYCIDAS.

THYRSIS, the muſic of that murmuring ſpring
Is not ſo mournful as the ſtrains you ſing;
Nor rivers winding through the vales below,
So ſweetly warble, or ſo ſmoothly flow.
Now ſleeping flocks on their ſoft fleeces lie,
The moon, ſerene in glory, mounts the ſky,
While ſilent birds forget their tuneful lays,
O ſing of Daphne's fate, and Daphne's praiſe!

THYRSIS.

Behold the groves that ſhine with ſilver froſt,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure loſt.
Here ſhall I try the ſweet Alexis' ſtrain,
That call'd the liſtening Dyrades to the plain?
Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,
And bade his willows learn the moving ſong.

LYCIDAS.

So may kind rains their vital moiſture yield,
And ſwell the future harveſt of the field.
Begin; this charge the dying Daphne gave,
And ſaid, "Ye ſhepherds, ſing around my grave!"
Sing, while beſide the ſhaded tomb I mourn,
And with freſh bays her rural ſhrine adorn.

THYRSIS.

Ye gentle muſes, leave your cryſtal ſpring,
Let Nymphs and Sylvans cypreſs garlands bring;
Ye weeping loves, the ſtream with myrtles hide,
And break your bows as when Adonis dy'd;
And with your golden darts, now uſeleſs grown,
Inſcribe a verſe on this relenting ſtone:
"Let nature change, let heaven and earth deplore,
"Fair Daphne's dead, and love is now no more!"

'Tis done, and nature's various charms decay:
See gloomy clouds obſcure the cheerful day!
Now hung with pearls the dropping trees appear,
Their faded honours ſcatter'd on her bier.
See where, on earth, the flowery glories lie!
With her they flouriſh'd and with her they die.
Ah, what avail the beauties nature wore?
Fair Daphne's dead, and beauty is no more!
For her the flocks refuſe their verdant food,
The thirſty heifers ſhun the gliding flood;
The ſilver ſwans her hapleſs fate bemoan,
In notes more ſad than when they ſing their own;
In hollow caves ſweet Echo ſilent lies,
Silent, or only to her name replies;
Her name with pleaſure once ſhe taught the ſhore,
Now Daphne's dead, and pleaſure is no more!
No grateful dews deſcend from evening ſkies,
Nor morning odours from the flowers ariſe;
No rich perfumes refreſh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incenſe yield.
The balmy zephyrs, ſilent ſince her death,
Lament the ceaſing of a ſweeter breath;
Th' induſtrious bees neglect their golden ſtore;
Fair Daphne's dead, and ſweetneſs is no more!

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 29. Originally thus in the MS.
'Tis done, and nature's chang'd ſince you are gone;
Behold, the clouds have "put their mourning on."

No more the mounting larks, while Daphne ſings,
Shall, liſtening in mid air, ſuſpend their wings;
No more the birds ſhall imitate her lays,
Or, huſh'd with wonder, hearken from the ſprays;
No more the ſtreams their wonder ſhall forbear,
A ſweeter muſic than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal ſhore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and muſic is no more!
Her fate is whiſper'd by the gentle breeze,
And told in ſighs to all the trembling trees;
The trembling trees, in every plain and wood,
Her fate remurmur to the ſilver flood:
The ſilver flood, ſo lately calm, appears
Swell'd with new paſſion, and o'erflows with tears;
The winds, and trees, and floods, her death deplore,
Daphne, our grief! our glory now no more!
But ſee! where Daphne wondering mounts on high
Above the clouds, above the ſtarry ſky!
Eternal beauties grace the ſhining ſcene,
Fields ever freſh, and groves for ever green!
There while you reſt in amaranthine bowers,
Or from thoſe meads ſelect unfading flowers,
Behold us kindly, who your name implore,
Daphne, our goddeſs, and our grief no more!

LYCIDAS.

How all things liſten, while thy muſe complains!
Such ſilence waits on Philomela's ſtrains,
In ſome ſtill evening, when the whiſpering breeze
Pants on the leaves, and dies upon the trees
To thee bright goddeſs, oft a lamb ſhall bleed,
If teeming ewes increaſe my fleecy breed.
While plants their ſhade, or flowers their odours give,
Thy name, thy honour, and thy praiſe ſhall live!

THYRSIS.

But ſee, Orion ſheds unwholeſome dews;
Ariſe, the pines a noxious ſhade diffuſe;
Sharp Boreas blows, and nature feels decay,
Time conquers all, and we muſt time obey.
Adieu, ye vales, ye mountains, ſtreams, and groves,
Adieu, ye ſhepherds' rural lays and loves;
Adieu, my flocks; farewell, ye Sylvan crew;
Daphne, farewell; and all the world adieu!

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 83. Originally thus in the MS.

While vapours riſe, and driving ſnows deſcend,
Thy honour, name, and praiſe, ſhall never end.

NOTE.

Ver. 89, &c.] Theſe four laſt lines allude to the ſeveral ſubjects of the four Paſtorals, and to the ſeveral ſcenes of them particulariſed before in each.

MESSIAH.

A SACRED ECLOGUE.

IN IMITATION OF VIRGIL'S POLLIO.

ADVERTISEMENT.

In reading ſeveral paſſages of the prophet Iſaiah, which foretel the coming of Chriſt, and the felicities attending it, I could not but obſerve a remarkable parity between many of the thoughts, and thoſe in the Pollio of Virgil. This will not ſeem ſurpriſing, when we reflect, that the Eclogue was taken from a Sibylline prophecy on the ſame ſubject. One may judge that Virgil did not copy it line for line; but ſelected ſuch ideas as beſt agreed with the nature of Paſtoral Poetry, and diſpoſed them in that manner which ſerved moſt to beautify his piece. I have endeavoured the ſame in this imitation of him, though without admitting any thing of my own; ſince it was written with this particular view, that the reader, by comparing the ſeveral thoughts, might ſee how far the images and deſcriptions of the prophet are ſuperior to thoſe of the poet. But as I fear I have prejudiced them by my management, I ſhall ſubjoin the paſſages of Iſaiah, and thoſe of Virgil, under the ſame diſadvantage of a literal tranſlation.

Ye nymphs of Solyma! begin the ſong:
To heavenly themes ſublimer ſtrains belong.
The moſſy fountains and the ſylvan ſhades,
The dreams of Pindus and th' Aonian maids,
Delight no more—O thou my voice inſpire
Who touch'd Iſaiah's hallow'd lips with fire!
Rapt into future times, the bard begun!
A Virgin ſhall conceive, a Virgin bear a Son!
From * Jeſſe's root behold a branch ariſe,
Whoſe ſacred flower with fragrance fills the ſkies:

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 8. A Virgin ſhall conceive—All crimes ſhall ceaſe, &c.]

Virg. Ecl. iv. ver. 6.
Jam redit et Virgo, redeunt Saturnia regna;
Jam nova progenies cœlo demittitur alto.
Te duce, ſi qua maneant ſceleris veſtigia noſtri,

* Iſai. xi. ver. 1.

Th' Æthereal ſpirit o'er its leaves ſhall move,
And on its top deſcends the myſtic Dove.
Ye † Heavens! from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in ſoft ſilence ſhed the kindly ſhower!
The ‡ ſick and weak the healing plant ſhall aid,
From ſtorms a ſhelter, and from heat a ſhade.

IMITATIONS.

Irrita perpetua ſolvent formidine terras,—
Pacatumque reget patriis virtutibus orbem.

"Now the Virgin returns, now the kingdom of "Saturn returns, now a new progeny is ſent down "from high heaven. By means of thee, whate- "ver relics of our crimes remain, ſhall be wiped "away, and free the world from perpetual fears. "He ſhall govern the earth in peace, with the vir- "tues of his Father."

† Ch. xiv. ver. 8.
‡ Ch. xxv. ver. 4.

All crimes ſhall ceaſe, and ancient frauds ſhall fail,
Returning * Juſtice lift aloft her ſcale;
Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-rob'd Innocence from heaven deſcend.
Swift fly the years, and riſe th' expected morn!
Oh ſpring to light, auſpicious babe, be born!
See, nature haſtes her earlieſt wreaths to bring,
With all the incenſe of the breathing ſpring:
See † lofty Lebanon his head advance,
See nodding foreſts on the mountains dance:
See ſpicy clouds from lowly Saron riſe,
And Carmel's flowery top perfume the ſkies!
Hark! a glad voice the lonely deſert cheers;
Prepare the ‡ way! a God, a God appears!

IMITATIONS.

Iſaiah, Ch. vii. ver. 14. "Behold a Virgin "ſhall conceive and bear a Son—Chap. ix. ver. "6, 7. Unto us a Child is born; unto us a Son "is given; the Prince of Peace: of the increaſe "of his government, and of his peace, there ſhall "be no end: Upon the throne of David, and up-"on his kingdom, to order and to eſtabliſh it, "with judgment and with juſtice, for ever and "ever."

Ver. 23. See nature haſtes, &c.] Virg. Ecl. iv. ver. 18.

At tibi prima, puer, nullo munuſcula cultu,
Errantes hederas paſſim cum baccare tellus,
Mixtaque ridenti colocaſia fundet acantho—
Ipſa tibi blandè fundent cunabula flores.

"For thee, O Child, ſhall the earth, without "being tilled, produce her early offerings; wind-"ing ivy, mixed with Baccar, and Colocaſſia with "ſmiling Acanthus. Thy cradle ſhall pour forth "pleaſing flowers about thee."

Iſaiah, Ch. xxxi. ver. 1. "The wilderneſs and "the ſolitary place ſhall be glad, and the deſert "ſhall rejoice and bloſſom as the roſe." Ch. lx. ver. 13. "The glory of Lebanon ſhall come un-"to thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box "together, to beautify the place of thy ſanctu-"ary."

Ver. 29. Hark! a glad voice, &c.
Virg. Ecl. iv. ver. 46.

Aggredere, ô magnos, (aderit jam tempus) honores,
Cara deûm ſoboles, magnum Jovis incrementum—

Ecl. ver. 62.

Ipſi lætitiâ voces ad ſidera jactant
Intonſi montes, ipſæ jam carmina rupes,
Ipſa ſonant arbuſta, Deus, Deus ille Menalca!

"O come and receive the mighty honours: the "time draws nigh, O beloved offspring of the "Gods! O great increaſe of Jove! The unculti-"vated mountains ſends ſhouts of joy to the ſtars;

* Cb. ix. ver. 7. † Cb. xxxv. ver. 2.
‡ Cb. xl. ver. 3, 4.

A God, a God! the vocal hills reply,
The rocks proclaim th' approaching Deity.
Lo, earth receives him from the bending ſkies;
Sink down, ye mountains; and ye vallies, riſe;
With heads declin'd, ye cedars, homage pay;
Be ſmooth, ye rocks: ye rapid floods, give way!
The Saviour comes! by ancient bards foretold:
Hear him, ye deaf; and all ye blind, behold!
He from thick films ſhall purge the viſual ray,
And on the ſightleſs eye-ball pour the day:
'Tis he th' obſtructed paths of ſound ſhall clear,
And bid new muſic charm th' unfolding ear:
The * dumb ſhall ſing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe.
No ſigh, no murmur, the wide world ſhall hear,
From every face he wipes off every tear.
In † adamantine chains ſhall death be bound,
And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound.
As the good ‡ ſhepherd tends his fleecy care,
Seeks freſheſt paſture, and the pureſt air;
Explores the loſt, the wandering ſheep directs,
By day o'erſees them, and by night protects;
The tender lambs he raiſes in his arms,
Feeds from his hand, and in his boſom warms;
Thus ſhall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promis'd § father of the future age.
No more ſhall ‖ nation againſt nation riſe,
Nor ardent warriors meet with hateful eyes,
Nor fields with gleaming ſteel be cover'd o'er,
The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more:
But uſeleſs lances into ſcythes ſhall bend,
And the broad falchion in a ploughſhare end.
Then palaces ſhall riſe; the joyful ¶ Son
Shall finiſh what his ſhort-liv'd Sire begun;
Their vines a ſhadow to their race ſhall yield,
And the fame hand that ſow'd, ſhall reap the field:
The ſwain in barren †† deſerts with ſurpriſe
Sees lilies ſpring, and ſudden verdure riſe;

IMITATIONS.

"the very rocks ſing in verſe; the very ſhrubs "cry out, A God, a God!".

Iſaiah, Ch. xl. ver. 3, 4. "The voice of him "that crieth in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the "way of the Lord! make ſtraight in the deſert "a high-way for our God! Every valley ſhall be "exalted, and every mountain and hill ſhall be "made low, and the crooked ſhall be made "ſtraight, and the rough places plain." Ch. iv, ver. 23. "Break forth into ſinging, ye mountains; "O foreſt, and every tree therein, for the Lord "hath redeemed Iſrael."

Ver. 67. The ſwain in barren deſerts] Virg. Ecl. iv. ver. 28.

Molli paulatim flaveſcet campus ariſtâ,
Incultiſque rubens pendebit ſentibus uva:
Et duræ quercus ſudabunt roſcida mella.

* Cb. xliii. ver. 18. Cb. xxxv. ver. 5, 6.
† Cb. xxv. ver. 8. ‡ Cb. xl. ver. 11.
§ Cb. ix. ver. 6. ‖ Cb. ii. ver. 4.
¶ Cb. lxv. ver. 21, 22.
†† Cb. xxxv. ver. 1. 7.

And ſtarts, amidſt the thirſty wilds to hear
New falls of water murmuring in his ear.
On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
The green reed trembles, and the bulruſh nods.
Waſte ſandy * valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
The ſpiry fir and ſhapely box adorn:
To leafleſs ſhrubs the flowery palms ſucceed,
And odorous myrtle to the noiſome weed.
The † lambs with wolves ſhall graze the verdant mead,
And boys in flowery bands the tiger lead:
The ſteer and lion at one crib ſhall meet,
And harmleſs ‡ ſerpents lick the pilgrim's feet.

IMITATIONS.

"The fields ſhall grow yellow with ripen'd "ears, and the red grape ſhall hang upon the wild "brambles, and the hard oaks ſhall diſtil honey "like dew."

Iſaiah, Ch. xxxv. ver. 7. "The parched ground "ſhall become a pool, and the thirſty land ſprings "of water: In the habitations where dragons "lay, ſhall be graſs, and reeds and ruſhes." Ch. lv. ver. 13. "Inſtead of the thorn ſhall come up "the fir-tree, and inſtead of the brier ſhall come "up the myrtle-tree."

Ver. 77. The lambs with wolves, &c.] Virg. Ecl. iv. ver. 21.

Ipſæ lacte domum referent diſtenta capellæ
Ubera, nec magnos metuent armenta leones—
Occidet et ſerpens, et fallax herba veneni
Occidet.—

"The goats ſhall bear to the fold their udders "diſtended with milk; nor ſhall the herds be "afraid of the greateſt lions. The ſerpent ſhall "die, and the herb that conceals poiſon ſhall die."

Iſaiah, Ch. xi. ver. 6, &c. "The wolf ſhall "dwell with the lamb, and the leopard ſhall lie "down with the kid, and the calf and the young "lion and the fatling together; and a little child "ſhall lead them. And the lion ſhall eat ſtraw like "the ox. And the ſucking child ſhall play on "the hole of the aſp, and the weaned child ſhall "put his hand on the den of the cockatrice."

* Cb. xli. ver. 19. Cb. lv. ver. 13.
† Cb. xi. ver. 6, 7, 8. ‡ Cb. lxv. ver. 25.

The ſmiling infant in his hand ſhall take
The creſted baſiliſk and ſpeckled ſnake,
Pleas'd, the green luſtre of the ſcales ſurvey,
And with their forky tongue ſhall innocently play.
Riſe, crown'd with light, imperial * Salem, riſe!
Exalt thy towery head, and lift thy eyes!
See a long † race thy ſpacious courts adorn;
See future ſons, and daughters yet unborn,
In crowding ranks on every ſide ariſe,
Demanding life, impatient for the ſkies!
See barbarous ‡ nations at thy gates attend,
Walk in thy light, and in thy temple bend;
See thy bright altars throng'd with proſtrate kings,
And heap'd with products of § Sabean ſprings,
For thee Idume's ſpicy foreſts blow,
And ſeeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow.
See heaven its ſparkling portals wide diſplay,
And break upon thee in a flood of day!
No more the riſing ‖ ſun ſhall gild the morn,
Nor evening Cynthia fill her ſilver horn;
But loſt, diſſolv'd in thy ſuperior rays,
One tide of glory, one unclouded blaze
O'erflow thy courts: the Light himſelf ſhall ſhine
Reveal'd, and God's eternal day be thine!
The ¶ feas ſhall waſte, the ſkies in ſmoke decay,
Rocks fall to duſt, and mountains melt away;
But fix'd his word, his ſaving power remains;
Thy realm for ever laſts, thy own Meſſiah reigns!

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 85. Riſe, crown'd with light, imperial Salem, riſe!] The thoughts of Iſaiah, which compoſe the latter part of the poem, are wonderfully elevated, and much above thoſe general exclamations of Virgil, which make the loftieſt part of his Pollio.

Magnis ab integro ſæclorum naſcitur ordo!
—toto ſurget gens aurea mundo!
—incipient magni procedere menſes!
Aſpice, venturo lætentur ut omnia ſæclo! &c.

The reader needs only to turn to the paſſages of Iſaiah, here cited.

* Cb. lx. ver. 1. † Cb. lx. ver. 4.
‡ Cb. lx. ver. 3. § Cb. lx. ver. 6.
‖ Cb. lx. ver. 19. 20.
¶ Cb. li. ver. 6. Cb. liv. ver. 10.

WINDSOR-FOREST.

To the Right Honourable

GEORGE LORD LANSDOWN.

" Non injuſſa cano: Te noſtræ, Vare, myricæ,
" Te Nemus omne canet: Nec Phœbo gratior ulla eſt,
" Quam ſibi quæ Vari præſcripſit pagina nomen."

VIRG.

THIS poem was written at two different times: the firſt part of it, which relates to the country, in the year 1704, at the ſame time with the paſtorals: the latter part was not added till the year 1713, in which it was publiſhed.

THY foreſts, Windſor! and thy green retreats,
At once the monarch's and the muſe's ſeats,
Invite my lays. Be preſent, Sylvan maids!
Unlock your ſprings, and open all your ſhades.
Granville commands; your aid, O muſes, bring!
What muſe for Granville can refuſe to ſing?
The groves of Eden, vaniſh'd now ſo long,
Live in deſcription, and look green in ſong;
Theſe, were my breaſt inſpir'd with equal flame,
Like them in beauty, ſhould be like in fame.
Here hills and vales, the woodland and the plain,
Here earth and water ſeem to ſtrive again;
Not chaos-like together cruſh'd and bruis'd,
But, as the world, harmoniouſly confus'd;
Where order in variety we ſee,
And where, though all things differ, all agree.
Here waving groves a chequer'd ſcene diſplay,
And part admit, and part exclude the day;
As ſome coy nymph her lover's warm addreſs
Nor quite indulges, nor can quite repreſs.
There, interſpers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees ariſe that ſhun each other's ſhades.
Here in full light the ruſſet plains extend;
There, wrapt in clouds, the bluiſh hills aſcend.
Ev'n the wild heath diſplays her purple dies,
And 'midſt the deſert, fruitful fields ariſe,
That, crown'd with tufted trees and ſpringing corn,
Like verdant iſles the ſable waſte adorn.
Let India boaſt her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber, or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which thoſe trees adorn.
Nor proud Olympus yields a nobler ſight,
Though gods aſſembled grace his towering height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their bleſſings, all thoſe gods appear.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 3, &c. Originally thus:

Chaſte goddeſs of the woods,
Nymphs of the vales, and Naiads of the floods,
Lead me through arching bow'rs, and glimm'ring glades,
Unlock your ſprings——

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 25. Originally thus:

Why ſhould I ſing our better ſuns or air,
Whoſe vital draughts prevent the leach's care,
While through freſh fields th' enliv'ning odours breathe,
Or ſpread with vernal blooms the purple heath?

See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona crown'd
Here blushing Flora paints th' enamell'd ground,
Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand;
Rich Industry sits smiling on the plains,
And peace and plenty tell, a Stuart reigns.

Not thus the land appear'd in ages past,
A dreary desert, and a gloomy waste,
To savage beasts and savage laws a prey,
And kings more furious and severe than they;
Who claim'd the skies, dispeopled air and floods,
The lonely lords of empty wilds and woods:
Cities laid waste, they storm'd the dens and caves
(For wiser brutes were backward to be slaves).
What could be free, when lawless beasts obey'd,
And ev'n the elements a tyrant sway'd?
In vain kind seasons swell'd the teeming grain,
Soft showers distill'd, and suns grew warm in vain;
The swain with tears his frustrate labour yields,
And famish'd dies amidst his ripen'd fields.
What wonder then, a beast or subject slain
Were equal crimes in a despotic reign?
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But, while the subject starv'd, the beast was fed.
Proud Nimrod first the bloody chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that barbarous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.
The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes:
The levell'd towns with weeds lie cover'd o'er;
The hollow winds through naked temples roar;
Round broken columns clasping ivy twin'd;
O'er heaps of ruin stalk'd the stately hind;
The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,
And savage howlings fill the sacred quires.
Aw'd by his nobles, by his commons curst,
Th' Oppressor rul'd tyrannic where he durst,
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And serv'd alike his vassals and his God.
Whom ev'n the Saxon spar'd, and bloody Dane,
The wanton victims of his sport remain.
But see, the man who spacious regions gave
A waste for beasts, himself deny'd a grave!

Stretch'd on the lawn his second hope survey,
At once the chacer, and at once the prey:
Lo! Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart.
Succeeding monarchs heard the subjects cries,
Nor saw displeas'd the peaceful cottage rise.
Then gathering flocks on unknown mountains fed,
O'er sandy wilds were yellow harvests spread,
The forests wonder'd at th' unusual grain,
And secret transport touch'd the conscious swain.
Fair Liberty, Britannia's goddess, rears
Her cheerful head, and leads the golden years.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
Now range the hills, the gameful woods beset,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.
When milder autumn summer's heat succeeds,
And in the new-shorn field the partridge feeds;
Before his lord the ready spaniel bounds,
Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds;
But when the tainted gales the game betray,
Couch'd close he lies, and meditates the prey:
Secure the trust th' unfaithful field beset,
Till hovering o'er them sweeps the swelling net.
Thus (if small things we may with great compare)
When Albion sends her eager sons to war,
Some thoughtless town, with ease and plenty blest,
Near and more near, the closing lines invest,
Sudden they seize th' amaz'd defenceless prize,
And high in air Britannia's standard flies.

See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.
Ah! what avail his glossy varying dies,
His purple crest, and scarlet circled eyes,
The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold?

Nor yet when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 49. Originally thus in the MS.

From towns laid waste, to dens and caves they ran
(For who first stoop'd to be a slave was man).

Ver. 57, &c.

No wonder savages or subjects slain—
But subjects starv'd, while savages were fed.

It was originally thus; but the word Savages is not properly applied to beasts, but to men; which occasioned the alteration.

Ver. 72. And wolves with howling fill, &c.

The Author thought this an error, wolves not being common in England at the time of the Conqueror.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 91.

Oh may no more a foreign master's rage,
With wrongs yet legal, curse a future age!
Still spread, fair liberty: thy heav'nly wings,
Breathe plenty on the fields, and fragrance on the springs.

Ver. 97.

When yellow autumn summer's heat succeeds,
And into wine the purple harvest bleeds,
The partridge feeding in the new-shorn fields,
Both morning sports and ev'ning pleasure yields.

Ver. 107. It stood thus in the first edition:

Pleas'd, in the general's sight, the host lie down
Sudden before some unsuspecting town;
The young, the old, one instant makes our prize,
And o'er their captive heads Britannia's standard flies.

To plains with well-breath'd beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare
(Beasts, urg'd by us, their fellow beasts pursue,
And learn of man each other to undo):
With slaughtering guns th' unweary'd fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves;
Where doves in flocks the leafless trees o'ershade,
And lonely woodcocks haunt the watery glade.
He lifts the tube, and levels with his eye;
Strait a short thunder breaks the frozen sky:
Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clamorous lapwings feels the leaden death;
Oft, as the mounting larks their notes prepare,
They fall, and leave their little lives in air.

In genial spring, beneath the quivering shade,
Where cooling vapours breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand:
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed,
Our plenteous streams a various race supply,
The bright-ey'd perch with fins of Tyrian dye,
The silver eel, in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropp'd with gold,
Swift trouts, diversify'd with crimson stains,
And pikes, the tyrants of the watery plains.

Now Cancer glows with Phœbus' fiery car:
The youth rush eager to the Sylvan war,
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest walks surround,
Rouze the fleet hart, and cheer the opening hound.
Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain:
Hills, vales, and floods, appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.
See the bold youth strain up the threat'ning steep,
Rush through the thickets, down the vallies sweep,
Hang o'er their coursers heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.
Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin-train;
Nor envy, Windsor! since thy shades have seen
As bright a goddess, and as chaste a queen;
Whose care, like her's, protects the Sylvan reign,
The earth's fair light, and empress of the main.

Here, too, 'tis sung, of old Diana stray'd,
And Cynthus' top forsook for Windsor shade;
Here was she seen o'er airy wastes to rove,
Seek the clear spring, or haunt the pathless grove;
Here arm'd with silver bows, in early dawn,
Her buskin'd virgins trac'd the dewy lawn.

Above the rest a rural nymph was fam'd,
Thy offspring, Thames! the fair Lodona nam'd
(Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast,
The muse shall sing, and what she sings shall last).

Scarce could the goddess from her nymph be known,
But by the crescent and the golden zone.
She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair;
A painted quiver on her shoulder sounds,
And with her dart the flying deer she wounds.
It chanc'd, as, eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd,
Pan saw and lov'd, and burning with desire
Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.
Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky;
Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the clouds he drives the trembling doves;
As from the god she flew with furious pace,
Or as the god, more furious, urg'd the chace.
Now fainting, sinking, pale, the nymph appears;
Now close behind, his sounding steps she hears;
And now his shadow reach'd her as she run,
His shadow lengthen'd by the setting sun;
And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair.
In vain on father Thames she calls for aid,
Nor could Diana help her injur'd maid.
Faint, breathless, thus she pray'd, nor pray'd in vain;
"Ah, Cynthia! ah—though banish'd from thy "train,
"Let me, O let me, to the shades repair,
"My native shades!—there weep and murmur "there!"
She said, and, melting as in tears she lay,
In a soft silver stream dissolv'd away.
The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps;
Still bears the name the hapless virgin bore,
And bathes the forest where she rang'd before.
In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,
And with celestial tears augments the waves.
Oft in her glass the musing shepherd spies
The headlong mountains and the downward skies,
The watery landskip of the pendant woods,
And absent trees that tremble in the floods;
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green;
Through the fair scene roll slow the lingering streams,
Then foaming pour along, and rush unto the Thames.

Thou, too, great father of the British floods!
With joyful pride survey'st our lofty woods;
Where towering oaks their growing honours rear,
And future navies on thy shores appear.
Not Neptune's self from all her streams receives
A wealthier tribute, than to thine he gives.
No seas so rich, so gay no banks appear,
No lake so gentle, and no spring so clear.
Nor Po so swells the fabling poet's lays,
While led along the skies his current strays,
As thine, which visits Windsor's fam'd abodes,
To grace the mansion of our earthly gods:
Nor all his stars above a lustre show,
Like the bright beauties on thy banks below;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 126.

O'er rustling leaves around the naked groves.

Ver. 129.

The fowler lifts his level'd tube on high.

Where Jove, ſubdu'd by mortal paſſion ſtill,
Might change Olympus for a nobler hill.
Happy the man whom this bright court approves,
His ſovereign favours, and his country loves:
Happy next him, who to theſe ſhades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muſe inſpires;
Whom humbler joys of home-felt quiet pleaſe,
Succeſſive ſtudy, exerciſe, and eaſe.
He gathers health from herbs the foreſt yields,
And of their fragrant phyſic ſpoils the fields;
With chemic art exalts the mineral powers,
And draws the aromatic ſouls of flowers:
Now marks the courſe of rolling orbs on high;
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye;
Of ancient writ unlocks the learned ſtore,
Conſults the dead, and lives paſt ages o'er:
Or wandering thoughtful on the ſilent wood,
Attends the duties of the wiſe and good.
T' obſerve a mean, be to himſelf a friend,
To follow nature, and regard his end;
Or looks on heaven with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free ſoul expatiate in the ſkies,
Amid her kindred ſtars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confeſs her home!
Such was the life great Scipio once admir'd,
Thus Atticus and Trumbull thus retir'd.
Ye ſacred nine! that all my ſoul poſſeſs,
Whoſe raptures fire me, and whoſe viſions bleſs,
Bear me, oh bear me to ſequeſter'd ſcenes,
The bowery mazes, and ſurrounding greens;
To Thames's banks which fragrant breezes fill,
Or where the muſes ſport on Cooper's Hill
(On Coopers Hill eternal wreaths ſhall grow,
While laſts the mountain, or while Thames ſhall flow):
I ſeem through conſecrated walks to rove,
I hear ſoft muſic die along the grove:
Led by the ſound, I roam from ſhade to ſhade,
By god-like poets venerable made:
Here his firſt lays majeſtic Denham ſung;
There the laſt numbers flow'd from Cowley's tongue.
O early loſt! what tears the river ſhed,
When the ſad pomp along his banks was led!
His drooping ſwans on every note expire,
And on his willows hung each muſe's lyre.
Since fate relentleſs ſtopp'd their heavenly voice,
No more the foreſts ring, or groves rejoice;
Who now ſhall charm the ſhades, where Cowley ſtrung
His living harp, and lofty Denham ſung
But hark! the groves rejoice, the foreſt rings!
Are theſe reviv'd? or is it Granville ſings!
'Tis yours, my Lord, to bleſs our ſoft retreats,
And call the muſes to their ancient ſeats;
To paint anew the flowery Sylvan ſcenes,
To crown the foreſt with immortal greens,
Make Windſor hills in lofty numbers riſe,
And lift her turrets nearer to the ſkies;
To ſing thoſe honours you deſerve to wear,
And add new luſtre to her ſilver ſtar.
Here noble Surrey felt the ſacred rage,
Surrey, the Granville of a former age:
Matchleſs his pen, victorious was his lance,
Bold in the liſts, and graceful in the dance:
In the ſame ſhades the Cupids tun'd his lyre,
To the ſame notes, of love, and ſoft deſire:
Fair Geraldine, bright object of his vow,
Then fill'd the groves, as heavenly Mira now.
Oh wouldſt thou ſing what heroes Windſor bore,
What king firſt breath'd upon her winding ſhore,
Or raiſe old warriors, whoſe ador'd remains
In weeping vaults her hallow'd earth contains!
With Edward's acts adorn the ſhining page,
Stretch his long triumphs down through every age;
Draw monarchs chain'd, and Creſſi's glorious field,
The lilies blazing on the regal ſhield:
Then, from her roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy ſong ſhould vanquiſh'd France appear,
And bleed for ever under Britain's ſpear.
Let ſofter ſtrains ill-fated Henry mourn,
And palms eternal flouriſh round his urn.
Here o'er the martyr-king the marble weeps,
And, faſt behind him, once-fear'd Edward ſleeps:

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 233. It ſtood thus in the MS.
And force great Jove, if Jove's a lover ſtill,
To change Olympus, &c.

Ver. 235.
Happy the man, who to the ſhades retires,
But doubly happy, if the muſe inſpires!
Bleſt whom the ſweets of home-felt quiet pleaſe;
But far more bleſt, whoſe ſtudy joins with eaſe.

Ver. 267. It ſtood thus in the MS.
Methinks around your holy ſcenes I rove,
And hear your muſic echoing through the grove;
With tranſport viſit each inſpiring ſhade,
By godlike poets venerable made.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 275.
What ſighs, what murmurs, fill'd the vocal ſhore!
His tuneful ſwans were heard to ſing no more.

Ver. 290. her ſilver ſtar.] All the lines that follow were not added to the poem till the year 1710. What immediately followed this, and made the concluſion, were theſe:

My humble muſe, in unambitious ſtrains,
Paints the green foreſts and the flowery plains;
Where I obſcurely paſs my careleſs days,
Pleas'd in the ſilent ſhade with empty praiſe,
Enough for me that to the liſtening ſwains
Firſt in theſe fields I ſung the Sylvan ſtrains.

Ver. 307. Originally thus in the MS.
When braſs decays, when trophies lie o'erthrown,
And mouldering into duſt drops the proud ſtone,

Whom not th' extended Albion could contain,
From old Belerium to the northern main,
The grave unites; where ev'n the great find reſt,
And blended lie th' oppreſſor and th' oppreſt!
Make ſacred Charles's tomb for ever known
(Obſcure the place, and uninſcrib'd the ſtone);
Oh fact accurs'd! what tears has Albion ſhed!
Heavens, what new wounds! and how her old have bled!
She ſaw her ſons with purple deaths expire,
Her ſacred domes involv'd in rolling fire,
A dreadful ſcries of inteſtine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and diſhoneſt ſcars.
At length great Anna ſaid, "Let diſcord ceaſe!"
She ſaid, the world obey'd, and all was peace!
In that bleſt moment from his oozy bed
Old father Thames advanc'd his reverend head.
His treſſes dropp'd with dews, and o'er the ſtream
His ſhining horns diffus'd a golden gleam:
Grav'd on his urn appear'd the moon, that guides
His ſwelling waters, and alternate tides;
The figur'd ſtreams in waves of ſilver roll'd,
And on their banks Auguſta roſe in gold;
Around his throne the ſea-born brothers ſtood
Who ſwell with tributary urns his flood!
Firſt the fam'd authors of this ancient name,
The winding Iſis, and the fruitful Thame:
The Kennet ſwift, for ſilver eels renown'd;
The Loddon ſlow, with verdant alders crown'd;
Cole, whoſe dark ſtreams his flowery iſlands lave;
And chalky Wey, that rolls a milky wave:
The blue, tranſparent Vandalis appears;
The gulfy Lee his ſedgy treſſes rears;
And ſullen Mole, that hides his diving flood;
And ſilent Darent, ſtain'd with Daniſh blood.
High in the midſt, upon his urn reclin'd,
(His ſea-green mantle waving with the wind)
The god appear'd: he turn'd his azure eyes
Where Windſor-domes and pompous turrets riſe;
Then bow'd, and ſpoke; the winds forget to roar,
And the huſh'd waves glide ſoftly to the ſhore.
Hail, ſacred peace! hail, long-expected days,
That Thames's glory to the ſtars ſhall raiſe!
Though Tiber's ſtreams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Hermus ſwells with tides of gold,
From heaven itſelf the ſeven-fold Nilus flows,
And harveſts on a hundred realms beſtows;
Theſe now no more ſhall be the muſes' themes,
Loſt in my fame, as in the ſea their ſtreams.
Let Volga's banks with iron ſquadrons ſhine,
And groves of lances glitter on the Rhine;
Let barbarous Ganges arm a ſervile train:
Be mine the bleſſings of a peaceful reign.
No more my ſons ſhall die with Britiſh blood,
Red Iber's ſands, or Iſter's foaming flood:
Safe on my ſhore each unmoleſted ſwain
Shall tend the flocks, or reap the bearded grain;
The ſhady empire ſhall retain no trace
Of war or blood, but in the Sylvan chace;
The trumpet ſleep, while cheerful horns are blown,
And arms employ'd on birds and beaſts alone.
Behold! th' aſcending villas on my ſide,
Project long ſhadows o'er the cryſtal tide.
Behold! Auguſta's glittering ſpires increaſe,
And temples riſe, the beauteous works of peace.
I ſee, I ſee, where two fair cities bend
Their ample bow, a new Whitehall aſcend!
There mighty nations ſhall inquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come;
There kings ſhall ſue, and ſuppliant ſtates be ſeen
Once more to bend before a Britiſh queen.
Thy trees, fair Windſor! now ſhall leave their woods,
And half thy foreſts ruſh into thy floods;
Bear Britain's thunder, and her croſs diſplay,
To the bright regions of the riſing day:
Tempt icy ſeas, where ſcarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole;
Or under ſouthern ſkies exalt their ſails,
Led by new ſtars, and borne by ſpicy gales!
For me the balm ſhall bleed, and amber flow,
The coral redden, and the ruby glow,
The pearly ſhell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the ripening ore to gold.
The time ſhall come, when free as ſeas or wind
Unbounded Thames ſhall flow for all mankind,
Whole nations enter with each ſwelling tide,
And ſeas but join the regions they divide;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 321. Originally thus in the MS.
Oh fact accurs'd! oh ſacrilegious brood,
Sworn to rebellion, principled in blood!
Since that dire morn, what tears has Albion ſhed:
Gods what new wounds, &c.

Ver. 327. Thus in the MS.
Till Anna roſe, and bade the furies ceaſe;
Let there be peace—ſhe ſaid, and all was peace.

Between verſe 330 and 331, originally ſtood theſe lines:

From ſhore to ſhore exulting ſhouts he heard,
O'er all his banks a lambient light appear'd;
With ſparkling flames heaven's glowing concave ſhone,
Fictitious ſtars, and glories not her own.
He ſaw, and gently roſe above the ſtream;
His ſhining horns diffuſe a golden gleam:
With pearl and gold his towery front was dreſt,
The tributes of the diſtant eaſt and weſt.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 363. Originally thus in the MS.
Let Venice boaſt her towers amidſt the main,
Where the rough Adrian ſwells and roars in vain:
Here not a town, but ſpacious realm ſhall have
A ſure foundation on the rolling wave.

Ver. 385, &c. were originally thus in the MS.
Now ſhall our fleets the bloody croſs diſplay
To the rich regions of the riſing day,
Or thoſe green iſles, where headlong Titan ſteeps
His hiſſing axle in th' Atlantic deeps:
Tempt icy ſeas, &c.

Earth's diſtant ends our glory ſhall behold,
And the new world launch forth to ſeek the old.
Then ſhips of uncouth form ſhall ſtem the tide,
And feather'd people crowd my wealthy ſide,
And naked youths and painted chiefs admire,
Our ſpeech, our colour, and our ſtrange attire!
Oh, ſtretch thy reign, fair peace! from ſhore to ſhore,
Till conqueſt ceaſe, and ſlavery be no more;
Till the freed Indians in their native groves
Reap their own fruits, and woo their ſable loves;
Peru once more a race of kings behold,
And other Mexicos be roof'd with gold.
Exil'd by thee from earth to deepeſt hell,
In brazen bonds ſhall barbarous diſcord dwell:
Gigantic pride, pale terror, gloomy care,
And mad ambition, ſhall attend her there:
There purple vengeance bath'd in gore retires,
Her weapons blunted, and extinct her fires:
There hateful envy her own ſnakes ſhall feel,
And perſecution mourn her broken wheel:
There faction roar, rebellion bite her chain,
And gaſping furies thirſt for blood in vain.

Here ceaſe thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays
Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days:
The thoughts of gods let Granville's verſe recite,
And bring the ſcenes of opening fate to light:
My humble muſe, in unambitious ſtrains,
Paints the green foreſts and the flowery plains,
Where peace deſcending bids her olive ſpring,
And ſcatters bleſſings from her dove-like wing.
Ev'n I more ſweetly paſs my careleſs days,
Pleas'd in the ſilent ſhade with empty praiſe;
Enough for me, that to the liſtening ſwains
Firſt in theſe fields I ſung the Sylvan ſtrains.

ODES.

ODE FOR MUSIC ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY.

I.

DESCEND, ye nine! descend, and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire;
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the sounding lyre!
In a sadly-pleasing strain
Let the warbling lute complain;
Let the loud trumpet sound,
Till the roofs all around
The shrill echoes rebound:
While, in more lengthen'd notes and slow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow,
Hark! the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies;
Exulting in triumph now swell the bold notes,
In broken air trembling, the wild music floats;
Till, by degrees, remote and small,
The strains decay,
And melt away,
In a dying, dying fall.

II.

By music, minds an equal temper know,
Nor swell too high, nor sink too low.
If in the breast tumultuous joys arise,
Music her soft, assuasive voice applies;
Or when the soul is press'd with cares,
Exalts her in enlivening airs.
Warriors she fires with animated sounds;
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds;
Melancholy lifts her head,
Morpheus rouses from his bed,
Sloth unfolds her arms and wakes,
Listening envy drops her snakes;
Intestine war no more our passions wage,
And giddy factions hear away their rage.

III.

But when our country's cause provokes to arms,
How martial music every bosom warms!
So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main.
Transported demi-gods stood round,
And men grew heroes at the sound,
Enflam'd with glory's charms:
Each chief his seven-fold shield display'd,
And half unsheath'd the shining blade:
And seas, and rocks, and skies, rebound
To arms, to arms, to arms!

IV.

But when through all th' infernal bounds,
Which flaming Phlegeton surrounds,
Love, strong as death, the poets led
To the pale nations of the dead,
What sounds were heard,
What scenes appear'd,
O'er all the dreary coasts!
Dreadful gleams,
Dismal screams,
Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe,
Sullen moans,
Hollow groans,
And cries of tortur'd ghosts!
But hark! he strikes the golden lyre;
And see! the tortur'd ghosts respire.
See, shady forms advance!
Thy stone, O Sisyphus, stands still,
Ixion rests upon his wheel,
And the pale spectres dance!
The furies sink upon their iron beds,
And snakes, uncurl'd, hang listening round their heads.

V.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flowers;
By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel,
Or amaranthine bowers;
By the hero's armed shades,
Glittering through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wandering in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life:
Oh, take the husband, or return the wife!

He ſung, and hell conſented
To hear the poet's prayer;
Stern Proſerpine relented,
And gave him back the fair.
Thus ſong could prevail
O'er death, and o'er hell,
A conqueſt how hard and how glorious!
Though fate had faſt bound her
With Styx nine times round her,
Yet muſic and love were victorious.

VI.

But ſoon, too ſoon, the lover turns his eyes:
Again ſhe falls, again ſhe dies, ſhe dies!
How wilt thou now the fatal ſiſters move?
No crime was thine, if 'tis no crime to love.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beſide the falls of fountains,
Or where Hebrus wanders
Rolling in mæanders
All alone,
Unheard, unknown,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghoſt,
For ever, ever, ever loſt!
Now with furies ſurrounded,
Deſpairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidſt Rhodope's ſnows:
See, wild as the winds, o'er the deſert he flies;
Hark! Hæmus reſounds with the Bacchanals cries—
Ah, ſee, he dies!
Yet, ev'n in death Eurydice he ſung;
Eurydice ſtill trembled on his tongue;
Eurydice the woods,
Eurydice the floods,
Eurydice the rocks and hollow mountains rung.

VII.

Muſic the fierceſt grief can charm,
And fate's ſevereſt rage diſarm:
Muſic can ſoften pain to eaſe,
And make deſpair and madneſs pleaſe:
Our joys below it can improve,
And antedate the bliſs above.
This the divine Cecilia found,
And to her Maker's praiſe confin'd the ſound.
When the full organ joins the tuneful quire,
Th' immortal powers incline their ear;
Borne on the ſwelling notes our ſouls aſpire,
While ſolemn airs improve the ſacred fire;
And angels lean from heaven to hear.
Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,
To bright Cecilia greater power is given:
His numbers rais'd a ſhade from hell,
Her's lift the ſoul to heaven.

TWO CHORUSES

TO THE TRAGEDY OF BRUTUS.

Altered from Shakſpeare by the Duke of Buckingham; at whoſe deſire theſe two Choruſes were compoſed, to ſupply as many, wanting in his play. They were ſet many years afterwards by the famous Bononcini, and performed at Buckingham-houſe.

CHORUS OF ATHENIANS.

STROPHE I.

Ye ſhades, where ſacred truth is ſought;
Groves, where immortal ſages taught;
Where heavenly viſions Plato fir'd,
And Epicurus lay inſpir'd!
In vain your guiltleſs laurels ſtood
Unſpotted long with human blood.
War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades,
And ſteel now glitters in the muſes ſhades.

ANTISTROPHE I.

Oh, heaven-born ſiſters! ſource of art!
Who charm the ſenſe, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along,
Mortal truth and myſtic ſong!
To what new clime, what diſtant ſky,
Forſaken, friendleſs, ſhall ye fly?
Say, will ye bleſs the bleak Atlantic ſhore?
Or bid the furious Gaul be rude no more?

STROPHE II.

When Athens ſinks by fates unjuſt,
When wild barbarians ſpurn her duſt;
Perhaps ev'n Britain's utmoſt ſtore
Shall ceaſe to bluſh with ſtranger's gore;
See arts her ſavage ſons controul,
And Athens riſing near the pole!
Till ſome new tyrant lifts his purple hand,
And civil madneſs tears them from the land.

ANTISTROPHE II.

Ye gods, what juſtice rules the ball!
Freedom and arts together fall;
Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are ſlaves.
Oh, curs'd effects of civil hate,
In ev'ry age, in every ſtate!

Still, when the luſt of tyrant power ſucceeds,
Some Athens periſhes, ſome Tully bleeds.

CHORUS OF YOUTHS AND VIRGINS.

SEMICHORUS.

Oh, tyrant love! haſt thou poſſeſt
The prudent, learn'd, and virtuous breaſt!
Wiſdom and wit in vain reclaim,
And arts but ſoften us to feel thy flame.
Love, ſoft intruder, enters here,
But entering learns to be ſincere.
Marcus with bluſhes owns he loves,
And Brutus tenderly reproves.
Why, virtue, doſt thou blame deſire,
Which nature has impreſt?
Why, nature, doſt thou ſooneſt fire
The mild and generous breaſt?

CHORUS.

Love's purer flames the gods approve;
The gods and Brutus bend to love:
Brutus for abſent Porcia ſighs,
And ſterner Caſſius melts at Junia's eyes.
What is looſe love? a tranſient guſt,
Spent in a ſudden ſtorm of luſt;
A vapour fed from wild deſire,
A wandering, ſelf-conſuming fire.
But Hymen's kinder flames unite,
And burn for ever one;
Chaſte as cold Cynthia's virgin light,
Productive as the ſun.

SEMICHORUS.

Oh, ſource of every ſocial tie,
United wiſh, and mutual joy!
What various joys on one attend,
As ſon, as father, brother, huſband, friend!
Whether his hoary ſire he ſpies,
While thouſand grateful thoughts ariſe;
Or meets his ſpouſe's fonder eye;
Or views his ſmiling progeny;
What tender paſſions take their turns,
What home-felt raptures move!
His heart now melts, now leaps, now burns,
With reverence, hope, and love.

CHORUS.

Hence guilty joys, diſtaſtes, ſurmiſes,
Hence falſe tears, deceits, diſguiſes,
Dangers, doubts, delays, ſurpriſes;
Fires that ſcorch, yet dare not ſhine:
Pureſt love's unwaſting treaſure,
Conſtant faith, fair hope, long leiſure;
Days of eaſe, and nights of pleaſure;
Sacred Hymen! theſe are thine.

ODE ON SOLITUDE.

Written when the Author was about Twelve Years old.

Happy the man, whoſe wiſh and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air,
In his own ground.
Whoſe herds with milk, whoſe fields with bread,
Whoſe flocks ſupply him with attire;
Whoſe trees in ſummer yield him ſhade,
In winter fire.
Bleſt, who can unconcern'dly find
Hours, days, and years ſlide ſoft away,
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day,
Sound ſleep by night; ſtudy and eaſe,
Together mix'd; ſweet recreation,
And innocence, which moſt does pleaſe
With meditation.
Thus let me live, unſeen, unknown;
Thus unlamented let me die,
Steal from the world, and not a ſtone
Tell where I lie.

ODE.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN TO HIS SOUL.

I.

Vital ſpark of heavenly flame!
Quit, oh quit this mortal frame:
Trembling, hoping, lingering, flying,
Oh the pain, the bliſs of dying!
Ceaſe, fond Nature, ceaſe thy ſtrife,
And let me languiſh into life.

II.

Hark! they whiſper; Angels ſay,
Siſter Spirit, come away.
What is this abſorbs me quite?
Steals my ſenſes, ſhuts my ſight,
Drowns my ſpirits, draws my breath?
Tell me, my ſoul, can this be death?

III.

The world recedes; it diſappears!
Heaven opens on my eyes! my ears
With ſounds ſeraphic ring:
Lend, lend your wings! I mount! I fly!
O Grave! where is thy victory?
O Death! where is thy ſting?

AN ESSAY ON CRITICISM.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1709.

Si quid neriſti rectius iſtis
Candidus imperti; ſi non, his utere mecum.

HORACE.

CONTENTS OF THE ESSAY ON CRITICISM.

PART I.

INTRODUCTION. That 'tis as great a fault to judge ill, as to write ill, and a more dangerous one to the public, ver. 1.

That a true Taſte is as rare to be found as a true Genius, ver. 9 to 18.

That moſt men are born with ſome Taſte, but ſpoiled by falſe Education, ver. 19 to 25.

The multitude of Critics and cauſes of them, ver. 26 to 45.

That we are to ſtudy our own Taſte, and know the limits of it, ver. 46 to 67.

Nature the beſt guide of judgment, ver. 68 to 87.

Improved by Art and Rules, which are but methodized Nature, ver. 88.

Rules derived from the Practice of the Ancient Poets, ver. 98 to 110.

That therefore the Ancients are neceſſary to be ſtudied by a Critic, particularly Homer and Virgil, ver. 120 to 138.

Of Licences, and the uſe of them by the Ancients, ver. 140 to 180.

Reverence due to the Ancients, and praiſe of them, ver. 181, &c.

PART II. Ver. 203, &c.

Cauſes hindring a true Judgment. 1. Pride, ver. 208. 2. Imperfect Learning, ver. 215. 3. Judging by parts, and not by the whole, ver. 233 to 288. Critics in Wit, Language, Verſification, only, 288, 305, 339, &c. 4. Being too hard to pleaſe, or too apt to admire, ver. 384. 5. Partiality—too much love to a Sect,—to the Ancients or Moderns, ver. 394. 6. Prejudice or Prevention, ver. 408. 7. Singularity, ver. 424. 8. Inconſtancy, ver. 430. 9. Party Spirit, ver. 452, &c. 10 Envy, ver. 466. Againſt Envy, and in praiſe of Good-nature, ver. 508, &c. When Severity is chiefly to be uſed by Critics, ver. 526, &c.

PART III. Ver. 568, &c.

Rules for the Conduct of Manners in a Critic. 1. Candour, ver. 563. Modeſty, ver. 556. Good-breeding, ver. 572. Sincerity and Freedom of Advice, ver. 578. 2. When one's Counſel is to be reſtrained, ver. 584. Character of an incorrigible Poet, ver. 600; and of an impertinent Critic, ver. 610, &c. Character of a good Critic, ver. 629. The Hiſtory of Criticiſm, and Characters of the beſt Critics: Ariſtotle, ver. 645. Horace, ver. 653. Dionyſius, ver. 665. Petronius, ver. 667. Quintilian, ver. 670. Longinus, ver. 675. Of the Decay of Criticiſm, and its Revival. Eraſmus, ver. 693. Vida, ver. 705. Boileau, ver. 714. Lord Roſcommon, &c. ver. 725. Concluſion.

ESSAY ON CRITICISM.

'Tis hard to ſay, if greater want of ſkill
Appear in writing or in judging ill;
But of the two, leſs dangerous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than miſlead our ſenſe.
Some few in that, but numbers err in this,
Ten cenſure wrong for one who writes amiſs;
A fool might once himſelf alone expoſe,
Now one in verſe makes many more in proſe.
'Tis with our judgments as our watches; none
Go juſt alike, yet each believes his own.
In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taſte as ſeldom is the critic's ſhare;
Both muſt alike from Heaven derive their light,
Theſe born to judge, as well as thoſe to write.
Let ſuch teach others who themſelves excel,
And cenſure freely who have written well:
Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true;
But are not critics to their judgment too?
Yet, if we look more cloſely, we ſhall find
Moſt have the ſeeds of judgment in their mind:
Nature affords at leaſt a glimmering light; [right,
The lines, though touch'd but faintly, are drawn
But as the ſlighteſt ſketch, if juſtly trac'd,
Is by ill colouring but the more diſgrac'd,
So by falſe learning is good ſenſe defac'd:
Some are bewilder'd in the maze of ſchools,
And ſome made coxcombs nature meant but fools.
In ſearch of wit theſe loſe their common ſenſe,
And then turn critics in their own defence:
Each burns alike, who can, or cannot write,
Or with a rivals, or an eunuch's ſpite.
All fools have ſtill an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing ſide.
If Mævius ſcribble in Apollo's ſpite,
There are who judge ſtill worſe than he can write.
Some have at firſt for wits, then poets paſt;
Turn'd critics next, and prov'd plain fools at laſt.
Some neither can for wits nor critics paſs,
As heavy mules are neither horſe nor aſs.

Thoſe half-learn'd witlings, numerous in our iſle,
As half-form'd inſects on the banks of Nile;
Unfiniſh'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation 's ſo equivocal:
To tell them would a hundred tongues require,
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire.
But you, who ſeek to give and merit fame,
And juſtly bear a critic's noble name,
Be ſure yourſelf and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taſte, and learning, go;
Launch not beyond your depth, but be diſcreet,
And mark that point where ſenſe and dulneſs meet.
Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,
And wiſely curb'd proud man's pretending wit:
As on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide ſandy plains;
Thus in the ſoul while memory prevails,
The ſolid power of underſtanding fails;
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's ſoft figures melt away.
One ſcience only will one genius fit;
So vaſt is art, ſo narrow human wit:
Not only bounded to peculiar arts,
But oft in thoſe confin'd to ſingle parts.
Like kings, we loſe the conqueſts gain'd before,
By vain ambition ſtill to make them more:
Each might his ſeveral province well command,
Would all but ſtoop to what they underſtand.
Firſt follow nature; and your judgment frame
By her juſt ſtandard, which is ſtill the ſame:
Unerring NATURE, ſtill divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd, and univerſal light,
Life, force, and beauty, muſt to all impart,
At once the ſource, and end, and teſt of art,
Art from that fund each juſt ſupply provides;
Works without ſhew, and without pomp preſides,
In ſome fair body thus th' informing ſoul
With ſpirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole,
Each motion guides, and every nerve ſuſtains;
Itſelf unſeen, but in th' effects remains.
Some, to whom Heaven in wit has been proſuſe,
Want as much more, to turn it to its uſe;
For wit and judgment often are at ſtrife,
Though meant each others aid, like man and wife.

VARIATIONS.

Between ver. 25 and 26 were theſe lines, ſince omitted by the Author:

Many are ſpoil'd by that pedantic throng,
Who with great pains teach youth to reaſon wrong:
Tutors, like virtuoſos, oft inclin'd
By ſtrange tranſfuſion to improve the mind,
Draw off the ſenſe we have, to pour in new:
Which yet, with all their ſkill, they ne'er could do.

Ver. 30, 31. In the firſt edition thus:

Thoſe hate as rivals all that write; and others
But envy wits, as eunuchs envy lovers.

Ver. 32. "All fools," in the firſt edition: "All "ſuch," in edition, 1717; ſince reſtored.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 63. Ed. 1. But ev'n in thoſe, &c.

Ver. 74.

That art is beſt, which moſt reſembles her;
Which ſtill preſides, yet never does appear.

Ver. 76.——the ſecret ſoul.

Ver. 80.

There are whom Heaven has bleſt with ſtore of wit,
Yet want as much again to manage it.

'Tis more to guide, than spur the muse's steed;
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed:
The winged courser, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course.
Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodis'd:
Nature, like liberty, is but restrain'd
By the same laws which first herself ordain'd.
Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules endites,
When to repress, and when indulge our flights:
High on Parnassus' top her sons she shew'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod:
Held from afar, aloft, th' immortal prize,
And urg'd the rest by equal steps to rise.
Just precepts thus from great example given,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from heaven.
The generous critic fann'd the poet's fire,
And taught the world with reason to admire.
Then criticism the muse's handmaid prov'd,
To dress her charms, and make her more belov'd:
But following wits from that intention stray'd,
Who could not win the mistress woo'd the maid;
Against the poets their own arms they turn'd,
Sure to hate most the men from whom they learn'd.
So modern 'pothecaries taught the art
By doctors bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools.
Some on the leaves of ancient authors prey,
Nor time nor moths e'er spoil'd so much as they:
Some drily plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.
These leave the sense, their learning to display,
And those explain the meaning quite away.
You then whose judgment the right course would steer,
Know well each Ancient's proper character:
His fable, subject, scope in every page;
Religion, country, genius of his age:
Without all these at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise.
Be Homer's works your study and delight
Read them by day, and meditate by night;

Thence form your judgment, thence your maxims bring,
And trace the muses upward to their spring;
Still with itself compar'd, his text peruse;
And let your comment be the Mantuan muse.
When first young Maro, in his boundless mind
A work t' outlast immortal Rome design'd,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw:
But when t' examine every part he came,
Nature and Homer were, he found, the same.
Convinc'd, amaz'd, he checks the bold design;
And rules as strict his labour'd work confine,
As if the Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line.
Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem;
To copy nature, is to copy them.
Some beauties yet no precepts can declare,
For there's a happiness as well as care.
Music resembles poetry; in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach.
If, where the rules not far enough extend,
(Since rules were made but to promote their end),
Some lucky license answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that license is a rule.
Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track;
From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art,
Which, without passing through the judgment, gains
The heart, and all its end at once attains.
In prospects thus, some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice
Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.
But though the ancients thus their rules invade
(As kings dispense with laws themselves have made);
Moderns, beware! or, if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end:
Let it be seldom, and compell'd by need;
And have, at least, their precedent to plead.
The critic else proceeds without remorse.
Seizes your fame, and puts his laws in force.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 90. Ed. 1. Nature, like monarchy, &c.

Ver. 92.

First learned Greece just precepts did endite,
When to repress, and when indulge our flight.

Ver. 97.

From great examples useful rules were given.

After ver. 104, this line is omitted:

Set up themselves, and drove a separate trade.

Ver. 116. Ed. 1. These lost, &c.

Ver. 117. And these explain'd, &c.

Ver. 123. Ed. 1. You may confound, but, &c.

Ver. 123. Cavil you may, but never criticise.

The Author after this verse originally inserted the following, which he has however omitted in all the editions:

Zoilus, had these been known, without a name
Had dy'd, and Perault ne'er been damn'd to fame:
The sense of sound antiquity had reign'd,
And sacred Homer yet been unprofan'd.
None e'er had thought his comprehensive mind
To modern customs, modern rules confin'd;
Who for all ages writ, and all mankind.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 126

Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring.

Ver 130.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears.

Ver. 130. Ed. 1. When first great Maro, &c.

Ver. 136.

Convinc'd, amaz'd, he check'd the bold design;
And did his work to rules as strict confine.

Ver. 145. Ed. 1. And which a master's hand, &c.

After ver. 158. the first edition reads,

But care in poetry must still be had,
It asks discretion ev'n in running mad;
And though the ancients, &c.

And what are now ver. 159, 160, followed ver. 151.

I know there are, to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear,
Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which, but proportion'd to their light, or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace.
A prudent chief not always must display
His powers in equal ranks, and fair array,
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay sometimes seem to fly.
Those oft are stratagems which error seem,
Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream.

Still green with bays each ancient altar stands,
Above the reach of sacrilegious hands;
Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive war, and all-involving age.
See from each clime the learn'd their incense bring!
Hear, in all tongues consenting Paeans ring!
In praise so just let every voice be join'd,
And fill the general chorus of mankind.
Hail, bards triumphant! born in happier days;
Immortal heirs of universal praise!
Whose honours with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow;
Nations unborn your mighty names shall sound,
And worlds applaud that must not yet be found!
O may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire,
(That, on weak wings, from far pursues your flights,
Glows while he reads, but trembles as he writes)
To teach vain wits a science little known,
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their own:
Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing voice of fools.
Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride!
For as in bodies, thus in souls, we find
What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with wind:
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense.
If once right reason drives that cloud away,
Truth breaks upon us with resistless day.
Trust not yourself; but, your defects to know,
Make use of every friend—and every foe.
A little learning is a dangerous thing!
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.
Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts,

While, from the bounded level of our mind,
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind;
But more advanc'd, behold with strange surprise
New distant scenes of endless science rise!
So pleas'd at first the towering Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky;
Th' eternal snows appear already past,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last:
But, those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wandering eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise!

A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ:
Survey the whole, nor seek slight faults to find
Where nature moves, and rapture warms the mind;
Nor lose, for that malignant dull delight,
The generous pleasure to be charm'd with wit.
But, in such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That, shunning faults, one quiet tenour keep;
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep.
In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts
Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;
'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all.
Thus when we view some well-proportion'd dome,
(The world's just wonder, and ev'n thine, O Rome!)
No single parts unequally surprise,
All comes united to th' admiring eyes;
No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear;
The whole at once is bold, and regular.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.
In every work regard the writer's end,
Since none can compass more than they intend;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.
As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T' avoid great errors must the less commit:
Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays,
For not to know some trifles, is a praise.
Most critics, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part:
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice.
Once on a time, La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encountering on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As e'er could Dennis, of the Grecian stage;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 178. Ed. 1.
Oft hide his force, nay seem sometimes to fly.

Ver. 184. Ed. 1.
Destructive war, and all-devouring age.

Ver. 186. Ed. 1.
Hear, in all tongues applauding Paeans ring!

Ver. 197. Ed. 1. That with weak wings, &c.

Ver. 219.
Fir'd with the charms fair science does impart,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of art.

Ver. 223. But more advanc'd, survey, &c.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 225.
So pleas'd at first the towering alps to try,
Fill'd with ideas of fair Italy,
The traveller beholds with cheerful eyes
The lessening vales, and seems to tread the skies;

Ver. 259.
As men of breeding, oft the men of wit.

Ver. 265.
They talk of principles, but parts they prize.

Ver. 270.
As e'er could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage.

Concluding all were desperate sots and fools,
Who durst depart from Aristotle's rules.
Our author, happy in a judge so nice,
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice:
Made him observe the subject, and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities; what not?
All which, exact to rule, were brought about,
Were but a combat in the lists left out.
"What! leave the combat out?" exclaims the knight.
Yes, or we must renounce the Stagirite.
"Not so, by heaven! (he answers in a rage)
"Knights, 'squires, and steeds, must enter on the "stage."
So vast a throng the stage can ne'er contain.
"Then build a new, or act it in a plain."
Thus critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact but nice,
Form short ideas; and offend in arts
(As most in manners) by a love to parts.
Some to conceit alone their taste confine,
And glittering thoughts struck out at every line;
Pleas'd with a work where nothing's just or fit;
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.
Poets like painters, thus unskill'd to trace
The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art.
True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd;
Something, whose truth convinc'd at sight we find,
That gives us back the image of our mind.
As shades more sweetly recommend the light,
So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit;
For works may have more wit than does them good,
As bodies perish through excess of blood.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress:
Their praise is still—the style is excellent:
The sense, they humbly take upon content.
Words are like leaves; and where they most abound,
Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
False eloquence, like the prismatic glass,
Its gaudy colours spreads on every place;
The face of nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay:
But true expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon;
It gilds all objects, but it alters none.
Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd:
For different styles with different subjects sort,
As several garbs, with country, town, and court.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence,
Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their sense;
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.
Unlucky, as Fungoso in the play,
These sparks with awkward vanity display
What the fine gentleman wore yesterday;
And but so mimic ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandsires in their doublets dress't.
In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold;
Alike fantastic, if too new or old:
Be not the first by whom the new are try'd,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.
But most by numbers judge a poet's song;
And smooth or rough, with them, is right or wrong:
In the bright muse though thousand charms conspire,
Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire;
Who haunt Parnassus but to please their ear,
Not mend their minds; as some to church repair,
Not for the doctrine, but the music there.
These equal syllables alone require,
Though oft the ear the open vowels tire;
While expletives their feeble aid do join,
And ten low words oft creep in one dull line:
While they ring round the same unvary'd chimes,
With sure returns of still expected rhymes;
Where'er you find "the cooling western breeze,"
In the next line it "whispers through the trees:"
If crystal streams "with pleasing murmurs creep,"
The reader's threaten'd (not in vain) with "sleep:"
Then at the last and only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow;
And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join.
True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence,
The sound must seem an echo to the sense:
Soft is the strain when zephyr gently blows,
And the smooth stream in smoother numbers flows;
But when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse, rough verse should like the torrent roar.
When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow:
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.
Hear how Timotheus' vary'd lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love;
Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
Now sighs steal out, and tears begin to flow:

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 272. Ed 1. That durst, &c.

Ver. 298 Ed. 1.
What oft was thought, but ne'er before express'd.

Ver. 320. Ed. 1.
A vile conceit in pompous style express'd.

VARIATIONS.

Ver 338. Ed. 1.
And smooth or rough, with such, &c.

Ver. 363. 364. These lines are added.

Ver. 368. But when loud billows, &c.

Perſians and Greeks like turns of nature found,
And the world's victor ſtood ſubdued by ſound!
The power of muſic all our hearts allow,
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now.
Avoid extremes; and ſhun the fault of ſuch,
Who ſtill are pleas'd too little or too much.
At every trifle ſcorn to take offence,
That always ſhows great pride, or little ſenſe;
Thoſe heads, as ſtomachs, are not ſure the beſt,
Which naüſeate all, and nothing can digeſt.
Yet let not each gay turn thy rapture move;
For fools admire, but men of ſenſe approve:
As things ſeem large which we through miſts deſcry,
Dulneſs is ever apt to magnify.
Some foreign writers, ſome our own deſpiſe;
The ancients only, or the moderns prize:
Thus wit, like faith, by each man is apply'd
To one ſmall ſect, and all are damn'd beſide.
Meanly they ſeek the bleſſing to confine,
And force that ſun but on a part to ſhine,
Which not alone the ſouthern wit ſublimes,
But ripens ſpirits in cold northern climes;
Which from the firſt has ſhone on ages paſt,
Enlights the preſent, and ſhall warm the laſt;
Though each may feel increaſes and decays,
And ſee now clearer and now darker days.
Regard not then if wit be old or new,
But blame the falſe, and value ſtill the true.
Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the ſpreading notion of the town;
They reaſon and conclude by precedent,
And own ſtale nonſenſe which they ne'er invent.
Some judge of authors names, not works, and then
Nor praiſe nor blame the writings, but the men.
Of all this ſervile herd, the worſt is he
That in proud dulneſs joins with quality;
A conſtant critic at the great man's board,
To fetch and carry nonſenſe for my lord,
What woful ſtuff this madrigal would be,
In ſome ſtarv'd hackney-ſonneteer, or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the ſtyle refines!
Before his ſacred name flies every fault,
And each exalted ſtanza teems with thought!
The vulgar thus through imitation err;
As oft the learn'd by being ſingular;
So much they ſcorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purpoſely go wrong:
So Schiſmatics the plain believers quit,
And are but damn'd for having too much wit.
Some praiſe at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the laſt opinion right.
A muſe by theſe is like a miſtreſs us'd,
This hour ſhe's idoliz'd, the next abus'd;
While their weak heads, like towns unfortify'd,
'Twixt ſenſe and nonſenſe daily change their ſide.
Aſk them the cauſe; they're wiſer ſtill, they ſay;
And ſtill to-morrow's wiſer than to-day.
We think our fathers fools, ſo wiſe we grow;
Our wiſer ſons, no doubt, will think us ſo,
Once ſchool divines this zealous iſle o'erſpread;
Who knew moſt ſentences was deepeſt read:
Faith, goſpel, all, ſeem'd made to be diſputed,
And none had ſenſe enough to be confuted:
Scotiſts and Thomiſts, now in peace remain,
Amidſt their kindred cobwebs in Duck-lane.
If faith itſelf has different dreſſes worn,
What wonder modes in wit ſhould take their turn?
Oft, leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves the ready wit;
And authors think their reputation ſafe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.
Some, valuing thoſe of their own ſide or mind,
Still make themſelves the meaſure of mankind:
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praiſe ourſelves in other men.
Parties in wit attend on thoſe of ſtate,
And public faction doubles private hate.
Pride, malice, folly, againſt Dryden roſe,
In various ſhapes of parſons, critics, beaux:
But ſenſe ſurviv'd, when merry jeſts were paſt;
For riſing merit will buoy up at laſt.
Might he return, and bleſs once more our eyes,
New Blackmores and new Milbourns muſt ariſe:
Nay, ſhould great Homer lift his awful head,
Zoilus again would ſtart up from the dead.
Envy will merit, as its ſhade, purſue;
But, like a ſhadow, proves the ſubſtance true:
For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known
Th' oppoſing body's groſſneſs, not its own.
When firſt that ſun too powerful beams diſplays.
It draws up vapours which obſcure its rays;
But ev'n thoſe clouds at laſt adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day.
Be thou the firſt, true merit to befriend;
His praiſe is loſt, who ſtays till all commend.
Short is the date, alas, of modern rhymes,
And 'tis but juſt to let them live betimes.
No longer now that golden age appears,
When patriarch-wits ſurviv'd a thouſand years;
Now length of fame (our ſecond life) is loſt,
And bare threeſcore is all ev'n that can boaſt;
Our ſons their fathers failing language ſee,
And ſuch as Chaucer is, ſhall Dryden be.
So when the faithful pencil has deſign'd
Some bright idea of the maſter's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 394. Ed. 1. Some the French writers, &c.
Ver. 413. Ed. 1. Nor praiſe nor damn, &c.
Ver. 428. So Schiſmatics the dull, &c.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 447. Between this and ver. 448.
The rhyming clowns that gladded Shakſpear's age,
No more with crambo entertain the ſtage.
Who now in anagrams their patron praiſe,
Or ſing their miſtreſs in acroſtic lays?
Ev'n pulpits pleas'd with merry puns of yore;
Now all are baniſh'd to th' Hibernian ſhore!
Thus leaving what was natural and fit,
The current folly prov'd their ready wit;
And authors thought their reputation ſafe,
Which liv'd as long as fools were pleas'd to laugh.
Ver. 485. Ed. 1. Some fair idea, &c

When the ripe colours ſoften and unite,
And ſweetly melt into juſt ſhade and light;
When mellowing years their full perfection give,
And each bold figure juſt begins to live;
The treacherous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away!
Unhappy wit, like moſt miſtaken things,
Atones not for that envy which it brings;
In youth alone its empty praiſe we boaſt,
But ſoon the ſhort-liv'd vanity is loſt:
Like ſome fair flower the early ſpring ſupplies,
That gaily blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies.
What is this wit, which muſt our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy;
The moſt our trouble ſtill when moſt admir'd,
And ſtill the more we give, the more requir'd;
Whoſe fame with pains we guard, but loſe with eaſe,
Sure ſome to vex, but never all to pleaſe;
'Tis what the vicious fear, the virtuous ſhun;
By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone!
If wit ſo much from ignorance undergo,
Ah, let not learning too commence its foe!
Of old, thoſe met rewards, who could excel,
And ſuch were prais'd who but endeavour'd well;
Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reſerv'd to grace the ſoldiers too.
Now, they who reach Parnaſſus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to ſpurn ſome others down;
And while ſelf-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the ſport of fools:
But ſtill the worſt with moſt regret commend,
For each ill author is as bad a friend.
To what baſe ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through ſacred luſt of praiſe!
Ah, ne'er ſo dire a thirſt of glory boaſt,
Nor in the critic let the man be loſt.
Good-nature and good-ſenſe muſt ever join;
To err, is human; to forgive, divine.
But if in noble minds ſome dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of ſpleen and ſour diſdain;
Diſcharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in theſe flagitious times.
No pardon vile obſcenity ſhould find,
Though wit and art conſpire to move your mind;
But dulneſs with obſcenity muſt prove
As ſhameful ſure as impotence in love.
In the ſat age of pleaſure, wealth, and eaſe,
Sprang the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increaſe:
When love was all in eaſy monarch's care;
Seldom at council, never in a war:
Jilts rul'd the ſtate, and ſtateſmen farces writ;
Nay wits had penſions, and young lords had wit:
The fair ſat panting at a courtier's play,
And not a maſk went unimprov'd away:
The modeſt fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins ſmil'd at what they bluſh'd before.
The following licenſe of a foreign reign
Did all the dregs of bold Socinus drain;
Then unbelieving prieſts reform'd the nation,
And taught more pleaſant methods of ſalvation;
Where heaven's free ſubjects might their rights diſpute,
Leſt God himſelf ſhould ſeem too abſolute:
Pulpits their ſacred ſatire learn'd to ſpare,
And vice admir'd to find a flatterer there!
Encourag'd thus, wit's Titans brav'd the ſkies,
And the preſs groan'd with licens'd blaſphemies.
Theſe monſters, critics! with your darts engage,
Here point your thunder, and exhauſt your rage!
Yet ſhun their fault, who, ſcandalouſly nice,
Will needs miſtake an author into vice;
All ſeems infected that th' infected ſpy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye.
Learn then what morals critics ought to ſhow;
For 'tis but half a judge's taſk, to know.
'Tis not enough, taſte, judgment, learning, join;
In all you ſpeak, let truth and candour ſhine;
That not alone what to your ſenſe is due
All may allow, but ſeek your friendſhip too.
Be ſilent always, when you doubt your ſenſe;
And ſpeak, though ſure, with ſeeming diffidence:
Some poſitive, perſiſting ſops we know,
Who, if once wrong, will needs be always ſo;
But you, with pleaſure, own your errors paſt,
And make each day a critic on the laſt.
'Tis not enough your counſel ſtill be true;
Blunt truths more miſchief than nice falſehoods do;
Men muſt be taught as if you taught them not,
And things unknown propos'd as things forgot.
Without good breeding truth is diſapprov'd;
That only makes ſuperior ſenſe belov'd.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 490. Ed. 1. When mellowing time does, &c.
Ver. 492. The treacherous colours in few years decay.
Ver. 495. Repays not half that envy, &c.
Ver. 498. Like ſome fair flower that in the ſpring does riſe.
Ver. 500. What is this wit that does our cares employ?
Ver. 502. The more his trouble as the more admir'd;
Where wanted, ſcorn'd; and envy'd where acquir'd;
Maintain'd with pains but forfeited with eaſe, &c.
Ver. 508. Ed 1. Too much does wit, &c.
Ver 514 Now thoſe that reach, &c.
Ver 519. And each, &c.
Ver. 521. Are mortals urg'd by ſacred, &c.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 547. The Author has here omitted the two following lines; as containing a national reflection, which in his ſtricter judgment he could not but diſapprove on any people whatever.:
Then firſt the Belgians morals were extoll'd;
We their religion had, and they our gold.
Ver. 562. 'Tis not enough, wit, art, and learning join.
Ver. 564. That not alone what to your judgment's due.
Ver. 569. That if once wrong, &c.
Ver. 575. And things ne'er know, &c.
Ver. 576. Without good-breeding truth is not approv'd.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worſt avarice is that of ſenſe.
With mean complacence, ne'er betray your truſt,
Nor be ſo civil as to prove unjuſt.
Fear not the anger of the wiſe to raiſe;
Thoſe beſt can bear reproof, who merit praiſe.
'Twere well might critics ſtill this freedom take:
But Appius reddens at each word you ſpeak,
And ſtares tremendous, with a threatening eye,
Like ſome fierce tyrant in old tapeſtry.
Fear moſt to tax an honourable fool,
Whoſe right it is, uncenſur'd, to be dull!
Such, without wit, are poets when they pleaſe.
As without learning they can take degrees.
Leave dangerous truths to unſucceſsful ſatires,
And flattery to fulſome dedicators,
Whom, when they praiſe, the world believes no more
Than when they promiſe to give ſcribbling o'er.
'Tis beſt ſometimes your cenſure to reſtrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain:
Your ſilence there is better than your ſpite,
For who can rail ſo long as they can write?
Still humming on, their drowſy courſe they keep,
And laſh'd ſo long, like tops, are laſh'd aſleep.
Falſe ſteps but help them to renew the race,
As, after ſtumbling, jades will mend their pace.
What crowds of theſe, impenitently bold,
In ſounds and jingling ſyllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and ſqueezings of the brain,
Strain out the laſt dull dropping of their ſenſe,
And rhyme with all the rage of impotence!
Such ſhameleſs bards we have: and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad, abandon'd critics too.
The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue ſtill edifies his ears,
And always liſtening to himſelf appears.
All books he reads, and all he reads aſſails,
From Dryden's Fables down to Durfey's Tales:
With him, moſt authors ſteal their works, or buy
Garth did not write his own Diſpenſary.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 586. And ſtares tremendous, &c.] This picture was taken to himſelf by John Dennis, a furious old critic by profeſſion, who, upon no other provocation, wrote againſt this eſſay, and its author, in a manner perfectly lunatic: For, as to mention made of him in ver. 270, he took it as a compliment, and ſaid it was treacherouſly meant to cauſe him to overlook this abuſe of his perſon.

Ver. 597. And charitably let dull fools be vain.

Ver. 600.

Still humming on, their old dull courſe they keep.

NOTE.

Ver. 619. Garth did not write, &c.] A common ſlander at that time in prejudice of that deſerving author. Our poet did him this juſtice, when that ſlander moſt prevailed; and it is now (perhaps the ſooner for this very verſe) dead and forgotten.

Name a new play, and he's the poet's friend,
Nay ſhow'd his faults—but when would poets mend?
No place ſo ſacred from ſuch fops is barr'd,
Nor is Paul's church more ſafe than Paul's churchyard:
Nay, fly to altars; there they'll talk you dead;
For fools ruſh in where angels fear to tread.
Diſtruſtful ſenſe with modeſt caution ſpeaks,
It ſtill looks home, and ſhort excurſions makes:
But rattling nonſenſe in full vollies breaks,
And, never ſhock'd, and never turn'd aſide,
Burſts out, reſiſtleſs, with a thundering tide.
But where's the man, who counſel can beſtow,
Still pleas'd to teach, and yet not proud to know?
Unbiaſs'd, or by favour, or by ſpite;
Not dully prepoſſeſs'd, nor blindly right; [ſincere;
Though learn'd, well-bred; and though well-bred,
Modeſtly bold, and humanely ſevere:
Who to a friend his faults can freely ſhow,
And gladly praiſe the merit of a foe?
Bleſt with a taſte exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and human kind;
Generous converſe; a ſoul exempt from pride;
And love to praiſe, with reaſon on his ſide?
Such once were critics; ſuch the happy few
Athens and Rome in better ages knew:
The mighty Stagyrite firſt left the ſhore,
Spread all his ſails, and durſt the deeps explore;
He ſteer'd ſecurely, and diſcover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian ſtar.
Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free,
Still fond and proud of ſavage liberty,
Receiv'd his laws; and ſtood convinc'd 'twas fit,
Who conquer'd nature, ſhould preſide o'er wit.
Horace ſtill charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into ſenſe,
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The trueſt notions in the eaſieſt way.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 623. Between this and ver. 624.

In vain you ſhrug and ſweat, and ſtrive to fly;
Theſe know no manners but of poetry:
They'll ſtop a hungry chaplain in his grace,
To treat of unities of time and place.

Ver. 624. Nay run to altars, &c.

Ver. 634. Not dully prepoſſeſs'd, or blindly right.

Between ver. 646 and 649, I found the following lines, ſince ſuppreſſed by the author:

That bold Columbus of the realms of wit,
Whoſe firſt diſcovery 's not exceeded yet,
Led by the light of the Mæonian ſtar,
He ſteer'd ſecurely, and diſcover'd far.
He, when all nature was ſubdued before,
Like his great pupil, ſigh'd, and long'd for more:
Fancy's wild regions yet unvanquiſh'd lay.
A boundleſs empire, and that own'd no ſway.
Poets, &c.

After ver. 648. the firſt edition reads,

Not only nature did his laws obey,
But fancy's boundleſs empire own'd his ſway.

Ver. 655. Does, like a friend, &c.

Ver. 655, 656. Theſe lines are not in Ed. 1.

He, who supreme in judgment, as in wit,
Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire;
His precepts teach but what his works inspire.
Our critics take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm:
Nor suffers Horace more in wrong translations
By wits, than critics in as wrong quotations.
See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from every line!
Fancy and art in gay Petronius please,
The scholar's learning, with the courtier's ease.
In grave Quintilian's copious work, we find
The justest rules and clearest method join'd:
Thus useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace,
But less to please the eye, than arm the hand,
Still fit for use, and ready at command.
Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bless their critic with a poet's fire.
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
Whose own example strengthens all his laws;
And is himself that great sublime he draws.
Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
License repress'd, and useful laws ordain'd.
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew,
And arts still follow'd where her eagles flew;
From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom,
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
With tyranny, then superstition join'd,
As that the body, this enslav'd the mind;
Much was believ'd, but little understood,
And to be dull was construed to be good:
A second deluge learning thus o'er-ran,
And the Monks finish'd what the Goths began.
At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
(The glory of the priesthood, and the shame!)
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

But see! each muse, in Leo's golden days,
Starts from her trance, and trims her wither'd bays;
Rome's ancient genius, o'er its ruins spread,
Shakes off the dust, and rears his reverend head.
Then sculpture and her sister-arts revive;
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live;
With sweeter notes each rising temple rung;
A Raphael painted, and a Vida sung.
Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow:
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame!
But soon, by impious arms from Latium chas'd,
Their ancient bounds the banish'd muses pass'd;
Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,
But critic-learning flourish'd most in France:
The rules a nation, born to serve, obeys;
And Boileau still in right of Horace sways.
But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
And kept unconquer'd, and unciviliz'd;
Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defy'd the Romans, as of old.
Yet some there were among the sounder few
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws.
Such was the muse, whose rules and practice tell,
"Nature's chief master-piece is writing well."
Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,
With manners generous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And every author's merit but his own.
Such late was Walsh—the muse's judge and friend,
Who justly knew to blame or to commend;
To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head, and the sincerest heart.
This humble praise, lamented shade! receive,
This praise at least a grateful muse may give:
The muse, whose early voice you taught to sing,
Prescrib'd her heights, and prun'd her tender wing,
(Her guide now lost) no more attempts to rise,
But in low numbers short excursions tries:
Content, if hence th' unlearn'd their wants may view,
The learn'd reflect on what before they knew.
Careless of censure, nor too fond of fame;
Still pleas'd to praise, yet not afraid to blame;
Averse alike, to flatter or offend;
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 668.

The scholar's learning, and the courtier's ease.

Ver. 673, &c.

Nor thus alone the curious eye to please,
But to be found, when need requires, with ease.
The muses sure Longinus did inspire,
And bless'd their critic with a poet's fire.
An ardent judge, that zealous, &c.

Ver. 689. All was believ'd, but nothing understood.

Between ver. 690 and 691. the Author omitted these two:

Vain wits and critics were no more allow'd,
When none but saints had license to be proud.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 723, 724. These lines are not in Ed. 1.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK.

AN HEROIC-COMICAL POEM,

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1711.

" Nolueram, Belinda, tuos violare capillos,
" Sed juvat, hoc precibus me tribuiſſe tuis."

MART.

TO MRS. ARABELLA FERMOR.

MADAM,

It will be in vain to deny that I have ſome regard for this piece, ſince I dedicate it to you; yet you may bear me witneſs, it was intended only to divert a few young ladies, who have good ſenſe and good humour enough to laugh not only at their ſex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. But as it was communicated with the air of a ſecret, it ſoon found its way into the world. An imperfect copy having been offered to a bookſeller, you had the good nature, for my ſake, to conſent to the publication of one more correct: This I was forced to, before I had executed half my deſign, for the machinery was entirely wanting to complete it.

The machinery, Madam, is a term invented by the critics, to ſignify that part which the deities, angels, or dæmons, are made to act in a poem: For the ancient poets are in one reſpect like many modern ladies; let an action be never ſo trivial in itſelf, they always make it appear of the utmoſt importance. Theſe machines I determined to raiſe on a very new and odd foundation, the Roſicruſian doctrine of ſpirits.

I know how diſagreeable it is to make uſe of hard words before a lady; but it is ſo much the concern of a poet to have his works underſtood, and particularly by your ſex, that you muſt give me leave to explain two or three difficult terms.

The Roſicruſians are a people I muſt bring you acquainted with. The beſt account I know of them is in a French book called Le Comte de Gabalis, which, both in its title and ſize, is ſo like a novel, that many of the fair ſex have read it for one by miſtake. According to theſe gentlemen, the four elements are inhabited by ſpirits, which they call ſylphs, gnomes, nymphs, and ſalamanders. The gnomes, or dæmons of earth, delight in miſchief; but the ſylphs, whoſe habitation is in the air, are the beſt-conditioned creatures imaginable; for they ſay, any mortals may enjoy the moſt intimate familiarities with theſe gentle ſpirits, upon a condition very eaſy to all true adepts, an inviolate preſervation of chaſtity.

As to the following cantos, all the paſſages of them are as fabulous as the viſion at the beginning, or the transformation at the end (except the loſs of your hair, which I always mention with reverence). The human perſons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and the character of Belinda, as it is now managed, reſembles you in nothing but in beauty.

If this poem had as many graces as there are in your perſon, or in your mind, yet I could never hope it ſhould paſs through the world half ſo uncenſured as you have done. But let its fortune be what it will, mine is happy enough, to have given me this occaſion of aſſuring you that I am, with the trueſt eſteem,

Madam,
Your moſt obedient, humble ſervant,
A. POPE.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK.

CANTO I.

What dire offence from amorous cauſes ſprings,
What mighty conteſts riſe from trivial things,
I ſing—this verſe to Caryl, muſe! is due:
This ev'n Belinda may vouchſafe to view:
Slight is the ſubject, but not ſo the praiſe,
If ſhe inſpire, and he approve my lays.
Say what ſtrange motive, goddeſs! could compel
A well-bred lord t' aſſault a gentle belle?
O ſay what ſtranger cauſe, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?
In taſks ſo bold, can little men engage?
And in ſoft boſoms dwells ſuch mighty rage?
Sol through white curtains ſhot a timorous ray,
And ope'd thoſe eyes that muſt eclipſe the day:
Now lap-dogs give themſelves the rouzing ſhake,
And ſleepleſs lovers, juſt at twelve, awake:
Thrice rung the bell, the ſlipper knock'd the ground,
And the preſs'd watch return'd a ſilver ſound.
Belinda ſtill her downy pillow preſt,
Her guardian ſylph prolong'd the balmy reſt:
'Twas he had ſummon'd to her ſilent bed
The morning dream that hover'd o'er her head.
A youth more glittering than a birth-night beau
(That ev'n in ſlumber caus'd her cheek to glow)
Seem'd to her ear his winning lips to lay,
And thus in whiſpers ſaid, or ſeem'd to ſay:
Faireſt of mortals, thou diſtinguiſh'd care
Of thouſand bright inhabitants of air!
If e'er one viſion touch thy infant thought,
Of all the nurſe and all the prieſt have taught;
Of airy elves by moonlight ſhadows ſeen,
The ſilver token, and the circled green,
Or virgins viſited by angel-powers,
With golden crowns and wreaths of heavenly flowers;
Hear and believe! thy own importance know,
Nor bound thy narrow views to things below,
Some ſecret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
What though no credit doubting wits may give?
The fair and innocent ſhall ſtill believe.
Know then, unnumber'd ſpirits round thee fly,
The light militia of the lower ſky:
Theſe, though unſeen, are ever on the wing,
Hang o'er the box, and hover round the ring.
Think what an equipage thou haſt in air.
And view with ſcorn two pages and a chair.
As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once enclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a ſoft tranſition, we repair
From earthly vehicles to theſe of air.
Think not, when women's tranſient breath is fled,
That all her vanities at once are dead.
Succeeding vanities ſhe ſtill regards,
And though ſhe plays no more, o'erlooks the cards.
Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive,
And love of ombre, after death ſurvive,
For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their firſt elements their ſouls retire:
The ſprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a ſalamander's name,
Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And ſip, with nymphs, their elemental tea.
The graver prude ſinks downward to a gnome,
In ſearch of miſchief ſtill on earth to roam.
The light coquettes in ſylphs aloft repair,
And ſport and flutter in the fields of air.
Know farther yet; whoever fair and chaſte
Rejects mankind, is by ſome ſylph embrac'd:
For, ſpirits, freed from mortal laws, with eaſe
Aſſume what ſexes and what ſhape they pleaſe.
What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls, and midnight maſquerades,
Safe from the treacherous friends, the daring ſpark,
The glance by day, the whiſper in the dark,
When kind occaſion prompts their warm deſires,
When muſic ſoftens, and when dancing fires?
'Tis but their ſylph, the wiſe celeſtials know,
Though honour is the word with men below.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 11, 12. It was in the firſt editions:
And dwells ſuch rage in ſofteſt boſoms then,
And lodge ſuch daring ſouls in little men?

Ver. 13, &c. ſtood thus in the firſt edition:
Sol through white curtains did his beams diſplay,
And ope'd thoſe eyes which brighter ſhone than they;
Shock juſt had given himſelf the rouzing ſhake,
And nymphs prepar'd their chocolate to take;
Thrice the wrought ſlipper knock'd againſt the ground,
And ſtriking watches the tenth hour reſound.

Ver. 19. Belinda ſtill, &c.] All the verſes from hence to the end of this canto were added afterwards.

Some nymphs there are, too conſcious of their face,
For life predeſtin'd to the gnomes embrace.
Theſe ſwell their proſpects, and exalt their pride,
When offers are diſdain'd, and love deny'd:
Then gay ideas crowd the vacant brain,
While peers, and dukes, and all their ſweeping train,
And garters, ſtars, and coronets appear,
And in ſoft ſounds, your Grace ſalutes their ear.
'Tis theſe that early taint the female ſoul,
Inſtruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
Teach infant cheeks a bidden bluſh to know,
And little hearts to flutter at a beau.
Oft, when the world imagine women ſtray,
The ſylphs through myſtic mazes guide their way,
Through all the giddy circle they purſue,
And old impertinence expel by new,
What tender maid but muſt a victim fall
To one man's treat, but for another's ball?
When Florio ſpeaks, what virgin could withſtand,
If gentle Damon did not ſqueeze her hand?
With varying vanities, from every part,
They ſhift the moving toy-ſhop of their heart;
Where wigs with wigs, with ſword-knots ſword-knots ſtrive,
Beaux baniſh beaux, and coaches coaches drive.
This erring mortals levity may call;
Oh, blind to truth! the ſylphs contrive it all.
Of theſe am I, who thy protection claim,
A watchful ſprite, and Ariel is my name.
Late, as I rang'd the cryſtal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling ſtar
I ſaw, alas! ſome dread event impend,
Ere to the main this morning ſun deſcend;
But heaven reveals not what, or how, or where:
Warn'd by the ſylph, oh pious maid, beware!
This to diſcloſe is all thy guardian can;
Beware of all, but moſt beware of man!
He ſaid; when Shock, who thought ſhe ſlept too long,
Leap'd up, and wak'd his miſtreſs with his tongue,
'Twas then, Belinda, if report ſay true,
Thy eyes firſt open'd on a billet doux;
Wounds, charms, and ardours, were no ſooner read,
But all the viſion vaniſh'd from thy head,
And now, unveil'd, the toilet ſtands diſplay'd,
Each ſilver vaſe in myſtic order laid.
Firſt, rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores,
With head uncover'd, the coſmetic powers.
A heavenly image in the glaſs appears,
To that ſhe bends, to that her eyes ſhe rears;
Th' inferior prieſteſs, at her altar ſide,
Trembling, begins the ſacred rites of pride.
Unnumber'd treaſures ope at once, and here
The various offerings of the world appear;
From each ſhe nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddeſs with the glittering ſpoil.
This caſket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.
The tortoiſe here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the ſpeckled and the white.
Here files of pins extend their ſhining rows,
Puffs, powders, patches, bibles, billet-doux.
Now awful beauty puts on all its arms;
The fair each moment riſes in her charms,
Repairs her ſmiles, awakens every grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face:
Sees by degrees a purer bluſh ariſe,
And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.
The buſy ſylphs ſurround their darling care;
Theſe ſet the head, and thoſe divide the hair;
Some fold the ſleeve, whilſt others plait the gown;
And Betty's prais'd for labours not her own.

CANTO II.

Not with more glories in th' ethereal plain,
The ſun firſt riſes o'er the purpled main,
Than, iſſuing forth, the rival of his beams
Launch'd on the boſom of the ſilver'd Thames.
Fair nymphs and well-dreſs'd youths around her ſhone,
But every eye was fix'd on her alone.
On her white breaſt a ſparkling croſs ſhe wore,
Which Jews might kiſs, and Infidels adore.
Her lively looks a ſprightly mind diſcloſe,
Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as thoſe:
Favours to none, to all ſhe ſmiles extends;
Oft ſhe rejects, but never once offends.
Bright as the ſun, her eyes the gazers ſtrike,
And, like the ſun, they ſhine on all alike.
Yet graceful eaſe, and ſweetneſs void of pride,
Might hide her faults, if belles had faults to hide:
If to her ſhare ſome female errors fall,
Look on her face, and you'll forget them all.
This nymph, to the deſtruction of mankind,
Nouriſh'd two locks, which graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well conſpir'd to deck
With ſhining ringlets the ſmooth ivory neck.
Love in theſe labyrinths his ſlaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in ſlender chains.
With hairy ſprings we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair ſurpriſe the finny prey;
Fair treſſes man's imperial race inſnare,
And beauty draws us with a ſingle hair.
Th' adventurous baron the bright locks admir'd;
He ſaw, he wiſh'd, and to the prize aſpir'd.
Reſolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to raviſh, or by fraud betray;
For when ſucceſs a lovers toil attends,
Few aſk, if fraud or force attain'd his ends.
For this, ere Phœbus roſe, he had implor'd
Propitious heav'n, and every power ador'd;
But chiefly Love—to Love an altar built,
Of twelve vaſt French romances neatly gilt.
There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 4. Launch'd on the boſom] From hence the poem continues, in the firſt edition to ver. 46.

The reſt the winds diſpers'd in empty air;
all after, to the end of this canto, being additional.

With tender billet-doux he lights the pyre,
And breathes three amorous ſighs to raiſe the fire.
Then proſtrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain, and long poſſeſs the prize:
The powers gave ear, and granted half his prayer;
The reſt, the winds diſpers'd in empty air.

But now ſecure the painted veſſel glides,
The ſun-beams trembling on the floating tides:
While melting muſic ſteals upon the ſky,
And ſoften'd ſounds along the waters die;
Smooth flow the waves, the zephers gently play,
Belinda ſmil'd, and all the world was gay,
All but the ſylph—with careful thoughts oppreſt,
Th' impending wo ſat heavy on his breaſt.
He ſummons ſtrait his denizens of air;
The lucid ſquadrons round the ſails repair;
Soft o'er the ſhroud aërial whiſpers breathe,
That ſeem'd but zephyrs to the train beneath.
Some to the ſun their inſect wings unfold,
Waſt on the breeze, or ſink in clouds of gold;
Tranſparent forms, too fine for mortal ſight,
Their fluid bodies half diſſolv'd in light.
Looſe to the wind their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew,
Dipp'd in the richeſt tinctures of the ſkies,
Where light diſports in ever-mingling dyes,
While every beam new tranſient colours flings,
Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings.
Amid the circle on the gilded maſt,
Superior by the head was Ariel plac'd;
His purple pinions opening to the ſun,
He rais'd his azure wand and thus begun:

Ye ſylphs and ſylphids, to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and dæmons, hear!
Ye know the ſpheres, and various taſks aſſign'd
By laws eternal to th' aërial kind.
Some in the fields of pureſt æther play,
And baſk and whiten in the blaze of day;
Some guide the courſe of wondering orbs on high,
Or roll the planets through the boundleſs ſky;
Some, leſs refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light
Purſue the ſtars that ſhoot athwart the night,
Or ſuck the miſts in groſſer air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow,
Or brew fierce tempeſts on the wintery main,
Or o'er the glebe diſtil the kindly rain.
Others on earth o'er human race preſide,
Watch all their ways, and all their actions guide:
Of theſe the chief the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the Britiſh throne.

Our humbler province is to tend the fair,
Not a leſs pleaſing, though leſs glorious care;
To ſave the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' impriſon'd eſſences exhale;
To draw freſh colours from the vernal flowers;
To ſteal from rainbows, ere they drop in ſhowers,
A brighter waſh; to curl their waving hairs,
Aſſiſt their bluſhes, and inſpire their airs;
Nay oft, in dreams, invention we beſtow,
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow.

This day, black omens threat the brighteſt fair
That e'er deſerv'd a watchful ſpirits's care;
Some dire diſaſter, or by force, or ſlight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapp'd in night.
Whether the nymph ſhall break Diana's law,
Or ſome frail China-jar receive a flaw;
Or ſtain her honour, or her new brocade;
Forget her prayers, or miſs a maſquerade;
Or loſe her heart, or necklace at a ball;
Or whether Heaven has deem'd that Shock muſt fall.

Haſte then, ye ſpirits! to your charge repair:
The fluttering fan be Zephyretta's care;
The drops to thee, Brillante, we conſign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine;
Do thou, Criſpiſſa, tend her favourite Lock;
Ariel himſelf ſhall be the guard of Shock.

To fifty choſen ſylphs, of ſpecial note,
We truſt th' important charge, the petticoat:
Oft have we known that ſeven-fold fence to fail,
Though ſtiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale.
Form a ſtrong line about the ſilver bound,
And guard the wide circumference around.

Whatever ſpirit, careleſs of his charge,
His poſt neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel ſharp vengeance ſoon o'ertake his ſins,
Be ſtopp'd in vials, or tranſfix'd with pins;
Or plung'd in lakes of bitter waſhes lie,
Or wedg'd whole ages in a bodkin's eye:
Gums and pomatums ſhall his flight reſtrain,
While clogg'd he beats his ſilken wings in vain;
Or alum ſtyptics with contracting power
Shrink his thin eſſence like a ſhrivel'd flower:
Or, as Ixion fix'd, the wretch ſhall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill,
In fumes of burning chocolate ſhall glow,
And tremble at the ſea that froths below!

He ſpoke; the ſpirits from the ſails deſcend:
Some, orb in orb, around the nymph extend;
Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair;
Some hang upon the pendents of her ear;
With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate.

CANTO III.

Close by thoſe meads, for ever crown'd with flowers,
Where Thames with pride ſurveys his riſing towers,
There ſtands a ſtructure of majeſtic frame,
Which from the neighbouring Hampton takes its name.
Here Britain's ſtateſmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home;
Here thou, great Anna! whom three realms obey,
Doſt ſometimes counſel take—and ſometimes tea.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 1. Cloſe by thoſe meads,] The firſt edition continues from this line to ver. 24. of this Canto.

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort,
To taste awhile the pleasures of a court;
In various talk th' instructive hours they past.
Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last;
One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen;
A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes;
At every word a reputation dies.
Snuff, or the fan, supply each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.
Meanwhile, declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray;
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang, that jurymen may dine;
The merchant from th' Exchange returns in peace,
And the long labours of the toilet cease.
Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
Burns to encounter two adventurous knights,
At Ombre singly to decide their doom;
And swells her breast with conquests yet to come.
Strait the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred nine,
Soon as she spreads her hand, th' aërial guard
Descend, and sit on each important card:
First Ariel perch'd upon a Matadore,
Then each according to the rank they bore:
For sylphs, yet mindful of their ancient race,
Are, as when women, wondrous fond of place.
Behold, four Kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forky beard;
And four fair Queens, whose hands sustain a flower,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer power;
Four Knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band;
Caps on their heads, and halberts in their hand;
And party-coloured troops, a shining train,
Drawn forth to combat on the velvet plain.
The skilful nymph reviews her force with care:
Let Spades be trumps! she said, and trumps they were.
Now move to war her sable Matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
Spadillio first, unconquerable Lord!
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board.
As many more Manillio forc'd to yield,
And march'd a victor from the verdant field.
Him Basto follow'd, but his fate more hard
Gain'd but one trump, and one Plebeian card.
With his broad sabre next, a chief in years,
The hoary Majesty of Spades appears,
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight reveal'd,
The rest, his many-colour'd robe conceal'd.
The rebel Knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage.
Ev'n mighty Pam, that Kings and Queens o'erthrew,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of Lu,
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguish'd by the victor Spade!
Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the Baron fate inclines the field.
His warlike Amazon her host invades,
Th' imperial consort of the crown of Spades.
The Club's black tyrant first her victim dy'd,
Spite of his haughty mien, and barbarous pride:
What boots the regal circle on his head.
His giant limbs in state unwieldy spread;
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe?
The Baron now his Diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroider'd King who shows but half his face,
And his refulgent Queen with powers combin'd,
Of broken troops an easy conquest find.
Clubs, Diamonds, Hearts, in wild disorder seen,
With throngs promiscuous strow the level green.
Thus when dispers'd a routed army runs,
Of Asia's troops, and Afric's sable sons,
With like confusion different nations fly,
Of various habit, and of various dye,
The pierc'd battalions disunited fall,
In heaps on heaps; one fate o'ewhelms them all.
The Knave of Diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins (oh shameful chance!) the Queen of Hearts.
At this, the blood the virgin's face forsook,
A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look;
She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill,
Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille.
And now (as oft in some distemper'd state)
On one nice trick depends the general fate,
An Ace of Hearts steps forth: the King unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive Queen:
He springs to vengeance with an eager pace,
And falls like thunder on the prostrate Ace.
The nymph exulting fills with shouts the sky;
The walls, the woods, and long canals reply.
O thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate,
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate.
Sudden, these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day.
For lo! the board with cups and spoons is crown'd,
The berries crackle, and the mill turns round:
On shining altars of Japan they raise
The silver lamp; the fiery spirits blaze:
From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
While China's earth receives the smoking tide:

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 11, 12. Originally in the first edition,

In various talk the cheerful hours they past,
Of, who was bit, or who capotted last.

Ver. 24. And the long labours of the toilet cease.] All that follows of the game at Ombre, was added since the first edition, till ver. 105, which connected thus:

Sudden the board with cups and spoons is crown'd.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 103. Sudden the board, &c.] From hence the first edition continues to ver. 134.

At once they gratify their ſcent and taſte,
And frequent cups prolong the rich repaſt.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as ſhe ſipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd;
Some o'er her lap their careful plumes diſplay'd,
Trembling, and conſcious of the rich brocade.
Coffee (which makes the politician wiſe,
And ſee through all things with his half-ſhut eyes)
Sent up in vapours to the Baron's brain
New ſtratagems, the radiant Lock to gain.
Ah ceaſe, raſh youth! deſiſt ere 'tis too late,
Fear the juſt gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and ſent to flit in air,
She dearly pays for Niſus' injured hair!
But when to miſchief mortals bend their will,
How ſoon they find fit inſtruments of ill!
Juſt then, Clariſſa drew with tempting grace
A two-edg'd weapon from her ſhining caſe:
So ladies, in romance, aſſiſt their knight,
Preſent the ſpear, and arm him for the fight.
He takes the gift with reverence, and extends
The little engine on his fingers ends;
This juſt behind Belinda's neck he ſpread,
As o'er the fragrant ſteams ſhe bends her head.
Swift to the Lock a thouſand ſprites repair,
A thouſand wings, by turns, blow back the hair;
And thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear;
Thrice ſhe look'd back, and thrice the foe drew near.
Juſt in that inſtant, anxious Ariel fought
The cloſe receſſes of the virgin's thought;
As on the noſegay in her breaſt reclin'd,
He watch'd th' ideas riſing in her mind,
Sudden he view'd, in ſpite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart.
Amaz'd, confus'd, he found his power expir'd,
Reſign'd to fate, and with a ſigh retir'd.
The Peer now ſpreads the glittering forfex wide,
T' incloſe the Lock; now joins it, to divide.
Ev'n then, before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched ſylph too fondly interpos'd;
Fate urg'd the ſheers, and cut the ſylph in twain
(But airy ſubſtance ſoon unites again)
The meeting points the ſacred hair diſſever
From the fair head, for ever, and for ever!
Then flaſh'd the living lightning from her eyes,
And ſcreams of horror rend th' affrighted ſkies.
Not louder ſhrieks to pitying heaven are caſt,
When huſbands, or when lap-dogs, breathe their laſt!
Or when rich China veſſels, fall'n from high,
In glittering duſt and painted fragments lie!
Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine
(The victor cry'd), the glorious prize is mine!

While fiſh in ſtreams, or birds delight in air,
Or in a coach and ſix the Britiſh fair,
As long as Atalantis ſhall be read,
Or the ſmall pillow grace a lady's bed,
While viſits ſhall be paid on ſolemn days,
When numerous wax-lights in bright order blaze,
While nymphs take treats, or aſſignations give,
So long my honour, name, and praiſe, ſhall live!
What time would ſpare, from ſteel receives its date,
And monuments, like men, ſubmit to fate!
Steel could the labour of the gods deſtroy,
And ſtrike to duſt th' imperial powers of Troy;
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground.
What wonder then, fair nymph! thy hairs ſhould feel
The conquering force of unreſiſted ſteel?

CANTO IV.

But anxious cares the penſive nymph oppreſs'd,
And ſecret paſſions labour'd in her breaſt.
Not youthful kings in battle ſeiz'd alive,
Not ſcornful virgins who their charms ſurvive,
Not ardent lovers robb'd of all their bliſs,
Not ancient ladies when refus'd a kiſs,
Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her mantau's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt ſuch rage, reſentment, and deſpair,
As thou, ſad virgin! for thy raviſh'd hair.
For, that ſad moment, when the ſylphs withdrew,
And Ariel weeping from Belinda flew,
Umbriel, a duſky, melancholy ſprite,
As ever ſully'd the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper ſcene,
Repair'd to ſearch the gloomy cave of ſpleen.
Swift on his ſooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the diſmal dome.
No cheerful breeze this ſullen region knows,
The dreaded eaſt is all the wind that blows.
Here in a grotto, ſhelter'd cloſe from air,
And ſcreen'd in ſhades from day's deteſted glare,
She ſighs for ever on her penſive bed,
Pain at her ſide, and Megrim at her head.
Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,
But differing far in figure and in face.
Here ſtood Ill-nature like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled form in black and white array'd;
With ſtore of prayers, for mornings, nights, and noons,
Her hand is fill'd; her boſom with lampoons.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 134. In the firſt edition it was thus:
As o'er the fragrant ſtream ſhe bends her head,
Firſt he expands the glittering forfex wide
T' encloſe the Lock; then joins it to divide:
The meeting points the ſacred hair diſſever
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Ver. 154. All that is between was added afterwards.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 11. For, that ſad moment, &c.] All the lines from hence to the 94th verſe, deſcribe the houſe of Spleen, and are not in the firſt edition; inſtead of them followed only theſe:
While her rack'd ſoul repoſe and peace requires,
The fierce Thaleſtris fans the riſing fires;
and continued at the 94th verſe of this Canto.

There Affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen,
Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside.
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride,
On the rich quilt sinks with becoming wo,
Wrapt in a gown, for sickness, and for show.
The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease.
A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;
Dreadful, as hermits dreams in haunted shades,
Or bright, as visions of expiring maids.
Now glaring fiends, and snakes on rolling spires,
Pale spectres, gaping tombs, and purple fires:
Now lakes of liquid gold, Elysian scenes,
And crystal domes, and angels in machines.
Unnumber'd throngs on every side are seen,
Of bodies chang'd to various forms by spleen.
Here living tea-pots stand, one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout:
A pipkin there, like Homer's tripod, walks;
Here sighs a jar, and there a goose-pye talks;
Men prove with child, as powerful fancy works,
And maids, turn'd bottles, call aloud for corks.
Safe past the gnome through this fantastic band,
A branch of healing spleen-wort in his hand,
Then thus address'd the power—Hail, wayward queen!
Who rule the sex to fifty from fifteen:
Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who give th' hysteric, or poetic fit,
On various tempers act by various ways,
Make some take physic, others scribble plays;
Who cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray.
A nymph there is, that all thy power disdains,
And thousands more in equal mirth maintains.
But oh! if e'er thy gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face,
Like citron-waters matrons cheeks inflame,
Or chang'd complexions at a losing game;
If e'er with airy horns I planted heads,
Or rumpled petticoats, or tumbled beds,
Or caus'd suspicion where no soul was rude,
Or discompos'd the head-dress of a prude,
Or e'er to costive lap-dog gave disease,
Which not the tears of brightest eyes could ease:
Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin;
That single act gives half the world the spleen.
The goddess with a discontented air,
Seems to reject him, though she grants his prayer.
A wonderous bag with both her hands she binds,
Like that where once Ulysses held the winds;
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.
A vial next she fills with fainting fears,
Soft sorrows, melting griefs, and flowing tears.
The gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.
Sunk in Thalestris' arms the nymph he found,
Her eyes dejected, and her hair unbound.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent.
Belinda burns with more than mortal ire,
And fierce Thalestris fans the rising fire.
O wretched maid! she spread her hands, and cry'd,
(While Hampton's echoes, wretched maid! reply'd)
Was it for this you took such constant care
The bodkin, comb, and essence, to prepare?
For this your locks in paper durance bound,
For this with torturing irons wreath'd around?
For this with fillets strain'd your tender head,
And bravely bore the double loads of lead?
Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?
Honour forbid! at whose unrival'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.
Methinks already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,
And all your honour in a whisper lost!
How shall I, then, your helpless fame defend?
'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend!
And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
Expos'd through crystal to the gazing eyes,
And heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze!
Sooner shall grass in Hyde Park circus grow,
And wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow?
Sooner let earth, air, sea, to chaos fall,
Men, monkeys, lap-dogs, parrots, perish all!
She said; then raging to Sir Plume repairs,
And bids her beau demand the precious hairs!
(Sir Plume of amber snuff-box justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane)
With earnest eyes, and round unthinking face,
He first the snuff-box open'd, then the case,
And thus broke out—"My Lord, why, what the devil?
"Z—ds! damn the Lock! 'fore Gad, you must be civil!
"Plague on't! 'tis past a jest—nay prythee, pox!
"Give her the hair"—he spoke, and rapp'd his box.
It grieves me much (reply'd the peer again)
Who speaks so well should ever speak in vain;
But by this Lock, this sacred Lock, I swear,
(Which never more shall join its parted hair;
Which never more its honour shall renew,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew)
That while my nostrils draw the vital air,
This hand, which won it, shall for ever wear.
He spoke, and speaking, in proud triumph spread
The long-contended honours of her head.
But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so;
He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow.
Then see! the nymph in beauteous grief appears,
Her eyes half languishing, half drown'd in tears;
On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which, with a sigh, she rais'd; and thus she said:
For ever curs'd be this detested day,
Which snatch'd my best, my favourite curl away!
Happy! ah, ten times happy had I been,
If Hampton-court these eyes had never seen!
Yet am not I the first mistaken maid
By love of courts to numerous ills betray'd.

Oh, had I rather unadmir'd remain'd
In some lone isle, or distant northern land;
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way,
Where none learn Ombre, none e'er taste bohea!
There kept my charms conceal'd from mortal eye,
Like roses, that in deserts bloom and die.
What mov'd my mind with youthful lords to roam?
Oh, had I stay'd, and said my prayers at home! 160
'Twas this, the morning omens seem'd to tell,
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell;
The tottering china shook without a wind,
Nay Poll sat mute, and Shock was most unkind!
A sylph too warn'd me of the threats of fate,
In mystic visions, now believ'd too late!
See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs!
My hand shall rend, what ev'n thy rapine spares:
These in two sable ringlets taught to break,
Once gave new beauties to the snowy neck; 170
The sister-lock now sits uncouth, alone,
And in its fellow's fate foresees its own;
Uncurl'd it hangs, the fatal sheers demands,
And tempts, once more, thy sacrilegious hands.
Oh, hadst thou, cruel! been content to seize
Hairs less in sight, or any hairs but these!

CANTO V.

She said: the pitying audience melt in tears;
But fate and Jove had stopp'd the baron's ears.
In vain Thalestris with reproach assails,
For who can move when fair Belinda fails?
Not half so fix'd the Trojan could remain,
While Anna begg'd and Dido rag'd in vain.
Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan;
Silence ensued, and thus the nymph began.
Say, why are not beauties prais'd and honour'd most,
The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast? 10
Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,
Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd?
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux?
Why bows the side-box from its inmost rows?
How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains:
That men may say, when we the front-box grace,
Behold the first in virtue as in face!
Oh! if to dance all night and dress all day,
Charm'd the small pox, or chac'd old age away; 20
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce,
Or who would learn one earthly thing to use?
To patch, nay ogle, may become a saint;
Nor could it sure be such a sin to paint.
But since, alas! frail beauty must decay;
Curl'd or uncurl'd, since Locks will turn to grey;
Since painted, or not painted, all shall fade,
And she who scorns a man must die a maid;
What then remains, but well our power to use,
And keep good humour still, whate'er we lose? 30
And trust me, dear! good-humour can prevail,
When airs, and flights, and screams, and scolding fail,
Beauties in vain their pretty eyes may roll;
Charms strikes the sight, but merit wins the soul.
So spoke the dame, but no applause ensued;
Belinda frown'd, Thalestris call'd her prude.
To arms, to arms! the fierce Virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies.
All side in parties, and begin th' attack; [crack;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones
Heroes and heroines shouts confus'dly rise, 41
And bass and treble voices strike the skies.
No common weapon in their hands are found;
Like gods they fight, nor dread a mortal wound.
So when bold Homer makes the gods engage,
And heavenly breasts with human passions rage;
'Gainst Pallas, Mars; Latona Hermes arms;
And all Olympus rings with loud alarms;
Jove's thunder roars, heaven trembles all around,
Blue Neptune storms, the bellowing deeps resound:
Earth shakes her nodding towers, the ground gives way, 51
And the pale ghosts start at the flash of day!
Triumphant Umbriel on a sconce's height
Clapp'd his glad wings, and sat to view the fight:
Propp'd on their bodkin spears, the sprites survey
The growing combat, or assist the fray.
While through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies,
And scatters death around from both her eyes,
A beau and witling perish'd in the throng,
One dy'd in metaphor, and one in song.
"O cruel nymph! a living death I bear," 60
Cry'd Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.
A mournful glance Sir Fopling upwards cast,
"Those eyes are made so killing"—was his last.
Thus on Mæander's flowery margin lies
Th' expiring swan, and as he sings he dies.
When bold Sir Plume had drawn Clarissa down,
Chloe stepp'd in, and kill'd him with a frown;
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain,
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. 70
Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the mens wits against the lady's hair
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.
See, fierce Belinda on the Baron flies,
With more than usual lightning in her eyes:
Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try,
Who sought no more than on his foe to die.
But this bold lord, with manly strength endued,
She with one finger and a thumb subdued: 80

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 7. Then grave Clarissa, &c.] A new character introduced in the subsequent editions, to open more clearly the moral of the poem, in a parody of the speech of Sarpedon to Glaucus in Homer.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 37. To arms, to arms!] From hence the first edition goes to the conclusion, except a very few short insertions added, to keep the machinery in view to the end of the poem.

Ver. 53. Triumphant Umbriel] These four lines added, for the reason before mentioned.

Juſt where the breath of life his noſtrils drew,
A charge of ſnuff the wily virgin threw;
The Gnomes direct, to every atom juſt,
The pungent grains of titillating duſt.
Sudden, with ſtarting tears each eye o'erflows,
And the high dome re-echoes to his noſe.

Now meet thy fate, incens'd Belinda cry'd,
And drew a deadly bodkin from her ſide.
(The ſame, his ancient perſonage to deck,
Her great-great-grandſire wore about his neck,
In three ſeal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vaſt buckle for his widow's gown:
Her infant grandame's whiſtle next it grew,
The bells ſhe jingled, and the whiſtle blew;
Then in a bodkin grac'd her mother's hairs,
Which long ſhe wore, and now Belinda wears.)

Boaſt not my fall (he cry'd), inſulting foe!
Thou by ſome other ſhalt be laid as low.
Nor think, to die dejects my lofty mind:
All that I dread is leaving you behind!
Rather than ſo, ah! let me ſtill ſurvive,
And burn in Cupid's flames—but burn alive.

Reſtore the Lock, ſhe cries; and all around,
Reſtore the Lock! the vaulted roofs rebound.
Not fierce Othello in ſo loud a ſtrain
Roar'd for the handkerchief that caus'd his pain.
But ſee how oft ambitious aims are croſs'd,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is loſt!
The Lock, obtain'd with guilt, and kept with pain,
In every place is ſought, but ſought in vain:
With ſuch a prize no mortal muſt be bleſt,
So heaven decrees! with heaven who can conteſt?

Some thought it mounted to the Lunar ſphere,
Since all things loſt on earth are treaſur'd there.
There heroes wits are kept in ponderous vaſes,
And beaux in ſnuff-boxes and tweezer caſes:
There broken vows and death-bed alms are found,
And lovers hearts with ends of ribband bound;
The courtier's promiſes, and ſick man's prayers,
The ſmiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dry'd butterflies, and tomes of caſuiſtry.

But truſt the muſe—ſhe ſaw it upward riſe,
Though mark'd by none but quick, poetic eyes:
(So Rome's great founder to the heavens withdrew,
To Proculus alone confeſs'd in view)
A ſudden ſtar, it ſhot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.
Not Berenice's locks firſt roſe ſo bright,
The heaven beſpangling with diſhevell'd light.
The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleas'd purſue its progreſs through the ſkies.

This the Beau-monde ſhall from the Mall ſurvey,
And hail with muſic its propitious ray.
This the bleſt lover ſhall for Venus take,
And ſend up vows from Roſamonda's lake.
This partridge ſoon ſhall view in cloudleſs ſkies,
When next he looks through Galilæo's eyes;
And hence th' egregious wizard ſhall foredoom
The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome.

Then ceaſe, bright nymph! to mourn thy raviſh'd hair,
Which adds new glory to the ſhining ſphere!
Not all the treſſes that fair head can boaſt,
Shall draw ſuch envy as the Lock you loſt.
For, after all the murders of your eye,
When, after millions ſlain, yourſelf ſhall die;
When thoſe fair ſuns ſhall ſet, as ſet they muſt,
And all thoſe treſſes ſhall be laid in duſt,
This Lock, the muſe ſhall conſecrate to fame,
And 'midſt the ſtars inſcribe Belinda's name.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 131. The Sylphs behold] Theſe two lines added for the ſame reaſon, to keep in view the machinery of the poem.

POEMS.

ELEGY

To the memory of an Unfortunate Lady.

What beckoning ghoſt, along the moonlight ſhade,
Invites my ſteps, and points to yonder glade?
'Tis ſhe!—but why that bleeding boſom gor'd,
Why dimly gleams the viſionary ſword?
Oh ever beauteous, ever friendly! tell,
Is it, in heaven, a crime to love too well?
To bear too tender, or too firm a heart,
To act a lover's or a Roman's part?
Is there no bright reverſion in the ſky,
For thoſe who greatly think, or bravely die?
Why bade ye elſe, ye Powers! her ſoul aſpire
Above the vulgar flight of low deſire?
Ambition firſt ſprung from your bleſt abodes;
The glorious fault of angels and of gods:
Thence to their images on earth it flows,
And in the breaſts of kings and heroes glows.
Moſt ſouls, 'tis true, but peep out once an age,
Dull ſullen priſoners in the body's cage:
Dim lights of life, that burn a length of years,
Uſeleſs, unſeen, as lamps in ſepulchres;
Like eaſtern kings a lazy ſtate they keep,
And, cloſe confin'd to their own palace, ſleep.
From theſe perhaps (ere nature bade her die)
Fate ſnatch'd her early to the pitying ſky.
As into air the purer ſpirits flow,
And ſeparate from their kindred dregs below;
So flew the ſoul to its congenial place,
Nor left one virtue to redeem her race.
But thou, falſe guardian of a charge too good,
Thou, mean deſerter of thy brother's blood!
See on theſe ruby lips the trembling breath,
Theſe cheeks now fading at the blaſt of death;
Cold is that breaſt which warm'd the world before,
And thoſe love-darting eyes muſt roll no more.
Thus, if eternal juſtice rules the ball,
Thus ſhall your wives, and thus your children fall:
On all the line a ſudden vengeance waits,
And frequent hearſes ſhall beſiege your gates;
There paſſengers ſhall ſtand, and pointing ſay,
(While the long funerals blacken all the way)
Lo! theſe were they, whoſe ſouls the furies ſteel'd,
And curſt with hearts unknowing how to yield.
Thus unlamented paſs the proud away,
The gaze of fools, and pageant of a day!
So periſh all, whoſe breaſt ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe.
What can atone (oh, ever injur'd ſhade!)
Thy fate unpity'd, and thy rites unpaid?
No friend's complaint, no kind domeſtic tear
Pleas'd thy pale ghoſt, or grac'd thy mournful bier:
By foreign hands thy dying eyes were clos'd,
By foreign hands thy decent limbs compos'd,
By foreign hands thy humble grave adorn'd,
By ſtrangers honour'd, and by ſtranger's mourn'd!
What though no friends in ſable weeds appear;
Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
And bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances, and the public ſhow?
What though no weeping loves thy aſhes grace,
Nor poliſh'd marble emulate thy face?
What though no ſacred earth allow thee room,
Nor hallow'd dirge be mutter'd o'er thy tomb?
Yet ſhall thy grave with riſing flowers be dreſs'd,
And the green turf lie lightly on thy breaſt:
There ſhall the morn her earlieſt tears beſtow,
There the firſt roſes of the year ſhall blow;
While angels with their ſilver wings o'erſhade
The ground now ſacred by thy relics made.
So, peaceful reſts, without a ſtone, a name,
What once had beauty, titles, wealth, and fame.
How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of duſt alone remains of thee,
'Tis all thou art, and all the proud ſhall be!
Poets themſelves muſt fall, like thoſe they ſung,
Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue.
Ev'n he, whoſe ſoul now melts in mournful lays,
Shall ſhortly want the generous tear he pays;
Then from his cloſing eyes thy form ſhall part,
And the laſt pang ſhall tear thee from his heart,
Life's idle buſineſs at one gaſp be o'er,
The muſe forgot, and thou belov'd no more!

PROLOGUE

TO

MR. ADDISON'S TRAGEDY OF CATO.

To wake the ſoul by tender ſtrokes of art,
To raiſe the genius, and to mend the heart;
To make mankind in conſcious virtue bold,
Live o'er each ſcene, and be what they behold:
For this the Tragic Muſe firſt trod the ſtage,
Commanding tears to ſtream through every age;
Tyrants no more their ſavage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept.

Our author ſhuns by vulgar ſprings to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love;
In pitying Love, we but our weakneſs ſhow,
And wild Ambition well deſerves its woe.
Here tears ſhall flow from a more generous cauſe,
Such tears as patriots ſhed for dying laws:
He bids your breaſts with ancient ardour riſe,
And calls forth Roman drops from Britiſh eyes.
Virtue confeſs'd in human ſhape he draws,
What Plato thought, and godlike Cato was:
No common object to your ſight diſplays,
But what with pleaſure heaven itſelf ſurveys,
A brave man ſtruggling in the ſtorms of fate,
And greatly falling with a falling ſtate.
While Cato gives his little ſenate laws,
What boſom beats not in his country's cauſe?
Who ſees him act, but envies every deed?
Who hears him groan, and does not wiſh to bleed?
Ev'n when proud Cæſar 'midſt triumphal cars,
The ſpoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and impotently great,
Shew'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in ſtate;
As her dead father's reverend image paſt,
The pomp was darken'd, and the day o'ercaſt;
The triumph ceas'd, tears guſh'd from every eye;
The world's great victor paſs'd unheeded by;
Her laſt good man dejected Rome ador'd,
And honour'd Cæſar's leſs than Cato's ſword.
Britons, attend: be worth like this approv'd,
And ſhow you have the virtue to be mov'd.
With honeſt ſcorn the firſt fam'd Cato view'd
Rome learning arts from Greece, whom ſhe ſubdued;
Your ſcene precariouſly ſubſiſts too long
On French tranſlation, and Italian ſong.
Dare to have ſenſe yourſelves; aſſert the ſtage,
Be juſtly warm'd with your own native rage:
Such plays alone ſhould win a Britiſh ear,
As Cato's ſelf had not diſdain'd to hear.

EPILOGUE

TO

MR. ROWE'S JANE SHORE.

DESIGNED FOR MRS. OLDFIELD.

Prodigious this! the frail-one of our play
From her own ſex ſhould mercy find to-day!
You might have held the pretty head aſide,
Peep'd in your fans, been ſerious, thus, and cry'd,
The play may paſs—but that ſtrange creature, Shore,
I can't—indeed now—I ſo hate a whore'—
Juſt as a blockhead rubs his thoughtleſs ſkull,
And thanks his ſtars he was not born a fool;
So from a ſiſter ſinner you ſhall hear,
"How ſtrangely you expoſe yourſelf, my dear!"
But let me die, all raillery apart,
Our ſex are ſtill forgiving at their heart;
And, did not wicked cuſtom ſo contrive,
We'd be the beſt, good-natur'd things alive.
There are, 'tis true, who tell another tale,
That virtuous ladies envy while they rail;
Such rage without betrays the fire within;
In ſome cloſe corner of the ſoul, they ſin;
Still hoarding up, moſt ſcandalouſly nice,
Amidſt their virtues a reſerve of vice.
The godly dame, who fleſhly failings damns,
Scolds with her maid, or with her chaplain crams.
Would you enjoy ſoft nights, and ſolid dinners:
Faith, gallants, board with ſaints, and bed with ſinners.
Well, if our author in the wife offends,
He has a huſband that will make amends:
He draws him gentle, tender, and forgiving,
And ſure ſuch kind good creatures may be living,
In days of old they pardon'd breach of vows,
Stern Cato's ſelf was no relentleſs ſpouſe:
Plu—Plutarch, what's his name, that writes his life?
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife:
Yet if a friend, a night or ſo, ſhould need her,
He'd recommend her as a ſpecial breeder.
To lend a wife, few here would ſcruple make;
But, pray, which of you all would take her back?
Though with the ſtoic chief our ſtage may ring,
The ſtoic huſband was the glorious thing.
The man had courage, was a ſage, 'tis true,
And lov'd his country—but what's that to you?
Thoſe ſtrange examples ne'er were made to fit ye.
But the kind cuckold might inſtruct the city:
There many an honeſt man may copy Cato,
Who ne'er ſaw naked ſword, or look'd in Plato.
If, after all, you think it a diſgrace,
That Edward's miſs thus perks it in your face;
To ſee a piece of failing fleſh and blood,
In all the reſt ſo impudently good;
Faith let the modeſt matrons of the town
Come here in crowds, and ſtare the ſtrumpet down.

SAPPHO TO PHAON.

Say, lovely youth, that doſt my heart command,
Can Phaon's eyes forget his Sappho's hand?
Muſt then her name the wretched writer prove,
To thy remembrance loſt, as to thy love?
Aſk not the cauſe that I new numbers chooſe,
The lute neglected, and the lyric muſe;
Love taught my tears in ſadder notes to flow,
And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe.
I burn, I burn, as when through ripen'd corn
By driving winds the ſpreading flames are horne.
Phaon to Ætna's ſcorching fields retires,
While I conſume with more than Ætna's fires!
No more my ſoul a charm in muſic finds.
Muſic has charms alone for peaceful minds.
Soft ſcenes of ſolitude no more can pleaſe,
Love enters there, and I 'm my own diſeaſe.
No more the Leſbian dames my paſſion move,
Once the dear objects of my guilty love;
All other loves are loſt in only thine,
Ah, youth ungrateful to a flame like mine!
Whom would not all thoſe blooming charms ſurpriſe,
Thoſe heavenly looks, and dear deluding eyes?

The harp and bow would you like Phœbus bear,
A brighter Phœbus Phaon might appear;
Would you with ivy wreathe your flowing hair,
Not Bacchus' self with Phaon could compare:
Yet Phœbus lov'd, and Bacchus felt the flame,
One Daphne warm'd, and one the Cretan dame;
Nymphs that in verse no more could rival me,
Than ev'n those gods contend in charms with thee.
The muses teach me all their softest lays,
And the wide world resounds with Sappho's praise.
Though great Alcæus more sublimely sings,
And strikes with older rage the sounding strings,
No less renown attends the moving lyre,
Which Venus tunes, and all her loves inspire;
To me what nature has in charms deny'd,
Is well by wit's more lasting flames supply'd.
Though short my stature, yet my name extends
To heaven itself, and earth's remotest ends.
Brown as I am, an Ethiopian dame
Inspir'd young Perseus with a generous flame:
Turtles and doves of differing hues unite,
And glossy jet is pair'd with shining white.
If to no charms thou wilt thy heart resign,
But such as merit, such as equal thine,
By none, alas! by none thou canst be mov'd!
Phaon alone by Phaon must be lov'd!
Yet once thy Sappho could thy cares employ,
Once in her arms you centr'd all your joy:
No time the dear remembrance can remove,
For, oh! how vast a memory has love!
My music, then, you could for ever hear,
And all my words were music to your ear.
You stopp'd with kisses my enchanting tongue,
And found my kisses sweeter than my song.
In all I pleas'd, but most in what was best;
And the last joy was dearer than the rest.
Then with each word, each glance, each motion fir'd,
You still enjoy'd, and yet you still desir'd,
Till all dissolving in the trance we lay,
And in tumultuous raptures dy'd away.
The fair Sicilians now thy soul inflame;
Why was I born, ye gods! a Lesbian dame?
But ah, beware, Sicilian nymphs! nor boast
That wandering heart which I so lately lost;
Nor be with all those tempting words abus'd,
Those tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
And you that rule Sicilia's happy plains,
Have pity, Venus, on your poet's pains!
Shall fortune still in one sad tenor run,
And still increase the woes so soon begun?
Inur'd to sorrow from my tender years,
My parent's ashes drank my early tears:
My brother next, neglecting wealth and fame,
Ignobly burn'd in a destructive flame:
An infant daughter late my griefs increas'd,
And all a mother's cares distract my breast.
Alas, what more could fate itself impose,
But thee, the last and greatest of my woes?
No more my robes in waving purple flow,
Nor on my hand the sparkling diamonds glow;
No more my locks in ringlets curl'd diffuse
The costly sweetness of Arabian dews,
Nor braids of gold the varied tresses bind,
That fly disorder'd with the wanton wind:
For whom should Sappho use such arts as these?
He's gone, whom only she desir'd to please!
Cupid's light darts my tender bosom move,
Still is there cause for Sappho still to love:
So from my birth the sisters fix'd my doom,
And gave to Venus all my life to come;
Or, while my muse in melting notes complains,
My yielding heart keeps measure to my strains.
By charms like thine which all my soul have won,
Who might not—ah! who would not be undone?
For those Aurora Cephalus might scorn,
And with fresh blushes paint the conscious morn:
For those might Cynthia lengthen Phaon's sleep,
And bid Endymion nightly tend his sheep:
Venus for those had rapt thee to the skies,
But Mars on thee might look with Venus' eyes.
O scarce a youth, yet scarce a tender boy!
O useful time for lovers to employ!
Pride of thy age, and glory of thy race,
Come to these arms, and melt in this embrace!
The vows you never will return, receive;
And take at least the love you will not give.
See, while I write, my words are lost in tears!
The less my sense, the more my love appears.
Sure 'twas not much to bid one kind adieu;
(At least to feign was never hard to you!)
Farewell, my Lesbian love, you might have said;
Or coldly thus, Farewell, oh Lesbian maid!
No tear did you, no parting kiss receive,
Nor knew I then how much I was to grieve.
No lover's gift your Sappho could confer,
And wrongs and woes were all you left with her.
No charge I gave you, and no charge could give,
But this, Be mindful of our loves, and live.
Now by the Nine, those powers ador'd by me,
And Love, the god that ever waits on thee,
When first I heard (from whom I hardly knew)
That you were fled, and all my joys with you,
Like some sad statue, speechless, pale I stood,
Grief chill'd my breast, and stopp'd my freezing blood;
No sigh to rise, no tear had power to flow,
Fix'd in a stupid lethargy of woe:
But when its way th' impetuous passion found,
I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound;
I rave, then weep; I curse, and then complain;
Now swell to rage, now melt in tears again.
Not fiercer pangs distract the mournful dame,
Whose first-born infant feeds the funeral flame.
My scornful brother with a smile appears,
Insults my woes, and triumphs in my tears:
His hated image ever haunts my eyes;
And why this grief? thy daughter lives, he cries.
Stung with my love, and furious with despair,
All torn my garments, and my bosom bare,
My woes, thy crimes, I to the world proclaim;
Such inconsistent things are love and shame!
'Tis thou art all my care and my delight,
My daily longing, and my dream by night:
O night, more pleasing than the brightest day,
When fancy gives what absence takes away,
And, dress'd in all its visionary charms,
Restores my fair deserter to my arms!
Then round your neck in wanton wreaths I twine;
Then you, methinks, as fondly circle mine:

A thouſand tender words I hear and ſpeak;
A thouſand melting kiſſes give, and take:
Then fiercer joys; I bluſh to mention theſe,
Yet, while I bluſh, confeſs how much they pleaſe.
But when, with day, the ſweet deluſions fly,
And all things wake to life and joy, but I;
As if once more forſaken, I complain,
And cloſe my eyes to dream of you again:
Then frantic riſe, and like ſome fury rove
Through lonely plains, and through the ſilent grove;
As if the ſilent grove, and lonely plains,
That knew my pleaſures, could relieve my pains.
I view the grotto, once the ſcene of love,
The rocks around, the hanging roofs above,
That charm'd me more, with native moſs o'ergrown,
Than Phrygian marble, or the Parian ſtone.
I find the ſhades that veil'd our joys before;
But, Phaon gone, thoſe ſhades delight no more.
Here the preſs'd herbs with bending tops betray
Where oft entwin'd in amorous folds we lay;
I kiſs that earth which once was preſs'd by you,
And all with tears the withering herbs bedew.
For thee the fading trees appear to mourn,
And birds defer their ſongs till thy return:
Night ſhades the groves, and all in ſilence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I:
With mournful Philomel I join my ſtrain,
Of Tereus ſhe, of Phaon I complain.
A ſpring there is, whoſe ſilver waters ſhow,
Clear as a glaſs, the ſhining ſands below;
A flowery Lotos ſpreads its arms above,
Shades all the banks, and ſeems itſelf a grove;
Eternal greens the moſſy margin grace,
Watch'd by the Sylvan genius of the place.
Here as I lay, and ſwell'd with tears the flood,
Before my ſight a watery virgin ſtood:
She ſtood and cry'd, "O you that love in vain!
"Fly hence, and ſeek the fair Leucadian main.
"There ſtands a rock, from whoſe impending ſteep
"Apollo's fane ſurveys the rolling deep;
"There injur'd lovers, leaping from above,
"Their flames extinguiſh, and forget to love.
"Deucalion once with hopeleſs fury burn'd,
"In vain he lov'd, relentleſs Pyrrha ſcorn'd:
"But when from hence he plung'd into the main,
"Deucalion ſcorn'd, and Pyrrha lov'd in vain.
"Haſte, Sappho, haſte, from high Leucadia throw
"Thy wretched weight, nor dread the deeps below!"
She ſpoke, and vaniſh'd with the voice—I riſe,
And ſilent tears fall trickling from my eyes.
I go, ye nymphs! thoſe rocks and ſeas to prove;
How much I fear, but ah, how much I love!
I go, ye nymphs, where furious love inſpires;
Let female fears ſubmit to female fires.
To rocks and ſeas I fly from Phaon's hate,
And hope from ſeas and rocks a milder fate.
Ye gentle gales, beneath my body blow,
And ſoftly lay me on the waves below!
And thou, kind love, my ſinking limbs ſuſtain,
Spread thy ſoft wings, and waft me o'er the main,
Nor let a lover's death the guiltleſs flood profane!
On Phœbus' ſhrine my harp I'll then beſtow,
And this inſcription ſhall be plac'd below.
"Here ſhe who ſung, to him that did inſpire,
"Sappho to Phœbus conſecrates her lyre;
"What ſuits with Sappho, Phœbus, ſuits with thee;
"The gift, the giver, and the god agree."
By why, alas, relentleſs youth, ah, why
To diſtant ſeas muſt tender Sappho fly?
Thy charms than thoſe may far more powerful be,
And Phœbus' ſelf is leſs a god to me.
Ah! canſt thou doom me tó the rocks and ſea,
O, far more faithleſs, and more hard than they?
Ah! canſt thou rather ſee this tender breaſt
Daſh'd on theſe rocks than to thy boſom preſs'd;
This breaſt, which once, in vain! you lik'd ſo well;
Where the loves play'd, and where the muſes dwell?
Alas! the muſes now no more inſpire,
Untun'd my lute, and ſilent is my lyre;
My languid numbers have forgot to flow,
And fancy ſinks beneath a weight of woe.
Ye Leſbian virgins, and ye Leſbian dames,
Themes of my verſe, and objects of my flames,
No more your groves with my glad ſongs ſhall ring,
No more theſe hands ſhall touch the trembling ſtring:
My Phaon's fled, and I thoſe arts reſign,
(Wretch that I am, to call that Phaon mine!)
Return, fair youth, and bring along
Joy to my ſoul, and vigour to my ſong:
Abſent from thee, the poet's flame expires;
But ah! how fiercely burn the lover's fires?
Gods! can no prayers, no ſighs, no numbers, move
One ſavage heart, or teach it how to love?
The winds my prayers, my ſighs, my numbers bear,
The flying winds have loſt them all in air!
Oh when, alas! ſhall more auſpicious gales
To theſe fond eyes reſtore thy welcome ſails?
If you return—ah, why theſe long delays?
Poor Sappho dies while careleſs Phaon ſtays.
O, launch thy bark, nor fear the watery plain!
Venus for thee ſhall ſmooth her native main.
O, launch thy bark, ſecure of proſperous gales!
Cupid for thee ſhall ſpread the ſwelling ſails.
If you will fly—(yet ah! what cauſe can be,
Too cruel youth, that you ſhould fly from me?)
If not from Phaon, I muſt hope for eaſe,
Ah, let me ſeek it from the raging ſeas!
To raging ſeas unpity'd I'll remove,
And either ceaſe to live, or ceaſe to love!

ELOISA TO ABELARD.

Argument.

ABELARD and Eloiſa flouriſhed in the twelfth century; they were two of the moſt diſtinguiſhed perſons of their age in learning and beauty, but for nothing more famous than for their unfortunate paſſion. After a long courſe of calamities, they retired each to a ſeveral convent, and conſecrated the remainder of their days to religion. It was many years after this ſeparation, that a letter of Abelard's to a friend, which contained the hiſtory of his misfortunes, fell into the hands of Eloisa. This awakening all her tenderness, occasioned those celebrated letters (out of which the following is partly extracted), which give so lively a picture of the struggles of grace and nature, virtue and passion.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heavenly-pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns;
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins?
Why rove my thoughts beyond this last retreat?
Why feels my heart its long-forgotten heat?
Yet, yet I love!—From Abelard it came,
And Eloisa yet must kiss the name.
Dear, fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd,
Nor pass these lips in holy silence seal'd;
Hide it, my heart, within that close disguise,
Where, mix'd with God's, his lov'd idea lies:
O, write it not, my hand—the name appears
Already written—wash it out my tears!
In vain lost Eloisa weeps and prays,
Her heart still dictates, and her hand obeys.
Relentless walls! whose darksome round contains
Repentant sighs, and voluntary pains:
Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn;
Ye grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn!
Shrines! where their vigils pale-eyed virgins keep;
And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep!
Though cold like you, unmov'd and silent grown,
I have not yet forgot myself to stone.
All is not heaven's while Abelard has part,
Still rebel nature holds out half my heart;
Nor prayers, nor fasts, its stubborn pulse restrain,
Nor tears for ages taught to flow in vain.
Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
That well-known name awakens all my woes.
Oh, name for ever sad! for ever dear!
Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear.
I tremble too, where'er my own I find,
Some dire misfortune follows close behind.
Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe:
Now warm in love, now withering in my bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom!
There stern religion quench'd th' unwilling flame,
There dy'd the best of passions, love and fame.
Yet write, oh, write me all, that I may join
Griefs to thy griefs, and echo sighs to thine!
Nor foes nor fortune take this power away;
And is my Abelard less kind than they?
Tears still are mine, and those I need not spare,
Love but demands what else were shed in prayer;
No happier task these faded eyes pursue;
To read and weep is all they now can do.
Then share thy pain, allow that sad relief;
Ah, more than share it, give me all thy grief.
Heav'n first taught letters for some wretch's aid,
Some banish'd lover, or some captive maid;
They live, they speak, they breathe what love inspires,
Warm from the soul, and faithful to its fires,
The virgin's wish without her fears impart,
Excuse the blush, and pour out all the heart,
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name;
My fancy form'd thee of angelic kind,
Some emanation of th' all-beauteous mind.
Those smiling eyes, attempering every ray,
Shone sweetly lambent with celestial day.
Guiltless I gaz'd; heaven listen'd while you sung;
And truths divine came mended from that tongue.
From lips like those what precept fail'd to move?
Too soon they taught me 'twas no sin to love:
Back through the paths of pleasing sense I ran,
Nor wish'd an angel whom I lov'd a man.
Dim and remote the joys of saints I see,
Nor envy them that heaven I lose for thee.
How oft, when press'd to marriage, have I said,
Curse on all laws but those which love has made!
Love, free as air, at sight of human ties,
Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.
Let wealth, let honour, wait the wedded dame,
August her deed, and sacred be her fame;
Before true passion all those views remove;
Fame, wealth, and honour! what are you to love?
The jealous God, when we profane his fires,
Those restless passions in revenge inspires,
And bids them make mistaken mortals groan,
Who seek in love for aught but love alone.
Should at my feet the world's great master fall,
Himself, his throne, his world, I'd scorn them all:
Not Cæsar's empress would I deign to prove;
No, make me mistress to the man I love.
If there be yet another name more free,
More fond than mistress, make me that to thee!
Oh, happy state! when souls each other draw,
When love is liberty, and nature law:
All then is full, possessing and possess'd,
No craving void left aching in the breast:
Ev'n thought meets thought, ere'er from the lips it part,
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
This sure is bliss (if bliss on earth there be),
And once the lot of Abelard and me.
Alas, how chang'd! what sudden horrors rise!
A naked lover bound and bleeding lies!
Where, where was Eloise? her voice, her hand,
Her poniard had oppos'd the dire command.
Barbarian, stay! that bloody stroke restrain;
The crime was common, common be the pain.
I can no more; by shame, by rage suppress'd,
Let tears and burning blushes speak the rest.
Canst thou forget that sad, that solemn day,
When victims at yon altar's foot we lay?
Canst thou forget what tears that moment fell,
When, warm in youth, I bade the world farewell?
As with cold lips I kiss'd the sacred veil,
The shrines all trembled, and the lamps grew pale:
Heaven scarce believ'd the conquest it survey'd,
And saints with wonder heard the vows I made.
Yet then, to those dread altars as I drew,
Not on the cross my eyes were fix'd, but you:
Not grace, or zeal, love only was my call;
And if I lose thy love, I lose my all.
Come! with thy looks, thy words, relieve my woe;
Those still at least are left thee to bestow.
Still on that breast enamour'd let me lie,
Still drink delicious poison from thy eye,

Pant on thy lip, and to thy heart be preſs'd;
Give all thou canſt—and let me dream the reſt.
Ah, no! inſtruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes,
Full in my view ſet all the bright abode,
And make my ſouls quit Abelard for God.
Ah, think at leaſt thy flock deſerves thy care!
Plants of thy hand, and children of thy prayer.
From the falſe world in early youth they fled,
By thee to mountains, wilds, and deſerts led.
You rais'd theſe hallow'd walls; the deſert ſmil'd,
And paradiſe was open'd in the wild.
No weeping orphan ſaw his father's ſtores
Our ſhrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors;
No ſilver ſaints, by dying miſers given,
Here bribe the rage of ill-requited heaven;
But ſuch plain roofs as piety could raiſe,
And only vocal with the Maker's praiſe.
In theſe lone walls (their days eternal bound)
Theſe moſs-grown domes with ſpiry turrets crown'd,
Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows ſhed a ſolemn light;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day.
But now no face divine contentment wears,
'Tis all blank ſadneſs, or continual tears.
See how the force of others prayers I try,
(O pious fraud of amorous charity!)
But why ſhould I on others prayers depend?
Come thou, my father, brother, huſband, friend!
Ah, let thy handmaid, ſiſter, daughter, move,
And all thoſe tender names in one, thy love!
The darkſome pines that o'er yon rocks reclin'd
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind,
The wandering ſtreams that ſhine between the hills,
The grots that echo to the tinkling rills,
The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze;
No more theſe ſcenes my meditation aid,
Or lull to reſt the viſionary maid.
But o'er the twilight groves and duſky caves,
Long-founding aiſles, and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy ſits, and round her throws
A death-like ſilence, and a dread repoſe;
Her gloomy preſence ſaddens all the ſcene,
Shades every flower, and darkens every green,
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods.
Yet here for ever, ever muſt I ſtay;
Sad proof how well a lover can obey!
Death, only death, can break the laſting chain;
And here, ev'n then, ſhall my cold duſt remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames reſign,
And wait till 'tis no ſin to mix with thine.
Ah, wretch! believ'd the ſpouſe of God in vain,
Confeſs'd within the ſlave of love and man.
Aſſiſt me, heaven! but whence aroſe that prayer?
Sprung it from piety, or from deſpair?
Ev'n here, where frozen chaſtity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.
I ought to grieve, but cannot what I ought;
I mourn the lover, not lament the fault;
I view my crime, but kindle at the view,
Repent old pleaſures, and ſolicit new;
Now turn'd to heaven, I weep my paſt offence,
Now think of thee, and curſe my innocence.
Of all affliction taught a lover yet,
'Tis ſure the hardeſt ſcience to forget!
How ſhall I loſe the ſin, yet keep the ſenſe,
And love th' offender, yet deteſt th' offence?
How the dear object from the crime remove,
Or how diſtinguiſh penitence from love?
Unequal taſk! a paſſion to reſign,
For hearts ſo touch'd, ſo pierc'd, ſo loſt as mine!
E'er ſuch a ſoul regains its peaceful ſtate,
How often muſt it love, how often hate!
How often hope, deſpair, reſent, regret,
Conceal, diſdain—do all things but forget!
But let heaven ſeize it, all at once 'tis fir'd:
Not touch'd, but rapt; not weaken'd, but inſpir'd!
Oh, come! oh, teach me nature to ſubdue,
Renounce my love, my life, myſelf—and you!
Fill my fond heart with God alone, for he Alone can rival, can ſucceed to thee.
How happy is the blameleſs veſtal's lot;
The world forgetting, by the world forgot!
Eternal ſun-ſhine of the ſpotleſs mind!
Each prayer accepted, and each wiſh reſign'd;
Labour and reſt that equal periods keep;
"Obedient ſlumbers that can wake and weep;"
Deſires compos'd, affections ever even;
Tears that delight, and ſighs that waft to heaven.
Grace ſhines around her with ſereneſt beams,
And whiſpering angels prompt her golden dreams.
For her th' unfading roſe of Eden blooms,
And wings of ſeraphs ſhed divine perfumes;
For her the ſpouſe prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgins hymenæals ſing:
To ſounds of heavenly harps ſhe dies away,
And melts in viſions of eternal day.
Far other dreams my erring ſoul employ,
Far other raptures of unholy joy:
When at the cloſe of each ſad, ſorrowing day,
Fancy reſtores what vengeance ſnatch'd away,
Then conſcience ſleeps, and leaving nature free,
All my looſe ſoul unbounded ſprings to thee.
O, curſt, dear horrors of all-conſcious night!
How glowing guilt exalts the keen delight!
Provoking demons all reſtraint remove,
And ſtir within the every ſource of love.
I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my claſping arms.
I wake:—no more I hear, no more I view,
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you.
I call aloud; it hears not what I ſay:
I ſtretch my empty arms; it glides away.
To dream once more I cloſe my willing eyes;
Ye ſoft illuſions, dear deceits, ariſe!
Alas, no more! methinks we wandering go
Through dreary waſtes, and weep each other's woe,
Where round ſome mouldering tower pale ivy creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps.
Sudden you mount, you beckon from the ſkies;
Clouds interpoſe, waves roar, and winds ariſe.
I ſhriek, ſtart up, the ſame ſad proſpect find,
And wake to all the griefs I left behind.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense from pleasure and from pain;
Thy life a long dead calm of fix'd repose;
No pulse that riots, and no blood that glows.
Still as the seas, e'er winds were taught to blow,
Or moving spirit bade the waters flow;
Soft as the slumbers of a saint forgiven,
And mild as opening gleams of promis'd heaven.

Come, Abelard! for what hast thou to dread?
The torch of Venus burns not for the dead.
Nature stands check'd; religion disapproves;
Ev'n thou art cold—yet Eloisa loves.
Ah, hopeless, lasting flames! like those that burn
To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.

What scenes appear where'er I turn my view!
The dear ideas, where I fly, pursue,
Rise in the grove, before the altar rise,
Stain all my soul, and wanton in my eyes.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee,
Thy image steals between my God and me,
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With every bead I drop too soft a tear.
When from the censer clouds of fragrance roll,
And swelling organs lift the rising soul,
One thought of thee puts all the pomp to flight,
Priests, tapers, temples, swim before my sight:
In seas of flame my plunging soul is drown'd,
While altars blaze, and angels tremble round.

While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
Kind, virtuous drops just gathering in my eye,
While, praying, trembling, in the dust I roll,
And dawning grace is opening on my soul:
Come, if thou dar'st, all charming as thou art!
Oppose thyself to heaven; dispute my heart;
Come, with one glance of those deluding eyes
Blot out each bright idea of the skies; [tears;
Take back that grace, those sorrows, and those
Take back my fruitless penitence and prayers;
Snatch me, just mounting, from the blest abode;
Assist the fiends, and tear me from my God!

No, fly me, fly me, far as pole from pole;
Rise Alps between us! and whole oceans roll!
Ah, come not, write not, think not once of me,
Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee.
Thy oaths I quit, thy memory resign;
Forget, renounce me, hate whate'er was mine.
Fair eyes, and tempting looks (which yet I view!)
Long lov'd, ador'd ideas, all adieu!
O, grace serene! O virtue heavenly fair!
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Fresh-blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter, each mild, each amicable guest;
Receive and wrap me in eternal rest!

See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propt on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead.
In each low wind methinks a spirit calls,
And more than echoes talk along the walls.
Here, as I watch'd the dying lamp around,
From yonder shrine I heard a hollow sound.
"Come, sister, come!" (it said, or seem'd to say)
"Thy place is here, sad sister, come away!
"Once like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd,
"Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid:
"But all is calm in this eternal sleep;
"Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep:
"Ev'n superstition loses every fear;
"For God, not man, absolves our frailties here."

I come, I come! prepare your roseate bowers,
Celestial palms, and ever-blooming flowers.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphic glow:
Thou, Abelard! the last sad office pay,
And smooth my passage to the realms of day;
See my lips tremble, and my eye-balls roll,
Suck my last breath, and catch my flying soul!
Ah, no—in sacred vestments mayst thou stand,
The hallow'd taper trembling in thy hand,
Present the cross before my lifted eye,
Teach me at once, and learn of me to die.
Ah then, thy once-lov'd Eloisa see!
It will be then no crime to gaze on me.
See from my cheek the transient roses fly!
See the last sparkle languish in my eye!
Till every motion, pulse, and breath be o'er;
And ev'n my Abelard be lov'd no more.
O, death all eloquent! you only prove
What dust we doat on, when 'tis man we love.

Then too, when fate shall thy fair frame destroy,
(That cause of all my guilt, and all my joy),
In trance ecstatic may the pangs be drown'd,
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round,
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine!

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame!
Then, ages hence, when all my woes are o'er,
When this rebellious heart shall beat no more;
If ever chance two wandering lovers brings
To Paraclete's white walls and silver springs,
O'er the pale marble shall they join their heads,
And drink the falling tears each other sheds;
Then sadly say, with mutual pity mov'd,
"O, may we never love as these have lov'd!"
From the full choir, when loud hosannahs rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice,
Amid that scene of some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold relics lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heaven,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiven.
And sure if fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more;
Such if there be, who loves so long, so well;
Let him our sad, our tender story tell!
The well-sung woes will soothe my pensive ghost;
He best can paint them who shall feel them most.

TRANSLATIONS AND IMITATIONS.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE following tranſlations were ſelected from many others done by the Author in his youth; for the moſt part indeed but a ſort of exerciſes, while he was improving himſelf in the languages, and carried by his early bent to poetry to perform them rather in verſe than proſe. Mr. Dryden's Fables came out about that time, which occaſioned the Tranſlations from Chaucer. They were firſt ſeparately printed in Miſcellanies, by J. Tonſon and B. Lintot, and afterwards collected in the Quarto Edition of 1717. The Imitations of Engliſh Authors, which follow, were done as early, ſome of them at fourteen or fifteen years old.

THE TEMPLE OF FAME.

Written in the Year 1711.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE hint of the following piece was taken from Chaucer's Houſe of Fame. The deſign is in a manner entirely altered, the deſcriptions and moſt of the particular thoughts my own; yet I could not ſuffer it to be printed without this acknowledgment. The reader who would compare this with Chaucer, may begin with his third book of Fame, there being nothing in the two firſt books that anſwers to their title: wherever any hint is taken from him, the paſſage itſelf is ſet down in the marginal notes.

The poem is introduced in the manner of the Provençal poets, whoſe works were for the moſt part viſions, or pieces of imagination, and conſtantly deſcriptive. From theſe, Petrarch and Chaucer frequently borrowed the idea of their poems. See the Trionſi of the former, and the Dream, Flower, and the Leaf, &c. of the latter.

The Author of this therefore choſe the ſame ſort of exordium.

IN that ſoft ſeaſon, when deſcending ſhowers
Call forth the greens, and wake the riſing flowers;
When opening buds ſalute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray;
As balmy ſleep had charm'd my cares to reſt,
And love itſelf was baniſh'd from my breaſt,
(What time the morn myſterious viſions brings,
While purer ſlumbers ſpread their golden wings)
A train of phantoms in wild order roſe,
And, join'd, this intellectual ſcene compoſe.
I ſtood, methought, betwixt earth, ſeas, and ſkies,
The whole creation open to my eyes:

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 11, &c.] Theſe verſes are hinted from the following of Chaucer, Book ii.

Though beheld I fields and plains,
Now hills, and now mountains,

In air self-balanc'd hung the globe below,
Where mountains rise, and circling oceans flow,
Here naked rocks, and empty wastes were seen;
There towery cities, and the forests green:
Here sailing ships delight the wandering eyes;
There trees and intermingled temples rise:
Now a clear sun the shining scene displays;
The transient landscape now in clouds decays.
O'er the wide prospect as I gaz'd around,
Sudden I heard a wild promiscuous sound,
Like broken thunders that at distance roar,
Or billows murmuring on the hollow shore:
Then gazing up, a glorious pile beheld,
Whose towering summit ambient clouds conceal'd,
High on a rock of ice the structure lay,
Steep its ascent, and slippery was the way;
The wonderous rock like Parian marble shone,
And seem'd, to distant sight, of solid stone.
Inscriptions here of various names I view'd,
The greater part by hostile time subdu'd;
Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past;
And poets once had promis'd they should last.
Some fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found.
Critics I saw, that other names deface,
And fix their own, with labour, in their place:
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun;

IMITATIONS.

Now valeis, and now forestes,
And now unneth great bestes;
Now rivers, now citees,
Now towns, now great trees,
Now shippes sayling in the see.

Ver. 27. High on a rock of ice, &c.] Chaucer's third book of Fame.

It stood upon so high a rock,
Higher standeth none in Spayne—
What manner stone this rock was,
For it was like a lymed glass,
But that it shone full more clere;
But of what congeled matere
It was, I nist redily;
But at the last espied I,
And found that it was every dele,
A rock of ice, and not of stele.

Ver. 31. Inscriptions here, &c.]

Though saw I all the hill y-grave
With famous folkes names fele,
That had been in much wele
And her fames wide y-blow;
But well unneth might I know,
Any letters for to rede
Their names by, for out of drede
They weren almost off-thawen so,
That of the letters one or two
Were molte away of every name,
So unfamous was woxe her fame;
But men said what may ever last?

Ver. 41. Nor was the work impair'd, &c.]

Though gan I in myne harte cast,

For Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy, than excess of praise.
Yet part no injuries of heaven could feel,
Like crystal faithful to the graving steel:
The rock's high summit, in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade.
Their names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread, and grow brighter with the length of days.
So Zembla's rocks (the beauteous work of frost)
Rise white in air, and glitter o'er the coast;
Pale suns, unfelt, at distance roll away,
And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play;
Eternal snows the growing mass supply,
Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbent sky
As Atlas fix'd, each hoary pile appears,
The gather'd winter of a thousand years.
On this foundation Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands.
Whate'er proud Rome or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd.
Four faces had the dome, and every face
Of various structure, but of equal grace!
Four brazen gates, on columns lifted high,
Salute the different quarters of the sky.
Here fabled chiefs in darker ages born,
Or worthies old, whom arms or arts adorn,
Who cities rais'd, or tam'd a monstrous race,
The walls in venerable order grace:
Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone.
Westward, a sumptuous frontispiece appear'd,
On Doric pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the rougheu'd gold.
In shaggy spoils here Theseus was beheld,
And Perseus dreadful with Minerva's shield:
There great Alcides, stooping with his toil,
Rests on his club, and holds th' Hesperian spoil:
Here Orpheus sings; trees moving to the sound
Start from their roots, and form a shade around:
Amphion there the loud creating lyre
Strikes, and behold a sudden Thebes aspire!

IMITATIONS.

That they were molte away for heate,
And not away with stormes beate.

Ver. 45. Yet part no injuries, &c.]

For on that other side I sey
Of that hill which northward ley,
How it was written full of names
Of folke, that had afore great fames,
Of old time, and yet they were
As fresh as men had written hem there
That self day, or that houre
That I on hem gan to poure;
But well I wiste what it made;
It was conserved with the shade
(All the writing that I sye)
Of the castle that stoode on high,
And stood eke in so cold a place,
That heat might it not deface.

Cythæron's echoes anſwer to his call,
And half the mountain rolls into a wall:
There might you ſee the lengthening ſpires aſcend,
The domes ſwell up, the widening arches bend,
The growing towers like exhalations riſe,
And the huge columns heave into the ſkies.
The eaſtern front was glorious to behold,
With diamond flaming, and Barbaric gold.
There Ninus ſhone, who ſpread th' Aſſyrian fame,
And the great founder of the Perſian name:
There in long robes the royal Magi ſtand,
Grave Zoroaſter waves the circling wand:
The ſage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans, deep in deſert woods rever'd.
Theſe ſtopp'd the moon, and call'd th' unbody'd ſhades
To midnight banquets in the glimmering glades;
Made viſionary fabrics round them riſe,
And airy ſpectres ſkim before their eyes;
Of Taliſmans and Sigils knew the power,
And careful watch'd the planetary hour.
Superior, and alone, Confucius ſtood,
Who taught that uſeful ſcience to be good.
But on the ſouth, a long majeſtic race
Of Egypt's prieſts the gilded niches grace,
Who meaſur'd earth, deſcrib'd the ſtarry ſpheres,
And trac'd the long records of lunar years.
High on his car Seſoſtris ſtruck my view,
Whom ſcepter'd ſlaves in golden harneſs drew:
His hands a bow and pointed javelin hold;
His giant limbs are arm'd in chains of gold.
Between the ſtatues obeliſks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphics grac'd.
Of Gothic ſtructure was the northern ſide,
O'erwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride.
There huge Coloſſus roſe, with trophies crown'd,
And Runic characters were grav'd around.
There ſate Zamolxis with erected eyes,
And Odin here in mimic trances dies.
There on rude iron columns, ſmear'd with blood,
The horrid forms of Scythian heroes ſtood.
Druids and Bards (their once loud harps unſtrung)
And youths that dy'd to be by poets ſung.
Theſe and a thouſand more of doubtful fame,
To whom old fables gave a laſting name.
In ranks adorn'd the temple's outward face;
The wall in luſtre and effect like glaſs,
Which, o'er each object caſting various dyes,
Enlarges ſome, and others multiplies:
Nor void of emblem was the myſtic wall,
For thus romantic Fame increaſes all.
The temple ſhakes, the ſounding gates unfold,
Wide vaults appear, and roofs of fretted gold:
Rais'd on a thouſand pillars wreath'd around
With laurel-foliage, and with eagles crown'd:
Of bright tranſparent beryl were the walls,
The freezes gold, and gold the capitals:

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 132. The walls in luſtre, &c.]
It ſhone lighter than a glaſs,
And made well more than it was,
As kind of thing Fame is.

As heaven with ſtars, the roof with jewels glows,
And ever-living lamps depend in rows.
Full in the paſſage of each ſpacious gate,
The ſage hiſtorians in white garments wait;
Grav'd o'er their ſeats the form of time was found.
His ſcythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound
Within ſtood heroes, who through loud alarms
In bloody fields purſued renown in arms.
High on a throne with trophies charg'd I view'd
The youth that all things but himſelf ſubdu'd;
His feet on ſceptres and tiaras trod,
And his horn'd head bely'd the Libyan god.
There Cæſar, grac'd with both Minervas ſhone;
Cæſar, the world's great maſter, and his own;
Unmov'd, ſuperior ſtill in every ſtate,
And ſcarce deteſted in his country's fate.
But chief were thoſe, who not for empire fought,
But with their toils their people's ſafety bought:
High o'er the reſt Epaminondas ſtood;
Timoleon, glorious in his brother's blood;
Bold Scipio, ſaviour of the Roman ſtate;
Great in his triumphs, in retirement great;
And wiſe Aurelius, in whoſe well-taught mind
With boundleſs power unbounded virtue join'd,
His own ſtrict judge, and patron of mankind.
Much ſuffering heroes next their honours claim,
Thoſe of leſs noiſy, and leſs guilty fame,
Fair virtue's ſilent train: ſupreme of theſe
Here ever ſhines the godlike Socrates;
He whom ungrateful Athens could expell,
At all times juſt, but when he ſign'd the ſhell:
Here his abode the martyr'd Phocion claims,
With Agis, not the laſt of Spartan names:
Unconquer'd Cato ſhews the wound he tore,
And Brutus his ill genius meets no more.
But in the centre of the hollow'd choir,
Six pompous columns o'er the reſt aſpire;
Around the ſhrine itſelf of fame they ſtand,
Hold the chief honours, and the fame command.
High on the firſt, the mighty Homer ſhone;
Eternal Adamant compos'd his throne,
Father of verſe! in holy fillets dreſt,
His ſilver beard wav'd gently o'er his breaſt;
Though blind, a boldneſs in his looks appears;
In years he ſeem'd, but not impair'd by years.

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 179. Six pompous columns, &c.]
From the dees many a pillere,
Of metal that ſhone not full clere, &c.
Upon a pillere ſaw I ſtonde
That was of lede and iron fine,
Him of the ſect Saturnine,
The Ebraicke Joſephus the old, &c.
Upon an iron pillere ſtrong,
That painted was all endlong,
With tigers' blood in every place,
The Tholoſan that hight Stace,
That bear of Thebes up the name, &c.
Ver. 182.
Full wonder high on a pillere
Of iron, he the great Omer,
And with him Dares and Titus, &c.

The wars of Troy were round the pillar seen:
Here fierce Tydides wounds the Cyprian queen;
Here Hector glorious from Patroclus' fall,
Here dragg'd in triumph ronnd the Trojan wall.
Motion and life did every part inspire,
Bold was the work, and prov'd the master's fire;
A strong expression most he seem'd t' affect,
And here and there disclos'd a brave neglect.
A golden column next in rank appear'd.
On which a shrine of purest gold was rear'd;
Finish'd the whole, and labour'd every part,
With patient touches of unwearied art:
The Mantuan there in sober triumph sat,
Compos'd his posture, and his look sedate;
On Homer still he fix'd a reverend eye,
Great without pride, in modest majesty.
In living sculpture on the sides were spread
The Latian wars, and haughty Turnus dead;
Eliza stretch'd upon the funeral pyre,
Æneas bending with his aged sire:
Troy flam'd in burning gold, and o'er the throne
Arms and the man in golden cyphers shone.
Four swans sustain a car of silver bright,
With heads advanc'd, and pinions stretch'd for flight:
Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God.
Across the harp a careless hand he flings,
And boldly sinks into the sounding strings,
The figur'd games of Greece the column grace,
Neptune and Jove survey the rapid race.
The youths hang o'er their chariots as they run;
The fiery steeds seem starting from the stone;
The champions in distorted postures threat;
And all appear'd irregularly great.
Here happy Horace tun'd th' Ausonian lyre
To sweeter sounds, and temper'd Pindar's fire;
Kleas'd with Alcæus' manly rage t' infuse
The softer spirit of the Sapphic muse.
The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace;
A work outlasting monumental brass.

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 196. &c.

There saw I stand on a pillere
That was of tinned iron cleere,
The Larin poet Virgilye,
That hath bore up of a great while
The fame of pious Æneas:
And next him on a pillere was
Of copper, Venus' clerke Ovide,
That hath sowen wondrous wide
The great god of love's fame—
Tho saw I on a pillere by
Of iron wrought full sternly,
The great poet Dan Lucan,
That on his shoulders bore up then
As hye as that I might see,
The fame of Julius and Pompee.
And next him on a pillere stode
Of sulphure, like as he were wode,
Dan Claudian, so the for to tell,
That bare up all the fame of hell, &c.

Here smiling Loves and Bacchanals appear,
The Julian star and great Augustus here.
The doves that round the infant poet spread
Myrtles and bays, hung hovering o'er his head.
Here, in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
State fix'd in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant Zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround;
His piercing eyes, erect, appear to view
Superior worlds, and look all nature through.
With equal rays immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne:
Gathering his flowing robe, he seem'd to stand
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand.
Behind, Rome's genius waits with civic crowns,
And the great father of his country owns.
These massy columns in a circle rise,
O'er which a pompous dome invades the skies:
Scarce to the top I stretch'd my aching sight,
So large it spread, and swell'd to such a height.
Full in the midst proud Fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificiently great;
The vivid emeralds there revive the eye,
The flaming rubies shew their sanguine dye,
Bright azure rays from lively sapphires stream,
And lucid amber casts a golden gleam.
With various-colour'd light the pavement shone,
And all on fire appear'd the glowing throne;
The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays.
When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce seem'd her statue of a cubit's height;
But swell'd to larger size, the more I gaz'd,
Till to the roof her towering front she rais'd.
With her, the Temple every moment grew,
And ampler vistas open'd to my view:
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long aisles extend.
Such was her form, as ancient bards have told,
Wings raise her arms, and wings her feet unfold;
A thousand busy tongues the goddess bears,
And thousand open eyes, and thousand listening ears.
Beneath, in order rang'd, the tuneful nine
(Her virgin handmaids) still attend the shrine:
With eyes on Fame for ever fix'd, they sing;
For Fame they raise the voice, and tune the string,
With time's first birth began the heavenly lays.
And last, eternal, through the length of days.

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 259. Scarce seem'd her stature, &c.
Methought that she was so lite,
That the length of a cubite
Was longer than she seemed be;
But thus soone in a while she,
Her selfe tho wonderly straight,
That with her feet she the earth right,
And with her head she touchyd heaven—

Ver. 270. Beneath, in order rang'd, &c.]
I heard about her throne y-sung
That all the palays walls rung,
So sung the mighty muse, she
That cleped is Calliope,
And her seven sisters eke—

Around these wonders as I cast a look,
The trumpet sounded, and the temple shook,
And all the nations, summon'd at the call,
From different quarters fill the crowded hall:
Of various tongues the mingled sounds were heard;
In various garbs promiscuous throngs appear'd;
Thick as the bees, that with the spring renew
Their flowery toils, and sip the fragrant dew,
When the wing'd colonies first tempt the sky,
O'er dusky fields and shaded waters fly,
Or, settling, seize the sweets the blossoms yield,
And a low murmur runs along the field.
Millions of suppliant crowds the shrine attend,
And all degrees before the goddess bend;
The poor, the rich, the valiant, and the sage,
And boasting youth, and narrative old age.
Their pleas were different, their request the same;
For good and bad alike are fond of Fame.
Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd;
Unlike successes equal merits found.
Thus her blind sister, fickle Fortune, reigns,
And undiscerning scatters crowns and chains.
First at the shrine the learned world appear,
And to the goddess thus prefer their prayer.
Long have we sought t' instruct and please mankind,
With studies pale, with midnight vigils blind;
But thank'd by few, rewarded yet by none,
We here appeal to thy superior throne:
On wit and learning the just prize bestow,
For Fame is all we must expect below.
The goddess heard, and bade the muses raise
The golden trumpet of eternal praise:
From pole to pole the winds diffuse the sound,
That fills the circuit of the world around;
Not all at once, as thunder breaks the cloud;
The notes at first were rather sweet than loud:
By just degrees they every moment rise,
Fill the wide earth, and gain upon the skies.
At every breath were balmy odours shed,
Which still grew sweeter, as they wider spread;
Less fragrant scents th' unfolding rose exhales,
Or spices breathing in Arabian gales.

Next these the good and just, an awful train,
Thus on their knees address the sacred fane.
Since living virtue is with envy curs'd,
And the best men are treated like the worst,
Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,
And give each deed th' exact intrinsic worth.
Not with bare justice shall your act be crown'd,
(Said Fame) but high above desert renown'd:
Let fuller notes th' applauding world amaze,
And the loud clarion labour in your praise.
This band dismiss'd, behold another crowd
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd;
The constant tenor of whose well-spent days
No less deserv'd a just return of praise.
But straight the direful trump of slander sounds;
Through the big dome the doubling thunder bounds;
Loud as the burst of cannon rends the skies,
The dire report through every region flies,
In every ear incessant rumours rung,
And gathering scandals grew on every tongue.
From the black trumpet's rusty concave broke
Sulphureous flames, and clouds of rolling smoke:
The poisonous vapour blots the purple skies,
And withers all before it as it flies.
A troop came next, who crowns and armour wore,
And proud defiance in their looks they bore:

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 276. Around these wonders, &c.]
I heard a noise approachen blive,
That far'd as bees done in a hive,
Against her time of out-flying,
Right such a manere murmuring,
For all the world it seemed me,
Tho gan I look about and see
That there came entering into th' hall,
A right great company withal;
And that of sundry regions,
Of all kind of conditions, &c.—

Ver. 294. Some she disgrac'd, &c.]
And some of them she granted sone,
And some she warned well and fair,
And some she granted the contrair—
Right as her sister dame Fortune
Is wont to serve in commune.

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 318. The good and just, &c.]
Tho came the third companye,
And gan up to the dees to hye,
And down on knees they fell anone,
And saiden: We been everichone
Folke that han full truely
Deserved fame right-fully,
And prayen you it might be knowe
Right as it is, and forth blowe.
I grant, quoth she, for now we list
That your good works shall be wist.
And yet ye shall have better loos,
Right in despite of all, your foos,
Than worthy is, and that anone.
Let now (quoth she) thy trump gone—
And certes all the breath that went
Out of his trump's mouth smel'd
As men a pot of baume held
Among a basket full of roses.—

Ver. 328, 338. Behold another crowd, &c.—
From the black trumpet's rusty, &c.]
Therewithal there came anone
Another huge companye
Of good folke—
What did this Eolus, but he
Took out his trump of brass,
That fouler than the devil was:
And gan his trump for to blowe,
As all the world should overthrowe.
Throughout every regione
Went this foul trumpet's soune
Swift as a pellet out of a gunne,
When fire is in the powder runne.
And such a smoke gan out wende,
Out of the foul trumpet's ende—&c.

For thee (they cry'd) amidſt alarms and ſtrife,
We ſail'd in tempeſts down the ſtream of life;
For thee whole nations fill'd with flames and blood.
And ſwam to empire through the purple flood.
Thoſe ills we dar'd, thy inſpiration own;
What virtue ſeem'd was done for thee alone.
Ambitious fools! (the queen reply'd, and frown'd)
Be all your acts in dark oblivion drown'd;
There ſleep forgot, with mighty tyrants gone,
Your ſtatues moulder'd, and your names unknown!
A ſudden cloud ſtraight ſnatch'd them from my ſight,
And each majeſtic phantom ſunk in night.
Then came the ſmalleſt tribe I yet had ſeen;
Plain was their dreſs, and modeſt was their mien.
Great idol of mankind! we neither claim
The praiſe of merit, nor aſpire to fame!
But, ſafe in deſerts from th' applauſe of men,
Would die unheard-of, as we liv'd unſeen.
'Tis all we beg thee, to conceal from ſight
Thoſe acts of goodneſs which themſelves requite.
O let us ſtill the ſecret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's ſake.
And live there men, who ſlight immortal fame?
Who then with incenſe ſhall adore our name?
But, mortals! know, 'tis ſtill our greateſt pride,
To blaze thoſe virtues which the good would hide.
Riſe! muſes, riſe! add all your tuneful breath;
Theſe muſt not ſleep in darkneſs and in death.
She ſaid! in air the trembling muſic floats,
And on the winds triumphant ſwell the notes;
So ſoft, though high, ſo loud, and yet ſo clear,
Ev'n liſtening angels lean from heaven to hear:
To fartheſt ſhores th' ambroſial ſpirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the ſkies.
Next theſe a youthful train their vows expreſs'd,
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dreſs'd:
Hither, they cry'd, direct your eyes, and ſee
The men of pleaſure, dreſs, and gallantry;
Ours is the place at banquets, balls, and plays;
Sprightly our nights, polite are all our days;
Courts we frequent, where 'tis our pleaſing care
To pay due viſits, and addreſs the fair:
In fact, 'tis true, no nymph we could perſuade,
But ſtill in fancy vanquiſh'd every maid;
Of unknown ducheſſes lewd tales we tell,
Yet, would the world believe us, all were well.
The joy let others have, and we the name,
And what we want in pleaſure, grant in fame.
The queen aſſents, the trumpet rends the ſkies,
And at each blaſt a lady's honour dies. [preſt
Pleas'd with the ſtrange ſucceſs, vaſt numbers
Around the ſhrine, and made the ſame requeſt:
What you (ſhe cry'd), unlearn'd in arts to pleaſe,
Slaves to yourſelves, and even fatigued with eaſe,
Who loſe a length of undeſerving days,
Would you uſurp the lover's dear-bought praiſe?
To juſt contempt, ye vain pretenders, fall,
The people's fable, and the ſcorn of all.
Straight the black clarion ſends a horrid ſound,
Loud laughs burſt out, and bitter ſcoffs fly round,
Whiſpers are heard, with taunts reviling loud,
And ſcornful hiſſes run through all the crowd.
Laſt, thoſe who boaſt of mighty miſchiefs done,
Enſlave their country, or uſurp a throne;
Or who their glory's dire foundation lay'd
On ſovereigns ruin'd, or on friends betray'd;
Calm, thinking villains, whom no faith could fix,
Of crooked counſels and dark politics;
Of theſe a gloomy tribe ſurround the throne,
And beg to make th' immortal treaſons known.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With ſparks that ſeem'd to ſet the world on fire.
At the dread ſound, pale mortals ſtood aghaſt,
And ſtartled nature trembled with the blaſt.
This having heard and ſeen, ſome power unknown [the throne,
Straight chang'd the ſcene, and ſnatch'd me from

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 356. Then came the ſmalleſt, &c.]
I ſaw anone the fifth route,
That to this lady gan loute,
And downe on knees anone to fall,
And to her they beſoughten all,
To hiden their good works eke.
And ſaid, they yeve not a leke
For no fame ne ſuch renowne;
For they for contemplacyoune,
And Goddes love had it wrought,
Ne of fame would they ought.
What, quoth ſhe, and be ye wood?
And ween ye for to do good,
And for to have it of no fame?
Have ye deſpite to have my name?
Nay ye ſhall lien everichone:
Blow thy trump, and that anone
(Quoth ſhe) thou Eolus, I hote,
And ring theſe folks works by rote,
That all the world may of it heare;
And he gan blow their loos ſo cleare,

IMITATIONS.

In his golden clarioune,
Through the world went the ſonne,
All ſo kindly, and eke ſo ſoft,
That ther fame was blown aloft.
Ver. 406. Laſt, thoſe who boaſt of mighty, &c.]
Tho came another companye,
That had y-done the treachery, &c.
Ver. 418. This having heard and ſeen. &c.]
The ſcene here changes from the Temple of Fame, to that of Rumour, which is almoſt entirely Chaucer's. The particulars follow.
Tho ſaw I ſtonde in a valey,
Under the caſtle faſt by
A houſe, that Domus Dedali
That Labyrinthus cleped is,
Nas made ſo wonderly I wis,
Ne half ſo queintly y-wrought!
And evermo as ſwift as thought,
This queint houſe about went,
That never more it ſtill ſtent—
And eke this houſe hath of entrees,
As many as leaves are on trees

Before my view appear'd a ſtructure fair,
Its ſite uncertain, if in earth or air;
With rapid motion turn'd the manſion round;
With ceaſeleſs noiſe the ringing walls reſound:
Not leſs in number were the ſpacious doors,
Than leaves on trees, or ſands upon the ſhores;
Which ſtill unfolded ſtand, by night, by day,
Pervious to winds, and open every way.
As flames by nature to the ſkies aſcend,
As weighty bodies to the centre tend,
As to the ſea returning rivers roll,
And the touch'd needle trembles to the pole;
Hither as to their proper place, ariſe
All various ſounds from earth, and ſeas, and ſkies,
Or ſpoke aloud, or whiſper'd in the ear;
Nor ever ſilence, reſt, or peace, is here.
As on the ſmooth expanſe of cryſtal lakes
The ſinking ſtone at firſt a circle makes;
The trembling ſurface, by the motion ſtirr'd,
Spreads in a ſecond circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the watery plain, and to the margin dance:
Thus every voice and ſound, when firſt they break,
On neighbouring air a ſoft impreſſion make;
Another ambient circle then they move;
That, in its turn, impels the next above;
Through undulating air the ſounds are ſent,
And ſpread o'er all the fluid element.
There various news I heard of love and ſtrife,
Of peace and war, health, ſickneſs, death, and life,
Of loſs and gain, of famine and of ſtore,
Of ſtorms at ſea, and travels on the ſhore,
Of prodigies, and portents ſeen in air,
Of fires and plagues, and ſtars with blazing hair,
Of turns of fortune, changes in the ſtate,
The falls of favourites, projects of the great,
Of old miſmanagements, taxations new:
All neither wholly falſe, nor wholly true.

IMITATIONS.

In ſummer, when they ben grene;
And in the roof yet men may ſene
A thouſand hoels and well mo
To letten the ſoune out-go;
And by day in every tide,
Ben all the doors open wide,
And by night each one unſhet;
No porter is there one to let,
No manner tydings in to pace:
Ne never reſt is in that place.

Ver. 448. There various news I heard, &c.]
Of werres, of peace, of marriages,
Of reſt, of labour, of voyages,
Of abode, of dethe, and of life,
Of love and hate, accord and ſtrife,
Of loſs, of lore, and of winnings,
Of hele, of ſickneſs, and leſſings,
Of divers tranſmutations,
Of eſtates and eke of regions,
Of truſt, of dred, of jealouſy,
Of wit, of winning, and of folly,
Of good, or bad government,
Of fire, and of divers accident.

Above, below, without, within, around,
Confus'd, unnumber'd multitudes are found,
Who paſs, repaſs, advance, and glide away;
Hoſts rais'd by fear, and phantoms of a day:
Aſtrologers, that future fates foreſhew,
Projectors, quacks, and lawyers not a few;
And prieſts, and party zealots, numerous bands
With home-born lies, or tales from foreign lands:
Each talk'd aloud, or in ſome ſecret place,
And wild impatience ſtar'd in every face.
The flying rumours gather'd as they roll'd,
Scarce any tale was ſooner heard than told;
And all who told it added ſomething new,
And all who heard it made enlargements too,
In every ear it ſpread, on every tongue it grew,
Thus flying eaſt and weſt, and north and ſouth,
News travell'd with increaſe from mouth to mouth.
So from a ſpark, that kindled firſt by chance,
With gathering force the quickening flames advance;
Till to the clouds their curling heads aſpire,
And towers and temples ſink in floods of fire.
When thus ripe lies are to perfection ſprung,
Full grown, and fit to grace a mortal tongue,
Through thouſand vents, impatient, forth they flow,
And ruſh in millions on the world below,
Fame ſits aloft, and points them out their courſe,
Their date determines, and preſcribes their force:
Some to remain, and ſome to periſh ſoon;
Or wane and wax alternate like the moon.
Around, a thouſand winged wonders fly,
Borne by the trumpet's blaſt, and ſcatter'd through the ſky.
There, at one paſſage, oft you might ſurvey
A lie and truth contending for the way;

IMITATIONS.

Ver. 458. Above, below, without, within, &c.]
But ſuch a grete congregation
Of folke as I ſaw roame about,
Some within, and ſome without,
Was never ſeen, ne ſhall be eft—
And every wight that I ſaw there
Rowned everich in others ear
A new tyding privily,
Or elſe he told it openly
Right thus, and ſaid, Knowſt not thou
That is betide to-night now?
No, quoth he, tell me what?
And then he told him this and that, &c.
——Thus north and ſouth
Went every tyding from mouth to mouth.
And that encreaſing evermo,
As fire is wont to quicken and go
From a ſparkle ſprong amiſs,
Till all the citee brent up is.

Ver. 489. There, at one paſſage, &c.]
And ſometime I ſaw there at once,
A leiſing and a ſad ſooth ſaw
That gonnen at adventure draw
Out of a window forth to pace—
And no man, be he ever ſo wrothe,
Shall have one of theſe two, but bothe, &c.

And long 'twas doubtful, both so closely pent,
Which first should issue through the narrow vent:
At last agreed, together out they fly,
Inseparable now, the truth and lie;
The strict companions are for ever join'd,
And this or that unmix'd, no mortal e'er shall find.
While thus I stood, intent to see and hear,
One came, methought, and whisper'd in my ear:
What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?
Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise? 500
'Tis true, said I, not void of hopes I came,
For who so fond as youthful bards of fame!
But few, alas! the casual blessing boast,
So hard to gain, so easy to be lost.
How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,
(Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!)
The great man's curse, without the gains, endure,
Be envy'd, wretched, and be flatter'd, poor; 510
All luckless wits their enemies profest,
And all successful, jealous friends at best.
Nor Fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
She comes unlook'd-for, if she comes at all.
But if the purchase costs so dear a price
As soothing folly, or exalting vice:
Oh! if the muse must flatter lawless sway,
And follow still where fortune leads the way;
Or if no basis bear my rising name,
But the sall'n ruins of another's fame; 520
Then, teach me, heaven! to scorn the guilty bays,
Drive from my breast that wretched lust of praise;
Unblemish'd let me live, or die unknown:
Oh, grant an honest fame, or grant me none!

JANUARY AND MAY:

OR,

THE MERCHANT'S TALE.

FROM CHAUCER.

THERE liv'd in Lombardy, as authors write,
In days of old, a wise and worthy knight;
Of gentle manners, as of generous race,
Blest with much sense, more riches, and some grace;
Yet, led astray by Venus' soft delights,
He scarce could rule some idle appetites:
For long ago, let priests say what they could,
Weak sinful laymen were but flesh and blood.
But in due time, when sixty years were o'er,
He vow'd to lead this vicious life no more:
Whether pure holiness inspir'd him forth to wed,
Or dotage turn'd his brain, is hard to find;
But his high courage prick'd him forth to wed,
And try the pleasures of a lawful bed.
This was his nightly dream, his daily care,
And to the heavenly powers his constant prayer,
Once ere he dy'd, to taste the blissful life
Of a kind husband and a loving wife.

These thoughts he fortify'd with reasons still;
(For none want reasons to confirm their will).
Grave authors say, and witty poets sing,
That honest wedlock is a glorious thing:
But depth of judgment most in him appears,
Who wisely weds in his maturer years.
Then let him choose a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir;
To soothe his cares, and, free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life.
Let sinful bachelors their woes deplore,
Full well they merit all they feel, and more:
Unaw'd by precepts human or divine,
Like birds and beasts promiscuously they join:
Nor know to make the present blessing last,
To hope the future, or esteem the past:
But vainly boast the joys they never try'd,
And find divulg'd the secrets they would hide.
The marry'd man may bear his yoke with ease,
Secure at once himself and heaven to please;
And pass his inoffensive hours away,
In bliss all night, and innocence all day: [mains,
Though fortune change, his constant spouse re-
Augments his joys, or mitigates his pains.
But what so pure, which envious tongues will spare?
Some wicked wits have libell'd all the fair.
With matchless impudence they style a wife
The dear-bought curse, and lawful plague of life;
A bosom-serpent, a domestic evil,
A night invasion, and a mid-day devil.
Let not the wise these slanderous words regard,
But curse the bones of every lying bard.
All other goods by fortune's hand are given,
A wife is the peculiar gift of heaven.
Vain fortune's favours, never at a stay,
Like empty shadows, pass, and glide away;
One solid comfort, our eternal wife,
Abundantly supplies us all our life:
This blessing lasts (if those who try say true)
As long as heart can wish—and longer too.
Our grandsire Adam, ere of Eve possess'd,
Alone, and ev'n in paradise unbless'd,
With mournful looks the blissful scenes survey'd,
And wander'd in the solitary shade:
The Maker saw, took pity, and bestow'd
Woman, the last, the best reserv'd of God.
A wife! ah, gentle deities, can he
That has a wife, e'er feel adversity?
Would men but follow what the sex advise,
All things would prosper, all the world grow wise.
'Twas by Rebecca's aid that Jacob won
His father's blessing from an elder son:
Abusive Nabal ow'd his forfeit life
To the wise conduct of a prudent wife:
Heroic Judith, as old Hebrews shew,
Preserv'd the Jews, and slew th' Assyrian foe:
At Hester's suit, the persecuting sword
Was sheath'd, and Israel liv'd to bless the Lord.
These weighty motives, January the sage
Maturely ponder'd in his riper age;
And, charm'd with virtuous joys and sober life,
Would try that Christian comfort, call'd a wife.
His friends were summon'd on a point so nice,
To pass their judgment, and to give advice;

But fix'd before, and well reſolv'd was he;
(As men that aſk advice are wont to be).
My friends, he cry'd (and caſt a mournful look Around the room, and ſigh'd before he ſpoke);
Beneath the weight of threeſcore years I bend,
And worn with cares, and haſtening to my end;
How I have liv'd, alas! you know too well,
In worldly follies, which I bluſh to tell;
But gracious heaven has ope'd my eyes at laſt,
With due regret I view my vices paſt,
And, as the precept of the church decrees,
Will take a wife, and live in holy eaſe.
But, ſince by counſel all things ſhould be done,
And many heads are wiſer ſtill than one;
Chooſe you for me, who beſt ſhall be content
When my deſire's approv'd by your conſent.
One caution yet is needful to be told,
To guide your choice; this wife muſt not be old:
There goes a ſaying, and 'twas ſhrewdly ſaid,
Old fiſh at table, but young fleſh in bed.
My ſoul abhors the taſteleſs, dry embrace
Of a ſtale virgin with a winter face:
In that cold ſeaſon love but treats his gueſt
With bean-ſtraw, and tough forage at the beſt.
No crafty widows ſhall approach my bed;
Thoſe are too wiſe for bachelors to wed;
As ſubtle clerks by many ſchools are made,
Twice marry'd dames are miſtreſſes o' th' trade:
But young and tender virgins, rul'd with eaſe,
We form like wax, and mould them as we pleaſe.
Conceive me, Sirs, nor take my ſenſe amiſs;
'Tis what concerns my ſoul's eternal bliſs:
Since if I found no pleaſure in my ſpouſe,
As fleſh is frail, and who (God help me) knows?
Then ſhould I live in lewd adultery,
And ſink downright to Satan when I die.
Or were I curs'd with an unfruitful bed,
The righteous end were loſt, for which I wed;
To raiſe up ſeed to bleſs the powers above,
And not for pleaſure only, or for love
Think not I doat; 'tis time to take a wife,
When vigorous blood forbids a chaſter life;
Thoſe that are bleſt with ſtore of grace divine,
May live like ſaints, by heaven's conſent and mine.
And ſince I ſpeak of wedlock, let me ſay,
(As, thank my ſtars, in modeſt truth I may)
My limbs are active, ſtill I'm ſound at heart,
And a new vigour ſprings in every part.
Think not my virtue loſt, though time has ſhed
Theſe reverend honours on my head;
Thus trees are crown'd with bloſſoms white as ſnow,
The vital ſap then riſing from below:
Old as I am, my luſty limbs appear
Like winter greens, that flouriſh all the year.
Now, Sirs, you know to what I ſtand inclin'd,
Let every friend with freedom ſpeak his mind.
He ſaid; the reſt in different parts divide;
The knotty point was urg'd on either ſide:
Marriage, the theme on which they all declaim'd,
Some prais'd with wit, and ſome with reaſon blam'd;
Till, what with proofs, objections, and replies,
Each wondrous poſitive, and wondrous wiſe,
There fell between his brothers a debate,
Placebo this was call'd, and Juſtin that.

Firſt to the knight Placebo thus begun
(Mild were his looks, and pleaſing was his tone):
Such prudence, Sir, in all your words appears,
As plainly proves experience dwells with years!
Yet you purſue ſage Solomon's advice,
To work by counſel when affairs are nice:
But, with the wiſe man's leave, I muſt proteſt,
So may my ſoul arrive at eaſe and reſt
As ſtill I hold your own advice the beſt.
Sir, I have liv'd a courtier all my days,
And ſtudy'd men, their manners, and their ways;
And have obſerv'd this uſeful maxim ſtill,
To let my betters always have their will.
Nay, if my lord affirm'd that black was white,
My word was this, Your honour's in the right.
Th' aſſuming wit, who deems himſelf ſo wiſe,
As his miſtaken patron to adviſe,
Let him not dare to vent his dangerous thought,
A noble fool was never in a fault.
This, Sir, affects not you, whoſe every word
Is weigh'd with judgment, and befits a lord:
Your will is mine; and is (I will maintain)
Pleaſing to God, and ſhould he ſo to man!
At leaſt, your courage all the world muſt praiſe,
Who dare to wed in your declining days.
Indulge the vigour of your mounting blood,
And let grey fools be indolently good,
Who, paſt all pleaſure, damn the joys of ſenſe,
With reverend dulneſs, and grave impotence.
Juſtin, who ſilent ſat, and heard the man,
Thus, with a philoſophic frown, began.
A heathen author of the firſt degree,
(Who, though not faith, had ſenſe as well as we)
Bids us be certain our concerns to truſt
To thoſe of generous principles and juſt.
The venture's greater, I'll preſume to ſay,
To give your perſon, than your goods away;
And therefore, Sir, as you regard your reſt,
Firſt learn your lady's qualities at leaſt:
Whether ſhe's chaſte or rampant, proud or civil,
Meek as a ſaint, or haughty as the devil;
Whether an eaſy, fond, familiar fool,
Or ſuch a wit as no man e'er can rule.
'Tis true, perfection none muſt hope to find
In all this world, much leſs in womankind;
But if her virtues prove the larger ſhare,
Bleſs the kind fates, and think your fortune rare.
Ah, gentle Sir, take warning of a friend,
Who knows too well the ſtate you thus commend;
And, ſpite of all his praiſes, muſt declare,
All he can find is bondage, coſt, and care.
Heaven knows, I ſhed full many a private tear,
And ſigh in ſilence, leſt the world ſhould hear!
While all my friends applaud my bliſsful life,
And ſwear no mortal's happier in a wife;
Demure and chaſte as any veſtal nun,
The meekeſt creature that beholds the ſun!
But, by th' immortal powers, I feel the pain,
And he that ſmarts has reaſon to complain.
Do what ye liſt, for me; you muſt be ſage,
And cautious ſure; for wiſdom is in age:
But at theſe years, to venture on the fair;
By him who made the ocean, earth, and air,
To pleaſe a wife, when her occaſions call,
Would buſy the moſt vigorous of us all

And truſt me, Sir, the chaſteſt you can chooſe
Will aſk obſervance, and exact her dues.
If what I ſpeak my noble lord offend,
My tedious ſermon here is at an end.
'Tis well, 'tis wond'rous well, the knight replies,
Moſt worthy kinſman, faith you're mighty wiſe!
We, Sirs, are fools, and muſt reſign the cauſe
To heatheniſh authors, proverbs, and old ſaws.
He ſpoke with ſcorn, and turn'd another way:—
What does my friend, my dear Placebo ſay?
I ſay, quoth he, by heaven the man's to blame,
To ſlander wives, and wedlock's holy name.
At this the council roſe, without delay;
Each, in his own opinion, went his way;
With full conſent, that, all diſputes appeas'd,
The knight ſhould marry, when and where he pleas'd.
Who now but January exults with joy?
The charms of wedlock all his ſoul employ;
Each nymph by turns his wavering mind poſſeſt,
And reign'd the ſhort-liv'd tyrant of his breaſt;
While fancy pict'ur'd every lively part,
And each bright image wander'd o'er his heart.
Thus, in ſome public forum fix'd on high,
A mirror ſhews the figures moving by;
Still one by one, in ſwift ſucceſſion, paſs
The gliding ſhadows o'er the poliſh'd glaſs.
This lady's charms the niceſt could not blame.
But vile ſuſpicions had aſpers'd her fame;
That was with ſenſe, but not with virtue bleſt;
And one had grace that wanted all the reſt.
Thus doubting long what nymph he ſhould obey,
He fix'd at laſt upon the youthful May.
Her faults he knew not, Love is always blind,
But every charm revolv'd within his mind:
Her tender age, her form divinely fair,
Her eaſy motion, her attractive air,
Her ſweet behaviour, her enchanting face,
Her moving ſoftneſs, and majeſtic grace.
Much in his prudence did our knight rejoice,
And thought no mortal could diſpute his choice:
Once more in haſte he ſummon'd every friend,
And told them all, their pains were at an end.
Heaven, that (ſaid he) inſpir'd me firſt to wed,
Provides a conſort worthy of my bed:
Let none oppoſe th' election, ſince on this
Depends my quiet, and my future bliſs.
A dame there is, the darling of my eyes,
Young, beauteous, artleſs, innocent, and wiſe;
Chaſte, though not rich; and, though not nobly born,
Of honeſt parents, and may ſerve my turn.
Her will I wed, if gracious Heaven ſo pleaſe,
To paſs my age in ſanctity and eaſe;
And thank the powers, I may poſſeſs alone
The lovely prize, and ſhare my bliſs with none!
If you, my friends, this virgin can procure,
My joys are full, my happineſs is ſure.
One only doubt remains: Full oft I've heard,
By caſuiſts grave, and deep divines averr'd,
That 'tis too much for human race to know
The bliſs of heaven above, and earth below.
Now ſhould the nuptial pleaſures prove ſo great,
To match the bleſſings of the future ſtate,
Thoſe endleſs joys were ill-exchang'd for theſe;
Then clear this doubt, and ſet my mind at eaſe.
This Juſtin heard, nor could his ſpleen controul,
Touch'd to the quick, and tickled at the ſoul.
Sir Knight, he cry'd, if this be all you dread,
Heaven put it paſt your doubt, whene'er you wed;
And to my fervent prayers ſo far conſent,
That, ere the rites are o'er, you may repent!
Good Heaven, no doubt, the nuptial ſtate approves,
Since it chaſtiſes ſtill what beſt it loves.
Then be not, Sir, abandon'd to deſpair;
Seek, and perhaps you'll find among the fair.
One that may do your buſineſs to a hair;
Not ev'n in wiſh, your happineſs delay,
But prove the ſcourge to laſh you on your way:
Then to the ſkies your mounting ſoul ſhall go,
Swift as an arrow ſoaring from the bow!
Provided ſtill you moderate your joy,
Nor in your pleaſures all your might employ,
Let reaſon's rule your ſtrong deſires abate,
Nor pleaſe too laviſhly your gentle mate.
Old wives there are, of judgment moſt acute,
Who ſolve thoſe queſtions beyond all diſpute;
Conſult with thoſe, and be of better cheer;
Marry, do penance, and diſmiſs your fear.
So ſaid, they roſe, nor more the work delay'd;
The match was offer'd, the propoſals made.
The parents, you may think, would ſoon comply,
The old have intereſt ever in their eye.
Nor was it hard to move the lady's mind;
When fortune favours, ſtill the fair are kind.
I paſs each previous ſettlement and deed,
Too long for me to write, or you to read;
Nor will with quaint impertinence diſplay
The pomp, the pageantry, the proud array.
The time approach'd, to church the parties went,
At once with carnal and devout intent:
Forth came the prieſt, and bade th' obedient wife
Like Sarah or Rebecca lead her life;
Then pray'd the powers the fruitful bed to bleſs,
And made all ſure enough with holineſs.
And now the palace gates are open'd wide,
The gueſts appear in order, ſide by ſide,
And plac'd in ſtate the bridegroom and the bride,
The breathing flute's ſoft notes are heard around,
And the ſhrill trumpets mix their ſilver ſound;
The vaulted roofs with echoing muſic ring,
Theſe touch the vocal ſtops, and thoſe the trembling ſtring,
Not thus Amphion tun'd the warbling lyre,
Nor Joab the ſounding clarion could inſpire,
Nor fierce Theodamas, whoſe ſprightly ſtrain
Could ſwell the ſoul to rage, and fire the martial train.
Bacchus himſelf, the nuptial feaſt to grace,
(So poets ſing) was preſent on the place:
And lovely Venus, goddeſs of delight,
Shook high her flaming torch in open ſight,
And danc'd around, and ſmil'd on every knight,
Pleas'd her beſt ſervant would his courage try,
No leſs in wedlock, than in liberty.
Full many an age old Hymen had not ſpy'd
So kind a bridegroom, or ſo bright a bride.
Ye bards! renown'd among the tuneful throng
For gentle lays, and joyous nuptial ſong;

Think not your ſofteſt numbers can diſplay
The matchleſs glories of this bliſsful day:
The joys are ſuch, as far tranſcend your rage,
When tender youth has wedded ſtooping age.
The beauteous dame ſat ſmiling at the board,
And darted amorous glances at her lord.
Not Heſter's ſelf, whoſe charms the Hebrews ſing,
E'er look'd ſo lovely on her Perſian king:
Bright as the riſing ſun in ſummer's day,
And freſh and blooming as the month of May!
The joyful knight ſurvey'd her by his ſide,
Nor envy'd Paris with the Spartan bride:
Still as his mind revolv'd with vaſt delight
Th' entrancing raptures of th' approaching night
Reſtleſs he ſat, invoking every power
To ſpeed his bliſs, and haſte the happy hour.
Meantime the vigorous dancers beat the ground,
And ſongs were ſung, and flowing bowls went round.
With odorous ſpices they perfum'd the place,
And mirth and pleaſure ſhone in every face.
Damian alone, of all the menial train,
Sad in the midſt of triumphs, ſigh'd for pain;
Damian alone, the Knight's obſequious Squire,
Conſum'd at heart, and fed a ſecret fire.
His lovely miſtreſs all his ſoul poſſeſs'd;
He look'd, he languiſh'd, and could take no reſt:
His taſk perform'd, he ſadly went his way,
Fell on his bed, and loth'd the light of day.
There let him lie, till his relenting dame
Weep in her turn, and waſte in equal flame.
The weary ſun, as learned poets write,
Forſook th' horizon, and roll'd down the light;
While glittering ſtars his abſent beams ſupply,
And night's dark mantle overſpread the ſky.
Then roſe the gueſts; and, as the time requir'd,
Each paid his thanks, and decently retir'd.
The foe once gone, our knight prepar'd t' undreſs'd,
So keen he was, and eager to poſſeſs:
But firſt thought fit th' aſſiſtance to receive,
Which grave phyſicians ſcruple not to give;
Satyrion near, with hot Eringos ſtood,
Cantharides, to fire the lazy blood,
Whoſe uſe old bards deſcribe in luſcious rhymes,
And critics learn'd explain to modern times.
By this the ſheets were ſpread, the bride undreſs'd,
The room was ſprinkled, and the bed was bleſs'd.
What next enſued beſeems me not to ſay;
'Tis ſung, he labour'd till the dawning day,
Then briſkly ſprung from bed, with heart ſo light,
As all were nothing he had done by night;
And ſipp'd his cordial as he ſat upright.
He kiſs'd his balmy ſpouſe with wanton play,
And feebly ſung a luſty roundely:
Then on the couch his weary limbs he caſt;
For every labour muſt have reſt at laſt.
But anxious cares the penſive Squire oppreſs'd,
Sleep fled his eyes, and peace forſook his breaſt:
The raging flames that in his boſom dwell,
He wanted art to hide, and means to tell;
Yet hoping time th' occaſion might betray,
Compos'd a ſonnet to the lovely May;
Which, writ and folded with the niceſt art,
He wrapp'd in ſilk, and laid upon his heart.

When now the fourth revolving day was run,
('Twas June, and Cancer had receiv'd the ſun)
Forth from her chamber came the beauteous bride:
The good old Knight mov'd ſlowly by her ſide.
High maſs was ſung; they feaſted in the hall;
The ſervants round ſtood ready at their call.
The Squire alone was abſent from the board,
And much his ſickneſs griev'd his worthy lord.
Who pray'd his ſpouſe, attended with her train,
To viſit Damian, and divert his pain.
Th' obliging dames obey'd with one conſent;
They left the hall, and to his lodging went.
The female tribe ſurround him as he lay,
And cloſe beſide him ſat the gentle May:
Where, as ſhe try'd his pulſe, he ſoftly drew
A heaving ſigh, and caſt a mournful view!
Then gave his bill, and brib'd the powers divine,
With ſecret vows, to favour his deſign.
Who ſtudies now but diſcontented May?
On her ſoft couch uneaſily ſhe lay:
The lumpiſh huſband ſnor'd away the night,
Till coughs awak'd him near the morning light.
What then he did, I'll not preſume to tell,
Nor if ſhe thought herſelf in heaven or hell:
Honeſt and dull in nuptial bed they lay,
Till the bell toll'd, and all aroſe to pray.
Were it by forceful deſtiny decreed,
Or did from chance, or nature's power proceed;
Or that ſome ſtar, with aſpect kind to love,
Shed its ſelected influence from above;
Whatever was the cauſe, the tender dame
Felt the firſt motions of an infant flame;
Receiv'd th' impreſſions of the love-ſick Squire,
And waſted in the ſoft infectious fire.
Ye fair, draw near, let May's example move
Your gentle minds to pity thoſe who love!
Had ſome fierce tyrant in her ſtead been found,
The poor adorer ſure had hang'd, or drown'd:
But ſhe, your ſex's mirror, free from pride,
Was much too meek to prove a homicide.
But to my tale: Some ſages have defin'd
Pleaſure the ſovereign bliſs of human kind:
Our knight (who ſtudy'd much, we may ſuppoſe)
Deriv'd his high philoſophy from thoſe:
For, like a prince, he bore the vaſt expence
Of laviſh pomp, and proud magnificence:
His houſe was ſtately, his retinue gay;
Large was his train, and gorgeous his array.
His ſpacious garden, made to yield to none,
Was compaſs'd round with walls of ſolid ſtone;
Priapus could not half deſcribe the grace
(Though god of gardens) of this charming place;
A place to tire the rumbling wits of France
In long deſcriptions, and exceed romance;
Enough to ſhame the gentleſt bard that ſings
Of painted meadows, and of purling ſprings.
Full in the centre of the flowery ground,
A cryſtal fountain ſpread its ſtreams around,
The fruitful banks with verdant laurels crown'd:
About this ſpring (if ancient fame ſay true)
The dapper elves their moon-light ſports purſue:
Their pigmy king, and little fairy queen,
In circling dances gambol'd on the green,
While tuneful ſprites a merry concert made,
And airy muſic warbled through the ſhade.

Hither the noble knight would oft repair,
(His scene of pleasure, and peculiar care)
For this he held it dear. and always bore
The silver key that lock'd the garden-door.
To this sweet place, in summer's sultry heat,
He us'd from noise and business to retreat;
And here in dalliance spend the live-long day,
" Solus cum sola," with his sprightly May:
For whate'er work was undischarg'd a-bed,
The duteous knight in this fair garden sped.

But, ah! what mortal lives of bliss secure?
How short a space our worldly joys endure!
O Fortune, fair, like all thy treacherous kind,
But faithless still, and wavering as the wind!
O painted monster, form'd mankind to cheat
With pleasing poison, and with soft deceit!
This rich, this amorous venerable knight,
Amidst his ease, his solace and delight,
Struck blind by thee, resigns his days to grief,
And calls on death, the wretch's last relief.

The rage of jealousy then seiz'd his mind,
For much he fear'd the faith of woman-kind.
His wife, not suffer'd from his side to stray,
Was captive kept, he watch'd her night and day,
Abridg'd her pleasures, and confin'd her sway.
Full oft in tears did hapless May complain,
And sigh'd full oft; but sigh'd and wept in vain:
She look'd on Damian with a lover's eye;
For, oh, 'twas fix'd, she must possess or die!
Nor less impatience vex'd her amorous Squire,
Wild with delay, and burning with desire.
Watch'd as she was, yet could he not refrain
By secret writing to disclose his pain:
The dame by signs reveal'd her kind intent,
Till both were conscious what each other meant.

Ah, gentle knight, what could thy eyes avail,
Though they could see as far as ships can sail?
'Tis better, sure, when blind, deceiv'd to be,
Than be deluded when a man can see!

Argus himself, so cautious and so wise,
Was over-watch'd, for all his hundred eyes;
So many an honest husband may, 'tis known,
Who, wisely, never thinks the case his own.

The dame at last, by diligence and care,
Procur'd the key her knight was wont to bear;
She took the wards in wax before the fire,
And gave th' impression to the trusty Squire.
By means of this, some wonder shall appear,
Which, in due place and season, you may hear.

Well sung sweet Ovid, in the days of yore,
What slight is that, which love will not explore?
And Pyramus and Thisbe plainly show
The feats true lovers, when they list, can do:
Though watch'd and captive, yet in spite of all,
They found the art of kissing through a wall.

But now no longer from our tale to stray;
It happ'd, that once upon a summer's day,
Our reverend knight was urg'd to amorous play;
He rais'd his spouse ere Matin bell was rung,
And thus his morning canticle he sung.

Awake, my love, disclose thy radiant eyes;
Arise, my wife, my beauteous lady, rise!
Hear how the doves with pensive notes complain,
And in soft murmurs tell the trees their pain:
The winter's past; the clouds and tempests fly;
The sun adorns the fields, and brightens all the sky.
Fair without spot, whose every charming part
My bosom wounds, and captivates my heart;
Come, and in mutual pleasure let's engage,
Joy of my life, and comfort of my age.

This heard, to Damian straight a sign she made,
To haste before; the gentle Squire obey'd:
Secret, and undescry'd, he took his way,
And ambush'd close behind an arbour lay.

It was not long ere January came;
And hand in hand with him his lovely dame;
Blind as he was, not doubting all was sure,
He turn'd the key, and made the gate secure.

Here let us walk, he said, observ'd by none,
Conscious of pleasures to the world unknown:
So may my soul have joy, as thou, my wife,
Art far the dearest solace of my life;
And rather would I choose, by Heaven above,
To die this instant, than to lose thy love.
Reflect what truth was in my passion shown,
When unendow'd I took thee for my own,
And sought no treasure but thy heart alone.
Old as I am, and now depriv'd of sight,
Whilst thou art faithful to thy own true knight,
Nor age nor blindness rob me of delight.
Each other loss with patience I can bear,
The loss of thee is what I only fear.

Consider then, my lady, and my wife,
The solid comforts of a virtuous life.
As, first, the love of Christ himself you gain;
Next, your own honour undefil'd maintain;
And lastly, that which sure your mind must move,
My whole estate shall gratify your love:
Make your own terms, and e'er to-morrow's sun
Displays his light, by Heaven, it shall be done.
I seal the contract with a holy kiss,
And will perform, by this—my dear, and this—
Have comfort, spouse, nor think thy Lord unkind;
'Tis love, not jealousy, that fires my mind.
For when thy charms my sober thoughts engage,
And join'd to them my own unequal age,
From thy dear side I have no power to part,
Such secret transports warm my melting heart.
For who, that once possess'd those heavenly charms,
Could live one moment absent from thy arms?

He ceas'd, and May with modest grace reply'd
(Weak was her voice, as while she spoke she cry'd):
Heaven knows (with that a tender sigh she drew)
I have a soul to save as well as you;
And, what no less you to my charge commend,
My dearest honour, will to death defend.
To you in holy church I gave my hand,
And join'd my heart in wedlock's sacred band:
Yet, after this, if you distrust my care,
Then hear, my lord, and witness what I swear.

First, may the yawning earth her bosom rend,
And let me hence to hell alive descend;
Or die the death I dread no less than hell,
Sew'd in a sack, and plung'd into a well;
Ere I my fame by one lewd act disgrace,
Or once renounce the honour of my race:
For know, Sir Knight, of gentle blood I came;
I lothe a whore, and startle at the name.

But jealous men on their own crimes reflect,
And learn from hence their ladies to ſuſpect:
Elſe why theſe needleſs cautions, Sir, to me?
Theſe doubts and fears of female conſtancy!
This chime ſtill rings in every lady's ear,
The only ſtrain a wife muſt hope to hear.

Thus while ſhe ſpoke, a ſidelong glance ſhe caſt,
Where Damian, kneeling, worſhipp'd as ſhe paſt.
She ſaw him watch the motions of her eye,
And ſingled out a pear-tree planted nigh:
'Twas charg'd with fruit that made a goodly ſhow,
And hung with dangling pears was every bough.
Thither th' obſequious Squire addreſs'd his pace,
And, climbing, in the ſummit took his place;
The knight and lady walk'd beneath in view,
Where let us leave them, and our tale purſue.

'Twas now the ſeaſon when the glorious ſun
His heavenly progreſs through the twins had run;
And Jove, exalted, his mild influence yields,
To glad the glebe, and paint the flowery fields.
Clear was the day, and Phœbus, riſing bright,
Had ſtreak'd the azure firmament with light;
He pierc'd the glittering clouds with golden ſtreams,
And warm'd the womb of earth with genial beams.
It ſo befel, in that fair morning-tide,
The fairies ſported on the garden ſide,
And in the midſt their monarch and his bride.
So featly tripp'd the light-foot ladies round,
The knights ſo nimbly o'er the greenſward bound,
That ſcarce they bent the flowers, or touch'd the ground.
The dances ended, all the fairy train
For pinks and daiſies ſearch'd the flowery plain;
While, on a bank reclin'd of riſing green,
Thus, with a frown, the king beſpoke his queen.

'Tis too apparent, argue what you can,
The treachery you women uſe to man:
A thouſand authors have this truth made out,
And ſad experience leaves no room for doubt.
Heaven reſt thy ſpirit, noble Solomon,
A wiſer monarch never ſaw the ſun;
All wealth, all honours, the ſupreme degree
Of earthly bliſs, was well beſtow'd on thee!
For ſagely haſt thou ſaid: Of all mankind,
One only juſt and righteous hope to find:
But ſhouldſt thou ſearch the ſpacious world around,
Yet one good woman is not to be found.

Thus ſays the king, who knew your wickedneſs:
The ſon of Sirach teſtifies no leſs.
So may ſome wildfire on your bodies fall,
Or ſome devouring plague conſume you all.
As well you view the lecher in the tree,
And well this honourable knight you ſee:
But ſince he's blind and old (a helpleſs caſe),
His Squire ſhall cuckold him before your face.
Now, by my own dread majeſty I ſwear,
And by this awful ſceptre which I bear,
No impious wretch ſhall 'ſcape unpuniſh'd long,
That in my preſence offers ſuch a wrong.
I will this inſtant undeceive the knight,
And in the very act reſtore his ſight;
And ſet the ſtrumpet here in open view,
A warning to theſe ladies, and to you,
And all the faithleſs ſex, for ever to be true.

And will you ſo, reply'd the queen, indeed?
Now, by my mother's ſoul it is decreed,
She ſhall not want an anſwer at her need.
For her, and for her daughters, I'll engage,
And all the ſex in each ſucceeding age!
Art ſhall be theirs, to varniſh an offence,
And fortify their crime with confidence.
Nay, were they taken in a ſtrict embrace,
Seen with both eyes, and pinion'd on the place;
All they ſhall need is to proteſt and ſwear,
Breathe a ſoft ſigh, and drop a tender tear;
Till their wiſe huſbands, gull'd by arts like theſe,
Grow gentle, tractable, and tame as geeſe.

What though this ſlanderous Jew, this Solomon,
Call'd women fools, and knew full many a one;
The wiſer wits of later times declare,
How conſtant, chaſte, and virtuous, women are:
Witneſs the martyrs, who reſign'd their breath,
Serene in torments, unconcern'd in death;
And witneſs next what Roman authors tell,
How Arria, Portia, and Lucretia fell.

But, ſince the ſacred leaves to all are free,
And men interpret texts, why ſhould not we?
By this no more was meant, than to have ſhown,
That ſovereign goodneſs dwells in him alone
Who only is, and is but only One.
But grant the worſt; ſhall women then be weigh'd
By every word, that Solomon has ſaid?
What though this king (as ancient ſtory boaſts)
Built a fair temple to the Lord of Hoſts;
He ceas'd at laſt his Maker to adore,
And did as much for idol gods, or more.
Beware what laviſh praiſes you confer
On a rank lecher and idolater;
Whoſe reign, indulgent God, ſays holy writ,
Did but for David's righteous ſake permit;
David, the monarch after heaven's own mind,
Who lov'd our ſex, and honour'd all our kind.

Well, I'm a woman, and as ſuch muſt ſpeak;
Silence would ſwell me, and my heart would break.
Know then, I ſcorn your dull authorities,
Your idle wits, and all their learned lies.
By heaven, thoſe authors are our ſex's foes,
Whom, in our right, I muſt and will oppoſe.

Nay (quoth the king) dear madam, be not wroth:
I yield it up; but ſince I gave my oath,
That this much-injur'd knight again ſhould ſee,
It muſt be done—I am a king, ſaid he,
And one, whoſe faith has ever ſacred been.
And ſo has mine (ſhe ſaid)—I am a queen:
Her anſwer ſhe ſhall have, I undertake;
And thus an end of all diſpute I make.
Try when you liſt; and you ſhall find, my lord,
It is not in our ſex to break our word.

We leave them here in this heroic ſtrain,
And to the knight our ſtory turns again;
Who in the garden, with his lovely May,
Sung merrier than the cuckoo or the jay:
This was his ſong; "Oh kind and conſtant be,
"Conſtant and kind I'll ever prove to thee."
Thus ſinging as he went, at laſt he drew
By eaſy ſteps, to where the pear-tree grew:
The longing dame look'd up, and ſpy'd her love
Full fairly perch'd among the boughs above.

She ſtopp'd, and ſighing: Oh good gods! ſhe cry'd,
What pangs, what ſudden ſhoots, diſtend my ſide!
Of for that tempting fruit, ſo freſh, ſo green;
Help, for the love of heaven's immortal Queen!
Help, deareſt lord, and ſave at once the life
Of thy poor infant, and thy longing wife!
Sore ſigh'd the knight to hear his lady's cry,
But could not climb, and had no ſervant nigh:
Old as he was and void of eye-ſight too,
What could, alas! a helpleſs huſband do?
And muſt I languiſh then, ſhe ſaid, and die,
Yet view the lovely fruit before my eye?
At leaſt, kind Sir, for charity's ſweet ſake,
Vouchſafe the trunk between your arms to take;
Then from your back I might aſcend the tree;
Do you but ſtoop, and leave the reſt to me.
With all my ſoul, he thus reply'd again,
I'd ſpend my deareſt blood to eaſe thy pain.
With that, his back againſt the trunk he bent,
She ſeiz'd a twig, and up the tree ſhe went.
Now prove your patience, gentle ladies all!
Nor let on me your heavy anger fall:
'Tis truth I tell, though not in phraſe refin'd;
Though blunt my tale, yet honeſt is my mind.
What feats the lady in the tree might do,
I paſs, as gambols never known to you;
But ſure it was a merrier fit, ſhe ſwore,
Than in her life ſhe ever felt before.
In that nice moment, lo! the wondering knight
Look'd out, and ſtood reſtor'd to ſudden ſight.
Straight on the tree his eager eyes he bent,
As one whoſe thoughts were on his ſpouſe intent;
But when he ſaw his boſom-wife ſo dreſs'd,
His rage was ſuch as cannot be expreſs'd;
Not frantic mothers when their infants die,
With louder clamours rend the vaulted ſky:
He cry'd, he roar'd, he ſtorm'd, he tore his hair;
Death! hell! and furies! what doſt thou do there?
What ails my lord? the trembling dame reply'd;
I thought your patience had been better try'd:
Is this your love, ungrateful and unkind,
This my reward for having cur'd the blind?
Why was I taught to make my huſband ſee,
By ſtruggling with a man upon a tree?
Did I for this the power of magic prove?
Unhappy wife, whoſe crime was too much love!
If this be ſtruggling, by this holy light,
'Tis ſtruggling with a vengeance (quoth the knight):
So Heaven preſerve the ſight it has reſtor'd;
As with theſe eyes I plainly ſaw thee whor'd;
Whor'd by my ſlave—perfidious wretch! may hell
As ſurely ſeize thee, as I ſaw too well!
Guard me, good angels! cry'd the gentle May,
Pray heaven, this magic work the proper way!
Alas, my love! 'tis certain, could you ſee,
You ne'er had us'd theſe killing words to me:
So help me, fates, as 'tis no perfect ſight,
But ſome faint glimmering of a doubtful light.
What I have ſaid (quoth he) I muſt maintain,
For by th' immortal powers it ſeem'd too plain—
By all thoſe powers, ſome frenzy ſeiz'd your mind
(Reply'd the dame): are theſe the thanks I find?
Wretch that I am, that e'er I was ſo kind!
She ſaid; a riſing ſigh expreſs'd her woe,
The ready tears apace began to flow,
And, as they fell, ſhe wip'd from either eye
The drops (for women, when they liſt, can cry).
The knight was touch'd, and in his looks appear'd
Signs of remorſe, while thus his ſpouſe he cheer'd:
Madam, 'tis paſt, and my ſhort anger o'er;
Come down, and vex your tender heart no more:
Excuſe me, dear, if aught amiſs was ſaid,
For, on my ſoul, amends ſhall ſoon be made:
Let my repentance your forgiveneſs draw,
By heaven, I ſwore but what I thought I ſaw.
Ah, my lov'd lord! 'twas much unkind (ſhe cry'd)
On bare ſuſpicion thus to treat your bride.
But, till your ſight's eſtabliſh'd, for a while,
Imperfect objects may your ſenſe beguile.
Thus when from ſleep we firſt our eyes diſplay,
The balls are wounded with the piercing ray,
And duſky vapours riſe, and intercept the day.
So, juſt recovering from the ſhades of night,
Your ſwimming eyes are drunk with ſudden light, [your ſight:
Strange phantoms dance around, and ſkim before
Then, Sir, be cautious, nor too raſhly deem;
Heaven knows how ſeldom things are what they ſeem!
Conſult your reaſon, and you ſoon ſhall find
'Twas you were jealous, not your wife unkind:
Jove ne'er ſpoke oracle more true than this,
None judge ſo wrong as thoſe who think amiſs.
With that ſhe leap'd into her lord's embrace,
With well-diſſembled virtue in her face.
He hugg'd her cloſe, and kiſs'd her o'er and o'er,
Diſturb'd with doubts and jealouſies no more:
Both, pleas'd and bleſs'd, renew'd their mutual vows,
A fruitful wife, and a believing ſpouſe.
Thus ends our tale; whoſe moral next to make,
Let all wiſe huſbands hence example take;
And pray, to crown the pleaſure of their lives,
To be ſo well deluded by their wives.

THE WIFE OF BATH,

HER PROLOGUE.

FROM CHAUCER.

Behold the woes of matrimonial life,
And hear with reverence an experienc'd wife!
To dear-bought wiſdom give the credit due,
And think, for once, a woman tells you true.
In all theſe trials I have borne a part,
I was myſelf the ſcourge that caus'd the ſmart;
For, ſince fifteen, in triumph have I led
Five captive huſbands from the church to bed.
Chriſt ſaw a wedding once, the ſcripture ſays,
And ſaw but one, 'tis thought, in all his days;

Whence some infer, whose conscience is too nice,
No pious Christian ought to marry twice.
But let them read, and solve me, if they can,
The words address'd to the Samaritan:
Five times in lawful wedlock she was join'd;
And sure the certain stint was ne'er defin'd.
"Increase and multiply," was heaven's command,
And that 's a text I clearly understand.
This too, "Let men their sires and mothers leave,
And to their dearer wives for ever cleave."
More wives than one by Solomon were try'd,
Or else the wisest of mankind's bely'd.
I 've had myself full many a merry fit;
And trust in heaven, I may have many yet,
For when my transitory spouse, unkind,
Shall die, and leave his woeful wife behind,
I 'll take the next good Christian I can find.

Paul, knowing one could never serve our turn,
Declar'd 'twas better far to wed than burn.
There 's danger in assembling fire and tow;
I grant them that, and what it means you know.
The same apostle too has elsewhere own'd,
No precept for virginity he found:
'Tis but a counsel—and we women still
Take which we like, the counsel, or our will.

I envy not their bliss, if he or she
Think fit to live in perfect chastity;
Pure let them be, and free from taint of vice;
I, for a few slight spots, am not so nice.
Heaven calls us different ways, on these bestows
One proper gift, another grants to those:
Not every man 's obliged to sell his store,
And give up all his substance to the poor;
Such as are perfect may, I can't deny;
But, by your leaves, divines, so am not I.

Full many a saint, since first the world began,
Liv'd an unspotted maid, in spite of man:
Let such (a-God's name) with fine wheat be fed,
And let us honest wives eat barley bread.
For me, I'll keep the post assign'd by heaven,
And use the copious talent it has given:
Let my good spouse pay tribute, do me right,
And keep an equal reckoning every night.
His proper body is not his, but mine;
For so said Paul, and Paul 's a sound divine.

Know then, of those five husbands I have had,
Three were just tolerable, two were bad.
The three were old, but rich and fond beside,
And toil'd most piteously to please their bride:
But since their wealth (the best they had) was mine,
The rest, without much loss, I could resign.
Sure to be lov'd, I took no pains to please,
Yet had more pleasure far than they had ease.
Presents flow'd in apace: with showers of gold,
They made their court, like Jupiter of old.
If I but smil'd, a sudden youth they found,
And a new palsy seiz'd them when I frown'd.

Ye sovereign wives! give ear and understand,
Thus shall ye speak, and exercise command.
For never was it given to mortal man,
To lie so boldly as we women can:
Forswear the fact, though seen with both his eyes,
And call your maids to witness how he lies.

Hark, old Sir Paul! ('twas thus I us'd to say)
Whence is our neighbour's wife so rich and gay?
Treated, caress'd, where'er she 's pleas'd to roam—
I sit in tatters, and immur'd at home.
Why to her house dost thou so oft repair?
Art thou so amorous? and is she so fair?
If I but see a cousin or a friend,
Lord! how you swell, and rage like any fiend!
But you reel home, a drunken beastly bear,
Then preach till midnight in your easy chair;
Cry, wives are false, and every woman evil,
And give up all that 's female to the devil.

If poor (you say) she drains her husband's purse;
If rich, she keeps her priest, or something worse;
If highly born, intolerably vain,
Vapours and pride by turns possess her brain,
Now gayly mad, now sourly splenetic;
Freakish when well, and fretful when she 's sick.
If fair, then chaste she cannot long abide,
By pressing youth attack'd on every side;
If foul, her wealth the lusty lover lures,
Or else her wit some fool-gallant procures,
Or else she dances with becoming grace,
Or shape excuses the defects of face.
There swims no goose so grey, but, soon or late,
She finds some honest gander for her mate.

Horses (thou say'st) and asses men may try,
And ring suspected vessels ere they buy:
But wives, a random choice, untry'd they take;
They dream in courtship, but in wedlock wake:
Then, nor till then, the veil 's removed away,
And all the woman glares in open day.

You tell me, to preserve your wife's good grace,
Your eyes must always languish on my face,
Your tongue with constant flatteries feed my ear,
And tag each sentence with, My life! my dear!
If, by strange chance, a modest blush he rais'd,
Be sure my fine complexion must be prais'd.
My garments always must be new and gay,
And feasts still kept upon my wedding day.
Then must my nurse be pleas'd, and favourite maid;
And endless treats, and endless visits paid,
To a long train of kindred, friends, allies.
All this thou say'st, and all thou say'st are lies.

On Jenkin too you cast a squinting eye:
What! can your 'prentice raise your jealousy?
Fresh are his ruddy cheeks, his forehead fair,
And like the burnish'd gold his curling hair.
But clear thy wrinkled brow, and quit thy sorrow,
I 'd scorn your 'prentice, should you die to-morrow.

Why are thy chests all lock'd? on what design?
Are not thy worldly goods and treasure mine?
Sir, I 'm no fool; nor shall you, by St. John,
Have goods and body to yourself alone.
One you shall quit, in spite of both your eyes—
I heed not, I, the bolts, and locks and spies.
If you had wit, you 'd say, "Go where you will,
"Dear spouse, I credit not the tales they tell:
"Take all the freedoms of a married life;
"I know thee for a virtuous, faithful wife."
Lord! when you have enough, what need you care
How merrily soever others fare?

Though all the day I give and take delight,
Doubt not, sufficient will be left at night.
'Tis but a just and rational desire,
To light a taper at a neighbour's fire.
There 's danger too, you think, in rich array,
And none can long be modest that are gay.
The cat, if you but singe her tabby skin,
The chimney keeps, and sits content within;
But once grown sleek, will from her corner run,
Sport with her tail, and wanton in the sun;
She licks her fair round face, and frisks abroad,
To shew her fur, and to be catterwaw'd.
Lo thus, my friends, I wrought to my desires
These three right ancient venerable fires.
I told them, thus you say, and thus you do,
And told them false, but Jenkin swore 'twas true.
I, like a dog, could bite as well as whine,
And first complain'd, whene'er the guilt was mine.
I tax'd them oft with wenching and amours.
When their weak legs scarce dragg'd them out of doors;
And swore the rambles that I took by night,
Were all to spy what damsels they bedight.
That colour brought me many hours of mirth;
For all this wit is given us from our birth.
Heaven gave to women the peculiar grace,
To spin, to weep, and cully human race.
By this nice conduct, and this prudent course,
By murmuring, wheedling, stratagem, and force,
I still prevail'd, and would be in the right,
Or curtain-lectures made a restless night.
If once my husband's arm was o'er my side,
What! so familiar with your spouse? I cry'd:
I levied first a tax upon his need:
Then let him—'twas a nicety indeed!
Let all mankind this certain maxim hold,
Marry who will, our sex is to be sold.
With empty hands no tassels you can lure,
But sulsome love for gain we can endure;
For gold we love the impotent and old,
And heave, and pant, and kiss, and cling, for gold,
Yet with embraces, curses oft I mix'd,
Then kiss'd again, and chid, and rail'd betwixt.
Well, I may make my will in peace, and die.
For not one word in man's arrears am I.
To drop a dear dispute I was unable,
Ev'n though the Pope himself had sat at table.
But when my point was gain'd, then thus I spoke:
"Billy, my dear, how sheepishly you look!
"Approach, my spouse, and let me kiss thy cheek;
"Thou shouldst be always thus, resign'd and meek!
"Of Job's great patience since so oft you preach,
"Well should you practise, who so well can teach,
"'Tis difficult to do, I must allow,
"But I, my dearest, will instruct you how.
"Great is the blessing of a prudent wife,
"Who puts a period to domestic strife.
"One of us two must rule, and one obey;
"And since in man right reason bears the sway,
"Let that frail thing, weak woman, have her way.
"The wives of all my family have rul'd
"Their tender husbands, and their passions cool'd.
"Fy, 'tis unmanly thus to sigh and groan;
"What! would you have me to yourself alone?
"Why take me, love! take all and every part!
"Here 's your revenge! you love it at your heart.
"Would I vouchsafe to sell what nature gave,
"You little think what custom I could have,
"But see! I 'm all your own—nay hold—for shame;
"What means my dear—indeed—you are to blame."
Thus with my first three lords I past my life;
A very woman, and a very wife.
What sums from these old spouses I could raise,
Procur'd young husbands in my riper days.
Though past my bloom, not yet decay'd was I,
Wanton and wild, and chatter'd like a pie.
In country dances still I bore the bell,
And sung as sweet as evening Philomel.
To clear my quailpipe, and refresh my soul,
Full oft I drain'd the spicy nut brown bowl;
Rich luscious wines, that youthful blood improve,
And warm the swelling veins to feats of love:
For 'tis as sure, as cold engenders hail,
A liquorish mouth must have a lecherous tail
Wine lets no lover unrewarded go,
As all true gamesters by experience know.
But oh, good gods! whene'er a thought I cast
On all the joys of youth and beauty past,
To find in pleasures I have had my part,
Still warms me to the bottom of my heart.
This wicked world was once my dear delight;
Now all my conquests, all my charms, good night!
The flour consum'd the best that now I can,
Is e'n to make my market of the bran.
My fourth dear spouse was not exceeding true;
He kept, 'twas thought, a private miss or two;
But all that score I paid—as how? you'll say,
Not with my body, in a filthy way:
But I so dress'd, and danc'd, and drank, and din'd,
And view'd a friend with eyes so very kind,
As stung his heart, and made his marrow fry
With burning rage, and frantic jealousy.
His soul, I hope, enjoys eternal glory,
For here on earth I was his purgatory.
Oft, when his shoe the most severely wrung,
He put on careless airs, and sat and sung.
How sore I gall'd him, only heaven could know,
And he that felt, and I that caus'd the woe.
He dy'd, when last from pilgrimage I came,
With other gossips, from Jerusalem;
And now lies buried underneath a rood,
Fair to be seen, and rear'd of honest wood:
A tomb indeed, with fewer sculptures grac'd
Than that Mausolus' pious widow plac'd,
Or where inshrin'd the great Darius lay;
But cost on graves is merely thrown away.
The pit fill'd up, with turf we cover'd o'er;
So blest the good man's soul, I say no more.
Now for my fifth lov'd lord, the last and best;
(Kind heaven afford him everlasting rest!)
Full hearty was his love, and I can show
The tokens on my ribs in black and blue;
Yet, with a knack, my heart he could have won,
While yet the smart was shooting in the bone.
How quaint an appetite in women reigns!
Free gifts we scorn, and love what costs us pains;

Let men avoid us, and on them we leap;
A glutted market makes provision cheap.
In pure good will I took this jovial spark,
Of Oxford he, a most egregious clerk.
He boarded with a widow in the town,
A trusty gossip, one dame Allison.
Full well the secrets of my soul she knew,
Better than e'er our parish-priest could do.
To her I told whatever could befall:
Had but my husband piss'd against a wall,
Or done a thing that might have cost his life,
She—and my niece—and one more worthy wife,
Had known it all: what most he would conceal,
To these I made no scruple to reveal.
Oft has he blush'd from ear to ear for shame,
That e'er he told a secret to his dame.
It so befel, in holy time of Lent,
That oft a day I to this gossip went
(My husband, thank my stars, was out of town);
From house to house we rambled up and down,
This clerk, myself, and my good neighbour Alse,
To see, be seen, to tell, and gather tales.
Visits to every church we daily paid,
And march'd in every holy masquerade,
The stations duly and the vigils kept;
Not much we fasted, but scarce ever slept.
At sermons too I shone in scarlet gay;
The wasting moths ne'er spoil'd my best array;
The cause was this, I wore it every day.
'Twas when fresh May her early blossom yields,
This clerk and I were walking in the fields,
We grew so intimate, I can't tell how,
I pawn'd my honour, and engag'd my vow,
If e'er I laid my husband in his urn,
That he, and only he, should serve my turn.
We straight struck hands, the bargain was agreed;
I still have shifts against a time of need:
The mouse that always trusts to one poor hole,
Can never be a mouse of any soul.
I vow'd, I scarce could sleep since first I knew him,
And durst be sworn he had bewitch'd me to him;
If e'er I slept, I dream'd of him alone,
And dreams foretel, as learned men have shown.
All this I said; but dreams, firs, I had none:
I follow'd but my crafty crony's lore,
Who bid me tell this lie—and twenty more.
Thus day by day, and month by month we past;
It pleas'd the Lord to take my spouse at last.
I tore my gown, I soil'd my locks with dust,
And beat my breasts, as wretched widows—must.
Before my face my handkerchief I spread,
To hide the flood of tears I did—not shed.
The good man's coffin to the church was borne;
Around, the neighbours, and my clerk too, mourn.
But as he march'd, good gods! he show'd a pair
Of legs and feet, so clean, so strong, so fair!
Of twenty winters age he seem'd to be;
I (to say truth) was twenty more than he;
But vigorous still, a lively buxom dame;
And had a wonderous gift to quench a flame.
A conjuror once, that deeply could divine,
Assur'd me, Mars in Taurus was my sign.
As the stars order'd, such my life has been:
Alas, alas, that ever love was sin!
Fair Venus gave me fire and sprightly grace,
And Mars assurance and a dauntless face.
By virtue of this powerful constellation,
I follow'd always my own inclination.
But to my tale: A month scarce pass'd away,
With dance and song we kept the nuptial day.
All I possess'd I gave to his command,
My goods and chattels, money, house, and land:
But oft repented, and repent it still;
He prov'd a rebel to my soverign will:
Nay once, by heaven, he struck me on the face;
Hear but the fact, and judge yourselves the case.
Stubborn as any lioness was I;
And knew full well to raise my voice on high;
As true a rambler as I was before,
And would be so, in spite of all he swore.
He against this right sagely would advise,
And old examples set before my eyes,
Tell how the Roman matrons led their life,
Of Gracchus' mother, and Duilius' wife;
And close the sermon, as beseem'd his wit,
With some grave sentence out of holy writ.
Oft would he say, who builds his house on sands,
Pricks his blind horse across the fallow lands;
Or lets his wife abroad with pilgrims roam,
Deserves a fool's cap, and long ears at home.
All this avail'd not; for whoe'er he be
That tells my faults, I hate him mortally;
And so do numbers more, I boldly say,
Men, women, clergy, regular, and lay.
My spouse (who was, you know, to learning bred)
A certain treatise oft at evening read,
Where divers authors (whom the devil confound
For all their lies), were in one volume bound.
Valerius, whole: and of St. Jerome, part;
Chrysippus and Tertullian, Ovid's art,
Solomon's Proverbs, Eloisa's loves;
And many more than sure the church approves.
More legends were there here of wicked wives,
Than good in all the Bible and saints lives.
Who drew the lion vanquish'd? 'Twas a man.
But could we women write as scholars can,
Men should stand mark'd with far more wicked-nes,
Than all the sons of Adam could redress.
Love seldom haunts the breast where learning lies,
And Venus sets e'er Mercury can rise.
Those play the scholars, who can't play the men,
And use that weapon which they have, their pen;
When old, and past the relish of delight,
Then down they sit, and in their dotage write,
That not one woman keeps her marriage vow.
(This by the way, but to my purpose now).
It chanc'd my husband, on a winters night,
Read in his book, aloud, with strange delight,
How the first female (as the Scriptures show)
Brought her own spouse, and all his race, to woe.
How Samson fell; and he whom Dejanire
Wrapp'd in th' envenom'd shirt, and set on fire.
How curs'd Eryphile her lord betray'd,
And the dire ambush Clytemnestra laid.
But what most pleas'd him was the Cretan dame,
And husband-bull—oh, monstrous! fie for shame!
He had by heart the whole detail of woe
Xantippe made her good man undergo;

How oft she scolded in a day, he knew,
How many piss-pots on the sage she threw;
Who took it patiently, and wip'd his head:
"Rain follows thunder," that was all he said.
He read, how Arius to his friend complain'd,
A fatal tree was growing in his land,
On which three wives successively had twin'd
A sliding noose, and waver'd in the wind.
Where grows this plant (reply'd the friend), oh, where?
For better fruit did never orchard bear.
Give me some slip of this most blissful tree,
And in my garden planted shall it be. [prove,
Then how two wives their lords' destruction
Through hatred one, and one through too much love;
That for her husband mix'd a poisonous draught,
And this for lust an amorous philtre bought:
The nimble juice soon seiz'd his giddy head,
Frantic at night, and in the morning dead.
How some with swords their sleeping lords have slain,
And some have hammer'd nails into their brain,
And some have drench'd them with a deadly potion;
All this he read, and read with great devotion.
Long time I heard, and swell'd, and blush'd, and frown'd:
But when no end of these vile tales I found,
When still he read, and laugh'd, and read again,
And half the night was thus consum'd in vain;
Provok'd to vengeance, three large leaves I tore,
And with one buffet fell'd him on the floor.
With that my husband in a fury rose,
And down he settled me with hearty blows.
I groan'd, and lay extended on my side;
Oh! thou hast slain me for my wealth (I cry'd),
Yet I forgive thee—take my last embrace—
He wept, kind soul! and stoop'd to kiss my face,
I took him such a box as turn'd him blue,
Then sigh'd and cry'd, adieu, my dear, adieu!
But after many a hearty struggle past,
I condescended to be pleas'd at last.
Soon as he said, my mistress and my wife,
Do what you list, the term of all your life;
I took to heart the merits of the cause,
And stood content to rule by wholesome laws;
Receiv'd the reins of absolute command,
With all the government of house and land,
And empire o'er his tongue, and o'er his hand.
As for the volume that revil'd the dames,
'Twas torn to fragments, and condemn'd to flames.
Now heaven on all my husbands gone bestow
Pleasures above, for tortures felt below:
That rest they wish'd for, grant them in the grave,
And bless those souls my conduct help'd to save!

THE FIRST BOOK OF

STATIUS HIS THEBAIS.

Translated in the Year 1703.

THE ARGUMENT.

Oedipus King of Thebes, having by mistake slain his father Laïus, and married his mother Jocasta, put out his own eyes, and resigned the realm to his sons, Eteocles and Polynices. Being neglected by them, he makes his prayer to the fury Tisiphone, to sow debate betwixt the brothers. They agree at last to reign singly, each a year by turns, and the first lot is obtained by Eteocles. Jupiter, in a council of the gods, declares his resolution of punishing the Thebans, and Argives also, by means of a marriage betwixt Polynices and one of the daughters of Adrastus King of Argos. Juno opposes, but to no effect; and Mercury is sent on a message to the Shades, to the ghost of Laïus, who is to appear to Eteocles, and provoke him to break the agreement. Polynices in the mean time departs from Thebes by night, is overtaken by a storm, and arrives at Argos; where he meets with Tydeus, who had fled from Calydon, having killed his brother. Adrastus entertains them, having received an oracle from Apollo, that his daughters should be married to a boar and a lion, which he understands to be meant of these strangers, by whom the hides of those beasts were worn, and who arrived at the time when he kept an annual feast in honour of that god. The rise of this solemnity he relates to his guests, the loves of Phœbus and Psamathe, and the story of Chorœbus. He inquires, and is made acquainted with their descent and quality. The sacrifice is renewed, and the book concludes with a hymn to Apollo.

[The translator hopes he need not apologise for his choice of this piece, which was made almost in his childhood; but, finding the version better than he expected, he gave it some correction a few years afterwards.]

Fraternal rage, the guilty Thebes alarms,
The alternate reign destroy'd by impious arms,
Demand our song; a sacred fury fires
My ravish'd breast, and all the muse inspires.
O, goddess, say, shall I deduce my rhymes
From the dire nation in its early times,
Europa's rape, Angenor's stern decree,
And Cadmus searching round the spacious sea?
How with the serpent's teeth he sow'd the soil,
And reap'd an iron harvest of his toil?
Or how from joining stones the city sprung,
While to his harp divine Amphion sung?
Or shall I Juno's hate to Thebes resound,
Whose fatal rage th' unhappy monarch found?
The fire against the son his arrows drew,
O'er the wide fields the furious mother flew,
And while her arms a second hope contain,
Sprung from the rocks, and plung'd into the main.
But wave whate'er to Cadmus may belong,
And fix, O, muse! the barrier of thy song
At Oedipus—from his disasters trace
The long confusions of his guilty race:
Nor yet attempt to stretch thy bolder wing,
And mighty Cæsar's conquering eagles sing;
How twice he tam'd proud Ister's rapid flood,
While Dacian mountains stream'd with barbarous blood;
Twice taught the Rhine beneath his laws to roll,
And stretch'd his empire to the frozen pole;

Or long before, with early valour, ſtrove
In youthful arms t' aſſert the cauſe of Jove.
And thou, great heir of all thy father's fame,
Increaſe of glory to the Latin name!
O, bleſs thy Rome with an eternal reign,
Nor let deſiring worlds entreat in vain.
What though the ſtars contract their heavenly ſpace,
And crowd their ſhining ranks to yield thee place;
Though all the ſkies, ambitious of thy ſway,
Conſpire to court thee from our world away;
Though Phœbus longs to mix his rays with thine,
And in thy glories more ſerenely ſhine;
Though Jove himſelf no leſs content would be
To part his throne, and ſhare his heaven with thee;
Yet ſtay, great Cæſar! and vouchſafe to reign
O'er the wide earth, and o'er the watery main;
Reſign to Jove his empire of the ſkies,
And people heaven with Roman deities.
The time will come, when a diviner flame
Shall warm my breaſt to ſing of Cæſar's fame:
Meanwhile permit, that my preluding muſe
In Theban wars an humbler theme may chooſe:
Of furious hate ſurviving death, ſhe ſings,
A fatal throne to two contending kings,
And funeral flames, that parting wide in air
Expreſs the diſcord of the ſouls they bear:
Of towns diſpeopled, and the wandering ghoſts
Of kings unbury'd in the waſted coaſts;
When Dirce's fountain bluſh'd with Grecian blood,
And Thetis, near Iſmenos' ſwelling flood,
With dread beheld the rolling ſurges ſweep,
In heaps, his ſlaughter'd ſons into the deep.
What hero, Clio! wilt thou firſt relate?
The rage of Tydeus, or the prophet's fate?
Or how, with hills of ſlain on every ſide,
Hippomedon repell'd the hoſtile tide?
Or how the youth, with every grace adorn'd,
Untimely fell, to be for ever mourn'd?
Then to fierce Capaneus thy verſe extend,
And ſing with horror his prodigious end.
Now wretched Oedipus, depriv'd of ſight,
Led a long death in everlaſting night;
But, while he dwells where not a cheerful ray
Can pierce the darkneſs, and abhors the day,
The clear reflecting mind preſents his ſin
In frightful views, and makes it day within;
Returning thoughts in endleſs circles roll,
And thouſand furies haunt his guilty ſoul;
The wretch then lifted to th' unpitying ſkies
Thoſe empty orbs from whence he tore his eyes,
Whoſe wounds, yet freſh, with bloody hands he ſtrook,
While from his breaſt theſe dreadful accents broke:
Ye gods! that o'er the gloomy regions reign,
Where guilty ſpirits feel eternal pain;
Thou, fable Styx! whoſe livid ſtreams are roll'd
Through dreary coaſts, which I, though blind, behold:
Tiſiphone, that oft has heard my prayer,
Aſſiſt, if Oedipus deſerve thy care!
If you receiv'd me from Jocaſta's womb,
And nurs'd the hope of miſchiefs yet to come:
If leaving Polybus, I took my way
To Cyrrha's temple, on that fatal day,
When by the ſon the trembling father dy'd,
Where the three roads the Phocian fields divide:
If I the Sphynx's riddles durſt explain,
Taught by thyſelf to win the promis'd reign:
If wretched I, by baleful furies led,
With monſtrous mixture ſtain'd my mother's bed,
For hell and thee begot an impious brood,
And with full luſt thoſe horrid joys renew'd;
Then ſelf-condemn'd to ſhades of endleſs night,
Forc'd from theſe orbs the bleeding balls of ſight:
O, hear, and aid the vengeance I require,
If worthy thee, and what thou mighteſt inſpire!
My ſons their old unhappy ſire deſpiſe,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes;
Guideleſs I wander, unregarded mourn,
While theſe exalt their ſceptres o'er my urn;
Theſe ſons, ye gods! who, with flagitious pride,
Inſult my darkneſs, and my groans deride.
Art thou a father, unregarding Jove?
And ſleeps thy thunder in the realms above?
Thou fury, then, ſome laſting curſe entail,
Which o'er their children's children ſhall prevail:
Place on their heads that crown diſtain'd with gore,
Which thoſe dire hands from my ſlain father tore;
Go, and a parent's heavy curſes bear;
Break all the bonds of nature, and prepare
Their kindred ſouls to mutual hate and war.
Give them to dare, what I might wiſh to ſee,
Blind as I am, ſome glorious villany!
Soon ſhalt thou find, if thou but arm their hands,
Their ready guilt preventing thy commands:
Could'ſt thou ſome great, proportion'd miſchief frame,
They'd prove the father from whoſe loins they came.
The Fury heard, while on Cocytus' brink
Her ſnakes unty'd ſulphureous waters drink;
But at the ſummons roll'd her eyes around,
And ſnatch'd the ſtarting ſerpents from the ground.
Not half ſo ſwiftly ſhoots along in air
The gliding lightning, or deſcending ſtar.
Through crowds of airy ſhades ſhe wing'd her flight,
And dark dominions of the ſilent night;
Swift as ſhe paſs'd, the flitting ghoſts withdrew,
And the pale ſpectres trembled at her view:
To th' iron gates of Tænarus ſhe flies,
There ſpreads her duſky pinions to the ſkies.
The day beheld, and, ſickening at the ſight,
Veil'd her fair glories in the ſhades of night.
Affrighted Atlas, on the diſtant ſhore,
Trembled, and ſhook the heavens and gods he bore.
Now from beneath Malea's airy height
Aloft ſhe ſprung, and ſteer'd to Thebes her flight;
With eager ſpeed the well-known journey took,
Nor here regrets the hell ſhe late forſook.
A hundred ſnakes her gloomy viſage ſhade,
A hundred ſerpents guard her horrid head,
In her ſunk eye-balls dreadful meteors glow:
Such rays from Phœbe's bloody circles flow,
When, labouring with ſtrong charms, ſhe ſhoots from high
A fiery gleam, and reddens all the ſky.
Blood ſtain'd her cheeks, and from her mouth there came
Blue ſteaming poiſons, and a length of flame.

From every blaſt of her contagious breath,
Famine and drought proceed, and plagues, and death.
A robe obſcene was o'er her ſhoulders thrown,
A dreſs by fates and furies worn alone.
She toſs'd her meagre arms; her better hand
In waving circles whirl'd a funeral brand:
A ſerpent from her left was ſeen to rear
His flaming creſt, and laſh the yielding air.
But when the Fury took her ſtand on high,
Where vaſt Cithæron's top ſalutes the ſky,
A hiſs from all the ſnaky tire went round;
The dreadful ſignal all the rocks rebound,
And through th' Achaian cities ſend the ſound.
Oete, with high Parnaſſus, heard the voice;
Eurotas' banks remurmur'd to the noiſe;
Again Leucothoë ſhook at theſe alarms,
And preſs'd Palæmon cloſer in her arms.
Headlong from thence the glowing Fury ſprings,
And o'er the Theban palace ſpreads her wings,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and ſhrouds
Its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds.
Straight with the rage of all their race poſſeſs'd,
Stung to the ſoul, the brothers ſtart from reſt,
And all their furies wake within their breaſt.
Their tortur'd minds repining Envy tears,
And Hate, engender'd by ſuſpicious fears;
And ſacred thirſt of ſway; and all the ties
Of nature broke; and royal perjuries;
And impotent Deſire to reign alone,
That ſcorns the dull reverſion of a throne;
Each would the ſweets of ſovereign rule devour,
While Diſcord waits upon divided power.
As ſtubborn ſteers by brawny ploughmen broke,
And join'd reluctant to the galling yoke,
Alike diſdain with ſervile necks to bear
Th' unwonted weight, or drag the crooked ſhare,
But rend the reins, and bound a different way,
And all the furrows in confuſion lay;
Such was the diſcord of the royal pair,
Whom fury drove precipitate to war.
In vain the chiefs contriv'd a ſpecious way,
To govern Thebes by their alternate ſway:
Unjuſt decree! while this enjoys the ſtate,
That mourns in exile his unequal fate,
And the ſhort monarch of a haſty year
Foreſees with anguiſh his returning heir.
Thus did the league their impious arms reſtrain,
But ſcarce ſubſiſted to the ſecond reign.
Yet then, no proud aſpiring piles were rais'd,
No fretted roofs with poliſh'd metals blaz'd;
No labour'd columns in long order plac'd,
No Grecian ſtone the pompous arches grac'd;
No nightly bands in glittering armour wait
Before the ſleepleſs tyrant's guarded gate;
No chargers then were wrought in burniſh'd gold.
Nor ſilver vaſes took the forming mould;
Nor gems on bowls emboſs'd were ſeen to ſhine,
Blaze on the brims, and ſparkle in the wine—
Say, wretched rivals! what provokes your rage?
Say, to what end your impious arms engage?
Not all bright Phœbus views in early morn,
Or when his evening beams the weſt adorn,
When the ſouth glows with his meridian ray,
And the cold north receives a fainter day;
For crimes like theſe, not all thoſe realms ſuffice,
Were all thoſe realms the guilty victor's prize!
But fortune now (the lots of empire thrown)
Decrees to proud Eteocles the crown:
What joys, oh tyrant! ſwell'd thy ſoul that day,
When all were ſlaves thou couldſt around ſurvey,
Pleas'd to behold unbounded power thy own,
And ſingly fill a fear'd and envy'd throne!
But the vile vulgar, ever diſcontent,
Their growing fears in ſecret murmurs vent;
Still prone to change, though ſtill the ſlaves of ſtate,
And ſure the monarch whom they have, to hate;
New lords they madly make, then tamely bear,
And ſoftly curſe the tyrants whom they fear.
And one of thoſe who groan beneath the ſway
Of kings impos'd, and grudgingly obey,
(Whom envy to the great and vulgar ſpite
With ſcandal arm'd, th' ignoble mind's delight)
Exclaim'd—O Thebes! for thee what fates remain
What woes attend this inauſpicious reign!
Muſt we, alas! our doubtful necks prepare,
Each haughty maſters yoke by turns to bear,
And ſtill to change whom chang'd we ſtill muſt fear?
Theſe now controul a wretched people's fate,
Theſe can divide, and theſe reverſe the ſtate:
Ev'n fortune rules no more:—O ſervile land,
Where exil'd tyrants ſtill by turns command!
Thou ſire of gods and men, imperial Jove!
Is this th' eternal doom decreed above?
On thy own offspring haſt thou fix'd this fate,
From the firſt birth of our unhappy ſtate;
When baniſh'd Cadmus, wandering o'er the main,
For loſt Europa ſearch'd the world in vain,
And, fated in Bœotion fields to found
A riſing empire on a foreign ground,
Firſt rais'd our walls on that ill-omen'd plain,
Where earth-born brothers were by brothers ſlain?
What lofty looks th' unrival'd monarch bears!
How all the tyrant in his face appears!
What ſullen fury clouds his ſcornful brow?
Gods! how his eyes with threatening ardour glow!
Can this imperious lord forget to reign,
Quit all his ſtate, deſcend, and ſerve again?
Yet who, before, more popularly bow'd,
Who more propitious to the ſuppliant crowd?
Patient of right, familiar in the throne?
What wonder then? he was not then alone.
O wretched we, a vile ſubmiſſive train,
Fortune's tame fools, and ſlaves in every reign!
As when two winds with rival force contend,
This way and that, the wavering ſails they bend,
While freezing Boreas and black Eurus blow,
Now here, now there, the reeling veſſel throw:
Thus, on each ſide, alas! our tottering ſtate
Feels all the fury of reſiſtleſs fate;
And doubtful ſtill, and ſtill diſtracted ſtands,
While that prince threatens, and while this com-
And now th' almighty father of the gods [mands.
Convenes a council in the bleſt abodes:
Far in the bright receſſes of the ſkies,
High o'er the rolling heavens, a manſion lies,
Whence, far below, the gods at once ſurvey
The realms of riſing and declining day,
And all th' extended ſpace of earth, and air, and [ſea.

Full in the midſt, and on a ſtarry throne,
The majeſty of heaven ſuperior ſhone;
Serene he look'd, and gave an awful nod,
And all the trembling ſpheres confeſs'd the God.
At Jove's aſſent, the deities around
In ſolemn ſtate the conſiſtory crown'd.
Next a long order of inferior powers
Aſcend from hills, and plains, and ſhady bowers;
Thoſe from whoſe urns the rolling rivers flow;
And thoſe that give the wandering winds to blow:
Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs ceaſe,
And ſacred ſilence reigns, and univerſal peace.
A ſhining ſynod of majeſtic gods
Gilds with new luſtre the divine abodes;
Heaven ſeems improv'd with a ſuperior ray,
And the bright arch reflects a double day.
The monarch then his ſolemn ſilence broke,
The ſtill creation liſtened while he ſpoke;
Each ſacred accent bears eternal weight.
And each irrevocable word is fate.
How long ſhall man the wrath of Heaven defy,
And force unwilling vengeance from the ſky!
Oh race confederate into crimes, that prove
Triumphant o'er th' eluded rage of Jove!
This weary arm can ſcarce the bolt ſuſtain,
And unregarded thunder rolls in vain:
Th' o'erlabour'd Cyclop from his taſk retires;
Th' Æolian forge exhauſted of its fires,
For this I ſuffer'd Phœbus' ſteeds to ſtray,
And the mad ruler to miſguide the day,
When the wide earth to heaps of aſhes turn'd,
And heaven itſelf the wandering chariot burn'd.
For this, my brother of the watery reign
Releas'd th' impetuous ſluices of the main:
But flames conſum'd, and billows rag'd in vain.
Two races now, ally'd to Jove, offend:
To puniſh theſe, ſee Jove himſelf deſcend.
The Theban kings their line from Cadmus trace,
From godlike Perſeus thoſe of Argive race.
Unhappy Cadmus' fate who does not know,
And the long ſeries of ſucceeding woe?
How oft the furies, from the deeps of night,
Aroſe, and mix'd with men in mortal fight:
Th' exulting mother, ſtain'd with filial blood;
The ſavage hunter, and the haunted wood?
The direful banquet why ſhould I proclaim,
And crimes that grieve the trembling gods to name?
Ere I recount the ſins of theſe profane,
The ſun would ſink into the weſtern main,
And riſing gild the radiant eaſt again.
Have we not ſeen (the blood of Laius ſhed)
The murderiug ſon aſcend his parent's bed,
Through violated nature force his way,
And ſtain the ſacred womb where once he lay?
Yet now in darkneſs and deſpair he groans,
And for the crimes of guilty fate atones;
His ſons with ſcorn their eyeleſs father view,
Inſult his wounds, and make them bleed anew.
Thy curſe, oh! Oedipus, juſt heaven alarms,
And ſets th' avenging thunderer in arms.
I from the root thy guilty race will tear,
And give the nations to the waſte of war.
Adraſtus ſoon, with gods averſe, ſhall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Hence ſtrife ſhall riſe, and mortal war ſucceed;
The guilty realms of Tantalus ſhall bleed:
Fix'd is their doom; this all-remembering breaſt
Yet harbours vengeance for the tyrant's feaſt.
He ſaid; and thus the queen of heaven return'd
(With ſudden grief her labouring boſom burn'd):
Muſt I, whoſe cares Phoroneus' towers defend,
Muſt I, oh Jove, in bloody wars contend?
Thou know'ſt thoſe regions my protection claim,
Glorious in arms, in riches, and in fame:
Though there the fair Ægyptian heifer fed,
And there deluded Argus ſlept, and bled;
Though there the brazen tower was ſtorm'd of old,
When Jove deſcended in almighty gold.
Yet I can pardon thoſe obſcurer rapes,
Thoſe baſhful crimes diſguis'd in borrow'd ſhapes;
But Thebes, where, ſhining in celeſtial charms,
Thou cam'ſt triumphant to a mortal's arms,
Where all my glories o'er her limbs were ſpread,
And blazing lightnings danc'd around her bed;
Curs'd Thebes the vengeance it deſerves may prove—
Ah, why ſhould Argos feel the rage of Jove?
Yet, ſince thou wilt thy ſiſter queen controul,
Since ſtill the luſt of diſcord fires thy ſoul,
Go, raze my Samos, let Mycene fall,
And level with the duſt the Spartan wall;
No more let mortals Juno's power invoke,
Her fanes no more with eaſtern incenſe ſmoke,
Nor victims ſink beneath the ſacred ſtroke;
But to your Iſis all my rights transfer,
Let altars blaze and temples ſmoke for her;
For her, through Egypt's fruitful clime renown'd,
Let weeping Nilus hear the timbrel ſound.
But if thou muſt reform the ſtubborn times,
Avenging on the ſons the father's crimes,
And from the long records of diſtant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage;
Say, from what period then has Jove deſign'd
To date his vengeance; to what bounds confin'd?
Begin from whence, where firſt Alpheus hides
His wandering ſtream, and through the briny tides
Unmix'd to his Sicilian river glides.
Thy own Arcadians there the thunder claim,
Whoſe impious rites diſgrace the mighty name;
Who raiſe thy temples where the chariot ſtood
Of fierce Oenomäus, defil'd with blood;
Where once his ſteeds their ſavage banquet found
And human bones yet whiten all the ground.
Say, can thoſe honours pleaſe? and canſt thou love
Preſumptuous Crete, that boaſts the tomb of Jove!
And ſhall not Tantalus's kingdom ſhare
Thy wife and ſiſter's tutelary care?
Reverſe, O Jove, thy too ſevere decree,
Nor doom to war a race deriv'd from thee;
On impious realms and barbarous kings impoſe
Thy plagues, and curſe them with ſuch ſons as thoſe.
Thus, in reproach and prayer, the queen expreſs'd
The rage and grief contending in her breaſt;
Unmov'd remain'd the ruler of the ſky,
And from his throne return'd this ſtern reply:

'Twas thus I deem'd thy haughty soul would bear
The dire, though just, revenge which I prepare
Against a nation thy peculiar care:
No less Dione might for Thebes contend,
Nor Bacchus less his native town defend;
Yet these in silence see the fates fulfil
Their work, and reverence our superior will.
For, by the black infernal Styx I swear,
(That dreadful oath which binds the thunderer),
'Tis fix'd; th' irrevocable doom of Jove;
No force can bend me, no persuasion move.
Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air;
Go mount the winds, and to the shades repair;
Bid hell's black monarch my commands obey,
And give up Laius to the realms of day,
Whose ghost, yet shivering on Cocytus' sand,
Expects its passage to the farther strand:
Let the pale sire revisit Thebes, and bear
These pleasing orders to the tyrant's ear;
That, from his exil'd brother, swell'd with pride
Of foreign forces, and his Argive bride,
Almighty Jove commands him to detain
The promis'd empire, and alternate reign:
Be this the cause of more than mortal hate:
The rest, succeeding times shall ripen into fate.
The god obeys, and to his feet applies
Those golden wings that cut the yielding skies.
His ample hat his beamy locks o'erspread,
And veil'd the starry glories of his head.
He seiz'd the wand that causes sleep to fly,
Or in soft slumbers seals the wakeful eye;
That drives the dead to dark Tartarian coasts,
Or back to life compels the wandering ghosts.
Thus, through the parting clouds, the son of May
Wings on the whistling winds his rapid way;
Now smoothly steers through air his equal flight,
Now springs aloft, and towers th' etherial height;
Then wheeling down the steep of heaven he flies,
And draws a radiant circle o'er the skies.
Meantime the banish'd Polynices roves
(His Thebes abandon'd) through th' Aonian groves,
While future realms his wandering thoughts delight,
His daily vision, and his dream by night;
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly,
With transport views the airy rule his own,
And swells on an imaginary throne.
Fain would he cast a tedious age away,
And live out all in one triumphant day.
He chides the lazy progress of the sun,
And bids the year with swifter motion run.
With anxious hopes his craving mind is tost,
And all his joys in length of wishes lost.
The hero then resolves his course to bend
Where ancient Danaus' fruitful fields extend,
And fam'd Mycene's lofty towers ascend,
(Where late the sun did Atreus' crimes detest,
And disappear'd in horror of the feast.)
And now, by chance, by fate, or furies led,
From Bacchus' consecrated caves he fled,
Where the shrill cries of frantic matrons sound.
And Pentheus' blood enrich'd the rising ground.
Then sees Cithæron towering o'er the plain,
And thence declining gently to the main.
Next to the bounds of Nisus' realm repairs,
Where treacherous Scylla cut the purple hairs:
The hanging cliffs of Scyron's rock explores,
And hears the murmurs of the different shores:
Passes the straight that parts the foaming seas,
And stately Corinth's pleasing site surveys.
'Twas now the time when Phœbus yields to night,
And rising Cynthia sheds her silver light,
Wide o'er the world in solemn pomp she drew
Her airy chariot hung with pearly dew;
All birds and beasts lie hush'd: sleep steals away
The wild desires of men, and toils of day,
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care.
Yet no red clouds, with golden borders gay,
Promise the skies the bright return of day;
No faint reflections of the distant light
Streak with long gleams the scattering shades of night;
From the damp earth impervious vapours rise,
Increase the darkness, and involve the skies.
At once the roaring skies with rushing sound
Burst from th' Æolian caves, and rend the ground.
With equal rage their airy quarrel try,
And win by turns the kingdom of the sky;
But with a thicker night black Auster shrouds
The heavens, and drives on heaps the rolling clouds,
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold north congeals to haily showers.
From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
And broken lightnings flash from every cloud.
Now smokes with showers the misty mountain ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round.
Th' Inachian streams with headlong fury run,
And Erisinus rolls a deluge on:
The foaming Lerna swells above its bounds,
And spreads its ancient poisons o'er the grounds:
Where late was dust, now rapid torrents play,
Rush through the mounds, and bear the dams away:
Old limbs of trees from crackling forests torn,
Are whirl'd in air, and on the winds are borne:
The storm the dark Lycæan groves display'd,
And first to light expos'd the sacred shade.
Th' intrepid Theban bears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the watery war,
That, driven by storms, and pouring o'er the plain,
Swept, herds and hinds, and houses to the main.
Through the brown horrors of the night he fled,
Nor knows, amaz'd, what doubtful path to tread;
His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet, with fears.
So fares a sailor on the stormy main,
When clouds conceal Boötes' golden wain,
When not a star its friendly lustre keeps,
Not trembling Cynthia glimmers on the deeps;
He dreads the rocks, and shoals, and seas, and skies,
While thunder roars, and lightning round him flies.
Thus strove the chief, on every side distress'd,
Thus still his courage with his toils increas'd;

With his broad ſhield oppos'd, he forc'd his way
Through thickeſt woods, and rous'd the beaſts of prey.
Till he beheld, where from Leriſſa's height
The ſhelving walls reflect a glancing light:
Thither with haſte the Theban hero flies;
On this ſide Lerna's poiſonous water lies,
On that Proſymna's grove and temple riſe:
He paſs'd the gates which then unguarded lay,
And to the regal palace bent his way;
On the cold marble, ſpent with toil, he lies,
And waits till pleaſing ſlumber ſeal his eyes.

Adraſtus here his happy people ſways,
Bleſt with calm peace in his delining days.
By both his parents of deſcent divine,
Great Jove and Phœbus grac'd his noble line:
Heaven had not crown'd his wiſhes with a ſon,
But two fair daughters heir'd his ſtate and throne.
To him Apollo (wondrous to relate!
But who can pierce into the depths of fate?)
Had ſung—"Expect thy ſons on Argos' ſhore,
"A yellow lion, and a briſtly boar"
This long reſolv'd in his paternal breaſt,
Sate heavy on his heart, and broke his reſt;
This, great Amphiaraus, lay hid from thee,
Though ſkill'd in fate, and dark futurity.
The father's care and prophet's art were vain,
For thus did the predicting god ordain.

Lo hapleſs Tydeus, whoſe ill fated hand
Had ſlain his brother, leaves his native land,
And feiz'd with horror in the ſhades of night,
Through the thick deſerts headlong urg'd his flight:
Now by the fury of the tempeſt driven,
He ſeeks a ſhelter from th' inclement heaven,
Till, led by Fate, the Theban's ſteps he treads,
And to fair Argos' open court ſucceeds.

When thus the chiefs from different lands reſort
T' Adraſtus' realms, and hoſpitable court;
The king ſurveys his gueſts with curious eyes,
And views their arms and habit with ſurpriſe.
A lion's yellow ſkin the Theban wears,
Horrid his mane, and rough with curling hairs;
Such one employ'd Alcides' youthful toils,
Ere yet adorn'd with Nemea's dreadful ſpoils.
A boar's ſtiff hide, of Calydonian breed,
Oenides' manly ſhoulders overſpread:
Oblique his tuſks, erect his briſtles ſtood;
Alive, the pride and terror of the wood.

Struck with the ſight, and fix'd in deep amaze,
The king th' accompliſh'd oracle ſurveys,
Reveres Apollo's vocal caves, and owns
The guided godhead, and his future ſons.
O'er all his boſom ſecret tranſports reign,
And a glad horror ſhoots through every vein.
To heaven he lifts his hands, erect his ſight,
And thus invokes the ſilent queen of night:

Goddeſs of ſhades, beneath whoſe gloomy reign,
Yon' ſpangled arch glows with the ſtarry train;
You who the cares of heaven and earth allay,
Till nature quicken'd by th' inſpiring ray,
Wakes to new vigour with the riſing day;
O thou who freeſt me from my doubtful ſtate,
Long loſt and wilder'd in the maze of fate!
Be preſent ſtill, oh goddeſs! in our aid;
Proceed, and firm thoſe omens thou haſt made.
We to thy name our annual rites will pay,
And on thy altars ſacrifices lay.
The ſable flock ſhall fall beneath the ſtroke,
And fill thy temples with a grateful ſmoke.
Hail, faithful Tripos! hail, ye dark abodes
Of awful Phœbus: I confeſs the gods!

Thus, feiz'd with ſacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the gueſts convey'd:
Where yet thin fumes from dying ſparks ariſe,
And duſt yet white upon each altar lies,
The relics of a former ſacrifice.
The king once more the ſolemn rites requires,
And bids renew the feaſts, and wake the fires.
His train obey, while all the courts around
With noiſy care and various tumult ſound.
Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This ſlave the floor, and that the table ſpreads;
A third diſpels the darkneſs of the night,
And fills depending lamps with beams of light;
Here loaves in caniſters are pil'd on high,
And there in flames the ſlaughter'd victims fly.
Sublime in regal ſtate Adraſtus ſhone,
Stretch'd on rich carpets on his ivory throne;
A lofty couch receives each princely gueſt;
Around at awful diſtance wait the reſt.

And now the king, his royal feaſt to grace,
Aceſtis calls, the guardian of his race,
Who firſt their youth in arts of virtue train'd,
And their ripe years in modeſt grace maintain'd;
Then ſoftly whiſper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear.
When, from the cloſe apartments of the night,
The royal nymphs approach divinely bright;
Such was Diana's, ſuch Minerva's face:
Nor ſhine their beauties with ſuperior grace,
But that in theſe a milder charm endears,
And leſs of terror in their looks appears.
As on the heroes firſt they caſt their eyes,
O'er their fair cheeks the glowing bluſhes riſe,
Their downcaſt looks a decent ſhame confeſs'd,
Then on their father's reverend features reſt.

The banquet done, the monarch gives the ſign
To fill the goblet high with ſparkling wine,
Which Danaus us'd in ſacred rites of old,
With ſculpture grac'd, and rough with riſing gold.
Here to the clouds victorious Perſeus flies,
Meduſa ſeems to move her languid eyes,
And, ev'n in gold, turns paler as ſhe dies.
There from the chaſe Jove's towering eagle bears,
On golden wings, the Phrygian to the ſtars:
Still as he riſes in th' etherial height,
His native mountains leſſen to his ſight;
While all his ſad companions upward gaze,
Fix'd on the glorious ſcene in wild amaze;
And the ſwift hounds, affrighted as he flies,
Run to the ſhade, and bark againſt the ſkies.

This golden bowl with generous juice was crown'd,
The firſt libation ſprinkled on the ground:
By turns on each celeſtial power they call;
With Phœbus' name reſounds the vaulted hall.
The courtly train, the ſtrangers, and the reſt,
Crown'd with chaſte laurel, and with garlands dreſs'd,

While with rich gums the fuming altars blaze,
Salute the god in numerous hymns of praiſe.
Then thus the king: Perhaps, my noble gueſts,
Theſe honour'd altars, and theſe annual feaſts
To bright Apollo's awful name deſign'd,
Unknown, with wonder may perplex your mind.
Great was the cauſe; our old ſolemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition riſe;
But, ſav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
Theſe grateful honours to the God of day.
When by a thouſand darts the Python ſlain
With orbs unroll'd lay covering all the plain,
(Transfix'd as o'er Caſtalia's ſtreams he hung,
And ſuck'd new poiſons with his triple tongue)
To Argos' realms the victor god reſorts,
And enters old Crotopus' humble courts.
This rural prince one only daughter bleſs'd,
That all the charms of blooming youth poſſeſs'd;
Fair was her face, and ſpotleſs was her mind,
Where filial love with virgin ſweetneſs join'd.
Happy! and happy ſtill ſhe might have prov'd,
Were ſhe leſs beautiful, or leſs belov'd!
But Phœbus lov'd, and on the flowery ſide
Of Nemea's ſtream the yielding fair enjoy'd:
Now, e'er ten moons their orb with light adorn,
Th' illuſtrious offspring of the God was born;
The nymph, her father's anger to evade,
Retires from Argos to the ſylvan ſhade;
To woods and wilds the pleaſing burden bears,
And truſts her infant to a ſhepherd's cares.
How mean a fate, unhappy child, is thine!
Ah, how unworthy thoſe of race divine!
On flowery herbs in ſome green covert laid,
His bed the ground, his canopy the ſhade,
He mixes with the bleeting lambs his cries,
While the rude ſwain his rural muſic tries,
To call ſoft ſlumber on his infant eyes.
Yet even in thoſe obſcure abodes to live,
Was more, alas! than cruel fate would give;
For on the graſſy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freſhneſs of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpleſs infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore.
Th' aſtoniſh'd mother, when the rumour came,
Forgets her father, and neglects her fame,
With loud complaints ſhe fills the yielding air,
And beats her breaſts, and rends her flowing hair;
Then wild with anguiſh to her ſire ſhe flies,
Demands the ſentence, and contented dies.
But, touch'd with ſorrow for the dead too late,
The raging god prepares t' avenge her fate.
He ſends a monſter, horrible and fell,
Begot by furies in the depths of hell.
The peſt a virgin's face and boſom bears;
High on a crown a riſing ſnake appears,
Guards her black front, and hiſſes in her hairs:
About the realm ſhe walks her dreadful round,
When night with ſable wings o'erſpreads the ground,
Devours young babes before their parents eyes,
And feeds and thrives on public miſeries.
But generous rage the bold Chorœbus warms,
Chorœbus, fam'd for virtue, as for arms;
Some few like him, inſpir'd with martial flame,
Thought a ſhort life well loſt for endleſs fame.
Theſe, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monſter from afar deſcry'd;
Two bleeding babes depending at her ſide,
Whoſe panting vitals, warm with life, ſhe draws;
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws.
The youths ſurround her with extended ſpears;
But brave Chorœbus in the front appears,
Deep in her breaſt he plung'd his ſhining ſword;
And hell's dire monſter back to hell reſtor'd.
Th' Inachians view the ſlain with vaſt ſurpriſe,
Her twiſting volumes, and her rolling eyes,
Her ſpotted breaſt, and gaping womb embru'd
With livid poiſon, and our children's blood.
The crowd in ſtupid wonder fix'd appear,
Pale ev'n in joy, nor yet forget to fear.
Some with vaſt beams the ſqualid corpſe engage,
And weary all the wild efforts of rage,
The birds obſcene, that nightly flock'd to taſte,
With hollow ſcreeches fled the dire repaſt;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by ſcented blood,
And ſtarving wolves ran howling to the wood.
But, fir'd with rage, from cleft Parnaſſus' brow
Avenging Phœbus bent his deadly bow,
And hiſſing flew the feather'd fates below:
A night of ſultry clouds involv'd around
The towers, the fields, and the devoted ground:
And now a thouſand lives together fled,
Death with his ſcythe cut off the fatal thread,
And a whole province in his triumph led.
But Phœbus, aſk'd why noxious fires appear,
And raging Sirius blaſts the ſickly year;
Demands their lives by whom his monſter fell,
And dooms a dreadful ſacrifice to hell.
Bleſt be thy duſt, and let eternal fame
Attend thy manes, and preſerve thy name,
Undaunted hero! who, divinely brave,
In ſuch a cauſe diſdain'd thy life to ſave:
But view'd the ſhrine with a ſuperior look,
And its upbraided godhead thus beſpoke:
With piety, the ſoul's ſecureſt guard,
And conſcious virtue, ſtill its own reward,
Willing I come, unknowing how to fear;
Nor ſhalt thou, Phœbus, find a ſuppliant here.
Thy monſter's death to me was ow'd alone,
And 'tis a deed too glorious to diſown.
Behold him here, for whom, ſo many days,
Impervious clouds conceal'd thy ſullen rays;
For whom, as man no longer claim'd thy care,
Such numbers fell by peſtilential air!
But if th' abandon'd race of human kind
From gods above no more compaſſion find;
If ſuch inclemency in heaven can dwell,
Yet why muſt unoffending Argos feel
The vengeance due to this unlucky ſteel?
On me, on me, let all thy fury fall,
Nor err from me, ſince I deſerve it all:
Unleſs our deſert cities pleaſe thy ſight,
Or funeral flames reflect a grateful light,
Diſcharge thy ſhafts, this ready boſom rend,
And to the ſhades a ghoſt triumphant ſend;
But for my country let my fate atone,
Be mine the vengeance, as the crime my own.
Merit diſtreſs'd, impartial heaven relieves:
Unwelcome life relenting Phœbus gives;

For not the vengeful power, that glow'd with rage,
With such amazing virtue durst engage.
The clouds dispers'd, Apollo's wrath expir'd,
And from the wondering god th' unwilling youth retir'd.
Thence we these altars in his temple raise,
And offer annual honours, feasts, and praise;
Those solemn feasts propitious Phœbus please:
These honours, still renew'd, his ancient wrath appease.
But say, illustrious guest! (adjoin'd the king)
What name you bear, from what high race you spring?
The noble Tydeus stands confess'd and known
Our neighbour prince, and heir of Calydon.
Relate your fortunes, while the friendly night
And silent hours to various talk invite.
The Theban bends on earth his gloomy eyes;
Confus'd and sadly thus at length replies:
Before these altars how shall I proclaim
(Oh generous prince!) my nation or my name,
Or through what veins our ancient blood has roll'd?
Let the sad tale for ever rest untold!
Yet if, propitious to a wretch unknown,
You seek to share in sorrows not your own;
Know then, from Cadmus I derive my race,
Jocasta's son, and Thebes my native place.
To whom the king (who felt his generous breast Touch'd with concern for his unhappy guest)
Replies:—Ah why forbears the son to name
His wretched father, known too well by fame?
Fame, that delights around the world to stray,
Scorns not to take our Argos in her way.
Ev'n those who dwell where suns at distance roll,
In northern wilds, and freeze beneath the pole;
And those who tread the burning Libyan lands,
The faithless Syrtes, and the moving sands;
Who view the western sea's extremest bounds,
Or drink of Ganges in their eastern grounds;
All these the woes of Œdipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town.
If on the sons the parents' crimes descend,
What prince from those his lineage can defend?
Be this thy comfort, that 'tis thine t' efface
With virtuous acts thy ancestor's disgrace,
And be thyself the honour of thy race.
But see! the stars begin to steal away,
And shine more faintly at approaching day.
Now pour the wine; and in your tuneful lays
Once more resound the great Apollo's praise.
Oh father Phœbus! whether Lycia's coast
And snowy mountains thy bright presence boast;
Whether to sweet Castalia thou repair,
And bathe in silver dews thy yellow hair;
Or, pleas'd to find fair Delos float no more,
Delight in Cynthus, and the shady shore;
Or choose thy seat in Ilion's proud abodes,
The shining structures rais'd by labouring gods;
By thee the bow and mortal shafts are borne;
Eternal charms thy blooming youth adorn:
Skill'd in the laws of secret fate above,
And the dark counsels of almighty Jove,
'Tis thine the seeds of future war to know,
The change of sceptres, and impending wo;
When direful meteors spread through glowing air
Long trails of light, and shake their blazing hair,
Thy rage the Phrygian felt, who durst aspire
T' excel the music of thy heavenly lyre;
Thy shafts aveng'd lewd Tityus' guilty flame,
Th' immortal victim of thy mother's fame;
Thy hand slew Python, and the dame who lost
Her numerous offspring for a fatal boast.
In Phlegya's doom thy just revenge appears,
Condemn'd to furies and eternal fears;
He views his food, but dreads, with lifted eye,
The mouldering rock that trembles from on high.

Propitious hear our prayer, O power divine!
And on thy hospitable Argos shine,
Whether the style of Titan please thee more,
Whose purple rays th' Achæmenes adore;
Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields, to sow the golden grain;
Or Mitra, to whose beams the Persian bows,
And pays, in hollow rocks, his awful vows;
Mitra, whose head the blaze of light adorns,
Who grasps the struggling heifer's lunar horns.

THE FABLE OF DRYOPE.

From Ovid's Metamorphoses, Book IX.

She said, and for her lost Galanthis sighs,
When the fair consort of her son replies:
Since you a servant's ravish'd form bemoan,
And kindly sigh for sorrows not your own;
Let me (if tears and grief permit) relate
A nearer woe, a sister's stranger fate.
No nymph of all Oechalia could compare
For beauteous form with Dryope the fair,
Her tender mother's only hope and pride
(Myself the offspring of a second bride.)
This nymph compress'd by him who rules the day,
Whom Delphi and the Delian isle obey,
Andræmon lov'd; and bless'd in all those charms
That pleas'd a god, succeeded to her arms.
A lake there was, with shelving banks around,
Whose verdant summit fragrant myrtles crown'd.
These shades, unknowing of the fates, she sought,
And to the Naiads flowery garlands brought;
Her smiling babe (a pleasing charge) she prest
Within her arms, and nourish'd at her breast.
Not distant far, a watery Lotos grows;
The spring was new, and all the verdant boughs
Adorn'd with blossoms, promis'd fruits that vie
In glowing colours with the Tyrian dye:
Of these she cropp'd to please her infant son;
And I myself the same rash act had done,
But lo! I saw (as near her side I stood)
The violated blossoms drop with blood.
Upon the tree I cast a frightful look;
The trembling tree with sudden horror shook.
Lotis the nymph (if rural tales be true),
As from Priapus' lawless lust she flew,
Forsook her form; and fixing here became
A flowery plant, which still preserves her name.

This change unknown, aſtoniſh'd at the ſight,
My trembling ſiſter ſtrove to urge her flight,
And firſt the pardon of the nymphs implor'd,
And thoſe offended ſylvan powers ador'd:
But when ſhe backward would have fled, ſhe found
Her ſtiffening feet were rooted in the ground:
In vain to free her faſten'd feet ſhe ſtrove,
And, as ſhe ſtruggles, only moves above;
She feels th' encroaching bark around her grow
By quick degrees, and cover all below:
Surpris'd at this, her trembling hand ſhe heaves
To rend her hair; her hand is fill'd with leaves:
Where late was hair, the ſhooting leaves are ſeen
To riſe, and ſhade her with a ſudden green.
The child Amphiſſus, to her boſom preſs'd,
Perceiv'd a colder and a harder breaſt,
And found the ſprings, that ne'er till then deny'd
Their milky moiſture, on a ſudden dry'd.
I ſaw, unhappy! what I now relate.
And ſtood the helpleſs witneſs of thy fate,
Embrac'd thy boughs, thy riſing bark delay'd,
There wiſh'd to grow, and mingle ſhade with ſhade.
Behold Andræmon and th' unhappy ſire
Appear, and for their Dryope inquire;
A ſpringing tree for Dryope they find,
And print warm kiſſes on the panting rind;
Proſtrate, with tears their kindred plant bedew,
And cloſe embrace as to the roots they grew.
The face was all that now remain'd of thee,
No more a woman, nor yet quite a tree;
Thy branches hung with humid pearls appear,
From every leaf diſtils a trickling tear,
And ſtrait a voice, while yet a voice remains,
Thus through the trembling boughs in ſighs complains:
If to the wretched any faith be given,
I ſwear by all th' unpitying powers of heaven,
No wilful crime this heavy vengeance bred;
In mutual innocence our lives we led:
If this be falſe, let theſe new greens decay,
Let founding axes lop my limbs away,
And crackling flames on all my honours prey!
But from my branching arms this infant bear,
Let ſome kind nurſe ſupply a mother's care:
And to his mother let him oft be led,
Sport in her ſhades, and in her ſhades be fed;
Teach him, when firſt his infant voice ſhall frame
Imperfect words, and liſp his mother's name,
To hail this tree; and ſay, with weeping eyes,
Within this plant my hapleſs parent lies:
And when in youth he ſeeks the ſhady woods,
Oh, let him fly the cryſtal lakes and floods,
Nor touch the fatal flowers; but, warn'd by me,
Believe a goddeſs ſhrin'd in every tree.
My ſire, my ſiſter, and my ſpouſe, farewell!
If in your breaſts or love or pity dwell,
Protect your plant, nor let my branches feel
The browſing cattle, or the piercing ſteel.
Farewell! and ſince I cannot bend to join
My lips to yours, advance at leaſt to mine.
My ſon, thy mother's parting kiſs receive,
While yet thy mother has a kiſs to give.
I can no more; the creeping rind invades
My cloſing lips, and hides my head in ſhades:
Remove your hands; the bark ſhall ſoon ſuffice
Without their aid to ſeal theſe dying eyes.
She ceas'd at once to ſpeak, and ceas'd to be;
And all the nymph was loſt within the tree;
Yet latent life through her new branches reign'd,
And long the plant a human heat retain'd.

VERTUMNUS AND POMONA.

From Ovid's Metamorphoſes, Book IV.

The fair Pomona flouriſh'd in his reign;
Of all the virgins of the ſylvan train,
None taught the trees a noble race to bear,
Or more improv'd the vegetable care.
To her the ſhady grove, the flowery field,
The ſtreams and fountains, no delights could yield;
'Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
And ſee the boughs with happy burthens bend.
The hook ſhe bore inſtead of Cynthia's ſpear,
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the lawleſs ſhoots to bring,
And teach th' obedient branches where to ſpring.
Now the cleft rind inſerted graffs receives,
And yields an offſpring more than nature gives;
Now ſliding ſtreams the thirſty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.
Theſe cares alone her virgin breaſt employ,
Averſe from Venus and the nuptial joy.
Her private orchards, wall'd on every ſide,
To lawleſs ſylvans all acceſs deny'd.
How oft the Satyrs and the wanton Fawns,
Who haunt the foreſts, or frequent the lawns,
The god whoſe enſign ſcares the birds of prey,
And old Silenus, youthful in decay,
Employ'd their wiles and unavailing care,
To paſs the fences, and ſurpriſe the fair!
Like theſe, Vertumnus own'd his faithful flame,
Like theſe, rejected by the ſcornful dame.
To gain her ſight a thouſand forms he wears:
And firſt a reaper from the field appears,
Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain
O'ercharge the ſhoulders of the ſeeming ſwain.
Oft o'er his back a crooked ſcythe is laid,
And wreaths of hay his ſun-burnt temples ſhade:
Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears,
Like one who late unyoak'd the ſweating ſteers,
Sometimes his pruning-hook corrects the vines,
And the looſe ſtragglers to their ranks confines.
Now gathering what the bounteous years allows,
He pulls ripe apples from the bending boughs.
A ſoldier now, he with his ſword appears;
A fiſher next, his trembling angle bears.
Each ſhape he varies, and each art he tries,
On her bright charms to feaſt his longing eyes.
A female form at laſt Vertumnus wears,
With all the marks of reverend age appears,
His temples thinly ſpread with ſilver hairs;
Propp'd on his ſtaff, and ſtooping as he goes;
A painted mitre ſhades his furrow'd brows.
The god in this decrepit form array'd
The gardens enter'd, and the fruit ſurvey'd,
And "Happy you!" (he this addreſs'd the maid)

" Whose charms as far all other nymphs outshine,
" As other gardens are excell'd by thine !"
Then kiss'd the fair : (his kisses warmer grow
Than such as women on their sex bestow ;)
Then plac'd beside her on the flowery ground,
Beheld the trees with autumn's bounty crown'd.
An elm was near, to whose embraces led,
The curling vine her swelling clusters spread ;
He view'd her twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight.
Yet his tall elm, but for his vine (he said)
Had stood neglected, and a barren shade ;
And this fair vine, but that her arms surround
Her marry'd elm, had crept along the ground.
Ah, beauteous maid ! let this example move
Your mind, averse from all the joys of love.
Deign to be lov'd, and every heart subdue !
What nymph could e'er attract such crowds as you ?
Not she whose beauty urg'd the Centaur's arms,
Ulysses' queen, nor Helen's fatal charms.
Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain,
A thousand sylvan demigods and gods,
That haunt our mountains, and our Alban woods.
But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise,
And one whose tender care is far above
All that these lovers ever felt of love.
(Far more than e'er can by yourself be guess'd)
Fix on Vertumnus, and reject the rest.
For his firm faith I dare engage my own ;
Scarce to himself, himself is better known.
To distant lands Vertumnus never roves ;
Like you, contented with his native groves ;
Nor at first sight, like most, admires the fair ;
For you he lives ; and you alone shall share
His last affection, as his early care.
Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With youth immortal, and with beauty blest.
Add, that he varies every shape with ease,
And tries all forms that may Pomona please.
But what should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cares and pleasures are the same.
To him your orchard's early fruit are due,
(A pleasant offering when 'tis made by you)
He values these ; but yet (alas !) complains,
That still the best and dearest gift remains.
Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows ;
Nor tasteful herbs that in these gardens rise,
Which the kind soil with milky sap supplies ;
You, only you, can move the god's desire :
Oh, crown so constant and so pure a fire !
Let soft compassion touch your gentle mind ;
Think, 'tis Vertumnus begs you to be kind :
So may no frost, when early buds appear,
Destroy the promise of the youthful year ;
Nor winds, when first your florid orchard blows,
Shake the light blossoms from their blasted boughs!
This when the various god had urg'd in vain,
He strait assum'd his native form again,
Such, and so bright an aspect now he bears,
As when through clouds th' emerging sun appears,
And thence exerting his refulgent ray,
Dispels the darkness and reveals the day.
Force he prepar'd, but check'd the rash design ;
For when, appearing in a form divine.
The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face !
In her soft breast consenting passions move,
And the warm maid confess'd a mutual love.

IMITATIONS OF ENGLISH POETS.

DONE BY THE AUTHOR IN HIS YOUTH.

I.—CHAUCER.

Women ben full of ragerie,
Yet ſwinken nat ſans ſecreſie.
Thilke moral ſhall ye underſtond,
From Schoole-boy's Tale of fayre Irelond:
Which to the Fennes hath him betake,
To filch the gray ducke fro the lake.
Right then, there paſſen by the way
His aunt, and eke her daughters tway.
Ducke in his trowſes hath he hent,
Not to be ſpied of ladies gent.
" But ho! our nephew, (crieth one)
" Ho! quoth another, Cozen John;"
And ſtoppen, and lough, and callen out,—
This ſilly clerk full low doth lout:
They aſken that, and talken this,
" Lo here is Coz, and here is Miſs."
But, as he glozeth with ſpeeches ſoote,
The ducke ſore tickleth his erſe roote:
Fore-piece and buttons all-to-breſt,
Forth thruſt a white neck, and red creſt.
Te-he, cry'd ladies; Clerke nought ſpake:
Miſs ſtar'd; and gray Ducke cryeth quake.
" O moder, moder, (quoth the daughter
" Be thilke ſame thing maids longen a'ter?
" Bette is to pine on coals and chalke,
" Then truſt on mon, whoſe yerde can talke."

II.—SPENSER.

THE ALLEY.

I.

In every town where Thamis rolls his tyde,
A narrow paſs there is, with houſes low;
Where ever and anon, the ſtream is ey'd,
And many a boat, ſoft ſliding to and fro.
There oft are heard the notes of Infant Woe,
The ſhort thick ſob, loud ſcream, and ſhriller ſquall:
How can ye, mothers, vex your children ſo?
Some play, ſome eat, ſome cack againſt the wall,
And as they crouchen low, for bread and butter call.

II.

And on the broken pavement, here and there,
Doth many a ſtinking ſprat and herring lie;
A brandy and tobacco ſhop is near,
And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a ſailor's jacket hangs to dry.
At every door are ſun-burnt matrons ſeen,
Mending old nets to catch the ſcaly fry,
Now ſinging ſhrill, and ſcolding eſt between;
Scolds anſwer foul-mouth'd ſcolds; bad neighbourhood I ween.

III.

The ſnappiſh cur (the paſſengers annoy)
Cloſe at my heel with yelping treble flies;
The whimp'ring girl, and hoarſer-ſcreaming boy,
Join to the yelping treble, ſhrilling cries;
The ſcolding quean to louder notes doth riſe,
And her, full pipes thoſe ſhrilling cries confound;
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies:
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round,
And curs, girls, boys, and ſcolds, in the deep baſe are drown'd.

IV.

Hard by a ſty, beneath a roof of thatch,
Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days
Baſkets of fiſh at Billingſgate did watch,
Cod, whiting, oyſter, mackrel, ſprat, or plaice:
There learn'd ſhe ſpeech from tongues that never ceaſe.
Slander beſide her, like a magpie, chatters,
With Envy, (ſpitting cat) dread foe to peace;
Like a curs'd cur, Malice, before her clatters,
And, vexing every wight, tears clothes and all to tatters.

V.

Her dugs were mark'd by every collier's hand,
Her mouth was black as bull dog's at the ſtall:
She ſcratched, bit, and ſpar'd ne lace ne band,
And bitch and rogue her anſwer was to all;
Nay, e'en the parts of ſhame by name would call:
Yea, when ſhe paſſed by or lane or nook,
Would greet the man who turn'd him to the wall,
And by his hand obſcene the porter took,
Nor ever did aſkance like modeſt virgin look.

VI.

Such place hath Deptford, navy-building town,
Woolwich and Wapping, ſmelling ſtrong of pitch;
Such Lambeth, envy of each band and gown;
And Twickenham ſuch, which fairer ſcenes enrich,
Grots, ſtatues, urns, and Jo—n's dog and bitch.
Ne village is without, on either ſide,
All up the ſilver Thames, or all adown;

Ne Richmond's ſelf, from whoſe tall front are ey'd
Vales, ſpires, meandering ſtreams, and Windſor's towery pride.

III.—WALLER.

OF A LADY SINGING TO HER LUTE.

FAIR charmer, ceaſe, nor make your voice's prize
A heart reſign'd the conqueſt of your eyes:
Well might, alas! that threaten'd veſſel fail,
Which winds and lightning both at once aſſail.
We were too bleſt with theſe enchanting lays,
Which muſt be heavenly when an angel plays:
But killing charms your lover's death contrive,
Leſt heavenly muſic ſhould be heard alive.
Orpheus could charm the trees; but thus a tree,
Taught by your hand, can charm no leſs than he:
A poet made the ſilent wood purſue,
This vocal wood had drawn the poet too.

On a FAN of the Author's deſign, in which was painted the ſtory of CEPHALUS and PROCRIS, with the motto, AURA VENI.

COME, gentle air! th' Æolian ſhepherd ſaid,
While Procris panted in the ſacred ſhade;
Come, gentle air, the fairer Delia cries,
While at her feet her ſwain expiring lies.
Lo, the glad gales o'er all her beauties ſtray,
Breathe on her lips, and in her boſom play!
In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
Nor could that fabled dart more ſurely wound;
Both gifts deſtructive to the givers prove;
Alike both lovers fall by thoſe they love.
Yet guiltleſs too this bright deſtroyer lives, [gives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound ſhe
She views the ſtory with attentive eyes,
And pities Procris, while her lover dies.

IV.—COWLEY.

THE GARDEN.

FAIN would my muſe the flowery treaſure ſing,
And humble glories of the youthful ſpring:
Where opening roſes breathing ſweets diffuſe,
And ſoft carnations ſhower their balmy dews;
Where lilies ſmile in virgin robes of white,
The thin undreſs of ſuperficial light,
And vary'd tulips ſhow ſo dazzling gay,
Bluſhing in bright diverſities of day.
Each painted flowret in the lake below
Surveys its beauties, whence its beauties grow;
And pale Narciſſus on the bank, in vain
Transform'd, gazes on himſelf again.
Here aged trees cathedral walks compoſe,
And mount the hill in venerable rows;
There the green infants in their beds are laid,
The garden's hope, and its expected ſhade.
Here orange trees with blooms and pendants ſhine,
And vernal honours to their autumn join;
Exceed their promiſe in their ripen'd ſtore,
Yet in the riſing bloſſom promiſe more.
There in bright drops the cryſtal fountains play,
By laurels ſhielded from the piercing day:
Where Daphne, now a tree, as once a maid,
Still from Apollo vindicates her ſhade,
Still turns her beauties from th' invading beam,
Nor ſeeks in vain for ſuccour to the ſtream;
The ſtream at once preſerves her virgin leaves,
At once a ſhelter from her boughs receives,
Where ſummer's beauty midſt of winter ſtays,
And winter's coolneſs ſpite of ſummer's rays.

WEEPING.

WHILE Celia's tears make ſorrow bright,
Proud grief ſits ſwelling in her eyes:
The ſun, next thoſe the faireſt light,
Thus from the ocean firſt did riſe:
And thus through miſts we ſee the ſun,
Which elſe we durſt not gaze upon.

Theſe ſilver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the fervour of the day:
So from one cloud ſoft ſhowers we view,
And blaſting lightnings burſt away.
The ſtars that fall from Celia's eye,
Declare our doom is drawing nigh.

The baby in that ſunny ſphere
So like a phaeton appears,
That Heav'n, the threaten'd world to ſpare,
Thought fit to drown him in her tears:
Elſe might th' ambitious nymph aſpire,
To ſet, like him, Heaven too on fire.

V.—E. OF ROCHESTER.

ON SILENCE.

SILENCE! coeval with eternity,
Thou wert, ere nature's ſelf began to be;
'T'was one vaſt nothing, all, and all ſlept faſt in thee.

II.

Thine was the ſway, ere heaven was form'd, or earth,
Ere fruitful thought conceiv'd creation's birth,
Or midwife word gave aid, and ſpoke the infant forth.

III.

Then various elements, againſt thee join'd,
In one more various animal combin'd, [kind
And fram'd the clamorous race of buſy human.

IV.

The tongue mov'd gently firſt, and ſpeech was low,
Till wrangling ſcience taught it noiſe and ſhow,
And wicked wit aroſe, thy moſt abuſive foe.

V.

But rebel wit deſerts thee oft in vain;
Loſt in the maze of words he turns again,
And ſeeks a ſurer ſtate, and courts thy gentle reign.

VI.

Afflicted ſenſe thou kindly doſt ſet free,
Oppreſs'd with argumental tyranny,
And routed reaſon finds a ſafe retreat in thee.

VII.

With thee in private modeſt dulneſs lies,
And in thy boſom lurks in thought's diſguiſe;
Thou varniſher of fools, and cheat of all the wiſe!

VIII.

Yet thy indulgence is by both confeſs'd;
Folly by thee lies ſleeping in the breaſt,
And 'tis in thee at laſt that wiſdom ſeeks for reſt.

IX.

Silence, the knave's repute, the whore's good name,
The only honour of the wiſhing dame; [fame.
The very want of tongue makes thee a kind of

X.

But couldſt thou ſeize ſome tongues that now are free,
How church and ſtate ſhould be oblig'd to thee!
At ſenate and at bar, how welcome wouldſt thou be!

XI.

Yet ſpeech ev'n there; ſubmiſſively withdraws,
From rights of ſubjects, and the poor man's cauſe: [laws.
Then pompous ſilence reigns, and ſtills the noiſy

XII.

Paſt ſervices of friends, good deeds of foes,
What favourites gain, and what the nation owes,
Fly the forgetful world, and in thy arms repoſe.

XIII.

The country wit, religion of the town,
The courtier's learning, policy o' th' gown,
Are beſt by thee expreſs'd; and ſhine in thee alone.

XIV.

The parſon's cant, the lawyer's ſophiſtry,
Lord's quibble, critic's jeſt, all end in thee,
All reſt in peace at laſt, and ſleep eternally.

VI.—E. OF DORSET.

ARTEMISIA.

Though Artemiſia talks, by fits,
Of councils, claſſics, fathers, wits;
Reads Malbranche, Boyle, and Locke;
Yet in ſome things methinks ſhe fails,
'Twere well if ſhe would pare her nails,
And wear a cleaner ſmock.

Haughty and huge as High-Dutch bride,
Such naſtineſs, and ſo much pride,
Are oddly join'd by fate:
On her large ſquab you find her ſpread,
Like a fat corpſe upon a bed,
That lies and ſtinks in ſtate.

She wears no colours (ſign of grace)
On any part except her face;
All white and black beſide:
Dauntleſs her look, her geſture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud,
And maſculine her ſtride.

So have I ſeen, in black and white
A prating thing, a magpye hight,
Majeſtically ſtalk;
A ſtately, worthleſs animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk.

PHRYNE.

Phryne had talents for mankind,
Open ſhe was, and unconfin'd,
Like ſome free port of trade;
Merchants unloaded here their freight,
And agents from each foreign ſtate
Here firſt their entry made.

Her learning and good-breeding ſuch,
Whether th' Italian or the Dutch,
Spaniards or French came to her,
To all obliging ſhe'd appear:
'Twas Si Signior, 'twas Yaw Mynheer,
'Twas S' il vous plaiſt, Monſieur.

Obſcure by birth, renown'd by crimes,
Still changing names, religion, climes,
At length ſhe turns a bride:
In diamonds, pearls, and rich brocades,
She ſhines the firſt of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride.

So have I known thoſe inſects fair
(Which curious Germans hold ſo rare)
Still vary ſhapes and dyes;
Still gain new titles with new forms;
Firſt grubs obſcene, then wriggling worms,
Then painted butterflies.

VII.—DR. SWIFT.

THE HAPPY LIFE OF A COUNTRY PARSON.

Parson, theſe things in thy poſſeſſing,
Are better than the biſhop's bleſſing.
A wife that makes conſerves; a ſteed
That carries double when there's need:
October ſtore, and beſt Virginia,
Tythe pig, and mortuary guinea:
Gazettes ſent gratis down, and frank'd,
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd;
A large concordance, bound long ſince;
Sermons to Charles the Firſt, when prince:
A chronicle of ancient ſtanding;
A Chryſoſtom to ſmooth thy band in.
The Polyglott—three parts,—my text,
Howbeit,—likewiſe—now to my next.
Lo here the Septuagint,—and Paul,
To ſum the whole,—the cloſe of all.
He that has theſe, may paſs his life,
Drink with the 'ſquire, and kiſs his wife;
On Sundays preach, and eat his fill;
And faſt on Fridays——if he will;
Toaſt church and queen, explain the news,
Talk with church wardens about pews;
Pray heartily for ſome new gift,
And ſhake his head at Doctor Swift.

ESSAY ON MAN,

IN FOUR EPISTLES.

TO H. ST. JOHN, LORD BOLINGBROKE.

THE DESIGN.

HAVING propoſed to write ſome pieces on human life and manners, ſuch as (to uſe my Lord Bacon's expreſſion) "come home to men's buſineſs and boſoms," I thought it more ſatisfactory to begin with conſidering man in the abſtract, his nature, and his ſtate; ſince, to prove any moral duty, to enforce any moral precept, or to examine the perfection or imperfection of any creature whatſoever, it is neceſſary firſt to know what condition and relation it is placed in, and what is the proper end and purpoſe of its being.

The ſcience of human nature is, like all other ſciences, reduced to a few clear points: There are not many certain truths in this world. It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind as in that of the body more good will accrue to mankind by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by ſtudying too much ſuch finer nerves and veſſels, the conformations and uſes of which will for ever eſcape our obſervation. The diſputes are all upon theſe laſt; and I will venture to ſay, they have leſs ſharpened the wits than the hearts of men againſt each other, and have diminiſhed the practice, more than advanced the theory of morality. If I could flatter myſelf that this eſſay has any merit, it is in ſteering betwixt the extremes of doctrines ſeemingly oppoſite, in paſſing over terms utterly unintelligible, and in forming a temperate, yet not inconſiſtent, and a ſhort, yet not imperfect, ſyſtem of ethics.

This I might have done in proſe; but I choſe verſe, and even rhyme, for two reaſons. The one will appear obvious; that principles, maxims, or precepts, ſo written, both ſtrike the reader more ſtrongly at firſt, and are more eaſily retained by him afterwards: The other may ſeem odd, but it is true; I found I could expreſs them more ſhortly this way than in proſe itſelf; and nothing is more certain, than that much of the force as well as grace of arguments or inſtructions, depends on their conciſeneſs. I was unable to treat this part of my ſubject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious; or, more poetically, without ſacrificing perſpicuity to ornament, without wandering from the preciſion, or breaking the chain of reaſoning: If any man can unite all theſe without diminution of any of them, I freely confeſs he will compaſs a thing above my capacity.

What is now publiſhed, is only to be conſidered as a general map of man, marking out no more than the greater parts, their extent, their limits, and their connection, but leaving the particular to be more fully delineated in the charts which are to follow. Conſequently theſe epiſtles in their progreſs (if I have health and leiſure to make any progreſs), will be leſs dry, and more ſuſceptible of poetical ornament. I am here only opening the fountains, and clearing the paſſage. To deduce the rivers, to follow them in their courſe, and to obſerve their effects, may be a taſk more agreeable.

EPISTLE I.

THE ARGUMENT.

Of the Nature and State of Man with respect to the Universe.

Of man in the abstract.—I. That we can judge only with regard to our own system, being ignorant of the relations of systems and things, ver. 17, &c. II. That man is not to be deemed imperfect, but a being suited to his place and rank in the creation, agreeable to the general order of things, and conformable to ends and relations to him unknown, ver. 35, &c. III. That it is partly upon his ignorance of future events, and partly upon the hope of a future state, that all his happiness in the present depends, ver. 77, &c. IV. The pride of aiming at more knowledge, and pretending to more perfection, the cause of man's error and misery. The impiety of putting himself in the place of God, and judging of the fitness or unfitness, perfection or imperfection, justice or injustice, of his dispensations, ver. 109, &c. V. The absurdity of conceiting himself the final cause of the creation, or expecting that perfection in the moral world, which is not in the natural, ver. 131. &c. VI. The unreasonableness of his complaints against providence, while on the one hand he demands the perfection of the angels, and on the other the bodily qualifications of the brutes; though, to possess any of the sensitive faculties in a higher degree, would render him miserable, ver. 173, &c. VII. That throughout the whole visible world, an universal order and gradation in the sensual and mental faculties is observed, which causes a subordination of creature to creature, and of all creatures to man. The gradations of sense, instinct, thought, reflection, reason; that reason alone countervails all the other faculties, ver. 207. VIII. How much farther this order and subordination of living creatures may extend above and below us; were any part of which broken, not that part only, but the whole connected creation must be destroyed, ver. 233. IX. The extravagance, madness, and pride of such a desire, ver. 250. X. The consequence of all the absolute submission due to providence, both as to our present and future state, ver. 281, &c. to the end.

Awake, my St. John! leave all meaner things
To low ambition, and the pride of kings.
Let us (since life can little more supply
Than just to look about us, and to die),
Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan: [shoot;
A wild, where weeds and flowers promiscuous
Or garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.
Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield;
The latent tracts, the giddy heights, explore
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar;
Eye nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise:
Laugh where we must, be candid where we can;
But vindicate the ways of God to man.

I. Say first, of God above, or man below,
What can we reason, but from what we know?
Of man, what see we but his station here,
From which to reason, or to which refer?
Through worlds unnumber'd, though the God be known,
'Tis ours to trace him only in our own.
He, who through vast immensity can pierce,
See worlds on worlds compose one universe,
Observe how system into system runs,
What other planets circle other suns,
What vary'd being peoples every star,
May tell why heaven has made us as we are.
But of this frame the bearings and the ties,
The strong connections, nice dependencies,
Gradations just, has thy pervading soul
Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole?
Is the great chain, that draws all to agree,
And drawn supports, upheld by God, or thee?

II. Presumptuous man! the reason would'st thou find,
Why form'd so weak, so little, and so blind?
First, if thou canst, the harder reason guess,
Why form'd no weaker, blinder, and no less?
Ask of thy mother earth, why oaks are made
Taller or weaker than the weeds they shade?
Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove?

Of systems possible, if 'tis confest,
That Wisdom Infinite must form the best,
Where all must fall or not coherent be,
And all that rises, rise in due degree;
Then, in the scale of reasoning life, 'tis plain,
There must be, somewhere, such a rank as man:
And all the question (wrangle e'er so long),
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong?

Respecting man, whatever wrong we call
May, must be right, as relative to all.
In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain:
In God's, one single can its end produce;
Yet serves to second too some other use.
So man, who here seems principle alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown,
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

When the proud steed shall know why man restrains
His fiery course, or drives him o'er the plains;
When the dull ox, why now he breaks the clod,
Is now a victim, and now Egypt's god:
Then shall man's pride and dulness comprehend
His actions', passions', being's, use and end;
Why doing, suffering, check'd, impell'd; and why
This hour a slave, the next a deity.

VARIATIONS.

In the former editions, ver. 64.

Now wears a garland an Egyptian god.

After ver. 68, the following lines in the first edition.

If to be perfect in a certain sphere,
What matter, soon or late, or here, or there?

Then say not man's imperfect, heaven in fault;
Say rather, man's as perfect as he ought:
His knowledge measur'd to his state and place;
His time a moment, and a point his space.
If to be perfect in a certain sphere,
What matter, soon or late, or here, or there?
The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago.

III. Heaven from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescrib'd, their present state:
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know:
Or who could suffer being here below?
The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flowery food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Oh, blindness to the future! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle mark'd by heaven:
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,
Atoms or systems into ruin hurl'd,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world.

Hope humbly then; with trembling pinions soar;
Wait the great teacher death; and God adore.
What future bliss, he gives not thee to know,
But gives that hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast:
Man never is, but always to be blest:
The soul, uneasy, and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutor'd mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind;
His soul proud science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk, or milky way;
Yet simple nature to his hope has given,
Behind the cloud-topt hill, an humbler heaven;
Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the watery waste,
Where slaves once more their native land behold,
No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.
To be, contents his natural desire,
He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire;
But thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company.

IV. Go, wiser thou! and in thy scale of sense,
Weigh thy opinion against providence;
Call imperfection what thou fancy'st such;
Say, here he gives too little, there too much:
Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet say, if man's unhappy, God's unjust;
If man alone ingross not heaven's high care,
Alone made perfect here, immortal there:
Snatch from his hand the balance and the rod,
Re-judge his justice, be the god of God.
In pride, in reasoning pride, our error lies;
All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies.
Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes,
Men would be angels, angels would be gods.
Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel:
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' eternal cause.

V. Ask for what end the heavenly bodies shine,
Earth for whose use? Pride answers, "'Tis for mine:
"For me kind nature wakes her genial power;
"Suckles each herb, and spreads out every flower;
"Annual for me, the grape, the rose, renew
"The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew;
"For me, the mine a thousand treasures brings;
"For me, health gushes from a thousand springs;
"Seas roll to waft me, suns to light me rise;
"My foot-stool earth, my canopy the skies."
But errs not nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend,
When earthquakes swallow, or when tempests sweep
Towns to one grave, whole nations to the deep?
"No ('tis reply'd) the first Almighty cause
"Acts not by partial, but by general laws;
"Th' exceptions few; some change since all began:
"And what created perfect?"—Why then man?
If the great end be human happiness,
Then nature deviates; and can man do less?
As much that end a constant course requires
Of showers and sun-shine, as of man's desires;
As much eternal springs and cloudless skies,
As men for ever temperate, calm, and wise.
If plagues or earthquakes break not heaven's design,
Why then a Borgia, or a Catiline?
Who knows, but he whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms;
Pours fierce ambition in a Cæsar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind?
From pride, from pride, our very reasoning springs
Account for moral as for natural things:
Why charge we heaven in those, in these acquit?
In both, to reason right, is to submit.
Better for us, perhaps, it might appear,
Were there all harmony, all virtue here;
That never air or ocean felt the wind,
That never passion discompos'd the mind.
But all subsists by elemental strife;
And passions are the elements of life.
The general order, since the whole began,
Is kept in nature, and is kept in man.

VI. What would this man? Now upward will he soar,
And, little less than angel, would be more;

VARIATIONS.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began ten thousand years ago.

After ver. 88, in the MS.

No great, no little; 'tis as much decreed
That Virgil's gnat should die as Cæsar bleed.

Ver. 93, in the first folio and quarto.

What bliss above he gives not thee to know,
But gives that hope to be thy bliss below.

After ver. 108, in the first edition.

But does he say the Maker is not good,
Till he's exalted to what state he wou'd;
Himself alone high heaven's peculiar care,
Alone made happy when he will, and where?

Now looking downwards, just as griev'd appears
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.
Made for his use all creatures if he call,
Say what their use, had he the powers of all?
Nature to these, without profusion, kind,
The proper organs, proper powers assign'd;
Each seeming want compensated of course,
Here with degrees of swiftness, there of force;
All in exact proportion to the state;
Nothing to add, and nothing to abate.
Each beast, each insect, happy in its own:
Is heaven unkind to man, and man alone?
Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
Be pleas'd with nothing, if not blest with all?
The bliss of man (could pride that blessing find),
Is not to act or think beyond mankind;
No powers of body or of soul to share,
But what his nature and his state can bear.
Why has not man a microscopic eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say, what the use, were finer optics given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven?
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonise at every pore?
Or quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatic pain?
If nature thunder'd in his opening ears,
And stunn'd him with the music of the spheres,
How would he wish that heaven had left him still
The whispering zephyr, and the purling rill!
Who finds not providence all good and wise,
Alike in what it gives, and what denies?

VII. Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental powers ascends:
Mark how it mounts to man's imperial race,
From the green myriads in the peopled grass:
What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam;
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green;
Of hearing, from the life that fills the flood,
To that which warbles through the vernal wood!
The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line:
In the nice bee, what sense so subtly true
From poisonous herbs extracts the healing dew!
How instinct varies in the grovelling swine,
Compar'd, half-reasoning elephant, with thine!
'Twixt that, and reason, what a nice barrier!
For ever separate, yet for ever near!
Remembrance and reflection how allied;
What thin partitions sense from thought divide!
And middle natures, how they long to join,
Yet never pass th' insuperable line!
Without this just gradation, could they be
Subjected, these to those, or all to thee?
The powers of all subdued by thee alone,
Is not thy reason all these powers in one?

VIII. See, through this air, this ocean, and this earth,
All matter quick, and burstling into birth.
Above, how high, progressive life may go!
Around, how wide! how deep extend below!
Vast chain of being! which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human, angel, man,
Beast, bird, fish, insect, what no eye can see,
No glass can reach; from infinite to thee,
From thee to nothing.—On superior powers
Were we to press, inferior might on ours;
Or in the full creation leave a void,
Where, one step broken, the great scale's destroy'd:
From nature's chain whatever link you strike,
Tenth, or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike.

And, if each system in gradation roll
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.
Let earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky;
Let ruling angels from their spheres be hurl'd,
Being on being wreck'd, and world on world;
Heaven's whole foundations to their centre nod,
And nature trembles to the throne of God.
All this dread order break—for whom? for thee?
Vile worm!—ah, madness! pride! impiety!

IX. What if the foot, ordain'd the dust to tread,
Or hand, to toil, aspir'd to be the head?
What if the head, the eye, or ear, repin'd
To serve mere engines to the ruling mind?
Just as absurd for any part to claim
To be another, in this general frame:
Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains
The great directing mind of all ordains.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is, and God the soul;
That, chang'd through all, and yet in all the same;
Great in the earth, as in th' ethereal frame;
Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glows in the stars, and blossoms in the trees;
Lives through all life, extends through all extent;
Spreads undivided, operates unspent;
Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part,
As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart;
As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns:
To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
He fills, he bounds, connects, and equalls all.

X. Cease then, nor order imperfection name:
Our proper bliss depends on what we blame.
Know thy own point: This kind, this due degree
Of blindness, weakness, heaven bestows on thee.
Submit.—In this, or any other sphere,
Secure to be as blest as thou canst bear:
Safe in the hand of one disposing power,
Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good.
And, spite of pride, in erring reason's spite,
One truth is clear, whatever is, is right.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 238, Ed. 1st.
Ethereal essence, spirit, substance, man.

After ver. 282, in the MS.
Reason, to think of God, when she pretends,
Begins a censor, an adorer ends.

EPISTLE II.

Of the Nature and State of Man, with respect to Himself, as an Individual.

THE ARGUMENT.

I. The business of man not to pry into God, but to study himself. His middle nature: his powers and frailties, ver. 1. to 19. The limits of his capacity, ver. 19. &c. II. The two principles of man, self-love and reason, both necessary, ver. 53. &c. Self-love the stronger, and why, ver. 67. &c. Their end the same, ver. 81. &c. III. The passions, and their use, ver. 93. to 130. The predominant passion, and its force, ver. 132. to 160. Its necessity, in directing men to different purposes, ver. 165. &c. Its providential use, in fixing our principle, and ascertaining our virtue, ver. 177. IV. Virtue and vice joined in our mixed nature; the limits near, yet the things separate and evident: what is the office of reason, ver. 202. to 216. V. How odious vice in itself, and how we deceive ourselves into it, ver. 217. VI. That, however, the ends of providence and general good are answered in our passions and imperfections, ver. 238, &c. How usefully these are distributed to all orders of men, ver. 241. How useful they are to society, ver. 251. And to individuals, ver. 263. In every state, and every age of life, ver. 273. &c.

I. Know then thyself, presume not God to scan,
The proper study of mankind is man.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great:
With too much knowledge for the sceptic side,
With too much weakness for the stoic's pride,
He hangs between; in doubt to act, or rest;
In doubt to deem himself a god, or beast;
In doubt his mind or body to prefer;
Born but to die, and reasoning but to err;
Alike in ignorance, his reason such,
Whether he thinks too little, or too much:
Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;
Still by himself abus'd or disabus'd;
Created half to rise, and half to fall;
Great lord of all things, yet a prey to all;
Sole judge of truth, in endless error hurl'd:
The glory, jest, and riddle of the world!
Go, wondrous creature! mount where science guides,
Go, measure earth, weigh air, and state the tides;
Instruct the planets in what orbs to run,
Correct old time, and regulate the sun;
Go, soar with Plato to th' empyreal sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair;
Or tread the mazy round his followers trod,
And quitting sense call imitating God;
As eastern priests in giddy circles run,
And turn their heads to imitate the sun.
Go, teach Eternal Wisdom how to rule—
Then drop into thyself, and be a fool!
Superior beings, when of late they saw
A mortal man unfold all nature's law,
Admir'd such wisdom in an earthly shape,
And shew'd a Newton as we shew an ape.
Could he, whose rules the rapid comet bind,
Describe or fix one movement of his mind?
Who saw its fires here rise, and there descend,
Explain his own beginning or his end?
Alas, what wonder! Man's superior part
Uncheck'd may rise, and climb from art to art;
But when his own great work is but begun,
What reason weaves, by passion is undone.
Trace science then, with modesty thy guide;
First strip off all her equipage of pride;
Deduct what is but vanity or dress,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness;
Or tricks to show the stretch of human brain,
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all our vices have created arts;
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come!
II. Two principles in human nature reign;
Self-love, to urge, and reason, to restrain;
Nor this a good, nor that a bad we call,
Each works its end, to move or govern all:
And to their proper operation still,
Ascribe all good, to their improper ill.
Self-love, the spring of motion, acts the soul;
Reason's comparing balance rules the whole.
Man, but for that, no action could attend,
And, but for this, were active to no end:
Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 2. Ed. 1st.
The only science of mankind is man.

After ver. 18, in the MS.
For more perfection than this state can bear
In vain we sigh, heaven made us as we are.

VARIATIONS.

As wisely sure a modest ape might aim
To be like man, whose faculties and frame
He sees, he feels, as you or I to be
An angel thing we neither knew nor see.
Observe now near he edges on our race;
What human tricks! how risible of face!
It must be so—why else have I the sense
Of more than monkey charms and excellence?
Why else to walk on two so oft essay'd?
And why this ardent longing for a maid?
So pug might plead, and call his gods unkind
Till set on end, and married to his mind.
Go, reasoning thing! assume the doctor's chair,
As Plato deep, as Seneca severe:
Fix moral fitness, and to God give rule,
Then drop into thyself, &c.

Ver. 21. Edit. 4th and 5th.
Show by what rules the wandering planets stray,
Correct old time, and teach the sun his way.

Ver. 35, Ed. 1st.
Could he, who taught each planet where to roll,
Describe or fix one movement of the soul?
Who mark'd their points, to rise or to descend,
Explain his own beginning, or his end?

Or, meteor-like, flame lawleſs through the void,
Deſtroying others, by himſelf deſtroy'd.
Moſt ſtrength the moving principle requires;
Active its taſk, it prompts, impels, inſpires.
Sedate and quiet the comparing lies.
Form'd but to check, deliberate, and adviſe.
Self-love, ſtill ſtronger, as its objects nigh;
Reaſon's at diſtance, and in proſpect lie:
That ſees immediate good by preſent ſenſe;
Reaſon, the future and the conſequence.
Thicker than arguments, temptations throng,
At beſt more watchful this, but that more ſtrong.
The action of the ſtronger to ſuſpend,
Reaſon ſtill uſe, to reaſon ſtill attend.
Attention, habit, and experience gains;
Each ſtrengthens reaſon, and ſelf-love reſtrains.
Let ſubtle ſchoolmen teach theſe friends to fight,
More ſtudious to divide than to unite;
And grace and virtue, ſenſe and reaſon ſplit,
With all the raſh dexterity of wit.
Wits, juſt like fools, at war about a name,
Have full as oft no meaning, or the ſame.
Self-love and reaſon to one end aſpire,
Pain their averſion, pleaſure their deſire;
But greedy that, its object would devour,
This taſte the honey, and not wound the flower:
Pleaſure, or wrong or rightly underſtood,
Our greateſt evil, or our greateſt good.

III. Modes of ſelf-love the paſſions we may call;
'Tis real good, or ſeeming, moves them all:
But ſince not every good we can divide,
And reaſon bids us for our own provide;
Paſſions, though ſelfiſh, if their means be fair,
Liſt under reaſon, and deſerve her care;
Thoſe, that imparted, court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take ſome virtue's name.

In lazy apathy let ſtoics boaſt
Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fix'd as in a froſt;
Contracted all, retiring to the breaſt;
But ſtrength of mind is exerciſe, not reſt:
The riſing tempeſt puts in act the ſoul;
Parts it may ravage, but preſerves the whole.
On life's vaſt ocean diverſely we ſail,
Reaſon the card, but paſſion is the gale;
Nor God alone in the ſtill calm we find,
He mounts the ſtorm and walks upon the wind.

Paſſions, like elements, though born to fight,
Yet, mix'd and ſoften'd, in his work unite:
Theſe, 'tis enough to temper and employ;
But what compoſes man, can man deſtroy?
Suffice that reaſon keep to nature's road,
Subject, compound them, follow her and God.
Love, hope, and joy, fair pleaſure's ſmiling train;
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
Theſe mix'd with art, and to due bonnds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind;
The lights and ſhades, whoſe well-accorded ſtrife
Gives all the ſtrength and colour of our life.

Pleaſures are ever in our hands and eyes;
And, when in act they ceaſe, in proſpect riſe:
Preſent to graſp, and future ſtill to find,
The whole employ of body and of mind.
All ſpread their charms, but charm not all alike;
On different ſenſes, different objects ſtrike;
Hence different paſſions more or leſs inflame,
As ſtrong or weak, the organs of the frame;
And hence one maſter paſſion in the breaſt,
Like Aaron's ſerpent, ſwallows up the reſt.

As man, perhaps, the moment of his breath,
Receives the lurking principle of death;
The young diſeaſe, which muſt ſubdue at length,
Grows with his growth, and ſtrengthens with his ſtrength:
So, caſt and mingled with his very frame,
The mind's diſeaſe, its ruling paſſion came;
Each vital humour, which ſhould feed the whole,
Soon flows to this, in body and in ſoul:
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions ſpread,
Imagination plies her dangerous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part.

Nature its mother, habit is its nurſe;
Wit, ſpirit, faculties, but make it worſe;
Reaſon itſelf but gives it edge and power;
As heaven's bleſt beam turns vinegar more ſour.

We, wretched ſubjects though to lawful ſway,
In this weak queen, ſome favourite ſtill obey:
Ah! if ſhe lend not arms, as well as rules,
What can ſhe more than tell us we are fools?
Teach us to mourn our nature, not to mend;
A ſharp accuſer, but a helpleſs friend!
Or from a judge turn pleader, to perſuade
The choice we make, or juſtify it made;
Proud of an eaſy conqueſt all along,
She but removes weak paſſions for the ſtrong:
So, when ſmall humours gather to a gout,
The doctor fancies he has driv'n them out.

Yes, nature's road muſt ever be preferr'd;
Reaſon is here no guide, but ſtill a guard:
'Tis hers to rectify, not overthrow,
And treat this paſſion more as friend than foe;
A mightier power the ſtrong direction ſends,
And ſeveral men impels to ſeveral ends:
Like varying winds, by other paſſions toſt,
This drives them conſtant to a certain coaſt.
Let power or knowledge, gold or glory, pleaſe,
Or (oft more ſtrong than all) the love of eaſe;
Through life 'tis follow'd, ev'n at life's expence;
The merchant's toil, the ſage's indolence,
The monk's humility, the hero's pride,
All, all alike, find reaſon on their ſide.

Th' eternal art, educing good from ill,
Grafts on this paſſion our beſt principle:
'Tis thus the mercury of man is fix'd,
Strong grows the virtue with his nature mix'd;
The droſs cements what elſe were too refin'd,
And in one intereſt body acts with mind.

As fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,
On ſavage ſtocks inſerted learn to bear;

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 86, in the MS.

Of good and evil gods what frighted fools,
Of good and evil reaſon puzzled ſchools,
Deceiv'd, deceiving, taught——

After ver. 108, in the MS.

A tedious voyage! where how uſeleſs lies
The compaſs, if no powerful guſts ariſe!

After ver. 112, in the MS.

The ſoft reward the virtuous, or invite:
The fierce, the vicious puniſh or affright.

The fureſt virtues thus from paſſions ſhoot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root.
What crops of wit and honeſty appear
From ſpleen, from obſtinacy, hate, or fear!
See anger, zeal and fortitude ſupply;
Ev'n avarice, prudence; ſloth, philoſophy;
Luſt, through ſome certain ſtrainers well refin'd,
Is gentle love, and charms all womankind;
Envy, to which th' ignoble mind 's a ſlave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave;
Nor virtue, male or female, can we name,
But what will grow on pride, or grow on ſhame.
Thus nature gives us (let it check our pride)
The virtue neareſt to our vice ally'd;
Reaſon the bias turns to good from ill,
And Nero reigns a Titus, if he will.
The fiery ſoul abhorr'd in Cataline,
In Decius charms, in Curtius is divine:
The ſame ambition can deſtroy or ſave,
And makes a patriot as it makes a knave.
This light and darkneſs in our chaos join'd.
What ſhall divide? The God within the mind.
Extremes in nature equal ends produce,
In man they join to ſome myſterious uſe;
Though each by turns the other's bound invade,
As, in ſome well-wrought picture, light and ſhade,
And oft ſo mix, the difference is too nice
Where ends the virtue, or begins the vice,
Fools! who from hence into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all.
If white and black blend, ſoften, and unite
A thouſand ways, is there no black or white?
Aſk your own heart, and nothing is ſo plain;
'Tis to miſtake them, coſts the time and pain.
Vice is a monſter of ſo frightful mien,
As, to be hated, needs but to be ſeen;
Yet ſeen too oft, familiar with her face,
We firſt endure, then pity, then embrace.
But where th' extreme of vice, was ne'er agreed:
Aſk where's the north; at York, 'tis on the Tweed;
In Scotland, at the Orcades; and there,
At Greenland, Zembla, or the Lord knows where.
No creature owns it in the firſt degree,
But thinks his neighbour further gone than he:
Ev'n thoſe who dwell beneath its very zone,
Or never feel the rage, or never own;
What happier natures ſhrink at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right.
Virtuous and vicious every man muſt be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wiſe;
And ev'n the beſt, by fits, what they deſpiſe.
'Tis but by parts we follow good or ill;
For, vice or virtue, ſelf directs it ſtill;
Each individual ſeeks a ſeveral goal;
But heaven's great view, is one, and that the whole.
That counter-works each folly and caprice;
That diſappoints th' effect of every vice:
That, happy frailties to all ranks apply'd;
Shame to the virgin, to the matron pride;
Fear to the ſtateſman, raſhneſs to the chief;
To kings preſumption, and to crowds belief:
That, virtue's ends from vanity can raiſe,
Which ſeeks no intereſt, no reward but praiſe;
And build on wants, and on defects of mind,
The joy, the peace, the glory of mankind.
Heaven forming each on other to depend,
A maſter, or a ſervant, or a friend,
Bids each on other for aſſiſtance call,
Till one man's weakneſs grows the ſtrength of all.
Wants, frailties, paſſions, cloſer ſtill ally
The common intereſt, or endear the tie.
To theſe we owe true friendſhip, love ſincere,
Each home-felt joy that life inherits here;
Yet from the ſame we learn, in its decline,
Thoſe joys, thoſe loves, thoſe intereſts, to reſign;
Taught half by reaſon, half by mere decay,
To welcome death, and calmly paſs away.
Whate'er the paſſion, knowledge, fame, or pelf,
Not one will change his neighbour with himſelf.
The learn'd is happy nature to explore,
The fool is happy that he knows no more;
The rich is happy in the plenty given,
The poor contents him with the care of heaven.
See the blind beggar dance, the cripple ſing,
The ſot a hero, lunatic a king;
The ſtarving chemiſt in his golden views,
Supremely bleſt, the poet in his muſe.
See ſome ſtrange comfort every ſtate attend,
And pride beſtow'd on all, a common friend:
See ſome fit paſſion every age ſupply;
Hope travels through, nor quits us when we die.
Behold the child, by nature's kindly law,
Pleas'd with a rattle, tickled with a ſtraw:

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 194, in the MS.

How oft with paſſion, virtue points her charms!
Then ſhines the hero, then the patriot warms.
Peleus' great ſon, or Brutus, who had known,
Had Lucrece been a whore, or Helen none?
But virtues oppoſite to make agree,
That, reaſon! is thy taſk, and worthy thee,
Hard taſk, cries Bibulus, and reaſon weak.
—Make it a point, dear Marquiſs, or a pique.
Once, for a whim, perſuade yourſelf to pay
A debt to reaſon, like a debt at play.
For right or wrong, have mortals ſuffer'd more?
B—— for his prince, or * * for his whore?
Whoſe ſelf-denials nature moſt controul?
His, who would ſave a ſixpence, or his ſoul?
Web for his health, a Chartreux for his ſin,
Contend they not which ſooneſt ſhall grow thin?
What we reſolve, we can: but here 's the fault,
We ne'er reſolve to do the thing we ought.
After ver. 220, in the firſt edition followed theſe:
A cheat! a whore! who ſtarts not at the name,
In all the inns of court or Drury-lane?

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 226, in the MS.

The colonel ſwears the agent is a dog;
The ſcrivener vows th' attorney is a rogue.
Againſt the thief th' attorney loud inveighs,
For whoſe ten pounds the country twenty pays.
The thief damns judges, and the knaves of ſtate;
And dying, mourns ſmall villains hang'd by great

Some livelier plaything gives his youth delight,
A little louder, but as empty quite;
Scarfs, garters, gold, amuse his riper stage,
And beads and prayer-books are the toys of age:
Pleas'd with this bauble still, as that before;
Till tir'd he sleeps, and life's poor play is o'er.
Meanwhile opinion gilds with varying rays
Those painted clouds that beautify our days;
Each want of happiness by hope supply'd,
And each vacuity of sense by pride:
These build as fast as knowledge can destroy;
In folly's cup still laughs the bubble, joy;
One prospect lost, another still we gain;
And not a vanity is giv'n in vain;
Ev'n mean self-love becomes, by force divine,
Those ale to measure others wants by thine.
See! and confess, one comfort still must rise;
'Tis this, Though man's a fool, yet God is wise.

EPISTLE III.

THE ARGUMENT.

Of the Nature and State of Man with respect to Society.

I. The whole universe one system of society, ver. 7, &c. Nothing made wholly for itself, nor yet wholly for another, ver. 27. The happiness of animals mutual, ver. 49. II. Reason or instinct operate alike to the good of each individual, ver. 79. Reason or instinct operate also to society in all animals, ver. 109. III. How far society carried by instinct, ver. 115. How much farther by reason, ver. 128. IV. Of that which is called the state of nature, ver. 144. Reason instructed by instinct in the invention of arts, ver. 166. and in the forms of society, ver. 176. V. Origin of political societies, ver. 196. Origin of monarchy, ver. 207. Patriarchal government, ver. 212.—VI. Origin of true religion and government, from the same principle, of love, ver. 231, &c. Origin of superstition and tyranny, from the same principle, of fear, ver. 237, &c. The influence of self-love operating to the social and public good, ver. 266. Restoration of true religion and government on their first principle, ver. 285. Mixed government, ver. 288. Various forms of each, and the true end of all, ver. 300, &c.

Here then we rest; "the universal cause
"Acts to one end, but acts by various laws."

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 1. In several edit. in 4to.
Learn, dulness, learn! "The universal cause," &c.
After ver. 46, in the former editions,
What care to tend, to lodge, to cram, to treat him!
All this he knew; but not that 'twas to eat him.
As far as goose could judge, he reason'd right;
But as to man, mistook the matter quite.

In all the madness of superfluous health,
The train of pride, the impudence of wealth,
Let this great truth be present night and day;
But most be present, if we preach or pray.
Look round our world; behold the chain of love
Combining all below, and all above.
See plastic nature working to this end,
The single atoms each to other tend,
Attract, attracted to, the next in place
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace.
See matter next, with various life endued,
Press to one centre still, the general good.
See dying vegetables life sustain,
See life dissolving vegatate again:
All forms that perish other forms supply,
(By turns we catch the vital breath, and die)
Like bubbles on the sea of matter borne,
They rise, they break, and to that sea return.
Nothing is foreign; parts relate to whole;
One all extending, all-preserving soul
Connects each being, greatest with the least;
Made beast in aid of man, and man of beast;
All serv'd, all serving: nothing stands alone;
The chain holds on, and where it ends, unknown.
Has God, thou fool! work'd solely for thy good,
Thy joy, thy pastime, thy attire, thy food!
Who for thy table feeds the wanton fawn,
For him as kindly spread the flowery lawn:
Is it for thee the lark ascends and sings!
Joy tunes his voice, joy elevates his wings.
Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?
Loves of his own and raptures swell the note.
The bounding steed you pompously bestride,
Shares with his lord the pleasure and the pride.
Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain?
The birds of heaven shall vindicate their grain.
Thine the full harvest of the golden year?
Part pays, and justly, the deserving steer:
The hog, that ploughs not, nor obeys thy call,
Lives on the labours of this lord of all.
Know, nature's children all divide her care;
The fur that warms a monarch, warm'd a bear.
While man exclaims, "See all things for my use!"
"See man for mine!" replies a pamper'd goose:
And just as short of reason he must fall,
Who thinks all made for one, not one for all.
Grant that the powerful still the weak controul;
Be man the wit and tyrant of the whole:
Nature that tyrant checks; he only knows,
And helps another creature's wants and woes.
Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insects gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings?
Man cares for all: to birds he gives his woods,
To beasts his pastures, and to fish his floods:
For some his interest prompts him to provide,
For more his pleasure, yet for more his pride,
All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.
That very life his learned hunger craves,
He saves from famine, from the savage saves;
Nay, feasts the animal he dooms his feast,
And, till he ends the being, makes it blest:
Which sees no more the stroke, or feels the pain,
Than favour'd man by touch ethereal slain.

The creature had his feaſt of life before ;
Thou too muſt periſh, when thy feaſt is o'er !
To each unthinking being, heaven a friend,
Gives not the uſeleſs knowledge of its end :
To man imparts it ; but with ſuch a view
As, while he dreads it, makes him hope it too :
The hour conceal'd, and ſo remote the fear,
Death ſtill draws nearer, never ſeeming near.
Great ſtanding miracle ! that heaven aſſign'd
Its only thinking thing this turn of mind.

II. Whether with reaſon, or with inſtinct bleſt,
Know, all enjoy that power which ſuits them beſt ;
To bliſs alike by that direction tend,
And find the means proportion'd to their end.
Say, where full inſtinct is th' unerring guide,
What pope or council can they need beſide ?
Reaſon, however able, cool at beſt,
Cares not for ſervice, or but ſerves when preſt,
Stays till we call, and then not often near ;
But honeſt inſtinct comes a volunteer,
Sure never to o'erſhoot, but juſt to hit ;
While ſtill too wide or ſhort is human wit ;
Sure by quick nature happineſs to gain,
Which heavier reaſon labours at in vain.
This too ſerves always, reaſon never long :
One muſt go right, the other may go wrong.
See then the acting and comparing powers
One in their nature, which are now in ours !
And reaſon raiſe o'er inſtinct as you can,
In this 'tis God directs, in that 'tis man.
Who taught the nations of the field and wood
To ſhun their poiſon, and to chooſe their food ?
Prefcient, the tides or tempeſts to withſtand,
Build on the wave, or arch beneath the ſand ?
Who made the ſpider parallels deſign,
Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line ?
Who bid the ſtork, Columbus-like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before ?
Who calls the council, ſtates the certain day ?
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way ?

III. God, in the nature of each being, founds
Its proper bliſs, and ſets it proper bounds :
But as he fram'd a whole, the whole to bleſs,
On mutual wants built mutual happineſs :
So from the firſt, ETERNAL ORDER ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man.
Whate'er of life all-quickening æther keeps,
Or breathes through air, or ſhoots beneath the deeps,
Or pours profuſe on earth, one nature feeds
The vital flame, and ſwells the genial ſeeds,
Not man alone, but all that roam the wood,
Or wing the ſky, or roll along the flood,
Each loves itſelf, but not itſelf alone,
Each ſex deſires alike, till two are one.

Nor ends the pleaſure with the fierce embrace ;
They love themſelves, a third time, in their race.
Thus beaſt and bird their common charge attend,
The mothers nurſe it, and the ſires defend ;
The young diſmiſs'd to wander earth or air,
There ſtops the inſtinct, and there ends the care ;
The link diſſolves, each ſeeks a freſh embrace,
Another love ſucceeds, another race.
A longer care man's helpleſs kind demands ;
That longer care contracts more laſting bands :
Reflection, reaſon, ſtill the ties improve,
At once extend the intereſt, and the love :
With choice we fix, with ſympathy we burn ;
Each virtue in each paſſion takes its turn ;
And ſtill new needs, new helps, new habits riſe,
That graft benevolence on charities.
Still as one brood, and as another roſe,
Theſe natural love maintain'd, habitual thoſe :
The laſt, ſcarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpleſs him from whom their life began :
Memory and forecaſt juſt returns engage,
That pointed back to youth, this on to age ;
While pleaſure, gratitude, and hope, combin'd,
Still ſpread the intereſt, and preſerve the kind.

IV. Nor think, in nature's ſtate they blindly trod ;
The ſtate of nature was the reign of God :
Self-love and ſocial at her birth began,
Union the bond of all things, and of man.
Pride then was not ; nor arts, that pride to aid ;
Man walk'd with beaſt, joint tenant of the ſhade ;
The ſame his table, and the ſame his bed ;
No murder cloth'd him, and no murder fed.
In the ſame temple, the reſounding wood,
All vocal beings hymn'd their equal God :
The ſhrine with gore unſtain'd, with gold undreſs'd,
Unbrib'd, unbloody, ſtood the blameleſs prieſt :
Heaven's attribute was univerſal care,
And man's prerogative, to rule, but ſpare.
Ah ! how unlike the man of times to come !
Of half that live the butcher and the tomb ;
Who, foe to nature, hears the general groan,
Murders their ſpecies, and betrays his own.
But juſt diſeaſe to luxury ſucceeds,
And every death its own avenger breeds ;
The fury-paſſions from that blood began,
And turn'd on man, a fiercer ſavage, man.
See him from nature riſing ſlow to art !
To copy inſtinct then was reaſon's part :
Thus then to man the voice of nature ſpake—
" Go, from the creatures thy inſtructions take :
" Learn from the birds what food the thickets yield ;
" Learn from the beaſts the phyſic of the field ;
" Thy arts of building from the bee receive ;
" Learn of the mole to plough, the worm to weave ;
" Learn of the little Nautilus to ſail,
" Spread the thin oar, and catch the driving gale.
" Here too all forms of ſocial union find,
" And hence let reaſon, late, inſtruct mankind :
" Here ſubterranean works and cities ſee ;
" There towns aerial on the waving tree.
" Learn each ſmall people's genius, policies,
" The ant's republic, and the realm of bees ;

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 84. in the MS.

While man, with opening views of various ways,
Confounded, by the aid of knowledge ſtrays ;
Too weak to chooſe, yet chooſing ſtill in haſte,
One moment gives the pleaſure and diſtaſte.

" How thoſe in common all their wealth beſtow,
" And anarchy without confuſion know;
" And theſe for ever, though a monarch reign,
" Their ſeparate cells and properties maintain.
" Mark what unvary'd laws preſerve each ſtate,
" Laws wiſe as nature, and as fix'd as fate.
" In vain thy reaſon finer webs ſhall draw,
" Entangle juſtice in her net of law,
" And right, too rigid, harden into wrong;
" Still for the ſtrong too weak, the weak too ſtrong.
" Yet go! and thus o'er all the creatures ſway,
" Thus let the wiſer make the reſt obey:
" And for thoſe arts mere inſtinct could afford,
" Be crown'd as monarchs, or as gods ador'd."

V. Great Nature ſpoke; obſervant man obey'd;
Cities were built, ſocieties were made:
Here roſe one little ſtate; another near [fear.
Grew by like means, and join'd, through love or
Did here the trees with ruddier burdens bend,
And there the ſtreams in purer rills deſcend?
What war could raviſh, commerce could beſtow;
And he return'd a friend, who came a foe.
Converſe and love mankind might ſtrongly draw,
When love was liberty, and nature law.
Thus ſtates were form'd; the name of king unknown,
Till common intereſt plac'd the ſway in one.
'Twas virtue only (or in arts or arms,
Diffuſing bleſſings, or averting harms)
The ſame which in a ſire the ſons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made.

VI. Till then, by nature crown'd, each patriarch ſat,
King, prieſt, and parent, of his growing ſtate:
On him, their ſecond providence, they hung;
Their law his eye, their oracle his tongue.
He from the wondering furrow call'd the food,
Taught to command the fire, controul the flood,
Draw forth the monſters of th' abyſs profound,
Or ſetch th' aerial eagle to the ground.
Till dropping, ſickening, dying, they began
Whom they rever'd as God to mourn as man:
Then, looking up from ſire to ſire, explor'd
One great Firſt Father, and that firſt ador'd.
Or plain tradition that this All begun,
Convey'd unbroken faith from ſire to ſon;
The worker from the work diſtinct was known,
And ſimple reaſon never ſought but one:
Ere wit oblique had broke that ſteady light,
Man, like his Maker, ſaw that all was right;
To virtue, in the paths of pleaſure trod,
And own'd a father when he own'd a God.
Love all the faith, and all th' allegiance then;
For nature knew no right divine in men,
No ill could fear in God; and underſtood
A ſovereign being, but a ſovereign good.
True faith, true policy, united ran;
That was but love of God, and this of man.
Who firſt taught ſouls enſlav'd, and realms undone,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world, and counter-work its cauſe?
Force firſt made conqueſt, and that conqueſt, law;
Till ſuperſtition taught the tyrant awe,
Then ſhar'd the tyranny, then lent it aid,
And gods of conquerors, ſlaves of ſubjects made:
She 'midſt the lightning's blaze, and thunder's ſound,
When rock'd the mountains, and when groan'd the ground,
She taught the weak to bend, the proud to pray,
To power unſeen, and mightier far than they:
She, from the rending earth, and burſting ſkies,
Saw gods deſcend, and fiends infernal riſe:
Here fix'd the dreadful, there the bleſt abodes;
Fear made her devils, and weak hope her gods;
Gods partial, changeful, paſſionate, unjuſt,
Whoſe attributes were rage, revenge, or luſt;
Such as the ſouls of cowards might conceive,
And, form'd like tyrants, tyrants would believe.
Zeal then, not charity, became the guide;
And hell was built on ſpite, and heaven on pride.
Then ſacred ſeem'd th' ethereal vault no more;
Altars grew marble then, and reek'd with gore:
Then firſt the Flamen taſted living food;
Next his grim idol ſmear'd with human blood;
With heaven's own thunders ſhook the world below,
And play'd the God an engine on his foe.
So drives ſelf-love, through juſt, and through unjuſt,
To one man's power, ambition, lucre, luſt:
The ſame ſelf-love, in all, becomes the cauſe
Of what reſtrains him, government and laws.
For, what one likes, if others like as well,
What ſerves one will, when many wills rebel?
How ſhall he keep, what, ſleeping or awake,
A weaker may ſurpriſe, a ſtronger take?
His ſafety muſt his liberty reſtrain:
All join to guard what each deſires to gain.
Forc'd into virtue thus, by ſelf-defence,
Ev'n kings learn'd juſtice and benevolence:
Self-love forſook the path it firſt purſued,
And found the private in the public good.
'Twas then the ſtudious head or generous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, roſe but to reſtore
The faith and moral, nature gave before;
Relum'd her ancient light, not kindled new;
If not God's image, yet his ſhadow drew:

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 197, in the firſt editions,
Who for thoſe arts they learn'd of brutes before,
As kings ſhall crown them, or as gods adore.

Ver. 201. Here roſe one little ſtate, &c.] In the MS. thus:
The neighbours leagu'd to guard their common ſpot;
And love was nature's dictate; murder, not.
For want alone each animal contends;
Tigers with tigers, that remov'd, are friends.
Plain nature's wants the common mother crown'd,
She pour'd her acorns, herbs, and ſtreams around.
No treaſure then for rapine to invade,
What need to fight for ſun-ſhine or for ſhade?
And half the cauſe of conteſt was remov'd,
When beauty could be kind to all who lov'd.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings,
The less, or greater, set so justly true,
That touching one must strike the other too;
Till jarring interests of themselves create
Th' according music of a well-mix'd state.
Such is the world's great harmony, that springs
From order, union, full consent of things:
Where small and great, where weak and mighty, made
To serve, not suffer, strengthen, not invade;
More powerful each as needful to the rest,
And, in proportion as it blesses, blest;
Draw to one point, and to one centre bring
Beast, man, or angel, servant, lord, or king.
For forms of government let fools contest;
Whate'er is best administer'd is best:
For modes of faith, let graceless zealots fight;
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right;
In faith and hope the world will disagree,
But all mankind's concern is charity:
All must be false that thwarts this one great end;
And all of God, that bless mankind, or mend.
Man, like the generous vine, supported lives:
The strength he gains is from th' embrace he gives.
On their own axis as the planets run.
Yet make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul;
And one regards itself, and one the whole.
Thus God and nature link'd the general frame,
And bade self-love and social be the same.

EPISTLE IV.

Of the Nature and State of Man with respect to Happiness.

THE ARGUMENT.

I. False notions of happiness, philosophical and popular, answered from ver. 19 to 77. II. It is the end of all men, and attainable by all, ver. 30. God intends happiness to be equal; and to be so, it must be social, since all particular happiness depends on general, and since he governs by general, not particular laws, ver. 37. As it is necessary for order, and the peace and welfare of society, that external goods should be unequal, happiness is not made to consist in these, ver. 51. But, notwithstanding that inequality, the balance of happiness among mankind is kept even by providence, by the two passions of hope and fear. ver. 70.—III. What the happiness of individuals is, as far as is consistent with the constitution of this world; and that the good man has here the advantage, ver. 77. The error of imputing to virtue what are only the calamities of nature, or of fortune, ver. 94. IV. The folly of expecting that God should alter his general laws in favour of particulars, ver. 121. V. That we are not judges who are good; but that, whoever they are, they must be happiest, ver. 133, &c. VI. That external goods are not the proper rewards, but often inconsistent with, or destructive of virtue, ver. 167. That even these can make no man happy without virtue: Instanced in riches, ver. 185. Honours, ver. 193. Nobility, ver. 205. Greatness, ver. 217. Fame, ver. 237. Superior talents, ver. 257, &c. With pictures of human infelicity in men, possessed of them all. ver. 269, &c. VII. That virtue only constitutes a happiness, whose object is universal, and whose prospect eternal, ver. 307. That the perfection of virtue and happiness consists in a conformity to the Order of Providence here, and a resignation to it here and hereafter, ver. 326, &c.

Oh Happiness! our being's end and aim!
Good, pleasure, ease, content! whate'er thy name:
That something still which prompts th' eternal sigh,
For which we bear to live, or dare to die,
Which still so near us, yet beyond us lies,
O'erlook'd, seen double, by the fool and wise:
Plant of celestial seed; if dropp'd below,
Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow?
Fair opening to some court's propitious shine,
Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine?
Twin'd with the wreaths Parnassian laurels yield,
Or reap'd in iron harvests of the field?
Where grows? where grows it not? If vain our toil,
We ought to blame the culture, not the soil:
Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere,
'Tis no where to be found, or every where:
'Tis never to be bought, but always free,
And fled from monarchs, St. John! dwells with thee.
Ask of the learn'd the way? The learn'd are blind:
This bids to serve, and that to shun mankind;
Some place the bliss in action, some in ease,
Those call it pleasure, and contentment these:
Some, sunk to beasts, find pleasure end in pain;
Some, swell'd to gods, confess ev'n virtue vain;
Or, indolent, to each extreme they fall,
To trust in ev'ry thing, or doubt of all.
Who thus define it, say they more or less,
Than this, that happiness is happiness?
Take nature's path, and mad opinion's leave;
All states can reach it, and all heads conceive;
Obvious her goods, in no extreme they dwell;
There needs but thinking right, and meaning well;
And, mourn our various portions as we please,
Equal is common sense, and common ease.
Remember, man, "the Universal Cause
"Acts not by partial, but by gen'ral laws,"
And makes what happiness we justly call,
Subsist not in the good of one, but all.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 1. Oh happiness, &c.] in the MS. thus:
Oh happiness, to which we all aspire,
Wing'd with strong hope, and borne by full desire;
That ease, for which in want, in wealth we sigh;
That ease, for which we labour, and we die.

There's not a blessing individuals find,
But some way leans and hearkens to the kind:
No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit, rests self-satisfy'd:
Who most to shun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend:
Abstract what others feel, what others think,
All pleasures sicken, and all glories sink:
Each has his share; and who would more obtain,
Shall find, the pleasure pays not half the pain.

Order is Heaven's first law; and this confest,
Some are, and must be, greater than the rest,
More rich, more wise; but who infers from hence
That such are happier, shocks all common sense.
Heaven to mankind impartial we confess,
If all are equal in their happiness:
But mutual wants this happiness increase;
All nature's difference keeps all nature's peace.
Condition, circumstance, is not the thing;
Bliss is the same in subject or in king,
In who obtain defence, or who defend,
In him who is, or him who finds a friend:
Heaven breathes through every member of the whole
One common blessing, as one common soul.
But fortune's gifts if each alike possest,
And each were equal, must not all contest?
If then to all men happiness was meant,
God in externals could not place content.

Fortune her gifts may variously dispose,
And these be happy call'd, unhappy those;
But heaven's just balance equal will appear,
While those are plac'd in hope, and these in fear:
Not present good or ill, the joy or curse,
But future views of better, or of worse.

Oh, sons of earth! attempt ye still to rise,
By mountains pil'd on mountains, to the skies?
Heaven still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
And buries madmen in the heaps they raise.

Know, all the good that individuals find,
Or God and nature meant to mere mankind,
Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of sense,
Lie in three words, Health, Peace, and Competence.
But Health consists with temperance alone;
And Peace, oh virtue! Peace is all thy own.
The good or bad the gifts of Fortune gain;
But these less taste them, as they worse obtain.

Say, in pursuit of profit or delight, [right?
Who risk the most, that take wrong means, or
Of vice or virtue, whether blest or curst,
Which meets contempt, or which compassion first?
Count all th' advantage prosperous vice attains,
'Tis but what virtue flies from and disdains:
And grant the bad what happiness they would,
One they must want, which is, to pass for good.
Oh blind to truth, and God's whole scheme below,
Who fancy bliss to vice, to virtue woe!
Who sees and follows that great scheme the best,
Best knows the blessing, and will most be blest.
But fools, the good alone, unhappy call,
For ills or accidents that chance to all.
See Falkland dies, the virtuous and the just!
See godlike Turenne prostrate on the dust!
See Sidney bleeds amid the martia strife!
Was this their virtue, or contempt of life?
Say, was it virtue, more though heaven ne'er gave,
Lamented Digby! sunk thee to the grave?
Tell me, if virtue made the son expire,
Why, full of days and honour, lives the sire?
Why drew Marseilles' good bishop purer breath,
When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death?
Or why so long (in life if long can be)
Lent heaven a parent to the poor and me?
What makes all physical or moral ill?
There deviates nature, and here wanders will.
God sends not ill; if rightly understood,
Or partial ill is universal good,
Or change admits, or nature lets it fall,
Short, and but rare, till man improv'd it all.
We just as wisely might of heaven complain
That righteous Abel was destroy'd by Cain,
As that the virtuous son is ill at ease
When his lewd father gave the dire disease.
Think we, like some weak prince, th' Eternal Cause
Prone for his favourites to reverse his laws?
Shall burning Ætna, if a sage requires,
Forget to thunder, and recal her fires?
On air or sea new motions be impress,
Oh blameless Bethel! to relieve thy breast?
When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by?
Or some old temple, nodding to its fall,
For Chartres' head reserve the hanging wall?
But still this world (so fitted for the knave)
Contents us not, A better shall we have?
A kingdom of the just then let it be:
But first consider how those just agree.
The good must merit God's peculiar care;
But who, but God, can tell us who they are?
One thinks on Calvin heaven's own spirit fell;
Another deems him instrument of hell;

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 52, in the MS.

Say not, "Heaven's here profuse, there poorly saves,
"And for one monarch makes a thousand slaves."
You'll find, when causes and their ends are known,
'Twas for the thousand Heaven has made that one.

After ver. 66, in the MS.

'Tis peace of mind alone is at a stay:
The rest mad fortune gives or takes away.
All other bliss by accident's debarr'd;
But virtue's, in the instant, a reward;
In hardest trials operates the best,
And more is reliss'd as the more distrest.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 92, in the MS.

Let sober moralists correct their speech,
No bad man's happy; he is great, or rich.

After ver. 116, in the MS.

Of every evil, since the world began,
The real source is not in God, but man.

If Calvin feel heaven's blessing, or its rod,
This cries there is, and that, there is no God.
What shocks one part, will edify the rest,
Nor with one system can they all be blest.
The very best will variously incline,
And what rewards your virtue, punish mine.
Whatever is, is right. This world, 'tis true,
Was made for Cæsar—but for Titus too;
And which more blest? who chain'd his country, say,
Or he whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?
"But sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed."
What then? Is the reward of virtue bread?
That, vice may merit, 'tis the price of toil;
The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil;
The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain.
The good man may be weak, be indolent;
Nor is his claim to plenty, but content.
But grant him riches, your demand is o'er?
"No—shall the good want health, the good want power?"
Add health and power, and every earthly thing,
"Why bounded power? why private? why no king?"
Nay, why external for internal given?
Why is not man a god, and earth a heaven?
Who ask and reason thus, will scarce conceive
God gives enough, while he has more to give;
Immense the power, immense were the demand;
Say, at what part of nature will they stand?
What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
The soul's calm sun shine, and the heart-felt joy,
Is virtue's prize: A better would you fix?
Then give Humility a coach and six,
Justice a conqueror's sword, or Truth a gown,
Or Public Spirit its great cure, a crown.
Weak, foolish man! will Heaven reward us there
With the same trash mad mortals wish for here?
The boy and man an individual makes,
Yet sigh'st thou now for apples and for cakes?
Go, like the Indian, in another life
Expect thy dog, thy bottle, and thy wife;
As well as dream such trifles are assign'd,
As toys and empires, for a godlike mind.
Rewards, that either would to virtue bring
No joy, or be destructive of the thing;
How oft by these at sixty are undone
The virtues of a saint at twenty-one!
To whom can riches give repute, or trust,
Content, or pleasure, but the good and just?
Judges and senates have been bought for gold;
Esteem and love were never to be sold.

Oh fool! to think God hates the worthy mind,
The lover and the love of human kind,
Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience clear
Because he wants a thousand pounds a-year.
Honour and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part, there all the honour lies.
Fortune in men has some small difference made,
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade;
The cobler apron'd, and the parson gown'd.
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd.
"What differ more (you cry) than crown and cowl!"
I'll tell you, friend! a wise man and a fool.
You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow:
The rest is all but leather or prunella.
Stuck o'er with titles and hung round with strings,
That thou mayst be by kings, or whores of kings.
Boast the pure blood of an illustrious race,
In quiet flow from Lucrece to Lucrece:
But by your fathers' worth if yours you rate,
Count me those only who were good and great.
Go! if your ancient, but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go! and pretend your family is young;
Nor own your fathers have been fools so long.
What can ennoble sots, or slaves, or cowards?
Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards [lies:
Look next on greatness; say where greatness
"Where, but among the heroes and the wise?"
Heroes are much the same, the point's agreed,
From Macedonia's madman to the Swede;
The whole strange purpose of their lives, to find,
Or make, an enemy of all mankind!
Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward further than his nose.
No less alike the politic and wise:
All fly slow things, with circumspective eyes:
Men in their loose unguarded hours they take,
Not that themselves are wise, but others weak.
But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat;
'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
Who noble ends by noble means obtains,
Or failing, smiles in exile or in chains,
Like good Aurelius let him reign, or bleed
Like Socrates, that man is great indeed.
What's fame? a fancy'd life in others' breath,
A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death.
Just what you hear, you have; and what's unknown,
The same (my lord) if Tully's, or your own.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 142, in some editions,

Give each a system, all must be at strife;
What different systems for a man and wife!

The joke, though lively, was ill placed, and therefore struck out of the text.

After ver. 172, in the MS.

Say, what rewards this idle world imparts,
Or fit for searching heads or honest hearts.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 207. Boast the pure blood, &c.] In the MS. thus:

The richest blood, right-honourably old,
Down from Lucretia to Lucretia roll'd,
May swell thy heart and gallop in thy breast,
Without one dash of usher or of priest:
Thy pride as much despise all other pride,
As Christ Church once all colleges beside.

All that we feel of it begins and ends
In the small circle of our foes or friends;
To all beside as much an empty shade
An Eugene living, as a Cæsar dead;
Alike or when, or where they shone, or shine,
Or on the Rubicon, or on the Rhine.
A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God.
Fame but from death a villain's name can save,
As justice tears his body from the grave;
When what t' oblivion better were resign'd,
Is hung on high to poison half mankind.
All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years out-weighs
Of stupid starers, and of loud huzzas;
And more true joy Marcellus exil'd feels,
Than Cæsar with a senate at his heels.
In parts superior what advantage lies?
Tell (for you can) what is it to be wise?
'Tis but to know how little can be known!
To see all others faults, and feel our own:
Condemn'd in business or in arts to drudge,
Without a second, or without a judge:
Truths would you teach, or save a sinking land?
All fear, none aid you, and few understand.
Painful pre-eminence! yourself to view
Above life's weakness, and its comforts too.
Bring then these blessings to a strict account;
Make fair deductions; see to what they mount:
How much of other each is sure to cost;
How much for other oft is wholly lost;
How inconsistent greater goods with these;
How sometimes life is risqu'd, and always ease:
Think, and if still the things thy envy call,
Say, wouldst thou be the man to whom they fall?
To sigh for ridbands if thou art so silly,
Mark how they grace Lord Umbra, or Sir Billy.
Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life;
Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife,
If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shin'd,
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind:
Or ravish'd with the whistling of a name,
See Cromwell, damn'd to everlasting fame!
If all, united, thy ambition call,
From ancient story, learn to scorn them all.
There, in the rich, the honour'd, fam'd, and great,
See the false scale of happiness complete!
In hearts of kings, or arms of queens who lay,
How happy! those to ruin, these betray,
Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows,
From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose;
In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
And all that rais'd the hero, sunk the man:
Now Europe's laurels on their brows behold,
But stain'd with blood, or ill exchang'd for gold:
Then see them broke with toils, or sunk in ease,
Or infamous for plunder'd provinces.
O wealth ill-fated! which no act of fame
E'er taught to shine, or sanctify'd from shame!
What greater bliss attends their close of life?
Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade,
And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.
Alas! not dazzled with their noon-tide ray,
Compute the morn and evening to the day;
The whole amount of that enormous fame,
A tale, that blends their glory with their shame!
Know then this truth (enough for man to know)
"Virtue alone is happiness below."
The only point where human bliss stands still,
And tastes the good without the fall to ill;
Where only merit constant pay receives,
Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives;
The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
And if it lose, attended with no pain:
Without satiety, though e'er so bless'd,
And but more relish'd as the more distress'd:
The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears:
Good, from each object, from each place acquir'd,
For ever exercis'd, yet never tir'd;
Never elated, while one man's oppress'd;
Never dejected, while another's blest;
And where no wants, no wishes can remain,
Since but to wish more virtue, is to gain.
See the sole bliss heaven could on all bestow!
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know:
Yet poor with fortune, and with learning blind,
The bad must miss; the good, untaught, will find;
Slave to no sect, who takes no private road,
But looks through nature, up to nature's God;
Pursues that chain which links th' immense design,
Joins heaven and earth, and mortal and divine;
Sees, that no being any bliss can know,
But touches some above, and some below;
Learns from this union of the rising whole,
The first, last purpose of the human soul;
And knows where faith, law, morals, all began,
All end, in love of God, and love of man.
For him alone, hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind.
He sees, why Nature plants in man alone
Hope of known bliss, and faith in bliss unknown:
(Nature, whose dictates to no other kind
Are given in vain, but what they seek they find),
Wise is her present; she connects in this
His greatest virtue with his greatest bliss;
At once his own bright prospect to be blest,
And strongest motive to assist the rest.
Self-love thus push'd to social, to divine,
Gives thee to make thy neighbour's blessing thine.
Is this too little for the boundless heart?
Extend it, let thy enemies have part;

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 316, in the MS.

Ev'n while it seems unequal to dispose,
And chequers all the good man's joys with woes,
'Tis but to teach him to support each state,
With patience this, with moderation that;
And raise his base on that one solid joy,
Which conscience gives, and nothing can destroy.

Graſp the whole worlds of reaſon, life, and ſenſe,
In one cloſe ſyſtem of benevolence:
Happier as kinder, in whate'er degree,
And height of bliſs but height of charity.
God loves from whole to parts: but human ſoul
Muſt riſe from individual to the whole.
Self-love but ſerves the virtuous mind to wake,
As the ſmall pebble ſtirs the peaceful lake;
The centre mov'd, a circle ſtraight ſucceeds,
Another ſtill, and ſtill another ſpreads;
Friend, parent, neighbour, firſt it will embrace;
His country next; and next all human race;
Wide and more wide, th' o'erflowings of the mind
Take every creature in, of every kind;
Earth ſmiles around, with boundleſs bounty bleſt,
And heaven beholds its image in his breaſt.
Come, then, my friend! my genius! come along;
Oh, maſter of the poet, and the ſong!

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 373. Come then, my friend! &c.] In the MS. thus:

And now tranſported o'er ſo vaſt a plain,
While the wing'd courſer flies with all her rein,
While heaven-ward now her mounting wing ſhe feels,
Now ſcatter'd fools fly trembling from her heels,
Wilt thou, my St. John! keep her courſe in ſight,
Confine her fury, and aſſiſt her flight?
And while the muſe now ſtoops, or now aſcends,
To man's low paſſions, or their glorious ends,
Teach me, like thee, in various nature wiſe,
To fall with dignity, with temper riſe;
Form'd by thy converſe, happily to ſteer,
From grave to gay, from lively to ſevere;
Correct with ſpirit, eloquent with caſe,
Intent to reaſon, or polite to pleaſe.
Oh! while along the ſtream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame;
Say, ſhall my little bark attendant ſail,
Purſue the triumph, and partake the gale?
When ſtateſmen, heroes, kings, in duſt repoſe,
Whoſe ſons ſhall bluſh their fathers were thy foes,
Shall then this verſe to future age pretend
Thou wert my guide, philoſopher, and friend?
That, urg'd by thee, I turn'd the tuneful art,
From ſounds to things, from fancy to the heart;
For wit's falſe mirror held up nature's light;
Shew'd erring pride, Whatever is, is right;
That reaſon, paſſion, anſwer one great aim;
That true ſelf-love and ſocial are the ſame;
That virtue only makes our bliſs below;
And all our knowledge is, Ourſelves to know.

VARIATIONS.

Ver 397. That virtue only, &c] In the MS. thus:

That juſt to find a God is all we can,
And all the ſtudy of mankind is man.

THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER.

DEO OPT. MAX.

It may be proper to obſerve, that ſome paſſages, in the preceding Eſſay, having been unjuſtly ſuſpected of a tendency towards fate and naturaliſm, the author compoſed this Prayer as the ſum of all, to ſhow that his ſyſtem was founded in free-will, and terminated in piety: That the Firſt Cauſe was as well the Lord and Governor of the Univerſe as the Creator of it; and that, by ſubmiſſion to his will (the great principle enforced throughout the Eſſay) was not meant the ſuffering ourſelves to be carried along by a blind determination, but the reſting in a religious acquieſcence, and confidence full of hope and immortality. To give all this the greater weight, the poet choſe for his model the Lord's Prayer, which, of all others, beſt deſerves the title prefixed to this Paraphraſe.

DR. WARBURTON.

FATHER of all! in every age,
In every clime ador'd,
By ſaint, by ſavage, and by ſage,
Jehovah, Jove, or Lord!

Thou Great Firſt Cauſe, leaſt underſtood;
Who all my ſenſe confin'd
To know but this, that thou art good,
And that myſelf am blind;

Yet gave me, in this dark eſtate,
To ſee the good from ill;
And, binding nature faſt in fate,
Left free the human will:

What conſcience dictates to be done,
Or warns me not to do,
This, teach me more than hell to ſhun,
That, more than heaven purſue.

What bleſſings thy free bounty gives,
Let me not caſt away;
For God is paid when man receives,
T' enjoy is to obey.

Yet not to earth's contracted ſpan
Thy goodneſs let me bound,
Or think thee Lord alone of man,
When thouſand worlds are round:

Let not this weak, unknowing hand
Preſume thy bolts to throw,
And deal damnation round the land,
On each I judge thy foe.

If I am right, thy grace impart,
Still in the right to ſtay:
If I am wrong, oh, teach my heart
To find that better way!

Save me alike from fooliſh pride,
Or impious diſcontent,
At aught thy wiſdom has deny'd,
Or aught thy goodneſs lent.

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I ſee;
That mercy I to others ſhow,
That mercy ſhow to me.

Mean though I am, not wholly ſo,
Since quicken'd by thy breath;
O, lead me wherefoe'er I go,
Through this day's life or death.

This day, be bread and peace my lot:
All elſe beneath the ſun,
Thou know'ſt if beſt beſtow'd or not,
And let thy will be done.

To thee, whoſe temple is all ſpace,
Whoſe altar, earth, ſea, ſkies!
One chorus let all being raiſe!
All nature's incenſe riſe!

MORAL ESSAYS,

IN FOUR EPISTLES.

TO SEVERAL PERSONS.

" Eſt brevitate opus, ut currat ſententia, neu ſe
" Impediat verbis laſſas onerantibus aures:
" Et ſermone opus eſt modo triſti, ſæpe jocoſo,
" Defendente vicem modo Rhetoris atque Poetæ,
" Interdum urbani, parcentis viribus, atque
" Extenuantis eas conſultò." HOR.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE Eſſay on Man was intended to have been compriſed in four books.

The firſt of which, the author has given us under that title, in four epiſtles.

The ſecond was to have conſiſted of the ſame number: 1. Of the extent and limits of human reaſon. 2. Of thoſe arts and ſciences, and of the parts of them, which are uſeful, and therefore attainable, together with thoſe which are unuſeful, and therefore unattainable. 3. Of the nature, ends, uſe, and application of the different capacities of men. 4. Of the uſe of learning, of the ſcience of the world, and of wit; concluding with a ſatire againſt a miſapplication of them, illuſtrated by pictures, characters, and examples.

The third book regarded civil regimen, or the ſcience of politics, in which the ſeveral forms of a republic were to be examined and explained; together with the ſeveral modes of religious worſhip, as far forth as they affect ſociety; between which the author always ſuppoſed there was the moſt intereſting relation, and cloſeſt connection; ſo that this part would have treated of civil and religious ſociety in their full extent.

The fourth and laſt book concerned private ethics, or practical morality, conſidered in all the circumſtances, orders, profeſſions, and ſtations of human life.

The ſcheme of all this had been maturely digeſted, and communicated to Lord Bolingbroke, Dr. Swift, and one or two more; and was intended for the only work of his riper years; but was, partly through ill health, partly through diſcouragements from the depravity of the times, and partly on prudential and other conſiderations, interrupted, poſtponed, and, laſtly, in a manner laid aſide.

But as this was the author's favourite work, which more exactly reflected the image of his ſtrong capacious mind, and as we can have but a very imperfect idea of it from the "diſjecta membra Poetæ," that now remain, it may not be amiſs to be a little more particular concerning each of theſe projected books.

The firſt, as it treats of man in the abſtract, and conſiders him in general under every of his relations, becomes the foundation, and furniſhes out the ſubjects, of the three following; ſo that

The ſecond book was to take up again the firſt and ſecond epiſtles of the firſt book, and treats of man in his intellectual capacity at large, as has been explained above. Of this only a ſmall part of the concluſion (which, as we ſaid, was to have contained a ſatire againſt the miſapplication of wit and learning), may be found in the fourth book of the Dunciad, and up and down, occaſionally, in the other three.

The third book, in like manner, was to re-aſſume the ſubject of the third epiſtle of the firſt, which treats of man in his ſocial, political, and religious capacity. But this part the poet afterwards conceived might be beſt executed in an Epic Poem, as the action would make it more animated, and the fable leſs invidious; in which all the great principles of true and falſe governments and religions ſhould be chiefly delivered in feigned examples.

The fourth and laſt book was to purſue the ſubject of the fourth epiſtle of the firſt, and treats of ethics, or practical morality; and would have conſiſted of many members; of which the four following epiſtles were detached portions: the two firſt, on the characters of men and women, being the introductory part of this concluding book.

DR. WARBURTON.

EPISTLE I.

TO SIR RICHARD TEMPLE, LORD COBHAM.

Of the Knowledge and Characters of Men.

THE ARGUMENT.

I. That it is not sufficient for this knowledge to consider man in the abstract: books will not serve the purpose, nor yet our own experience singly, ver. 1. General maxims, unless they be formed upon both, will but be notional, ver. 10. Some peculiarity in every man, characteristic to himself, yet varying from himself, ver. 15. Difficulties arising from our own passions, fancies, faculties, &c. ver 31. The shortness of life to observe in, and the uncertainty of the principles of action in men to observe by, ver. 37, &c. Our own principle of action often hid from ourselves, ver. 41. Some few characters plain, but in general confounded, dissembled, or inconsistent, ver. 51. The same man utterly different in different places and seasons, ver. 71. Unimaginable weaknesses in the greatest, ver. 70. &c. Nothing constant and certain but God and nature, ver. 95. No judging of the motives from the actions; the same actions proceeding from contrary motives, and the same motives influencing contrary actions, ver. 100. II. Yet, to form characters, we can only take the strongest actions of a man's life, and try to make them agree: the utter uncertainty of this, from nature itself, and from policy, ver. 120. Characters given according to the rank of men of the world, ver. 135. And some reason for it, ver. 140. Education alters the nature, or at least character, of many, ver. 149. Actions, passions, opinions, manners, humours, or principles, all subject to change. No judging by nature, from ver. 158. to ver. 178. III. It only remains to find (if we can) his ruling passion: that will certainly influence all the rest, and can reconcile the seeming or real inconsistency of all his actions, ver. 175. Instanced in the extraordinary character of Clodio, ver. 179. A caution against mistaking second qualities for first, which will destroy all possibility of the knowledge of mankind, ver. 210. Examples of the strength of the ruling passion, and its continuation to the last breath, ver. 222, &c.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind;
Though what he learns he speaks, and may advance
Some general maxims, or be right by chance.
The coxcomb bird, so talkative and grave,
That from his cage cries cuckold, whore, and knave,
Though many a passenger he rightly call,
You hold him no philosopher at all.
And yet the fate of all extremes is such,
Men may be read, as well as books, too much.
To observations which ourselves we make,
We grow more partial for th' observer's sake;
To written wisdom, as another's, less.
Maxims are drawn from notions, these from guess.
There's some peculiar in each leaf and grain,
Some unmark'd fibre, or some varying vein:
Shall only man be taken in the gross?
Grant but as many sorts of mind as moss.
That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less;
Add nature's, custom's, reason's, passion's strife,
And all opinion's colours cast on life.
Our depths who fathoms, or our shallows finds,
Quick whirls, and shifting eddies, of our minds?
On human actions reason though you can,
It may be reason, but it is not man:
His principle of action once explore,
That instant 'tis his principle no more.
Like following life through creatures you dissect,
You lose it in the moment you detect.
Yet more; the difference is as great between
The optics seeing, as the objects seen.
All manners take a tincture from our own;
Or come discolour'd through our passions shown.
Or fancy's beam enlarges, multiplies,
Contracts, inverts, and gives ten thousand dyes.
Nor will life's stream for observation stay,
It hurries all too fast to mark their way:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
Oft, in the passion's wild rotation tost,
Our spring of action to ourselves is lost:
Tir'd, not determin'd, to the last we yield,
And what comes then is master of the field.
As the last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides and fancy sports in sleep,
(Though past the recollection of the thought),
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought:
Something as dim to our internal view,
Is thus, perhaps, the cause of most we do.
True, some are open, and to all men known;
Others, so very close, they're hid from none;
(So darkness strikes the sense no less than light),
Thus gracious Chandos is belov'd at sight;
And every child hates Shylock, though his soul
Still sits at squat, and peeps not from its hole.
At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise.
When flattery glares, all hate it in a queen,
While one there is who charms us with his spleen.
But these plain characters we rarely find:
Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind:
Or puzzling contraries confound the whole;
Or affectations quite reverse the soul.
The dull, flat falsehood serves, for policy;
And in the cunning, truth itself's a lie:
Unthought-of frailties cheat us in the wise;
The fool lies hid in inconsistencies.
See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place, or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a fox-chase, wise at a debate;
Drunk at a borough, civil at a ball;
Friendly at Hackney, faithless at Whitehall.
Catius is ever moral, ever grave,
Thinks who endures a knave, is next a knave,

Save juſt at dinner——then prefers, no doubt,
A rogue with veniſon to a ſaint without.
Who would not praiſe Patricio's high deſert,
His hand unſtain'd, his uncorrupted heart,
His comprehenſive head! all intereſts weigh'd,
All Europe ſav'd, yet Britain not betray'd.
He thanks you not, his pride is in picquette,
Newmarket fame, and judgment at a bett.
What made (ſay, Montagne, or more ſage Charron!)
Otho a warrior, Cromwell a buffoon?
A perjur'd prince a leaden ſaint revere,
A godleſs regent tremble at a ſtar?
The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit,
Faithleſs through piety, and dup'd through wit?
Europe a woman, child, or dotard rule,
And juſt her wiſeſt monarch made a fool?
Know, God and nature only are the ſame:
In man, the judgment ſhoots at flying game;
A bird of paſſage! gone as ſoon as found,
Now in the moon perhaps, now under ground.
In vain the ſage, with retroſpective eye,
Would from th' apparent What conclude the Why,
Infer the motive from the deed, and ſhow,
That what we chanc'd was what we meant to do.
Behold if fortune or a miſtreſs frowns,
Some plunge in buſineſs, others ſhave their crowns:
To eaſe the ſoul of one oppreſſive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a ſtate:
The ſame aduſt complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field.
Not always actions ſhow the man: we find
Who does a kindneſs is not therefore kind:
Perhaps proſperity becalm'd his breaſt,
Perhaps the wind juſt ſhifted from the eaſt:
Not therefore humble he who ſeeks retreat,
Pride guides his ſteps, and bids him ſhun the great:
Who combats bravely is not therefore brave,
He dreads a death-bed like the meaneſt ſlave:
Who reaſons wiſely is not therefore wiſe,
His pride in reaſoning, not in acting, lies.
But grant that actions beſt diſcover man;
Take the moſt ſtrong, and ſort them as you can.
The few that glare, each character muſt mark,
You balance not the many in the dark.
What will you do with ſuch as diſagree?
Suppreſs them, or miſcall them policy?
Muſt then at once (the character to ſave)
The plain rough hero turn a crafty knave?
Alas! in truth the man but chang'd his mind,
Perhaps was ſick, in love, or had not din'd.
Aſk why from Britain Cæſar would retreat?
Cæſar himſelf might whiſper, he was beat.
Why riſk the world's great empire for a punk?
Cæſar perhaps might anſwer, he was drunk.
But, ſage hiſtorians! 'tis your taſk to prove
One action, conduct; one, heroic love.
'Tis from high life high characters are drawn:
A ſaint in crape is twice a ſaint in lawn;
A judge is juſt, a chancellor juſter ſtill;
A gownman, learn'd; a biſhop, what you will;
Wiſe, if a miniſter; but, if a king,
More wiſe, more learn'd, more juſt, more every thing.
Court-virtues bear, like gems, the higheſt rate,
Born where heaven's influence ſcarce can penetrate:
In life's low vale, the ſoil the virtues like,
They pleaſe as beauties, here as wonder ſtrike.
Though the ſame ſun with all-diffuſive rays
Bluſh in the roſe, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the ſtronger effort of his power,
And juſtly ſet the gem above the flower.
'Tis education forms the common mind;
Juſt as the twig is bent, the tree's inclin'd.
Boaſtful and rough, your firſt ſon is a 'ſquire;
The next a tradeſman, meek, and much a liar;
Tom ſtruts a ſoldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will ſneaks a ſcrivener, an exceeding knave:
Is he a churchman? then he's fond of power:
A Quaker? ſly: A Preſbyterian? ſour:
A ſmart Free-thinker? all things in an hour.
Aſk men's opinions: Scoto now ſhall tell
How trade increaſes, and the world goes well;
Strike off his penſion, by the ſetting ſun,
And Britain, if not Europe, is undone.
That gay Free-thinker, a fine talker once,
What turns him now a ſtupid, ſilent dunce?
Some god, or ſpirit, he has lately found;
Or chanc'd to meet a miniſter that frown'd.
Judge we by nature? Habit can efface,
Intereſt o'ercome, or policy take place:
By actions? thoſe uncertainty divides!
By paſſions? theſe diſſimulation hides:
Opinions? they ſtill take a wider range:
Find, if you can, in what you cannot change.
Manners with fortunes, humours turn with climes,
Tenets with books, and principles with times.
Search then the ruling paſſion: There, alone,
The wild are conſtant, and the cunning known;
The fool conſiſtent, and the falſe ſincere;
Prieſts, princes, women, no diſſemblers here.
This clue once found, unravels all the reſt,
The proſpect clears, and Wharton ſtands conſeſt.
Wharton, the ſcorn and wonder of our days,
Whoſe ruling paſſion was the luſt of praiſe:
Born with whate'er could win it from the wiſe,
Women and fools muſt like him, or he dies:

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 86. in the former editions.

Triumphant leaders at an army's head,
Hemm'd round with glories, pilfer cloth or bread;
As meanly plunder as they bravely fought,
Now ſave a people, and now ſave a groat.

Ver. 129, in the former editions:

Aſk why from Britain Cæſar made retreat?
Cæſar himſelf would tell you he was beat.

VARIATIONS.

The mighty Czar what mov'd to wed a punk?
The mighty Czar would tell you he was drunk

Altered as above, becauſe Cæſar wrote his Commentaries of this war, and does not tell you he was beat. As Cæſar too afforded an inſtance of both caſes, it was thought better to make him the ſingle example.

Though wondering ſenates hung on all he ſpoke,
The club muſt hail him maſter of the joke.
Shall parts ſo various aim at nothing new?
He'll ſhine a Tully and a Wilmot too.
Then turns repentant, and his God adores
With the ſame ſpirit that he drinks and whores:
Enough if all around him but admire,
And now the punk applaud, and now the friar.
Thus with each gift of nature and of art,
And wanting nothing but an honeſt heart;
Grown all to all, from no one vice exempt;
And moſt contemptible, to ſhun contempt;
His paſſion ſtill, to covet general praiſe;
His life, to forfeit it a thouſand ways;
A conſtant bounty, which no friend has made;
An angel tongue, which no man can perſuade;
A fool, with more of wit than half mankind,
Too raſh for thought, for action too refin'd:
A tyrant to the wiſe his heart approves;
A rebel to the very king he loves;
He dies, ſad outcaſt of each church and ſtate,
And, harder ſtill! flagitious, yet not great.
Aſk you why Wharton broke through every rule?
'Twas all for fear the knaves ſhould call him fool.
Nature well known, no prodigies remain,
Comets are regular, and Wharton plain.
Yet, in this ſearch, the wiſeſt may miſtake,
If ſecond qualities for firſt they take.
When Catiline by rapine ſwell'd his ſtore;
When Cæſar made a noble dame a whore;
In this the luſt, in that the avarice,
Were means, not ends; ambition was the vice.
That very Cæſar, born in Scipio's days,
Had aim'd like him, by chaſtity, at praiſe.
Lucullus, when frugality could charm,
Had roaſted turnips in the Sabine farm.
In vain th' obſerver eyes the builder's toil,
But quite miſtakes the ſcaffold for the pile.
In this one paſſion man can ſtrength enjoy,
As fits give vigour, juſt when they deſtroy.
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it ſticks to our laſt ſand.
Conſiſtent in our follies and our ſins,
Here honeſt nature ends as ſhe begins.
Old politicians chew on wiſdom paſt,
And totter on in buſineſs to the laſt;
As weak, as earneſt; and as gravely out,
As ſober Lanesborow dancing in the gout.
Behold a reverend ſire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameleſs race,
Shov'd from the wall perhaps, or rudley preſs'd
By his own ſon, that paſſes by unbleſs'd:
Still to his wench he crawls on knocking knees,
And envies every ſparrow that he ſees.
A ſalmon's belly, Helluo, was thy fate;
The doctor call'd, declares all help too late:
"Mercy! cries Helluo, mercy on my ſoul!
"Is there no hope?—Alas!—then bring the jowl."

The frugal Crone, whom praying prieſts attend,
Still ſtrives to ſave the hallow'd taper's end,
Collects her breath, as ebbing life retires,
For one puff more, and in that puff expires.
"Odious! in woollen! 'twould a ſaint provoke,
(Were the laſt words that poor Narciſſa ſpoke)
"No, let a charming chintz, and Bruſſels lace,
"Wrap my cold limbs, and ſhade my lifeleſs face:
"One would not, ſure, be frightful when one's dead—
"And—Betty—give this cheek a little red."
The courtier ſmooth, who forty years had ſhin'd
An humble ſervant to all human kind,
Juſt brought out this, when ſcarce his tongue could ſtir,
"If—where I'm going—I could ſerve you, Sir!"
"I give and I deviſe (old Euclio ſaid,
And ſigh'd) "my lands and tenements to Ned."
Your money, Sir?—"My money, Sir! what all?
"Why—if I muſt—(then wept) I give it Paul."
The manor, Sir?—"The manor! hold, he cry'd.
"Not that,—I cannot part with that"—and dy'd.
And you! brave Cobham, to the lateſt breath,
Shall feel your ruling paſſion ſtrong in death:
Such in thoſe moments as in all the paſt,
"Oh, ſave my country, Heaven!" ſhall be your laſt.

VARIATIONS.

In the former editions, ver. 208.
Nature well known, no miracles remain.
Altered, as above, for very obvious reaſons.

EPISTLE II.

TO A LADY.

Of the Characters of Women.

THERE is nothing in Mr. Pope's works more highly finiſhed than this epiſtle: Yet its ſucceſs was in no proportion to the pains he took in compoſing it. Something he chanced to drop in a ſhort advertiſement prefixed to it, on its firſt publication, may perhaps account for the ſmall attention given to it. He ſaid that no one character in it was drawn from the life. The public believed him on his word, and expreſſed little curioſity about a ſatire, in which there was nothing perſonal.

NOTHING ſo true as what you once let fall,
"Moſt women have no characters at all."
Matter too ſoft a laſting mark to bear,
And beſt diſtinguiſh'd by black, brown, or fair.
How many pictures of one nymph we view,
All how unlike each other, all how true!
Arcadia's Counteſs, here, in ermin'd pride,
Is there, Paſtora by a fountain ſide.
Here Fannia, leering on her own good man,
And there, a naked Leda with a ſwan.
Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
In Magdalene's looſe hair, and lifted eye,
Or dreſt in ſmiles of ſweet Cecilia ſhine,
With ſimpering angels, palms, and harps divine;
Whether the charmer ſinner it, or ſaint it,
If folly grow romantic, I muſt paint it.
Come then, the colours, and the ground prepare!
Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;

Chooſe a firm cloud, before it fall, and in it
Catch, ere ſhe change, the Cynthia of this minute.
Ruſa, whoſe eye, quick glancing o'er the Park,
Attracts each light gay meteor of a ſpark,
Agrees as ill with Ruſa's ſudying Locke,
As Sappho's diamonds with her dirty ſmock;
Or Sappho at her toilet's greaſy taſk,
With Sappho fragrant at an evening maſk:
So morning inſects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the ſetting ſun.
How ſoft is Silia! fearful to offend;
The frail one's advocate, the weak one's friend.
To her Califta prov'd her conduct nice;
And good Simplicius aſks of her advice.
Sudden, ſhe ſtorms! ſhe raves! You tip the wink,
But ſpare your cenſure; Silia does not drink.
All eyes may ſee from what the change aroſe,
All eyes may ſee—a pimple on her noſe.
Papilla, wedded to her amorous ſpark,
Sighs for the ſhades—"How charming is a park!"
A park is purchas'd, but the fair he ſees
All bath'd in tears—"Oh odious, odious trees!"
Ladies, like variegated tulips, ſhew,
'Tis to their changes half their charms we owe;
Fine by defect, and delicately weak,
Their happy ſpots the nice admirer take.
'Twas thus Calypſo once each heart alarm'd,
Aw'd without virtue, without beauty charm'd;
Her tongue bewitch'd as oddly as her eyes,
Leſs wit than mimic, more a wit than wiſe;
Strange graces ſtill, and ſtranger flights ſhe had,
Was juſt not ugly, and was juſt not mad;
Yet ne'er ſo ſure our paſſion to create,
As when ſhe touch'd the brink of all we hate.
Narciſſa's nature, tolerably mild,
To make a waſh, would hardly ſtew a child;
Has ev'n been prov'd to grant a lover's prayer,
And paid a tradeſman once to make him ſtare;
Gave alms at Eaſter, in a Chriſtian trim;
And made a widow happy, for a whim.
Why then declare good nature is her ſcorn,
When 'tis by that alone ſhe can be borne?
Why pique all mortals, yet affect a name?
A fool to pleaſure, yet a ſlave to fame:
Now deep in Taylor and the Book of Martyrs,
Now drinking citron with his Grace and Chartres;
Now conſcience chills her, and now paſſion burns;
And atheiſm and religion take their turns;
A very Heathen in the carnal part,
Yet ſtill a ſad good Chriſtian at her heart.
See ſin in ſtate, majeſtically drunk,
Proud as a peereſs, prouder as a punk;
Chaſte to her huſband, frank to all beſide,
A teeming miſtreſs, but a barren bride.
What then? let blood and body bear the fault,
Her head's untouch'd, that noble ſeat of thought:
Such this day's doctrine——in another fit
She ſins with poets through pure love of wit.
What has not fir'd her boſom or her brain?
Cæſar and Tall-boy, Charles and Charlemagne.

As Helluo, late dictator of the feaſt,
The noſe of Haut-gout, and the tip of taſte,
Critiqu'd your wine, and analyz'd your meat,
Yet on plain pudding deign'd at home to eat:
So Philomedè, lecturing all mankind
On the ſoft paſſion, and the taſte refin'd,
Th' addreſs, the delicacy—ſtoops at once,
And makes her hearty meal upon a dunce.
Flavia's a wit, has too much ſenſe to pray;
To toaſt our wants and wiſhes is her way;
Nor aſks of God, but of her ſtars, to give
The mighty bleſſing, "while we live, to live,"
Then all for death, that opiate of the ſoul!
Lucretia's dagger, Roſamonda's bowl.
Say, what can cauſe ſuch impotence of mind?
A ſpark too fickle, or a ſpouſe too kind.
Wiſe wretch! with pleaſures too refin'd to pleaſe;
With too much ſpirit to be e'er at eaſe;
With too much quickneſs ever to be taught;
With too much thinking to have common thought:
You purchaſe pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live.
Turn then from wits; and look on Simo's mate,
No aſs ſo meek, no aſs ſo obſtinate.
Or her, that owns her faults, but never mends,
Becauſe ſhe's honeſt, and the beſt of friends.
Or her, whoſe life the church and ſcandal ſhare,
For ever in a paſſion, or a prayer,
Or her, who laughs at hell, (but like her Grace)
Cries, "Ah! how charming, if there's no ſuch place!"
Or who in ſweet viciſſitude appears
Of mirth and opium, ratafie and tears,
The daily anodyne, and nightly draught,
To kill thoſe foes to fair ones, time and thought.
Woman and fool are two hard things to hit;
For true no-meaning puzzles more than wit.
But what are theſe to great Atoſſa's mind?
Scarce once herſelf, by turns all womankind!
Who, with herſelf, or others, from her birth
Finds all her life one warfare upon earth:
Shines in expoſing knaves, and painting fools,
Yet is, whate'er ſhe hates and ridicules.
No thought advances, but her eddy brain
Whiſks it about, and down it goes again.
Full ſixty years the world has been her trade,
The wiſeſt fool much time has ever made.
From loveleſs youth to unreſpected age,
No paſſion gratify'd, except her rage,
So much the fury ſtill out-ran the wit,
The pleaſure miſs'd her, and the ſcandal hit.
Who breaks with her, provokes revenge from hell,
But he's a bolder man who dares be well.
Her every turn with violence purſued,
Nor more a ſtorm her hate than gratitude:
To that each paſſion turns, or ſoon or late;
Love, if it makes her yield, muſt make her hate:
Superiors? death! and equals? what a curſe!
But an inferior not dependant? worſe.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 77. What has not fir'd, &c.] In the MS.
In whoſe mad brain the mix'd ideas roll,
Of Tall-boy's breeches, and of Cæſar's ſoul.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 122, in the MS.
Oppreſs'd with wealth and wit, abundance ſad!
One makes her poor, the other makes her mad.

Offend her, and she knows not to forgive;
Oblige her, and she'll hate you while you live:
But die, and she'll adore you—then the bust
And temple rise—then fall again to dust.
Last night her lord was all that's good and great;
A knave this morning, and his will a cheat.
Strange! by the means defeated of the ends,
By spirit robb'd of power, by warmth of friends,
By wealth of followers! without one distress
Sick of herself, through very selfishness!
Atossa, curs'd with every granted prayer,
Childless with all her children, wants an heir.
To heirs unknown descends th' unguarded store,
Or wanders, heaven-directed, to the poor.

Pictures, like these, dear madam, to design,
Asks no firm hand, and no unerring line;
Some wandering touches, some reflected light,
Some flying stroke alone can hit them right:
For how should equal colours do the knack?
Chameleons who can paint in white and black?
"Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot."—
Nature in her then err'd not, but forgot.
"With every pleasing, every prudent part,
"Say, what can Chloe want?"—She wants a heart.
She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never, reach'd one generous thought.
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever.
So very reasonable, so unmov'd,
As never yet to love, or to be lov'd.
She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest;
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair.
Forbid it, heaven, a favour or a debt
She e'er should cancel—but she may forget.
Safe is your secret still in Chloe's ear;
But none of Chloe's shall you ever hear.
Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone.
Would Chloe know if you're alive or dead?
She bids her footman put it in her head.
Chloe is prudent—would you too be wise?
Then never break your heart when Chloe dies.

One certain portrait may (I grant) be seen,
Which heaven has varnish'd out, and made a queen:
The same for ever! and describ'd by all
With truth and goodness, as with crown and ball.
Poets heap virtues, painters gems at will,
And show their zeal, and hide their want of skill.
'Tis well—but, artists! who can paint or write,
To draw the naked is your true delight.
That robe of quality so struts and swells,
None see what parts of nature it conceals:
Th' exactest traits of body or of mind,
We owe to models of an humble kind.

If Queensberry to strip there's no compelling,
'Tis from a handmaid we must take a Helen.
From peer or bishop 'tis no easy thing
To draw the man who loves his God, or king:
Alas! I copy (or my draught would fail),
From honest Mah'met, or plain Parson Hale.

But grant, in public men sometimes are shown,
A woman's seen in private life alone:
Our bolder talents in full light display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade.
Bred to disguise, in public 'tis you hide;
There, none distinguish 'twixt your shame or pride,
Weakness or delicacy; all so nice,
That each may seem a virtue, or a vice.

In men we various ruling passions find;
In women, two almost divide the kind;
Those, only fix'd, they first or last obey,
The love of pleasure, and the love of sway.

That, nature gives; and where the lesson taught
Is but to please, can pleasure seem a fault?
Experience, this; by man's oppression curst,
They seek the second not to lose the first.

Men, some to business, some to pleasure take;
But every woman is at heart a rake:
Men, some to quiet, some to public strife;
But every lady would be queen for life.

Yet mark the fate of a whole sex of queens:
Power all their end, but beauty all the means:
In youth they conquer with so wild a rage,
As leaves them scarce a subject in their age:
For foreign glory, foreign joy, they roam;
No thought of peace or happiness at home.
But wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
As hard a science to the fair as great!
Beauties, like tyrants, old and friendless grown,
Yet hate repose, and dread to be alone,
Worn-out in public, weary every eye,
Nor leave one sigh behind them when they die.

Pleasures the sex, as children birds, pursue,
Still out of reach, yet never out of view;
Sure, if they catch, to spoil the toy at most,
To covet flying, and regret when lost:
At last, to follies youth could scarce defend,
It grows their age's prudence to pretend;
Asham'd to own they gave delight before,
Reduc'd to feign it, when they give no more:
As hags hold Sabbaths, less for joy than spite,
So these their merry, miserable night;
Still round and round the ghosts of beauty glide,
And haunt the places where their honour dy'd.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 148, in the MS.

This death decides; nor lets the blessing fall
On any one she hates, but on them all.
Curs'd chance! this only could afflict her more,
If any part should wander to the poor.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 198, in the MS.

Fain I'd in Fulvia spy the tender wife;
I cannot prove it on her for my life:
And, for a noble pride, I blush no less,
Instead of Berenice to think on Bess.
Thus while immortal Cibber only sings [kings,
(As Clarke and Hoadly preach) for queens and
The nymph that ne'er read Milton's mighty line,
May, if she love and merit verse, have mine.

Ver. 207, in the first edition:

In several men we several passions find;
In women, two almost divide the kind.

See how the world its veterans rewards!
A youth of frolics, an old age of cards;
Fair to no purpose, artful to no end;
Young without lovers, old without a friend;
A fop their passion, but their prize a sot;
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot!
Ah! friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine!
That charm shall grow, while what fatigues the ring,
Flaunts and goes down, an unregarded thing;
So when the sun's broad beam has tir'd the sight,
All mild ascends the moon's more sober light,
Serene in virgin modesty she shines,
And unobserv'd the glaring orb declines.
Oh! blest with temper, whose unclouded ray
Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day:
She, who can love a sister's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear;
She who ne'er answers till a husband cools,
Or, if she rules him, never shows she rules;
Charms by accepting, by submitting sways,
Yet has her humour most, when she obeys;
Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
Disdains all loss of tickets, or codille;
Spleen, vapours, or small-pox, above them all,
And mistress of herself, though China fall.
And yet, believe me, good as well as ill,
Woman's at best a contradiction still.
Heaven when it strives to polish all it can
Its last best work, but forms a softer man;
Picks from each sex, to make the favourite blest,
Your love of pleasure, our desire of rest:
Blends, in exception to all general rules,
Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools:
Reserve with frankness, art with truth ally'd,
Courage with softness, modesty with pride;
Fix'd principles, with fancy ever new;
Shakes all together, and produces—You.
Be this a woman's fame: with this unblest,
Toasts live a scorn, and queens may die a jest.
This Phœbus promis'd (I forget the year)
When those blue eyes first open'd on the sphere;
Ascendant Phœbus watch'd that hour with care,
Averted half your parents' simple prayer;
And gave you beauty, but deny'd the pelf
That buys your sex a tyrant o'er itself.
The generous God, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for duchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet.

EPISTLE III.

TO ALLEN, LORD BATHURST.

Of the Use of Riches.

THE ARGUMENT.

That it is known to few, most falling into one of the extremes, avarice or profusion, ver. 1, &c. The point discussed, whether the invention of money has been more commodious or pernicious to mankind, ver. 21 to 77. That riches, either to the avaricious or the prodigal, cannot afford happiness, scarcely necessaries, ver. 89 to 160. That avarice is an absolute frenzy, without an end or purpose, ver. 113, &c. 152. Conjectures about the motives of avaricious men, ver. 121 to 153. That the conduct of men, with respect to riches, can only be accounted for by the order of Providence, which works the general good out of extremes, and brings all to its great end by perpetual revolutions, ver. 161 to 178. How a miser acts upon principles which appear to him reasonable, ver. 179. How a prodigal does the same, ver. 199. The due medium, and true use of riches, ver. 219. The man of Ross, ver. 250. The fate of the profuse and the covetous, in two examples; both miserable in life and in death, ver. 300, &c. The story of Sir Balaam, ver. 339 to the end.

This epistle was written after a violent outcry against our Author, on a supposition that he had ridiculed a worthy nobleman merely for his wrong taste. He justified himself upon that article in a letter to the Earl of Burlington; at the end of which are these words: "I have "learnt that there are some who would rather "be wicked than ridiculous: and therefore it "may be safer to attack vices than follies. I "will therefore leave my betters in the quiet "possession of their idols, their groves, and their "high-places; and change my subject from their "pride to their meanness, from their vanities "to their miseries; and as the only certain way "to avoid misconstructions, to lessen offence, and "not to multiply ill-natured applications, I may "probably in my next, make use of real names "instead of fictitious ones."

P. Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me?
You hold the word, from Jove to Momus given,
That man was made the standing jest of Heaven:
And gold but sent to keep the fools in play,
For some to heap, and some to throw away.
But I, who think more highly of our kind,
(And, surely, Heaven and I are of a mind)
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the shining mischief under ground:
But when, by man's audacious labour won,
Flam'd forth this rival too, its fire, the sun,
Then careful Heaven supply'd two sorts of men,
To squander these, and those to hide again.
Like doctors thus, when much dispute has past,
We find our tenets just the same at last.
Both fairly owning, riches, in effect,
No grace of Heaven or token of th' elect;
Given to the fool, the mad, the vain, the evil,
To Ward, to Waters, Chartres, and the Devil.
B. What nature wants, commodious gold bestows,
'Tis thus we eat the bread another sows.

P. But how unequal it beſtows, obſerve:
'Tis thus we riot, while, who ſow it, ſtarve:
What nature wants (a phraſe I muſt diſtruſt)
Extends to luxury, extends to luſt:
Uſeful, I grant, it ſerves what life requires,
But dreadful too, the dark aſſaſſin hires.
B. Trade it may help, ſociety extend:
P. But lures the pirate, and corrupts the friend.
B. It raiſes armies in a nation's aid:
P. But bribes a ſenate, and the land's betray'd.
In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
If ſecret gold ſap on from knave to knave.
Once, we confeſs, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea ſpoke,
And jingling down the back-ſtairs, told the crew,
"Old Cato is as great a rogue as you."
Bleſt paper-credit! laſt and beſt ſupply!
That lends corruption lighter wings to fly!
Gold, imp'd by thee, can compaſs hardeſt things,
Can pocket ſtates, can fetch or carry kings;
A ſingle leaf ſhall waft an army o'er,
Or ſhip off ſenates to ſome diſtant ſhore;
A leaf, like Sibyl's, ſcatter to and fro
Our fates and fortunes, as the wind ſhall blow:
Pregnant with thouſands flits the ſcrap unſeen,
And ſilent fells a king, or buys a queen.
Oh! that ſuch bulky bribes as all might ſee,
Still, as of old, encumber'd villainy!
Could France or Rome divert our brave deſigns,
With all their brandies, or with all their wines?
What could they more than knights and 'ſquires confound,
Or water all the quorum ten miles round?
A ſtateſman's ſlumbers how this ſpeech would ſpoil!
"Sir, Spain has ſent a thouſand jars of oil;
"Huge bales of Britiſh cloth blockade the door:
"A hundred oxen at your levee roar."
Poor avarice one torment more would find;
Nor could profuſion ſquander all in kind.
Aſtride his cheeſe Sir Morgan might we meet:
And Worldly crying coals from ſtreet to ſtreet,
Whom, with a wig ſo wild, and mien ſo maz'd,
Pity miſtakes for ſome poor tradeſman craz'd.
Had Colepepper's whole wealth been hops and hogs,
Could he himſelf have ſent it to the dogs?
His Grace will game: to White's a bull be led,
With ſpurning heels and with a butting head.
To White's be carry'd as to ancient games,
Fair courſers, vaſes, and alluring dames.
Shall then Uxorio, if the ſtakes he ſweep,
Bear him ſix whores, and make he lady weep?
Or ſoft Adonis, ſo perfum'd and fine,
Drive to St. James's a whole herd of ſwine?
Oh filthy check on all induſtrious ſkill,
To ſpoil the nation's laſt great trade, quadrille!
Since then, my Lord, on ſuch a world we fall,
What ſay you? B. Say? Why take it, Gold and all.
P. What riches give us, let us then inquire?
Meat, fire, and clothes. B. What more? P. Meat, clothes, and fire.
Is this too little? would you more than live?
Alas! 'tis more than Turner finds they give.
Alas! 'tis more than (all his viſions paſt)
Unhappy Wharton, waking, found at laſt!
What can they give? to dying Hopkins, heirs;
To Chartres, vigour; Japhet, noſe and ears?
Can they, in gems bid pallid Hippia glow,
In Fulvia's buckle eaſe the throbs below;
Or heal, old Narſes, thy obſcener ail,
With all th' embroidery plaiſter'd at thy tail?
They might (were Harpax not too wiſe to ſpend)
Give Harpax-elf the bleſſing of a friend;
Or find ſome doctor that would ſave the life
Of wretched Shylock, ſpite of Shylock's wife:
But thouſands die, without or this or that,
Die, and endow a college, or a cat.
To ſome, indeed, Heaven grants the happier fate,
T' enrich a baſtard, or a ſon they hate.
Perhaps you think the poor might have their part;
Bond damns the poor, and hates them from his heart:
The grave Sir Gilbert holds it for a rule
That every man in want is knave or fool:
"God cannot love (ſays Blunt, with tearleſs eyes)
"The wretch he ſtarves"—and piouſly denies:
But the good biſhop, with a meeker air,
Admits, and leaves them, Providence's care.
Yet to be juſt to theſe poor men of pelf,
Each does but hate his neighbour as himſelf:
Damn'd to the mines, an equal fate betides
The ſlave that digs it, and the ſlave that hides.
B. Who ſuffer thus, mere charity ſhould own,
Muſt act on motives powerful, though unknown.
P. Some war, ſome plague, or famine, they foreſee,
Some revelation hid from you and me.
Why Shylock wants a meal, the cauſe is found;
He thinks a loaf will riſe to fifty pound.
What made directors cheat in South-Sea year?
To live on veniſon when it ſold dear.
Aſk you why Phryne the whole auction buys?
Phryne foreſees a general exciſe.
Why ſhe and Sappho raiſe that monſtrous ſum?
Alas! they fear a man will coſt a plum.
Wiſe Peter ſees the world's reſpect for gold,
And therefore hopes this nation may be ſold:
Glorious ambition! Peter, ſwell thy ſtore,
And be what Rome's great Didius was before.
The crown of Poland, venal twice an age,
To juſt three millions ſtinted modeſt Gage.
But nobler ſcenes, Maria's dreams unfold,
Hereditary realms, and worlds of gold.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 50, in the MS.

To break a truſt were Peter brib'd with wine,
Peter! 'twould poſe as wiſe a head as thine.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 77. Since then, &c.] In the former Ed.

Well then, ſince with the world we ſtand or fall,
Come take it, as we find it, gold and all.

Congenial souls; whose life one avarice joins,
And one fate buries in th' Austrian mines.
Much-injur'd Blunt! why bears he Britain's hate?
A wizard told him in these words our fate:
" At length corruption, like a general flood,
" (So long by watchful ministers withstood)
" Shall deluge all; and avarice, creeping on,
" Spread like a low-borne mist, and blot the sun;
" Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,
" Peeresses and butler there alike the box.
" And judges job, and bishops bite the town,
" And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown.
" See Britain sunk in lucre's sordid charms,
" And France reveng'd of Anne's and Edward's arms!"
'Twas no court badge, great scrivener, fir'd thy brain,
Nor lordly luxury, nor city gain:
No, 'twas thy righteous end, asham'd to see
Senates degenerate, patriots disagree,
And nobly wishing party-rage to cease,
To buy both sides, and give thy country peace.
" All this is madness," cries a sober sage:
But who, my friend, has reason in his rage?
" The ruling passion, be it what it will,
" The ruling passion conquers reason still."
Less mad the wildest whimsey we can frame,
Than even that passion, if it has no aim;
For though such motives folly you may call,
The folly's greater to have none at all.
Hear then the truth: " 'Tis Heaven each pas-
" sion sends,
" And different men directs to different ends.
" Extremes in nature equal good produce,
" Extremes in man concur to general use."
Ask we what makes one keep, and one bestow?
That power who bids the ocean ebb and flow,
Bids feed-time, harvest, equal course maintain,
Through reconcil'd extremes of drought and rain,
Builds life on death, on change duration founds,
And gives th' eternal wheels to know their rounds.
Riches, like insects, when conceal'd they lie,
Wait but for wings, and in their season fly.
Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next a fountain, spouting through his heir,
In lavish streams to quench a country's thirst,
And men and dogs shall drink him till they burst.
Old Cotta sham'd his fortune and his birth,
Yet was not Cotta void of wit or worth:
What though (the use of barbarous spits forgot)
His kitchen vied in coolness with his grot?
His court with nettles, moats with cresses stor'd,
With soups unbought and sallads bless'd his board?
If Cotta liv'd on pulse, it was no more
Than Bramins, saints, and sages did before;
To cram the rich, was prodigal expence,
And who would take the poor from Providence?
Like some lone Chartreux stands the good old hall,
Silence without, and fasts within the wall;
No rafter'd roofs with dance and tabor sound,
No noontide bell invites the country round:
Tenants with sighs the smokeless towers survey,
And turn th' unwilling steeds another way:
Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,
Curse the sav'd candle, and unopening door;
While the gaunt mastiff, growling at the gate,
Affrights the beggar whom he longs to eat.
Not so his son: he mark'd this oversight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right.
(For what to shun, will no great knowledge need:
But what to follow, is a task indeed),
Yet sure, of qualities deserving praise,
More go to ruin fortunes, than to raise.
What slaughter'd hecatombs, what floods of wine,
Fill the capacious 'squire, and deep divine!
Yet no mean motives this profusion draws,
His oxen perish in his country's cause;
'Tis George and Liberty that crowns the cup,
And zeal for that great house which eats him up.
The woods recede around the naked seat,
The Sylvans groan—no matter—for the fleet:
Next goes his wool—to clothe our valiant bands:
Last, for his country's love, he sells his lands.
To town he comes, completes the nation's hope,
And heads the bold train-bands, and burns a Pope.
And shall not Britain now reward his toils,
Britain, that pays her patriots with her spoils?
In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause,
His thankless country leaves him to her laws.
The sense to value riches, with the art
T' enjoy them, and the virtue to impart,
Not meanly, nor ambitiously pursued,
Not sunk by sloth, not rais'd by servitude;
To balance fortune by a just expence,
Join with œconomy, magnificence;
With splendour, charity; with plenty, health;
Oh teach us, Bathurst! yet unspoil'd by wealth!
That secret rare, between th' extremes to move
Of mad good-nature, and of mean self-love.
B. To worth or want well-weigh'd, be bounty given,
And ease, or emulate, the care of Heaven;
(Whose measure full o'erflows on human race)
Mend fortune's fault, and justify her grace.
Wealth in the gross is death, but life diffus'd;
As poison heals, in just proportion us'd:
In heaps, like ambergris, a stink it lies,
But well dispers'd, is incense to the skies.
P. Who starves by nobles, or with nobles eats?
The wretch that trusts them, and the rogue that cheats.
Is there a lord, who knows a cheerful noon
Without a fiddler, flatterer, or buffoon!

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 218, in the MS.

Where one lean herring furnish'd Cotta's board,
And nettles grew, fit porridge for their lord;
Where mad good-nature, bounty misapply'd,
In lavish Curio blaz'd a while and dy'd;
There Providence once more shall shift the scene,
And shewing H—y, teach the golden mean.

After ver. 226, in the MS.

The secret rare, which affluence hardly join'd,
Which W—n lost, yet B—y ne'er could find:
Still miss'd by vice, and scarce by virtue hit,
By G—'s goodness, or by S—'s wit,

Whose table, wit, or modest merit share,
Un-elbow'd by a gamester, pimp, or player?
Who copies your's, or Oxford's better part,
To ease th' oppress'd, and raise the sinking heart?
Where'er he shines, oh fortune, gild the scene,
And angels guard him in the golden mean!
There, English bounty yet a while may stand,
And honour linger ere it leaves the land.
But all our praises why should lords engross!
Rise, honest muse; and sing the Man of Ross:
Pleas'd Vaga echoes through her winding bounds,
And rapid Severn hoarse applause resounds.
Who hung with woods yon mountain's sultry brow?
From the dry rock who bade the waters flow?
Not to the skies in useless columns tost,
Or in proud falls magnificently lost,
But clear and artless, pouring through the plain
Health to the sick, and solace to the swain.
Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows?
Whose seats the weary traveller repose?
Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise!
"The Man of Ross," each lisping babe replies.
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread!
The Man of Ross divides the weekly bread:
He feeds yon alms-house, neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate;
Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,
The young who labour, and the old who rest.
Is any sick? the Man of Ross relieves,
Prescribes, attends, the medicine makes, and gives.
Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an useless race.

B. Thrice happy man! enabled to pursue
What all so wish, but want the power to do!
Oh say, what sums that generous hand supply?
What mines to swell that boundless charity!

P. Of debts and taxes, wife and children clear,
This man possess'd—five hundred pounds a-year.
Blush, grandeur, blush! proud courts, withdraw your blaze!
Ye little stars! hide your diminish'd rays.

B. And what! no monument, inscription, stone?
His race, his form, his name almost unknown?

P. Who builds a church to God, and not to fame,
Will never mark the marble with his name:
Go, search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history;
Enough, that virtue fill'd the space between;
Prov'd by the ends of being, to have been.
When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch, who living sav'd a candle's end;

Shouldering God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands;
That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone.
Behold what blessings wealth to life can lend!
And see, what comfort it affords our end.
In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half-hung,
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung,
On once a flock-bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-ty'd curtains, never meant to draw,
The George and Garter dangling from that bed
Where tawdry yellow strove with dirty red,
Great Villers lies—alas! how chang'd from him,
That life of pleasure, and that soul of whim!
Gallant and gay, in Cliveden's proud alcove,
The bower of wanton Shrewsbury and love;
Or just as gay, at council, in a ring
Of mimick'd statesmen, and their merry king.
No wit to flatter, left of all his store!
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more.
There, victor of his health, of fortune, friends,
And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends.
His Grace's fate sage Cutler could foresee,
And well (he thought) advis'd him, "Live like me!"
As well his Grace reply'd, "Like you, Sir John?
"That I can do, when all I have is gone."
Resolve me, reason, which of these are worse,
Want with a full, or with an empty purse?
Thy life more wretched, Cutler, was confess'd,
Arise, and tell me, was thy death more bless'd?
Cutler saw tenants break, and houses fall,
For very want; he could not build a wall.
His only daughter in a stranger's power,
For very want; he could not pay a dower.
A few grey hairs his reverend temples crown'd,
'Twas very want that sold them for two pound.
What! even deny'd a cordial at his end,
Banish'd the doctor, and expell'd the friend?
What but a want, which you perhaps think mad,
Yet numbers feel, the want of what he had!
Cutler and Brutus dying, both exclaim,
"Virtue! and wealth! what are ye but a name!"
Say, for such worth are other worlds prepar'd?
Or are they both, in this, their own reward?
A knotty point! to which we now proceed.
But you are tir'd—I'll tell a tale—B. Agreed.

P. Where London's column, pointing at the skies
Like a tall bully, lifts the head, and lies;
There dwelt a citizen of sober fame,
A plain good man, and Balaam was his name;
Religious, punctual, frugal, and so forth;
His word would pass for more than he was worth.
One solid dish his week-day meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's:
Constant at church, and Change, his gains were sure,
His givings rare, save farthings to the poor.
The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old:

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 250, in the MS.

Trace humble worth beyond Sabrina's shore,
Who sings not him, oh may he sing no more!

Ver. 287. Thus in the MS.

The register inrolls him with his poor,
Tells he was born, and dy'd, and tells no more.
Just as he ought, he fill'd the space between;
Then stole to rest, unheeded and unseen.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 337. In the former editions.

That knotty point, my Lord, shall I discuss,
Or tell a tale?—A tale—it follows thus.

But Satan now is wiſer than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor.
Rouz'd by the Prince of Air, the whirlwinds ſweep
The ſurge, and plunge his father in the deep;
Then full againſt his C rniſh lands they roar,
And two rich ſhipwrecks bleſs the lucky ſhore.
Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks,
He takes his chirping pint, and cracks his jokes:
"Live like yourſelf," was ſoon my lady's word;
And lo! two puddings ſmok'd upon the board.
Aſleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honeſt factor ſtole a gem away:
He pledg'd it to the knight, the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.
Some ſcruple roſe, but thus he eas'd his thought,
"I'll now give ſixpence where I gave a groat;
"Where once I went to church, I'll now go twice—
"And am ſo clear too of all other vice."
The tempter ſaw his time: the work he ply'd;
Stocks and ſubſcriptions pour on every ſide,
Till all the dæmon makes his full deſcent
In one abundant ſhower of cent per cent,
Sinks deep within him, and poſſeſſes whole,
Then dubs director, and ſecures his ſoul.
Behold Sir Balaam, now a man of ſpirit,
Aſcribes his gettings to his parts and merit;
What late he call'd a bleſſing now is wit,
And God's good providence a lucky hit.
Things change their titles, as our manners turn:
His counting-houſe employ'd the Sunday morn:
Seldom at church, ('twas ſuch a buſy life)
But duly ſent his family and wife.
There (ſo the devil ordain'd) one Chriſtmas tide
My good old lady catch'd a cold, and dy'd.
A nymph of quality admires our knight;
He marries, bows at Court, and grows polite;
Leaves the dull cits, and joins (to pleaſe the fair)
The well-bred cuckolds in St. James's air:
Firſt, for his ſon a gay commiſſion buys,
Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies:
His daughter flaunts a viſcount's tawdry wife;
She bears a coronet and p--x for life.
In Britain's ſenate he a ſeat obtains,
And one more penſioner St. Stephen gains.
My lady falls to play: ſo bad her chance,
He muſt repair it; takes a bribe from France;
The Houſe impeach him, Coningſby harangues;
The C urt forſake him, and Sir Balaam hangs:
Wife, ſon, and daughter, Satan! are thy own,
His wealth, yet dearer, forfeit to the crown;
The devil and the king divide the prize,
And ſad Sir Balaam curſes God and dies.

EPISTLE IV.

TO RICHARD BOYLE, EARL OF BURLINGTON.

Of the Uſe of Riches.

THE ARGUMENT.

THE vanity of expence in people of wealth and quality. The abuſe of the word taſte, ver. 15. That the firſt principle and foundation in this, as in every thing elſe, is good ſenſe, ver. 40. The chief proof of it is to follow Nature, even in works of mere luxury and elegance. Inſtanced in architecture and gardening, where all muſt be adapted to the genius and uſe of the place, and the beauties not forced into it, but reſulting from it, ver. 50. How men are diſappointed in their moſt expenſive undertakings, for want of this true foundation, without which nothing can pleaſe long, if at all; and the beſt examples and rules will be perverted into ſomething burdenſome and ridiculous, ver. 65, &c. to 92. A deſcription of the falſe taſte of magnificence; the firſt grand error of which is, to imagine that greatneſs conſiſts in the ſize and dimenſion, inſtead of the proportion and harmony of the whole, ver. 97. and the ſecond, either in joining together parts incoherent, or too minutely reſembling, or in the repetition of the ſame too frequently, ver. 105. &c. A word or two of falſe taſte in books, in muſic, in painting, even in preaching and prayer; and, laſtly, in entertainments, ver. 133, &c. Yet Providence is juſtified in giving wealth to be ſquandered in this manner, ſince it is diſperſed to the poor and laborious part of mankind, ver. 169, &c. [recurring to what is laid down in the firſt Book, Ep. ii. and in the Epiſtle preceding this, ver. 159, &c.] What are the proper objects of magnificence, and a proper field for the expence of great men, ver. 177, &c. and finally the great and public works which become a prince, ver. 191, to the end.

The extremes of avarice and profuſion being treated of in the foregoing epiſtle; this takes up one particular branch of the latter, the vanity of expence in people of wealth and quality; and is therefore a corollary to the preceding, juſt as the Epiſtle on the Characters of Women is to that of the Knowledge and Characters of Men. It is equally remarkable for exactneſs of method with the reſt. But the nature of the ſubject, which is leſs philoſophical, makes it capable of being analyzed in a much narrower compaſs.

'Tis ſtrange, the miſer ſhould his cares employ
To gain thoſe riches he can ne'er enjoy:
Is it leſs ſtrange, the prodigal ſhould waſte
His wealth, to purchaſe what he ne'er can taſte?
Not for himſelf he ſees, or hears, or eats;
Artiſts muſt chooſe his pictures, muſic, meats;
He buys for Topham drawings and deſigns;
For Pembroke ſtatues, dirty gods, and coins;
Rare monkiſh manuſcripts for Hearne alone,
And books for Mead, and butterflies for Sloane.
Think we all theſe are for himſelf? no more
Than his fine wife, alas! or finer whore.
For what has Virro painted, built, and planted:
Only to ſhow, how many taſtes he wanted.
What brought Sir Viſto's ill-got wealth to waſte?
Some dæmon whiſper'd, "Viſto! have a taſte."
Heaven viſits with a taſte the wealthy fool,
And needs no rod but Ripley with a rule.

See! ſportive fate, to puniſh awkward pride,
Bids Bubo build, and ſends him ſuch a guide:
A ſtanding ſermon, at each year's expence,
That never coxcomb reach'd magnificence!
You ſhow us Rome was glorious, not profuſe,
And pompous buildings once were things of uſe.
Yet ſhall (my lord) your juſt, your noble rules
Fill half the land with imitating fools;
Who random drawings from your ſheets ſhall take,
And of one beauty many blunders make;
Load ſome vain church with old Theatric ſtate,
Turn arts of triumph to a garden gate;
Reverſe your ornaments, and hang them all
On ſome patch'd dog-hole ek'd with ends of wall;
Then clap four ſlices of pilaſter on't,
That, lac'd with bits of ruſtic, makes a front.
Shall call the winds through long arcades to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door;
Conſcious they act a true Palladian part,
And if they ſtarve, they ſtarve by rules of art.
Oft have you hinted to your brother peer,
A certain truth, which many buy too dear:
Something there is more needful than expence,
And ſomething previous ev'n to taſte—'tis ſenſe:
Good ſenſe, which only is the gift of Heaven,
And though no ſcience, fairly worth the ſeven:
A light, which in yourſelf you muſt perceive;
Jones and Le Nôtre have it not to give.
To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend,
To ſwell the terrace, or to ſink the grot;
In all, let nature never be forgot.
But treat the goddeſs like a modeſt fair,
Nor over dreſs, nor leave her wholly bare;
Let not each beauty every where be ſpy'd,
Where half the ſkill is decently to hide.
He gains all points, who pleaſingly confounds,
Surpriſes, varies, and conceals the bounds.
Conſult the genius of the place in all;
That tells the waters or to riſe or fall;
Or helps th' ambitious hill the heavens to ſcale,
Or ſcoops in circling theatres the vale;
Calls in the country, catches opening glades,
Joins willing woods, and varies ſhades from ſhades;
Now breaks, or now directs th' intending lines;
Paints as you plant, and, as you work, deſigns.
Still follow ſenſe, of every art the ſoul,
Parts anſwering parts ſhall ſlide into a whole,
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, ſtrike from chance;
Nature ſhall join you; time ſhall make it grow
A work to wonder at—perhaps a Stow.
Without it, proud Verſailles! thy glory falls;
And Nero's terraces deſert their walls:
The vaſt parterres a thouſand hands ſhall make,
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake:
Or cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll wiſh your hill or ſhelter'd ſeat again.
Ev'n in an ornament its place remark,
Nor in an hermitage ſet Dr. Clarke.
Behold Villario's ten years toil complete;
His quincunx darkens, his eſpaliers meet;
The wood ſupports the plain, the parts unite,
And ſtrength of ſhade contends with ſtrength of light;
A waving glow the bloomy beds diſplay,
Bluſhing in bright diverſities of day,
With ſilver-quivering rills mæander'd o'er—
Enjoy them, you! Villario can no more;
Tir'd of the ſcene parterres and fountains yield,
He finds at laſt he better likes a field.
Through his young woods how pleas'd Sabinus ſtray'd,
Or ſate delighted in the thickening ſhade,
With annual joy the reddening ſhoots to greet,
Or ſee the ſtretching branches long to meet!
His ſon's fine taſte an opener viſta loves,
Foe to the Dryads of his father's groves;
One boundleſs green, or flouriſh'd carpet views,
With all the mournful family of yews:
The thriving plants ignoble broomſticks made,
Now ſweep thoſe alleys they were born to ſhade.
At Timon's villa let us paſs a day,
Where all cry out, "What ſums are thrown away!"
So proud, ſo grand; of that ſtupendous air,
Soft and agreeable come never there.
Greatneſs, with Timon, dwells in ſuch a draught
As brings all Brobdignag before your thought.
To compaſs this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down:
Who but muſt laugh, the maſter when he ſees,
A puny inſect, ſhivering at a breeze!
Lo, what huge heaps of littleneſs around!
The whole, a labour'd quarry above ground,
Two Cupids ſquirt before: a lake behind
Improves the keenneſs of the northern wind.
His gardens next your admiration call,
On every ſide you look, behold the wall!
No pleaſing intricacies intervene,
No artful wildneſs to perplex the ſcene;
Grove nods at grove, each alley has a brother,
And half the platform juſt reflects the other.
The ſuffering eye inverted nature ſees,
Trees cut to ſtatues, ſtatues thick as trees;
With here a fountain, never to be play'd;
And there a ſummer-houſe that knows no ſhade;
Here Amphitrite ſails through myrtle bowers;
There gladiators fight, or die in flowers;
Unwater'd ſee the drooping ſea-horſe mourn,
And ſwallows rooſt in Nilus' duſty urn.
My lord advances with majeſtic mien,
Smit with the mighty pleaſure to be ſeen:
But ſoft—by regular approach—not yet—
Firſt through the length of yon hot terrace ſweat;
And when up ten ſteep ſlopes you've dragg'd your thighs,
Juſt at his ſtudy-door he'll bleſs your eyes.
His ſtudy! with what authors is it ſtor'd?
In books, not authors, curious is my lord;
To all their dated backs he turns you round;
Theſe Aldus printed, thoſe Du Sueil has bound.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 22, in the MS.

Muſt biſhops, lawyers, ſtateſmen have the ſkill
To build, to plant, judge paintings, what you will?
Then why not Kent as well our treaties draw,
Bridgman explain the goſpel, Gibbs the law?

Lo some are vellum, and the rest as good
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.
For Locke or Milton, 'tis in vain to look,
These shelves admit not any modern book.
And now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of prayer;
Light quirks of music, broken and uneven,
Make the soul dance upon a jig to heaven.
On painted ceilings you devoutly stare,
Where sprawl the saints of Verrio or Laguerre,
Or gilded clouds in fair expansion lie,
And bring all paradise before your eye.
To rest, the cushion and soft dean invite,
Who never mentions hell to ears polite.
But hark! the chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall:
The rich buffet well-coloured serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.
Is this a dinner? this a genial room!
No, 'tis a temple, and a hecatomb.
A solemn sacrifice perform'd in state,
You drink by measure, and to minutes eat.
So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there.
Between each act the trembling salvers ring,
From soup to sweet-wine, and God bless the King.
In plenty starving, tantaliz'd in state,
And complaisantly help'd to all I hate,
Treated, caress'd, and tir'd, I take my leave,
Sick of his civil pride from morn to eve;
I curse such lavish cost, and little skill,
And swear no day was ever past so ill.
Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed;
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The labourer bears: What his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre,
Deep harvest bury all his pride has plann'd,
And laughing Ceres re-assume the land.
Who then shall grace, or who improve the soil?
Who plants like Bathurst, or who builds like Boyle.
'Tis use alone but sanctifies expence,
And splendor borrows all her rays from sense.
His father's acres who enjoys in peace,
Or makes his neighbours glad, if he increase:
Whose cheerful tenants bless their yearly toil,
Yet to their lord owe more than to the soil;
Whose ample lawns are not asham'd to feed
The milky heifer and deserving steed;
Whose rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies, grow:
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town.
You too proceed! make falling arts your care,
Erect new wonders, and the old repair;
Jones and Palladio to themselves restore,
And be whate'er Vitruvius was before:
Till kings call forth th' ideas of your mind.
(Proud to accomplish what such hands design'd)
Bid harbours open, public ways extend,
Bid temples worthier of the god ascend;
Bid the broad arch the dangerous flood contain,
The mole projected break the roaring main;
Back to his bounds their subject sea command,
And old obedient rivers through the land;
These honours, peace to happy Britain brings;
These are imperial works, and worthy kings.

EPISTLE V.

TO MR. ADDISON,

Occasioned by his Dialogues on Medals.

This was originally written in the year 1715, when Mr. Addison intended to publish his book of Medals; it was some time before he was Secretary of State; but not published till Mr. Tickell's edition of his works; at which time the verses on Mr. Craggs, which conclude the poem, were added, viz. in 1720.

As the third Epistle treated of the extremes of avarice and profusion; and the fourth took up one particular branch of the latter, namely, the vanity of expence in people of wealth and quality, and was therefore a corollary to the third; so this treats of one circumstance of that vanity, as it appears in the common collectors of old coins; and is, therefore, a corollary to the fourth.

See the wild waste of all-devouring years!
How Rome her own sad sepulchre appears,
With nodding arches, broken temples spread!
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Imperial wonders rais'd on nations spoil'd, [toil'd:
Where mix'd with slaves the groaning martyr
Huge theatres, that now unpeopled woods,
Now drain'd a distant country of her floods:
Fanes, which admiring gods with pride survey;
Statues of men, scarce less alive than they!
Some felt the silent stroke of mouldering age,
Some hostile fury, some religious rage.
Barbarian blindness, Christian zeal conspire,
And Papal piety, and Gothic fire.
Perhaps, by its own ruins sav'd from flame,
Some bury'd marble half preserves a name;
That name the learn'd with fierce disputes pursue,
And give to Titus old Vespasian's due.
Ambition sigh'd: she found in vain to trust
The faithless column and the crumbling bust:
Huge moles, whose shadow stretch'd from shore to shore,
Their ruins perish'd, and their place no more!
Convinc'd she now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin.
A narrow orb each crowded conquest keeps,
Beneath her palm here sad Judea weeps.
Now scantier limits the proud arch confine,
And scarce are seen the prostrate Nile or Rhine;
A small Euphrates through the piece is roll'd,
And little eagles wave their wings in gold.
The medal, faithful to its charge of fame,
Through climes and ages bears each form and name:
In one short view subjected to our eye
Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties, lie.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore.

This the blue varniſh, that the green endears,
The ſacred ruſt of twice ten hundred years!
To gain Peſcennius one employs his ſchemes,
One graſps a Cecrops in ecſtatic dreams.
Poor Vadius, long with learned ſpleen devour'd,
Can taſte no pleaſure ſince his ſhield was ſcour'd:
And Curio, reſtleſs by the fair-one's ſide,
Sighs for an Otho, and neglects his bride.
Theirs is the vanity, the learning thine:
Touch'd by thy hand, again Rome's glories ſhine:
Her gods and godlike heroes riſe to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew.
Nor bluſh, theſe ſtudies thy regard engage;
Theſe pleas'd the fathers of poetic rage:
The verſe and ſculpture bore an equal part,
And art reflected images to art.
Oh, when ſhall Britain, conſcious of her claim,
Stand emulous of Greek and Roman fame?
In living medals ſee her wars enroll'd,
And vanquiſh'd realms ſupply recording gold?
Here, riſing bold, the patriot's honeſt face;
There, warriors frowning in hiſtoric braſs:
Then future ages with delight ſhall ſee
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's looks agree;
Or in fair ſeries laurel'd bards be ſhown,
A Virgil there, and here an Addiſon.
Then ſhall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the caſt ore, another Pollio, ſhine:
With aſpect open ſhall erect his head,
And round the orb in laſting notes be read,
"Stateſman, yet friend to truth! of ſoul ſincere,
"In action faithful, and in honour clear;
"Who broke no promiſe, ſerv'd no private end,
"Who gain'd no title, and who loſt no friend;
"Ennobled by himſelf, by all approv'd,
"And prais'd, unenvy'd, by the muſe he lov'd."

EPISTLE TO DR: ARBUTHNOT:

BEING THE

PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

Advertiſement to the firſt Publication of this Epiſtle.

THIS paper is a ſort of bill of complaint, begun many years ſince, and drawn up by ſnatches, as the ſeveral occaſions offered. I had no thoughts of publiſhing it, till it pleaſed ſome perſons of rank and fortune [the authors of verſes to the imitator of Horace, and of an epiſtle to a Doctor of Divinity from a nobleman at Hampton-Court] to attack, in a very extraordinary manner, not only my writings (of which, being public, the public is judge) but my perſon, morals, and family, whereof, to thoſe who know me not, a truer information may be requiſite. Being divided between the neceſſity to ſay ſomething of myſelf, and my own lazineſs to undertake ſo aukward a taſk, I thought it the ſhorteſt way to put the laſt hand to this epiſtle. If it have any thing pleaſing, it will be that by which I am moſt deſirous to pleaſe, the truth and the ſentiment; and if any thing offenſive, it will be only to thoſe I am leaſt ſorry to offend, the vicious or the ungenerous.

Many will know their own pictures in it, there being not a circumſtance but what is true: but I have, for the moſt part, ſpared their names; and they may eſcape being laughed at, if they pleaſe.

I would have ſome of them to know, it was owing to the requeſt of the learned and candid friend to whom it is inſcribed, that I make not as free uſe of theirs as they have done of mine. However, I ſhall have this advantage and honour on my ſide, that whereas, by their proceeding, any abuſe may be directed at any man, no injury can poſſibly be done by mine, ſince a nameleſs character can never be found out, but by its truth and likeneſs.

P. SHUT, ſhut the door, good John! fatigu'd I ſaid,
Tie up the knocker, ſay I'm ſick, I'm dead.
The dog-ſtar rages! nay, 'tis paſt a doubt,
All Bedlam, or Parnaſſus, is let out:
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.
What walls can guard me, or what ſhades can hide?
They pierce my thickets, through my grot they glide.
By land, by water, they renew the charge;
They ſtop the chariot, and they board the barge.
No place is ſacred, not the church is free,
Ev'n Sunday ſhines no Sabbath day to me;
Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy! to catch me, juſt at dinner-time.
Is there a parſon, much bemus'd in beer,
A maudlin poeteſs, a rhyming peer,
A clerk, foredom'd his father's ſoul to croſs,
Who pens a ſtanza, when he ſhould engroſs?
Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, ſcrawls
With deſperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
All fly to Twit'nam, and in humble ſtrain
Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 20, in the MS.

Is there a bard in durance? turn them free,
With all their brandiſh'd reams they run to me:
Is there a 'prentice, having ſeen two plays,
Who would do ſomething in his ſempſtreſs' praiſe—

Arthur, whose giddy son neglects the laws,
Imputes to me and my damn'd works the cause:
Poor Cornus sees his frantic wife elope,
And curses wit, and poetry, and Pope.
Friend to my life! (which did you not prolong,
The world had wanted many an idle song),
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove?
Or which must end me, a fool's wrath or love? 30
A dire dilemma? either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead.
Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I?
Who can't be silent, and who will not lie:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face.
I sit with sad civility; I read
With honest anguish, and an aching head;
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears, 39
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."
Nine years! cries he, who high in Drury-lane,
Lull'd by soft zephyrs through the broken pane,
Rhymes e'er he wakes, and prints before term ends,
Oblig'd by hunger, and request of friends:
"The piece, you think, is incorrect? why take it;
"I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it."
Three things another's modest wishes bound,
My friendship, and a prologue, and ten pound.
Pitholeon sends to me: "You know his grace;
"I want a patron; ask him for a place." 50
Pitholeon libell'd me—"but here's a letter
"Informs you, Sir, 'twas when he knew no better.
"Dare you refuse him? Curll invites to dine,
"He'll write a journal, or he'll turn divine."
Bless me! a packet.—"'Tis a stranger sues,
"A virgin tragedy, an orphan muse."
If I dislike it, "furies, death and rage!"
If I approve, "commend it to the stage."
There (thank my stars) my whole commission ends,
The players and I are, luckily, no friends. 60
Fir'd that the house reject him, "'Sdeath! I'll print it,
"And shame the fools—your interest, Sir, with Lintot."
Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too much:
"Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch."
All my demurs but double his attacks:
At last he whispers, "Do; and we go snacks."
Glad of a quarrel, straight I clap the door,
"Sir, let me see your works and you no more."
'Tis sung, when Midas' ears began to spring
(Midas, a sacred person and a king), 70
His very minister, who spy'd them first,
Some say his queen) was forc'd to speak, or burst.
And is not mine, my friend, a sorer case,
When every coxcomb perks them in my face?

A. Good friend, forbear! you deal in dangerous things,
I'd never name queens, ministers, or kings;
Keep close to ears, and those let asses prick,
'Tis nothing—P. Nothing? if they bite and kick?
Out with it, Dunciad! let the secret pass,
That secret to each fool, that he's an ass: 80
The truth once told (and wherefore should we lie?)
The queen of Midas slept, and so may I.
You think this cruel? Take it for a rule,
No creature smarts so little as a fool.
Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break,
Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack:
Pit, box, and gallery, in convulsions hurl'd,
Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.
Who shames a scribbler? Break one cobweb through,
He spins the slight, self-pleasing thread anew: 90
Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again,
Thron'd on the centre of his thin designs,
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines!
Whom have I hurt? has poet yet, or peer,
Lost the arch'd eyebrow, or Parnassian sneer?
And has not Colly still his lord, and whore?
His butchers Henley, his Free-masons Moor?
Does not one table Bavius still admit? 99
Still to one bishop Philips seem a wit? [fend,
Still Sappho—A. Hold; for God's sake—you'll of-
No names—be calm—learn prudence of a friend:
I too could write, and I am twice as tall; [all.
But foes like these—P. One flatterer's worse than
Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite.
A fool quite angry is quite innocent:
Alas! 'tis ten times worse when they repent.
One dedicates in high heroic prose,
And ridicules beyond a hundred foes: 110
One from all Grub-street will my fame defend,
And, more abusive, calls himself my friend.
This prints my letters, that expects a bribe,
And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe!"
There are, who to my person pay their court:
I cough like Horace, and, though lean, am short.
Ammon's great son one shoulder had too high,
Such Ovid's nose, and, "Sir! you have an eye!"—
Go on, obliging creature, make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. 120
Say for my comfort, languishing in bed,
"Just so immortal Maro held his head;"
And when I die, be sure you let me know
Great Homer dy'd three thousand years ago.
Why did I write? what sin to me unknown
Dipp'd me in ink, my parents', or my own?

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 29, in the 1st Ed.
Dear doctor, tell me, is not this a curse?
Say, is their anger, or their friendship worse?
Ver. 53, in the MS.
If you refuse, he goes, as fates incline,
To plague Sir Robert, or to turn divine.
Ver. 60, in the former Ed.
Cibber and I are luckily no friends.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 111, in the MS.
For song, for silence some expect a bribe:
And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe!"
Time, praise, or money, is the least they crave;
Yet each declares the other fool or knave.
After ver. 124, in the MS.
But, friend, this shape, which you and Curll * admire,
Came not from Ammon's son, but from my sire †;

* Curll set up his head for a sign.
† His father was crooked.

As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came.
I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd:
The muse but serv'd to ease some friend, not wife;
To help me through this long disease, my life;
To second, Arbuthnot! thy art and care,
And teach, the being you preserv'd, to bear.

But why then publish? Granville the polite,
And knowing Walsh, would tell me I could write;
Well-natur'd Garth inflam'd with early praise,
And Congreve lov'd, and Swift endur'd my lays;
The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield read,
Ev'n mitred Rochester would nod the head,
And St. John's self (great Dryden's friends before),
With open arms receiv'd one poet more.
Happy my studies, when by these approv'd!
Happier their author, when by these belov'd!
From these the world will judge of men and books,
Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks.

Soft were my numbers: who could take offence
While pure description held the place of sense?
Like gentle Fanny's was my flowery theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream.
Yet then did Gildon draw his venal quill;
I wish'd the man a dinner, and sate still.
Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt.
If want provok'd, or madness made them print,
I wag'd no war with bedlam or the mint.

Did some more sober critic come abroad;
If wrong, I smil'd; if right, I kiss'd the rod.
Pains, reading, study, are their just pretence,
And all they want is spirit, taste, and sense.
Commas and points they set exactly right,
And 'twere a sin to rob them of their mite.
Yet ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From flashing Bentley down to pidling Tibalds:
Each wight, who reads not, and but scans and spells,
Each word-catcher, that lives on syllables,
Ev'n such small critics some regard may claim,
Preserv'd in Milton's or in Shakspeare's name.
Pretty! in amber to observe the forms
Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs, or worms!
The things we know are neither rich nor rare,
But wonder how the devil they got there.

Were others angry: I excus'd them too;
Well might they rage, I gave them but their due.
A man's true merit 'tis not hard to find;
But each man's secret standard in his mind,
That casting-weight pride adds to emptiness,
This, who can gratify? for who can guess?
The bard whom pilfer'd pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian tale for half a crown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
And strains from hard-bound brains, eight lines a-year;
He, who, still wanting, though he lives on theft,
Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing left:
And he, who, now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning:
And he, whose fustian's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad:
All these, my modest satire bad translate,
And own'd that nine such poets made a Tate.
How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe!
And swear, not Addison himself was safe.

Peace to all such! but were there one whose fires
True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires;
Blest with each talent and each art to please,
And born to write, converse, and live with ease:
Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne,
View him with scornful, yet with jealous eyes,
And hate for arts that caus'd himself to rise;
Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer;
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame, or to commend,
A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend;
Dreading ev'n fools, by flatterers besieg'd,
And so obliging, that he ne'er oblig'd;
Like Cato, give his little senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause;
While wits and templars every sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise—
Who but must laugh, if such a man there be?
Who would not weep, if Atticus were he!

What though my name stood rubric on the walls,
Or plaster'd posts, with claps, in capitals?
Or smoking forth, a hundred hawkers load,
On wings of winds came flying all abroad?
I sought no homage from the race that write;
I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight;
Poems I heeded (now berhym'd so long) [long.
No more than thou, great George! a birth-day
I ne'er with wits or witlings pass'd my days,
To spread about the itch of verse and praise;
Nor, like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down;
Nor at rehearsals sweat, and mouth'd, and cry'd,
With handkerchief and orange at my side;
But, sick of fops, and poetry, and prate,
To Bufo left the whole Castalian state.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,
Sate full-blown Bufo, puff'd by every quill;
Fed with soft dedication all day long,
Horace and he went hand and hand in song.

VARIATIONS.

And for my head, if you'll the truth excuse,
I had it from my mother *, not the muse.
Happy, if he, in whom these frailties join'd,
Had heir'd as well the virtues of the mind.

* His mother was much afflicted with headachs.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 208, in the MS.
Who, if two wits on rival themes contest,
Approves of each, but likes the worst the best.

Alluding to Mr. Pope's and Tickell's translation of the first book of the Iliad.

His library (where busts of poets dead
And a true Pindar stood without a head),
Receiv'd of wits an undistinguish'd race,
Who first his judgment ask'd, and then a place:
Much they extoll'd his pictures, much his seat,
And flatter'd every day, and some days eat;
Till, grown more frugal in his riper days,
He paid some bards with port, and some with praise.
To some a dry rehearsal was assign'd,
And others (harder still) he paid in kind.
Dryden alone (what wonder!) came not nigh,
Dryden alone escap'd this judging eye:
But still the great have kindness in reserve,
He help'd to bury whom he help'd to starve.
May some choice patron bless each grey goose quill!
May every Bavius have his Bufo still!
So when a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands!
Blest be the great! for those they take away,
And those they left me; for they left me Gay:
Left me to see neglected genius bloom,
Neglected die, and tell it on his tomb:
Of all thy blameless life the sole return
My verse, and Queensberry weeping o'er thy urn!
Oh, let me live my own, and die so too!
(To live and die is all I have to do:)
Maintain a poet's dignity and ease,
And see what friends, and read what books I please:
Above a patron, though I condescend
Sometimes to call a minister my friend.
I was not born for courts or great affairs;
I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers;
Can sleep without a poem in my head,
Nor know, if Dennis be alive or dead.
Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light?
Heavens! was I born for nothing but to write?
Has life no joys for me? or (to be grave)
Have I no friend to serve, no soul to save?
"I found him close with Swift—indeed? no doubt
"(Cries prating Balbus) something will come out."
"'Tis all in vain, deny it as I will.
"No, such a genius never can lie still;"
And then for mine obligingly mistakes
The first lampoon Sir Will or Bubo makes.
Poor, guiltless I! and can I choose but smile,
When every coxcomb knows me by my style?
Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear!
But he who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Insults fall'n worth, or beauty in distress,
Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out:
That fop, whose pride affects a patron's name,
Yet absent, wounds an author's honest fame:
Who can your merit selfishly approve,
And show the sense of it without the love;
Who has the vanity to call you friend,
Yet wants the honour, injur'd, to defend;
Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,
And, if he lie not, must at least betray:
Who to the Dean and silver Bell can swear,
And sees at Cannons what was never there;
Who reads but with a lust to misapply,
Make satire a lampoon, and fiction lie.
A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,
But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.
Let Sporus tremble—A. What? that thing of silk,
Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk?
Satire of sense, alas! can Sporus feel?
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?
P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings;
Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys:
So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.
Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks;
Or at the ear of Eve, familiar toad,
Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies.
His wit all see-saw, between that and this,
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis.
Amphibious thing! that, acting either part,
The trifling head or the corrupted heart,
Fop at the toilet, flatterer at the board,
Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
Eve's tempter thus the Rabbins have express't,
A cherub's face, a reptile all the rest.
Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust,
Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.
Not fortune's worshipper, nor fashion's fool,
Not lucre's madman, nor ambition's tool,

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 234, in the MS.

To bards reciting he vouchsaf'd a nod,
And snuff'd their incense like a gracious God.

After ver. 270, in the MS.

Friendships from youth I sought, and seek them still:
Fame, like the wind, may breathe where'er it will.
The world I knew, but made it not my school,
And in a course of flattery liv'd no fool.

After ver. 282, in the MS.

P. What if I sing Augustus great and good?
A. You did so lately, was it understood?

VARIATIONS.

Be nice no more, but, with a mouth profound,
As rumbling Dennis or a Norfolk hound;
With George and Frederic roughen every verse,
Then smooth up all, and Caroline rehearse.
P. No—the high task to lift up kings to gods,
Leave to court sermons, and to birth-day odes.
On themes like these, superior far to thine,
Let laurel'd Cibber and great Arnal shine.
Why write at all?—A. Yes, silence if you keep,
The town, the court, the wits, the dunces weep.

Not proud, nor ſervile; be one poet's praiſe.
That, if he pleas'd, he pleas'd by manly ways:
That flattery, ev'n to kings, he held a ſhame,
And thought a lie in verſe or proſe the ſame;
That not in fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But ſtoop'd to truth, and moraliz'd his ſong:
That not for fame, but virtue's better end,
He ſtood the furious foe, the timid friend,
The damning critic, half-approving wit,
The coxcomb hit, or fearing to be hit;
Laugh'd at the loſs of friends he never had,
The dull, the proud, the wicked, and the mad;
The diſtant threats of vengeance on his head,
The blow unfelt, the tear he never ſhed;
The tale reviv'd, the lie ſo oft o'erthrown,
Th' imputed traſh, and dulneſs not his own;
The morals blacken'd when the writings 'ſcape,
The libel'd perſon, and the pictur'd ſhape;
Abuſe, on all he lov'd, or lov'd him, ſpread,
A friend in exile, or a father dead;
The whiſper, that, to greatneſs ſtill too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his ſovereign's ear—
Welcome for thee, fair virtue! all the paſt:
For thee, fair virtue! welcome ev'n the laſt!

A. But why inſult the poor, affront the great?
P. A knave's a knave, to me, in every ſtate:
Alike my ſcorn, if he ſucceed or fail.
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail;
A hireling ſcribbler, or a hireling peer,
Knight of the poſt corrupt, or of the ſhire;
If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or loſe his own.

Yet ſoft by nature, more a dupe than wit,
Sappho can tell you how this man was bit:
This dreaded ſat'riſt Dennis will confeſs
Foe to his pride, but friend to his diſtreſs:
So humble, he has knock'd at Tibbald's door,
Has drunk with Cibber, nay, has rhym'd for Moor.
Full ten years ſlander'd, did he once reply?
Three thouſand ſuns went down on Welſted's lie.
To pleaſe his miſtreſs one aſpers'd his life;
He laſh'd him not, but let her be his wife:
Let Budgell charge low Grub-ſtreet on his quill,
And write whate'er he pleas'd, except his will;
Let the two Curlls of town and court, abuſe
His father, mother, body, ſoul, and muſe.
Yet why? that father held it for a rule,
It was a ſin to call our neighbour fool:
That harmleſs mother thought no wife a whore:
Hear this, and ſpare his family, James Moore!
Unſpotted names, and memorable long!
If there be force in virtue, or in ſong.

Of gentle blood (part ſhed in honour's cauſe,
While yet in Britain honour had applauſe)
Each parent ſprung—A. What, fortune, pray?—
P. Their own,
And better got, than Beſtia's from the throne.
Born to no pride, inheriting no ſtrife,
Nor marrying diſcord in a noble wife,
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.
No courts he ſaw, no ſuits would ever try,
Nor dar'd an oath, nor hazarded a lie,
Unlearn'd, he knew no ſchoolmen's ſubtle art,
No language, but the language of the heart.
By nature honeſt, by experience wiſe;
Healthy by temperance, and by exerciſe;
His life, though long, to ſickneſs paſt unknown,
His death was inſtant, and without a groan.
O grant me thus to live, and thus to die!
Who ſprung from kings ſhall know leſs joy than I.

O friend! may each domeſtic bliſs be thine!
Be no unpleaſing melancholy mine:
Me, let the tender office long engage.
To rock the cradle of repoſing age,
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,
Make languor ſmile, and ſmooth the bed of death,
Explore the thought, explain the aſking eye,
And keep a while one parent from the ſky!
On cares like theſe if length of days attend,
May Heaven, to bleſs thoſe days, preſerve my friend,
Preſerve him ſocial, cheerful, and ſerene,
And juſt as rich as when he ſerv'd a queen!
A. Whether that bleſſings be deny'd or given,
Thus far was right, the reſt belongs to Heaven.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 368, in the MS.

Once, and but once, his heedleſs youth was bit,
And lik'd that dangerous thing, a female wit;
Safe as he thought, though all the prudent chid;
He writ no libels, but my lady did:
Great odds in amorous or poetic game,
Where woman's is the ſin, and man's the ſhame.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 405, in the MS.

And of myſelf, too, ſomething muſt I ſay!
Take then this verſe, the trifle of a day.
And if it live, it lives but to commend
The man whoſe heart has ne'er forgot a friend,
Or head, an author; critic, yet polite,
And friend to learning, yet too wiſe to write.

SATIRES AND EPISTLES

OF HORACE IMITATED.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The occaſion of publiſhing theſe Imitations was the clamour raiſed on ſome of my epiſtles. An anſwer from Horace was both more full, and of more dignity, than any I could have made in my own perſon; and the example of much greater freedom in ſo eminent a divine as Dr. Donne, ſeemed a proof with what indignation and contempt a Chriſtian may treat vice or folly, in ever ſo low, or ever ſo high a ſtation. Both theſe authors were acceptable to the Princes and Miniſters under whom they lived. The ſatires of Dr. Donne I verſified, at the deſire of the Earl of Oxford while he was Lord Treaſurer, and of the Duke of Shrewſbury, who had been Secretary of State: neither of whom looked upon a ſatire on vicious courts as any reflection on thoſe they ſerved in. And indeed there is not in the world a greater error, than that which fools are ſo apt to fall into, and knaves with good reaſon to encourage, the miſtaking a ſatiriſt for a libeller; whereas to a true ſatiriſt nothing is ſo odious as a libeller, for the ſame reaſon as to a man truly virtuous, nothing is ſo hateful as a hypocrite.

"Uni aequus Virtuti atque ejus Amicis."

BOOK II. SATIRE I.

TO MR. FORTESCUE.

P. There are (I ſcarce can think it, but am told)
(a) There are, to whom my ſatire ſeems too bold:
Scarce to wiſe Peter complaiſant enough,
And ſomething ſaid of Chartres much too rough.
(b) The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to ſay,
Lord Fanny ſpins a thouſand ſuch a day,
Timorous by nature, of the rich in awe,
(c) I come to council learned in the law:
You'll give me, like a friend both ſage and free,
Advice; and (as you uſe) without a fee.
F. (d) I'd write no more.
P. Not write? but then I think,
(e) And for my ſoul I cannot ſleep a wink.
I nod in company, I wake at night,
Fools ruſh into my head, and ſo I write.
F. You could not do a worſe thing for your life.
Why, if the nights ſeem tedious—take a wife:

HORATIUS.—TREBATIUS.

HORATIUS.

(a) Sunt quibus in Satira videar nimis acer, et ultra
Legem tendere opus; (b) ſine nervis altera, quid
Compoſui, pars eſſe putat, ſimileſque meorum
Mille die verſus deduci poſſe. (c) Trebati,
Quid faciam? praeſcribe.
T. (d) Quieſcas.
H. Ne faciam, inquis
Omnino verſus?
T. Aio.
H. Peream male, ſi non
Optimum erat: (e) verum nequeo dormire.

(f) Or rather truly, if your point be reſt,
Lettuce and cowſlip wine; "Probatum eſt."
But talk with Celſus, Celſus will adviſe
Hartſhorn, or ſomething that ſhall cloſe your eyes,
(g) Or, if you needs muſt write, write Cæſar's praiſe,
(b) You'll gain at leaſt a knighthood, or the bays.
P. What? like Sir (i) Richard, rumbling, rough, and fierce,
With arms and George and Brunſwick crowd the verſe,
Rend with tremendous ſound your ears aſunder,
With gun, drum, trumpet, blunderbuſs, and thunder?
Or nobly wild, with Budgell's fire and force,
Paint angels trembling round his falling horſe?
F. (k) Then all your muſe's ſoftest art diſplay,
Let Carolina ſmooth the tuneful lay,
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine,
And ſweetly flow through all the royal line.
P. (l) Alas! few verſes touch their nicer ear;
They ſcarce can bear their laureate twice a year;
And juſtly Cæſar ſcorns the poet's lays,
It is to hiſtory he truſts for praiſe.
F. (m) Better be Cibber, I'll maintain it ſtill,
Than ridicule all taſte, blaſpheme quadrille,
Abuſe the city's beſt good men in metre,
And laugh at peers that put their truſt in Peter.
(n) Ev'n thoſe you touch not, hate you.
P. What ſhould ail 'em?
P. A hundred ſmart in Timon and in Balaam:
The fewer ſtill you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a ſcore. [deny
P. (o) Each mortal has his pleaſure: none
Scarſdale his bottle, Darty his ham pie!
Ridotta ſips and dances, till ſhe ſee
The doubling luſtres dance as faſt as ſhe; [ther,
(p) F— loves the ſenate, Hockleyhole his bro-
Like in all elſe, as one egg to another.

T. (f) Ter uncti
Tranſnanto Tiberim, ſomno quibus eſt opus alto;
Irriguumve mero ſub noctem corpus habento.
(g) Aut ſi tantus amor ſcribendi te rapit, aude
Cæſaris invicti res dicere, (b) multa laborum
Praemia laturus.
H. Cupidum, Pater optime, vires
Deficiunt: (i) neque enim quivis horrentia pilis
Agmina, nec fracta pereuntes cuſpide Gallos,
Aut labentis equo deſcribat vulnera Parthi.
T. (k) Attamen et juſtum poteras et ſcribere fortem,
Scipiadam ut ſapiens Lucilius.
H. Haud mihi deero,
Cum res ipſa feret: (l) niſi dextro tempore, Flacci
Verba per attentam non ibunt Caeſaris aurem:
Cui male ſi palpere, recalcitrat undique tutus.
T. (m) Quanto rectius hoc, quam triſti laedere verſu
Pantolabum ſcurram, Nomentanumve nepotem?
(n) Cum ſibi quiſque timet, quamquam eſt intactus, et odit.
H. (o) Quid faciam? ſaltat Milonius ut ſemel icto
Acceſſit fervor capiti, numeruſque lucernis.
(p) Caſtor gaudet equis; ovo prognatus eodem,

(q) I love to pour out all myſelf, as plain
As downright Shippen, or as old Montange:
In them, as certain to be lov'd as ſeen,
The ſoul ſtood forth, nor kept a thought within;
In me what ſpots (for ſpots I have) appear,
Will prove at leaſt the medium muſt be clear.
In this impartial glaſs, my muſe intends
Fair to expoſe myſelf, my foes, my friends;
Publiſh the preſent age; but where my text
Is vice too high, reſerve it for the next;
My foes ſhall wiſh my life a longer date,
And every friend the leſs lament my fate.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
(r) Verſeman or proſeman, term me what you will,
Papiſt or Proteſtant, or both between,
Like good Eraſmus in an honeſt mean,
In moderation placing all my glory,
While Tories call me Whig, and Whigs a Tory.
(s) Satire 's my weapon, but I'm too diſcreet
To run a-muck, and tilt at all I meet;
(t) I only wear it in a land of Hectors,
Thieves, ſupercargoes, ſharpers, and directors.
(u) Save but our army! and let Jove incruſt
Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlaſting ruſt!
(v) Peace is my dear delight——not Fleury's more:
But touch me, and no miniſter ſo ſore.
Whoe'er offends, at ſome unlucky time
(x) Slides into verſe, and hitches in a rhyme,
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the ſad burden of ſome merry ſong.
(y) Slander or poiſon dread from Delia's rage;
Hard words or hanging, if your judge be Page.
From furious Sappho ſcarce a milder fate,
P-x'd by her love, or libell'd by her hate.

Pugnis. quot capitum vivunt, totidem ſtudiorum
Millia. (q) me pedibus delectat claudere verba,
Lucili ritu, noſtrum melioris utroque.
Ille velut fidis arcana ſodalibus olim
Credebat libris; neque, ſi male geſſerat, uſquam,
Ducurrens alio, neque ſi bene; quo fit, ut omnis
Votiva pateat veluti deſcripta tabella
Vita ſenis. ſequor hunc, (r) Lucanus an Appulus, anceps:
[Nam Venuſinus arat finem ſub utrumque colonus,
Miſſus ad hoc, pulſis (vetus eſt ut fama) Sabellis;
Quo ne per vacuum Romano incurreret hoſtis;
Sive quod Appula gens, ſeu quod Lucania bellum
Incuteret violenta] (s) ſed hic ſtylus haud petet ultro
Quemquam animantem, et me veluti cuſtodiet enſis
Vagina tectus, quem cur deſtringere coner,
(t) Tutus ab inſeſtis latronibus? (u) O pater et rex
Jupiter, ut pereat poſitum rubigine telum,
Nec quiſquam noceat (v) cupido mihi pacis! at ille,
Qui me commôrit, (melius non tangere, clamo)
(x) Flebit, et inſignis tota cantabitur urbe.
(y) Cervius iratus leges minitatur et urnam;
Canidia Albuti, quibus eſt inimica, venenum:
Grande malum Turius, ſi quid ſe judice certes;

(z) Its proper power to hurt, each creature feels;
Bulls aim their horns, and asses lift their heels;
'Tis a bear's talent not to kick, but hug;
And no man wonders he's not stung by pug.
(a) So drink with Walters, or with Chartres eat,
They'll never poison you, they'll only cheat.
(b) Then, learned Sir! (to cut the matter short)
Whate'er my fate, or well or ill at court;
Whether old-age, with faint but cheerful ray,
Attends to gild the evening of my day,
Or death's black wing already be display'd,
To wrap me in the universal shade;
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skewer to write:
In durance, exile, bedlam, or the mint,
(c) Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print.
F. (d) Alas, young man! your days can ne'er be long,
In flower of age you perish for a song!
Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers, now, to take your life!
P. (e) What? arm'd for virtue when I point the pen,
Brand the bold front of shameless guilty men;
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;
Can there be wanting, to defend her cause,
Lights of the church, or guardians of the laws?
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flatterers and bigots ev'n in Louis' reign?
Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Friar engage,
Yet neither Charles nor James be in a rage?
And I not (f) strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?
I will, or perish in the generous cause:
Hear this, and tremble! you, who 'scape the laws.
Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave
Shall walk the world, in credit, to his grave.

(g) To virtue only and her friends a friend,
The world beside may murmur, or commend,
Know, all the distant din that world can keep,
Rolls o'er my grotto, and but sooths my sleep.
(h) There, my retreat the best companions grace,
Chiefs out of war, and statesmen out of place.
There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl
The feast of reason and the flow of soul:
And he, whose lightning pierc'd th' Iberian lines,
Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines;
Or tames the genius of the stubborn plain,
Almost as quickly as he conquer'd Spain.
(i) Envy must own, I live among the great,
No pimp of pleasure, and no spy of state!
With eyes that pry not, tongue that ne'er repeats;
Fond to spread friendships, but to cover heats;
To help who want, to forward who excel;
This, all who know me, know; who love me, tell;
And who unknown defame me, let them be
Scribblers or peers, alike are mob to me.
This is my plea, on this I rest my cause—
(k) What saith my council, learned in the laws?
F. (l) Your plea is good; but still I say, beware!
Laws are explain'd by men—so have a care.
It stands on record, that in Richard's times
A man was hang'd for very honest rhymes;
(m) Consult the statute, "quart." I think, it is,
"Edwardi sext." or "prim. et quint. Eliz."
See libels, satires—here you have it—read.
P. (n) Libels and satires! lawless things indeed!
But brave epistles, bringing vice to light,
Such as a king might read, a bishop write,
Such as Sir Robert would approve—
F. Indeed?
The case is alter'd—you may then proceed;
(o) In such a case the plaintiff will be hiss'd,
My lords the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd.

(z) Ut, quo quisque valet, suspectos terreat, utque
Imperet hoc Natura potens, sic collige mecum.
Dente lupus, cornu taurus petit; unde, nisi intus
Monstratum? (a) Scaevae vivacem crede nepoti
Matrem; nil faciet sceleris pia dextra (mirum?
Ut neque calce lupus quemquam, neque dente petit bos)
Sed mala tollet anum vitiato melle cicuta.
(b) Ne longum faciam: seu me tranquilla senectus
Expectat, seu mors atris circumvolat alis;
Dives, inops; Romae, seu fors ita jusserit, exsul;
(c) Quisquis erit vitae, scribam, color.
T. (d) O puer, ut sis
Vitalis metuo; et majorum ne quis amicus
Frigore te feriat.
H. (e) Quid? cum est Lucilius ausus
Primus in hunc operis componere carmina morem,
(f) Detrahere et pellem, nitidus qua quisque per ora
Cederet, introrsum turpis; num Laelius, aut qui
Duxit ab oppressa meritum Carthagine nomen,
Ingenio offensi? aut laesо doluere Metello,
Famosisque Lupo cooperto versibus? atqui
Primores populi arripuit, populumque tributim;
Scilicet (g) Uni aequus virtuti atque ejus Amicis.
(h) Quin ubi se a vulgo et scena in secreta remorant
Virtus Scipiadae et mitis sapientia Laeli,
Nugari cum illo, et discincti ludere, donec
Decoqueretur olus, soliti.
Quidquid sum ego, quamvis
Infra Lucili censum, ingeniumque; tamen me
(i) Cum magnis vixisse invita fatebitur usque
Invidia; et fragili quaerens illidere dentem,
Offendet solido:
(k) nisi quid tu, docte Trebati,
Dissentis.
T. (l) Equidem nihil hinc diffingere possum.
Sed tamen ut monitus caveas, ne forte negoti
Incutiat tibi quid sanctarum inscitia legum;
"(m) Si mala condiderit in quem quis carmina, jus est
"Judiciumque."
H. Esto, si quis (n) mala: sed bona si quis
Judice condiderit laudatur Caesare. si quis
Opprobriis dignum laceraverit, integer ipse.
T. (o) Solventur risu tabulae: tu missus abibis.

BOOK II. SATIRE II.

TO MR. BETHEL.

(a) WHAT, and how great, the virtue and the art
To live on little with a cheerful heart;
(b) (A doctrine ſage, but truly none of mine)
Let's talk, my friends, but talk (c) before we dine.
(d) Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
Turns you from ſound philoſophy aſide;
Not when from plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl.
Hear Bethel's ſermon, one not vers'd in ſchools,
(e) But ſtrong in ſenſe, and wiſe without the rules.
(f) Go work, hunt, exerciſe! (he thus began)
Then ſcorn a homely dinner, if you can.
(g) Your wine lock'd up, your Butler ſtroll'd abroad,
Or fiſh deny'd (the river yet unthaw'd),
If then plain bread and milk will do the feat,
The pleaſure lies in you, and not the meat.
(h) Preach as I pleaſe, I doubt our curious men
Will chooſe a pheaſant ſtill before a hen;
Yet hens of Guinea full as good I hold,
Except you eat the feathers green and gold.

SATIRA II.

(a) QUAE virtus et quanta, boni, ſit vivere parvo,
(b) (Nec meus hic ſermo: ſed qua praecepit Ofellus,
Ruſticus, (c) abnormis Sapiens, craſſaque Minerva)
Diſcite, (d) non inter lances menſaſque nitentes;
Cum ſtupet inſanis acies fulgoribus, et cum
Acclinis falſis animus meliora recuſat:
(e) Verum hic impranſi mecum diſquirite. Cur hoc?
Dicam, ſi potero, male verum examinat omnis
Corruptus judex. (f) Leporum ſectatus, equove
Laſſus ab indomito; vel (ſi Romana fatigat
Militia aſſuetum graecari) ſeu pila velox,
Molliter auſterum ſtudio fallente laborem;
Seu te diſcus agit, pete cedentem aëra diſco:
Cum labor extulerit faſtidia; ſiccus, inanis,
Sperne cibum vilem: niſi Hymettia mella Falerno,
Ne biberis, diluta. (g) foris eſt promus, et atrum
Defendens piſces hiemat mare: cum ſale panis
Latrantem ſtomachum bene leniet. unde putas, aut
Quî partum? non in caro nidore voluptas
Summa, ſed in teipſo eſt. tu pulmentaria quaere
Sudando. pinguem vitiis albumque neque oſtrea,
Nec ſcarus, aut poterit peregrina juvare lagoïs.
(h) Vix tamen eripiam, poſito pavone, velis quin
Hoc potius quam gallina tergere palatum?
Corruptus vanis rerum: quia veneat auro
Rara avis, et picta pandat ſpectacula cauda:
Tamquam ad rem attineat quidquam. Num veſceris iſta,
Quam laudas, pluma? coctove num adeſt honor idem?
Carne tamen quamvis diſtat nihil hac, magis illa;
Imparibus formis deceptum te patet, eſto.
Unde datum ſentis, lupus hic, Tiberinus, an alto
Captus hiet? ponteſne inter jactatus, an amnis
Oſtia ſub Tuſci? (i) laudas, inſane, trilibrem [eſt.
Mullum; in ſingula quem minuas pulmenta neceſſe
Ducit te ſpecies, video. quo pertinet ergo
Proceros odiſſe lupos? quia ſcilicet illis
Majorem natura modum dedit, his breve pondus.
Jejunus raro ſtomachus vulgaria temnit.
(k) Porrectum magno magnum ſpectare catino
Vellem, ait Harpyiis gula digna rapacibus. At vos, [quamquam
(l) Praeſentes Auſtri, coquite horum opſonia;
Putet aper rhombuſque recens, mala copia quando
Aegrum ſollicitat ſtomachum; cum rapula plenus
Atque acidas mavult inulas. (m) necdum omnis abacta
Pauperies epulis regum: nam vilibus ovis
Nigriſque eſt oleis hodie locus. Haud ita pridem
Galloni praeconis erat accipenſere menſa [bant?
Infamis. quid? tum rhombus minus aequora alen-
(n) Tutus erat rhombus, tutoque ciconia nido,
Donec vos auctor docuit praetorius. ergo
(o) Si quis nunc mergos ſuaves edixerit aſſos,
Parebit parvi docilis Romana juventus.
(p) Sordidus a tenui victus diſtabit, Ofello
Judice: nam fruſtra vitium vitaveris iſtud,
Si te alio pravus detorſeris. (q) Avidienus,
(r) Cui Canis ex vero ductum cognomen adhaeret,
Quinquennes oleas eſt, et ſylveſtria corna;
(s) Ac, niſi mutatum, parcit defundere vinum; et

(i) Of carps and mullets why prefer the great,
(Though cut in pieces ere my lord can eat)
Yet for ſmall turbots ſuch eſteem profeſs?
Becauſe God made theſe large, the other leſs.
(k) Oldfield, with more than harpy throat endued,
Cries, "Send me, gods! a whole hog barbecued!"
Oh blaſt it, (l) ſouth winds! till a ſtench exhale
Rank as the ripeneſs of a rabbit's tail.
By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for ſweetneſs, that for ſtink?
When the tir'd glutton labours through a treat,
He finds no reliſh in the ſweeteſt meat,
He calls for ſomething bitter, ſomething ſour,
And the rich feaſt concludes extremely poor:
(m) Cheap eggs, and herbs, and olives, ſtill we ſee;
Thus much is left of old ſimplicity!
(n) The robin-red-breaſt till of late had reſt,
And children ſacred held a martin's neſt,
Till beccaficos ſold ſo dev'liſh dear
To one that was, or would have been, a peer.
(o) Let me extol a cat, on oyſters fed,
I'll have a party at the Bedford-head;
Or ev'n to crack live crawfiſh recommend;
I'd never doubt at court to make a friend.
(p) 'Tis yet in vain, I own, to keep a pother
About one vice, and fall into the other:
Between exceſs and famine lies a mean;
Plain, but not ſordid; though not ſplendid, clean.
(q) Avidien, or his wife, (no matter which,
For him you'll call a (r) dog, and her a bitch)
Sell their preſented partridges, and fruits,
And humbly live on rabbits, and on roots:
(s) One half-pint bottle ſerves them both to dine,
And is at once their vinegar and wine.

(a) Quae virtus et quanta, boni, ſit vivere parvo] Nil ſatis eſt homini, cui non ſatis eſt ſatis ipſi. Lucret. lib. v. 1118. Quae ſit enim virtus, parvo contenta, quis unquam Vidit? Perſius, Sat. iii. 71. Quae ſit hominum ratio, quae tanta ſtultitia, quae tam perversa prudentia, ut, quum ad beate vivendum ſatis natura ſit parata, nos nescio quid ultra appetamus? Cic. Tuſc. Quaeſt. lib. v. (b) Nec meus hic ſermo: ſed qua praecepit Ofellus] Ofellus, a Tuſcan peaſant, whom Horace had obſerved living happily on a ſmall farm, after the diſtreſſes he had undergone in the civil wars, and who had inſtructed him in the principles of that philoſophy which he here recommends. (c) abnormis Sapiens] Abnormis, irregularis, indoctus. Cruq. (d) non inter lances menſaſque nitentes] Non in luxu et deliciis. Cruq. (e) Verum hic impranſi mecum diſquirite. Cur hoc?] Verum hic impranſi mecum diſquirite. Cur hoc? Horat. Sat. i. 1. 10. (f) Leporum ſectatus, equove] Leporum ſectator, equi jactator, aut arcus. Horat. Sat. i. 1. 7. (g) foris eſt promus] Foris eſt promus, qui tibi depromat. Cruq. (h) Vix tamen eripiam, poſito pavone, velis quin] Vix tamen eripiam, poſito pavone, velis quin Hoc potius quam gallina tergere palatum? Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 23. (i) laudas, inſane, trilibrem eſt. Mullum] Laudas, inſane, trilibrem eſt. Mullum Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 31. (k) Porrectum magno magnum ſpectare catino Vellem] Porrectum magno magnum ſpectare catino Vellem, ait Harpyiis gula digna rapacibus. Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 37. (l) Praeſentes Auſtri, coquite horum opſonia] Praeſentes Auſtri, coquite horum opſonia; Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 39. (m) necdum omnis abacta Pauperies epulis regum] Necdum omnis abacta Pauperies epulis regum: Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 43. (n) Tutus erat rhombus, tutoque ciconia nido] Tutus erat rhombus, tutoque ciconia nido, Donec vos auctor docuit praetorius. Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 46. (o) Si quis nunc mergos ſuaves edixerit aſſos] Si quis nunc mergos ſuaves edixerit aſſos, Parebit parvi docilis Romana juventus. Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 51. (p) Sordidus a tenui victus diſtabit, Ofello] Sordidus a tenui victus diſtabit, Ofello Judice: Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 53. (q) Avidienus] Avidienus, Canis cognomento, quinquennes oleas, et ſylveſtria corna, et acetum cadis ebibit ex quis Hannibal ante urbem Romam Italos hostes primo concitavit. Cruq. (r) Cui Canis ex vero ductum cognomen adhaeret] Cui Canis ex vero ductum cognomen adhaeret, Quinquennes oleas eſt, et ſylveſtria corna; Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 55. (s) Ac, niſi mutatum, parcit defundere vinum; et

But on ſome (t) lucky day (as when they found
A loſt bank bill, or heard their ſon was drown'd),
At ſuch a feaſt, (u) old vinegar to ſpare,
Is what two ſouls too generous cannot bear:
Oil, though it ſtink, they drop by drop impart,
But ſowſe the cabbage with a bounteous heart.
(x) He knows to live, who keeps the middle ſtate,
And neither leans on this ſide, nor on that;
Nor (y) ſtops, for one bad cork, his butler's pay,
Swears, like Albutius, a good cook away;
Nor lets, like (a) Nævius, every error paſs,
The muſty wine, foul cloth, or greaſy glaſs.
(b) Now hear what bleſſings temperance can bring:
(Thus ſaid our friend, and what he ſaid I ſing)
(c) Firſt Health: the ſtomach cramm'd from every diſh,
A tomb of boil'd and roaſt, and fleſh and fiſh,
Where bile, and wind, and phlegm, and acid jar,
And all the man is one inteſtine war)
Remembers oft (d) the ſchool-boy's ſimple fare,
The temperate ſleeps, and ſpirits light as air.
(e) How pale, each worſhipful and reverend gueſt
Riſe from a clergy, or a city feaſt!
What life in all that ample body, ſay?
What heavenly particle inſpires the clay?
The ſoul ſubſides, and wickedly inclines
To ſeem but mortal, ev'n in ſound divines. [mind
(f) On morning wings how active ſprings the
That leaves the load of yeſterday behind!
How eaſy every labour it purſues!
How coming to the poet every muſe!
(g) Not but we may exceed, ſome holy time,
Or tir'd in ſearch of truth, or ſearch of rhyme;
Ill health ſome juſt indulgence may engage;
And more the ſickneſs of long life, old age;
(h) For fainting age what cordial drop remains,
If our intemperate youth the veſſel drains?
(i) Our fathers prais'd rank ven'ſon. You ſuppoſe,
Perhaps, young men! our fathers had no noſe.
Not ſo: a buck was then a week's repaſt,
And 'twas their point, I ween, to make it laſt;
More pleas'd to keep it till their friends could come,
Than eat the ſweeteſt by themſelves at home.
(k) Why had not I in thoſe good times my birth,
Ere coxcomb pyes or coxcombs were on earth?
Unworthy he the voice of fame to hear,
(l) That ſweeteſt muſic to an honeſt ear;
(For 'faith, Lord Fanny! you are in the wrong,
The world's good word is better than a ſong)
Who has not learn'd, (m) freſh ſturgeon and ham pye
Are no rewards for want, and infamy:
When luxury has lick'd up all my pelf,
Curs'd be thy (n) neighbours, thy truſtees, thyſelf,
To friends, to fortune, to mankind a ſhame,
Think how poſterity will treat thy name;
And (o) buy a rope, that future times may tell
Thou haſt at leaſt beſtow'd one penny well [need
(p) "Right, cries his lordſhip, for a rogue in
"To have a taſte, is inſolence indeed:
"In me 'tis noble, ſuits my birth and ſtate,
"My wealth unwieldy, (q) and my heap too great."
Then, like the ſun, let bounty ſpread her ray,
And ſhine that ſuperfluity away.
Oh impudence of wealth! with all thy ſtore,
How dar'ſt thou let one worthy man be poor?
Shall half the (r) new-built churches round thee fall?
Make keys, build bridges, or repair Whitehall:

Cujus odorem olei nequeas perferre (licebit
Ille repotia, natales, alioſque dierum
(t) Feſtos albatus celebret) cornu ipſe bilibri
Caulibus inſtillat, (u) veteris non parcus aceti.
Quali igitur victu ſapiens utetur, et horum
Utrum imitabitur? hac urget lupus, hac canis, aiunt,
(x) Mundus erit, qua non offendat ſordibus, atque
In neutram partem cultus miſer. (y) Hic neque ſervis
Albuti ſenis exemplo, dum munia didit,
Saevus erit: nec ſic ut ſimplex (a) Naevius, unctam
Convivis praebebit aquam: vitium hoc quoque magnum. [ſecum
(b) Accipe nunc, victus tenuis quae quantaque
Afferat (c) In primis valeas bene; nam variae res
Ut noceant homini, credas, memor illius eſcae,
Quae ſimplex olim (d) tibi federit. at ſimul aſſis
Miſceueris elixis, ſimul conchylia turdis;
Dulcia ſe in bilem vertent, ſtomachoque tumultum
Lenta feret pituita. (e) Vides, ut pallidus omnis
Coena deſurgat dubia? quin corpus onuſtum
Heſternis vitiis animum quoque praegravat una,
Atque affigit humo divinae particulam aurae.
(f) Alter, ubi dicto citius curata ſopori
Membra dedit, vegetus praeſcripta ad munia ſurgit.
(g) Hic tamen ad melius poterit tranſcurrere quondam;
Sive diem feſtum rediens advexerit annus,
Seu recreare volet tenuatum corpus: ubique
Accedent anni et tractari mollius aetas
Imbecilla volet. (h) Tibi quidnam accedet ad iſtam,
Quam puer et validus praeſumis, mollitiem; ſeu
Dura valetudo inciderit, ſeu tarda ſenectus?
(i) Rancidum aprum antiqui laudabant: non quia naſus [hoſpes
Illis nullus erat; ſed, credo, hac mente, quod
Tardius adveniens vitiatum commodius, quam
Integram edax dominus conſumeret (k) hos utinam inter
Heroas natum tellus me prima tuliſſet. [aurem
(l) Das aliquid famae, quae carmine gratior
Occupet humanum? grandes rhombi, patinaeque
Grande ferunt una (m) cum damno dedecus adde
(n) Iratum patruum, vicinos, te tibi iniquum,
Et fruſtra mortis cupidum, cum deerit egenti
(o) As, laquei pretium.
(p) Jure, inquit, Trauſius iſtis
Jugatur verbis: ego vectigalia magna,
Divitiaſque habeo tribus amplas regibus. (q) Ergo,
Quod ſuperat, non eſt melius quo infumere poſſis?
Cur eget indignus quiſquam, te divite? quare
(r) Templa ruunt antiqui Deûm? cur improbe, carae

Or to thy country let that heap be lent,
As Mo's was, but not at five per cent.
(s) Who thinks that fortune cannot change her mind,
Prepares a dreadful jeſt for all mankind.
And (t) who ſtands ſafeſt? tell me, is it he
That ſpreads and ſwells in puff'd proſperity,
Or bleſt with little whoſe preventing care
In peace provides fit arms againſt a war?
(u) Thus Bethel ſpoke, who always ſpeaks his thought,
And always thinks the very thing he ought:
His equal mind I copy what I can,
And as I love, would imitate the man.
In South-Sea days not happier, when ſurmis'd
The lord of thouſands, than if now (v) excis'd;
In foreſt planted by a father's hand,
Than in five acres now of rental land.
Content with little I can piddle here
On (x) broccoli and mutton, round the year;
But (y) ancient friends (though poor, or out of That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. [play)
'Tis true, no (z) turbots dignify my boards,
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords:
To Hounſlow Heath I point, and Banſted Down,
Thence comes your mutton, and theſe chicks my own:
(a) From yon old walnut-tree a ſhower ſhall fall;
And grapes, long-lingering on my only wall,
And figs from ſtandard and eſpalier join;
The devil is in you if you cannot dine:
Then (b) cheerful healths (your miſtreſs ſhall have place);
And, what's more rare, a poet ſhall ſay grace.
Fortune not much of humbling me can boaſt:
Though double tax'd, how little have I loſt!

Non aliquid patriae tanto emetiris acervo?
Uni nimirum tibi recte ſemper erunt res?
(s) O magnus poſthac inimicis riſus! uterne
(t) Ad caſus dubios fidet ſibi certius? hic, qui
Pluribus aſſuêrit mentem corpuſque ſuperbum;
An qui contentus parvo metuenſque futuri,
In pace, ut ſapiens, aptarit idonea bello?
(u) Quo magis his credas: puer hunc ego parvus Oſellum
Integris opibus novi non latius uſum,
Quam nunc (v) acciſis. Videas, metato in agello,
Cum pecore et gnatis, fortem mercede colonum,
Non ego, narrantem, temere edi luce profeſta
Quidquam, praeter (x) olus fumoſae cum pede pernae. [pes,
Ac mihi ſeu (y) longum poſt tempus venerat hoſ-
Sive operum vacuo gratus conviva per imbrem
Vicinus; bene erat, non (z) piſcibus urbe petitis,
Sed pullo atque hoedo: tum (a) penſilis uva ſecundas
Et nux ornabat menſas, cum duplice ficu.
Poſt hoc ludas erat (b) cuppa petare magiſtra:
Ac venerata Ceres, ita culmo ſurgeret alto,
Explicuit vino contractae feria frontis.
Saeviat atque novos moveat Fortuna tumultus!
Quantum hinc imminuet? quanto aut ego parcius, aut vos,

My life's amuſement's have been juſt the ſame,
Before, and after (c) ſtanding armies came.
My lands are ſold, my father's houſe is gone;
I'll hire another's; is not that my own, [ing gate
And yours, my friends? through whoſe free open-
None comes too early, none departs too late;
(For I, who hold ſage Homer's rule the beſt,
Welcome the coming, ſpeed the going gueſt).
"Pray heaven it laſt! (cries Swift) as you go on;
"I wiſh to God this houſe had been your own:
"Pity! to build, without a ſon or wife;
"Why, you'll enjoy it only all your life."
Well, if the uſe be mine, can it concern one,
Whether the name belong to Pope or Vernon?
What's (d) property? dear Swift! you ſee it alter
From you to me, from me to (e) Peter Walter;
Or, in a mortgage, prove a lawyer's ſhare;
Or, in a jointure, vaniſh from the heir;
Or in pure (f) equity (the caſe not clear)
The Chancery takes your rent for twenty year:
At beſt, it falls to ſome (g) ungracious ſon, [own."
Who cries, "My father's damn'd, and all's my
(b) Shades, that to Bacon could retreat afford,
Become the portion of a booby lord;
And Hemſley, once proud Buckingham's delight,
Slides to a ſcrivener, or a city knight.
(i) Let lands and houſes have what lords they will,
Let us be fix'd, and our own maſters ſtill.

O pueri, nituiſtis, ut huc (c) novus incola venit?
Nam (d) propriae telluris herum natura neque illum
Nec me, nec quemquam ſtatuit. nos expulit ille;
Illum aut (e) nequities aut (f) vaſri inſcitia juris,
Poſtremum expellet certe (g) vivacior heres.
(b) Nunc ager Umbreni ſub nomine, nuper Oſelli
Dictus erat: nulli proprius; ſed cedit in uſum
Nunc mihi, nunc alii. (i) quocirca vivite fortes,
Fortiaque adverſis opponite pectora rebus.

BOOK I. EPISTLE I.

TO LORD BOLINGBROKE.

St. John, whoſe love indulg'd my labours paſt,
Matures my preſent, and ſhall bound my laſt!
Why (b) will you break the ſabbath of my days?
Now ſick alike of envy and of praiſe.
Public too long, ah let me hide my age!
See modeſt (c) Cibber now has left the ſtage:
Our generals now, (d) retir'd to their eſtates,
Hang their old trophies o'er the garden gates,
In life's cool evening ſatiate of applauſe, [cauſe.
Nor (e) fond of bleeding, ev'n in Brunſwick's

EPISTOLA I.

Prima dicte mihi, ſumma dicende camena,
(b) Spectatum ſatis, et donatum jam rude, quaeris,
Maecenas, iterum antiquo me includere ludo.
Non eadem eſt aetas, non mens. (c) Veianius, armis
(d) Herculis ad poſtem fixis, latet abditus agro;
Ne populum (e) extrema toties exoret arena.

(f) A voice there is, that whispers in my ear,
('Tis reason's voice, which sometimes one can hear)
" Friend Pope! be prudent, let your (g) muse take
" breath,
" And never gallop Pegasus to death;
" Let stiff, and stately, void of fire or force,
" You limp, like Blackmore, on a Lord Mayor's
" horse." [toy,
Farewell then (h) verse, and love, and every
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What (i) right, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care—for this is all:
To lay this (k) harvest up, and hoard with haste,
What every day will want, and most, the last.
But ask not, to what (l) doctors I apply:
Sworn to no master, of no sect am I:
As drives the (m) storm, at any door I knock,
And house with Montague now, or now with
Locke:
Sometimes a (n) patriot, active in debate,
Mix with the world, and battle for the state,
Free as young Lyttleton, her cause pursue,
Still true to virtue, (o) and as warm as true:
Sometimes with Aristippus, or St. Paul,
Indulge my candour, and grow all to all;
Back to my (p) native moderation slide,
And win my way by yielding to the tide. [day,
(q) Long, as to him who works for debt, the
Long as the night to her whose love's away,
Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one;
So slow th' (r) unprofitable moments roll,
That lock up all the functions of my soul;
That keep me from myself; and still delay
Life's instant business to a future day:
That (s) task, which as we follow, or despise,
The eldest is a fool, the youngest wise:
Which done, the poorest can no wants endure;
And which not done, the richest must be poor.

(t) Late as it is, I put myself to school,
And feel some (u) comfort, not to be a fool.
(v) Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,
Far from a lynx, and not a giant quite:
I'll do what Mead and Cheselden advise,
To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.
Not to (x) go back, is somewhat to advance,
And men must walk at least before they dance.
Say, does thy (y) blood rebel, thy bosom move
With wretched avarice, or as wretched love?
Know, there are worlds, and spells, which can controul
(z) Between the fits this fever of the soul:
Know, there are rhymes, which (a) fresh and fresh apply'd
Will cure the arrant'st puppy of his pride.
Be (b) furious, envious, slothful, mad, or drunk,
(c) Slave to a wife, or vassal to a punk,
A Switz, a High Dutch, or a Low Dutch (d) bear;
All that we ask is but a patient ear.
(e) 'Tis the first virtue, vices to abhor;
And the first wisdom, to the fool no more.
But to the world no (f) bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate.
To either India see the merchant fly,
Scar'd at the spectre of pale poverty!
See him, with pains of body, pangs of soul,
Burn through the tropic, freeze beneath the pole!
Wilt thou do nothing for a nobler end,
Nothing, to make philosophy thy friend?
To stop thy foolish views, thy long desires,
And (g) ease thy heart of all that it admires?
(h) Here Wisdom calls: (i) " Seek virtue first, be " bold!
" As gold to silver, virtue is to gold."

(f) Est mihi purgatam crebro qui personet aurem;
Solve (g) senescentem mature sanus equum, ne
Peccet ad extremum ridendus, et ilia ducat.
Nunc itaque et (h) versus, et caetera ludicra pono:
Quid (i) verum atque decens, curo et rogo, et omnis in hoc sum: [sim.
(k) Condo, et compono, quae mox depromere pos-
Ac ne forte roges, (l) quo me duce, quo lare tuter:
Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri,
(m) Quo me cunque rapit tempestas, deferor hospes.
Nunc agilis fio, et mersor (n) civilibus undis,
Virtutis verae custos, (o) rigidusque satelles
Nunc in Aristippi (p) furtim praecepta relabor,
Et mihi res, non me rebus, subjungere conor.
(q) Ut nox longa, quibus mentitur amica; di-
esque
Longa videtur opus debentibus: ut piger annus
Pupillis, quos dura premit custodia matrum:
Sic mihi tarda (r) fluunt ingrataque tempora, quae spem [quod
Consiliumque morantur agendi gnaviter (s) id,
Aeque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aeque,
Aeque neglectum pueris senibusque nocebit.

(t) Restat, ut his ego me ipse regam (u) solerque elementis: [ceus;
(v) Non possis oculo quantum contendere Lyn-
Non tamen idcirco contemnas lippus inungi:
Nec, quia desperes invicti membra Glyconis,
Nodosa corpus nolis prohibere chiragra.
Est quadam prodire (x) tenus, si non datur ultra.
(y) Fervet avaritia, miseroque cupidine pectus?
Sunt verba et voces, quibus hunc lenire dolorem
Possis, et (z) magnam morbi deponere partem. [te
Laudis amore tumes? sunt (a) certa piacula, quae
Ter pure lecto poterunt recreare libello.
(b) Invidus, iracundus, iners, vinosus, (c) amator;
Nemo (d) adeo ferus est, ut non mitescere possit,
Si modo culturae patientem commodet aurem.
(e) Virtus est, vitium fugere; et sapientia prima,
Stultitia caruisse. vides, quae (f) maxima credis
Esse mala, exiguum censum, turpemque repulsam,
Quanto devites animi capitisque labore.
Impiger extremos curris mercator ad Indos,
Per (g) mare pauperiem fugiens, per saxa, per ignes:
Ne cures (h) ea, quae stulte miraris et optas,
Discere, et audire, et meliori credere non vis?
Quis circum pagos et circum compita pugnax
Magna coronari contemnat Olympia, cui spes,
Cui sit conditio dulcis sine pulvere palmae?
" (i) Vilius argentum est auro, virtutibus aurum.

There, London's voice, (k) " Get money, money still!
" And then let virtue follow, if she will."
This, this the saving doctrine, preach'd to all,
From (l) low St. James's up to high St. Paul!
From him whose (m) quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.
Bernard in (n) spirit, sense, and truth abounds;
" Pray then, what wants he?" Fourscore thousand pounds?
A pension, or such harness for a slave
As Bug now has, and Dorimant would have.
Barnard, thou art a (o) cit with all thy worth;
But Bug and D*l, their Honours, and so forth,
Yet every (p) child another song will sing,
" Virtue, brave boys! 'tis virtue makes a king."
True, conscious honour, is to feel no sin,
He's arm'd without that's innocent within:
Be this thy (q) screen, and this thy wall of brass;
Compar'd to this, a minister's an ass.
(r) And say, to which shall our applause belong,
This new court jargon, or the good old song?
The modern language of corrupted peers,
Or what was spoke at (s) Cressy or Poitiers!
(t) Who counsels best? who whispers, " Be but " great,
" With praise or infamy leave that to fate;
" Get place and wealth, if possible with grace:
" If not, by any means, get wealth and place."
For what? to have a (u) box where eunuchs sing,
And foremost in the circle eye a king.
Or (v) he, who bids thee face with steady view
Proud fortune, and look shallow greatness through: [too?
And, (x) while he bids thee, sets th' example
If (y) such a doctrine, in St. James's air,
Should chance to make the well-dress't rabble stare;
In honest S*z take scandal at a spark,
That less admires the (z) Palace than the Park:

Faith, I shall give the answer (a) Reynard gave:
" I cannot like, dread sire, your royal cave;
" Because I see, by all the tracks about,
" Full many a beast go in, but none comes out."
Adieu to virtue, if you're once a slave:
Send her to court, you send her to her grave.
Well, if a king's a lion, at the least
The (b) people are a many-headed beast:
Can they direct what measures to pursue,
Who know themselves so little what to do?
Alike in nothing but one lust of gold,
Just half the land would buy, and half be sold:
Their (c) country's wealth our mightier miser's drain,
Or cross, to plunder provinces, the main;
The rest, some farm the poor-box, some the pews;
Some keep assemblies, and would keep the stews;
Some (d) with fat bucks on childless dotards fawn;
Some win rich widows by their chine and brawn;
While with the silent growth of ten per cent,
In dirt and darkness, (e) hundreds stink content.
Of all these ways, if each (f) pursues his own,
Satire, be kind, and let the wretch alone:
But show me one who has it in his power
To act consistent with himself an hour.
Sir Job (g) sail'd forth, the evening bright and still,
" No place on earth (he cry'd) like Greenwich
" hill!"
(h) Up starts a palace, lo, th' obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace,
The silver Thames reflects its marble face.
Now let some whimsey, or that (i) Devil within
Which guides all those who know not what they mean,
But give the knight (or give his lady) spleen;
" Away, away! take all your scaffolds down,
" For snug's the word: my dear! we'll live in
" town."
At amorous Flavio is the (k) stocking thrown?
That very night he longs to lie alone.
(l) The fool, whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr.

" (k) O cives, cives! quaerenda pecunia primum
" est; [ab imo
" Virtus post nummos:" haec (l) Janus summus
Prodocet: haec recinunt juvenes dictata senesque,
(m) Laevo suspensi loculos tabulamque lacerto.
Est (n) animus tibi, sunt mores, est lingua, fidesque;
Sed quadringentis sex septem millia desint.
(o) Plebs eris. (p) at pueri ludentes, Rex eris, aiunt,
Si recte facies. Hic (q) murus aheneus esto,
Nil conscire sibi, nulla pallescere culpa.
(r) Roscia, dic sodes, melior lex, an puerorum est
Naenia, quae regnum recte facientibus offert,
Et maribus (s) Curiis et decantata Camillis?
(t) Isne tibi melius suadet, qui, " Rem facias; rem,
" Si possis, recte; si non, quocunque modo rem."
Ut (u) propius spectes lacrymosa poëmata pupi!
An, (v) qui fortunae te responsare superbae
Liberum et erectum, (x) praesens hortatur et aptat?
(y) Quod si me Populus Romanus forte roget, cur
Non, ut (z) porticibus, sic judiciis fruar isdem:

Nec sequar aut fugiam, quae diligit ipse vel odit;
Olim quod (a) vulpes aegroto cauta leoni
Respondit, referam: Quia me vestigia terrent
Omnia te adversum spectantia, nulla retrorsum.
(b) Bellua multorum est capitum. nam quid sequar aut quem? [qui
Pars hominum gestit (c) conducere publica: sunt
(d) Crustis et pomis viduas venentur avaras,
Excipiantque senes, quos in vivaria mittant:
(e) Multis occulto crescit res fenore. (f) verum
Esto, aliis alios rebus studiisque teneri:
Iidem eadem possunt horam durare probantes?
(g) Nullus in orbe sinus Baiis praelucet amoenis,
Si dixit dives; (h) lacus et mare sentit amorem
Festinantis heri: cui si (i) vitiosa libido
Fecerit auspicium; cras ferramenta Teanum
Tolletis, fabri. (k) lectus genialis in aula est?
Nil ait esse prius, melius nil coelibe vita:
(l) Si non est, jurat bene solis esse maritis.

Did ever (m) Proteus, Merlin, any witch,
Transform themſelves ſo ſtrangely as the rich?
Well, but the (n) poor—The poor have the ſame itch;
They change their (o) weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner, to their ſhoes;
Diſcharge their garrets, move their beds, and run
(They know not whither) in a chaiſe and one;
They (p) hire their ſculler, and when once aboard,
Grow ſick, and damn the climate—like a lord.
(q) You laugh, half-beau, half-ſloven if I ſtand,
My wig all powder, and all ſnuff my band;
You laugh, if coat and breeches ſtrangely vary,
White gloves, and linen worthy Lady Mary!
But when (r) no prelate's lawn, with hair-ſhirt lin'd,
Is half ſo incoherent as my mind,
When (each opinion with the next at ſtrife,
One (s) ebb and flow of follies all my life)
I (t) plant, root up; I build, and then confound:
Turn round to ſquare, and ſquare again to round;
(u) You never change one muſcle of your face,
You think this madneſs but a common caſe,
Nor (v) once to Chancery, nor to Hale apply;
Yet hang your lip, to ſee a ſeam awry!
Careleſs how ill I with myſelf agree,
Kind to my dreſs, my figure, not to me.
Is this my (x) guide, philoſopher, and friend?
This he, who loves me, and who ought to mend;
Who ought to make me (what he can, or none)
That man divine, whom Wiſdom calls her own;
Great without title, without fortune bleſs'd;
Rich (y) ev'n when plunder'd, (z) honour'd while oppreſs'd; [power;
Lov'd (e) without youth, and follow'd without
At home, though exil'd; (b) free though in the tower;
In ſhort, that reaſoning, high, immortal thing,
Juſt (c) leſs than Jove, and (d) much above a king,
Nay, half in heaven—(e) except (what's mighty odd)
A fit of vapours clouds this demi-god!

(m) Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo?
Quid (n) pauper? ride: mutat (o) cocnacula, lectos,
Balnea, (p) tonſores; conducto navigio aeque
Nauſeat, ac locuples quem ducit priva triremus.
(q) Si curatis inaequali tonſore capillos
Occurro; rides. ſi forte ſubucula pexae
Trita ſubeſt tunicae, vel ſi toga diſſidet impar;
Rides. quid, (r) mea cum pugnat ſententia ſecum;
Quod petiit, ſpernit; repetit quod nuper omiſit;
(s) Aeſtuat, et vitae diſconvenit ordine toto;
(t) Diruit, aedificat, mutat quadrata rotundis?
(u) Inſanire putas ſolennia me, neque rides,
Nec (v) medici credis, nec curatoris egere
A praetore dati; rerum (x) tutela mearum
Cum ſis, et prave ſectum ſtomacheris ob unguem,
De te pendentis, te reſpicientis amici.
Ad ſummam, ſapiens uno (c) minor eſt Jove, (y) dives,
(b) Liber, (z) honoratus, (a) pulcher, (d) rex denique regum;
Praecipue ſanus, (e) niſi cum pituita moleſta eſt.

BOOK I. EPISTLE VI.

TO MR. MURRAY.

"Not to admire, is all the art I know,
"To make men happy, and to keep them ſo."
(Plain truth, dear Murray, needs no flowers of ſpeech,
So take it in the very words of Creech.)
(b) This vault of air, this congregated ball,
Self-centred ſun, and ſtars that riſe and fall,
There are, my friend! whoſe philoſophic eyes
Look through and truſt the Ruler with his ſkies,
To him commit the hour, the day, the year,
And view (c) this dreadful all without a fear.
Admire we then what (d) earth's low entrails hold,
Arabian ſhores, or Indian ſeas infold;
All the mad trade of (e) fools and ſlaves for gold?
Or (f) popularity? or ſtars and ſtrings?
The mob's applauſes, or the gifts of kings?
Say, with what (g) eyes we ought at courts to gaze,
And pay the great our homage of amaze?
If weak the (b) pleaſure that from theſe can ſpring,
The fear to want them is as weak a thing;
Whether we dread, or whether we deſire,
In either caſe, believe me, we admire;
Whether we (i) joy or grieve, the ſame the curſe,
Surpris'd at better, or ſurpris'd at worſe.
Thus good or bad, to one extreme betray
Th' unbalanc'd mind, and ſnatch the man away;
For (k) virtue's ſelf may too much zeal be had;
The worſt of madmen is a ſaint run mad.
(l) Go then, and if you can, admire the ſtate
Of beaming diamonds, and reflected plate;
Procure a taſte to double the ſurpriſe,
And gaze on (m) Parian charms with learned eyes,
Be ſtruck with bright (n) brocade, or Tyrian dye,
Our birth-day nobles' ſplendid livery.

EPISTOLA VI.

Nil admirari, prope res eſt una, Numici,
Solaque quae poſſit facere et ſervare beatum.
(b) Hunc ſolem, et ſtellas, et decedentia certis
Tempora momentis, ſunt qui (c) formidine nulla
Imbuti ſpectent. (d) quid cenſes, munera terrae?
Quid, maris extremos Arabas (e) ditantis et Indos?
Ludicra, quid, (f) plauſus, et amici dona Quiritis?
Quo ſpectanda modo, (g) quo ſenſu credis et ore?
(b) Qui timet his adverſa, fere miratur eodem
Quo cupiens pacto: pavor eſt utrobique moleſtus.
Improviſa ſimul ſpecies exterret utrumque:
(i) Gaudeat, an doleat; cupiat, metuatne; quid ad rem,
Si, quidquid vidit melius pejuſve ſua ſpe,
Deſixis oculis animoque et corpore torpet?
(k) Inſani ſapiens nomen ferat, aequus iniqui;
Ultra quam ſatis eſt, virtutem ſi petat ipſam.
(l) I nunc, argentum et marmor (m) vetus, aeraque et artes
Suſpice: cum gemmis (n) Tyrios mirare colores;

If not ſo pleas'd, at (o) council board rejoice,
To ſee their judgments hang upon thy voice;
From (p) morn to night, at ſenate, rolls, and hall,
Plead much, read more, dine late, or not at all.
But wherefore all this labour, all this ſtrife?
For (q) fame, for riches, for a noble wife? [ſpir'd
Shall (r) one whom nature, learning, birth con-
To form, not to admire, but be admir'd,
Sigh, while his Chloe blind to wit and worth
Weds the rich dulneſs of ſome ſon of earth?
Yet (s) time ennobles, or degrades each line;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine:
And what is fame? the meaneſt have their day,
The greateſt can but blaze, and paſs away.
Grac'd as thou art, (t) with all the power of words,
So known, ſo honour'd, at the Houſe of Lords:
Conſpicuous ſcene! another yet is nigh,
(More ſilent far) where kings and poets lie;
(u) Where Murray (long enough his country's pride)
Shall be no more than Tully, or than Hyde!
(v) Rack'd with ſciatics, martyr'd with the ſtone,
Will any mortal let himſelf alone?
See Ward by hatter'd beaux invited over,
And deſperate miſery lays hold on Dover,
The caſe is eaſier in the mind's diſeaſe;
There all men may be cur'd, whene'er they pleaſe.
Would ye be (x) bleſt? deſpiſe low joys, low gains;
Diſdain whatever Cornbury diſdains;
Be virtuous, and be happy for your pains.
(y) But art thou one whom new opinions ſway,
One who believes as Tindal leads the way,
Who virtue and a church alike diſowns,
Thinks that but words, and this but brick and ſtones?
Fly (z) then, on all the wings of wild deſire,
Admire whate'er the maddeſt can admire:
Is wealth thy paſſion? Hence! from pole to pole,
Where winds can carry, or where waves can roll,
For Indian ſpices, for Peruvian gold,
Prevent the greedy, or outbid the bold:
(a) Advance thy golden mountain to the ſkies;
On the broad baſe of fifty thouſand riſe,
Add one round hundred, and (if that's not fair)
Add fifty more, and bring it to a ſquare.
For, mark th' advantage; juſt ſo many ſcore,
Will gain a (b) wife with half as many more,
Procure her beauty, make that beauty chaſte,
And then ſuch (c) friends—as cannot fail to laſt.
A (d) man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth,
Venus ſhall give him form, and Anſtis birth.
(Believe me, many a (e) German prince is worſe,
Who, proud of pedigree, is poor of purſe)
His wealth brave (f) Timon gloriouſly cōfounds;
Aſk'd for a groat, he gives a hundred pounds;
Or if three ladies like a luckleſs play,
Takes the whole houſe upon the poet's day.
(g) Now, in ſuch exigencies not to need,
Upon my word, you muſt be rich indeed;
A noble ſuperfluity it craves,
Not for yourſelf, but for your fools and knaves;
Something, which for your honour they may cheat,
And which it much becomes you to forget.
(h) If wealth alone then make and keep us bleſt,
Still, ſtill be getting, never, never reſt,
(i) But if to power and place your paſſion lie,
If in the pomp of life conſiſt the joy;
Then (k) hire a ſlave, or (if you will) a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word;
Tell at your levee, as the crowds approach,
To whom (l) to nod, whom take into your coach,
Whom honour with your hand: to make remarks,
Who (m) rules in Cornwall, or who rules in Berks:
"This may be troubleſome, is near the chair:
"That makes three members, this can chooſe a mayor."
Inſtructed thus, you bow, embrace, proteſt,
Adopt him, (n) ſon, or couſin at the leaſt,
Then turn about, and (o) laugh at your own jeſt.

Gaude, quod ſpectant oculi te (o) mille loquentem:
Gnavus (p) mane forum, et veſpertinus pete tectum;
(q) Ne plus frumenti dotalibus emetat agris
Mutus et (indignum; quod ſit pejoribus ortus)
(r) Hic tibi ſit potius, quam tu mirabilis illi
(s) Quicquid ſub terra eſt, in apricum proferet aetas
Defoſſa condetque nitentia (t) cum bene notum;
Porticus Agrippae, et via te conſpexerit Appi;
Ire tamen reſtat, Numa (u) quo devenit et Ancus.
(v) Si latus aut renes morbo tentantur acuto,
Quare fugam morbi. (x) vis recte vivere? quis non?
Si virtus hoc una poteſt dare, fortis omiſſis
Hoc age deliciis.
(y) virtutem verba putes, et
Lucum ligna? (z) cave ne portus occupet alter;
Ne Cibyratica, ne Bithyna negotia perdas:
(a) Mille talenta rotundentur, totidem altera, porro et
Tertia ſuccedant, et quae pars quadret acervum.
Scilicet (b) uxorem cum dote, fidemque, et (c) amicos,
Et genus, et formam, regina (d) Pecunia donat;
Ac bene nummatum decorat Suadela, Venuſque.
Mancipiis locuples, eget aeris (e) Capadocum Rex:
Ne fueris hic tu. (f) chlamydes Lucullus, ut aiunt,
Si poſſet centum ſcenae praebere rogatus,
Qui poſſum tot? ait: tamen et quaeram, et quot habebo
Mittam: poſt paulo ſcribit, ſibi millia quinque
Eſſe domi chlamydum: partem, vel tolleret omnes.
(g) Exilis domus eſt, ubi non et multa ſuperſunt,
Et dominum fallunt, et proſunt furibus. (h) ergo,
Si res ſola poteſt facere et ſervare beatum,
Hoc primus repetas opus, hoc poſtremus omittas.
(i) Si fortunatam ſpecies et gratia praeſtat,
(k) Mercemur ſervum, qui dictet nomina, laevum
Qui fodicet latus, et (l) cogat trans pondera dextram
Porrigere: (m) Hic multum in Fabia valet, ille Velina:
Cui libet, is faſces dabit; eripietque curule,
Cui volet, importunus ebur: (n) Frater, Pater, adde:
Ut cuique eſt aetas, ita quemque (o) facetus adopta.

Or if your life be one continued treat,
If (p) to live well means nothing but to eat;
Up, up! cries Gluttony, 'tis break of day,
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey;
With hounds and horns go hunt an appetite—
So (q) Ruſſel did, but could not eat at night;
Call'd happy dog! the beggar at his door,
And envy'd thirſt and hunger to the poor.
Or ſhall we (r) every decency confound;
Through taverns, ſtews, and bagnios take our round;
Go dine with Chartres, in each vice outdo,
(s) K—l's lewd cargo, or Ty—y's crew;
From Latian ſyrens, French Circæan feaſts,
Return well travell'd, and transform'd to beaſts;
Or for a titled punk, or foreign flame,
Renounce our (t) country, and degrade our name?
If, after all, we muſt with (u) Wilmot own,
The cordial drop of life is love alone,
And Swift cry wiſely, "Vive la Bagatelle!"
The man that loves and laughs, muſt ſure do well.
(v) Adieu—if this advice appear the worſt,
E'en take the counſel which I gave you firſt:
Or better precepts, if you can impart,
Why do, I'll follow them with all my heart.

Si (p) bene qui coenat, bene vivit; lucet: eamus
Quo ducit gula: piſcemur, venemur, ut (q) olim
Gargilius: qui mane plagas, venabula, ſervos,
Differtum tranſire forum populumque jubebat,
Unus ut e multis populo ſpectante referret
Emtum mulus aprum. (r) crudi, tumidique la-
vemur,
Quid deceat, quid non, obliti; Caerite cera
Digni; (s) remigium vitioſum Ithacenſis Ulyſſei;
Cui potior (t) patria fuit interdicta voluptas.
(u) Si, Mimnermus uticenſet, ſine amore jociſque
Nil eſt jucundum; vivas in amore jociſque.
(v) Vive, vale. ſi quid noviſti rectius iſtis,
Candidus imperti: ſi non, his utere mecum.

EPISTLE I.

TO AUGUSTUS.

Advertiſement.

The reflections of Horace, and the judgments paſt in his epiſtle to Auguſtus, ſeemed ſo ſeaſonable to the preſent times, that I could not help applying them to the uſe of my own country. The author thought them conſiderable enough to addreſs them to his prince; whom he paints with all the great and good qualities of a monarch, upon whom the Romans depended for the increaſe of an abſolute empire. But to make the poem entirely Engliſh, I was willing to add one or two of thoſe which contribute to the happineſs of a free people, and are more conſiſtent with the welfare of our neighbours.

This epiſtle will ſhow the learned world to have fallen into have two miſtakes; one, that Auguſtus was a patron of poets in general; whereas he not only prohibited all but the beſt writers to name him, but recommended that care even to the civil magiſtrate: "Admonebat praetores, ne pate-"rentur nomen ſuum obſolefieri," &c. The other, that this piece was only a general diſcourſe of poetry; whereas it was an apology for the poets, in order to render Auguſtus more their patron. Horace here pleads the cauſe of his contemporaries, firſt againſt the taſte of the town, whoſe humour it was to magnify the authors of the preceding age; ſecondly, againſt the court and nobility, who encouraged only the writers for the theatre; and laſtly, againſt the emperor himſelf, who had conceived them of little uſe to the government. He ſhows by a view of the progreſs of learning, and the change of taſte among the Romans) that the introduction of the polite arts of Greece had given the writers of his time great advantages over their predeceſſors; that their morals were much improved, and the licence of thoſe ancient poets reſtrained; that ſatire and comedy were become more juſt and uſeful; that whatever extravagances were left on the ſtage, were owing to the ill taſte of the nobility; that poets, under due regulations, were, in many reſpects, uſeful to the ſtate; and concludes, that it was upon them the emperor himſelf muſt depend, for his fame with poſterity.

We may farther learn from this epiſtle, that Horace made his court to this great prince, by writing with a decent freedom towards him, with a juſt contempt of his low flatterers, and with a manly regard to his own character.

While you, great patron of mankind! (a) ſuſtain
The balanc'd world, and open all the main;
Your country, chief, in arms abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend;
(b) How ſhall the muſe, from ſuch a monarch ſteal
An hour, and not defraud the public weal?
(c) Edward and Henry, now the boaſt of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more (d) ſacred name,
After a life of generous toils endur'd,
The Gaul ſubdued, or property ſecur'd,
Ambition humbled, mighty cities ſtorm'd,
Or laws eſtabliſh'd, and the world reform'd;
(e) Clos'd their long glories with a ſigh, to find!
Th' unwilling gratitude of baſe mankind!

EPISTOLA I.

AD AUGUSTUM.

Cum tot (a) ſuſtineas et tanta negotia ſolus,
Res Italas armis tuteris, moribus ornes,
Legibus emendes; in (b) publica commoda peccem,
Si longo ſermone morer tua tempora, Caeſar.
(c) Romulus, et liber pater, et cum Caſtore Pollux,
Poſt ingentia facta, (d) Deorum in templa recepti,
Dum terras hominumque colunt genus, aſpera bella
Componunt, agros adſignant, oppida condunt;
(e) Ploravere ſuis non reſpondere favorem
Speratum meritis. diram qui contudit Hydram,

All human virtue to its lateſt breath,
(f) Finds envy never conquer'd but by death.
The great Alcides, every labour paſt,
Had ſtill this monſter to ſubdue at laſt.
(g) Sure fate of all, beneath whoſe riſing ray,
Each ſtar of meaner merit fades away!
Oppreſs'd we feel the beam directly beat,
Thoſe ſuns of glory pleaſe not till they ſet.
To thee, the world its preſent homage pays,
The harveſt early, (h) but mature the praiſe:
Great friend of liberty! in kings a name:
Above all Greek, above all Roman fame:
Whoſe word is truth, as ſacred and rever'd,
(i) As heaven's own oracles from altars heard.
Wonder of kings! like whom, to mortal eyes
(k) None e'er has riſen, and none e'er ſhall riſe.
Juſt in one inſtance, be it yet confeſt
Your people, Sir, are partial in the reſt:
Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone.
Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old;
It is the ruſt we value, not the gold.
(l) Chaucer's worſt ribaldry is learn'd by rote,
And beaſtly Skelton heads of houſes quote:
One likes no language but the Faery Queen;
A Scot will fight for Chriſt's Kirk o' the Green;
And each true Briton is to Ben ſo civil,
(m) He ſwears the muſes met him at the Devil.
Though juſtly (n) Greece her eldeſt ſon admires,
Why ſhould not we be wiſer than our ſires?
In every public virtue we excel;
We build, we plant, (o) we ſing, we dance as well;
And (p) learned Athens to our art muſt ſtoop,
Could ſhe behold us tumbling through a hoop.
If (q) time improve our wits as well as wine,
Say at what age a poet grows divine?

Notaque fatali portenta labore ſubegit,
Comperit (f) invidiam ſupremo fine domari,
(g) Urit enim fulgore ſuo, qui praegravat artes
Infra ſe poſitas: extinctus amabitur idem.
(h) Praeſenti tibi maturos largimur honores,
(i) Jurandaſque tuum per numen ponimus aras,
(k) Nil oriturum alias, nil ortum tale fatentes.
Sed tuus hoc populus ſapiens et juſtus in uno,
* Te noſtris ducibus, te Graiis anteferendo,
Caetera nequaquam ſimili ratione modoque
Aeſtimat; et, niſi quae terris ſemota ſuiſque
Temporibus defuncta videt, faſtidit et odit:
(l) Sic fautor veterum, ut tabulas peccare vetantes
Quas bis quinque viri ſanxerunt, foedera regum,
Vel Gabiis vel cum rigidis aequata Sabinis,
Pontificum libros, annoſa volumina Vatum,
(m) Dictitet Albano Muſas in monte locutas.
Si, quia (n) Graiorum ſunt antiquiſſima quaeque
Scripta vel optima, Romani penſantur eadem
Scriptores trutina; non eſt quod multa loquamur:
Nil intra eſt oleam, nil extra eſt in nuce duri.
Venimus ad ſummum fortunae: pingimus, atque
(o) Pſallimus, et (p) luctamur Achivis doctius unctis.
Si (q) meliora dies, ut vina, poemata reddit;
Scire velim, chattis pretium quotus arroget annus.
Scriptor ab hinc annos centum qui decidit, inter
Perfectos veteresque referri debet, an inter
Viles atque novos? exclúdat jurgia finis.

Shall we, or ſhall we not, account him ſo,
Who dy'd, perhaps, an hundred years ago?
End all diſpute; and fix the year preciſe
When Britiſh bards begin t' immortalize?
"Who laſts a (r) century can have no flaw;
"I hold that wit a claſſic, good in law."
Suppoſe he wants a year, will you compound?
And ſhall we deem him (s) ancient, right and ſound,
Or damn to all eternity at once,
At ninety-nine, a modern and a dunce?
"We ſhall not quarrel for a year or two;
"By (t) courteſy of England, he may do."
Then, by the rule that made the (u) horſe-tail bare,
I pluck out year by year, as hair by hair,
And melt (v) down ancients like a heap of ſnow:
While you, to meaſure merits, look in (x) Stowe,
And, eſtimating authors by the year,
Beſtow a garland only on a (y) bier.
(z) Shakſpeare (whom you and every play-houſe bill Style the divine, the matchleſs, what you will)
For gain, not glory, wing'd his roving flight,
And grew immortal in his own deſpite.
Ben, old and poor, as little ſeem'd to heed
(a) The life to come, in every poet's creed.
Who now reads (b) Cowley? if he pleaſes yet,
His moral pleaſes, not his pointed wit;
Forgot his epic, nay Pindaric art,
But ſtill (c) I love the language of his heart.
"Yet ſurely, (d) ſurely, theſe were famous men!
"What boy but hears the ſaying of old Ben?
"In all (e) debates where critics bear a part,
"Not one but nods, and talks of Jonſon's art,
"Of Shakſpeare's nature, and of Cowley's wit;
"How Beaumont's judgment check'd what Fletcher writ;
"How Shadwell haſty, Wycherly was ſlow;
"But, for the paſſions, Southerne ſure and Rowe.

Eſt vetus atque probus, (r) centum qui perficit annos.
Quid? qui deperiit minor uno menſe vel anno,
Inter quos referendus erit? (s) veteresne poetas,
An quos et praeſens et poſtera reſpuat aetas?
Iſte quidem veteres inter ponetur (t) honeſte,
Qui vel menſe brevi, vel toto eſt junior anno.
Utor permiſſo, caudaeque pilos ut (u) equinae
Paulatim vello: et demo unum, demo et idem unum;
Dum cadat elufus ratione (v) ruentis acervi,
Qui redit in (x) faſtos, et virtutem aeſtimat annis,
Miraturque nihil, niſi quod (y) Libitina ſacravit.
(z) Ennius et ſapiens, et fortis, et alter Homerus,
Ut critici dicunt, leviter curare videtur
Quo (a) promiſſa cadant, et ſomnia Pythagorea.
(b) Naevius in manibus non eſt; at (c) mentibus haeret
Pene recens: (d) adeo ſanctum eſt vetus omne poema.
Ambigitur (e) quoties, uter utro ſit prior; aufert
Pacuvius docti famam ſenis, Accius alti:
Dicitur Afrani toga conveniſſe Menandro:
Plautus ad exemplar Siculi properare Epicharmi
Vincere Caecilius gravitate, Terentius arte;

" Theſe, (f) only theſe, ſupport the crowded ſtage,
" From eldeſt Heywood down to Cibber's age."
All this may be; (g) the people's voice is odd,
It is, and it is not, the voice of God.
To (h) Gammer Gurton if it give the bays,
And yet deny the Careleſs Huſband praiſe,
Or ſay our fathers never broke a rule;
Why then, I ſay, the public is a fool.
But let them own, that greater faults than we
They had, and greater virtues, I'll agree.
Spenſer himſelf affects the (i) obſolete,
And Sydney's verſe halts ill on (k) Roman feet:
Milton's ſtrong pinion now not heaven can bound,
Now ſerpent-like, in (l) proſe he ſweeps the ground,
In quibbles, angel and archangel join,
And God the Father turns a ſchool-divine.
(m) Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like (n) ſlaſhing Bentley with his deſperate hook,
Or damn all Shakſpeare, like th' affected fool
At court, who hates whate'er he (o) read at ſchool.
But for the wits of either Charles's days,
The mob of gentlemen who wrote with eaſe;
Sprat, Carew, Sedley, and a hundred more,
(Like twinkling ſtars the miſcellanies o'er)
One ſimile that (p) ſolitary ſhines
In the dry deſert of a thouſand lines,
Or (q) lengthen'd thought that gleams through many a page,
Has ſanctify'd whole poems for an age.
(r) I loſe my patience, and I own it too,
When works are cenſur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reaſon's laws,
Theſe fools demand not pardon, but applauſe.
(s) On Avon's bank, where flowers eternal blow,
If I but aſk if any weed can grow;
One tragic ſentence if I dare deride,
Which (t) Betterton's grave action dignify'd,
Or well-mouth'd Booth with emphaſis proclaims,
(Though but, perhaps, a muſter-roll of names)
How will our fathers riſe up in a rage,
And ſwear, all ſhame is loſt in George's age!
You'd think (u) no fools diſgrac'd the former reign,
Did not ſome grave examples yet remain,
Who ſcorn a lad ſhould teach his father ſkill,
And, having once been wrong, will be ſo ſtill.
He, who to ſeem more deep than you or I,
Extols old bards, (v) or Merlin's prophecy,
Miſtake him not; he envies, not admires,
And, to debaſe the ſons, exalts the ſires.
(x) Had ancient times conſpir'd to diſallow
What then was new, what had been ancient now?
Or what remain'd, ſo worthy to be read
By learned critics, of the mighty dead?
(y) In days of eaſe, when now the weary ſword
Was ſheath'd, and luxury with Charles reſtor'd;
In every taſte of foreign courts improv'd,
" All, by the king's example, liv'd and lov'd."
Then peers grew proud (z) in horſemanſhip t' excel,
Newmarket's glory roſe, as Britain's fell;
The ſoldier breath'd the gallantries of France,
And every flowery courtier writ romance.
Then (a) marble, ſoften'd into life, grew warm,
And yielding metal flow'd to human form:
Lely on (b) animated canvas ſtole
The ſleepy eye, that ſpoke the melting ſoul.
No wonder then, when all was love and ſport,
The willing muſes were debauch'd at court:
On (c) each enervate ſtring they taught the note
To pant, or tremble through an eunuch's throat.
But (d) Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away.
Now Whig, now Tory, what we lov'd we hate;
Now all for pleaſure, now for church or ſtate;
Now for prerogative, and now for laws;
Effects unhappy! from a noble cauſe.

Hos ediſcit, et hos arcto ſtipata theatro [poetas
Spectat Roma potens; (f) habet hos numeratque
Ad noſtrum tempus, Livî ſcriptoris ab aevo.
(g) Interdum vulgus rectem videt: eſt ubi peccat.
Si (h) veteres ita miratur laudatque poetas,
Ut nihil anteferat, nihil illis comparet; errat:
Si quaedam nimis (i) antique, ſi pleraque (k) dure
Dicere credit eos, (l) ignave multa fatetur;
Et ſapit, et mecum facit, et Jove judicat aequo.
(m) Non equidem inſector, delendaque carmina Livi
Eſſe reor, memini quae (n) plagoſum (o) mihi parvo
Orbilium dictare;
ſed emendata videri
Pulchráque, et exactis minimum diſtantia, miror:
Inter quae (p) verbum emicuit ſi forte decorum,
Si (q) verſus paulo concinnior unus et alter;
Injuſte totum ducit venditque poema. [craſſe
(r) Indignor quidquam reprehendi, non quia
Compoſitum, illepideve putetur, ſed quia nuper;
Nec veniam antiquis, ſed honorem et praemia poſci.
(s) Recte necne crocum floreſque perambulet Attae
Fabula, ſi dubitem; clamant periiſſe pudorem
Cuncti pene patres: ea cum reprehendere coner,
Quae (t) gravis Aeſopus, quae doctus Roſcius egit.
Vel quia nil (u) rectum, niſi quod placuit ſibi, ducunt;
Vel quia turpe putant parere minoribus, et quae
Imberbi didicere, ſenes perdenda fateri.
Jam (v) Saliare Numae carmen qui laudat, et illud,
Quod mecum ignorat, ſolus vult ſcire videri;
Ingeniis non ille favet plauditque ſepultis,
Noſtra ſed impugnat, nos noſtraque lividus odit.
(x) Quod ſi tam Graecis novitas inviſa fuiſſet,
Quam nobis; quid nunc eſſet vetus? aut quid haberet,
Quod legeret tereretque viritim publicus uſus?
(y) Ut primum poſitis nugari Graecia bellis
Coepit, et in vitium fortuna labier aequa;
Nunc athletarum ſtudiis, nunc arſit (z) equorum:
(a) Marmoris aut eboris fabros aut aeris amavit;
Suſpendit (b) picta vultum mentemque tabella;
Nun (c) tibicinibus, nunc eſt gaviſa tragoedis:
(d) Sub nutrice puella velut ſi luderet infans,
Quod cupide petiit, mature plena reliquit.
Quid placet, aut odio eſt, quod non mutabile credas?
Hoc pacto habuere bonae, ventique ſecundi.

(e) Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
His servants up, and rise by five o'clock,
Instruct his family in every rule,
And send his wife to church, his son to school.
To (f) worship like his fathers, was his care;
To teach their frugal virtues to his heir;
To prove that luxury could never hold;
And place, on good (g) security, his gold.
Now times are chang'd, and one (b) poetic itch
Has seiz'd the court and city, poor and rich:
Sons, sires, and grandsires, all will wear the bays,
Our wives read Milton, and our daughters plays,
To theatres and to rehearsals throng,
And all our grace at table is a song.
I, who so oft renounce the muses, (i) lie,
Not ——'s self e'er tells more fibs than I;
When sick of muse, our follies we deplore,
And promise our best friends to rhyme no more;
We wake next morning in a raging fit,
And call for pen and ink to show our wit.
(k) He serv'd a 'prenticeship, who sets up shop;
Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor, his drop;
Ev'n (l) Radcliffe's doctors travel first to France,
Nor dare to practise till they've learn'd to dance.
Who builds a bridge that never drove a pile?
(Should Ripley venture, all the world would smile)
But (m) those who cannot write, and those who can,
All rhyme, and scrawl, and scribble, to a man.
Yet, Sir, (n) reflect, the mischief is not great;
These madmen never hurt the church or state:
Sometimes the folly benefits mankind;
And rarely (o) avarice taints the tuneful mind.
Allow him but his (p) plaything of a pen,
He ne'er rebels, or plots, like other men:
(q) Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses while the muse is kind.
To (r) cheat a friend, or Ward, he leaves to Peter;
The good man heaps up nothing but mere metre,
Enjoys his garden and his book in quiet;
And then—a perfect hermit in his (s) diet.

Of little use the man you may suppose,
Who says in verse what others say in prose:
Yet let me show, a poet's of some weight,
And (t) though no soldier) useful to the state.
(u) What will a child learn sooner than a song?
What better teach a foreigner the tongue?
What's long or short, each accent where to place,
And speak in public with some sort of grace.
I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
Unless he praise some monster of a king:
Or virtue, or religion turn to sport,
To please a lewd, or unbelieving court.
Unhappy Dryden!—In all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays;
And in our own (excuse some courtly stains)
No whiter page than Addison remains;
He, (w) from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth,
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart.
Let Ireland tell, how wit upheld her cause,
Her trade supported, and supplied her laws;
And leave on Swift this grateful verse engrav'd,
"The rights a court attack'd, a poet sav'd."
Behold the hand that wrought a nation's cure,
Wretch'd to (x) relieve the idiot and the poor,
Proud vice to brand, or injur'd worth adorn,
And (y) stretch the ray to ages yet unborn.
Not but there are, who merit other palms;
Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms:
The (z) boys and girls whom charity maintains,
Implore your help in these pathetic strains:
How could devotion (a) touch the country pews,
Unless the gods bestow'd a proper muse?
Verse cheers their leisure, verse assists their work,
Verse prays for peace, or sings down (c) Pope and Turk.
The silenc'd preacher yields to potent strain,
And feels that grace his prayer besought in vain;
The blessing thrills through all the labouring throng,
And (d) heaven is won by violence of song.
Our (e) rural ancestors, with little blest,
Patient of labour when the end was rest,
Indulg'd the day that hous'd their annual grain,
With feasts, and offerings, and a thankful strain:

(e) Romae dulce diu fuit et solemne, reclusa
Mane domo vigilare, clienti promere jura;
Scriptos (f) nominibus rectis expendere nummos;
(g) Majores audire, minori dicere, per quae
Crescere res posset, minui damnosa libido.
Mutavit mentem populus levis, (b) et calet uno
Scribendi studio: pueri patresque severi
Fronde comas vincti coenant, et carmina dictant.
Ipse ego, qui nullos me affirmo scribere versus,
Invenior (i) Parthis mendacior; et prius orto
Sole vigil, calamum et chartas et scrinia posco.
(k) Navem agere ignarus navis timet: abrotonum aegro
Non audet, nisi qui didicit, dare: quod medicorum
Promittunt (l) medici: tractant fabrilia fabri:
(m) Scribimus indocti doctique poemata passim.
(n) Hic error tamen et levis haec insania, quantas
Virtutes habeat, sic collige: vatis (o) avarus
Non temere est animus: (p) versus amat, hoc studet unum;
Detrimenta, (q) fugas servorum, incendia ridet;
Non (r) fraudem socio, puerove incogitat ullam
Pupillo? vivit filiquis, et pane secundo (s);

(t) Militiae quamquam piger et malus, utilis urbi;
Si das hoc, parvis quoque rebus magna juvari;
(u) Os tenerum pueri balbumque poeta figurat:
Torquet (w) ab obscoenis jam nunc sermonibus aurem;
Mox etiam pectus praeceptis formal amicis,
Asperitatis, et invidiae corrector, et irae;
Recte facta refert; (y) orientia tempora notis
Instruit exemplis; (x) inopem solatur et aegrum.
Castis cum (z) pueris ignara puella mariti
Discere unde (a) preces, vatem ni Musa dedisset?
Poscit opem chorus, et praesentia nomina sentit;
Coelestes implorat aquas, docta prece blandus;
Avertit morbos, (c) metuenda pericula pellit;
Impetrat et pacem, et locupletem frugibus annum.
(d) Carmine Di superi placantur, carmine Manes.
(e) Agricolae prisci, fortes, parvoque beati,
Condita post frumenta, levantes tempore festo

The joy their wives, their sons, and servants share,
Ease of their toil, and partners of their care:
The laugh, the jest, attendants on the bowl,
Smooth'd every brow, and open'd every soul:
With growing years the pleasing licence grew,
And (f) taunts alternate innocently flew.
But times corrupt, and (g) nature ill-inclin'd,
Produc'd the point that left a sting behind;
Till, friend with friend, and families at strife,
Triumphant malice rag'd through private life.
Who felt the wrong, or fear'd it, took th' alarm,
Appeal'd to law, and justice lent her arm. [bound,
At length, by wholesome (h) dread of statutes
The poets learn'd to please, and not to wound:
Most warp'd to (i) flattery's side; but some, more nice,
Preserv'd the freedom, and forebore the vice.
Hence satire rose, that just the medium hit,
And heals with morals what it hurts with wit.
(k) We conquer'd France, but felt our captive's charms;
Her arts victorious triumph'd o'er our arms;
Britain to soft refinements less a foe,
Wit grew polite, and (l) numbers learn'd to flow.
Waller was smooth; but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.
Though still some traces of our (m) rustic vein
And splayfoot verse remain'd, and will remain.
Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation (n) breath'd from civil war.
Exact (o) Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Show'd us that France had something to admire.
Not but the (p) tragic spirit was our own,
And full in Shakspeare, fair in Otway shone:
But Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And (q) fluent Shakspeare scarce effac'd a line.
Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot.
Some doubt, if equal pains, or equal fire,
The (r) humbler muse of comedy require.
But in known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less (s).
Observe how seldom ev'n the best succeed:
Tell me if (t) Congreve's fools are fools indeed?
What pert low dialogue has Farquhar writ!
How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit!
The stage how loosely (u) does Astræa tread,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed!
And idle Cibber, how he breaks the laws,
To make poor Pinkey (w) eat with vast applause!
But fill their (x) purse, our poets' work is done,
Alike to them, by pathos or by pun.
O you! whom (y) vanity's light bark conveys
On fame's mad voyage by the wind of praise,
With what a shifting gale your course you ply,
For ever sunk too low, or borne too high!
Who pants for glory finds but short repose,
A breath revives him, or a breath o'erthrows.
(z) Farewell the stage! if just as thrives the play,
The silly bard grows fat, or falls away.
(a) There still remains, to mortify a wit,
The many-headed monster of the pit;
A senseless, worthless, and unhonour'd crow'd:
Who, (b) to disturb their betters mighty proud,
Clattering their sticks before ten lines are spoke,
Call for the farce, (c) the bear, or the black-joke.
What dear delight to Britons farce affords!
Ever the taste of mobs, but now (d) of lords;
(Taste, that eternal wanderer, which flies
From heads to ears, and now from ears to eyes.)

Corpus et ipsum animum spe finis dura ferentem,
Cum sociis operum pueris et conjuge fida,
Tellurem porco, Silvanum lacte piabant,
Floribus, et vino Genium memorem brevis aevi.
Fescennina per hunc inventa licentia morem
(f) Versibus alternis opprobria rustica fudit;
Libertasque recurrentes accepta per annos
Lusit amabiliter: (g) donec jam saevus apertam
In rabiem coepit verti jocus, et per honestas
Ire domos impune minax. doluere cruento
Denti lacessiti: fuit intactis quoque cura
Conditione super communi: (h) quin etiam lex
Poenaque lata, malo quae nollet carmine quemquam
Describi. vertere modum, formidine fustis
Ad (i) bene dicendum, delectandumque redacti.
(k) Graecia capta ferum victorem cepit, et artes
Intulit agresti Latio. sic horridus ille
Defluxit (l) numerus Saturnius, et grave virus
Munditiae pepulere: sed in longum tamen aevum
Manserunt, hodieque manent, (m) vestigia ruris.
Serus enim Graecis admovit acumina chartis;
Et post (n) Punica bella quietus quaerere coepit,
Quid (o) Sophocles et Thespis et Aeschylus utile ferrent:
Tentavit quoque rem, si digne vertere posset:
Et placuit sibi, natura sublimis et acer:
Nam (p) spirat tragicum satis, et feliciter audet;
Sed (q) turpem putat inscite metuitque lituram.
Creditur, ex (r) medio quia arcessit, habere.
Sudoris minimum; sed habet Comoedia tanto
Plus oneris, quanto veniae minus. (s) aspice, Plautus
Quo pacto (t) partes tutetur amantis ephebi,
Ut patris attenti, lenonis ut insidiosi:
Quantus sit Dossennus (w) edacibus in parasitis;
Quam non (u) astricto percurrat pulpita socco.
Gestit enim (x) nummum in loculos demittere: post hoc
Securus, cadat an recto stet fabula talo.
Quem tulit ad scenam (y) ventoso gloria curru,
Exanimat lentus spectator, sedulus inflat:
Sic leve, sic parvum est, animum quod laudis avarum
Subruit, ac reficit: (z) valeat res ludicra, si me
Palma negata macrum, donata reducit opimum.
(a) Saepe etiam audacem fugat hoc terretque poetam
Quod numero plures, virtute et honore minores
Indocti, stolidique, et (b) depugnare parati
Si discordet eques, media inter carmina poscunt
Aut (c) ursum aut pugiles: his nam plebecula gaudet.
Verum (d) equitis quoque jam migravit ab aure voluptas
Omnis, ad incertos oculos, et gaudia vana.
Quatuor aut plures aulaea premuntur in horas;

The play ſtands ſtill; damn action and diſcourſe,
Back fly the ſcenes, and enter foot, (e) and horſe;
Pageants on pageants, in long order drawn,
Peers, heralds, biſhops, ermin, gold and lawn;
The champion too! and, to complete the jeſt,
Old Edward's armour beams on Cibber's breaſt.
With (f) laughter ſure Democritus had dy'd,
Had he beheld an audience gape ſo wide.
Let bear or (g) elephant be e'er ſo white,
The people, ſure, the people are the ſight!
Ah, luckleſs (h) poet! ſtretch thy lungs and roar,
That bear or elephant ſhall heed thee more;
While all its (i) throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit aſcends!
Loud as the wolves, on (k) Orca's ſtormy ſteep,
Howl to the roarings of the northern deep.
Such is the ſhout, the long-applauding note,
At Quin's high plume, or Oldfield's (l) petticoat;
Or when from court a birth-day ſuit beſtow'd,
Sinks the (m) loſt actor in the tawdry load.
Booth enters—hark! the univerſal peal!
"But has he ſpoken?" Not a ſyllable.
What ſhook the ſtage, and made the people ſtare?
(n) Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacquer'd chair.

Yet, leſt you think I rally more than teach,
Or praiſe malignly arts I cannot reach,
Let me for once preſume t' inſtruct the times,
To know the poet from the man of rhymes:
'Tis he (o) who gives my breaſt a thouſand pains,
Can make me feel each paſſion that he feigns;
Enrage, compoſe, with more than magic art;
With pity, and with terror, tear my heart;
And ſnatch me, o'er the earth, or through the air,
To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

(p) But not this part of the poetic ſtate
Alone, deſerves the favour of the great:
Think of thoſe authors, Sir, who would rely
More on a reader's ſenſe, than gazer's eye.
Or who ſhall wander where the muſes ſing?
Who climb their mountain, or who taſte their ſpring?
How ſhall we fill a (q) library with wit,
When Merlin's cave is half unfurniſh'd yet?
My liege! why writers little claim your thought,
I gueſs; and, with their leave, will tell the fault:
We (r) poets are (upon a poet's word)
Of all mankind, the creatures moſt abſurd:
The (s) ſeaſon, when to come, and when to go,
To ſing, or ceaſe to ſing, we never know;
And if we will recite nine hours in ten,
You loſe your patience juſt like other men.
Then too we hurt ourſelves, when, to defend
A (t) ſingle verſe, we quarrel with a friend;
Repeat (u) unaſk'd; (w) lament, the wit's too fine
For vulgar eyes, and point out every line;
But moſt, when, ſtraining with too weak a wing,
We needs will write epiſtles to the king;
And (x) from the moment we oblige the town,
Expect a place, or penſion from the crown;
Or, dubb'd hiſtorians by expreſs command,
T' enroll your triumphs o'er the ſeas and land,
Be call'd to court to plan ſome work divine,
As once for Louis, Boileau, and Racine.
Yet (y) think, great Sir! (ſo many virtues ſhown)
Ah, think, what poet beſt may make them known?
Or chooſe at leaſt ſome miniſter of grace,
Fit to beſtow the (z) laureat's weighty place.
(a) Charles, to late times to be tranſmitted fair,
Aſſign'd his figure to Bernini's care;

Dum fugiunt (e) equitum turmae, peditumque catervae:
Mox trahitur manibus regum fortuna retortis;
Eſſeda feſtinant, pilenta, petorrita, naves;
Captivum portatur ebur, captiva Corinthus.
(f) Si foret in terris, rideret Democritus; ſeu
Diverſum confuſa genus panthera camelo,
Sive (g) elephas albus vulgi converteret ora.
Spectaret populum ludis attentius ipſis,
Ut ſibi praebentem mimo ſpectacula plura:
Scriptores autem (h) narrare putaret aſello
Fabellam ſurdo. nam quae (i) pervincere voces
Evaluere ſonum, referunt quem noſtra theatra?
(k) Garganum mugire putes nemus, aut mare Tuſcum.
Tanto cum ſtrepitu ludi ſpectantur, et artes,
(l) Divitiaeque peregrinae: quibus (m) oblitus actor
Cum ſtetit in ſcena, concurrit dextera laevae.
Dixit adhuc aliquid? nil ſane. Quid placet ergo?
(n) Lana Tarentino violas imitata veneno.
Ac ne ſorte putes me, quae facere ipſe recuſem,
Cum recte tractent alii, laudare maligne:
Ille per extentum funem mihi poſſe videtur
Ire poeta; (o) meum qui pectus inaniter angit,
Irritat, mulcet, falſis terroribus implet,
Ut magus; et modo me Thebis, modo ponit Athenis.

(p) Verum age, et his, qui ſe lectori credere malunt,
Quam ſpectatoris faſtidia ferre ſuperbi, [num
Cura impende brevem: ſi (q) manus Apolline digVis complere libris; et vatibus addere calcar,
Ut ſtudio majore petant Helicona virentem.
(r) Multa quidem nobis facimus mala ſaepe poetae,
(Ut vineta egomet caedam mea) cum tibi librum
(s) Solicito damus, aut feſſo: cum laedimur, (t) unum
Si quis amicorum eſt auſus reprendere verſum:
Cum loca jam (u) recitata revolvimus irrevocati:
Cum (w) lamentamur non apparere labores
Noſtros, et tenui deducta poemata filo: [que
Cum (x) ſperamus eo rem venturam, ut, ſimul atCarmina reſcieris nos fingere, commodus ultro
Arceſſas, et egere vetes, et ſcribere cogas.
Sed tamen eſt (y) operae pretium cognoſcere, quales
Aedituos habeat belli ſpectata domique
Virtus, (z) indigno non committenda poetae.
(a) Gratus Alexandro regi Magno fuit ille
Choerilus, incultis qui verſibus et male natis
Rettulit acceptos, regale numiſma, Philippos.
Sed veluti tractata notam labemque remittunt
Atramenta, fere ſcriptores carmine foedo
Splendida facta linunt. idem rex ille, poema
Qui tam ridiculum tam care prodigus emit,

And (b) great Naſſau to Kneller's hand decreed
To fix him graceful on the bounding ſteed;
So well in paint and ſtone they judg'd of merit:
But kings in wit may want diſcerning ſpirit.
The hero William and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one penſion'd Quarles;
Which made old Ben and ſurly Dennis ſwear,
"No lord's anointed, but a (c) Ruſſian bear."
Not with ſuch (d) majeſty, ſuch bold relief,
The forms auguſt, of king, or conquering chief,
E'er ſwell'd on marble; as in verſe have ſhin'd
(In poliſh'd verſe) the manners and the mind.
Oh! could I mount on the Mæonian wing,
Your (e) arms, your actions, your repoſe to ſing;
What (f) ſeas you travers'd, and what fields you fought!
Your country's peace, how oft, how dearly bought!
How (g) barbarous rage ſubſided at your word,
And nations wonder'd while they dropp'd the ſword!
How, when you nodded, o'er the land and deep,
(h) Peace ſtole her wing, and wrapp'd the world in ſleep;
Till earth's extremes your meditation own,
And (i) Aſia's tyrants tremble at your throne—
But (k) verſe, alas! your majeſty diſdains;
And I'm not us'd to panegyric ſtrains:
The zeal of (l) fools offends at any time,
But moſt of all, the zeal of fools in rhyme.
Beſides, a fate attends on all I write,
That when I aim at praiſe, they ſay (m) I bite.
A vile (n) encomium doubly ridicules:
There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools.

Edicto vetuit, ne quis ſe praeter Apellem
Pingeret, aut alius Lyſippo duceret aera
Fortis (b) Alexandri vultum ſimulantia. quod ſi
Judicium ſubtile videndis artibus illud
Ad libros et ad haec Muſarum dona vocares;
(c) Boeotum in craſſo jurares aëre natum.
[At neque dedecorant tua de ſe judicia, atque
Munera quae multa dantis cum laude tulerunt,
Dilecti tibi Virgilius Variuſque poetae;]
Nec magis expreſſi (d) vultus per ahenea ſigna,
Quam per vatis opus mores animique virorum
Clarorum apparent. nec fermones ego mallem
Repentes per humum, (e) quam res componere geſtas,
Terrarumque (f) ſitus et flumina dicere, et arces
Montibus impoſitas, et (g) barbara regna, tuiſque
Auſpiciis totum (h) confecta duella per orbem,
Clauſtraque (h) cuſtodem pacis cohibentia Janum,
Et (i) formidatam Parthis, te principe, Romam:
Si quantum cuperem, poſſem quoque. ſed neque parvum
(k) Carmen majeſtas recipit tua; nec meus audet
Rem tentare pudor, quam vires ferre recuſent.
Sedulitas autem (l) ſtulte, quem diligit, urget;
Praecipue cum ſe numeris commendat et arte.
Diſcit enim citius, meminitque libentius illud
Quod quis (m) deridet, quam quod probat et veneratur. [ſicto
Nil moror (n) officium, quod me gravat: ac neque

If true, a (o) woful likeneſs; and if lies,
"Praiſe undeſerv'd is ſcandal in diſguiſe:"
Well may he (p) bluſh, who gives it, or receives;
And when I flatter, let my dirty leaves
(Like journals, odes, and ſuch forgotten things
As Euſden, Philips, ſettle, writ of kings)
(q) Clothe ſpice, like trunks, or fluttering in a row,
Befringe the rails of Bedlam and Soho.

In (o) pejus vultu proponi cereus uſquam,
Nec prave factis decorari verſibus opto:
Ne (p) rubeam pingui donatus munere, et una
Cum ſcriptore meo capſa porrectus aperta,
(q) Deferar in vicum vendentem thus et odores,
Et piper, et quicquid chartis amicitur ineptis.

BOOK II. EPISTLE II.

Ludentis ſpeciem dabit, et torquebitur. HOR.

DEAR Col'nel, Cobham's and your country's friend!
You love a verſe, take ſuch as I can ſend.
(b) A Frenchman comes, preſents you with his boy,
Bows, and begins—"This lad, Sir, is of Blois;
"Obſerve his ſhape how clean! his locks how
"curl'd!
"My only ſon; I'd have him ſee the world:
"His French is pure; his voice too—you ſhall
"hear.
"Sir, he's your ſlave, for twenty pound a-year.
"Mere wax as yet, you faſhion him with eaſe,
"Your barber, cook, upholſterer, what you pleaſe:
"A perfect genius at an opera ſong—
"To ſay too much, might do my honour wrong.
"Take him with all his virtues, on my word;
"His whole ambition was to ſerve a lord:
"But, Sir to you, with what would I not part?
"Though faith, I fear, 'twill break his mother's "heart.

EPISTOLA II.

FLORE, bono claroque fidelis amice Neroni,
(b) Si quis forte velit puerum tibi vendere natum
Tibure vel Gabiis, et tecum ſic agat: "Hic et
"Candidus, et talos a vertice pulcher ad imos,
"Fiet eritque tuus nummorum millibus octo;
"Verna miniſteriis ad nutus aptus heriles;
"Litteculis Graecis imbutus, idoneus arti
"Cuilibet: argilla quidvis imitaberis uda:
"Quin etiam canet indoctum, ſed dulce bibenti.
"Multa fidem promiſſa levant, ubi plenius aequo
"Laudat venales, qui vult extrudere, merces.
"Res urget me nulla: meo ſum pauper in aere.
"Nemo hoc mangonum faceret tibi: non temere
"a me [ſic
"Quivis ferret idem: ſemel hic ceſſavit, et (ut
"In ſcalis latuit metuens pendentis habenae:
"Des nummos, excepta nihil te ſi fuga laedit."

" Once (and but once) I caught him in a lie,
" And then, unwhipp'd, he had the grace to cry :
" The fault he has I fairly ſhall reveal,
" (Could you o'erlook but that) it is, to ſteal."
(e) If, after this, you took the graceful lad,
Could you complain, my friend, he prov'd ſo bad?
Faith, in ſuch caſe, if you ſhould proſecute,
I think Sir Godfrey ſhould decide the ſuit :
Who ſent the thief that ſtole the caſh, away,
And puniſh'd him that put it in his way.
(d) Conſider then, and judge me in this light;
I told you when I went, I could not write;
You ſaid the ſame; and are you diſcontent
With laws, to which you gave your own aſſent?
Nay worſe, to aſk for verſe at ſuch a time!
D'ye think me good for nothing but to rhyme?
(e) In Anna's wars, a ſoldier poor and old
Had dearly earn'd a little purſe of gold :
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckleſs night,
He ſlept, poor dog! and loſt it, to a doit,
This put the man in ſuch a deſperate mind,
Between revenge, and grief, and hunger join'd,
Againſt the foe, himſelf, and all mankind,
He leap'd the trenches, ſcal'd a caſtle wall,
Tore down a ſtandard, took the fort and all.
" Prodigious well!" his great commander cry'd,
Gave him much praiſe, and ſome reward beſide.
Next, pleas'd his excellence a town to batter
(Its name I know not, and 'tis no great matter);
" Go on, my friend, (he cry'd) ſee yonder walls!
" Advance and conquer! go where glory calls!
" More honours, more rewards, attend the brave."
Don't you remember what reply he gave?
" D'ye think me, noble general, ſuch a ſot?
" Let him take caſtles who has ne'er a groat."
(f) Bred up at home, full early I begun
To read in Greek the wrath of Peleus' ſon.
Beſides, my father taught me from a lad,
The better art to know the good from bad :
(And little ſure imported to remove,
To hunt for truth in Maudlin's learned grove.)
But knottier points, we knew not half ſo well,
Depriv'd us ſoon of our paternal cell;
And certain laws, by ſufferers thought unjuſt,
Deny'd all poſts of profit or of truſt :
Hopes after hopes of pious Papiſts fail'd, [vail'd,
While mighty William's thundering arm pre-
For right hereditary tax'd and ſin'd,
He ſtuck to poverty with peace of mind;
And me, the muſes help'd to undergo it;
Convict a Papiſt he, and I a poet.
But (thanks to Homer) hence I live and thrive,
Indebted to no prince or peer alive,
Sure I ſhould want the care of ten Monroes,
If I would ſcribble, rather than repoſe.
(g) Years following years, ſteal ſomething every day,
At laſt they ſteal us from ourſelves away;
In one our frolics, one amuſements end,
In one a miſtreſs drops, in one a friend :
This ſubtle thief of life, this paltry time,
What will it leave me, if it ſnatch my rhyme?
If every wheel of that unweary'd mill,
That turn'd ten thouſand verſes, now ſtands ſtill.
(h) But after all, what would you have me do?
When out of twenty I can pleaſe not two;
When this heroics only deigns to praiſe,
Sharp ſatire that, and that Pindaric lays?
One likes the pheaſant's wing, and one the leg;
The vulgar boil, the learned roaſt an egg.
Hard taſk! to hit the palate of ſuch gueſts,
When Oldfield loves what Dartineuf deteſts.
(i) But grant I may relapſe, for want of grace,
Again to rhyme: can London be the place?

(e) Ille ferat pretium, poenae ſecurus, opinor.
Prudens emiſti vitioſum: dicta tibi eſt lex.
Inſequeris tamen hunc, et lite moraris iniqua.
(d) Dixi me pigrum proficiſcenti tibi, dixi
Talibus officiis prope mancum; ne mea ſaevus
Jurgares ad te quod epiſtola nulla veniret.
Quid tum profeci, mecum facientia jura
Si tamen attentas? quereris ſuper hoc etiam, quod
Expectata tibi non mittam carmina mendax.
(e) Luculli miles collecta viatica multis
Aeruumnis, laſſus dum noctu ſtertit, ad aſſem
Perdiderat: poſt hoc vehemens lupus, et ſibi et hoſti
Iratus pariter, jejunis dentibus acer,
Praeſidium regale loco dejecit, ut aiunt,
Summe munito, et multarum divite rerum.
Clarus ob id factum, donis ornatur honeſtis,
Accipit et bis dena ſuper ſeſtertia nummum.
Forte ſub hoc tempus caſtellum evertere praeter
Neſcio quod cupiens, hortari coepit eundem [tem:
Verbis, quae timido quoque poſſent addere men-
I, bone, quo virtus tua te vocat: i pede fauſto,
Grandia laturus meritorum praemia: quid ſtas?
Poſt haec ille catus, quantumvis ruſticus, " Ibit,
" Ibit eo, quo vis, qui zonam perdidit, inquit."
(f) Romae nutriri mihi contigit atque doceri,
Iratus Graiis quantum nocuiſſet Achilles.
Adjecere bonae paulo plus artis Athenae:
Scilicet ut poſſem curvo dignoſcere rectum,
Atque inter ſylvas academi quaerere verum.
Dura ſed emovere loco me tempora grato;
Civiliſque rudem belli tulit aeſtus in arma,
Caeſaris Auguſti non reſponſura lacertis.
Unde ſimul primum me demiſere Philippi,
Deciſis humilem pennis, inopemque paterni
Et laris et fundi, paupertas impulit audax
Ut verſus facerem: ſed, quod non deſit, habentem;
Quae poterunt unquam ſatis expurgare cicutae,
Ni melius dormire putem, quam ſcribere verſus?
(g) Singula de nobis anni praedantur euntes;
Eripuere jocos, venerem, convivia, ludum;
Tendunt extorquere poemata. quid faciam vis?
(h) Denique non omnes eadem mirantur amant-que.
Carmine tu gaudes: hic delectatur iambis;
Ille Bioneis ſermonibus, et ſale nigro.
Tres mihi convivae prope diſſentire videntur,
Poſcentes vario multum diverſa palato. [alter:
Quid dem? quid non dem? renuis quod tu, jubet
Quod petis, id ſane eſt inviſum acidumque duobus.
(i) Praeter caetera me Romae ne poemata cenſe

Who there his muſe, or ſelf, or ſoul attends,
In crowds, and courts, law, buſineſs, feaſts, and friends?
My counſel ſends to execute a deed:
A poet begs me I will hear him read:
In Palace-yard at nine you'll find me there—
At ten, for certain, Sir, in Bloomſbury-ſquare—
Before the Lords at twelve my cauſe comes on—
There's a rehearſal, Sir, exact at one—
"Oh but a wit can ſtudy in the ſtreets,
"And raiſe his mind above the mob he meets."
Not quite ſo well however as one ought;
A hackney-coach may chance to ſpoil a thought;
And then a nodding beam, or pig of lead,
God knows, may hurt the very ableſt head.
Have you not ſeen, at Guildhall's narrow paſs,
Two Aldermen diſpute it with an aſs?
And peers give way, exalted as they are,
Ev'n to their own ſ-r-v—nce in a car?
(k) Go, lofty poet! and in ſuch a crowd,
Sing thy ſonorous verſe—but not aloud.
Alas! to grottoes and to groves we run,
To caſe and ſilence, every muſe's ſon:
Blackmore himſelf, for any grand effort,
Would drink and doze at Tooting or Earl's Court.
How ſhall I rhyme in this eternal roar?
How match the bards whom none e'er match'd before?
(l) The man, who, ſtretch'd in Iſis' calm retreat,
To books and ſtudy gives ſeven years complete,
See, ſtrow'd with learned duſt, his nightcap on,
He walks, an object new beneath the ſun!
The boys flock round him, and the people ſtare:
So ſtiff, ſo mute! ſome ſtatue you would ſwear,
Stepp'd from its pedeſtal to take the air!

And here, while town, and court, and city roars;
With mobs, and duns, and ſoldiers, at their doors,
Shall I, in London, act this idle part?
Compoſing ſongs, for fools to get by heart?
(m) The temple late two brother ſergeants ſaw,
Who deem'd each other oracles of law!
With equal talents, theſe congenial ſouls,
One lull'd th' Exchequer, and one ſtunn'd the rolls;
Each had a gravity would make you ſplit,
And ſhook his head at Murray, as a wit.
'Twas, "Sir, your law"—and "Sir, your eloquence," [ſenſe."
"Yours, Cowper's manner—and yours, Talbot's
(n) Thus we diſpoſe of all poetic merit,
Yours Milton's genius, and mine Homer's ſpirit.
Call Tibbald Shakeſpeare, and he'll ſwear the Nine,
Dear Cibber! never match'd one ode of thine.
Lord! how we ſtrut through Merlin's cave, to ſee
No poets there, but Stephen, you, and me.
Walk with reſpect behind, while we at eaſe
Weave laurel crowns, and take what names we pleaſe.
"My dear Tibullus!" if that will not do,
"Let me be Horace, and be Ovid you!
"Or, I'm content, allow me Dryden's ſtrains,
"And you ſhall riſe up Otway for your pains."
Much do I ſuffer, much to keep in peace
This jealous, waſpiſh, wrong-head, rhyming race;
And much muſt flatter, if the whim ſhould bite
To court applauſe by printing what I write:
But let the fit paſs o'er, I'm wiſe enough
To ſtop my ears to their confounded ſtuff.
(o) In vain, bad rhymers all mankind reject,
They treat themſelves with moſt profound reſpect;
'Tis to ſmall purpoſe that you hold your tongue,
Each prais'd within, is happy all day long:

Scribere poſſe, inter tot curas totque labores?
Hic ſponſum vocat, hic auditum ſcripta, relictis
Omnibus officiis: cubat hic in colle Quirini,
Hic extremo in Aventino; viſendus uterque.
Intervalla vides humane commoda. "Verum
"Purae ſunt platea, nihil ut meditantibus obſtet."
Feſtinat calidus mulis gerulisque redemtor:
Torquet nunc lapidem, nunc ingens machina tignum:
Triſtia robuſtis luctantur funera plauſtris:
Hac rabioſa fugit canis, hac lutulenta ruit ſus.
(k) I nunc, et verſus tecum meditare canoros.
Scriptorum chorus omnis amat nemus, et fugit urbes,
Rite cliens Bacchi, ſomno gaudentis et umbra.
Tu me inter ſtrepitus nocturnos atque diurnos
Vis canere, et contracta ſequi veſtigia vatum?
(l) Ingenium, ſibi quod vacuas deſumſit Athenas,
Et ſtudiis annos ſeptem dedit, inſenuitque
Libris et curis, ſtatua taciturnius exit
Plerumque, et riſu populum quatit; hic ego rerum
Fluctibus in mediis, et tempeſtatibus urbis,
Verba lyrae motura ſonum connectere digner?

(m) Frater erat Romae conſulti rhetor; ut alter
Alterius ſermone meros audiret honores:
Gracchus ut hic illi foret, huic ut Mucius ille.
Quî minus argutos vexat furor iſte poetas?
(n) Carmina compono, hic elegos; mirabile viſu,
Caelatumque novem Muſis opus. aſpice primum,
Quanto cum faſtu, quanto molimine circumſpectemus vacuam Romanis vatibus aedem;
Mox etiam (ſi forte vacas) ſequere, et procul audi,
Quid ferat, et quare ſibi nectat uterque coronam.
Caedimur, et totidem plagis conſumimus hoſtem,
Lento Samnites ad lumina prima duello.
Diſcedo Alcaeus puncto illius; ille meo quis?
Quis, niſi Callimachus? ſi plus adpoſcere viſus:
Fit Mimnermus, et optivo cognomine creſcit.
Multa fero, ut placem genus irritabile vatum,
Cum ſcribo, et ſupplex populi ſuffragia capto:
Idem, finitis ſtudiis, et mente recepta,
Obturem patulas impune legentibus aures.
(o) Ridentur mala qui componunt carmina: verum
Gaudet ſcribentes, et ſe venerantur, et ultro,
Si taceas, laudant; quidquid ſcripſere, beati.
At qui legitimum cupiet feciſſe poema,
Cum tabulis animum cenſoris ſumet honeſti:

But how ſeverely with themſelves proceed
The men, who write ſuch verſe as we can read?
Their own ſtrict judges, not a word they ſpare,
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care,
Howe'er unwillingly it quits its place,
Nay though at Court (perhaps) it may find grace:
Such they'll degrade; and ſometimes, in its ſtead,
(p) In downright charity revive the dead;
Mark where a bold, expreſſive phraſe appears,
Bright through the rubbiſh of ſome hundred years;
Command old words that long have ſlept, to wake,
Words, that wiſe Bacon, or brave Raleigh ſpake;
Or bid the new be Engliſh, ages hence,
(For uſe will father what's begot by ſenſe)
Pour the full tide of eloquence along,
Serenely pure, and yet divinely ſtrong,
Rich with the treaſures of each foreign tongue!
Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,
But ſhow no mercy to an empty line:
Then poliſh all, with ſo much life and eaſe,
You think 'tis nature, and a knack to pleaſe:
"But eaſe in writing flows from art, not chance;
"As thoſe move eaſieſt who have learn'd to dance."
(q) If ſuch the plague and pains to write by rule,
Better (ſay I) be pleas'd, and play the fool;
Call, if you will, bad rhyming a diſeaſe,
It gives men happineſs, or leaves them eaſe.
There liv'd in primo Georgii (they record)
A worthy member, no ſmall fool, a lord;
Who, though the houſe was up, delighted ſate,
Heard, noted, anſwer'd, as in full debate:
In all but this, a man of ſober life,
Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife;
Not quite a madman, though a paſty fell;
And much too wiſe to walk into a well.
Him, the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd,
They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd; in ſhort, they cur'd:
Whereat the gentleman began to ſtare—
My friends! he cry'd, p—x take you for your care!
That from a patriot of diſtinguiſh'd note,
Have bled and purg'd me to a ſimple vote.

(r) Well, on the whole, plain proſe muſt be my fate:
Wiſdom (curſe on it) will come ſoon or late.
There is a time when poets will grow dull:
I'll e'en leave verſes to the boys at ſchool:
To rules of poetry no more confin'd,
I'll learn to ſmooth and harmoniſe my mind,
Teach every thought within its bounds to roll,
And keep the equal meaſure of the ſoul.
(s) Soon as I enter at my country door,
My mind reſumes the thread it dropp'd before;
Thoughts which at Hyde-park corner I forgot,
Meet and rejoin me, in the penſive grot.
There all alone, and compliments apart,
I aſk theſe ſober queſtions of my heart. [crave,
(t) If, when the more you drink, the more you
You tell the doctor; when the more you have,
The more you want, why not with equal eaſe
Confeſs as well your folly, as diſeaſe?
The heart reſolves this matter in a trice,
"Men only feel the ſmart, but not the vice."
(u) When golden angels ceaſe to cure the evil,
You give all royal witchcraft to the devil:
When ſervile chaplains cry, that birth and place
Indue a peer with honour, truth, and grace;
Look in that breaſt, moſt dirty Dean! be fair,
Say, can you find out one ſuch lodger there?
Yet ſtill, not heeding what your heart can teach,
You go to church to hear theſe flatterers preach.
Indeed, could wealth beſtow or wit or merit,
A grain of courage, or a ſpark of ſpirit,
The wiſeſt man might bluſh, I muſt agree,
If D lov'd ſixpence, more than he.
(v) If there be truth in law, and uſe can give
A property, that's yours on which you live.

Audebit quaecunque parum ſplendoris habebunt,
Et ſine pondere erunt, et honore indigna ferentur,
Verba movere loco; quamvis invita recedant,
Et verſentur adhuc intra penetralia Veſtae:
(p) Obſcurata diu populo bonus eruet, atque
Proferet in lucem ſpecioſa vocabula rerum,
Quae priſcis memorata Catonibus atque Cethegis,
Nunc ſitus informis premit et deſerta vetuſtas;
Adſciſcet nova, quae genitor produxerit uſus:
Vehemens et liquidus, puroque ſimillimus amni,
Fundet opes, Latiumque beabit divite lingua:
Luxuriantia compeſcet: nimis aſpera ſano
Levabit cultu, virtute carentia tollet:
Laudentis ſpeciem dabit, torquebitur, ut qui
Nunc Satyrum, nunc agreſtem Cyclopa movetur.
(q) Praetulerim ſcriptor delirus inerſque videri,
Dum mea delectent mala me, vel denique fallant,
Quam ſapere, et ringi. Fuit haud ignobilis argis,
Qui ſe credebat miros audire tragoedos,
In vacuo laetus ſeſſor plauſorque theatro:
Caetera qui vitae ſervaret munia recto

More; bonus ſane vicinus, amabilis hoſpes,
Comis in uxorem? poſſet qui ignoſcere ſervis,
Et ſigno laeſo non inſanire lagenae:
Poſſet qui rupem, et puteum vitare patentem.
Hic ubi cognatorum opibus curiſque refectus,
Expulit elleboro morbum bilemque meraco,
Et redit ad ſeſe: Pol me occidiſtis, amici,
Non ſervaſtis, ait; cui ſic extorta voluptas,
Et demptus per vim mentis gratiſſimus error.
(r) Nimirum ſapere eſt abjectis utile nugis,
Et tempeſtivum pueris concedere ludum;
(s) Ac non verba ſequi fidibus modulanda Latinis,
Sed verae numeroſque modoſque edifcere vitae.
Quocirca mecum loquor haec, tacituſque recordor:
(t) Si tibi nulla ſitim finiret copia lymphae,
Narrares medicis: quod quanto plura paraſti,
Tanto plura cupis, nulline faterier audes?
(u) Si vulnus tibi monſtrata radice vel herba
Non fieret levius, fugeres radice vel herba
Proficiente nihil curarier: audieras, cui
Rem Dî donarint, ille decedere pravam
Stultitiam; et, cum ſis nihilo ſapientior, ex quo
Plenior es, tamen uteris monitoribus iſdem?
At ſi divitiae prudentem reddere poſſent,
Si cupidum timidumque minus te: nempe ruberes,
Viveret in terris, te ſi quis avarior uno.
(v) Si proprium eſt, quod quis libra mercatus et aere eſt,

Delightful Abs-court, if its fields afford
Their fruits to you, confeſſes you its lord:
All (x) Worldly's hens, nay, partridge, ſold to town,
His veniſon too, a guinea makes your own:
He bought at thouſands, what with better wit
You purchaſe as you want, and bit by bit;
Now, or long ſince, what difference will be found?
You pay a penny, and he paid a pound.
(y) Heathcote himſelf, and ſuch large-acred men,
Lords of fat E'ſham, or of Lincoln-fen,
Buy every ſtick of wood that lends them heat;
Buy every pullet they afford to eat.
Yet theſe are wights, who fondly call their own
Half that the devil o'erlooks from Lincoln-town.
The laws of God, as well as of the land,
Abhor a perpetuity ſhould ſtand:
Eſtates have wings, and hang in fortune's power
(z) Looſe on the point of every wavering hour,
Ready, by force, or of your own accord,
By ſale, at leaſt by death, to change their lord.
Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldſt thou have?
Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave.
All vaſt poſſeſſions (juſt the ſame the caſe
Whether you call them villa, park, or chaſe)
Alas, my Bathurſt! what will they avail?
Join Cotſwood's hills to Saperton's fair dale,
Let riſing granaries and temples here,
There mingled farms and pyramids appear,
Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Incloſe whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke!
Inexorable Death ſhall level all,
And trees, and ſtones, and farms, and farmer fall.
(a) Gold, ſilver, ivory, vaſes ſculptur'd high,
Paint, marble, gems, and robes of Perſian dye,
There are who have not—and thank heaven there are,
Who, if they have not, think not worth their care.
(b) Talk what you will of taſte, my friend, you'll find
Two of a face, as ſoon as of a mind.
Why, of two brothers, rich and reſtleſs one
Ploughs, burns, manures, and toils from ſun to ſun;
The other ſlights, for women, ſports, and wines,
All Townſhend's turnips, and all Groſvenor's mines:
Why one like Bu— with pay and ſcorn content,
Bows and votes on, in court and parliament;
One, driven by ſtrong benevolence of ſoul,
Shall fly, like Oglethorpe, from pole to pole:
Is known alone to that Directing Power,
Who forms the genius in the natal hour;
That God of Nature, who, within us ſtill,
Inclines our action, not conſtrains our will;
Various of temper, as of face or frame,
Each individual; his great end the ſame.
(c) Yes, Sir, how ſmall ſoever be my heap,
A part I will enjoy, as well as keep.
My heir may ſigh, and think it want of grace
A man ſo poor would live without a place:
But ſure no ſtatute in his favour ſays,
How free, or frugal, I ſhall paſs my days:
I, who at ſome times ſpend, at others ſpare,
Divided between careleſſneſs and care.
'Tis one thing madly to diſperſe my ſtore;
Another, not to heed to treaſure more:
Glad, like a boy, to ſnatch the firſt good day,
And pleas'd, if ſordid want be far away.
(f) What is 't to me (a paſſenger God wot)
Whether my veſſel be firſt-rate or not?
The ſhip itſelf may make a better figure;
But I that ſail, am neither leſs nor bigger:
I neither ſtrut with every favouring breath,
Nor ſtrive with all the tempeſt in my teeth.
In power, wit, figure, virtue, fortune, plac'd
Behind the foremoſt, and before the laſt.

Quaedam (ſi credis conſultis) mancipat uſus:
Qui te paſcit ager, tuus eſt; et villicus Orbi,
Cum ſegetes occat tibi mox frumenta daturus,
Te dominum ſentit.
(x) das nummos; accipis uvam,
Pullos, ova, cadum, temeti; nempe modo iſto
Paulatim mercaris agrum, fortaſſe trecentis,
Aut etiam ſupra, nummorum millibus octum.
Quid refert, vivas numerato nuper, an olim?
(y) Emtor Aricini quondam, Veientis et arvi,
Emtum coenat olus, quamvis aliter putat; emtis
Sub noctem gelidam lignis calefactat ahenum.
Sed vocat uſque ſuum, qua populus ad ſita certis
Limitibus dicina refigit jurgia: tanquam
(z) Sit proprium cuiquam, puncto quod mobilis horae, [prema,
Nunc prece, nunc pretio, nunc vi, nunc ſorte ſu-
Permutet dominos, et cedat in altera jura.
Sic, quia perpetuus nulli datur uſus, et haeres
Haeredem alterius, velut unda ſupervenit undam:
Quid vici proſunt, aut horrea? quidve Calabris
Saltibus adjecti Lucani; ſi metit Orcus
Grandia cum parvis, non exorabilis auro?
(a) Gemmas, marmor, ebur, Tyrrhena ſigilla, tabellas,
Argentum, veſtes Gaetulo murice tinctas,
Sunt qui non habeant; eſt qui non curat habere.

(b) Cur alter fratrum ceſſare, et ludere, et ungi
Praeferat Herodis palmetis pinguibus; alter
Dives et importunus, ad umbram lucis ab ortu
Silveſtrem flammis et ferro mitiget agrum:
Scit Genius, natale comes qui temperat aſtrum:
Naturae Deus humanae, mortalis in unum—
Quodque caput, vultus mutabilis, albus, et ater.
(c) Utar, et ex modico, quantum res poſcet, acervo
Tollam: nec metuam, quid de me judicet haeres,
Quod non plura datis invenerit. et tamen idem
Scire volam, quantum ſimplex hilariſque nepoti
Diſcrepet, et quantum diſcordet parcus avaro.
Diſtat enim, ſpargas tua prodigus, an neque ſumtum.
Invitus facias, nec plura parare labores;
Ac potius, puer ut feſtis Quinquatribus olim,
Exiguo gratoque fruaris tempore raptim. [utrum
(f) Pauperies immunda domûs procul abſit: ego,
Nave ferar magna an parva, ferar unus et idem.
Non agimur tumidis velis Aquilone ſecundo:
Non tamen adverſis aetatem ducimus Auſtris,

(g) "But why all this of avarice? I have none."
I wish you joy, Sir, of a tyrant gone;
But does no other lord it at this hour,
As wild and mad? the avarice of power?
Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appall?
Not the black fear of death, that saddens all?
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne,
Despise the known, nor trouble at th' unknown?
Survey both worlds, intrepid and entire,
In spite of witches, devils, dreams, and fire?
Pleas'd to look forward, pleas'd to look behind,
And count each birth-day with a grateful mind?
Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end;
Canst thou endure a foe, forgive a friend?
Has age but melted the rough parts away,
As winter fruits grow mild ere they decay?
Or will you think, my friend, your business done,
When, of a hundred thorns, you pull out one?
(b) Learn to live well, or fairly make your will;
You've play'd, and lov'd, and eat, and drank your fill:
Walk sober off; before a sprightlier age
Comes tittering on, and shoves you from the stage:
Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, and whose follies please.

Viribus, ingenio, specie, virtute, loco, re,
Extremi primorum, extremis usque priores.
(g) Non es avarus: abi. quid? caetera jam simul isto
Cum vitio fugere? caret tibi pectis inani
Ambitione? caret mortis formidine et ira?
Somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, sagas,
Nocturnos lemures, portentaque Thessala rides?
Natales grate numeras? ignoscis amicis?
Lenior et melior fis accedente senecta?
Quid te extrema levat spinis de pluribus una?
(b) Vivere si recte nescis, decede peritis.
Lusisti satis, edisti satis, atque bibisti:
Tempus abire tibi est: ne potum largius aequo
Rideat, et pulset lasciva decentius aetas.

THE SATIRES OF DR. JOHN DONNE,

DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S, VERSIFIED.

" Quid vetat et noſmet Lucilli ſcripta legentes
" Quaerere, num illius, num rerum dura negârit
" Verſiculos natura magis factos, et euntes
" Mollius?" HOR.

SATIRE II.

YES; thank my ſtars! as early as I knew
This town, I had the ſenſe to hate it too:
Yet here, as ev'n in hell, there muſt be ſtill
One giant-vice, ſo excellently ill,
That all beſide, one pities, nor abhors;
As who knows Sappho, ſmiles at other whores.
I grant that poetry's a crying ſin;
It brought (no doubt) th' exciſe and army in:
Catch'd like the plague, or love, the Lord knows how
But that the cure is ſtarving, all allow.
Yet like the papiſt's, is the poet's ſtate.
Poor and diſarm'd, and hardly worth your hate!
Here a lean bard, whoſe wit could never give
Himſelf a dinner, makes an actor live:
The thief condemn'd, in law already dead,
So prompts, and ſaves a rogue who cannot read.
Thus as the pipes of ſome carv'd organ move,
The gilded puppets dance and mount above.
Heav'd by the breath th' inſpiring bellows blow:
Th' inſpiring bellows lie and pant below.
One ſings the fair: but ſongs no longer move;
No rat is rhym'd to death, nor maid to love:
In love's, in nature's ſpite, the ſiege they hold,
And ſcorn the fleſh, the devil, and all but gold.
Theſe write to lords, ſome mean reward to get,
As needy beggars ſing at doors for meat.
Thoſe write becauſe all write, and ſo have ſtill
Excuſe for writing, and for writing ill.
Wretched indeed! but far more wretched yet
Is he who makes his meal on others wit:
'Tis chang'd, no doubt, from what it was before;
His rank digeſtion makes it wit no more:
Senſe, paſt through him, no longer is the ſame;
For food digeſted takes another name.
I paſs o'er all thoſe confeſſors and martyrs,
Who live like S—tt—n, or who die like Chartres,
Out-cant old Eſdras, or out-drink his heir,
Out-uſure Jews, or Iriſhmen out-ſwear;
Wicked as pages, who in early years
Act ſins which Priſca's confeſſor ſcarce hears.
Ev'n thoſe I pardon, for whoſe ſinful ſake
Schoolmen new tenements in hell muſt make;
Of whoſe ſtrange crimes no canoniſt can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell.
One, one man only breeds my juſt offence;
Whom crimes gave wealth, and wealth gave impudence:
Time, that at laſt matures a clap to pox,
Whoſe gentle progreſs makes a calf an ox,
And brings all natural events to paſs,
Hath made him an attorney of an aſs.
No young divine, new-benefic'd, can be
More pert, more proud, more poſitive, than he.
What further could I wiſh the ſop to do,
But turn a wit, and ſcribble verſes too?
Pierce the ſoft labyrinth of a lady's ear
With rhymes of this per cent., and that per year?
Or court a wife, ſpread out his wily parts,
Like nets or line-twigs, for rich widows hearts;
Call himſelf barriſter to every wench,
And woo in language of the pleas and bench?
Language, which Boreas might to Auſter hold
More rough than forty Germans when they ſcold.
Curs'd be the wretch, ſo venal and ſo vain:
Paltry and proud, as drabs in Drury-lane.

'Tis such a bounty as was never known,
If Peter deigns to help you to your own:
What thanks, what praise, if Peter but supplies!
And what a solemn face, if he denies!
Grave, as when prisoners shake the head and swear
'Twas only suretiship that brought them there.
His office keeps your parchment fates entire,
He starves with cold to save them from the fire;
For you he walks the streets through rain or dust,
For not in chariots Peter puts his trust;
For you he sweats and labours at the laws,
Takes God to witness he affects your cause,
And lies to every lord in every thing,
Like a king's favourite—or like a king.
These are the talents that adorn them all,
From wicked Waters ev'n to godly **
Not more of Simony beneath black gowns,
Not more of bastardy in heirs to crowns.
In shillings and in pence at first they deal;
And steal so little, few perceive they steal;
Till, like the sea, they compass all the land,
From Scots to Wight, from Mount to Dover strand:
And when rank widows purchase luscious nights,
Or when a duke to Janssen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away;
Satan himself feels far less joy than they.
Piecemeal they win this acre first, then that,
Glean on, and gather up the whole estate.
Then strongly fencing ill-got wealth by law,
Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes, with all their glosses, are;
So vast, our new divines, we must confess,
Are fathers of the church for writing less.
But let them write for you, each rogue impairs
The deeds, and dextrously omits, ses heires:
No commentator can more slily pass
Over a learn'd, unintelligible place:
Or, in quotation, shrewd divines leave out [doubt.
Those words that would against them clear the
So Luther thought the pater-noster long,
When doom'd to say his beads and even-song;
But having cast his cowl, and left those laws,
Adds to Christ's prayer, the power and glory clause.
The lands are bought; but where are to be found
Those ancient woods, that shaded all the ground?
We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. [yore
Where are those troops of poor, that throng'd of
The good old landlord's hospitable door?
Well, I could wish, that still in lordly domes
Some beasts were kill'd, though not whole hecatombs;
That both extremes were banish'd from their walls,
Carthusian fasts, and sulsome bachanals;
And all mankind might that just mean observe,
In which none e'er could surfeit, none could starve.
These as good works, 'tis true, we all allow,
But oh! these works are not in fashion now:
Like rich old wardrobes, things extremely rare,
Extremely fine, but what no man will wear.
Thus much I've said, I trust, without offence;
Let no court sycophant pervert my sense,
Nor sly informer watch these words to draw
Within the reach of treason, or the law.

SATIRE IV.

Well, if it be my time to quit the stage,
Adieu to all the follies of the age!
I die in charity with fool and knave,
Secure of peace at least beyond the grave.
I've had my purgatory here betimes,
And paid for all my satires, all my rhymes.
The poet's hell, its tortures, fiends, and flames,
To this were trifles, toys, and empty names.
With foolish pride my heart was never fir'd,
Nor the vain itch t' admire, or be admir'd;
I hop'd for no commission from his Grace;
I bought no benefice, I begg'd no place:
Had no new verses, nor new suit to show;
Yet went to court!—the devil would have it so.
But, as the fool that in reforming days
Would go to mass in jest (as story says)
Could not but think, to pay his sins was odd,
Since 'twas no form'd design of serving God;
So was I punish'd, as if full as proud,
As prone to ill, as negligent of good,
As deep in debt, without a thought to pay,
As vain, as idle, and as false, as they
Who live at court, for going once that way!
Scarce was I enter'd, when, behold! there came
A thing which Adam had been pos'd to name;
Noah had refus'd it lodging in his ark,
Where all the race of reptiles might embark:
A verier monster, than on Afric's shore
The sun e'er got, or slimy Nilus bore,
Or Sloan or Woodward's wondrous shelves contain,
Nay, all that lying travellers can feign.
The watch would hardly let him pass at noon,
At night would swear him dropp'd out of the moon.
One, whom the mob, when next we find or make
A popish plot, shall for a Jesuit take,
And the wise justice starting from his chair
Cry, By your priesthood tell me what you are?
Such was the wight: th' apparel on his back,
Though coarse, was reverend, and though bare, was black:
The suit, if by the fashion one might guess,
Was velvet in the youth of good Queen Bess,
But mere tuff-taffety what now remain'd;
So time, that changes all things, had ordain'd!
Our sons shall see it leisurely decay,
First turn plain rash, then vanish quite away.
This thing has travell'd, and speaks language too,
And knows what's fit for every state to do;
Of whose best phrase and courtly accent join'd,
He forms one tongue, exotic and refin'd,
Talkers I've learn'd to bear; Morteux I knew,
Henley himself I've heard, and Budgel too.
The Doctor's wormwood style, the hash of tongues
A pedant makes, the storm of Gunson's lungs,
The whole artillery of the terms of war,
And (all those plagues in one) the bawling bar;
These I could bear; but not a rogue so civil,
Whose tongue will compliment you to the devil.
A tongue, that can cheat widows, cancel scores,
Make Scots speak treason, cozen subtlest whores,

With royal favourites in flattery vie,
And Oldmixon and Burnet both outlie.
He spies me out; I whisper, Gracious God!
What sin of mine could merit such a rod?
That all the shot of dulness now must be
From this thy blunderbuss discharg'd on me!
Permit (he cries) no stranger to your fame
To crave your sentiment, if ——'s your name.
What speech esteem you most? "The king's," said I.
But the best words?—O Sir, the dictionary."
You miss my aim! I mean the most acute
And perfect speaker?—"Onslow, past dispute."
But, Sir, of writers? "Swift, for closer style,
"But Hoadly for a period of a mile."
Why yes, 'tis granted, these indeed may pass:
Good common linguists, and so Panurge was;
Nay troth th' apostles (though perhaps too rough)
Had once a pretty gift of tongues enough:
Yet these were all poor gentlemen! I dare
Affirm, 'twas travel made them what they were.
Thus, others talents having nicely shown,
He came by sure transition to his own:
Till I cry'd out, You prove yourself so able,
Pity! you was not Druggerman at Babel;
For had they found a linguist half so good,
I make no question but the tower had stood.
"Obliging Sir! for courts you sure were made;
"Why then for ever bury'd in the shade?
"Spirits like you, should see and should be seen,
"The king would smile on you—at least the "queen."
Ah, gentle Sir! you courtiers so cajole us—
But Tully has it, "Nunquam minus solus:"
And as for courts, forgive me, if I say
No lessons now are taught the Spartan way:
Though in his pictures lust be full display'd,
Few are the converts Aretine has made;
And though the court show vice exceeding clear,
None should, by my advice, learn virtue there.
At this entranc'd, he lifts his hands and eyes,
Squeaks like a high stretch'd lutestring, and replies:
"Oh, 'tis the sweetest of all earthly things
"To gaze on princes, and to talk of kings!"
Then, happy man who shows the tombs! said I,
He dwells amidst the royal family;
He every day from king to king can walk,
Of all Harries, all our Edwards talk;
And get, by speaking truth of monarchs dead,
What few can of the living, ease and bread.
"Lord, Sir, a mere mechanic! strangely low,
"And coarse of phrase,—your English all are so.
"How elegant your Frenchman!" Mine, d'ye mean?
I have but one; I hope the fellow's clean,
"Oh! Sir, politely so! nay, let me die,
"Your only wearing is your paduasoy."
Not, Sir, my only, I have better still,
And this you see is but my dishabille—
Wild to get loose, his patience I provoke,
Mistake, confound, object at all he spoke.
But as coarse iron, sharpen'd, mangles more,
And itch most hurts when anger'd to a sore;
So when you plague a fool, 'tis still the curse,
You only make the matter worse and worse.

He past it o'er; affects an easy smile
At all my peevishness, and turns his style.
He asks, "What news?" I tell him of new plays,
New eunuchs, harlequins, and operas.
He hears, and as a still with simples in it,
Between each drop it gives, stays half a minute,
Loth to enrich me with too quick replies,
By little, and by little, drops his lies. [shows,
Mere household trash: of births nights, balls, and
More than ten Hollinsheds, or Halls, or Stows.
When the queen frown'd, or smil'd, he knows; and what
A subtle minister may make of that:
Who sins with whom: who got his pension rug,
Or quicken'd a reversion by a drug:
Whose place is quarter'd out, three parts in four,
And whether to a bishop, or a whore:
Who, having lost his credit, pawn'd his rent,
Is therefore fit to have a government:
Who, in the secret, deals in stocks secure,
And cheats th' unknowing widow and the poor:
Who makes a trust of charity a job,
And gets an act of parliament to rob:
Why turnpikes rise, and now no cit nor clown
Can gratis see the country, or the town:
Shortly no lad shall chuck, or lady vole,
But some excising courtier will have toll.
He tells what strumpet places sells for life,
What 'squire his lands, what citizen his wife:
At last (which proves him wiser still than all)
What lady's face is not a whited wall.
As one of Woodward's patients, sick, and sore,
I puke, I nauseate,—yet he thrusts in more:
Trims Europe's balance, tops the statesman's part,
And talks gazettes and postboys o'er by heart.
Like a big wife at sight of lothsome meat
Ready to cast, I yawn, I sigh, and sweat.
Then as a licens'd spy, whom nothing can
Silence or hurt, he libels every man;
Swears every place entail'd for years to come,
In sure succession to the day of doom:
He names the price for every office paid,
And says our wars thrive ill, because delay'd;
Nay hints, 'tis by connivance of the court,
That Spain rols on, and Dunkirk's still a port.
Not more amazement seiz'd on Circe's guests,
To see themselves fall headlong into beasts,
Than mine to find a subject stay'd and wise
Already half turn'd traitor by surprise.
I felt th' infection slide from him to me;
As in the pox, some give it to get free;
And quick to swallow me, methought I saw
One of our giant statues ope its jaw.
In that nice moment, as another Lye
Stood just a-tilt, the minister came by.
To him he flies, and bows, and bows again,
Then, close as Umbra, joins the dirty train.
Not Fannius' self more impudently near,
When half his nose is in his prince's ear.
I quak'd at heart; and, still afraid to see
All the court fill'd with stranger things than he,
Ran out as fast as one that pays his bail,
And dreads more actions, hurries from a jail.
Bear me, some God! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;

Where Contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free ſoul looks down to pity kings!
There ſober thought purſu'd th' amuſing theme,
Till fancy colour'd it, and form'd a dream.
A viſion hermits can to hell tranſport,
And forc'd ev'n me to ſee the damn'd at court.
Not Dante, dreaming all th' infernal ſtate,
Beheld ſuch ſcenes of envy, ſin, and hate.
Baſe fear becomes the guilty, not the free;
Suits tyrants, plunderers, but ſuits not me:
Shall I, the terror of this ſinful town,
Care, if a livery'd lord or ſmile or frown?
Who cannot flatter, and deteſt who can,
Tremble before a noble ſerving man?
O my fair miſtreſs, Truth! ſhall I quit thee
For huffing, braggart, puſt nobility?
Thou, who ſince yeſterday haſt roll'd o'er all
The buſy, idle blockheads of the ball,
Haſt thou, oh ſun! beheld an emptier ſort,
Than ſuch as ſwell this bladder of a court?
Now pox on thoſe who ſhow a court in wax!
It ought to bring all courtiers on their backs;
Such painted puppets! ſuch a varniſh'd race
Of hollow gewgaws, only dreſs and face!
Such waxen noſes, ſtately ſtaring things—
No wonder ſome folks bow, and think them kings.

See! where the Britiſh youth, engag'd no more,
At Fig's at White's, with felons, or a whore,
Pay their laſt duty to the court, and come
All freſh and fragrant, to the drawing-room;
In hues as gay, and odours as divine,
As the fair fields they ſold to look ſo fine.
"That's velvet for a king!" the flatterer ſwears;
'Tis true, for ten days hence 'twill be King Lear's.
Our court may juſtly to our ſtage give rules,
That helps it both to fool's-coats and to fools.
And why not players ſtrut in courtiers clothes?
For theſe are actors too, as well as thoſe:
Wants reach all ſtates: they beg but better dreſt,
And all is ſplendid poverty at beſt.

Painted for ſight, and eſſenc'd for the ſmell,
Like frigates fraught with ſpice and cochineal,
Sail in the ladies: how each pirate eyes
So weak a veſſel, and ſo rich a prize!
Top-gallant he, and ſhe in all her trim,
He boarding her, ſhe ſtriking ſail to him:
"Dear Counteſs! you have charms all hearts to hit!"
And "Sweet Sir Fopling! you have ſo much wit."
Such wits and beauties are not prais'd for nought,
For both the beauty and the wit are bought.

'Twould burſt even Heraclitus with the ſpleen,
To ſee thoſe antics, Fopling and Courtin:
The preſence ſeems, with things ſo richly odd,
The moſque of Mahound, or ſome queer Pa-god.
See them ſurvey their limbs by Durer's rules,
Of all beau-kind the beſt proportion'd fools?
Adjuſt their clothes, and to confeſſion draw
Thoſe venial ſins, an atom, or a ſtraw:
But oh! what terrors muſt diſtract the ſoul
Convicted of that mortal crime, a hole:
Or ſhould one pound of powder leſs beſpread
Thoſe monkey tails that wag behind their head!
Thus finiſh'd, and corrected to a hair,
They march, to prate their hour before the fair.
So firſt to preach a white-glov'd chaplain goes,
With band of lily, and with cheek of roſe,
Sweeter than Sharon, in immac'late trim,
Neatneſs itſelf impertinent in him.
Let but the ladies ſmile, and they are bleſt:
Prodigious! how the things proteſt, proteſt!
Peace, fools, or Gonſon will for Papiſts ſeize you,
If once he catch you at your Jeſu! Jeſu

Nature made every fop to plague his brother,
Juſt as one beauty mortifies another.
But here's the captain that will plague them both,
Whoſe air cries arm! whoſe very looks an oath:
The captain's honeſt, Sirs, and that's enough,
Though his ſoul's bullet, and his body buff.
He ſpits fore-right; his haughty cheſt before,
Like battering rams, beats open every door:
And with a face as red, and as awry,
As Herod's hangdogs in old tapeſtry,
Scarecrow to boys, the breeding woman's curſe,
Has yet a ſtrange ambition to look worſe:
Confounds the civil, keeps the rude in awe,
Jeſts like a licens'd fool, commands like law.

Frighted, I quit the room, but leave it ſo
As men from jails to execution go;
For hung with deadly ſins I ſee the wall,
And lin'd with giants deadlier than them all:
Each man an aſkapart, of ſtrength to toſs
For quoits, both Temple-bar and Charing-croſs.
Scar'd at the grizly forms, I ſweat, I fly,
And ſhake all o'er, like a diſcover'd ſpy.

Courts are too much for wits ſo weak as mine:
Charge them with Heaven's artillery, bold divine!
From ſuch alone the great rebukes endure,
Whoſe ſatire's ſacred, and whoſe rage ſecure:
'Tis mine to waſh a few light ſtains; but theirs
To deluge ſin, and drown a court in tears.
Howe'er, what's now Apocrypha, my wit,
In time to come, may paſs for holy writ.

EPILOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

IN TWO DIALOGUES.

WRITTEN IN 1738.

DIALOGUE I.

Fr. Not twice a twelvemonth you appear in print,
And when it comes, the court see nothing in't.
You grow correct, that once with rapture writ,
And are, besides, too moral for a wit,
Decay of parts, alas! we all must feel—
Why now, this moment, don't I see you steal!
'Tis all from Horace; Horace long before ye
Said. "Tories call'd him Whig, and Whigs a Tory;
And taught his Romans, in much better metre,
"To laugh at fools who put their trust in Peter."
But Horace, Sir, was delicate, was nice;
Bubo observes, he lash'd no sort of vice:
Horace would say, Sir Billy serv'd the crown,
Blunt could do business, Higgins knew the town;
In Sappho touch the failings of the sex,
In reverend bishops note some small neglects,
And own the Spaniard did a waggish thing,
Who cropt our ears, and sent them to the King.
His sly, polite, insinuating style
Could please at court, and make Augustus smile:
An artful manager, that crept between
His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen.
But 'faith your very friends will soon be sore;
Patriots there are, who wish you'd jest no more—
And where's the glory? 'twill be only thought
The great man never offer'd you a groat.
Go see Sir Robert—

P. See Sir Robert!—hum—
And never laugh—for all my life to come?
Seen him I have, but in his happier hour
Of social pleasure, ill-exchang'd for power;
Seen him, uncumber'd with a venal tribe,
Smile without art, and win without a bribe.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 2, in the MS.

You don't, I hope, pretend to quit the trade,
Because you think your reputation made:
Like good Sir Paul, of whom so much was said,
That when his name was up, he lay a-bed.
Come, come, refresh us with a livelier song,
Or, like Sir Paul, you'll lie a bed too long.
P. Sir, what I write, should be correctly writ.
F. Correct! 'tis what no genius can admit.
Besides, you grow too moral for a wit.

Would he oblige me! let me only find,
He does not think me what he thinks mankind.
Come, come, at all I laugh he laughs, no doubt;
The only difference is, I dare laugh out.

F. Why yes: with scripture still you may be free;
A horse-laugh, if you please, at honesty;
A joke on Jekyll, or some odd old Whig,
Who never chang'd his principle, or wig;
A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all Lord Chamberlains allow the stage:
These nothing hurts; they keep their fashion still,
And wear their strange old virtues, as they will.
If any ask you, "Who's the man, so near
His prince, that writes in verse, and has his ear?"
Why answer, Lyttleton; and I'll engage
The worthy youth shall ne'er be in a rage:
But were his verses vile, his whisper base,
You'd quickly find him in Lord Fanny's case.
Sejanus, Wolsey, hurt not honest Fleury,
But well may put some statesmen in a fury.
Laugh then at any, but at fools or foes;
These you but anger, and you mend not those.
Laugh at your friends, and if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more.
To vice and folly to confine the jest,
Sets half the world, God knows, against the rest;
Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At sense and virtue balance all again
Judicious wits spread wide the ridicule,
And charitably comfort knave and fool.

P. Dear Sir, forgive the prejudice of youth:
Adieu distinction, satire, warmth, and truth!
Come, harmless characters that no one hit;
Come, Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit!
The honey dropping from Favonio's tongue,
The flowers of Bubo, and the flow of Young!
The gracious dew of pulpit eloquence,
And all the well-whipp'd cream of courtly sense,
That first was H—vy's, F—'s next, and then,
The S—te's, and then H—vy's once again.
O come, that easy Ciceronian style,
So Latin, yet so English all the while,
As, though the pride of Middleton and Bland,
All boys may read, and girls may understand!
Then might I sing, without the least offence,
And all I sung should be the nation's sense;
Or teach the melancholy muse to mourn,
Hang the sad verse on Carolina's urn,

And hail her paſſage to the realms of reſt,
All part's perform'd, and all her children bleſt!
So—ſatire is no more—I feel it die—
No gazetteer more innocent than I—
And let, a God's name, every fool and knave
Be grac'd through life, and flatter'd in his grave.
F. Why ſo? if ſatire knows its time and place,
You ſtill may laſh the greateſt—in diſgrace:
For merit will by turns forſake them all;
Would you know when? exactly when they fall.
But let all ſatire in all changes ſpare
Immortal S—k, and grave De——re.
Silent and ſoft, as ſaints remov'd to heaven,
All ties diſſolv'd, and every ſin forgiven,
Theſe may ſome gentle miniſterial Wing
Receive, and place for ever near a king! [port,
There, where no paſſion, pride, or ſhame tranſ-
Lull'd with the ſweet Nepenthe of a court;
There, where no father's, brother's, friend's diſ-
grace [place:
Once break their reſt, or ſtir them from their
But paſt the ſenſe of human miſeries,
All tears are wip'd for ever from all eyes;
No cheek is known to bluſh, no heart to throb,
Save when they loſe a queſtion, or a job.
P. Good Heaven forbid, that I ſhould blaſt their glory,
Who know how like Whig Miniſters to Tory,
And when three ſovereign's dy'd, could ſcarce be vext,
Conſidering what a gracious prince was next.
Have I, in ſilent wonder ſeen ſuch things
As pride in ſlaves, and avarice in kings;
And at a peer, or peereſs, ſhall I fret,
Who ſtarves a ſiſter, or forſwears a debt?
Virtue, I grant you, is an empty boaſt;
But ſhall the dignity of vice be loſt?
Ye gods! ſhall Cibber's ſon, without rebuke,
Swear like a lord, or Rich outwhore a duke?
A favourite's porter with his maſter vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie? [ſkill?
Shall Ward draw contracts with a ſtateſmen's
Or Japhet pocket, like his Grace, a will?
Is it for Bond, or Peter, (paltry things?)
To pay their debts, or keep their faith, like kings?
If Blount diſpatch'd himſelf, he play'd the man;
And ſo mayſt thou, illuſtrious Paſſeran!
But ſhall a printer, weary of his life, [wife?
Learn, from their books, to hang himſelf and
This, this, my friend, I cannot, muſt not bear;
Vice thus abus'd, demands a nation's care:
This calls the church to deprecate our ſin,
And hurls the thunder of the laws on gin.
Let modeſt Foſter, if he will, excell
Ten metropolitans in preaching well;
A ſimple Quaker, or a Quaker's wife,
Outdo Landaffe in doctrine,—yea in life:
Let humble Allen, with an aukward ſhame,
Do good by ſtealth, and bluſh to find it fame;
Virtue may chooſe the high or low degree,
'Tis juſt alike to virtue, and to me;
Dwell in a monk, or light upon a king,
She's ſtill the ſame belov'd, contented thing.
Vice is undone, if ſhe forgets her birth,
And ſtoops from angels to the dregs of earth:
But 'tis the fall degrades her to a whore;
Let greatneſs own her, and ſhe's mean no more,
Her birth, her beauty, crowds and courts confeſs,
Chaſte matrons praiſe her, and grave biſhops bleſs;
In golden chains the willing world ſhe draws,
And hers the goſpel is, and hers the laws;
Mounts the tribunal, lifts her ſcarlet head,
And ſees pale virtue carted in her ſtead.
Lo! at the wheels of her triumphal car,
Old England's genius, rough with many a ſcar,
Dragg'd in the duſt! his arms hang idly round,
His flag inverted trails along the ground!
Our youth, all livery'd o'er with foreign gold,
Before her dance: behind her, crawl the old!
See thronging millions to the pagod run,
And offer country, parent, wife, or ſon! [claim,
Hear her black trumpet through the land pro-
That Not to be corrupted is the ſhame.
In ſoldier, churchman, patriot, man in power,
'Tis avarice all, ambition is no more!
See, all our nobles begging to be ſlaves!
See, all our fools aſpiring to be knaves!
The wit of cheats, the courage of a whore,
Are what ten thouſand envy and adore:
All, all look up, with reverential awe,
At crimes that 'ſcape, or triumph o'er the law:
While truth, worth, wiſdom, daily they decry—
"Nothing is ſacred now but villany."
Yet may this verſe (if ſuch a verſe remain)
Show there was one who held it in diſdain.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 112, in ſome editions:
Who ſtarves a mother—

DIALOGUE II.

Fr. 'Tis all a libel—Paxton (Sir) will ſay.
P. Not yet, my friend! to-morrow 'faith it may;
And for that very cauſe I print to-day.
How ſhould I fret to mangle every line,
In reverence to the ſins of thirty-nine!
Vice with ſuch giant-ſtrides comes on amain,
Invention ſtrives to be before in vain;
Feign what I will, and paint it e'er ſo ſtrong,
Some riſing genius ſins up to my ſong.
F. Yet none but you by name the guilty laſh;
Even Guthry ſaves half Newgate by a daſh.
Spare then the perſon, and expoſe the vice.
P. How, Sir! not damn the ſharper, but the dice?
Come on then, ſatire! general, unconfin'd,
Spread thy broad wing, and ſouſe on all the kind.
Ye ſtateſmen, prieſts, of one religion all!
Ye tradeſmen, vile in army, court, or hall!
Ye reverend Atheiſts. F. Scandal! name them, Who?
P. Why that's the thing you bid me not to do.
Who ſtarv'd a ſiſter, who foreſwore a debt,
I never nam'd; the town's inquiring yet,
The poiſoning dame—F. You mean—P. I don't.
F. You do.
P. See, now I keep the ſecret, and not you!

The bribing ſtateſman—F. Hold, too high you go.
P. The brib'd elector—F. There you ſtoop too low.
P. I fain would pleaſe you, if I knew with what;
Tell me, which knave is lawful game, which not?
Muſt great offenders, once eſcap'd the crown,
Like royal harts, be never more run down?
Admit your law to ſpare the knight requires,
As beaſts of nature may we hunt the ſquires?
Suppoſe I cenſure—you know what I mean—
To ſave a biſhop, may I name a dean?
F. A dean, Sir? no; his fortune is not made,
You hurt a man that's riſing in the trade.
P. If not the tradeſman who ſet up to-day,
Much leſs the 'prentice who to-morrow may.
Down, down, proud ſatire! though a realm be ſpoil'd,
Arraign no mightier thief than wretched Wild;
Or, if a court or country's made a job,
Go drench a pickpocket, and join the mob.
But, Sir, I beg you, (for the love of vice!)
The matter's weighty, pray conſider twice;
Have you leſs pity for the needy cheat,
The poor and friendleſs villain, than the great?
Alas! the ſmall diſcredit of a bribe
Scarce hurts the lawyer, but undoes the ſcribe.
Then better ſure it charity becomes
To tax directors, who (thank God) have plums;
Still better, miniſters; or, if the thing
May pinch ev'n there—why lay it on a king.
F. Stop! ſtop!
P. Muſt ſatire, then, nor riſe nor fall?
Speak out, and bid me blame no rogues at all.
F. Yes, ſtrike that Wild, I'll juſtify the blow.
P. Strike? why the man was hang'd ten years ago:
Who now that obſolete example fears?
Ev'n Peter trembles only for his ears.
F. What, always Peter? Peter thinks you mad,
You make men deſperate, if they once are bad:
Elſe might he take to virtue ſome years hence—
P. As S—k, if he lives, will love the prince.
F. Strange ſpleen to S—k!
P. Do I wrong the man?
God knows, I praiſe a courtier where I can.
When I confeſs, there is who feels for fame,
And melts to goodneſs, need I Scarborow name?
Pleas'd let me own, in Eſher's peaceful grove
(Where Kent and nature vie for Pelham's love)
The ſcene, the maſter, opening to my view,
I ſit and dream I ſee my craggs anew!
Ev'n in a biſhop I can ſpy deſert:
Secker is decent; Rundel has a heart;
Manners with candour are to Benſon given;
To Berkley, every virtue under heaven.
But does the court a worthy man remove?
That inſtant, I declare, he has my love:
I ſhun his zenith, court his mild decline;
Thus Sommers once, and Halifax, were mine.
Oft, in the clear, ſtill mirror of retreat,
I ſtudy'd Shrewſbury, the wiſe and great;
Carleton's calm ſenſe, and Stanhope's noble flame,
Compar'd, and knew their generous end the ſame:
How pleaſing Atterbury's ſofter hour!
How ſhin'd the ſoul, unconquer'd in the tower!
How can I Pultney, Cheſterfield forget,
While Roman ſpirit charms, and Attic wit:
Argyll, the ſtate's whole thunder born to wield,
And ſhake alike the ſenate and the field:
Or Wyndham, juſt to freedom and the throne,
The maſter of our paſſions, and his own?
Names, which I long have lov'd, nor lov'd in vain,
Rank'd with their friends, not number'd with their train;
And if yet higher the proud liſt ſhould end,
Still let me ſay! No ſollower, but a friend.
Yet think not, friendſhip only prompts my lays:
I follow virtue; where ſhe ſhines, I praiſe;
Point ſhe to Prieſt or Elder, Whig or Tory,
Or round a Quaker's beaver caſt a glory.
I never (to my ſorrow I declare)
Din'd with the Man of Roſs, or my Lord Mayor.
Some, in their choice of friends (nay, look not grave)
Have ſtill a ſecret bias to a knave:
To find an honeſt man, I beat about;
And love him, court him, praiſe him, in or out.
F. Then why ſo few commended?
P. Not ſo fierce;
Find you the virtue, and I'll find the verſe.
But random praiſe—the taſk can ne'er be done:
Each mother aſks it for her booby ſon,
Each widow aſks it for the beſt of men,
For him ſhe weeps, for him ſhe weds again.
Praiſe cannot ſtoop, like ſatire, to the ground:
The number may be hang'd, but not be crown'd.
Enough for half the greateſt of theſe days,
To 'ſcape my cenſure, not expect my praiſe.
Are they not rich? what more can they pretend?
Dare they to hope a poet for their friend?
What Richelieu wanted, Louis ſcarce could gain,
And what young Ammon wiſh'd, but wiſh'd in vain.
No power the muſe's friendſhip can command;
No power, when virtue claims it, can withſtand:
To Cato, Virgil paid one honeſt line;
O let my country's friend illumine mine! [no ſin,
—What are you thinking? F. Faith the thought's
I think your friends are out, and would be in.
P. If merely to come in, Sir, they go out,
The way they take is ſtrangely round about.
F. They too may be corrupted, you'll allow?
P. I only call thoſe knaves who are ſo now.
Is that too little? Come then, I'll comply—
Spirit of Arnall! aid me while I lie.
Cobham's a coward, Polwarth is a ſlave,
And Lyttelton a dark, deſigning knave;
St. John has ever been a mighty fool——
But let me add, Sir Robert's mighty dull,
Has never made a friend in private life,
And was, beſides, a tyrant to his wife.
But pray, when others praiſe him; do I blame?
Call Verres, Wolſey, any odious name?
Why rail they then, if but a wreath of mine,
O all-accompliſh'd St. John! deck thy ſhrine,
What? ſhall each ſpur-gall'd hackney of the day,
When Paxton gives him double pots and pay,
Or each new-penſion'd ſycophant, pretend
To break my windows if I treat a friend;
Then wiſely plead, to me they meant no hurt,
But 'twas my gueſt at whom they threw the dir

Sure, if I spare the minister, no rules
Of honour bind me, not to maul his tools;
Sure, if they cannot cut, it may be said
His saws are toothless, and his hatchets lead.
It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay:
But when he heard th' affront the fellow gave,
Knew one a man of honour, one a knave,
The prudent general turn'd it to a jest;
And begg'd, he'd take the pains to kick the rest:
Which not at present having time to do—
F. Hold, Sir! for God's sake, where's th' affront to you?
Against your worship when had S—k writ?
Ur P—ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit?
Or grant the bard whose distich all commend
[In power a servant, out of power a friend]
To W—le guilty of some venial sin;
What's that to you who ne'er was out nor in?
The priest whose flattery bedropt the crown,
How hurt he you? he only stain'd the gown.
And how did, pray, the florid youth offend,
Whose speech you took, and gave it to a friend?
P. Faith it imports not much from whom it came;
Whoever borrow'd, could not be to blame,
Since the whole house did afterwards the same.
Let courtly wits to wits afford supply,
As hog to hog in huts of Westphaly;
If one, through nature's bounty or his lord's,
Has what the frugal dirty soil affords,
From him the next receives it, thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in;
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind;
From tail to mouth, they feed and they carouse:
The last full fairly gives it to the house.
F. This filthy simile, this beastly line
Quite turns my stomach—
P. So does flattery mine:
And all your courtly civet-cats can vent,
Perfume to you, to me is excrement:
But hear my father—Japhet, 'tis agreed,
Writ not, and Chartres scarce could write or read,
In all the courts of Pindus guiltless quite;
But pens can forge, my friend, that cannot write;
And must no egg in Japhet's face be thrown,
Because the deed he forg'd was not my own? 190
Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man! he has been fairly in?
No zealous pastor blame a failing spouse,
Without a staring reason on his brows?
And each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not on man, but God?
Ask you what provocation I have had?
The strong antipathy of good to bad.
When truth or virtue an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours. 200
Mine, as a foe profess'd to false pretence,
Who think a coxcomb's honour like his sense;
Mine, as a friend to every worthy mind;
And mine as man, who feel for all mankind.
F. You're strangely proud.
P. So proud, I am no slave:
So impudent, I own myself no knave:
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave.
Yes, I am proud; I must be proud to see
Men not afraid of God, afraid of me:
Safe from the bar, the pulpit, and the throne, 210
Yet touch'd and sham'd by ridicule alone.
O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence,
Sole dread of folly, vice, and insolence!
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd,
The muse may give thee, but the gods must guide:
Reverend I touch thee! but with honest zeal;
To rouze the watchmen of the public weal,
To virtue's work provoke the tardy hall,
And goad the prelate slumbering in his stall.
Ye tinsel insects! whom a court maintains, 220
That counts your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eye of day!
The muse's wing shall brush you all away:
All his grace preaches, all his lordship sings,
All that makes saints of queens, and gods of kings.
All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the press,
Like the last gazette, or the last address.
When black ambition stains a public cause,
A monarch's sword when mad vain-glory draws,
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar, 230
Not Boileau turn the feather to a star.
Not so, when, diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity.
There, other trophies deck the truly brave,
Than such as Austis casts into the grave;
Far other stars than * and * * wear,
And may descend to Mordington from Stair;
(Such as on Houghs unsully'd mitre shine, 240
Or beam, good Digby, from a heart like thine)
Let envy howl, while heaven's whole chorus sings,
And bark at honour not conferr'd by kings;
Let flattery sickening see the incense rise,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies:
Truth guards the poet, sanctifies the line,
And makes immortal verse as mean as mine.
Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law;
Here, last of Britons! let your names be read;
Are none, none living? let me praise the dead,
And for that cause which made your fathers shine,
Fall by the votes of their degenerate line.
F. Alas, alas! pray end what you began,
And write next winter more Essays on Man.

VARIATIONS.

Ver, 185, in the MS.

I grant it, Sir; and further 'tis agreed,
Japhet writ not, and Chartres scarce could read.

After ver. 227, in the MS.

Where's now the star that lighted Charles to rise?
—With that which follow'd Julius to the skies.
Angels, that watch'd the Royal Oak so well,
How chanc'd ye nod, when luckless Sorel fell?
Hence, lying miracles! reduc'd so low
As to the regal touch and papal toe;
Hence haughty Edgar's title to the Main,
Britain's to France, and thine to India, Spain!

IMITATIONS OF HORACE.

EPISTLE VII.

IMITATED IN THE MANNER OF DR. SWIFT.

'Tis true, my lord, I gave my word,
I would be with you, June the third;
Chang'd it to Auguſt, and (in ſhort)
Have kept it—as you do at court.
You humour me when I am ſick,
Why not when I am ſplenetic?
In town, what objects could I meet?
The ſhops ſhut up in every ſtreet,
And funerals blackening all the doors,
And yet more melancholy whores:
And what a duſt in every place!
And a thin court that wants your face,
And fevers raging up and down,
And W* and H both in town!
"The dog-days are no more the caſe."
'Tis true, but winter comes apace:
Then ſouthward let your bard retire,
Hold out ſome months 'twixt ſun and fire,
And you ſhall ſee, the firſt warm weather,
Me and the butterflies together.
My lord, your favours well I know;
'Tis with diſtinction you beſtow;
And not to every one that comes,
Juſt as a Scotſman doles his plums.
"Pray take them, Sir—Enough's a feaſt:
"Eat ſome and pocket up the reſt"——
What, rob your boys? thoſe pretty rogues!
"No, Sir, you'll leave them to the hogs."
Thus fools with compliments beſiege ye,
Contriving never to oblige ye.
Scatter your favours on a fop,
Ingratitude's the certain crop;
And 'tis but juſt, I'll tell you wherefore,
You give the things you never care for.
A wiſe man always is or ſhould
Be mighty ready to do good;
But makes a difference in his thought
Betwixt a guinea and a groat.
Now this I'll ſay, you'll find in me
A ſafe companion and a free;
But if you'd have me always near——
A word, pray, in your honour's ear.
I hope it is your reſolution
To give me back my conſtitution!
The ſprightly wit, the lively eye,
Th' engaging ſmile, the gaiety,
That laugh'd down many a ſummer ſun,
And kept you up ſo oft till one:
And all that voluntary vein,
As when Belinda rais'd my ſtrain.
A weazel once made ſhift to ſlink
In at a corn-loft through a chink;
But having amply ſtuff'd his ſkin,
Could not get out as he got in;
Which one belonging to the houſe
('Twas not a man, it was a mouſe)
Obſerving, cry'd, "You 'ſcape not ſo,
"Lean as you came, Sir, you muſt go."
Sir, you may ſpare your application,
I'm no ſuch beaſt, nor his relation;
Nor one that temperance advance,
Cramm'd to the throat with Ortolans:
Extremely ready to reſign
All that may make me none of mine.
South-Sea ſubſcriptions take who pleaſe,
Leave me but liberty and eaſe.
'Twas what I ſaid to Craggs and Child,
Who prais'd my modeſty, and ſmil'd.
Give me, I cry'd, (enough for me)
My bread, and independency!
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd——juſt as you ſee I do;
Near fifty, and without a wife,
I truſt that ſinking fund, my life.
Can I retrench? Yes, mighty well,
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little houſe, with trees a-row,
And, like its maſter, very low.
There dy'd my father, no man's debtor,
And there I'll die, nor worſe nor better.
To ſet this matter full before ye,
Our old friend Swift will tell his ſtory.
"Harley, the nation's great ſupport—"
But you may read it, I ſtop ſhort.

THE LATTER PART OF SATIRE VI*.

O charming noons! and nights divine!
Or when I ſup, or when I dine,
My friends above, my folks below,
Chatting and laughing all-a-row,
The beans and bacon ſet before 'em,
The grace-cup ſerv'd with all decorum:
Each willing to be pleas'd, and pleaſe,
And even the very dogs at eaſe!
Here no man prates of idle things,
How this or that Italian ſings,
A neighbour's madneſs, or his ſpouſe's,
Or what's in either of the houſes:
But ſomething much more our concern,
And quite a ſcandal not to learn:
Which is the happier, or the wiſer,
A man of merit, or a miſer?
Whether we ought to chooſe our friends,
For their own worth, or our own ends?
What good, or better, we may call,
And what, the very beſt of all?
Our friend Dan Prior told (you know)
A tale extremely "à propos:"
Name a town life, and in a trice
He had a ſtory of two mice.
Once on a time (ſo runs the fable)
A country mouſe, right hoſpitable,
Receiv'd a town mouſe at his board,
Juſt as a farmer might a lord.
A frugal mouſe, upon the whole,
Yet lov'd his friend, and had a ſoul,
Knew what was handſome, and would do't,
On juſt occaſion, "coûte qui coûte."
He brought him bacon (nothing lean;)
Pudding, that might have pleas'd a dean;
Cheeſe, ſuch as men in Suffolk make,
But wiſh'd it Stilton for his ſake;
Yet, to his gueſt though no way ſparing,
He eat himſelf the rind and paring.
Our courtier ſcarce could touch a bit,
But ſhow'd his breeding and his wit;
He did his beſt to ſeem to eat,
And cry'd, "I vow you're mighty neat.
"But lord, my friend, this ſavage ſcene!
"For God's ſake, come, and live with men:
"Conſider mice, like men, muſt die,
"Both ſmall and great, both you and I:
"Then ſpend your life in joy and ſport,
"(This doctrine, friend, I learn'd at court.")
The verieſt hermit in the nation
May yield, God knows, to ſtrong temptation.
Away they came, through thick and thin,
To a tall houſe near Lincoln's-Inn:
('Twas on the night of a debate,
When all their lordſhips had ſat late).
Behold the place, where if a poet
Shin'd in deſcription, he might ſhow it;
Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,
And tips with the ſilver all the walls;
Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Groteſco roofs, and ſtucco floors:

But let it (in a word) be ſaid,
The moon was up, and men a-bed,
The napkin's white, the carpet red:
The gueſts withdrawn had left the treat,
And down the mice ſat, "tête à tête."
Our courtier walks from diſh to diſh,
Taſtes for his friend of fowl and fiſh;
Tells all their names, lays down the law,
"Que ça eſt bon! Ah goûtez ça!
"That jelly's rich, this malmſey healing,
"Pray dip your whiſkers and your tail in."
Was ever ſuch a happy ſwain?
He ſtuffs and ſwills, and ſtuffs again.
"I'm quite aſham'd—'tis mighty rude
"To eat ſo much—but all's ſo good.
"I have a thouſand thanks to give—
"My lord alone knows how to live."
No ſooner ſaid, but from the hall
Ruſh chaplain, butler, dogs and all:
"A rat, a rat! clap to the door"—
The cat comes bouncing on the floor.
O for the heart of Homer's mice,
Or gods to ſave them in a trice!
(It was by providence they think,
For your damn'd ſtucco has no chink).
"An't pleaſe your honour, quoth the peaſant,
"This ſame deſert is not ſo pleaſant:
"Give me again my hollow tree,
"A cruſt of bread, and liberty!"

See the firſt part in Swift's Poems.

BOOK IV. ODE I.

TO VENUS.

AGAIN? new tumults in my breaſt?
Ah ſpare me, Venus! let me, let me reſt!
I am not now, alas! the man
As in the gentle reign of my Queen Anne.
Ah, ſound no more thy ſoft alarms,
Nor circle ſober fifty with thy charms!
Mother too fierce of dear deſires!
Turn, turn to willing hearts your wanton fires.
To number five direct your doves,
There ſpread round Murray all your blooming loves;
Noble and young, who ſtrikes the heart
With every ſprightly, every decent part;
Equal, the injur'd to defend,
To charm the miſtreſs, or to fix the friend.
He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall ſtretch thy conqueſts over half the kind:
To him each rival ſhall ſubmit,
Make but his riches equal to his wit.
Then ſhall thy form the marble grace,
(Thy Grecian form) and Chloe lend the face:
His houſe, emboſom'd in the grove,
Sacred to ſocial life and ſocial love,
Shall glitter o'er the pendent green,
Where Thames reflects the viſionary ſcene:
Thither the ſilver-ſounding lyres
Shall call the ſmiling loves, and young deſires;
There, every grace and muſe ſhall throng,
Exalt the dance, or animate the ſong;

There youths and nymphs in conſort gay,
  Shall hail the riſing, cloſe the parting day.
With me, alas! thoſe joys are o'er;
  For me the vernal garlands bloom no more.
Adieu! fond hope of mutual fire,
  The ſtill-believing, ſtill renew'd deſire;
Adieu! the heart-expanding bowl,
  And all the kind deceivers of the ſoul!
But why? ah tell me, ah too dear!
  Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear?
Why words ſo flowing, thoughts ſo free,
  Stop, or turn nonſenſe, at one glance of thee?
Thee, dreſs'd in fancy's airy beam,
  Abſent I follow through th' extended dream;
Now, now I ceaſe, I claſp thy charms,
  And now you burſt (ah cruel!) from my arms;
And ſwiftly ſhoot along the Mall,
  Or ſoftly glide by the canal,
Now ſhown by Cynthia's ſilver ray,
  And now on rolling waters ſnatch'd away.

PART OF THE NINTH ODE OF THE FOURTH BOOK.

A FRAGMENT.

Lest you ſhould think that verſe ſhall die,
  Which ſounds the ſilver Thames along,
Taught on the wings of truth to fly
  Above the reach of vulgar ſong;

Though daring Milton ſits ſublime,
  In Spenſer native muſes play;
Nor yet ſhall Waller yield to mine,
  Nor penſive Cowley's moral lay—

Sages and chiefs long ſince had birth
  Ere Cæſar was, or Newton nam'd;
Then rais'd new empires o'er the earth,
  And thoſe, new heavens and ſyſtems fram'd.

Vain was the chief's, the ſage's pride!
  They had no poet, and they died:
In vain they ſchem'd, in vain they bled!
  They had no poet, and are dead.

MISCELLANIES.

On receiving from the Right Honourable

THE LADY FRANCES SHIRLEY,

A STANDISH AND TWO PENS.

YES, I beheld th' Athenian queen
Deſcend in all her ſober charms;
" And take (ſhe ſaid, and ſmil'd ſerene)
" Take at this hand celeſtial arms.

" Secure the radiant weapons wield;
" This golden lance ſhall guard deſert,
" And if a vice dares keep the field,
" This ſteel ſhall ſtab it to the heart."

Aw'd, on my bended knees I fell,
Receiv'd the weapons of the ſky;
And dipp'd them in the ſable well,
The ſount of ſame or infamy.

" What well? what weapon? (Flavia cries)
" A ſtandiſh, ſteel and golden pen!
" It came from Bertrand's, not the ſkies;
" I gave it you to write again.

" But, friend, take heed whom you attack;
" You'll bring a houſe (I mean of peers)
" Red, blue, and green, nay white and black,
" L——— and all about your ears.

" You'd write as ſmooth again on glaſs,
" And run, on ivory, ſo glib,
" As not to ſtick at fool or aſs,
" Nor ſtop at flattery or fib.

" Athenian queen! and ſober charms!
" I tell you, fool, there's nothing in't:
" 'Tis Venus, Venus gives theſe arms;
" In Dryden's Virgil ſee the print.

" Come, if you'll be a quiet ſoul,
" That dares tell neither truth nor lies,
" I'll liſt you in the harmleſs roll
" Of thoſe that ſing of theſe poor eyes."

EPISTLE

TO

ROBERT EARL OF OXFORD,

AND

EARL MORTIMER.

SUCH were the notes thy once-lov'd poet ſung,
Till death untimely ſtopp'd his tuneful tongue.
Oh, juſt beheld, and loſt: admir'd, and mourn'd!
With ſofteſt manners, gentleſt arts adorn'd!
Bleſt in each ſcience, bleſt in every ſtrain!
Dear to the muſe! to Harley dear—in vain!
For him, thou oft haſt bid the world attend,
Fond to forget the ſtateſman in the friend;
For Swift and him, deſpis'd the farce of ſtate,
The ſober follies of the wiſe and great;
Dextrous, the craving, fawning crowd to quit,
And pleas'd to 'ſcape from flattery to wit.
Abſent or dead, ſtill let a friend be dear,
(A ſigh the abſent claims, the dead a tear)
Recal thoſe nights that cloſ'd thy toilſome days,
Still hear thy Parnell in his living lays,
Who, careleſs now of intereſt, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meaneſt what we greateſt call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall.
And ſure, if aught below the ſeats divine
Can touch immortals, 'tis a ſoul like thine:
A ſoul ſupreme, in each hard inſtance try'd,
Above all pain, and paſſion, and all pride,
The rage of power, the blaſt of public breath,
The luſt of lucre, and the dread of death.
In vain to deſerts thy retreat is made;
The muſe attends thee to thy ſilent ſhade:
'Tis her's, the brave man's lateſt ſteps to trace,
Re-judge his acts, and dignify diſgrace.
When intereſt calls off all her ſneaking train,
And all th' oblig'd defert, and all the vain;
She waits or to the ſcaffold, or the cell,
When the laſt lingering friend has bid farewell.
Ev'n now, ſhe ſhades thy evening-walk with bays
(No hireling ſhe, no proſtitute to praiſe),

Ev'n now, obſervant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm ſun-ſet of thy various day,
Through fortune's cloud one truly great can ſee,
Nor fears to tell, that Mortimer is he.

EPISTLE

TO JAMES CRAGGS, ESQ.

Secretary of State in the Year 1720.

A soul as full of worth, as void of pride,
Which nothing ſeeks to ſhow, or needs to hide;
Which nor to guilt, nor fear, its caution owes,
And boaſts a warmth that from no paſſion flows:
A face untaught to feign; a judging eye,
That darts ſevere upon a riſing lie,
And ſtrikes a bluſh through frontleſs flattery:
All this thou wert; and being this before,
Know, kings and fortune cannot make thee more.
Then ſcorn to gain a friend by ſervile ways,
Nor wiſh to loſe a foe theſe virtues raiſe;
But candid, free, ſincere, as you began,
Proceed—a miniſter, but ſtill a man.
Be not (exalted to whate'er degree)
Aſham'd of any friend, not ev'n of me:
The patriot's plain, but untrod path purſue;
If not, 'tis I muſt be aſham'd of you.

EPISTLE

TO MR. JERVAS,

With Mr. Dryden's Tranſlation of Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

[This epiſtle, and the two following, were written ſome years before the reſt, and originally printed in 1717.]

This verſe be thine, my friend, nor thou refuſe
This, from no venal or ungrateful muſe.
Whether thy hand ſtrike out ſome free deſign,
Where life awakes, and dawns at every line;
Or blend in beauteous tints the colour'd maſs,
And from the canvaſs call the mimic face:
Read theſe inſtructive leaves, in which conſpire
Freſnoy's cloſe art, and Dryden's native fire:
And reading wiſh, like theirs, our fate and fame,
So mix'd our ſtudies, and ſo join'd our name:
Like them to ſhine through long ſucceeding age,
So juſt thy ſkill, ſo regular my rage.
Smit with the love of ſiſter arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame;
Like friendly colours found them both unite,
And each from each contract new ſtrength and light.
How oft in pleaſing taſks we wear the day,
While ſummer-ſuns roll unperceiv'd away!
How oft our ſlowly-growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art!
How oft review; each finding like a friend
Something to blame, and ſomething to commend?
What flattering ſcenes our wandering fancy wrought,
Rome's pompous glories riſing to our thought!
Together o'er the Alps methinks we fly,
Fir'd with ideas of fair Italy.
With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inſpiring dreams at Maro's urn:
With thee repoſe, where Tully once was laid,
Or ſeek ſome ruin's formidable ſhade:
While fancy brings the vaniſh'd piles to view,
And builds imaginary Rome anew.
Here thy well-ſtudied marbles fix our eye;
A fading freſco here demands a ſigh:
Each heavenly piece unwearied we compare,
Match Raphael's grace with thy lov'd Guido's air,
Carracci's ſtrength, Correggio's ſofter line,
Paulo's free ſtroke, and Titian's warmth divine.
How finiſh'd with illuſtrious toil appears
This ſmall, well-poliſh'd gem, the work of years!
Yet ſtill how faint by precept is expreſs'd
The living image in the painter's breaſt!
Thence endleſs ſtreams of fair ideas flow,
Strike in the ſketch, or in the picture glow;
Thence beauty, waking all her forms, ſupplies
An angel's ſweetneſs, or Bridgewater's eyes.
Muſe! at that name thy ſacred ſorrows ſhed,
Thoſe tears eternal that embalm the dead;
Call round her tomb each object of deſire,
Each purer frame inform'd with purer fire:
Bid her be all that cheers or ſoftens life,
The tender ſiſter, daughter, friend, and wife:
Bid her be all that makes mankind adore;
Then view this marble, and be vain no more!
Yet ſtill her charms in breathing paint engage;
Her modeſt cheek ſhall warm a future age.
Beauty, frail flower, that every ſeaſon fears,
Blooms in thy colours for a thouſand years.
Thus Churchill's race ſhall other hearts ſurpriſe,
And other beauties envy Worſley's eyes;
Each pleaſing Blount ſhall endleſs ſmiles beſtow,
And ſoft Belinda's bluſh for ever glow.
Oh, laſting as thoſe colours may they ſhine,
Free as thy ſtroke, yet faultleſs as thy line;
New graces yearly like thy works diſplay,
Soft without weakneſs, without glaring gay;
Led by ſome rule, that guides, but not conſtrains;
And finiſh'd more through happineſs than pains!
The kindred arts ſhall in their praiſe conſpire,
One dip the pencil, and one ſtring the lyre.
Yet ſhould the graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on every face;
Yet ſhould the muſes bid my numbers roll
Strong as their charms, and gentle as their ſoul;
With Zeuxis' Helen thy Bridgewater vie,
And theſe be ſung till Granville's Myra die:
Alas! how little from the grave we claim!
Thou but preſerv'ſt a face, and I a name.

EPISTLE

TO MISS BLOUNT,

WITH THE WORKS OF VOITURE.

In these gay thoughts the loves and graces shine,
And all the writer lives in every line:
His easy art may happy nature seem,
Trifles themselves are elegant in him.
Sure to charm all was his peculiar fate,
Who without flattery pleas'd the fair and great;
Still with esteem no less convers'd than read;
With wit well-natur'd, and with books well-bred:
His heart, his mistress, and his friend did share;
His time, the muse, the witty and the fair.
Thus wisely careless, innocently gay,
Cheerful he play'd the trifle, life, away;
Till fate scarce felt his gentle breath suppress,
As smiling infants sport themselves to rest,
Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's death deplore,
And the gay mourn'd who never mourn'd before;
The truest hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs,
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes:
The smiles and loves had died in Voiture's death,
But that for ever in his lines they breathe.
Let the strict life of graver mortals be
A long, exact, and serious comedy;
In every scene some mortal let it teach,
And, if it can, at once both please and preach.
Let mine, an innocent gay farce appear,
And more diverting still than regular,
Have humour, wit, a native ease and grace,
Though not too strictly bound to time and place:
Critics in wit, or life, are hard to please;
Few write to those, and none can live to these.
Too much your sex are by their forms confin'd,
Severe to all, but most to womankind;
Custom, grown blind with age, must be your guide;
Your pleasure is a vice, but not your pride;
By nature yielding, stubborn but for fame;
Made slaves by honour, and made fools by shame.
Marriage may all those petty tyrants chase,
But sets up one, a greater in their place:
Well might you wish for change by those accurst,
But the last tyrant ever proves the worst.
Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal, or in real chains:
Whole years neglected, for some months ador'd,
The fawning servant turns a haughty lord.
Ah, quit not the free innocence of life,
For the dull glory of a virtuous wife;
Nor let false shows, nor empty titles please:
Aim not at joy, but rest content with ease.
The gods, to curse Pamela with her prayers,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares,
The shining robes, rich jewels, beds of state,
And, to complete her bliss, a fool for mate.
She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring,
A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing!
Pride, pomp, and state, but reach her outward part;
She sighs, and is no duchess at her heart.
But, madam, if the fates withstand, and you
Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too;
Trust not too much your now resistless charms,
Those, age or sickness, soon or late disarms:
Good-humour only teaches charms to last,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past;
Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay,
Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day;
As flowery bands in wantonness are worn,
A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn;
This binds in ties more easy, yet more strong,
The willing heart, and only holds it long.
Thus * Voiture's early care still shone the same,
And Monthausier was only chang'd in name;
By this, ev'n now they live, ev'n now they charm,
Their wit still sparkling, and their flames still warm.
Now crown'd with myrtle, on th' Elysian coast,
Amid those lovers, joys his gentle ghost:
Pleas'd, while with smiles his happy lines you view,
And finds a fairer Rambouillet in you.
The brightest eyes in France inspir'd his muse;
The brightest eyes in Britain now peruse;
And dead, as living, 'tis our author's pride
Still to charm those who charm the world beside.

TO THE SAME.

On her leaving the Town after the Coronation, 1715.

As some fond virgin, whom her mother's care
Drags from the town to wholesome country air,
Just when she learns to roll a melting eye,
And hear a spark, yet think no danger nigh;
From the dear man unwilling she must sever,
Yet takes one kiss before she parts for ever:
Thus from the world fair Zephalinda flew,
Saw others happy, and with sighs withdrew;
Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent,
She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that she went.
She went to plain-work, and to purling brooks,
Old-fashion'd halls, dull aunts, and croaking rooks:
She went from opera, park, assembly, play,
To morning-walks, and prayers three hours a-day;
To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
To muse, and spill her solitary tea;
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon;
Divert her eyes with pictures in the fire,
Hum half a tune, tell stories to the 'squire;
Up to her godly garret after seven,
There starve and pray, for that's the way to heaven.
Some 'squire, perhaps, you take delight to rack;
Whose game is whist, whose treat a toast in sack:
Who visits with a gun, presents you birds,
Then gives a smacking buss, and cries—no words!
Or with his hounds comes hallooing from the stable,
Makes love with nods, and knees beneath a table;
Whose laughs are hearty, though his jests are coarse,
And loves you best of all things—but his horse.
In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade;
In pensive thought recal the fancy'd scene,
See coronations rise on every green;

---

* Mademoiselle Paulet.

Before you pass th' imaginary sights
Of lords, and earls, and dukes, and garter'd knights,
While the spread fan o'ershades your closing eyes;
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies.
Thus vanish sceptres, coronets, and balls,
And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls!

So when your slave, at some dear idle time,
(Not plagu'd with headachs, or the want of rhyme),
Stands in the streets, abstracted from the crew,
And while he seems to study, thinks of you.
Just when his fancy points your sprightly eyes,
Or sees the blush of soft Parthenia rise,
Gay pats my shoulder, and you vanish quite,
Streets, chairs, and coxcombs, rush upon my sight;
Vex'd to be still in town, I knit my brow,
Look four, and hum a tune, as you may now.

THE BASSET-TABLE,

AN ECLOGUE.

CARDELIA. SMILINDA.

CARDELIA.

The basset-table spread, the tallier come;
Why stays Smilinda in the dressing-room?
Rise, pensive nymph; the tallier waits for you.

SMILINDA.

Ah, madam, since my sharper is untrue,
I joyless make my once ador'd Alpheu.
I saw him stand behind Ombrelia's chair,
And whisper with that soft, deluding air.
And those feign'd sighs which cheat the listening fair.

CARDELIA.

Is this the cause of your romantic strains?
A mightier grief my heavy heart sustains.
As you by love, so I by fortune cross'd;
One, one bad deal, three Septlevas have lost.

SMILINDA.

Is that the grief, which you compare with mine?
With ease, the smiles of fortune I resign:
Would all my gold in one bad deal were gone,
Were lovely Sharper mine, and mine alone.

CARDELIA.

A lover lost, is but a common care;
And prudent nymphs against that change prepare;
The knave of clubs thrice lost: Oh! who could guess
This fatal stroke, this unforeseen distress?

SMILINDA.

See Betty Lovet! very á propos,
She all the cares of love and play does know:
Dear Betty shall th' important point decide;
Betty, who oft the pain of each has try'd:
Impartial, she shall say who suffers most,
By cards, ill usage, or by lovers lost.

LOVET.

Tell, tell your griefs; attentive will I stay,
Though time is precious, and I want some tea.

CARDELIA.

Behold this equipage, by Mathers wrought,
With fifty guineas (a great penn'worth) bought.
See, on the tooth-pick, Mars and Cupid strive;
And both the struggling figures seem alive.
Upon the bottom shines the queen's bright face;
A myrtle foliage round the thimble-case;
Jove, Jove himself does on the scissars shine;
The metal and the workmanship divine!

SMILINDA.

This snuff-box—once the pledge of Sharper's love,
When rival beauties for the present strove;
At Corticelli's he the raffle won;
Then first his passion was in public shown:
Hazardia blush'd, and turn'd her head aside,
A rival's envy (all in vain) to hide.
This snuff-box,—on the hinge see brilliants shine!
This snuff-box will I stake; the prize is mine.

CARDELIA.

Alas! far lesser losses than I bear,
Have made a soldier sigh, a lover swear.
And oh! what makes the disappointment hard,
'Twas my own lord that drew the fatal card.
In complaisance, I took the queen he gave;
Though my own secret wish was for the knave.
The knave was Sonica, which I had chose;
And the next pull, my Septleva I lose.

SMILINDA.

But ah! what aggravates the killing smart,
The cruel thought, that stabs me to the heart;
This curs'd Ombrelia, this undoing fair,
By whose vile arts this heavy grief I bear;
She, at whose name I shed those spiteful tears,
She owes to me the very charms she wears.
An awkward thing, when first she came to town;
Her shape unfashion'd, and her face unknown:
She was my friend; I taught her first to spread
Upon her sallow cheeks enlivening red:
I introduc'd her to the park and plays;
And by my interest, Cozens made her stays.
Ungrateful wretch, with mimic airs grown pert,
She dares to steal my favourite lover's heart!

CARDELIA.

Wretch that I was! how often have I swore,
When Winnal tally'd, I would punt no more!
I know the bite, yet to my ruin run;
And see the folly which I cannot shun.

SMILINDA.

How many maids have Sharper's vows deceiv'd!
How many curs'd the moment they believ'd!
Yet his known falsehoods could no warning prove;
Ah! what is warning to a maid in love?

CARDELIA.

But of what marble must that breast be form'd,
To gaze on Basset, and remain unwarm'd?
When kings, queens, knaves, are set in decent rank;
Expos'd in glorious heaps the tempting bank,
Guineas, half-guineas, all the shining train;
The winner's pleasure, and the loser's pain:
In bright confusion open rouleaus lie,
They strike the soul, and glitter in the eye.
Fir'd by the sight, all reason I disdain;
My passions rise, and will not bear the rein.
Look upon Basset, you who reason boast;
And see if reason must not there be lost.

SMILINDA.

What more than marble must that heart compose
Can hearken coldly to my Sharper's vows!

Then, when he trembles! when his bluſhes riſe!
When awful love ſeems melting in his eyes!
With eager beats his Mechlin cravat moves:
He loves—I whiſper to myſelf, he loves!
Such unfeign'd paſſion in his looks appears,
I loſe my memory of my former fears;
My panting heart confeſſes all his charms,
I yield at once, and ſink into his arms.
Think of that moment, you who prudence boaſt;
For ſuch a moment, prudence well were loſt.

CARDELIA.

At the groom-porter's, batter'd bullies play,
Some dukes at Marybone bowl time away.
But who the bowl, or rattling dice compares
To Baſſet's heavenly joys, and pleaſing cares?

SMILINDA.

Soft Simplicetta doats upon a beau;
Prudina likes a man, and laughs at ſhow.
Their ſeveral graces in my Sharper meet;
Strong as the footman, as the maſter ſweet.

LOVET.

Ceaſe your contention, which has been too long;
I grow impatient, and the tea's too ſtrong.
Attend, and yield to what I now decide;
The equipage ſhall grace Smilinda's ſide:
The ſnuff-box to Cardelia I decree;
Now leave complaining, and begin your tea.

VERBATIM FROM BOILEAU.

UN JOUR, DIT UN AUTEUR, &c.

Once (ſays an author, where I need not ſay)
Two travellers found an oyſter in their way;
Both fierce, both hungry; the diſpute grew ſtrong;
While ſcale in hand dame Juſtice paſs'd along.
Before her each with clamour pleads the laws,
Explain'd the matter, and would win the cauſe.
Dame Juſtice weighing long the doubtful right,
Takes, opens, ſwallows it, before their ſight.
The cauſe of ſtrife remov'd ſo rarely well,
There take (ſays Juſtice) take you each a ſhell.
We thrive at Weſtminſter on fools like you:
'Twas a fat oyſter—Live in peace—Adieu.

ANSWER TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTION

OF MRS. HOWE.

What is prudery?
'Tis a beldam,
Seen with wit and beauty ſeldom.
'Tis a fear that ſtarts at ſhadows.
'Tis (no, 'tis n't) like Miſs Meadows.
'Tis a virgin hard of feature,
Old, and void of all good nature;
Lean and fretful; would ſeem wiſe;
Yet plays the fool before ſhe dies.
'Tis an ugly, envious ſhrew,
That rails at dear Lepell and you.

OCCASIONED BY SOME VERSES OF HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM.

Muse, 'tis enough: at length the labour ends,
And thou ſhalt live, for Buckingham commends.
Let crowds of critics now my verſe aſſail,
Let Dennis write, and nameleſs numbers rail:
This more than pays whole years of thankleſs pain,
Time, health, and fortune, are not loſt in vain.
Sheffield approves, conſenting Phœbus bends,
And I and malice from this hour are friends.

A PROLOGUE

BY MR. POPE,

To a Play for Mr. Dennis's Benefit, in 1733, when he was Old, Blind, and in great Diſtreſs, a little before his Death.

As when that hero, who in each campaign
Had brav'd the Goth, and many a Vandal ſlain,
Lay fortune-ſtruck, a ſpectacle of woe!
Wept by each friend, forgiv'n by every foe;
Was there a generous, a reflecting mind,
But pitied Beliſarius old and blind?
Was there a chief but melted at the ſight?
A common ſoldier, but who clubb'd his mite?
Such, ſuch emotions ſhould in Britons riſe,
When preſs'd by want and weakneſs Dennis lies;
Dennis, who long had warr'd with modern Huns,
Their quibbles routed, and defy'd their puns,
A deſperate bulwark, ſturdy, firm, and fierce,
Againſt the Gothic ſons of frozen verſe:
How chang'd from him who made the boxes groan,
And ſhook the ſtage with thunders all his own!
Stood up to daſh each vain pretender's hope,
Maul the French tyrant, or pull down the Pope!
If there's a Briton then, true bred and born,
Who holds dragoons and wooden ſhoes in ſcorn;
If there's a critic of diſtinguiſh'd rage;
If there's a ſenior, who contemns this age;
Let him to-night his juſt aſſiſtance lend,
And be the critic's, Briton's, old man's friend.

PROLOGUE TO SOPHONISBA,

BY POPE AND MALLET.

When learning, after the long Gothic night,
Fair, o'er the weſtern world, renew'd its light,
With arts ariſing, Sophoniſba roſe:
The tragic muſe, returning, wept her woes.
With her th' Italian ſcene firſt learn'd to glow;
And the firſt tears for her were taught to flow.
Her charms the Gallic muſes next inſpir'd:
Corneille himſelf ſaw, wonder'd, and was fir'd.
What foreign theatres with pride have ſhown,
Britain, by juſter title, makes her own.

When freedom is the cauſe, 'tis her's to fight;
And her's, when freedom is the theme, to write.
For this a Britiſh author bids again
The heroine riſe, to grace the Britiſh ſcene.
Here, as in life, ſhe breathes her genuine flame:
She aſks, what boſom has not felt the fame:
Aſks of the Britiſh youth—Is ſilence there?
She dares to aſk it of the Britiſh fair.
To-night, our home-ſpun author would be true,
At once, to nature, hiſtory, and you.
Well pleas'd to give our neighbours due applauſe,
He owns their learning, but diſdains their laws.
Not to his patient touch, or happy flame,
'Tis to his Britiſh heart he truſts for fame.
If France excel him in one freeborn thought,
The man, as well as poet, is in fault.
Nature! informer of the poet's art,
Whoſe force alone can raiſe or melt the heart,
Thou art his guide; each paſſion, every line,
Whate'er he draws to pleaſe, muſt all be thine.
Be thou his judge: in every candid breaſt,
Thy ſilent whiſper is the ſacred teſt.

MACER:

A CHARACTER.

When ſimple Macer, now of high renown,
Firſt ſought a poet's fortune in the town,
'Twas all th' ambition his high ſoul could feel,
To wear red ſtockings, and to dine with Steel.
Some ends of verſe his betters might afford;
And gave the harmleſs fellow a good word;
Set up with theſe, he ventur'd on the town,
And with a borrow'd play out-did poor Crown.
There he ſtopp'd ſhort, nor ſince has writ a title,
But has the wit to make the moſt of little:
Like ſtunted hide-bound trees, that juſt have got
Sufficient ſap at once to bear and rot.
Now he begs verſe, and what he gets commends,
Not of the wits, his foes, but fools his friends.
So ſome coarſe country wench, almoſt decay'd,
Trudges to town, and firſt turns chambermaid;
Awkward and ſupple, each devoir to pay,
She flatters her good lady twice a-day;
Thought wondrous honeſt, though of mean degree,
And ſtrangely lik'd for her ſimplicity:
In a tranſlated ſuit, then tries the town,
With borrow'd pins, and patches not her own:
But juſt endur'd the winter ſhe began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan.
Now nothing left, but wither'd, pale, and ſhrunk,
To bawd for others, and go ſhares with punk.

TO MR. JOHN MOORE,

AUTHOR OF THE CELEBRATED WORM-POWDER.

How much, egregious Moore, are we
Deceiv'd by ſhows and forms!
Whate'er we think, whate'er we ſee,
All humankind are worms.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile, reptile, weak, and vain!
A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then ſhrinks to earth again.

That woman is a worm, we find
E'er ſince our grandame's evil;
She firſt convers'd with her own kind,
That ancient worm the devil.

The learn'd themſelves we book-worms name,
The blockhead is a ſlow-worm;
The nymph whoſe tail is all on flame,
Is aptly term'd a glow-worm:

The fops are painted butterflies,
That flutter for a day;
Firſt from a worm they take their riſe,
And in a worm decay.

The flatterer an earwig grows;
Thus worms ſuit all conditions.
Miſers are muck-worms, ſilk-worms beaux,
And death watches phyſicians.

That ſtateſmen have the worm, is ſeen
By all their winding play;
Their conſcience is a worm within,
That gnaws them night and day.

Ah Moore! thy ſkill were well employ'd,
And greater gain would riſe,
If thou couldſt make the courtier void
The worm that never dies!

O learned friend of Abchurch-lane,
Who ſett'ſt our entrails free;
Vain is thy art, thy powder vain,
Since worms ſhall eat ev'n thee.

Our fate thou only canſt adjourn
Some few ſhort years, no more!
Ev'n Button's wits to worms ſhall turn,
Who maggots were before.

SONG, BY A PERSON OF QUALITY.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1733.

I.

Fluttering ſpread thy purple pinions,
Gentle Cupid, o'er my heart;
I a ſlave in thy dominions;
Nature muſt give way to art.

II.

Mild Arcadians, ever blooming,
Nightly nodding o'er your flocks,
See my weary days conſuming,
All beneath yon flowery rocks.

III.

Thus the Cyprian goddeſs weeping,
Mourn'd Adonis, darling youth;
Him the boar, in ſilence creeping,
Gor'd with unrelenting tooth.

IV.

Cynthia, tune harmonious numbers;
Fair diſcretion, ſtring the lyre;
Sooth my ever-waking ſlumbers:
Bright Apollo, lend thy choir.

V.

Gloomy Pluto, king of terrors,
Arm'd in adamantine chains,
Lead me to the cryſtal mirrors,
Watering ſoft Elyſian plains.

VI.

Mournful cypreſs, verdant willow,
Gilding my Aurelia's brows,
Morpheus hovering o'er my pillow,
Hear me pay my dying vows.

VII.

Melancholy ſmooth Mæander,
Swiftly purling in a round,
On thy margin lovers wander,
With thy flowery chaplets crown'd.

VIII.

Thus when Philomela drooping,
Softly ſeeks her ſilent mate,
See the bird of Juno ſtooping;
Melody reſigns to fate.

ON A CERTAIN LADY AT COURT.

I know the thing that's moſt uncommon;
(Envy be ſilent, and attend!)
I know a reaſonable woman,
Handſome and witty, yet a friend.

Not warp'd by paſſion, aw'd by rumour;
Not grave through pride, nor gay through folly
An equal mixture of good-humour,
And ſenſible ſoft melancholy.

"Has ſhe no faults then, (Envy ſays) Sir?"
Yes, ſhe has one, I muſt aver:
When all the world conſpires to praiſe her,
The woman's deaf, and does not hear.

ON HIS GROTTO AT TWICKENHAM,

Compoſed of Marble, Spars, Gems, Ores, and Minerals.

Thou who ſhalt ſtop, where Thames' tranſlucent wave
Shines a broad mirror through the ſhadowy cave;
Where lingering drops from mineral roofs diſtil,
And pointed cryſtals break the ſparkling rill,
Unpoliſh'd gems no ray on pride beſtow,
And latent metals innocently glow;
Approach. Great Nature ſtudiouſly behold!
And eye the mine without a wiſh for gold.
Approach: but awful! lo! th' Ægerian grot,
Where, nobly penſive, St. John ſat and thought;
Where Britiſh ſighs from dying Wyndham ſtole,
And the bright flame was ſhot through Marchmont's ſoul.
Let ſuch, ſuch only, tread this ſacred floor,
Who dare to love their country, and be poor.

TO MRS. M. B. ON HER BIRTH-DAY.

Oh, be thou bleſt with all that heaven can ſend,
Long health, long youth, long pleaſure, and a friend!
Not with thoſe toys the female world admire,
Riches that vex, and vanities that tire.
With added years, if life bring nothing new,
But like a ſieve let every bleſſing through,
Some joy ſtill loſt, as each vain year runs o'er,
And all we gain, ſome ſad reflection more;
Is that a birth-day? 'tis alas! too clear,
'Tis but the funeral of the former year.
Let joy or eaſe, let affluence or content,
And the gay conſcience of a life well ſpent,
Calm every thought, inſpirit every grace,
Glow in thy heart, and ſmile upon thy face.
Let day improve on day, and year on year.
Without a pain, a trouble, or a fear;
Till death unfelt that tender frame deſtroy,
In ſome ſoft dream, or eccſtaſy of joy,
Peaceful ſleep out the Sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come.

VARIATION.

Ver. 15. Originally thus in the MS.

And oh, ſince death muſt that fair frame deſtroy,
Die, by ſome ſudden eccſtaſy of joy;
In ſome ſoft dream may thy mild ſoul remove,
And be thy lateſt gaſp a ſigh of love.

TO MR THOMAS SOUTHERN,

ON HIS BIRTHDAY, 1742.

Resign'd to live, prepar'd to die,
With not one ſin, but poetry,
This day Tom's fair account has run
(Without a blot) to eighty-one.
Kind Boyle, before his poet, lays
A table, with a cloth of bays;
And Ireland, mother of ſweet ſingers,
Preſents her harp ſtill to his fingers.
The feaſt, his towering genius marks
In yonder wild-gooſe and the larks!
The muſhrooms ſhow his wit was ſudden!
And for his judgment, lo, a pudden!
Roaſt beef, though old, proclaims him ſtout,
And grace, although a bard, devout.
May Tom, whom heaven ſent down to raiſe
The price of prologues and of plays,
Be every birth-day more a winner,
Digeſt his thirty-thouſandth dinner;
Walk to his grave without reproach,
And ſcorn a raſcal and a coach.

TO LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGUE.

I.

In beauty, or wit
No mortal as yet

To queſtion your empire has dar'd;
But men of diſcerning
Have thought that in learning,
To yield to a lady was hard.

II.

Impertinent ſchools,
With muſty dull rules,
Have reading to females deny'd:
So Papiſts refuſe
The Bible to uſe,
Leſt flocks ſhould be wiſe as their guide.

III.

'Twas a woman at firſt,
(Indeed ſhe was curſt)
In knowledge that taſted delight,
And ſages agree
The laws ſhould decree
To the firſt of poſſeſſors the right.

IV.

Then bravely, fair dame,
Reſume the old claim,
Which to your whole ſex does belong;
And let men receive,
From a ſecond bright Eve,
The knowledge of right, and of wrong.

V.

But if the firſt Eve
Hard doom did receive,
When only one apple had ſhe,
What a puniſhment new
Shall be found out for you,
Who taſting, have robb'd the whole tree?

THE FOURTH EPISTLE

OF THE FIRST BOOK OF HORACE.

A Modern Imitation.

SAY, * St. John, who alone peruſe
With candid eye, the mimic muſe,
What ſchemes of politics, or laws,
In Gallic lands the patriot draws!
Is then a greater work in hand,
Than all the tomes of Haines's band?
"Or ſhoots he folly as it flies?
"Or catches manners as they riſe?"
Or, urg'd by unquench'd native heat,
Does St. John Greenwich ſports repeat?
Where (emulous of Chartres' fame)
Ev'n Chartres' ſelf is ſcarce a name.
† To you (th' all-envy'd gift of heaven)
Th' indulgent gods, unaſk'd, have given
A form complete in every part,
And, to enjoy that gift, the art.
‡ What could a tender mother's care
Wiſh better, to her favourite heir,

Ad Albium Tibullum.

* Albi, noſtrorum ſermonum candide judex,
Quid nunc te dicam facere in regione Pedana?
Scribere, quod Caſſi Parmenſis opuſcula vincat?
† ——— Di tibi formam
Di tibi divitias dederant, artemque fruendi.
‡ Quid voveat dulci nutricula majus alumno,
Quam ſapere, et fari poſſet quæ ſentiat, et cui

Than wit, and fame, and lucky hours,
A ſtock of health, and golden ſhowers,
And graceful fluency of ſpeech,
Precepts before unknown to teach?
* Amidſt thy various ebbs of fear,
And gleaming hope, and black deſpair;
Yet let thy friend this truth impart;
A truth I tell with bleeding heart,
(In juſtice for your labours paſt)
† That every day ſhall be your laſt;
That every hour you life renew
Is to your injur'd country due.
In ſpight of fears, of mercy ſpight,
My genius ſtill muſt rail, and write.
Haſte to thy Twickenham's ſafe retreat,
And mingle with the grumbling great:
There, half devour'd by ſpleen, you'll find
The rhyming bubbler of mankind;
There (objects of our mutual hate)
We'll ridicule both church and ſtate.

EPIGRAM ON MRS. TOFTS,

A handſome woman with a fine voice, but very covetous and proud ‖.

So bright is thy beauty, ſo charming thy ſong,
As had drawn both the beaſts and their Orpheus along;
But ſuch is thy avarice; and ſuch is thy pride,
That the beaſts muſt have ſtarv'd, and the poet have died.

EPIGRAM

ON ONE WHO MADE LONG EPITAPHS §.

FRIEND, for your epitaphs I'm griev'd,
Where ſtill ſo much is ſaid;
One half will never be believ'd,
The other never read.

TO SIR GODFREY KNELLER,

On his painting for me the Statues of Apollo, Venus, and Hercules.

WHAT god, what genius did the pencil move
When Kneller painted theſe?

Gratia, fama, valetudo contingat abunde,
——— non deficiente crumena?

* Inter ſpem, curamque, timores inter et iras.
† Omnem crede diem tibi diluxiſſe ſupremum.
Me pinguem, et nitidum bene curata cute viſes,
Cum ridere voles Epicuri de grege porcum.

‖ This epigram is inſcribed to Pope by Sir John Hawkins in his Hiſtory of Muſic.

§ Dr. Robert Friend, Head Maſter of Weſtminſter School.

'Twas Friendſhip—warm as Phœbus, kind as Love,
And ſtrong as Hercules.

A FAREWELL TO LONDON

IN THE YEAR 1715.

Dear, damn'd, diſtracting town, farewell!
Thy fools no more I'll teaze:
This year in peace, ye critics, dwell,
Ye harlots, ſleep at eaſe!

Soft B—— and rough C——, adieu!
Earl Warwick make your moan,
The lively H———k and you
May knock up whores alone.

To drink and droll be Rowe allow'd
Till the third watchman toll;
Let Jervais gratis paint, and Frowde
Save threepence and his ſoul.

Farewell Arbuthnot's raillery
On every learned ſot;
And Garth, the beſt good Chriſtian he,
Although he knows it not.

Lintot, farewell! thy bard muſt go;
Farewell, unhappy Tonſon!
Heaven gives thee, for thy loſs of Rowe,
Lean Philips, and fat Johnſon.

Why ſhould I ſtay? Both parties rage;
My vixen miſtreſs ſqualls;
The wits in envious feuds engage;
And Homer (damn him!) calls.

The love of arts lies cold and dead
In Halifax's urn;
And not one muſe of all he fed,
Has yet the grace to mourn.

My friends, by turns, my friends confound,
Betray, and are betray'd:
Poor Y—r's ſold for fifty pound,
And B———ll is a jade.

Why make I friendſhips with the great,
When I no favour ſeek?
Or follow girls ſeven hours in eight?—
I need but once a week.

Still idle, with a buſy air,
Deep whimſies to contrive;
The gayeſt valetudinaire,
Moſt thinking rake alive.

Solicitous for others ends,
Though fond of dear repoſe;
Careleſs or drowſy with my friends,
And frolic with my foes,

Luxurious lobſter-nights, farewell,
For ſober, ſtudious days!
And Burlington's delicious meal,
For ſallads, tarts, and peaſe!

Adieu to all but Gay alone,
Whoſe ſoul, ſincere and free,
Loves all mankind, but flatters none,
And ſo may ſtarve with me.

A DIALOGUE.

Pope. Since my old friend is grown ſo great,
As to be Miniſter of State,
I'm told (but 'tis not true I hope)
That Craggs will be aſham'd of Pope.

Craggs. Alas! if I am ſuch a creature,
To grow the worſe for growing greater;
Why faith, in ſpite of all my brags,
'Tis Pope muſt be aſham'd of Craggs.

EPIGRAM.

Engraved on the Collar of a Dog, which I gave to his Royal Highneſs.

I am his Highneſs' dog at Kew;
Pray tell me, Sir, whoſe dog are you?

EPIGRAM.

Occaſioned by an Invitation to Court.

In the lines that you ſent, are the Muſes and Graces; [your faces.
You've the Nine in your wit, and the Three in

ON AN OLD GATE

ERECTED IN CHISWICK GARDENS.

O Gate, how cam'ſt thou here?
Gate. I was brought from Chelſea laſt year,
Batter'd with wind and weather.
Inigo Jones put me together.
Sir Hans Sloane
Let me alone:
Burlington brought me hither.
1742.

A FRAGMENT.

What are the falling rills, the pendant ſhades,
The morning bowers, the evening colonnades,

But ſoft receſſes for th' uneaſy mind
To ſigh unheard in, to the paſſing wind!
So the ſtruck deer, in ſome ſequeſter'd part,
Lies down to die (the arrow in his heart);
There hid in ſhades, and waſting day by day,
Inly he bleeds, and pants his ſoul away.

VERSES LEFT BY MR. POPE,

On his lying in the ſame Bed which Wilmot the celebrated Earl of Rocheſter ſlept in, at Adderbury, then belonging to the Duke of Argyll, July 9th. 1739.

With no poetic ardour fir'd
I preſs the bed where Wilmot lay;
That here he lov'd, or here expir'd,
Begets no numbers grave, or gay.

But in thy roof, Argyll, are bred
Such thoughts as prompt the brave to lie.
Stretch'd out in honour's nobler bed,
Beneath a nobler roof—the ſky.

Such flames as high in patriots burn,
Yet ſtoop to bleſs a child or wife;
And ſuch as wicked kings may mourn,
When freedom is more dear than life.

VERSES TO MR. C.

ST. JAMES'S PLACE.

London, October 22.

Few words are beſt; I wiſh you well;
Bethel, I'm told, will ſoon be here:
Some morning walks along the Mall,
And evening friends, will end the year.

If in this interval, between
The falling leaf and coming froſt,
You pleaſe to ſee, on Twit'nam green,
Your friend, your poet, and your hoſt;

For three whole days you here may reſt,
From office, buſineſs, news, and ſtrife;
And (what moſt folks would think a jeſt)
Want nothing elſe, except your wife.

EPITAPHS.

"His saltem accumulem donis, et fungar inani
"Munere!" VIRG.

I.

ON CHARLES EARL OF DORSET.

In the Church of Withyam in Suſſex.

DORSET, the grace of courts, the muſes' pride,
Patron of arts, and judge of nature, dy'd.
The ſcourge of pride, though ſanctified or great,
Of fops in learning, and of knaves in ſtate:
Yet ſoft his nature, though ſevere his lay,
His anger moral, and his wiſdom gay.
Bleſt ſatiriſt! who touch'd the mean ſo true,
As ſhow'd, vice had his hate and pity too.
Bleſt courtier! who could king and country pleaſe,
Yet ſacred keep his friendſhips, and his eaſe.
Bleſt peer! his great forefathers every grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race;
Where other Buckhurſts, other Dorſets ſhine,
And patrons ſtill, or poets, deck the line.

II.

ON SIR WILLIAM TRUMBALL,

One of the principal Secretaries of State to King William III. who, having reſigned his place, died in his Retirement at Eaſthamſted, in Berkſhire, 1716.

A PLEASING form; a firm, yet cautious mind;
Sincere, though prudent; conſtant, yet reſign'd;
Honour unchang'd, a principle profeſt,
Fix'd to one ſide, but moderate to the reſt;
An honeſt courtier, yet a patroit too;
Juſt to his prince, and to his country true:
Fill'd with the ſenſe of age, the fire of youth,
A ſcorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth;
A generous faith, from ſuperſtition free:
A love to peace, and hate of tyranny; [mov'd,
Such this man was: who now, from earth re-
At length enjoys that liberty he lov'd.

III.

ON THE HON. SIMON HARCOURT,

Only Son of the Lord Chancellor HARCOURT, at the Church of Stanton-Harcourt, in Oxfordſhire, 1720.

To this ſad ſhrine, whoe'er thou art! draw near,
Here lies the friend moſt lov'd, the ſon moſt dear;
Who ne'er knew joy, but friendſhip might divide,
Or gave his father grief, but when he dy'd.
How vain is reaſon, eloquence how weak!
If Pope muſt tell what Harcourt cannot ſpeak,
Oh let thy once-lov'd friend inſcribe thy ſtone,
And, with a father's ſorrows, mix his own!

IV.

ON JAMES CRAGGS, ESQ.

In Weſtminſter-Abbey.

JACOBUS CRAGGS.
Regi Magnæ Britanniæ a Secretis
et Conſiliis ſanctioribus,
Principis pariter ac populi amor et deliciæ, vixit titulis et invidia major
annos, heu paucos, XXXV.
Ob. Feb. XVI. M.DCC.XX.

Stateſman, yet friend to truth! of ſoul ſincere,
In action faithful, and in honour clear!
Who broke no promiſe, ſerv'd no private end,
Who gain'd no title, and who loſt no friend,
Ennobled by himſelf, by all approv'd,
Prais'd, wept, and honour'd, by the muſe he lov'd.

V.

INTENDED FOR MR. ROWE,

In Westminster-Abbey.

THY relicks, Rowe, to this fair urn we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust:
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide inquiring eyes,
Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest!
Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest!
One grateful woman to thy fame supplies
What a whole thankless land to his denies.

VARIATION.

It is as follows on the monument in the Abbey erected to Rowe and his daughter.

Thy relicks, Rowe! to this sad shrine we trust,
And near thy Shakspeare place thy honour'd bust,
Oh, next him, skill'd to draw the tender tear,
For never heart felt passion more sincere;
To nobler sentiment to fire the brave,
For never Briton more disdain'd a slave.
Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest;
Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest!
And blest, that, timely from our scene remov'd,
Thy soul enjoys the liberty it lov'd.
To these so mourn'd in death, so lov'd in life;
The childless parent and the widow'd wife,
With tears inscribes this monumental stone,
That holds their ashes and expects her own.

VI.

ON MRS. CORBET,

Who died of a Cancer in her Breast.

HERE rests a woman, good without pretence,
Blest with plain reason, and with sober sense:
No conquests she, but o'er herself, desir'd,
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own.
So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft; so strong, yet so refin'd:
Heaven, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd;
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd.

VII.

On the Monument of the Honourable ROBERT DIGBY, and of his Sister MARY, erected by their Father the LORD DIGBY, in the Church of Sherborne, in Dorsetshire, 1727.

Go! fair example of untainted youth,
Of modest wisdom, and pacific truth;
Compos'd in sufferings, and in joy sedate,
Good without noise, without pretension great.
Just of thy word, in every thought sincere,
Who knew no wish but what the world might hear:
Of softest manners, unaffected mind,
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind:
Go, live! for Heaven's eternal year is thine,
Go, and exalt thy moral to divine.
And thou, blest maid! attendant on his doom,
Pensive hast follow'd to the silent tomb,
Steer'd the same course to the same quiet shore,
Not parted long, and now to part no more!
Go then, where only bliss sincere is known!
Go, where to love and to enjoy are one!
Yet take these tears, mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief:
These little rites, a stone, a verse receive;
'Tis all a father, all a friend can give!

VIII.

ON SIR GODFREY KNELLER,

In Westminster-Abbey, 1723.

KNELLER, by Heaven, and not a master taught,
Whose art was nature, and whose pictures thought;
Now for two ages having snatch'd from fate
Whate'er was beauteous, or whate'er was great,
Lies crown'd with princes honours, poets lays,
Due to his merit, and brave thirst of praise.
Living, great nature fear'd he might outvie
Her works; and, dying, fears herself may die.

IX.

ON GENERAL HENRY WITHERS,

In Westminster-Abbey, 1729.

HERE, Withers, rest! thou bravest, gentlest mind!
Thy country's friend, but more of human kind.
Oh born to arms! O worth in youth approv'd!
O soft humanity, in age belov'd:
For thee, the hardy veteran drops a tear,
And the gay courtier feels the sigh sincere.
Withers, Adieu! yet not with thee remove
Thy martial spirit, or thy social love!
Amidst corruption, luxury, and rage,
Still leave some ancient virtues to our age;
Nor let us say (those English glories gone)
The last true Briton lies beneath this stone.

X.

ON MR. ELIJAH FENTON,

At Easthampsted, in Berks, 1730.

This modest stone, what few vain marbles can,
May truly say, Here lies an honest man:
A poet, blest beyond the poets fate, [great;
Whom Heaven kept sacred from the proud and
Foe to loud praise, and friend to learned ease,
Content with science in the vale of peace,
Calmly he look'd on either life, and here
Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear;
From nature's temperate feast rose satisfy'd,
Thank'd Heaven that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd.

XI.

ON MR. GAY.

In Weſtminſter-Abbey, 1732.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit, a man; ſimplicity, a child:
With native humour tempering virtuous rage,
Form'd to delight at once and laſh the age:
Above temptation in a low eſtate,
And uncorrupted, ev'n among the great:
A ſafe companion, and an eaſy friend,
Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end.
Theſe are thy honours! not that here thy buſt
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy duſt;
But that the worthy and the good ſhall ſay,
Striking their penſive boſoms—Here lies Gay.

ANOTHER.

Well then! poor Gay lies under ground,
So there's an end of honeſt Jack:
So little juſtice here he found,
'Tis ten to one he'll ne'er come back.

XII.

INTENDED FOR SIR ISAAC NEWTON,

In Weſtminſter-Abbey.

ISAACUS NEWTONUS:
Quem Immortalem
Teſtantur Tempus, Natura, Cœlum:
Mortalem
Hoc marmor fatetur.

Nature, and nature's laws lay hid in night:
God ſaid, let Newton be! and all was light.

XIII.

ON DR. FRANCIS ATTERBURY,

BISHOP OF ROCHESTER,

Who died in Exile at Paris, 1732.

[His only Daughter having expired in his arms, immediately after ſhe arrived in France to ſee him.]

DIALOGUE.

SHE.

Yes, we have liv'd—one pang, and then we part!
May Heaven, dear father! now have all thy heart,
Yet ah! how once we lov'd, remember ſtill,
Till you are duſt like me.

HE.

Dear ſhade! I will:
Then mix this duſt with thine—O ſpotleſs ghoſt!
O more than fortune, friends, or country loſt!
Is there on earth, one care, one wiſh beſide!
Yes—Save my country, Heaven,
—He ſaid, and dy'd.

XIV.

ON EDMOND DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM,

Who died in the Nineteenth Year of his Age, 1735.

If modeſt youth, with cool reflection crown'd,
And every opening virtue blooming round,
Could ſave a parent's juſteſt pride from fate,
Or add one patriot to a ſinking ſtate;
This weeping marble had not aſk'd thy tear,
Or ſadly told, how many hopes lie here!
The living virtue now had ſhone approv'd,
The ſenate heard him, and his country lov'd.
Yet ſofter honours, and leſs noiſy fame
Attend the ſhade of gentle Buckingham:
In whom a race, for courage fam'd and art,
Ends in the milder merit of the heart;
And, chiefs or ſages long to Britain given,
Pays the laſt tribute of a ſaint to Heaven.

XV.

FOR ONE WHO WOULD NOT BE BURIED IN WEST-MINSTER-ABBEY.

Heroes and kings! your diſtance keep!
In peace let one poor poet ſleep,
Who never flatter'd folks like you:
Let Horace bluſh, and Virgil too.

ANOTHER, ON THE SAME.

Under this marble, or under this ſill,
Or under this turf, or e'en what they will;
Whatever an heir, or a friend in his ſtead,
Or any good creature ſhall lay o'er my head,
Lies one who ne'er car'd, and ſtill cares not a pin,
What they ſaid, or may ſay of the mortal within:
But who, living and dying, ſerene ſtill and free,
Truſts in God, that as well as he was, he ſhall be.

XVI.

LORD CONINGSBY'S EPITAPH *.

Here lies Lord Coningſby—be civil;
The reſt God knows—ſo does the Devil.

XVII.

ON BUTLER'S MONUMENT.

Perhaps by Mr. Pope.

Respect to Dryden, Sheffield juſtly pay'd,
And noble Villers honour'd Cowley's ſhade:
But whence this barber?—that a name ſo mean
Should, join'd with Butler's, on a tomb be ſeen:
This pyramid would better far proclaim,
To future ages, humbler Settle's name:
Poet and patron then had been well pair'd,
The city printer, and the city bard.

* This Epitaph, originally written on Picus Mirandula, is applied to F. Chartres, and printed among the works of Swift.

LETTER TO THE PUBLISHER,

OCCASIONED BY THE

FIRST CORRECT EDITION OF THE DUNCIAD.

It is with pleaſure I hear, that you have procured a correct copy of the Dunciad, which the many ſurreptitious ones have rendered ſo neceſſary; and it is yet with more, that I am informed it will be attended with a Commentary: a work ſo requiſite, that I cannot think the author himſelf would have omitted it, had he approved of the firſt appearance of this poem.

Such notes as have occurred to me, I herewith ſend you: you will oblige me by inſerting them amongſt thoſe which are, or will be, tranſmitted to you by others; ſince not only the author's friends, but even ſtrangers, appear engaged by humanity, to take ſome care of an orphan of ſo much genius and ſpirit, which its parent ſeems to have abandoned from the very beginning, and ſuffered to ſtep into the world naked, unguarded, and unattended.

It was upon reading ſome of the abuſive papers lately publiſhed, that my great regard to a perſon, whoſe friendſhip I eſteem as one of the chief honours of my life, and a much greater reſpect to truth, than to him or any man living, engaged me in inquiries, of which the encloſed notes are the fruit.

I perceived, that moſt of theſe authors had been (doubtleſs very wiſely) the firſt aggreſſors. They had tried, till they were weary, what was to be got by railing at each other: nobody was either concerned or ſurpriſed, if this or that ſcribbler was proved a dunce. But every one was curious to read what could be ſaid to prove Mr. Pope one, and was ready to pay ſomething for ſuch a diſcovery: a ſtratagem which would they fairly own, it might not only reconcile them to me, but ſcreen them from the reſentment of their lawful ſuperiors, whom they daily abuſe, only (as I charitably hope) to get that by them, which they cannot get from them.

I found this was not all: ill ſucceſs in that had tranſported them to perſonal abuſe, either of himſelf, or (what I think he could leſs forgive) of his friends. They had called men of virtue and honour bad men, long before he had either leiſure or inclination to call them bad writers: and ſome had been ſuch old offenders, that he had quite forgotten their perſons as well as their ſlanders, till they were pleaſed to revive them.

Now what had Mr. Pope done before, to incenſe them? He had publiſhed thoſe works which are in the hands of every body, in which not the leaſt mention is made of any of them. And what has he done ſince? He has laughed, and written the Dunciad. What has that ſaid of them? A very ſerious truth, which the public had ſaid before, that they were dull: and what it had no ſooner ſaid, but they themſelves were at great pains to procure, or even purchaſe, room in the prints, to teſtify under their hands to the truth of it.

I ſhould ſtill have been ſilent, if either I had ſeen any inclination in my friend to be ſerious with ſuch accuſers; or if they had only meddled with his writings; ſince whoever publiſhes, puts himſelf on his trial by his country. But when his moral character was attacked, and in a manner from which neither truth nor virtue can ſecure the moſt innocent; in a manner, which, though it annihilates the credit of the accuſation with the juſt and impartial, yet aggravates very much the guilt of the accuſers; I mean by authors without names; then I thought, ſince the danger was common to all, the concern ought to be ſo; and that it was an act of juſtice to detect the authors, not only on this account, but as many of them are the ſame who for ſeveral years paſt have made free with the greateſt names in church and ſtate, expoſed to the world the private misfortunes of families, abuſed all, even to women, and whoſe proſtituted papers

(for one or other party, in the unhappy diviſions of their country) have inſulted the fallen, the friendleſs, the exiled, and the dead.

Beſides this, which I take to be a public concern, I have already confeſſed I had a private one. I am one of that number who have long loved and eſteemed Mr. Pope; and had often declared it was not his capacity or writings (which we ever thought the leaſt valuable part of his character), but the honeſt, open, and beneficent man, that we moſt eſteemed, and loved in him. Now, if what theſe people ſay were believed, I muſt appear to all my friends either a fool, or a knave; either impoſed on myſelf, or impoſing on them; ſo that I am as much intereſted in the confutation of theſe calumnies, as he is himſelf.

I am no author, and conſequently not to be ſuſpected either of jealouſy or reſentment againſt any of the men, of whom ſcarce one is known to me by ſight; and as for their writings, I have ſought them (on this one occaſion) in vain, in the cloſets and libraries of all my acquaintance. I had ſtill been in the dark, if a gentleman had not procured me (I ſuppoſe from ſome of themſelves, for they are generally much more dangerous friends than enemies) the paſſages I ſend you. I ſolemnly proteſt I have added nothing to the malice or abſurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, ſince the vouchers themſelves will be ſo ſoon and ſo irrecoverably loſt. You may in ſome meaſure prevent it, by preſerving at leaſt their titles (a), and diſcovering (as far as you can depend on the truth of your information) the names of the concealed authors.

The firſt objection I have heard made to the poem, is, that the perſons are too obſcure for ſatire. The perſons themſelves, rather than allow the objection, would forgive the ſatire; and if one could be tempted to afford it a ſerious anſwer, were not all aſſaſſinates, popular inſurrections, the inſolence of the rabble without doors, and of domeſtics within, moſt wrongfully chaſtiſed, if the meanneſs of offenders indemnified them from puniſhment? On the contrary, obſcurity renders them more dangerous, as leſs thought of: law can pronounce judgment only on open facts: morality alone can paſs cenſure on intentions of miſchief; ſo that for ſecret calumny, or the arrow flying in the dark, there is no public puniſhment left, but what a good writer inflicts.

The next objection is, that theſe ſort of authors are poor. That might be pleaded as an excuſe at the Old Bailey, for leſſer crimes than defamation (for it is the caſe of almoſt all who are tried there), but ſure it can be none here: for who will pretend that the robbing another of his reputation ſupplies the want of it in himſelf? I queſtion not but ſuch authors are poor, and heartily wiſh the objection were removed by any honeſt livelihood. But poverty is here the accident, not the ſubject: he who deſcribes malice and villany to be pale and meagre, expreſſes not the leaſt anger againſt paleneſs or leanneſs, but againſt malice and villany. The apothecary in Romeo and Juliet is poor; but is he therefore juſtified in vending poiſon? Not but poverty itſelf becomes a juſt ſubject of ſatire, when it is the conſequence of vice, prodigality, or neglect of one's lawful calling; for then it increaſes the public burden, fills the ſtreets and highways with robbers, and the garrets with clippers, coiners, aed weekly journaliſts.

But omitting that two or three of theſe offend leſs in their morals than in their writings; muſt poverty make nonſenſe ſacred? If ſo, the ſame of bad authors would be much better conſulted than that of all the good ones in the world; and not one of an hundred had ever been called by his right name.

They miſtake the whole matter: it is not charity to encourage them in the way they follow, but to get them out of it; for men are not bunglers becauſe they are poor, but they are poor becauſe they are bunglers.

Is it not pleaſant enough, to hear our authors crying out on the one hand, as if their perſons and characters were too ſacred for ſatire; and the public objecting on the other, that they are too mean even for ridicule? But whether bread or fame be their end, it muſt be allowed, our author, by and in this poem, has mercifully given them a little of both.

There are two or three, who by their rank and fortune have no benefit from the former objections, ſuppoſing them good; and theſe I was ſorry to ſee in ſuch company. But if, without any provocation, two or three gentlemen will fall upon one, in an affair wherein his intereſt and reputation are equally embarked; they cannot certainly, after they have been content to print themſelves his enemies, complain of being put into the number of them.

Others, I am told, pretend to have been once his friends. Surely they are their enemies who ſay ſo; ſince nothing can be more odious than to treat a friend as they have done. But of this I cannot perſuade myſelf, when I conſider the conſtant and eternal averſion of all bad writers to a good one.

Such as claim a merit from being his admirers, I would gladly aſk, if it lays him under a perſonal obligation? At that rate, he would be the moſt obliged humble ſervant in the world. I dare ſwear for theſe in particular, he never deſired them to be his admirers, nor promiſed in return to be theirs: that had truly been a ſign he was of their acquaintance; but would not the malicious world have ſuſpected ſuch an approbation of ſome motive worſe than ignorance, in the author of the Eſſay on Criticiſm? Be it as it will, the reaſons of their admiration, and of his contempt, are equally ſubſiſting, for his works and theirs are the very ſame that they were.

One, therefore, of their aſſertions I believe may be true, "That he has a contempt for their writ-" ings." And there is another which would probably be ſooner allowed by himſelf than by any good judge beſide, "That his own have found too "much success with the public." But as it cannot consist with his modesty to claim this as a justice, it lies not on him, but entirely on the public, to defend its own judgment.

(a) Which we have done in a liſt printed in the Appendix.

There remains what in my opinion might seem a better plea for these people, than any they have made use of. If obscurity or poverty were to exempt a man from satire, much more should folly or dulness, which are still more involuntary; nay, as much so as personal deformity. But even this will not help them: deformity becomes an object of ridicule when a man sets up for being handsome; and so must dulness when he sets up for a wit. They are not ridiculed because ridicule in itself is, or ought to be, a pleasure; but because it is just to undeceive and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition, because particular interest ought to yield to general, and a great number who are not naturally fools, ought never to be made so, in complaisance to a few who are. Accordingly we find that in all ages, all vain pretenders, were they ever so poor or ever so dull, have been constantly the topics of the most candid satirists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau.

Having mentioned Boileau, the greatest poet and most judicious critic of his age and country, admirable for his talents, and yet perhaps more admirable for his judgment in the proper application of them; I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author, in qualities, fame, and fortune; in the distinctions shown them, by their superiors, in the general esteem of their equals, and in their extended reputation amongst foreigners; in the latter of which ours has met with the better fate, as he has had for his translators persons of the most eminent rank and abilities in their respective nations(b). But the resemblance holds in nothing more than in their being equally abused by the ignorant pretenders to poetry of their times; of which not the least memory will remain but in their own writings, and in the notes made upon them. What Boileau has done in almost all his poems, our author has only in this: I dare answer for him, he will do it in no more; and on this principle, of attacking few but who had slandered him, he could not have done it at all, had he been confined from censuring obscure and worthless persons, for scarce any other were his enemies. However, as the parity is so remarkable, I hope it will continue to the last; and if ever he should give us an edition of this poem himself, I may see some of them treated as gently, on their repentance or better merit, as Perrault and Quinault were at last by Boileau.

In one point I must be allowed to think the character of our English poet the more amiable. He has not been a follower of fortune or success; he has lived with the great without flattery; been a friend to men in power, without pensions, from whom, as he asked, so he received no favour, but what was done him in his friends. As his Satires were the more just for being delayed, so were his Panegyrics; bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, only for such virtues as he had long observed in them, and only at such times as others cease to praise, if not begin to calumniate them, I mean when out of power or out of fashion(c). A satire, therefore, on writers so notorious for the contrary practice, became no man so well as himself; as none, it is plain, was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused, namely the greatest and best of all parties. Let me add a further reason, that, though engaged in their friendships, he never espoused their animosities; and can almost singly challenge this honour, not to have written a line of any man, which, through guilt, through shame, or through fear, through variety of fortune, or change of interests, he was ever unwilling to own.

I shall conclude with remarking, what a pleasure it must be to every reader of humanity, to see all along, that our author, in his very laughter, is not indulging his own ill-nature, but only punishing that of others. As to his Poem, those alone are capable of doing it justice, who, to use the words of a great writer, know how hard it is (with regard both to his subject and his manner) "Vetustis dare novitatem, obsoletis nitorem, ob-"scuris lucem, fastiditis gratiam.

I am your most humble servant,

St. James's, Dec. 22. 1728. } WILLIAM CLELAND(d).

(b) Essay on Criticism in French verse, by General Hamilton; the same, in verse also, by Monsieur Roboton, Counsellor and Privy Secretary to King George I. after by the Abbé Reynel, in verse, with notes. Rape of the Lock, in French, by the Princess of Conti, Paris 1728; and in Italian verse, by the Abbé Conti, a noble Venetian; and the Marquis Rangoni, Envoy Extraordinary from Modena to King George II. Others of his works by Salvini of Florence, &c. His Essays and Dissertations on Homer, several times translated into French. Essay on Man, by the Abbé Reynel, in verse; by Monsieur Silhouet, in prose, 1737, and since by others in French, Italian, and Latin.

(c) As Mr. Wycherly, at the time the town declaimed against his book of Poems; Mr. Walsh, after his death; Sir William Trumball, when he had resigned the office of Secretary of State; Lord Bolingbroke, at his leaving England, after the queen's death; Lord Oxford, in his last decline of life; Mr. Secretary Craggs, at the end of the South-Sea year, and after his death: others only in epitaphs.

(d) This gentleman was of Scotland, and bred at the university of Utrecht, with the Earl of Mar. He served in Spain under Earl Rivers. After the peace, he was made one of the Commissioners of the Customs in Scotland, and then of taxes in England: in which, having shown himself for twenty years diligent, punctual, and incorruptible (though without any other assistance of fortune), he was suddenly displaced by the minister, in the sixty-eighth year of his age; and died two months after, in 1741. He was a person of universal learning, and an enlarged conversation; no man had a warmer heart for his friend, or a sincerer attachment to the constitution of his country.

DENNIS' REMARKS

ON PRINCE ARTHUR.

I CANNOT but think it the moſt reaſonable thing in the world, to diſtinguiſh good writers, by diſcouraging the bad. Nor is it an ill-natured thing, in relation even to the very perſons upon whom the reflections are made. It is true, it may deprive them, a little the ſooner, of a ſhort profit and a tranſitory reputation; but then it may have a good effect, and oblige them (before it be too late) to decline that for which they are ſo very unfit, and to have recourſe to ſomething in which they may be more ſucceſsful.

CHARACTER OF MR. P. 1716.

The perſons whom Boileau has attacked in his writings, have been for the moſt part authors, and moſt of thoſe authors, poets: and the cenſures he hath paſſed upon them have been confirmed by all Europe.

GILDON, Pref. to his NEW REHEARSAL.

It is the common cry of the poetaſters of the town, and their fautors, that it is an ill-natured thing to expoſe the pretenders to wit and poetry. The judges and magiſtrates may with full as good reaſon be reproached with ill-nature for putting the laws in execution againſt a thief or impoſtor.—The ſame will hold in the republic of letters, if the critics and judges will let every ignorant pretender to ſcribbling paſs on the world.

THEOBALD, Letter to Miſt, June 22, 1728.

Attacks may be levelled, either againſt failures in genius, or againſt the pretenſions of writing without one.

CONCANEN, Ded. to the Author of the DUNCIAD.

A Satire upon dulneſs is a thing that has been uſed and allowed in all ages.

Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, wicked ſcribbler!

TESTIMONIES OF AUTHORS
CONCERNING OUR POET AND HIS WORKS.

M. SCRIBLERUS LECTORI S.

BEFORE we preſent thee with our exercitations on this moſt delectable poem (drawn from the many volumes of our adverſaria on modern authors) we ſhall here, according to the laudable uſage of editors, collect the various judgments of the learned concerning our poet: various indeed, not only of different authors, but of the ſame author at different ſeaſons. Nor ſhall we gather only the teſtimonies of ſuch eminent wits, as would of courſe deſcend to poſterity, and conſequently be read without our collection; but we ſhall likewiſe with incredible labour ſeek out for divers others, which, but for this our diligence, could never, at the diſtance of a few months, appear to the eye of the moſt curious. Hereby thou mayeſt not only receive the delectation of variety, but alſo arrive at a more certain judgment, by a grave and circumſpect compariſon of the witneſſes with each other, or of each with himſelf. Hence alſo thou wilt be enabled to draw reflections, not only of a critical, but a moral nature, by being let into many particulars of the perſon as well as genius, and of the fortune as well as merit, of our author: in which, if I relate ſome things of little concern peradventure to thee, and ſome of as little even to him; I entreat thee to conſider how minutely all true critics and commentators are wont to inſiſt upon ſuch, and how material they ſeem to themſelves, if to none other. Forgive me, gentle reader, if (following learned example) I ever and anon become tedious: allow me to take the ſame pains to find whether my author were good or bad, well or ill-natured, modeſt or arrogant; as another, whether his author was fair or brown, ſhort or tall, or whether he wore a coat or a caſſock.

We propoſed to begin with his life, parentage, and education: but as to theſe, even his contemporaries do exceedingly differ. One ſaith, (a) he was educated at home; another (b) that he was bred at St. Omer's, by Jeſuits; a third (c) not at St. Omer's, but at Oxford! a fourth (d) that he had no univerſity education at all. Thoſe who allow him to be bred at home, differ as much concerning his tutor: one ſaith (e) he was kept by his father on purpoſe; a ſecond (f), that he was an itinerant prieſt; a third (g), that he was a parſon; one (h) calleth him a ſecular clergyman of the church of Rome; another (i), a monk. As little do they agree about his father, whom one (k) ſuppoſeth, like the father of Heſiod, a tradeſman or merchant; another (l), a huſbandman; another (m), a hatter, &c. Nor has an author been wanting to give our poet ſuch a father as Apuleius hath to Plato, Jamblichus to Pythagoras, and divers to Homer, namely a dæmon: for thus Mr. Gildon (n): "Certain it is, that his original is not from Adam, "but the devil; and that he wanteth nothing but "horns and tail to be the exact reſemblance of his "infernal father." Finding, therefore, ſuch contrariety of opinions, and (whatever be ours of this ſort of generation) not being fond to enter into controverſy, we ſhall defer writing the life of our poet, till authors can determine among themſelves what parents or education he had, or whether he had any education or parents at all.

Proceed we to what is more certain, his works, though not leſs uncertain the judgments concerning them; beginning with his Eſſay on Criticiſm, of which hear firſt the moſt ancient of critics,

(a) Giles Jacob's Lives of the Poets, vol. ii. in his Life. (b) Dennis's Reflections on the Eſſay on Crit.

(c) Dunciad diſſected, p. 4. (d) Guardian, No. 40. (e) Jacob's Lives, &c. vol. ii. (f) Dunciad diſſected, p. 4. (g) Farmer P. and his ſon. (h) Dunciad diſſected. (i) Characters of the Times, p. 45. (k) Female Dunciad, p. ult. (l) Dunciad diſſected. (m) Roome, Paraphraſe on the ivth of Geneſis, printed 1729. (n) Character of Mr. P. and his Writings, in a letter to a friend, printed for S. Popping, 1716, p. 10. Curll, in his Key to the Dunciad (firſt edit. ſaid to be printed for A. Dodd) in the 10*th page, declared Gildon to be the author of that libel; though, in the ſubſequent editions of his key, he left out this aſſertion, and affirmed (in the Curliad, p.* 4. and 8), that it was written by Dennis only.

MR. JOHN DENNIS.

" His precepts are falſe or trivial, or both; his " thoughts are crude and abortive, his expreſſions " abſurd, his numbers harſh and unmuſical; his " rhymes trivial and common—inſtead of majeſty, " we have ſomething that is very mean; inſtead of " gravity, ſomething that is very boyiſh; and in- " ſtead of perſpicuity and lucid order, we have but " too often obſcurity and confuſion." And in another place: " What rare numbers are here! " Would not one ſwear that this youngſter had " eſpouſed ſome antiquated muſe, who had ſued " out a divorce from ſome ſuperannuated ſinner, " upon account of impoterence; and who, being " poxed by the former ſpouſe, has got the gout in " her decrepid age, which makes her hobble ſo " damnably (o)."

No leſs peremptory is the cenſure of our hypercritical hiſtorian,

MR. OLDMIXON.

" I dare not ſay any thing of the Eſſay on Criti- " ciſm in verſe; but if any more curious reader " has diſcovered in it ſomething new, which is not " in Dryden's prefaces, dedications, and his Eſſay " on Dramatic Poetry, not to mention the French " critics, I ſhould be very glad to have the bene- " fit of the diſcovery (p)."

He is followed (as in fame, ſo in udgment) by the modeſt and ſimple-minded

MR. LEONARD WELSTED.

Who, out of great reſpect to our poet, not naming him, doth yet glance at his eſſay, together with the Duke of Buckingham's, and the criticiſms of Dryden, and of Horace, which he more openly taxeth: (q) " As to the numerous treatiſes, eſſays, " arts, &c. both in verſe and proſe, that have been " written by the moderns on this ground-work, " they do but hackney the ſame thoughts over " again, making them ſtill more trite. Moſt of " their pieces are nothing but a pert, inſipid heap " of common-place. Horace has, even in his " Art of Poetry, thrown out ſeveral things which " plainly ſhew, he thought an Art of Poetry was " of no uſe, even while he was writing one."

To all which great authorities, we can only oppoſe that of

MR. ADDISON,

" (r) The Art of Criticiſm (ſaith he) which " was publiſhed ſome months ſince, is a maſter- " piece in its kind. The obſervations follow one " another like thoſe in Horace's Art of Poetry, " without that methodical regularity which would " have been requiſite in a proſe writer. They " are ſome of them uncommon, but ſuch as the " reader muſt aſſent to, when he ſees them ex- " plained with that eaſe and perſpicuity in which " they are delivered. As for thoſe which are the " moſt known and the moſt received, they are " placed in ſo beautiful a light, and illuſtrated " with ſuch apt illuſions, that they have in them " all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, " who was before acquainted with them, ſtill " more convinced of their truth and ſolidity. " And here give me leave to mention what Mon- " ſieur Boileau has ſo well enlarged upon in the " preface to his works: that wit and fine writing " doth not conſiſt ſo much in advancing things that " are new, as in giving things that are known an a- " greeable turn. It is impoſſible for us, who live in " the latter ages of the world, to make obſervations " in criticiſm, morality, or any art or ſcience, " which have not been touched upon by others; " we have litttle elſe left us, but to repreſent the " common ſenſe of mankind in more ſtrong, " more beautiful, or more uncommon lights. If a " reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will " find but few precepts in it which he may not " meet with in Ariſtotle, and which were not " commonly known by all the poets of the Auguſ- " tan age. His way of expreſſing, and applying " them, not his invention of them, is what we " are chiefly to admire.

" Longinus, in his Reflections, has given us " the ſame kind of ſublime, which he obſerves in " the ſeveral paſſages that occaſioned them: I " cannot but take notice that our Engliſh author " has, after the ſame manner, exemplified ſeveral " of the precepts in the very precepts themſelves." He then produces ſome inſtances of a particular beauty in the numbers, and concludes with ſaying, that " there are three poems in our tongue of the " ſame nature, and each a maſter-piece in its " kind! The Eſſay on Tranſlated Verſe; the " Eſſay on the Art of Poetry; and the Eſſay on " Criticiſm."

Of Windſor Foreſt, poſitive is the judgment of the affirmative

MR. JOHN DENNIS,

" (s) That it is a wretched rhapſody, impudent- " ly writ in emulation of the Cooper's Hill of Sir " John Denham: the author of it is obſcure, is " ambiguous, is affected, is temerarious, is barba- " rous."

But the author of the Diſpenſary (t), in the preface to his poem of Claremont, differs from this opinion: " Thoſe who have ſeen theſe " two excellent poems of Cooper's Hill, and " Windſor Foreſt, the one written by Sir John " Denham, the other by Mr. Pope, will ſhew a " great deal of candor if they approve of this."

DR. GARTH,

Of the epiſtle to Eloiſa, we are told by the obſcure writer of a poem called Sawney, " That " becauſe Prior's Henry and Emma charmed the " fineſt taſtes, our author writ his Eloiſa in op- " poſition to it: but forgot innocence and virtue: " if you take away her tender thoughts, and her " fierce deſires, all the reſt is of no value." In

(o) Reflections critical and ſatirical on a Rhapſody, called, An Eſſay on Criticiſm. Printed for Bernard Lintot, octavo.

(p) Eſſay on Criticiſm in proſe, octavo, 1728, by the author of the Critical Hiſtory of England.

(q) Preface to his Poems, p. 18. 53.

(r) Spectator, No. 253.

(s) Letter to B. B. at the end of the Remarks on Popes Homer, 1717.

(t) Printed 1728, p. 12.

which, methinks, his judgment reſembleth that of a French taylor on a villa and gardens by the the Thames: "All this is very fine; but take "away the river, and it is good for nothing."

But very contrary hereunto was the opinion of

MR. PRIOR

himſelf, ſaying in his Alma (u),

O Abelard? ill-fated youth,
Thy tale will juſtify this truth:
But well I weet, thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's ſong:
Dan Pope, for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and ſkill has weav'd
A ſilken web; and ne'er ſhall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy ſad diſtreſs,
And Venus ſhall the texture bleſs, &c.

Come we now to his tranſlation of the Iliad, celebrated by numerous pens, yet ſhall it ſuffice to mention the indefatigable

SIR RICHARD BLACKMORE, Knight,

Who (though otherwiſe a ſevere cenſurer of our author) yet ſtyleth this a "laudable tranſlation (v)."

That ready writer

MR. OLDMIXON,

in his forementioned eſſay, frequently commends the ſame. And the painful

MR. LEWIS THEOBALD

thus extolls it (x), "The ſpirit of Homer breathes "all through this tranſlation.—I am in doubt, "whether I ſhould not admire the juſtneſs to the "original, or the force and beauty of the language, "or the ſounding variety of the numbers: but "when I find all theſe meet, it puts me in mind "of what the poet ſays of one of his heroes, "That he alone raiſed and flung with eaſe a "weighty ſtone, that two common men could "to lift from the ground; juſt ſo, one ſingle per"ſon has performed in this tranſlation, what I "once deſpaired to have ſeen done by the force "of ſeveral maſterly hands." Indeed the ſame gentleman appears to have changed his ſentiments in his Eſſay on the Art of Sinking in Reputation (printed in Miſt's Journal, March 30, 1728), where he ſays thus: "In order to ſink in repu"tation, let him take it into his head to deſcend "into Homer (let the world wonder, as it will, "how the devil he got there), and pretend to do "him into Engliſh, ſo his verſion denote his ne"glect of the manner how." Strange variation! We are told in

MIST'S JOURNAL, June 8.

"That this tranſlation of the Iliad was not in all "reſpects conformable to the fine taſte of his friend "Mr. Addiſon; inſomuch that he employed a "younger muſe in an undertaking of this kind, "which he ſupervifed himſelf." Whether Mr. Addiſon did find it conformable to his taſte, or not, beſt appears from his own teſtimony the year following its publication, in theſe words:

(u) Alma, Cant. 2.
(v) In his Eſſays, vol. 1. printed for E. Curll.
(x) Cenſor, vol. ii. n. 33.

MR ADDISON'S FREEHOLDER, N° 40.

"When I conſider myſelf as a Britiſh freeholder, "I am in a particular manner pleaſed with the la"bours of thoſe who have improved our language "with the tranſlations of old Greek and Latin "authors.—We have already moſt of their hiſto"rians in our own tongue, and, what is more for "the honour of our language, it has been taught "to expreſs with elegance the greateſt of their "poets in each nation. The illiterate among our "own countrymen may learn to judge from Dry"den's Virgil of the moſt perfect epic performance. "And thoſe parts of Homer which have been pub"liſhed already by Mr. Pope, give us reaſon to "think that the Iliad will appear in Engliſh with "as little diſadvantage to that immortal poem."

As to the reſt there is a ſlight miſtake, for this younger muſe was an elder: nor was the gentleman (who is a friend of our author) employed by Mr. Addiſon to tranſlate it after him, ſince he ſaith himſelf that he did it before (y). Contrariwiſe, that Mr. Addiſon engaged our author in this work appeareth by declaration thereof in the preface to the Iliad, printed ſome time before his death, and by his own letters of October 26, and November 2, 1713, where he declares it is his opinion that no other perſon was equal to it.

Next comes his Shakſpeare on the ſtage: "Let "him" (quoth one, whom I take to be

MR. THEOBALD, Miſt's Journal, June 8, 1728).

"publiſh ſuch an author as he has leaſt ſtudied, "and forget to diſcharge even the dull duty of an "editor. In this project let him lend the bookſel"ler his name (for a competent ſum of money) to "promote the credit of an exorbitant ſubſcription." Gentle reader, be pleaſed to caſt thine eye on the propoſal below quoted, and on what follows (ſome months after the former aſſertion) in the ſame Journaliſt of June 8, "The bookſeller propoſed "the book by ſubſcription, and raiſed ſome thou"ſand of pounds for the ſame: I believe the gen"tleman did not ſhare in the profits of this extra"vagant ſubſcription."

"After the Iliad, he undertook" (ſaith

MIST'S JOURNAL, June 8, 1728.)

"the ſequel of that work, the Odyſſey; and having "ſecured the ſucceſs by a numerous ſubſcription, "he employed ſome underlings to perform what, "according to his propoſals, ſhould come from his "own hands." To which heavy charge we can in truth oppoſe nothing but the words of

MR. POPE'S PROPOSAL FOR THE ODYSSEY

(printed by J. Watts, Jan. 10, 1724.),

"I take this occaſion to declare that the ſubſcrip"tion for Shakſpeare belongs wholly to Mr. Ton"ſon: and that the benefit of this propoſal is not "ſolely for my own uſe, but for that of two of my "friends, who have aſſiſted me in this work." But theſe very gentlemen are extolled above our Poet himſelf in another of Miſt's journals, March 30, 1728, ſaying, "That he would not adviſe Mr. "Pope to try the experiment again of getting a

(y) Vid. pref. to Mr. Tickell's tranſlation of the firſt book of the Iliad, 4to.

" great part of a book done by aſſiſtants, leſt thoſe " extraneous parts ſhould unhappily aſcend to the " ſublime, and retard the declenſion of the whole." Behold! theſe underlings are become good writers!

If any ſay, that before the ſaid propoſals were printed, the ſubſcription was begun without declaration of ſuch aſſiſtance; verily thoſe who ſet it on foot, or (as the term is) ſecured it, to wit, the right honourable the Lord Viſcount Harcourt, were he living, would teſtify; and the right honourable the Lord Bathurſt, now living, doth teſtify, the ſame is a falſehood.

Sorry I am, that perſons profeſſing to be learned, or of whatever rank of authors, ſhould either falſely tax, or be falſely taxed. Yet let us, who are only reporters, be impartial in our citations, and proceed.

MIST'S JOURNAL, June 8, 1728.

" Mr. Addiſon raiſed this author from obſcu- " rity, obtained him the acquaintance and friend- " ſhip of the whole body of our nobility, and trans- " ferred his powerful intereſts with thoſe great " men to this riſing bard, who frequently levied " by that means unuſual contributions on the " public." Which ſurely cannot be, if, as the author of the Dunciad Diſſected reporteth, Mr. Wycherly had before " introduced him into a " familiar acquaintance with the greateſt peers and " brighteſt wits then living."

" No ſooner (ſaith the ſame journaliſt) was his " body lifeleſs, but this author, reviving his reſent- " ment, libelled the memory of his departed friend; " and what was ſtill more heinous, made the ſcan- " dal public." Grievous the accuſation! unknown the accuſer! the perſon accuſed, no witneſs in his own cauſe; the perſon, in whoſe regard accuſed, dead! But if there be living any one nobleman whoſe friendſhip, yea any one gentleman whoſe ſubſcription Mr. Addiſon procured to our author, let him ſtand forth, that truth may appear! Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, ſed magis amica veritas. In verity, the whole ſtory of the libel is a lie; witneſs thoſe perſons of integrity, who, ſeveral years before Mr. Addiſon's deceaſe, did ſee and approve of the ſaid verſes, in no wiſe a libel, but a friendly rebuke ſent privately in our author's own hand to Mr. Addiſon himſelf, and never made public, till after their own journals, and Curll had printed the ſame. One name alone, which I am here authoriſed to declare, will ſufficiently evince this truth, that of the right honourable the Earl of Burlington.

Next is he taxed with a crime (in the opinion of ſome authors, I doubt, more heinous than any in morality), to wit, Plagiariſm, from the inventive and quaint-conceited

JAMES-MOORE SMITH, Gent.

" (z) Upon reading the third volume of Pope's " miſcellanies, I found five lines which I thought " excellent; and happening to praiſe them, a gen- " tleman produced a modern comedy (the Rival " Modes) publiſhed laſt year, where were the ſame " verſes to a title.

" Theſe gentlemen are undoubtedly the firſt " plagiaries, that pretend to make a reputation by " ſtealing from a man's works in his own life-time, " and out of a public print." Let us join to this what is written by the author of the Rival Modes, the ſaid Mr. James-Moore Smith, in a letter to our author himſelf, who had informed him a month before that play was acted, Jan. 27, 1726-7, that " Theſe verſes, which he had before given him " leave to inſert in it, would be known for his, " ſome copies being got abroad. He deſires, ne- " verthelefs, that ſince the lines had been read in " his comedy to ſeveral, Mr. P. would not deprive " it of them," &c. Surely, if we add the teſtimonies of the Lord Bolingbroke, of the Lady to whom the ſaid verſes were originally addreſſed, of Hugh Bethel, Eſq; and others, who knew them as our author's, long before the ſaid gentleman compoſed his play; it is hoped, the ingenious, that affect not error, will rectify their opinion by the ſuffrage of ſo honourable perſonages.

And yet followeth another charge, inſinuating no leſs than his enmity both to church and ſtate, which could come from no other informer than the ſaid

MR. JAMES-MOORE SMITH.

" (a) The Memoirs of a Pariſh Clerk was a very " dull and unjuſt abuſe of a perſon who wrote in " defence of our religion and conſtitution, and " who has been dead many years." This ſeemeth alſo moſt untrue; it being known to divers that theſe memoirs were written at the ſeat of the Lord Harcourt in Oxfordſhire, before that excellent perſon (Biſhop Burnet's) death, and many years before the appearance of that hiſtory, of which they are pretended to be an abuſe. Moſt true it is, that Mr. Moore had ſuch a deſign, and was himſelf the man who preſt Dr. Arbuthnot and Mr. Pope to aſſiſt him therein; and that he borrowed thoſe memoirs of our author, when that hiſtory came forth, with intent to turn them to ſuch abuſe. But being able to obtain from our author but one ſingle hint, and either changing his mind, or having more mind than ability, he contented himſelf to keep the ſaid memoirs, and read them as his own to all his acquaintance. A noble perſon there is, into whoſe company Mr. Pope once chanced to introduce him, who well remembereth the converſation of Mr. Moore to have turned upon the " contempt he had for the work of that reverend " prelate, and how full he was of a deſign he de- " clared himſelf to have of expoſing it." This noble perſon is the Earl of Peterborough.

Here in truth ſhould we crave pardon of all the foreſaid right honourable and worthy perſonages, for having mentioned them in the ſame page with ſuch weekly riff-raff railers and rhymers; but that we had their ever-honoured commands for the ſame; and that they are introduced not as witneſſes in the controverſy, but as witneſſes that cannot be controverted: not to diſpute, but to decide.

Certain it is, that dividing our writers into two claſſes, of ſuch who were acquaintance, and of ſuch who were ſtrangers to our author; the former are thoſe who ſpeak well, and the other thoſe who

(z) Daily Journal, March 18, 1728.

(a) Daily Journal, April 3, 1728.

ſpeak evil of him. Of the firſt claſs, the moſt noble

JOHN DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM

ſums up his character in theſe lines:

" (b) And yet ſo wondrous, ſo ſublime a thing,
" As the great Iliad, ſcarce could make me ſing,
" Unleſs I juſtly could at once commend
" A good companion, and as firm a friend;
" One moral, or a mere well-natur'd deed,
" Can all deſert in ſciences exceed."

So alſo is he decypher'd by the honourable

SIMON HARCOURT.

" (c) Say, wondrous youth, what column wilt
" thou chooſe,
" What laurel'd arch, for thy triumphant muſe?
" Though each great ancient court thee to his
" ſhrine, [thine,
" Though every laurel through the dome be
" Go to the good and juſt, and awful train!
" Thy ſoul's delight,——"

Recorded in like manner for his virtuous diſpoſition, and gentle bearing, by the ingenious

MR. WALTER HART,

in this apoſtrophe:

" (d) Oh! ever worthy, ever crown'd with
" praiſe!
" Bleſt in thy life, and bleſt in all thy lays,
" Add, that the Siſters every thought refine,
" And ev'n thy life be faultleſs as thy line,
" Yet envy ſtill with fiercer rage purſues,
" Obſcures the virtue, and defames the muſe,
" A ſoul like thine, in pain, in grief, reſign'd,
" Views with juſt ſcorn the malice of mankind."

The witty and moral ſatiriſt

DR. EDWARD YOUNG,

wiſhing ſome check to the corruption and evil manners of the times, calleth out upon our Poet to undertake a taſk ſo worthy of his virtue:

" (e) Why ſlumbers Pope, who leads the muſes
" train, [plain?"
" Nor hears that virtue, which he loves, com-

MR. MALLET,

in his Epiſtle on Verbal Criticiſm:

" Whoſe life, ſeverely ſcann'd, tranſcends his
" lays;
" For wit ſupreme, is but his ſecond praiſe;"

MR. HAMMOND,

That delicate and correct imitator of Tibullus, in his Love Elegies, Elegy xiv.

" Now, ſir'd by Pope and virtue, leave the age,
" In low purſuit of ſelf-undoing wrong,
" And trace the author through his moral page,
" Whoſe blameleſs life ſtill anſwers to his
" ſong."

MR. THOMSON,

in his elegant and philoſophical Poem of the Seaſons:

" Although not ſweeter his own Homer ſings,
" Yet is his life the more endearing ſong."

To the ſame tune alſo ſingeth that learned clerk, of Suffolk,

MR. WILLIAM BROOME,

" (f) Thus, nobly riſing in fair virtue's cauſe,
" From thy own life tranſcribe th' unerring
" laws."

And, to cloſe all, hear the reverend Dean of St. Patrick's:

" A ſoul with every virtue fraught,
" By patriots, prieſts, and poets taught.
" Whoſe filial piety excels
" Whatever Grecian ſtory tells.
" A genius for each buſineſs fit,
" Whoſe meaneſt talent is his wit," &c.

Let us now recreate thee by turning to the other ſide, and ſhowing his character drawn by thoſe with whom he never converſed, and whoſe countenances he could not know, though turned againſt him: firſt again commencing with the high voiced and never enough quoted

MR. JOHN DENNIS,

Who, in his Reflections on the Eſſay on Criticiſm, thus deſcribeth him: " A little affected hypocrite, " who has nothing in his mouth but candour, truth, " friendſhip, good-nature, humanity, and magna- " nimity. He is ſo great a lover of falſehood, " that, whenever he has a mind to calumniate his " contemporaries, he brands them with ſome defect " which was juſt contrary to ſome good quality, " for which all their friends and acquaintance " commend them. He ſeems to have a particular " pique to people of quality, and authors of that " rank.—He muſt derive his religion from St. " Omer's "—But in the character of Mr. P. and his writings, (printed by S. Popping, 1716, he ſaith, " Though he is a profeſſor of the worſt re- " ligion, yet he laughs at it;" but that, " never- " theleſs, he is a virulent papiſt; and yet a pillar " for the church of England."

Of both which opinions

MR. LEWIS THEOBALD

ſeems alſo to be; declaring in Miſt's Journal, of June 22, 1718, " That, if he is not ſhrewdly " abuſed, he made it his practice to cackle to both " parties in their own ſentiments." But, as to his pique againſt people of quality, the ſame journaliſt doth not agree, but ſaith (May 8, 1728), " He had, " by ſome means or other, the acquaintance and " friendſhip of the whole body of our nobility."

However contradictory this may appear, Mr. Dennis and Gildon, in the character laſt cited, make it all plain, by aſſuring us, " That he is a crea- " ture that reconciles all contradictions: he is a " beaſt, and a man; a Whig, and a Tory; a writer " (at one and the ſame time) of (g) Guardians " and Examiners; an aſſeſſor of liberty, and of " the diſpenſing power of kings; a Jeſuitical pro- " feſſor of truth; a baſe and a foul pretender to " candour." So that, upon the whole account, we muſt conclude him either to have been a great hypocrite, or a very honeſt man; a terrible impoſer upon both parties, or very moderate to either.

Be it as to the judicious reader ſhall ſeem good.

(b) Verſes to Mr. Pope on his tranſlation of Homer.
(c) Poem prefixed to his works.
(d) In his Poems, printed for B. Lintot.
(e) Univerſal Paſſion, Sat. i.
(f) In his Poems, and at the end of the Odyſſey.
(g) The names of two weekly papers.

ſure it is, he is little favoured of certain authors, whoſe wrath is perilous; for one declares he ought to have a price ſet on his head, and to be hunted down as a wild beaſt (b). Another proteſts that he does not know what may happen; adviſes him to enſure his perſon; ſays, he has bitter enemies, and expreſsly declares it will be well if he eſcapes with his life (i). One deſires he would cut his own throat, or hang himſelf (k). But Paſquin ſeemed rather inclined it ſhould be done by the government, repreſenting him engaged in grievous deſigns with a lord of parliament then under proſecution (l). Mr. Dennis himſelf hath written to a miniſter, that he is one of the moſt dangerous perſons in this kingdom (m); and aſſureth the public, that he is an open and mortal enemy to his country; a monſter, that will, one day, ſhow as daring a ſoul as a mad Indian, who runs a muck to kill the firſt Chriſtian he meets (n). Another gives information of treaſon diſcovered in his poem (o). Mr. Curll boldly ſupplies an imperfect verſe with kings and princeſſes (p). And one Matthew Concanen, yet more impudent, publiſhes at length the two moſt ſacred names in this nation, as members of the Dunciad (q)!

This is prodigious! yet it is almoſt as ſtrange, that in the midſt of theſe invectives his greateſt enemies have (I know not how) borne teſtimony to ſome merit in him.

MR. THEOBALD,

in cenſuring his Shakſpeare, declares, "He has ſo "great an eſteem for Mr. Pope, and ſo high an "opinion of his genius and excellencies; that, not-"withſtanding he profeſſes a veneration almoſt "riſing to idolatry for the writings of this inimi-"table poet, he would be very loth even to do "him juſtice, at the expence of that other gentle-"man's character (r)."

MR. CHARLES GILDON,

after having violently attacked him in many pieces, at laſt came to wiſh from his heart, "That Mr. "Pope would be prevailed upon to give us Ovid's "Epiſtles by his hand, for it is certain we ſee the "original of Sappho to Phaon with much more life "and likeneſs in his verſion, than in that of Sir "Car Scrope. And this (he adds) is the more to "be wiſhed, becauſe in the Engliſh tongue we have "ſcarcely any thing truly and naturally written "upon love (s)." He alſo, in taxing Sir Richard Blackmore for his heterodox opinions of Homer, challengeth him to anſwer what Mr. Pope hath ſaid in his Preface to that poet.

MR. OLDMIXON

calls him a great maſter of our tongue; declares "the purity and perfection of the Engliſh language "to be found in his Homer; and ſaying there are "more good verſes in Dryden's Virgil than in any "other work, except this of our author only (t).

The Author of a Letter to MR. CIBBER

ſays, "(u) Pope was ſo good a verſifier (once) "that his predeceſſor Mr. Dryden, and his contem-"porary Mr. Prior, excepted, the harmony of his "numbers is equal to any body's. And that he "had all the merit that a man can have that way." And

MR. THOMAS COOKE,

after much blemiſhing our author's Homer, crieth out,

"But in his other works what beauties ſhine,
"While ſweeteſt muſic dwells in every line!
"Theſe he admir'd, on theſe he ſtamp'd his praiſe,
"And bade them live to brighten future days (w)."

So alſo one who takes the name of the maker of certain verſes to Duncan Campbell (x), in that poem, which is wholly a ſatire upon Mr. Pope, confeſſeth,

H. STANHOPE,

"'Tis true, if fineſt notes alone could ſhow
"(Tun'd juſtly high, or regularly low)
"That we ſhould fame to theſe mere vocals give;
"Pope more than we can offer ſhould receive:
"For when ſome gliding river is his theme,
"His lines runs ſmoother than the ſmootheſt ſtream," &c.

MIST'S JOURNAL, June 8. 1728.

Although he ſays, "The ſmooth numbers of the "Dunciad are all that recommend it, nor has it "any other merit;" yet that ſame paper hath theſe words: "The author is allowed to be a perfect "maſter of an eaſy and elegant verſification. In "all his works we find the moſt happy turns, and "natural ſimilies, wonderfully ſhort, and thick "ſown."

The Eſſay on the Dunciad alſo owns, p. 25. it is very full of beautiful images. But the panegyric, which crowns all that can be ſaid on this poem, is beſtowed by our laureat, who "grants it to be a better poem of its kind than "ever was writ:" but adds, "it was a victory "over a parcel of poor wretches, whom it was al-

MR. COLLEY CIBBER,

(b) Theobald, Letter in Miſt's Journal, June 22, 1728.

(i) Smedley, Pref. to Gulliveriana, p. 14. 16.

(k) Gulliveriana, p. 332. (l) Anno 1723.

(m) Anno 1723.

(n) Preface to Rem. on the Rape of the Lock, p. 12. and in the laſt page of that treatiſe.

(o) Page 6, 7. of the Preface, by Concanen, to a book intituled, A Collection of all the Letters, Eſſays, Verſes, and Advertiſements, occaſioned by Pope and Swift's Miſcellanies. Printed for A. Moore, 8*vo*, 1712.

(p) Key to the Dunciad, 3*d edit. p.* 18.

(q) A Liſt of Perſons, &c. at the end of the foremention'd Collection of all the Letters, Eſſays, &c.

(r) Introduction to his Shakſpeare Reſtored, in quarto, p. 3

(s) Commentary on the Duke of Buckingham's Eſſay, 8*vo*, 1721, p. 97, 98.

(t) In his proſe Eſſay on Criticiſm.

(u) Printed by J. Roberts, 1742, p. 11.

(w) Battle of the Poets, folio, p. 15.

(x) Printed under the title of the Progreſs of Dulneſs, 12*mo*, 1728.

"most cowardice to conquer.—A man might as "well triumph for having killed so many silly flies "that offended him. Could he have let them "alone, by this time, poor souls! they had all been "buried in oblivion (y)." Here we see our excellent laureat allows the justice of the satire on every man in it but himself; as the great Mr. Dennis did before him.

The said MR. DENNIS and MR. GILDON, in the most furious of all their works (the forecited character, p. 5.) do in concert (z) confess, "That some men of good understanding value "him for his rhymes." And (p. 17.) "that he has "got, like Mr Bays in the Rehearsal (that is like "Mr. Dryden), a notable knack at rhyming, and "writing smooth verse."

Of his Essay on Man, numerous were the praises bestowed by his avowed enemies, in the imagination that the fame was not written by him, as it was printed anonymously.

Thus sang of it even

BEZALEEL MORRIS.

"Auspicious bard! while all admire thy strain,
"All but the selfish, ignorant, and vain;
"I, whom no bribe to servile flattery drew,
"Must pay the tribute to thy merit due:
"Thy muse sublime, significant, and clear,
"Alike informs the soul, and charms the ear."
&c.

And

MR. LEONARD WELTSTED

thus wrote (a) to the unknown author, on the first publication of the said essay; "I must own, after "the reception which the vilest and most immor-"al ribaldry hath lately met with, I was surpris-"ed to see what I had long despaired, a perfor-"mance deserving the name of a poet. Such, Sir, "is your work. It is indeed above all commen-"dation, and ought to have been published in an "age and country more worthy of it. If my tes-"timony be of any weight, you are sure to have "it in the amplest manner," &c &c. &c.

Thus we see every one of his works hath been extolled by one or other of his most inveterate enemies; and to the success of them all they do unanimously give testimony. But it is sufficient, instar omnium, to behold the great critic, Mr. Dennis, sorely lamenting it, even from the Essay on Criticism to this day of the Dunciad! "A most no-"torious instance (quoth he) of the depravity of "genius and taste, the approbation this essay meets "with (b).—I can safely affirm, that I never at-"tacked any of these writings, unless they had "success infinitely beyond their merit. This, "though an empty, has been a popular scribbler. "The epidemic madness of the times has given "him reputation (c).—If after the cruel treatment "so many extraordinary men (Spenser, Lord Ba-"con, Ben. Jonson, Milton, Butler, Otway, and "others) have received from this country, for "these last hundred years, I should shift the scene, "and show all that penury changed at once to riot "and profuseness; and more squandered away "upon one subject, than would have satisfied the "greater part of those extraordinary men; the "reader to whom this one creature should be un-"known, would fancy him a prodigy of art and "nature; would believe that all the great quali-"ties of these persons were centered in him alone. "But if I should venture to assure him that the "People of England had made such a choice, the "reader would believe me a malicious enemy, and "slanderer; or that the reign of the last (Queen "Anne's) ministry was designed by fate to en-"courage fools (d)."

But it happens, that this our poet never had any place, pension, or gratuity, in any shape, from the said glorious queen, or any of her ministers. All he owed, in the whole course of his life, to any court, was a subscription for his Homer, of 200 l. from King George I. and 100 l. from the prince and princess.

However, lest we imagine our author's success was constant and universal, they acquaint us of certain works in a less degree of repute, whereof, although owned by others, yet do they assure us, he is the writer. Of this sort, Mr. Dennis (e) ascribes to him two farces, whose names he does not tell; but assures us that there is not one jest in them: and an imitation of Horace, whose title he does not mention; but assures us it is much more execrable than all his works (f). The Daily Journal, May 11. 1728, assures us, "He is below Tom "Durfey in the drama; because, as that writer "thinks, the Marriage-hater matched, and the "Boarding-school, are better than the What d'ye "call it;" which is not Mr. P.'s, but Mr. Gay's.

(y) Cibber's Letter to Mr. Pope, p. 9.—12.

(z) In concert.] Hear how Mr. Dennis hath proved our mistake in this place: "As to my writing in concert with Mr. Gildon, I declare upon the honour and word of a gentleman, that I never wrote so much as one line in concert with any one man whatsoever. And these two letters from Gildon will plainly show, that we are not writers in concert with each other.

'Sir,

'—The height of my ambition is to please men of the best judgment; and finding that I have entertained my master agreeably, I have the extent of the reward of my labour.

'Sir,

'I had not the opportunity of hearing of your excellent pamphlet till this day. I am infinitely satisfied and pleased with it, and hope you will meet with that encouragement your admirable performance deserves,' &c.

'CH GILDON.'

"Now, is it not plain, that any one who sends such compliments to another, has not been used to write in partnership with him to whom he sends them?" Dennis, remarks on the Dunciad, p. 50. Mr. Dennis is therefore welcome to take this piece to himself.

(a) In a letter under his own hand, dated March 12. 1723.

(b) Dennis, pref. to his Reflect. on the the Essay on Criticism.

(c) Preface to his remarks on Homer.

(d) Rem. on Homer, p. 8, 9. (e) Ibi p. 8.

(f) Character of Mr. Pope, p. 7.

Mr. Gildon aſſuresus, in his New Rehearſal, (p. 48.) "That he was writing a play of the Lady Jane 'Grey;" but it afterwards proved to be Mr. Rowe's. We are aſſured by another, "He wrote "a pamphlet called Dr. Andrew Tripe (g);" which proved to be one Dr. Wagſtaff's. Mr. Theobald aſſures us, in Miſt of the 27th of April, "That the treatiſe of the Profound is very dull; "and that Mr. Pope is the author of it" The writer of Gulliveriana is of another opinion; and ſays, "The whole, or greateſt part of the merit of "this treatiſe muſt, and can only be aſcribed to "Gulliver (h)." [Here, gentle reader! cannot I but ſmile at the ſtrange blindneſs and poſitiveneſs of men; knowing the ſaid treatiſe to appertain to none other but to me, Martinus Scriblerus]

We are aſſured, in Miſt of June 8. "That his "own plays and farces would better have adorned "the Dunciad, than thoſe of Mr. Theobald; for he "had neither genius for tragedy nor comedy." Which, whether true or not, it is not eaſy to judge; in as much as he had attempted neither. Unleſs we will take it for granted, with Mr. Cibber, that his being once very angry at hearing a friend's play abuſed, was an infallible proof the play was his own; the ſaid Mr. Cibber thinking it impoſſible for a man to be much concerned for any but himſelf: "Now let any man judge (ſaith he) by "his concern, who was the true mother of the "child (i)?"

But from all that hath been ſaid, the diſcerning reader will collect, that it little availed our author to have any candour, ſince, when he declared he did not write for others, it was not credited; as little to have any modeſty, ſince, when he declined writing in any way himſelf, the preſumption of others was imputed to him. If he ſingly enterpriſed one great work, he was taxed of boldneſs and madneſs to a prodigy (k): If he took aſſiſtant in another, it was complained of, and repreſented as a great injury to the public (l). The loftieſt heroics; the loweſt ballads; treatiſes againſt the ſtate or church; ſatires on lords and ladies; raillery on wits and authors; ſquabbles with bookſellers; or even full and true accounts of monſters, poiſons, and murders; of any hereof was there nothing ſo good, nothing ſo bad, which hath not at one or other ſeaſon been to him aſcribed. If it bore no author's name, then lay he concealed; if it did, he fathered it upon that author, to be yet better concealed: If it reſembled any of his ſtyles, then was it evident; if it did not, then diſguiſed he it on ſet purpoſe. Yea, even direct oppoſitions in religion, principles, and politics, have equally been ſuppoſed in him inherent. Surely a moſt rare and ſingular character; of which let the reader make what he can.

Doubtleſs moſt commentators would hence take occaſion to turn all to their author's advantage, and from the teſtimony of his very enemies would affirm, that his capacity was boundleſs, as well as his imagination, that he was a perfect maſter of all ſtyles, and all arguments; and that there was in thoſe times no other writer, in any kind, of any degree of excellence, ſave he himſelf. But as this is not our own ſentiment, we ſhall determine o i nothing; but leave thee, gentle reader, to ſteer thy judgment equally between various opinions, and to chooſe whether thou wilt incline to the teſtimonies of authors avowed, or of authors concealed; of thoſe who knew him, or of thoſe who knew him not.

P.

(g) Character of Mr. Pope, p. 6.
(h) Gulliv p. 336.
(i) Cibber's Letter to Mr. P. p. 19.

(k) Burnet's Homerides, p. 1. of his tranſlation of the Iliad.
(l) The London and Miſt's Journals, on his undertaking the Odyſſey.

MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS

OF THE POEM.

THIS poem, as it celebrateth the moſt grave and ancient things, Chaos, Night, and Dulneſs; ſo is it of the moſt grave and ancient kind. Homer (ſaith Ariſtotle) was the firſt who gave the form, and (ſaith Horace) who adapted the meaſure to heroic poeſy. But even before this, may be rationally preſumed from what the ancients have left written, was a piece by Homer compoſed, of like nature and matter with this of our poet. For of epic ſort it appeareth to have been, yet of matter ſurely not unpleaſant; witneſs what is reported of it by the learned Archbiſhop Euſtathius, in Odyſſ. x. And accordingly Ariſtotle, in his Poetics, chap. iv. doth further ſet forth, that as the Iliad and Odyſſey gave example to tragedy, ſo did this poem to comedy its firſt idea.

From theſe authors alſo it ſhould ſeem, that the hero, or chief perſonage of it was no leſs obſcure, and his underſtanding and ſentiments no leſs quaint and ſtrange (if indeed not more ſo) than any of the actors of our poem. Margites was the name of this perſonage, whom antiquity recordeth to have been Dunce the firſt; and ſurely, from what we hear him, not unworthy to be the root of ſo ſpreading a tree, and ſo numerous a poſterity. The poem, therefore, celebrating him, was properly and abſolutely a Dunciad; which though now unhappily loſt, yet is its nature ſufficiently known by the infallible tokens aforeſaid. And thus it doth appear, that the firſt Dunciad was the firſt epic poem written by Homer himſelf, and anterior even to the Iliad or Odyſſey.

Now, foraſmuch as our poet hath tranſlated thoſe two famous works of Homer, which are yet left, he did conceive it in ſome ſort his duty to imitate that alſo which was loſt; and was therefore induced to beſtow on it the ſame form which Homer's is reported to have had, namely that of epic poem; with a title alſo framed after the ancient Greek manner, to wit, that of Dunciad.

Wonderful it is, that ſo few of the moderns have been ſtimulated to attempt ſome Dunciad! ſince, in the opinion of the multitude, it might coſt leſs pain and toil than an imitation of the greater epic. But poſſible it is alſo, that on due reflection the maker might find it eaſier to paint a Charlemagne, a Brute, or a Godfrey, with juſt pomp, and dignity heroic, than a Margites, a Codrus, or a Fleckno.

We ſhall next declare the occaſion and the cauſe which moved our poet to this particular work. He lived in thoſe days, when (after Providence had permitted the invention of printing as a ſcourge for the ſins of the learned) paper alſo became ſo cheap, and printers ſo numerous, that a deluge of authors covered the land: whereby not only the peace of the honeſt unwriting ſubject was daily moleſted, but unmerciful demands were made of his applauſe, yea of his money, by ſuch as would neither earn the one, nor deſerve the other. At the ſame time, the licence of the preſs was ſuch, that it grew dangerous to refuſe them either: for they would forthwith publiſh ſlanders unpuniſhed, the authors being anonymous, and ſkulking under the wings of publiſhers; a ſet of men who neither ſcrupled to vend either calumny or blaſphemy, as long as the town would call for it.

(a) Now our author, living in thoſe times, did conceive it an endeavour well worthy an honeſt ſatiriſt, to diſſuade the dull, and puniſh the wicked, the only way that was left. In that public-ſpirited view he laid the plan of this poem, as the greateſt ſervice he was capable (without much hurt, or being ſlain) to render his dear country. Firſt, taking things from their original, he conſidereth the cauſes creative of ſuch authors, namely Dulneſs and Poverty; the one born with them, the other contracted by neglect of their proper talents, through ſelf-conceit of greater abilities. This truth he wrappeth in an allegory (b) (as the conſtruction of epic poeſy requireth), and feigns that one of theſe goddeſſes had taken up her abode with the other, and that they jointly inſpired all ſuch writers, and ſuch works. (c) He proceedeth to ſhow the qualities they beſtow on theſe authors, and the effects they produce (d): then the materials, or ſtock, with which they furniſh them (e), and, above all, that ſelf-opinion (f) which cauſeth it to ſeem to themſelves vaſtly greater than it is, and is the prime motive of their ſetting up in this

(a) Vide Boſſu, Du Poem Epique, chap. viii.
(b) Boſſu, chap. vii.
(c) Book i. ver. 32. &c.
(d) Ver. 45. to 54.
(e) Ver. 57. to 77.
(f) Book i. ver. 80.

ſad and ſorry merchandiſe. The great power of theſe goddeſſes acting in alliance (whereof as the one is the mother of induſtry, ſo is the other of plodding) was to be exemplified in ſome one great and remarkable action: (g) and none could be more ſo than that which our poet hath choſen, viz. the reſtoration of the reign of Chaos and Night, by the miniſtry of Dulneſs their daughter, in the removal of her imperial ſeat from the city to the polite world; as the action of the Æneid is the reſtoration of the empire of Troy, by the removal of the race from thence to Latium. But as Homer ſingeth only the wrath of Achilles, yet includes in his poem the whole hiſtory of the Trojan war; in like manner, our author hath drawn into this ſingle action the whole hiſtory of Dulneſs, and her children.

A perſon muſt next be fixed upon to ſupport this action. This phantom in the poet's mind muſt have a name (b): he finds it to be ———: and he becomes of courſe the hero of the poem.

The fable being thus, according to the beſt example, one and entire, as contained in the propoſition; the machinery is a continued chain of allegories, ſetting forth the whole power, miniſtry, and empire of Dulneſs, extended through her ſubordinate inſtruments, in all her various operations.

This is branched into epiſodes; each of which hath its moral apart, though all conducive to the main end. The crowd aſſembled in the ſecond book, demonſtrates the deſign to be more extenſive than to bad poets only; and that we may expect other epiſodes of the patrons, encouragers, or paymaſters of ſuch authors, as occaſion ſhall bring them forth. And the third book, if well conſidered, ſeemeth to embrace the whole world. Each of the games relateth to ſome or other vile claſs of writers: the firſt concerneth the plagiary, to whom he giveth the name of Moore; the ſecond, the libellous noveliſt, whom he ſtyleth Eliza; the third, the flattering dedicator; the fourth, the bawling critic, or noiſy poet; the fifth, the dark and dirty party-writer; and ſo of the reſt: aſſigning to each ſome proper name or other, ſuch as he could find.

As for the characters, the public hath already acknowledged how juſtly they are drawn: the manners are ſo depicted, and the ſentiment ſo peculiar to thoſe to whom applied, that ſurely to transfer them to any other or wiſer perſonage, would be exceeding difficult: and certain it is, that every perſon concerned, being conſulted apart, hath readily owned the reſemblance of every portrait, his own excepted. So Mr. Cibber calls them, "a parcel of poor wretches, ſo many ſilly "flies (i):" but adds, our author's wit is remarkably "more bare and barren, whenever it would "fall foul on Cibber, than upon any other perſon "whatever."

The deſcriptions are ſingular; the compariſons very quaint; the narration various, yet of one colour: the purity and chaſtity of diction is ſo preſerved, that in the places moſt ſuſpicious, not the words, but only the images have been cenſured; and yet are thoſe images no other than have been ſanctified by ancient and claſſical authority (though, as was the manner of thoſe good times, not ſo curiouſly wrapped up), yea, and commented upon by the moſt grave doctors, and approved critics.

As it beareth the name of epic, it is thereby ſubject to ſuch ſevere indiſpenſible rules as are laid on all neoterics, a ſtrict imitation of the ancients; inſomuch that any deviation, accompanied with whatever poetic beauties, hath always been cenſured by the ſound critic. How exact that limitation hath been in this piece, appeareth not only by its general ſtructure, but by particular illuſions infinite, many whereof have eſcaped both the commentator and poet himſelf; yea divers, by his exceeding diligence, are ſo altered and interwoven with the reſt, that ſeveral have already been, and more will be, by the ignorant, abuſed as altogether and originally his own.

In a word, the whole poem proveth itſelf to be the work of our author, when his faculties were in full vigour and perfection; at that exact time when years have ripened the judgment, without diminiſhing the imagination: which, by good critics, is held to be punctually at forty. For at that ſeaſon it was that Virgil finiſhed his Georgics; and Sir Richard Blackmore at the like age compoſing his Arthurs; declared the ſame to be the very acme and pitch of life for epic poeſy: though ſince he hath altered it to ſixty, the year in which he publiſhed his Alfred (k). True it is, that the talents for criticiſm, namely ſmartneſs, quick cenſure, vivacity of remark, certainty of aſſeveration, indeed all but acerbity, ſeem rather the gifts of youth, than of riper age: but it is far otherwiſe in poetry; witneſs the works of Mr. Rymer and Mr. Dennis; who beginning with criticiſm, became afterwards ſuch poets as no age hath paralleled. With good reaſon, therefore, did our author chooſe to write his eſſay on that ſubject at twenty, and reſerve for his maturer years this great and wonderful work of the Dunciad.

(g) Ibid. chap vii. viii.
(b) Boſſu, chap. viii. Vide Ariſt. Poet, cap. ix.

(i) Cibber's letter to Mr. P. p. 9, 12, 45.
(k) See his Eſſays.

RICARDUS ARISTARCHAS

OF THE HERO OF THE POEM.

Of the nature of Dunciad in general, whence derived, and on what authority founded, as well as of the art and conduct of this our Poem in particular, the learned and laborious Scriblerus hath, according to his manner, and with tolerable share of judgment, dissertated. But when he cometh to speak of the person of the hero fitted for such poem, in truth he miserably halts and hallucinates: for, misled by one Monsieur Bossu, a Gallic critic, he prateth of I cannot tell what phantom of a hero, only raised up to support the fable. A putrid conceit! As if Homer and Virgil, like modern undertakers, who first build their house and then seek out for a tenant, had contrived the story of a war and a wandering, before they once thought either of Achilles or Æneas. We shall therefore set our good brother and the world also right in this particular, by assuring them, that, in the greater epic, the prime intention of the muse is to exalt heroic virtue, in order to propagate the love of it among the children of men; and consequently that the poet's first thought must needs be turned upon a real subject meet for laud and celebration; not one whom he is to make, but one whom he may find, truly illustrious. This is the primum mobile of his poetic world, whence every thing is to receive life and motion. For, this subject being found, he is immediately ordained, or rather acknowledged, an hero, and put upon such action as befitteth the dignity of his character.

But the muse ceaseth not here her eagle-flight. For sometimes, satiated with the contemplation of these sons of glory, she turneth downward on her wing, and darts with Jove's lightning on the goose and serpent kind. For we may apply to the muse in her various moods, what an ancient master of wisdom affirmeth of the Gods in general: "Si Dii "non irascuntur impiis et injustis, nec pios utique "justosque diligunt. In rebus enim diversis, aut in "in utramque partem moveri necesse est, aut in "neutram. Itaque qui bonos diligit, et malos odit; "et qui malos non odit, nec bonos diligit. Quia "et diligere bonos ex odio malorum venit; et ma-"los odisse ex bonorum caritate descendit." Which in our vernacular idiom may be thus interpreted: "If the Gods be not provoked at evil men, neither are they delighted with the good and just. "For contrary objects must either excite contrary "affections, or no affections at all. So that he who "loveth good men, must at the same time hate the "bad; and he who hateth not bad men, cannot love "the good; because to love good men proceedeth "from an aversion to evil, and to hate evil men "from a tenderness to the good." From this delicacy of the muse arose the little epic, (more lively and choleric than her elder sister, whose bulk and complexion incline her to the phlegmatic): and for this, some notorious vehicle of vice and folly was sought out, to make thereof an example. An early instance of which (nor could it escape the accurate Scriblerus) the father of epic poem himself affordeth us. From him the practice descended to the Greek dramatic poets, his off-spring; who, in the composition of their Tetralogy, or set of four pieces, were wont to make the last a satiric tragedy. Happily, one of these ancient Dunciads) as we may well term it) is come down unto us, amongst the tragedies of the poet Euripides. And what doth the reader suppose may be the subject thereof? Why in truth, and it is worthy observation, the unequal contest of an old, dull, debauched buffoon Cyclops, with the heaven-directed favourite of Minerva; who, after having quietly borne all the monster's obscene and impious ribaldry, endeth the farce in punishing him with the mark of an indelible brand in his forehead. May we not then be excused, if, for the future, we consider the epics of Homer, Virgil, and Milton, together with this our poem, as a complete Tetralogy; in which the last worthily holdeth the place or station of the satiric piece?

Proceed we therefore in our subject. It hath been long, and alas for pity! still remaineth a question, whether the hero of the greater epic should be an honest man; or as the French critics express it, un honnête homme (a): but it never admitted of a doubt, but that the hero of the little epic should be just the contrary. Hence, to the advantage of our Dunciad, we may observe, how much juster the moral of that poem must needs be, where ſo important a queſtion is previouſly decided.

(a) Si un Heros Poët'que doit être un honnête homme. Bossu, du Poëme Epique, liv. v. ch. 5.

But then it is not every knave, nor (let me add) every fool, that is a fit ſubject for a Dunciad. There muſt ſtill exiſt ſome analogy, if not reſemblance of qualities between the heroes of the two poems; and this, to admit of what neoteric critics call the parody, one of the livelieſt graces of the little epic. Thus it being agreed that the conſtituent qualities of the greater epic hero, are wiſdom, bravery, and love, from whence ſpringeth heroic virtue; it followeth, that thoſe of the leſſer epic hero ſhould be vanity, aſſurance, and debauchery, from which aſſemblage reſulteth heroic dulneſs, the never-dying ſubject of this our poem.

This being ſettled, come we now to particulars. It is the character of true wiſdom, to ſeek its chief ſupport and confidence within itſelf; and to place that ſupport in the reſources which proceed from a conſcious rectitude of will.—And are the advantages of vanity, when ariſing to the heroic ſtandard, at all ſhort of this ſelf-complacence? Nay, are they not, in the opinion of the enamoured owner, far beyond it? "Let the world (will ſuch "an one ſay) impute to me what folly or weakneſs "they pleaſe; but till wiſdom can give me ſome-"thing that will make me more heartily happy, "I am content to be GAZED AT (b)." This, we ſee, is vanity according to the heroic gage or meaſure; not that low and ignoble ſpecies which pretendeth to virtues we have not; but the laudable ambition of being gazed at for glorying in thoſe vices, which every body knows we have. "The world may aſk "(ſays he) why I make my follies public? Why "not? I have paſſed my life very pleaſantly with "them" In ſhort, there is no ſort of vanity ſuch a hero would ſcruple, but that which might go near to degrade him from his high ſtation in this our Dunciad; namely, "whether it would not be "vanity in him, to take ſhame to himſelf for not "being a wiſe man?"

Bravery, the ſecond attribute of the true hero, is courage manifeſting itſelf in every limb; while its correſpondent virtue in the mock hero, is, that ſame courage all collected into the face. And as power, when drawn together, muſt needs have more force and ſpirit than when diſperſed, we generally find this kind of courage in ſo high and heroic a degree, that it inſults not only men, but Gods. Mezentius is, without doubt, the braveſt character in all the Æneis: but how? His bravery, we know, was an high courage of blaſphemy. And can we ſay leſs of this brave man's, who having told us that he placed his "ſummum "bonum in thoſe follies, which he was not con-"tent barely to poſſeſs, but would likewiſe glory "in," adds, "If I am miſguided, 'TIS NATURE'S "FAULT, and I follow HER (c)." Nor can we be miſtaken in making this happy quality a ſpecies of courage, when we conſider thoſe illuſtrious marks of it, which made his FACE "more known (as he "juſtly boaſteth) than moſt in the kingdom;" and his language to conſiſt of what we muſt allow to be the moſt daring figure of ſpeech, that which is taken from the name of God Gentle love, the next ingredient in the true hero's compoſition, is a mere bird of paſſage, or (as Shakſpeare calls it) ſummer-teeming luſt, and evaporates in the heat of youth; doubtleſs by that refinement it ſuffers in paſſing through thoſe certain ſtrainers which our poet ſomewhere ſpeaketh of. But when it is let alone to work upon the lees, it acquireth ſtrength by old age; and becometh a laſting ornament to the little epic. It is true, indeed, there is one objection to its firneſs for ſuch an uſe: for not only the ignorant may think it common, but it is admitted to be ſo, even by him who beſt knoweth its value. "Dont you think "(argueth he), to ſay 'only a man has his "whore (d),'" "ought to go for little or nothing? "Becauſe defendit numerus: take the firſt ten thou-"ſand men you meet, and, I believe, you would "be no loſer if you betted ten to one, that every "ſingle ſinner of them, one with another, has "been guilty of the ſame frailty (e)." But here he ſeemeth not to have done juſtice to himſelf: the man is ſure enough a hero, who hath his lady at fourſcore. How doth his modeſty herein leſſen the merit of a whole well-ſpent life: not taking to himſelf the commendation (which Horace accounted the greateſt in a theatrical character) of continuing to the very dregs the ſame he was from the beginning,

"——Servetur ad IMUM
"Qualis ab incepto proceſſerat——"

But here, in juſtice both to the poet and the hero, let us farther remark, that the calling her his whore, implied ſhe was his own, and not his neighbour's. Truly a commendable continence! and ſuch as Scipio himſelf muſt have applauded. For how much ſelf-denial was neceſſary not to covet his neighbour's whore? and what diſorders muſt the coveting her have occaſioned in that ſociety, where (according to this political calculator) nine in ten of all ages have their concubines!

We have now, as briefly as we could adviſe, gone through the three conſtituent qualities of either hero. But it is not in any, or in all of theſe that heroiſm properly or eſſentially reſideth. It is a lucky reſult rather from the colliſion of theſe lively qualities againſt one another. Thus, as from wiſdom, bravery, and love, ariſeth magnanimity, the object of admiration, which is the aim of the greater epic; ſo from vanity, aſſurance, and debauchery, ſpringeth buffoonry, the ſource of ridicule, that "laughing ornament," as he well termeth it (f), of the little epic.

(b) Def. to the Life of C. C.
(c) Life of C. C. p. 23. o.f. edit.

(d) Alluding to theſe lines in the Epiſt. to Dr. Arbuthnot:

"And has not Colly ſtill his lord and whore,
"His butchers Henley, his free-maſon Moore?".

(e) Letter to Mr. P. p. 46.
(f) Letter to Mr. P. p. 31.

He is not ashamed (God forbid he ever should be ashamed!) of this character; who deemeth, that not reason but risibility distinguisheth the human species from the brutal. "As nature (saith this "profound philosopher) distinguisheth our species "from the mute creation by our risibility, her "design must have been by that faculty as evi-"dently to raise our HAPPINESS, as by our Os "sublime (OUR ERECTED FACES) to lift the dignity "of OUR FORM above them (i)." All this considered, how complete a hero must he be, as well as how happy a man, whose risibility lieth, not barely in his muscles, as in the common sort, but (as himself informeth us) in his very spirits? and whose Os sublime is not simply an erect face, but a brazen head; as should seem by his preferring it to one of iron, said to belong to the late king of Sweden?

But whatever personal qualities a hero may have, the examples of Achilles and Æneas show us, that all those are of small avail, without the constant assistance of the GODS: for the subversion and erection of empires have never been adjudged the work of man. How greatly soever then we may esteem of his high talents, we can hardly conceive his personal prowess alone sufficient to restore the decayed empire of Dulness. So weighty an atchievement must require the particular favour and protection of the GREAT; who being the natural patrons and supporters of letters, as the ancient Gods were of Troy, must first be drawn off and engaged in another interest, before the total subversion of them can be accomplished. To surmount, therefore, this last and greatest difficulty, we have, in this excellent man, a professed favourite and intimado of the great. And look, of what force ancient piety was to draw the gods into the party of Æneas, that, and much stronger is modern incense, to engage the great in the party of Dulness.

Thus have we essayed to pourtray or shadow out, this noble imp of fame. But now the impatient reader will be apt to say, If so many and various graces go to the making up a hero, what mortal shall suffice to bear his character? Ill hath he read, who seeth not, in every trace of this picture, that individual, ALL-ACCOMPLISHED PERSON, in whom these rare virtues and lucky circumstances have agreed to meet and concentre with the strongest lustre and fullest harmony.

The good Scriblerus indeed, nay the world itself, might be imposed on, in the late spurious editions, by I can't tell what sham hero or phantom: but it was not so easy to impose on HIM whom this egregious error most of all concerned. For no sooner had the fourth book laid open the high and swelling scene, but he recognized his own heroic acts: and when he came to the words,

"Soft on her lap her laureat son reclines,"

(though laureat imply no more than one crowned with laurel, as befitteth any associate or consort in empire), he loudly resenteth this dignity to violated majesty. Indeed, not without cause, he being there represented as fast asleep; so misbeseeming the eye of empire, which, like that of Providence, should never doze nor slumber. "Hah! "(saith he), fast asleep, it seems! that's a little "too strong. Pert and dull at least you might "have allowed me, but as seldom asleep as any "fool (l)." However, the injured hero may comfort himself with this reflection, that though it be a sleep, yet it is not the sleep of death, but of immortality. Here he will (m) live at least, though not awake; and in no worse condition than many an enchanted warrior before him. The famous Durandante, for instance, was, like him, cast into a long slumber by Merlin the British bard and necromancer; and his example for submitting to it with a good grace, might be of use to our hero. For that disastrous knight being sorely pressed or driven to make his answer by several persons of quality, only replied with a sigh, Patience, and shuffle the cards (n).

But now, as nothing in this world, no not the most sacred and perfect things, either of religion or government, can escape the sting of envy, methinks I already hear these carpers objecting to the clearness of our hero's title.

It would never (say they) have been esteemed sufficient to make an hero for the Iliad or Æneis, that Achilles was brave enough to overturn one empire, or Æneas pious enough to raise another, had they not been goddess-born, and princes bred. What then did this author mean, by erecting a player instead of one of his patrons (a person, "never a hero even on the stage," to this dignity of colleague in the empire of dulness, and atchiever of a work that neither old Omar, Attila, nor John of Leyden, could entirely bring to pass.

To all this we have, as we conceive, a sufficient answer from the Roman historian, "Fabrum esse "suæ quemque fortunæ:" that every man is the smith of his own fortune. The politic Florentine, Nicholas Machiavel, goeth still further, and affirmeth that a man needeth but to believe himself a hero to be one of the worthiest. "Let him (saith "he) but fancy himself capable of the highest "things, and he will of course be able to atchieve "them." From this principle it follows, that nothing can exceed our hero's prowess; as nothing ever equalled the greatness of his conceptions. Hear how he constantly paragons himself; at one time to Alexander the Great, and Charles the XII. of Sweden for the excess and delicacy of his ambition; to Henry the IV. of France, for honest policy; to the first Brutus, for love of liberty; and to Sir Robert Walpole, for good government while in power: at another time, to the godlike Socrates for his diversions and amusements: to Horace, Montaigne, and Sir William Temple, for an elegant vanity that maketh them for ever read and admired; to two Lord Chancellors, for law, from whom, when confederate against him at the bar, he carried away the prize of elo-

(i) Letter, p. 8.

(l) Letter, p. 53.
(m) Letter, p. 1.
(n) Don Quixotte, part ii. book ii. ch. 22.

quence; and, to say all in a word, to the right reverend the Lord Bishop of London himself, in the art of writing pastoral letters.

Nor did his actions fall short of the sublimity of his conceit. In his early youth he met the revolution face to face in Nottingham; at a time when his betters contented themselves with following her. It was here he got acquainted with old battle-array, of whom he hath made so honourable mention in one of his immortal odes. But he shone in courts as well as in camps: he was called up when the nation fell in labour of this revolution; and was a gossip at her christening, with the bishop and the ladies.

As to his birth, it is true he pretendeth no relation either to Heathen god or goddess; but, what is as good, he was descended from a maker of both (p). And that he did not pass himself on the world for a hero, as well by birth as education, was his own fault: for his lineage he bringeth into his life as an anecdote, and is sensible he had it in his power to be thought nobody's son at all; and what is that but coming into the world a hero?

But be it, (the punctilious laws of epic poesy so requiring) that a hero of more than mortal birth must needs be had: even for this we have a remedy. We can easily derive our hero's pedigree from a goddess of no small power and authority amongst men; and legitimate and install him after the right classical and authentic fashion: for, like as the ancient sages found a son of Mars in a mighty warrior; a son of Neptune in a skilful seamen; a son of Phœbus in a harmonious poet; so have we here, if need be, a son of Fortune in an artful gamester. And who fitter than the offspring of Chance, to assist in restoring the empire of Night and Chaos?

There is in truth another objection of greater weight, namely, "That this hero still existeth, "and hath not yet finished his earthly course.— "For if Solon said well,

——ultima semper
Expectanda dies homini: dicique beatus
Ante obitum nemo supremaque funera debet!

"if no man can be called happy till his death, "surely much less can any one, till then, be pro- "nounced a hero: this species of men being far "more subject than others to the caprices of for- "tune and humour." But to this also we have an answer, that will (we hope) be deemed decisive. It cometh from himself; who, to cut this matter short, hath solemnly protested that he will never change or amend.

With regard to his vanity, he declareth that nothing shall ever part them. "Nature (saith he) "hath amply supplied me in vanity; a plea- "sure which neither the pertness of wit, nor the "gravity of wisdom, will ever persuade me to "part with." Our poet had charitably endeavoured to administer a cure to it: but he telleth us plainly, "My superiors perhaps may be mend- "ed by him; but for my part I own myself in- "corrigible. I look upon my follies as the best "part of my fortune." And with good reason; we see to what they have brought him!

Secondly, as to buffoonry, "Is it (saith he) a "time of day for me to leave off these fooleries, "and set up a new character? I can no more "put off my follies than my skin; I have often "tried, but they stick too close to me: nor "am I sure my friends are displeased with them, "for in this light I afford them frequent matter "of mirth, &c." Having then so publicly declared himself incorrigible, he is become dead in law (I mean the law Epopœian) and devolveth upon the poetas his property; who may take him, and deal with him as if he had been dead as long as an old Egyptian hero; that is to say, embowel and embalm him for posterity.

Nothing therefore (we conceive) remaineth to hinder his own prophecy of himself from taking immediate effect. A rare felicity! and what few prophets have had the satisfaction to see, alive!— Nor can we conclude better than with that extraordinary one of his, which is conceived in these oraculous words, My dulness will find somebody to do it right.

"Tandem Phœbus adest, morsusque inferre pa- "rantem
"Congelat, et patulos, ut erunt, induat hia- "tus." (a)

(p) A Statuary.

(a) Ovid, of the serpent biting at Orpheus's head.

THE DUNCIAD.

BY AUTHORITY.

By virtue of the Authority in Us veſted by the Act for ſubjecting Poets to the power of a Licenſer, we have reviſed this Piece; where finding the ſtyle and appellation of KING to have been given to a certain Pretender, Pſeudo-Poet, or Phantom, of the name of TIBBALD; and apprehending the ſame may be deemed in ſome ſort a Reflection on Majeſty, or at leaſt an inſult on that Legal Authority which has beſtowed on another perſon the Crown of Poeſy: We have ordered the ſaid Pretender, Pſeudo-Poet, or Phantom, utterly to vaniſh and evaporate out of this work: And do declare the ſaid Throne of Poeſy from henceforth to be abdicated and vacant, unleſs duly and lawfully ſupplied by the Laureate himſelf. And it is hereby enacted, that no other perſon do preſume to fill the ſame.

OC. Ch.

TO DR. JONATHAN SWIFT.

BOOK I.

THE ARGUMENT.

THE propoſition, the invocation, and the inſcription. Then the original of the great empire of dulneſs, and cauſe of the continuance thereof. The college of the goddeſs in the city, with her private academy for poets in particular; the governors of it, and the four cardinal virtues. Then the poem haſtes into the midſt of things, preſenting her, on the evening of a Lord Mayor's day, revolving the long ſucceſſion of her ſons, and the glories paſt and to come. She fixes her eyes on Bays * to be the inſtrument of that great event which is the ſubject of the poem. He is deſcribed penſive among his books, giving up the cauſe, and apprehending the period of her empire: After debating whether to betake himſelf to the church, or to gaming, or to party writing, he raiſes an altar of proper books, and (making firſt his ſolemn prayer and declaration) purpoſes thereon to ſacrifice all his unſucceſsful writings. As the pile is kindled, the goddeſs beholding the flame from her ſeat, flies and puts it out by caſting upon it the poem of Thulé. She forthwith reveals herſelf to him, tranſports him to her temple, unfolds her arts, and initiates him into her myſteries; then annouucing the death of Eusden the poet laureat, anoints him, carries him to court, and proclaims him ſucceſſor.

THE mighty mother, and her ſon, who brings
The Smithfield muſes to the ear of kings,

VARIATION.

* In the firſt editions Tibbald was the hero of the poem, which will account for moſt of the ſubſequent variations.

VARIATION.

Ver. 1. The mighty mother, &c.] In the firſt edition it was thus,

Books and the man I ſing, the firſt who brings
The Smithfield muſes to the ear of kings,
Say, great patricians! ſince yourſelves inſpire
Theſe wondrous works (ſo Jove and Fate require)

I ſing. Say you, her inſtruments the great!
Call'd to this work by Dulneſs, Jove, and Fate;

VARIATION.

Say, for what cauſe, in vain decry'd and curſt,
Still———

REMARKS.

The Dunciad, ſic MS. It may well be diſputed whether this be a right reading: Ought it not rather to be ſpelled Dunceiad, as the etymology evidently demands? Dunce with an e, therefore Dunceiad with an e. That accurate and punctual man of letters, the reſtorer of Shakeſpeare, conſtantly obſerves the preſervation of this very letter e, in ſpelling the name of his beloved author, and not like his common careleſs editors, with the omiſſion of one, nay ſometimes of two ee's (as Shakſpear), which is utterly unpardonable. "Nor "is the neglect of a ſingle letter ſo trivial as to "ſome it may appear; the alteration whereof in "a learned language is an atchievement that "brings honour to the critic who advances it; "and Dr. Bentley will be remembered to poſte"rity for his performances of this ſort, as long as "the world ſhall have any eſteem for the remains "of Menander and Philemon."

THEOBALD

This is ſurely a ſlip in the learned author of the foregoing note; there having been ſince produced by an accurate antiquary, and autograph of Shakeſpeare, whereby it appears that he ſpelled his own name without the firſt e. And upon this authority it was, that thoſe moſt critical curators of his monument in Weſtminſter Abbey eraſed the former wrong reading, and reſtored the new ſpelling on a new piece of old Egyptian granite. Not for this only do they deſerve our thanks, but for exhibiting on the ſame monument the firſt ſpecimen of an edition of an author in marble; where (as may be ſeen on comparing the tomb with the book) in the ſpace of five lines, two words and a whole verſe are changed, and it is to be hoped will there ſtand, and outlaſt whatever hath been hitherto done in paper; as for the future, our learned ſiſter univerſity (the other eye of England) is taking care to perpetuate a total new Shakeſpeare at the Clarendon preſs. BENTL.

It is to be noted, that this great critic alſo has omitted one circumſtance; which is, that the inſcription with the name of Shakeſpeare was intended to be placed on the marble ſcroll to which he points with his hand; inſtead of which it is now placed behind his back, and that ſpecimen of an edition is put on the ſcroll, which indeed Shakeſpeare hath great reaſon to point at. ANON.

Though I have as juſt a value for the letter E, as any grammarian living, and the ſame affection for the name of this poem as any critic for that of his author; yet cannot it induce me to agree with thoſe who would add yet another e to it, and call it the Dunceiade; which being a French and foreign termination, is no way proper to a word entirely Engliſh, and vernacular. One e therefore

You by whoſe care, in vain decry'd and curſt,
Still Dunce the ſecond reigns like Dunce the firſt;

REMARKS.

in this caſe is right, and two ee's wrong. Yet upon the whole I ſhall follow the manuſcript, and print it without any e at all; moved thereto by authority (at all times, with critics, equal, if not ſuperior to reaſon). In which method of proceeding, I can never enough praiſe my good friend, the exact of Mr. Thomas Hearne; who, if any word occur, which to him and all mankind is evidently wrong, yet keeps he it in the text with due reverence, and only remarks in the margin, ſic MS. In like manner we ſhall not amend this error in the title itſelf, but only note it obiter, to evince to the learned that it was not our fault, nor any effect of our ignorance or inattention.

SCRIB.

This poem was written in the year 1726. In the next year an imperfect edition was publiſhed at Dublin, and reprinted at London in twelves; another at Dublin, and another at London in octavo: and three others in twelves the ſame year. But there was no perfect edition before that of London in quarto; which was attended with notes. We are willing to acquaint poſterity, that this poem was preſented to King George II. and his Queen by the hands of Sir Robert Walpole, on the 12th of March, 1728-9.

SCHOL. VET.

It was expreſsly confeſſed in the preface to the firſt edition, that this poem was not publiſhed by the author himſelf. It was printed originally in a foreign country. And what foreign country? Why, one notorious for blunders; where finding blanks only inſtead of proper names, theſe blunderers filled them up at their pleaſure.

The very hero of the poem hath been miſtaken to this hour; ſo that we are obliged to open our notes with a diſcovery who he really was. We learn from the former editor, that this piece was preſented by the hands of Sir Robert Walpole to King George II. Now the author directly tells us, his hero is the man

"———who brings
"The Smithfield muſes to the ear of kings."

And it is notorious who was the perſon on whom this prince conferred the honour of the laurel.

It appears as plainly from the apoſtrophe to the great in the third verſe, that Tibbald could not be the perſon, who was never an author in faſhion, or careſſed by the great; whereas this ſingle characteriſtic is ſufficient to point out the true hero: who, above all other poets of his time, was the peculiar delight and choſen companion of the nobility of England; and wrote, as he himſelf tells us, certain of his works at the earneſt deſire of perſons of quality.

Laſtly, the ſixth verſe affords full proof: this poet being the only one who was univerſally known to have had a ſon ſo exactly like him, in

Say, how the goddess bade Britannia sleep,
And pour'd her spirit o'er the land and deep.
In eldest time, ere mortals writ or read,
Ere Pallas issu'd from the Thunderer's head,
Dulness o'er all possess'd her ancient right,
Daughter of Chaos and eternal Night:
Fate in their dotage this fair idiot gave,
Gross as her sire, and as her mother grave,
Laborious, heavy, busy, bold, and blind,
She rul'd, in native anarchy, the mind.

REMARKS.

his poetical, theatrical, political, and moral capacities, that it could justly be said of him,

"Still Dunce the second reigns like Dunce the "first." BENTL.

Ver. 1. The mighty mother and her son, &c.] The reader ought here to be cautioned, that the mother, and not the son, is the principal agent of this poem; the latter of them is only chosen as her colleague (as was anciently the custom in Rome before some great expedition), the main action of the poem being by no means the coronation of the laureate, which is performed in the very first book, but the restoration of the empire of Dulness in Britain, which is not accomplished till the last.

Ver. 2. The Smithfield muses.] Smithfield is the place where Bartholomew fair was kept, whose shows, machines, and dramatical entertainments, formerly agreeable only to the taste of the rabble, were by the hero of this poem, and others of equal genius, brought to the theatres of Covent Garden, Lincoln's-inn-fields, and the Hay-market, to be the reigning pleasures of the court and town. This happened in the reigns of King George I. and II. See Book iii.

Ver. 4. By Dulness, Jove, and Fate:] i. e. by their judgments, their interests, and their inclinations.

Ver. 15. Laborious, heavy, busy, bold, &c.] I wonder the learned Scriblerus has omitted to advertise the reader, at the opening of this poem, that Dulness here is not to be taken contradictedly for mere stupidity, but in the enlarged sense of the word, for all slowness of apprehension, shortness of sight, or imperfect sense of things. It includes (as we see by the poet's own words) labour, industry, and some degrees of activity and boldness; a ruling principle not inert, but turning topsy-turvy the understanding, and inducing an anarchy or confused state of mind. This remark ought to be carried along with the reader throughout the work; and without this caution he will be apt to mistake the importance of many of the characters, as well as of the design of the poet. Hence it is, that some have complained he chooses too mean a subject, and imagined he employs himself like Domitian, in killing flies; whereas those who have the true key will find he sports with a nobler quarry, and embraces a larger compass; or (as one saith, on a like occasion)

"Will see his work, like Jacob's ladder rise,
"Its foot in dirt, its head amidst the skies."
BENTL.

Still her old empire to restore she tries,
For, born a goddess, Dulness never dies.
Oh thou! whatever title please thine ear,
Dean, Drapier, Bickerstaff, or Gulliver!
Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind.
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind;
From thy Bœotia though her power retires,
Mourn not, my Swift, at aught our realm acquires,
Here pleas'd behold her mighty wings outspread
To hatch a new Saturnian age of Lead.
Close to those walls where Folly holds her throne,
And laughs to think Monroe would take her down,
Where o'er the gates, by his fam'd father's hand,
Great Cibber's brazen, brainless brothers stand;

VARIATION.

Ver. 29—39. Close to those walls, &c.] In the former edition thus:

Where wave the tatter'd ensigns of Rag-fair,
A yawning rain hangs and nods in air;
Keen hollow winds howl through the bleak recess,
Emblem of music caus'd by emptiness:
Here in one bed two shivering sisters lie,
The cave of poverty and poetry.
This, the great mother dearer held than all
The clubs of Quidnuncs, or her own Guildhall;
Here stood her opium, here she nurs'd her owls,
And destin'd here th' imperial seat of fools.
Hence spring each weekly muse the living boast,
&c.

Var. Where wave the tatter'd ensigns of Rag-fair. Rag-fair is a place near the Tower of London, where old clothes and frippery are sold.

REMARKS.

Ver. 17. Still her old empire to restore] This restoration makes the completion of the poem.—Vide Book iv.

Ver. 22.—laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair.] The imagery is exquisite; and the equivoque in the last words, gives a peculiar elegance to the whole expression. The easy chair suits his age: Rabelais' easy chair marks his character; and he filled and possessed it as the right heir and successor of that original genius.

Ver. 23. Or praise the court, or magnify mankind.] Ironicè, alluding to Gulliver's representations of both. The next line relates to the papers of the Drapier against the currency of Wood's Copper coin in Ireland, which, upon the great discontent of the people, his Majesty was graciously pleased to recal.

Ver. 26. Mourn not, my Swift! at aught our realm acquires] Ironicè iterum. The politics of England and Ireland were at this time by some thought opposite, or interfering with each other. Dr. Swift of course was in the interest of the latter, our author of the former.

Ver. 31. By his fam'd father's hand.] Mr. Caius-Gabril Cibber, father of the poet-laureate. The

One cell there is, conceal'd from vulgar eye,
The cave of Poverty and Poetry.
Keen, hollow winds howl through the bleak receſs,
Emblem of Muſic caus'd by Emptineſs.
Hence bards, like Proteus long in vain ty'd down,
Eſcape in monſters, and amaze the town.
Hence miſcellanies ſpring, the weekly boaſt
Of Curll's chaſte preſs, and Lintot's rubric poſt:
Hence hymning Tyburn's elegiac lines,
Hence Journals, Medleys, Mercuries, Magazines:
Sepulchral lies, our holy walls to grace,
And New-year Odes, and all the Grub-ſtreet race.
In clouded majeſty here Dulneſs ſhone,
Four guardian virtues, round, ſupport her throne:

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 41. in the former edit.
Hence hymning Tyburn's elegiac lay,
Hence the ſoft ſing-ſong on Cecilia's day.

Ver. 42. Alludes to the annual ſongs compoſed to muſic on St. Cecilia's feaſt.

REMARKS.

two ſtatues of the lunatics over the gates of Bedlam-hoſpital were done by him, and as the ſon juſtly ſays of them) are no ill monuments of his fame as an artiſt.

Ver. 34. Poverty and Poetry.] I cannot here omit a remark that will greatly endear our author to every one, who ſhall attentively obſerve that humanity and candour, which every where appears in him towards thoſe unhappy objects of the ridicule of all mankind, the bad poets. He here imputes all ſcandalous rhymes, ſcurrilous weekly papers, baſe flatteries, wretched elegies, ſongs, and verſes (even from thoſe ſung at court, to ballads in the ſtreets), not ſo much to malice or ſervility as dulneſs; and not ſo much to dulneſs as to neceſſity. And thus, at the very commencement of his ſatire, makes an apology for all that are to be ſaterized.

Ver. 40. Curll's chaſte preſs, and Linton's rubric poſt:] Two bookſellers, of whom ſee Book ii. The former was fined by the Court of King's Bench for publiſhing obſcene books; the latter uſually adorned his ſhop with titles in red letters.

Ver. 41. Hence hymning Tyburn's elegiac lines.] It is an ancient Engliſh cuſtom for the malefactors to ſing a Pſalm at their execution at Tyburn; and no leſs cuſtomary to print elegies on their deaths, at the ſame time, or before.

Ver. 43. Sepulchral lies] is a juſt ſatire on the flatteries and falſehoods admitted to be inſcribed on the walls of churches, in epitaphs; which occaſioned the following epigram:

"Friend! in your epitaphs, I'm griev'd,
"So very much is ſaid;
"One half will never be believ'd,
"The other never read."

Ver. 44. New-year odes.] Made by the poet laureate for the time being, to be ſung at court on

Fierce champion Fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hiſſes, blows, or want, or loſs of ears:
Calm Temperance, whoſe bleſſings thoſe partake
Who hunger and who thirſt for ſcribbling ſake;
Prudence, whoſe glaſs preſents th' approaching jail;
Poetic Juſtice, with her liſted ſcale,
Where, in nice balance, Truth with gold ſhe weighs,
And ſolid pudding againſt empty praiſe.
Here ſhe beholds the Chaos dark and deep,
Where nameleſs Somethings in their cauſes ſleep,
Till genial Jacob, or a warm third day,
Call forth each maſs, a poem, or a play;
How hints, like ſpawn, ſcarce quick in embryo lie,
How new-born Nonſenſe firſt is taught to cry,
Maggots, half-form'd, in rhyme exactly meet,
And learn to crawl upon poetic feet.
Here one poor word an hundred clenches makes,
And ductile Dulneſs new meanders takes;
There motly images her fancy ſtrike,
Figures ill-pair'd, and ſimiles unlike.
She ſees a mob of metaphors advance,
Pleas'd with the madneſs of the mazy dance;
How Tragedy and Comedy embrace;
How Farce and Epic get a jumbled race;
How Time himſelf ſtands ſtill at her command,
Realms ſhift their place, and ocean turns to land;
Here gay Deſcription Egypt glads with ſhowers,
Or gives to Zembla fruits, to Barca flowers;
Glittering with ice here hoary hills are ſeen,
There painted valleys of eternal green,
In cold December fragrant chaplets blow,
And heavy harveſts nod beneath the ſnow.
All theſe, and more, the cloud-compelling queen
Beholds through fogs, that magnify the ſcene.
She, tinſell'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With ſelf-applauſe her wild creation views;
Sees momentary monſters riſe and fall,
And with her own fools colours gilds them all.
'Twas on the other day when * * rich and grave,
Like Cimon triumph'd both on land and wave:

REMARKS.

every new-year's day, the words of which are happily drowned in the voices and inſtruments. The new-year odes of the hero of this work were of a caſt diſtinguiſhed from all that preceded him, and made a conſpicuous part of his character as a writer, which doubtleſs induced our author to mention them here ſo particularly.

Ver. 45. In clouded majeſty here Dulneſs ſhone.] See this cloud removed, or rolled back, or gathered up to her head, book iv. ver. 17, 18. It is worth while to compare this deſcription of the majeſty of Dulneſs in a ſtate of peace and tranquillity, with that more buſy ſcene where ſhe mounts the throne in triumph, and is not ſo much ſupported by her own virtues, as by the princely conſciouſneſs of having deſtroyed all other.

Ver. 57. genial Jacob] Tonſon. The famous race of bookſellers of that name.

Ver. 85, 86. 'Twas on the day, when * * rich and grave—Like Cimon triumph'd] Viz. a (Pomps without guilt, of bloodleſs ſwords and maces, Glad chains, warm furs, broad banners, and broad faces)

Now night deſcending, the proud ſcene was o'er,
But liv'd in Settle's numbers one day more.
Now mayors and ſhrieves all huſh'd and ſatiate lay,
Yet eat, in dreams, the cuſtard of the day;
While penſive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepleſs themſelves, to give their readers ſleep.
Much to the mindful queen the feaſt recalls
What city ſwans once ſung within the walls;
Much ſhe revolves their arts, their ancient praiſe,
And ſure ſucceſſion down from Heywood's days.
She ſaw, with joy, the line immortal run,
Each fire impreſt and glaring in his ſon:
So watchful Bruin forms, with plaſtic care,
Each growing lump, and brings it to a bear.
She ſaw old Pryn in reſtleſs Daniel ſhine,
And Euſden eke out Blackmore's endleſs line;
She ſaw ſlow Philips creep like Tate's poor page
And all the mighty mad in Dennis' rage.
In each ſhe marks her image full expreſt,
But chief in Bays's monſter-breeding breaſt;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 85. in the former editions.

'Twas on the day when Thorald rich and grave.] Sir George Thorald, Lord Mayor of London, in the year 1720.

REMARKS.

Lord Mayor's day; his name the author had left in blanks, but moſt certainly could never be that which the editor foiſted in formerly, and which no way agrees with the chronology of the poem. BENTL.

The proceſſion of a Lord Mayor is made partly by land, and partly by water—Cimon, the famous Athenian general, obtained a victory by ſea, and another by land, on the ſame day, over the Perſians and Barbarians.

Ver. 90. But liv'd, in Settle's numbers, one day more.] A beautiful manner of ſpeaking, uſual with poets in praiſe of poetry.

Ibid. But liv'd, in Settle's numbers, one day more.] Settle was poet to the city of London. His office was to compoſe yearly panegyrics upon the Lord Mayors, and verſes to be ſpoken in the pageants: But that part of the ſhows being at length frugally aboliſhed, the employment of city poet ceaſed; ſo that upon Settle's demiſe, there was no ſucceſſor to that place.

Ver. 98. John Heywood, whoſe interludes were printed in the time of Henry VIII.

Ver. 103. Old Pryn in reſtleſs Daniel] The firſt edition had it.

She ſaw in Norton all his father ſhine:

a great miſtake! for Daniel de Foe had parts, but Norton de Foe was a wretched writer, and never attempted poetry. Much more juſtly is Daniel himſelf made ſucceſſor to W. Pryn, both of whom wrote verſes as well as politics; as appears by the poem de Jure Divino, &c. of De Foe, and by ſome lines in Cowley's Miſcellanies on the other. And both theſe authors had a reſemblance in their fates as well as their writings, having been alike ſentenced to the pillory.

Ver. 104. And Euſden eke out, &c.] Laurence Euſden, poet laureate, Mr. Jacob gives a catalogue of ſome few only of his works, which were very numerous. Mr. Cook, in his Battle of Poets, ſaith of him,

"Euſden, a laurell'd bard, by fortune rais'd,
"By very few was read, by fewer prais'd."

Mr. Oldmixon, in his Arts of Logic and Rhetoric, p. 413, 414 affirms, "That of all the Galamatia's "he ever met with, none comes up to ſome verſes "of this poet, which have as much of the ridi- "culum and the ſuſtain in them as can well be "jumbled together, and are of that ſort of non- "ſenſe, which ſo perfectly confounds all ideas, "that there is no diſtinct one left in the mind." Further he ſays of him, "That he hath prophe- "ſied his own poetry ſhall be ſweeter than Catul- "lus, Ovid, and Tibullus; but we have little "hopes of the accompliſhment of it from what "he hath lately publiſhed." Upon which Mr. Oldmixon has not ſpared a reflection, "That the "putting the laurel on the head of one who writ ſuch "verſes, will give futurity a very lively idea of the "judgment and juſtice of thoſe who beſtowed "it." Ibid. p. 417. But the well known learning of that noble perſon, who was then Lord Chamberlain, might have ſcreened him from this unmannerly

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 108. But chief in Bays's, &c.] In the former edition, thus,

But chief in Tibbald's monſter-breeding breaſt;
Sees gods with dæmons in ſtrange league engage,
And earth, and heaven, and hell her battles wage.
She ey'd the bard, where ſupperleſs he ſate;
And pin'd, unconſcious of his riſing fate;
Studious he ſate, with all his books around,
Sinking from thought to thought, &c.

Var. Tibbald.] Author of a pamphlet intituled Shakſpeare reſtored. During two whole years, while Mr. Pope was preparing his edition of Shakſpeare, he publiſhed adverti ſements, requeſting aſſiſtance, and promiſing ſatisfaction to any who could contribute to its greater perfection. But this reſtorer, who was at that time ſoliciting favours of him by letters, did wholly conceal his deſign, till after its publication (which he was ſince not aſhamed to own, in a Daily Journal of Nov. 26. 1728): And then an outcry was made in the prints, that our author had joined with the bookſeller to raiſe an extravagant ſubſcription; in which he had no ſhare, of which he had no knowledge, and againſt which he had publicly advertiſed his own propoſals for Homer. Probably that proceeding elevated Tibbald to the dignity he now holds in this poem, which he ſeems to deſerve no other way better than his brethren; unleſs we impute it to the ſhare he had in the Journals, cited among the Teſtimonies of Authors prefixed to this work.

REMARKS.

Bays, form'd by Nature, ſtage, and town to bleſs,
And act, and be, a coxcomb with ſucceſs. 110

Dulneſs with tranſport eyes the lively Dunce,
Remembering ſhe herſelf was Pertneſs once.

REMARKS.

reflection. Nor ought Mr. Oldmixon to complain, ſo long after, that the laurel would have become his own brows, or any other's: It were more decent to acquieſce in the opinion of the Duke of Buckingham upon this matter:

" —In ruſh'd Euſden, and cry'd, Who ſhall have it,
" But I, the true laureate, to whom the king gave it,
" Apollo begg'd pardon, and granted his claim,
" But vow'd that till then he ne'er heard of his name." Seſſion of Poets.

The ſame plea might alſo ſerve for his ſucceſſor, Mr. Cibber; and is further ſtrengthened in the following epigram made on that occaſion:

In merry old England it once was a rule,
The king had his poet, and alſo his fool;
But now we're ſo frugal, I'd have you to know it,
That Cibber can ſerve both for fool and for poet.

Of Blackmore, ſee Book ii. Of Philips, Book i. ver. 262. and Book iii. prope fin.

Nahum Tate was poet laureate, a cold writer, of no invention; but ſometimes tranſlated tolerably when befriended by Mr. Dryden. In his ſecond part of Abſalom and Achitophel are above two hundred admirable lines together of that great hand, which ſtrongly ſhine through the inſipidity of the reſt. Something parallel may be obſerved of another author here mentioned.

Ver. 106. And all the mighty mad in Dennis' rage.] Mr. Theobald, in the Cenſor, vol. ii. N. 33. calls Mr. Dennis by the name of Furius. " The " modern Furius is to be looked upon more as an " object of pity, than of that which he daily pro- " vokes, laughter and contempt. Did we really " know how much this poor man" [I wiſh that reflection on poverty had been ſpared] " ſuffers " by being contradicted, or, which is the ſame " thing in effect, by hearing another praiſed; we " ſhould, in compaſſion, ſometimes attend to him " with a ſilent nod, and let him go away with " the triumphs of his ill-nature.—Poor Furius " (again) when any of his contemporaries are " well ſpoken of, quitting the ground of the pre- " ſent diſpute, ſteps back a thouſand years to call " in the ſuccour of the ancients. His very pane- " gyric is ſpiteful, and he uſes it for the ſame " reaſon as ſome ladies do their commendations of " a dead beauty, who would never have had their " good word, but that a living one happened to be " in their company. His applauſe is not the tri- " bute of his heart, but the ſacrifice of his revenge," &c. Indeed his pieces againſt our poet are ſomewhat of an angry character, and as they are now ſcarce extant, a taſte of his ſtyle may be ſatisfactory to the curious. " A young, ſquab, ſhort gen- " tleman, whoſe outward form, though it ſhould " be that of downright monkey, would not differ " ſo much from human ſhape as his unthinking " immaterial part does from human underſtand- " ing.—He is as ſtupid and as venomous as a " hunch-backed toad. A book, through which " folly and ignorance, thoſe brethren ſo lame and " impotent, do ridiculouſly look big and very " dull, and ſtrut and hobble, cheek by jowl, with " their arms on kimbo, being led and ſupported, " and bully-backed by that blind Hector, Impu- " dence." Reflect. on the Eſſay on Criticiſm, p. 26. 29, 30.

It would be unjuſt not to add his reaſons for this fury, they are ſo ſtrong and coercive. " I regard " him (ſaith he) as an enemy, not ſo much to " me, as to my king, to my country, to my re- " ligion, and to that liberty which has been the " ſole felicity of my life. A vagary of fortune, " who is ſometimes pleaſed to be frolicſome, and " the epidemic madneſs of the times, have given " him reputation, and reputation (as Hobbes ſays) " is power, and that has made him dangerous. " Therefore I look on it as my duty to King " George, whoſe faithful ſubject I am; to my " country, of which I have appeared a conſtant " lover; to the laws, under whoſe protection I " have ſo long lived; and to the liberty of my " country, more dear to me than life, of which I " have now for forty years been a conſtant aſ- " ſertor, &c. I look upon it as my duty, I ſay, " to do—you ſhall ſee what—to pull the lion's " ſkin from this little aſs, which popular error has " thrown round him; and to ſhow that this au- " thor, who has been lately ſo much in vogue, " has neither ſenſe in his thoughts, nor Engliſh in " his expreſſions." DENNIS' Rem. on Hom. Pref. p. 2. 91, &c.

Beſides theſe public ſpirited reaſons, Mr. D. had a private one; which, by his manner of expreſſing it in p. 92, appears to have been equally ſtrong. He was even in bodily fear of his life from the machinations of the ſaid Mr. P. " The ſtory " (ſays he) is too long to be told, but who would " be acquainted with it, may hear it from Mr. " Curll, my bookſeller.—However, what my rea- " ſon has ſuggeſted to me, that I have, with a " juſt confidence ſaid, in defiance of his two clan- " deſtine weapons, his ſlander and his poiſon." Which laſt words of his book plainly diſcover Mr. D.'s ſuſpicion was that of being poiſoned, in like manner as Mr. Curll had been before him: of which fact, ſee a full and true account of the horrid and barbarous revenge, by poiſon, on the body of Edmund Curll, printed in 1716, the year antecedent to that wherein theſe Remarks of Mr. Dennis were publiſhed. But what puts it beyond all queſtion, is a paſſage in a very warm treatiſe, in which Mr. D. was alſo concerned, price twopence, called a True character of Mr. Pope and his Writings, printed for S. Popping, 1716; in the tenth page whereof he is ſaid " to have inſulted " people in thoſe calamities and diſeaſes which he

Now (ſhame to Fortune!) an ill run at play
Blank'd his bold viſage, and a thin third day:

REMARKS.

" himſelf gave them, by adminiſtering poiſon to " them:" and is called (p. 4.) a lurking way- " laying coward, and a ſtabber in the dark." Which (with many other things moſt lively ſet forth in that piece) muſt have rendered him a terror, not to Mr. Dennis only, but to all Chriſtian people. This charitable warning only provoked our incorrigible poet to write the following epigram:

Should Dennis publiſh you had ſtabb'd your brother,
Lampoon'd your monarch, or debauch'd your mother:
Say, what revenge on Dennis can be had?
Too dull for laughter, for reply too mad:
On one ſo poor you cannot take the law;
On one ſo old your ſword you ſcorn to draw:
Uncag'd then let the harmleſs monſter rage,
Secure in dulneſs, madneſs, want, and age.

For the reſt; Mr. John Dennis was the ſon of a ſaddler in London, born in 1657. He paid court to Mr. Dryden; and having obtained ſome correſpondence with Mr. Wycherley and Mr Congreve, he immediately obliged the public with their letters. He made himſelf known to the Government by many admirable ſchemes and projects; which the Miniſtry, for reaſons beſt known to themſelves, conſtantly kept private. For his character, as a writer, it is given us as follows: " Mr. " Dennis is excellent at Pindaric writings, per- " fectly regular in all his performances, and a per- " ſon of ſound learning. That he is maſter of a " great deal of penetration and judgment, his cri- " ticiſms (particularly on Prince Arthur) do ſuf- " ficiently demonſtrate," From the ſame account it alſo appears that he writ plays " more to get reputation than money." Dennis of himſelf. See Giles Jacob's Lives of Dramatic Poets, p. 68, 69, compared with p. 286.

Ver. 109. Bays, form'd by Nature, &c.] It is hoped the poet here hath done full juſtice to his hero's character, which it were a great miſtake to imagine was wholly ſunk in ſtupidity: he is allowed to have ſupported it with a wonderful mixture of vivacity. This character is heightened according to his own deſire, in a letter he wrote to our author. " Pert and dull at leaſt you might " have allowed me. What! am I only to be dull, " and dull ſtill, and again, and for ever?" He then ſolemnly appealed to his own conſcience, that " he could not think himſelf ſo, nor believe that " our poet did; but that he ſpake worſe of him " than he could poſſibly think; and concluded it " muſt be merely to ſhow his wit, or for ſome " profit or lucre to himſelf." Life of C. C. chap. vii. and letter to Mr. P. page 15, 40, 53. And to ſhow his claim to what the poet was ſo unwilling to allow him, of being pert as well as dull, he declares he will have the laſt word; which occaſioned the following epigram:

Swearing and ſupperleſs the hero ſate,
Blaſphem'd his gods, the dice, and damn'd his fate;
Then gnaw'd his pen, then daſh'd it to the ground,
Sinking from thought to thought, a vaſt profound!
Plung'd for his ſenſe, but found no bottom there,
Yet wrote and flounder'd on in mere deſpair.
Round him much embryo, much Abortion lay,
Much future Ode, and abdicated Play;
Nonſenſe precipitate, like running lead,
That flip'd through crags and zig-zags of the dead:
All that on Folly Frenzy could beget,
Fruits of dull heat, and ſooterkins of wit.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 121. Round him much embryo, &c.] In the former editions, thus,

He roll'd his eyes that witneſs'd huge diſmay,
Where yet unpawn'd much learned lumber lay;
Volumes, whoſe ſize the ſpace exactly fill'd,
Or which fond authors were ſo good to gild.
Or where, by ſculpture made forever known,
The page admires new beauties not its own.
Here ſwells the ſhelf, &c.

REMARKS.

Quoth Cibber to Pope, " Though in verſe you foreclose, [proſe."
" I'll have the laſt word: for, by G—, I'll write
Poor Colly, thy reaſoning is none of the ſtrongeſt,
For know, the laſt word is the word that laſts longeſt.

Ver. 125. ſupperleſs the hero ſate.] It is amazing how the ſenſe of this hath been miſtaken by all the former commentators, who moſt idly ſuppoſe it to imply that the hero of the poem wanted a ſupper. In truth a great abſurdity! Not that we are ignorant that the hero of Homer's Odyſſey is frequently in that circumſtance, and therefore it can no way derogate from the grandeur of epic poem to repreſent ſuch hero under a calamity, to which the greateſt, not only of critics and poets, but of kings and warriors, have been ſubject. But much more refined, I will venture to ſay, is the meaning of our author: It was to give us obliquely a curious precept, or what Boſſu calls a diſguiſed ſentence, that " Temperance is the life of Study." The language of poeſy brings all into action; and to repreſent a critic encompaſſed with books but without a ſupper, is a picture which lively expreſſeth how much the true critic prefers the diet of the mind to that of the body, one of which he always caſtigates, and often totally neglects, for the greater improvement of the other. SCRIBL.

But ſince the diſcovery of the true hero of the poem, may we not add, that nothing was ſo natural, after ſo great a loſs of money at dice, or of reputation by his play, as that the poet ſhould have no great ſtomach to eat a ſupper? Beſides, how well has the poet conſulted his heroic character, in adding that he ſwore all the time? BENTL.

Ver. 131. poor Fletcher's half-eat ſcenes.] A great number of them taken out to patch up his plays.

Next o'er his books his eyes began to roll,
In pleasing memory of all he stole,
How here he sip'd, how there he plunder'd snug,
And suck'd all o'er, like an industrious bug.
Here lay poor Fletcher's half-eat scenes, and here
The frippery of crucify'd Moliere:
There hapless Shakspeare, yet of Tibbald sore,
Wish'd he had blotted for himself before.
The rest on outside merit but presume,
Or serve (like other fools) to fill a room;
Such with their shelves as due proportion hold,
Or their fond parents dress'd in red and gold;
Or where the pictures for the page atone,
And Quarles is sav'd for beauties not his own.
Here swells the shelf with Ogilby the great;
There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete:

REMARKS.

Ver. 132. The frippery] "When I fitted up an "old play, it was as good a housewife will mend "old linen, when she has not better employment." Life, p. 217, octavo.

Ver. 133. hapless Shakspeare, &c.] It is not to be doubted but Bays was a subscriber to Tibbald's Shakspeare. He was frequently liberal in this way; and as he tells us, "subscribed to Mr. "Pope's Homer, out of pure generosity and civi- "lity; but when Mr. Pope did so to his Nonju- "ror, he concluded it could be nothing but a joke." Letter to Mr. P. p. 24.

This Tibbald, or Theobald, published an edition of Shakspeare, of which he was so proud himself as to say, in one of Mist's Journals, June 8, "That to expose any errors in it was impractica- "ble." And in another, April 27, "That what- "ever care might for the future be taken by any "other editor, he would still give above five hun- "dred emendations, that shall escape them all."

Ver. 134. Wish'd he had blotted] It was a ridiculous praise which the players gave to Shakspeare, "that he never blotted a line." Ben Jonson honestly wished he had blotted a thousand; and Shakspeare would certainly have wished the same, if he had lived to see those alterations in his works, which, not the actors only (and especially the daring hero of this poem) have made on the stage, but the presumptuous critics of our days in their editions.

Ver. 135. The rest on outside merit, &c.] This library is divided into three parts: The first consists of those authors from whom he stole, and whose works he mangled; the second of such as fitted the shelves, or were gilded for show, or adorned with pictures: the third class our author calls solid learning, old bodies of divinity, old commentaries, old English printers, or old English translations: all very voluminous, and fit to erect altars to Dulness.

Ver. 141. Ogilby the great.] "John Ogilby was "one, who, from a late initiation into literature, "made such a progress as might well style him the "prodigy of his time, sending into the world so "many large volumes! His translations of Homer

Here all his suffering brotherhood retire,
And 'scape the martyrdom of jakes and fire:
A Gothic library! of Greece and Rome
Well purg'd, and worthy Settle, Banks, and Broome.
But high above, more solid learning shone,
The classics of an age that heard of none;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 145 in the first edit it was
A Gothic Vatican! of Greece and Rome
Well purg'd, and worthy W—y, W—s, and Bl—.

And in the following altered to Withers, Quarles, and Blome, on which was the following note.

It was printed in the surreptitious editions, W—ly, W—s, who were persons eminent for good life; the one writ the Life of Christ in verse, the other some valuable pieces in the lyric kind, on pious subjects. The line is here restored according to its original.

"George Withers was a great pretender to poe- "tical zeal against the vices of the times, and "abused the greatest personages in power, which "brought upon him frequent correction. The "Marshalsea and Newgate were no strangers to "him." WINSTANLY.—Quarles was as dull a writer, but an honest dull man. Blome's books are remarkable for their cuts.

REMARKS.

"and Virgil done to the life, and with such excel- "lent sculptures: And (what added great grace "to his works) he printed them all on special good "paper, and in a very good letter."

WINSTANLY, Lives of Poets.

Ver. 142. There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete.] "The Duchess of Newcastle "was one who busied herself in the ravishing de- "lights of poetry; leaving to posterity, in print, "three ample volumes of her studious endea- "vours." WINSTANLY, ibid.—Langbaine reckons up eight folios of her Grace's; which were usually adorned with gilded covers, and had her coat of arms upon them.

Ver. 146. Worthy Settle, Banks, and Broome.] The poet has mentioned these three authors in particular, as they are parallel to our hero in his three capacities; 1. Settle was his brother laureat; only, indeed, upon half pay, for the city instead of the court; but equally famous for unintelligible flights in his poems on public occasions, such as shows, birth-days, &c. 2. Banks was his rival in tragedy (though more successful) in one of his tragedies, the Earl of Essex, which is yet alive: Anna Boleyn, the Queen of Scots, and Cyrus the Great, are dead and gone. These he dress in a sort of beggar's velvet, or a happy mixture of the thick sustian and thin prosaic; exactly imitated in Perolla and Isidora, Cæsar in Egypt, and the Heroic Daughter. 3. Broome was a serving-man of Ben. Johnson, who once picked up a comedy from his betters, or from some cast scenes of his master, not entirely contemptible.

Ver. 147. More solid learning.] Some have objected, that books of this sort, suit not so well the

There Caxton ſlept, with Wynkyn at his ſide,
One claſp'd in wood, and one in ſtrong cow-hide;
There, ſav'd by ſpice, like mummies, many a year,
Dry bodies of divinity appear:
De Lyra there a dreadful front extends,
And here the groaning ſhelves Philemon bends.
Of theſe twelve volumes, twelve of ampleſt ſize,
Redeem'd from tapers and defrauded pies,
Inſpir'd he ſeizes: Theſe an altar raiſe:
An hecatomb of pure unſully'd lays
That altar crowns: A folio common-place
Founds the whole pile, of all his works the baſe:
Quartos, octavos, ſhape the leſſening pyre;
A twiſted birth-day ode completes the ſpire.
Then he: Great Tamer of all human art!
Firſt in my care, and ever at my heart;
Dulneſs! whoſe good old cauſe I yet defend,
With whom my muſe began, with whom ſhall end,
E'er ſince Sir Fopling's periwig was praiſe,
To the laſt honours of the Butt and Bays:

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 152. Old bodies of philoſophy appear.

Ver. 162. A twiſted, &c.] In the former edit.
And laſt, a little Ajax tips the ſpire.

Var. A little Ajax.] In 12mo, tranſlated from Sophocles, by Tibbald.

Ver. 167, 168. Not in the firſt editions.

REMARKS.

library of our Bays, which they imagined conſiſted of novels, plays, and obſcene books; but they are to conſider, that he furniſhed his ſhelves only for ornament, and read theſe books no more than the dry bodies of divinity, which, no doubt, were purchaſed by his father when he deſigned him for the gown. See the note on ver. 260.

Ver. 149. Caxton.] A printer in the time of Edw. IV. Rich. III. and Hen. VII.; Wynkyn de Word, his ſucceſſor, in that of Hen. VII. and VIII. The former tranſlated into proſe Virgil's Æneis, as a hiſtory; of which he ſpeaks, in his proeme, in a very ſingular manner, as of a book hardly known. Tibbald quotes a rare paſſage from him in Miſt's Journal of March 16. 1728, concerning a ſtraunge and marvayllouſe beaſte, called Sagittayre, which he would have Shakſpeare to mean rather than Teucer, the archer celebrated by Homer.

Ver. 153. Nich. de Lyra, or Harpsfield, a very voluminous commentator; whoſe works, in five vaſt folios, were printed in 1472.

Ver. 154. Philemon Holland, doctor in phyſic.] "He tranſlated ſo many books, that a man would "think he had done nothing elſe; inſomuch that "he might be called tranſlator-general of his age. "The books alone of his turning into Engliſh, are "ſufficient to make a country gentleman a com-"plete library." WINSTANLY.

Ver. 167. E'er ſince Sir Fopling's periwig.] The firſt viſible cauſe of the paſſion of the town for our hero, was a fair flaxen full-bottomed periwig, which he tells us he wore in his firſt play of the Fool in Faſhion. It attracted, in a particular manner, the friendſhip of Col. Brett, who wanted to

O thou! of buſineſs the directing ſoul!
To this our head like bias to the bowl,
Which, as more ponderous, made its aim more true,
Obliquely waddling to the mark in view:
O! ever gracious to perplex'd mankind,
Still ſpread a healing miſt before the mind;
And leſt we err by wit's wild dancing light,
Secure us kindly in our native night.
Or if to wit a coxcomb make pretence,
Guard the ſure barrier between that and ſenſe;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 170. To human heads, &c.

Ver. 171. Makes their aim.

Ver 177. Or if to wit, &c.] In the former edit.
Ah! ſtill o'er Britain ſtretch that peaceful wand,
Which lulls th' Helvetian and Batavian land;
Where rebel to thy throne if Science riſe,
She does but ſhow her coward face, and dies:
There thy good ſcholiaſts with unwearied pains
Make Horace flat, and humble Maro's ſtrains:
Here ſtudious I unlucky moderns ſave,
Nor ſleeps one error in its father's grave,
Old puns reſtore, loſt blunders nicely ſeek,
And crucify poor Shakſpeare once a week.
For thee I dim theſe eyes, and ſtuff this head,
With all ſuch reading as was never read;
For thee ſupplying, in the worſt of days,
Notes to dull books, and prologues to dull plays;
For thee explain a thing till all men doubt it,
And write about it, goddeſs, and about it,
So ſpins the ſilk-worm ſmall its ſlender ſtore,
And labours, till it clouds itſelf all o'er.
Not that my quill to critics was confin'd,
My verſe gave ampler leſſons to mankind;
So graveſt precepts may ſucceſsful prove,
But ſad examples never fail to move.
As forc'd from wind-guns, &c.

Var. Now ſleeps one error—Old puns reſtore loſt blunders, &c.] As where he (Tibbald) laboured to prove Shakſpeare guilty of terrible anachroniſms, or low conundrums, which time had covered; and converſant in ſuch authors as Caxton and Wynkyn, rather than in Homer or Chaucer. Nay, ſo far had he loſt his reverence to this incomparable author, as to ſay in print, he deſerved to be whipt. An inſolence which nothing ſure can parallel! but that of Dennis, who can be proved to have declared before company, that Shakſpeare was a raſcal. O tempora! O mores!

Var. And crucify poor Shakſpeare one a week.] For ſome time, once a week or fortnight, he printed in Miſt's Journal, a ſingle remark, or poor conjecture, on ſome word or pointing of Shakſpeare, either in his own name, or in letters to himſelf, as from others, without name. Upon theſe, ſomebody made this epigram:

"'Tis generous, Tibbald! in thee and thy bro-
"thers,
"To help us thus to read the works of others:
"Never for this can juſt returns be ſhown;
"For who will help us e'er to read thy own?"

Or quite unravel all the reas'ning thread,
And hang ſome curious cobweb in its ſtead!
As forc'd from wind-guns, lead itſelf can fly,
And ponderous ſlugs cut ſwiftly through the ſky;
As clocks to weight their nimble motion owe,
The wheels above urg'd by the load below:
Me Emptineſs and Dulneſs could inſpire,
And were my elaſticity and fire.
Some dæmon ſtole my pen (forgive th' offence)
And once betray'd me into common ſenſe:
Elſe all my proſe and verſe were much the ſame;
This, proſe on ſtilts; that, poetry fall'n lame.
Did on the ſtage my fops appear confin'd?
My life gave ampler leſſons to mankind.
Did the dead letter unſucceſsful prove?
The briſk example never fail'd to move.
Yet ſure had Heaven decreed to ſave the ſtate,
Heaven had decreed theſe works a longer date.

VARIATIONS.

Var. Notes to dull books, and prologues to dull plays.] As to Cook's Heſiod, where ſometimes a note, and ſometimes even half a note, are carefully owned by him: And to Moore's comedy of the Rival Modes, and other authors of the ſame rank: Theſe were people who writ about the year 1726.

Ver. 195. Yet ſure, had Heaven, &c.] In the former edit.

Had Heaven decreed ſuch works a longer date,
Heaven had decreed to ſpare the Grub-ſtreet ſtate.
But ſee great Settle to the duſt deſcend,
And all thy cauſe and empire at an end!
Could Troy be ſav'd, &c.

REMARKS.

purchaſe it. "Whatever contempt (ſays he) philoſophers may have for a fine periwig, my friend, who was not to deſpiſe the world, but live in it, knew very well that ſo material an article of dreſs upon the head of a man of ſenſe, if it became him, could never fail of drawing to him a more partial regard and benevolence, than could poſſibly be hoped for in an ill-made one. This, perhaps, may ſoften the grave cenſure, which ſo youthful a purchaſe might otherwiſe have laid upon him. In a word, he made his attack upon this periwig, as your young fellows generally do upon a lady of pleaſure; firſt by a few familiar praiſes of her perſon, and then a civil inquiry into the price of it; and we finiſhed our bargain that night over a bottle." This remarkable periwig uſually made its entrance upon the ſtage in a ſedan, brought in by two chairmen, with infinite approbation of the audience.

Ver. 178, 179. Guard the ſure barrier—Or quite unravel, &c.] For Wit or Reaſoning are never greatly hurtful to Dulneſs, but when the firſt is founded in truth, and the other in uſefulneſs.

Ver. 181. As forc'd from wind-guns, &c.] The thought of theſe four verſes is founded in a poem of our author's, of a very early date (namely written at fourteen years old, and ſoon after printed) to the author of a poem called Succeſſio.

Could Troy be ſav'd by any ſingle hand,
This gray-gooſe weapon muſt have made her ſtand.
What can I now? my Fletcher caſt aſide,
Take up the Bible, once my better guide?
Or tread the path by venturous heroes trod,
This box my thunder, this right hand my God?
Or chair'd at White's amidſt the doctors ſit,
Teach oaths to gameſters, and to nobles wit?
Or kidſt thou rather party to embrace?
(A friend to party thou, and all her race;
'Tis the ſame rope at different ends they twiſt;
To Dulneſs Ridpath is as dear as Miſt.
Shall I, like Curtius, deſperate in my zeal,
O'er head and ears plunge for the commonweal?

VARIATIONS.

Inſtead of ver. 200—246. in the former edits.

Take up th' attorney's (once my better) guide?
Or rob the Roman geeſe of all their glories,
And ſave the ſtate by cackling to the Tories.
Yes, to my country I my pen conſign,
Yes, from this moment, mighty Miſt! am thine.
And rival, Curtius! of thy fame and zeal,
O'er head and ears plunge for the public weal.
Adieu, my children! better thus expire
Unſtall'd, unſold; thus glorious mount in fire,
Fair without ſpot; than greas'd by grocers hands,
Or ſhip'd with Ward to Ape-and-monkey lands,
Or wafting ginger, round the ſtreets to run,
And viſit ale-houſe, where ye firſt begun.
With that he liſted thrice the ſparkling brand,
And thrice he dropp'd it, &c.

REMARKS.

Ver. 198.—gray gooſe weapon.] Alluding to the old Engliſh weapon, the arrow of the long bow, which was fletched with the feathers of the gray-gooſe.

Ver. 199. My Fletcher.] A familiar manner of ſpeaking, uſed by modern critics, of a favourite author. Bays might as juſtly ſpeak this of Fletcher, as a French wit did of Tully, ſeeing his works in a library; "Ah! mon cher Ciceron! je le connois bien; c'eſt le même que Marc Tulle!" But he had a better title to call Fletcher his own, having made ſo free with him.

Ver. 200. Take up the Bible, once my better guide?] When, according to his father's intention, he had been a clergyman, or (as he thinks himſelf) a biſhop of the Church of England. Hear his own words: "At the time that the fate of K. James, the Prince of Orange, and myſelf, were on the anvil, Providence thought fit to

IMITATIONS

Ver. 197, 198. Could Troy be ſav'd—This gray-gooſe weapon.]

"—— Si Pergama dextra
Defendi poſſent, etiam hac defenſa fuiſſent."
VIRG. ib.

Ver. 202. This box my thunder, this right hand my God.]

"Dextra mihi Deus, et telum quod miſſile libro."—Virgil, of the Gods of Mezentius.

Or rob Rome's ancient geese of all their glories,
And cackling save the monarchy of Tories?

REMARKS.

" postpone mine, till theirs were determined: But " had my father carried me a month sooner to the " University, who knows but that purer fountain " might have washed my imperfections into a ca- " pacity of writing, instead of plays and annual " odes, sermons, and pastoral letters?"

Apology for his Life, chap iii.

Ver. 203. At White's, amidst the doctors.] These doctors had a modest and upright appearance, no air of overbearing; but, like true Masters of Arts, were only habited in black and white: They were justly styled subtiles and graves, but not always irrefragabiles, being sometimes examined, and, by a nice distinction, divided and laid open. SCRIBL.

This learned critic is to be understood allegorically: The doctors in this place mean no more than false dice; a cant phrase used among gamesters. So the meaning of these four sonorous lines is only this, " Shall I play fair or foul?"

Ver. 208. Ridpath—Mist.] George Ridpath, author of a Whig paper, called the Flying Post; Nathaniel Mist, of a famous Tory Journal.

Ver. 211. Or rob Rome's ancient geese of all their glories] Relates to the well known story of the geese that saved the capitol; of which Virgil, Æn. viii.

" Atque hic auratis volitans argenteus anser
" Porticibus, Gallos in limine addesse canebat."

A passage I have always suspected. Who sees not the antithesis of auratis and argenteus to be unworthy the Virgilian Majesty? And what absurdity to say a goose sings? canebat. Virgil gives a contrary character of the voice of this silly bird, in Ecl. ix.

" —— argutos inter strepere anser olores."

Read it, therefore, addesse strepebat. And why auratis porticibus? does not the very verse preceding this inform us,

" Romuleoque recens horrebat regia culmo."

Is this thatch in one line, and gold in another, consistent? I scruple not (repugnantibus omnibus manuscriptis) to correct it auritis. Horace uses the same epithet in the same sense,

" —— Auritas fidibus canoris
" Ducere quercus."

And to say that walls have ears is common even to a proverb. SCRIBL.

Ver. 212. And cackling save the monarchy of Tories] Not out of any preference or affection to the Tories. For what Hobbes so ingeniously confesses of himself, is true of all ministerial writers whatsoever: " That he defends the supreme " powers, as the geese by their cackling defended " the Romans, who held the Capitol; for they fa- " voured them no more than the Gauls, their ene- " mies, but were as ready to have defended the " Gauls, if they had been possessed of the Capi- " tol."——Epist. Dedic. to the Leviathan.

Hold —— to the minister I more incline:
To serve his cause, O queen! is serving thine.
And see! thy very gazetteers give o'er,
Ev'n Ralph repents, and Henley writes no more.
What then remains? Ourself. Still, still remain
Cibberian forehead, and Cibberian brain.
This brazen brightness, to the 'squire so dear;
This polish'd hardness, that reflects the peer: 220
This arch absurd, that wit and fool delights;
This mess, toss'd up of Hockley-hole and White's;
Where dukes and butchers join to wreathe my crown;
At once the bear and fiddle of the town.
O born in sin, and forth in folly brought!
Works damn'd, or to be damn'd! (your father's fault)
Go, purify'd by flames, ascend the sky,
My better and more Christian progeny!
Unstain'd, untouch'd, and yet in maiden sheets;
While all your smutty sisters walk the streets. 230

REMARKS.

Ver 215. Gazetteers.] A band of ministerial writers, hired at the price mentioned in the note on book ii. ver. 316, who, on the very day their patron quitted his post, laid down their paper, and declared they would never more meddle in politics.

Ver. 218 Cibberian forehead.] So indeed all the MSS. read, but I make no scruple to pronounce them all wrong, the laureat being elsewhere celebrated by our poet for his great modesty—modest Cibber—read, therefore, at my peril, Cerberian forehead. This is perfectly classical, and what is more, Homerical; the dog was the ancient, as the bitch is the modern symbol of impudence: Κυνὸς ἔμμαθ' ἔχων, says Achilles to Agamemnon) which, when in a superlative degree, may well be denominated from Cerberus, the dog with three heads. But as to the latter part of this verse, Cibberian brain, that is certainly the genuine reading BENTL.

Ver. 225. O born in sin, &c.] This is a tender and passionate apostrophe to his own works, which he is going to sacrifice, agreeable to the nature of man in great affliction; and reflecting, like a parent, on the many miserable fates to which they would otherwise be subject.

Ver. 228. My better and more Christian progeny!] " It may be observable, that my muse and " my spouse were equally prolific; that the one " was seldom the mother of a child, but in the " same year the other made me the father of a " play. I think we had a dozen of each sort be- " tween us; of both which kinds some died in " their infancy," &c. Life of C. C. p. 217. 8vo edit.

Ye ſhall not beg, like gratis-given Bland,
Sent with a paſs, and vagrant through the land;
Nor ſail with Ward, to ape-and-monkey climes,
Where vile Mundungus trucks for viler rhymes:
Not, ſulphur-tipt, emblaze an ale-houſe fire;
Nor wrap up oranges to pelt your ſire!
O! paſs more innocent, in infant ſtate,
To the mild limbo of our father Tate:
Or peaceably forgot, at once be bleſt
In Shadwell's boſom with eternal reſt!
Soon to the maſs of Nonſenſe to return, [born.
Where things deſtroy'd are ſwept to things un-
With that, a tear (portentous ſign of grace!)
Stole from the maſter of the ſeven-fold face:
And thrice he lifted high the birth-day brand,
And thrice he dropt it from his quivering hand;
Then lights the ſtructure, with averted eyes:
The rolling ſmokes involve the ſacrifice.
The opening clouds diſcloſe each work by turns,
Now flames the Cid, and now Perolla burns;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 250. Now flames the Cid, &c.] In the former edit.

Now flames old Memnon, now Rodrigo burns,
In one quick flaſh ſee Proſerpine expire,
And laſt, his own cold Æſchylus took fire.
Then guſh'd the tears, as from the Trojan's eyes,
When the laſt blaze, &c.

Var Now flames old Memnon, now Rodrigo burns,
In one quick flaſh ſee Proſerpine expire.]

Memnon, a hero in the Perſian Princeſs, very apt

REMARKS.

Ver 231. gratis-given Bland,---Sent with a paſs] It was a practice ſo to give the Daily Gazetteer and miniſterial pamphlets (in which this B. was a writer) and to ſend them poſt-free to all the towns in the kingdom.

Ver. 233—with Ward, to Ape-and-monkey climes,] "Edward Ward, a very voluminous poet "in Hudibraſtic verſe, but beſt known by the "London Spy, in proſe. He has of late years "kept a public houſe in the city (but in a genteel "way), and with his wit, humour, and good li-"quor (ale), afforded his gueſts a pleaſurable en-"tertainment, eſpecially thoſe of the high-church "party." JACOB, Lives of Poets, vol. ii. p. 225. Great number of his works were yearly ſold into the plantations.---Ward, in a book called Apollo's Maggot, declared this account to be a great falſity, proteſting that his public houſe was not in the city, but in Moorfields.

Ver. 238. 240. Tate---Shadwell] Two of his predeceſſors in the laurel.

Ver. 250. Now flames the Cid, &c.] In the firſt notes on the Dunciad it was ſaid, that this author was particularly excellent at tragedy. "This "(ſays he) is as unjuſt as to ſay I could not dance "on a rope." But certain it is that he had attempted to dance on this rope, and fell moſt shamefully, having produced no leſs than four tragedies (the names of which the poet preſerves

Great Cæſar roars, and hiſſes in the fires;
King John in ſilence modeſtly expires:
No merit now the dear Nonjuror claims,
Moliere's old ſtubble in a moment flames.
Tears guſh'd again, as from pale Priam's eyes,
When the laſt blaze ſent Ilion to the ſkies.
Rous'd by the light, old Dulneſs heav'd the head,
Then ſnatch'd a ſheet of Thule from her bed;

VARIATIONS.

to take fire, as appears by theſe lines, with which he begins the play,

"By heaven! it fires my frozen blood with rage,
"And makes it ſcald my aged trunk."——

Rodrigo, the chief perſonage of the Perfidious Brother (a play written between Theobald and a watch-maker). The Rape of Proſerpine, one of the farces of this author in which Ceres, ſetting fire to a corn-field, endangered the burning of the play-houſe.

Var. And laſt, his own cold Æſchylus took fire.] He had been (to uſe an expreſſion of our poet) about Æſchylus for ten years, and had received ſubſcriptions for the ſame; but then went about other books. The character of this tragic poet, is fire and boldneſs in a high degree, but our author ſuppoſes it very much cooled by the tranſlation: upon ſight of a ſpecimen of which, was made this epigram,

"Alas, poor Æſchylus! unlucky dog!
"Whom once a lobſter kill'd, and now a log!"

But this is a grievous error; for Æſchylus was not ſlain by the fall of a lobſter on his head, but of a tortoiſe, teſte Val. Max. l. ix. cap. 12. SCRIB.

REMARKS.

in theſe few lines); the three firſt of them were fairly printed, acted, and damned; the fourth ſuppreſſed in fear of the like treatment.

Ver. 253. the dear Nonjuror—Moliere's old ſtubble] A Comedy threſhed out of Moliere's Tartuffe and ſo much the tranſlator's favourite, that he aſſures us all our author's diſlike to it could only ariſe from diſaffection to the government. He aſſures us, that "when he had the honour to "kiſs his Majeſty's hand upon preſenting his "dedication of it, he was graciouſly pleaſed, out "of his royal bounty, to order him two hundred "pounds for it. And this he doubts not grieved "Mr. P."

Ver. 258. Thule] An unfiniſhed poem of that name, of which one ſheet was printed many years ago, by Ambroſe Philips, a northern author. It is an uſual method of putting out a fire, to caſt wet ſheets upon it Some critics have been of opinion that this ſheet was of the nature of the Aſbeſtos, which cannot be conſumed by fire: but I rather think it an allegorical alluſion to the coldneſs and heavineſs of the writing.

Sudden ſhe flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down ſink the flames, and with a hiſs expire.
Her ample preſence fills up all the place;
A veil of fogs dilates her awful face: [mayors
Great in her charms! as when on ſurieves and
She looks, and breathes herſelf into their airs.
She bids him wait her to her ſacred dome:
Well pleas'd he enter'd, and confeſs'd his home.
So, ſpirits ending their terreſtrial race,
Aſcend, and recogniſe their native place.
This the great mother dearer held than all
The clubs of quidnuncs, or her own Guildhall:
Here ſtood her opium, here ſhe nurs'd her owls,
And here ſhe plann'd th' Imperial ſeat of fools.
Here to her choſen all her works ſhe ſhows;
Proſe ſwell'd to verſe, verſe loitering into proſe:
How random thoughts now meaning chance to
Now leave all memory of ſenſe behind: [find,
How prologues into prefaces decay,
And theſe to notes are fritter'd quite away:
How index-learning turns no ſtudent pale,
Yet holds the eel of ſcience by the tail:
How, with leſs reading than makes ſelons 'ſcape,
Leſs human genius than God gives an ape,
Shall thanks to France, and none to Rome or Grecce,
A paſt, vamp'd, future, old, reviv'd, new piece,
'Twixt Plautus, Fletcher, Shakſpeare, and Cor-
Can make a Cibber, Tibbald, or Ozell. [neille,

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 268. in the former Ed. followed theſe two lines,

Raptur'd, he gazes round the dear retreat,
And in ſweet numbers celebrates the ſeat.

Var. And in ſweet numbers celebrates the ſeat.] Tibbald writ a poem called the Cave of Poverty, which concludes with a very extraordinary wiſh, "That ſome great genius, or man of diſtinguiſhed "merit, may be ſtarved, in order to celebrate her "power, and deſcribe her cave." It was printed in octavo, 1715.

Ver. 286. Can make a Cibber, Johnſon, or Ozell.

REMARKS.

Ver. 269 Great mother] Magna mater, here applied to Dulneſs. The Quidnuncs, a name given to the ancient members of certain political clubs, who were conſtantly inquiring Quid nunc? What news?

Ver. 286. Tibbald,] Lewis Tibbald, as pronounced) or Theobald (as written) was bred an attorney, and ſon to an attorney (ſays Mr. Jacob) of Sittenburn in Kent. He was author of ſome forgotten plays, tranſlations, and other pieces. He was concerned in a paper called the Cenſor, and a tranſlation of Ovid. "There is a notorious idiot, "one Night Wachum, who, from an under-ſpur-"leather to the law, is become an under-ſtrapper "to the play-houſe, who hath lately burleſqued "the Metamorphoſes of Ovid by a vile tranſlation, "&c. This fellow is concerned in an impertinent "paper called the Cenſor." DENNIS, Rem. on Pope's Hom. p. 9, 10.

The Goddeſs then, o'er his anointed head,
With myſtic words, the ſacred opium ſhed.
And lo! her bird (a monſter of a fowl,
Something betwixt a heidegger and owl)
Perch'd on his crown. "All hail! and hail again,
My ſon! the promiſ'd land expects thy reign.
Know, Euſden thirſts no more for ſack or praiſe;
He ſleeps among the dull of ancient days;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 293. Know, Euſden, &c.] In the former Ed.

Know, Settle, cloy'd with cuſtard and with praiſe,
Is gather'd to the dull of ancient days,
Safe where no critics damn, no duns moleſt,
Where Gildon, Banks, and high-born Howard, reſt.
I ſee a king! who leads my choſen ſons
To lands that flow with clenches and with puns;
Till each fam'd theatre my empire own;
Till Albion, as Hibernia, bleſs my throne!
I ſee! I ſee!—Then rapt ſhe ſpoke no more,
God ſave king Tibbald! Grubſtreet alleys roar.
So when Jove's block, &c.

REMARKS.

Ibid. Ozell.] "Mr. John Ozell (if we credit "Mr. Jacob) did go to ſchool in Leiceſterſhire, "where ſomebody left him ſomething to live on, "when he ſhall retire from buſineſs. He was de-"ſigned to be ſent to Cambridge, in order for "prieſthood; but he choſe rather to be placed in "an office of accounts, in the city, being qualified "for the ſame by his ſkill in arithmetic, and wri-"ting the neceſſary hands. He has obliged the "world with many tranſlations of French plays." JACOB, Lives of Dram. Poets, p 198.

Mr Jacob's character of Mr. Ozell ſeems vaſtly ſhort of his merits, and he ought to have further juſtice done him, having ſince fully confuted all ſarcaſms on his learning and genius, by an advertiſement of Sept. 22, 1729, in a paper called the Weekly Medley, &c. "As to my learning, this "envious wretch knew, and every body knows, "that the whole bench of biſhops, not long ago, "were pleaſed to give me a purſe of guineas, for "diſcovering the erroneous tranſlations of the "Common-prayer in Portugueſe, Spaniſh, French, "Italian, &c. As for my genius, let Mr. Cleland "ſhow better verſes in all Pope's works, than "Ozell's verſion of Boileau's Lutrin, which the "late Lord Halifax was ſo pleaſed with, that he "complimented him with leave to dedicate it to "him, &c. Let him ſhow better and truer poetry "in the Rape of the Lock, than in Ozell's Rape "of the Bucket (la Secchia rapita). And Mr. "Toland and Mr. Gildon publicly declared Ozell's "tranſlation of Homer to be, as it was prior, ſo "likewiſe ſuperior to Pope's.—Surely, ſurely, every "man is free to deſerve well of his country!"

JOHN OZELL.

We cannot but ſubſcribe to ſuch reverend teſtimonies, as thoſe of the bench of Biſhops, Mr. Toland, and Mr. Gildon.

Ver. 290. a Heidegger] A ſtrange bird from Switzerland, and not (as ſome have ſuppoſed) the

Safe, where no critics damn, no duns moleſt,
Where wretched Withers, Ward, and Gildon reſt,
And high-born Howard, more majeſtic ſire,
With Fool of Quality completes the quire.
Thou, Cibber! thou, his laurel ſhalt ſupport,
Folly, my ſon, has ſtill a friend at Court.
Lift up your gates, ye princes, ſee him come!
Sound, ſound ye viols, be the cat-call dumb!
Bring, bring the madding bay, the drunken vine;
The creeping, dirty, courtly ivy join.
And thou! his aid-de-camp, lead on my ſons,
Light-arm'd with points, antitheſes, and puns.
Let Bawdry, Billingſgate, my daughters dear,
Support his front, and oaths bring up the rear:
And under his, and under Archer's wing,
Gaming and Grub-ſtreet ſkulk behind the king.
O! when ſhall riſe a monarch all our own,
And I, a nurſing mother, rock the throne;
'Twixt prince and people cloſe the curtain draw,
Shade him from light, and cover him from law;
Fatten the courtier, ſtarve the learned band,
And ſuckle armies, and dry-nurſe the land:
Till ſenates nod to Lullabies divine,
And all be ſleep, as at an ode of thine.
She ceas'd. Then ſwells the chapel-royal throat:
God ſave king Cibber! mounts in every note.
Familiar White's, God ſave king Colley! cries;
God ſave king Colley! Drury-lane replies:
To Needham's quick the voice triumphal rode,
But pious Needham dropt the name of God;
Back to the devil the laſt echoes roll,
And Coll! each butcher roars at Hockley-hole.
So when Jove's block deſcended from on high
(As ſings thy great forefather Ogilby)

REMARKS.

name of an eminent perſon who was a man of parts, and, as was ſaid of Petronius, Arbiter Elegantiarum.

Ver. 296. Withers,] See on ver. 146.

Ver. 296. Gildon] Charles Gildon, a writer of criticiſms and libels in the laſt age, bred at St. Omer's with the Jeſuits; but renouncing popery, he publiſhed Blount's books againſt the Divinity of Chriſt, the Oracles of Reaſon, &c. He ſignalized himſelf as a critic, having written ſome very bad plays; abuſed Mr. P. very ſcandalouſly in an anonymous pamphlet of the Life of Mr. Wycherley, printed by Curll; in another, called the New Rehearſal, printed in 1714; in a third, intituled the Complete Art of Engliſh Poetry, in two volumes; and others.

Ver. 297. Howard,] Hon. Edward Howard, author of the Britiſh Princes, and a great number of wonderful pieces, celebrated by the late Earls of Dorſet and Rocheſter, Duke of Buckingham, Mr. Waller, &c.

Ver. 309, 310. under Archer's wing,—Gaming, &c.] When the ſtatute againſt gaming was drawn up, it was repreſented, that the king, by ancient cuſtom, plays at hazard one night in the year; and therefore a clauſe was inſerted, with an exemption as to that particular. Under this pretence, the groom porter had a room appropriated to gaming all the ſummer the court was at Kenſington, which his majeſty accidentally being acquainted with, with a juſt indignation, prohibited. It is reported the ſame practice is yet continued wherever the court reſides, and the hazard table there open to all the profeſſed gameſters in town.

"Greateſt and juſteſt SOVEREIGN; know you this;
"Alas! no more, than Thames calm head can
"know, [o'erflow."
"Whoſe meads his arms drown, or whoſe corn

DONNE to Queen Eliz.

REMARKS.

Ver. 319. Chapel-royal] The voices and inſtruments uſed in the ſervice of the Chapel-royal being alſo employed in the performance of the Birth-day, and New-year odes.

Ver. 324. But pious Needham] a matron of great fame, and very religious in her way; whoſe conſtant prayer it was, that ſhe might "get enough "by her profeſſion to leave it off in time, and "make her peace with God." But her fate was "not ſo happy; for being convicted, and ſet in the pillory, ſhe was (to the laſting ſhame of all her great friends and votaries) ſo ill uſed by the populace, that it put an end to her days."

Ver. 325 Back to the Devil] The Devil Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet, where theſe odes are uſually rehearſed before they are performed at Court. Upon which a wit of thoſe times made this epigram:

"When laureates make odes, do you aſk of what ſort?
"Do you aſk if they're good, or are evil?
"You may judge—From the Devil they come to
"the Court,
"And go from the Court to the Devil."

Ver. 328—Ogilby)—God ſave King Log!] See Ogilby's Æſop's Fables, where, in the ſtory of the frogs and their king, this excellent hemiſtich is to be found.

Our author manifeſts here, and elſewhere, a prodigious tenderneſs for the bad writers. We ſee he ſelects the only good paſſage, perhaps, in all that ever Ogilby writ! which ſhows how candid and patient a reader he muſt have been. What can be more kind and affectionate than the words in the preface to his poems, where he labours to call up all our humanity and forgiveneſs toward theſe unlucky men, by the moſt moderate repreſentation of their caſe, that has ever been given by any author?

But how much all indulgence is loſt upon theſe people may appear from the juſt reflection made on their conſtant conduct and conſtant fate, in the following epigram:

"Ye little wits, that gleam'd a-while,
"When Pope vouchſaf'd a ray,
"Alas! depriv'd of his kind ſmile,
"How ſoon ye fade away!

"To compaſs Phœbus' car about,
"Thus empty vapours riſe,

Loud thunder to its bottom ſhook the bog,
And the hoarſe nation croak'd, God ſave king Log!

REMARKS.

" Each lends his cloud to put him out,
" That rear'd him to the ſkies.

" Alas! thoſe ſkies are not your ſphere;
" There he ſhall ever burn:
" Weep, weep, and fall! for earth ye were,
" And muſt to earth return."

BOOK II.

ARGUMENT.

The king being proclaimed, the ſolemnity is graced with public games and ſports of various kinds; not inſtituted by the hero, as by Æneas in Virgil, but for greater honour by the goddeſs in perſon (in like manner as the games Pythia, Iſthmia, &c. were anciently ſaid to be ordained by the Gods, and as Thetis herſelf appearing, according to Homer, Odyſſ. xxiv. propoſed the prizes in honour of her ſon Achilles). Hither flock the poets and critics, attended, as is but juſt, with their patrons and bookſellers. The goddeſs is firſt pleaſed, for her diſport, to propoſe games to the bookſellers, and ſetteth up the phantom of a poet, which they contend to overtake. The races deſcribed, with their divers accidents. Next, the game for a poeteſs. Then follow the exerciſes for the poets, of tickling, vociferating, diving. The firſt holds forth the arts and practices of dedicators, the ſecond of diſputants and ſuſtian poets, the third of profound, dark, and dirty party-writers. Laſtly, for the critics, the goddeſs propoſes (with great propriety) an exerciſe, not of their parts, but their patience, in hearing the works of two voluminous authors, one in verſe, and the other in proſe, deliberately read, without ſleeping: The various effects of which, with the ſeveral degrees and manners of their operation, are here ſet forth; till the whole number, not of critics only, but of ſpectators, actors, and all preſent, fall faſt aſleep; which naturally and neceſſarily ends the games.

High on a gorgeous ſeat, that far out-ſhone
Henley's gilt tub, or Fleckno's Iriſh throne.

REMARKS.

Two things there are, upon the ſuppoſition of which the very baſis of all verbal criticiſm is founded and ſupported: The firſt, that an author could never fail to uſe the beſt word on every occaſion; the ſecond, that a critic cannot chooſe but know which that is. This being granted, whenever any word doth not fully content us, we take upon us to conclude, firſt, that the author could never have uſed it; and, ſecondly, that he muſt have uſed that very one, which we conjecture, in its ſtead.

Or that where on her Curlls the public pours,
All bounteous, fragrant grains and golden ſhowers,

REMARKS.

We cannot therefore, enough admire the learned Scriblerus for his alteration of the text in the two laſt verſes of the preceding book, which in all the former editions ſtood thus:

Hoarſe thunder to its bottom ſhook the bog,
And the loud nation croak'd, God ſave king Log.

He has, with great judgment, tranſpoſed theſe two epithets; putting hoarſe to the nation, and loud to the thunder: And this being evidently the true reading, he vouchſafed not ſo much as to mention the former; for which aſſertion of the juſt right of a critic he merits the acknowledgement of all ſound commentators.

Ver. 2. Henley's gilt tub,] The pulpit of a diſſenter is uſually called a tub; but that of Mr. Orator Henley was covered with velvet, and adorned with gold. He had alſo a fair altar, and over it this extraordinary inſcription, 'The Primitive Euchariſt.' See the hiſtory of this perſon, book iii.

Ver. 2. or Fleckno's Iriſh throne,] Richard Fleckno was an Iriſh prieſt, but had laid aſide (as himſelf expreſſed it) the mechanic part of prieſthood. He printed ſome plays, poems, letters, and travels. I doubt not, our author took occaſion to mention him in reſpect to the poem of Mr. Dryden, to which this bears ſome reſemblance, though of a character more different from it than that of the Æneid from the Iliad, or the Lutrin of Boileau from the Defait de Bouts rimées of Sarazin.

It may be juſt worth mentioning, that the eminence from whence the ancient ſophiſts entertained their auditors, was called by the pompous name of a throne. Themiſtius, Orat. i.

Ver. 3. Or that where on her Curlls the public pours,] Edmund Curll ſtood in the pillory at Charing-croſs, in March 1727-8. " This (ſaith Ed-
" mund Curll) is a falſe aſſertion—I had indeed
" the corporal puniſhment of what the gentle-
" men of the long robe are pleaſed jocoſely to call
" mounting the roſtrum for one hour: but that
" ſcene of action was not in the month of March,
" but in February." [Curlliad, 12mo, p. 19.] And of the hiſtory of his being toſt in a blanket, he ſaith, " Here, Scriblerus thou leeſeſt in what
" thou aſſerteſt concerning the blanket: it was
" not a blanket, but a rug," p. 25. Much in the ſame manner Mr. Cibber remonſtrated, that his brothers, at bedlam, mentioned Book i. were not brazen, but blocks; yet our author let it paſs unaltered, as a triſle that no way altered the relationſhip.

We ſhould think (gentle reader) that we but ill performed our part, if we corrected not as well our own errors now, as formerly thoſe of the printer. Since what moved us to this work, was ſolely the love of truth not in the leaſt any vain-glory, or deſire to contend with great authors. And farther, our miſtakes, we conceive, will the rather

Great Cibber ſate: The proud Parnaſſian ſneer,
The conſcious ſimper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look: All eyes direct their rays
On him, and crowds turn coxcombs as they gaze.
His peers ſhine round him with reflected grace,
New edge their dulneſs, and new bronze their face.
So from the ſun's broad beam, in ſhallow urns,
Heaven's twinkling ſparks draw light, and point their horns.
Not with more glee, by hands Pontific crown'd,
With ſcarlet hats wide-waving circled round,
Rome in her Capital ſaw Querno ſit,
Thron'd on ſeven hills, the Antichriſt of Wit.
And now the queen, to glad her ſons, proclaims
By herald hawkers, high heroic games.
They ſummon all her race: An endleſs band
Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land.
A motley mixture! in long wigs, in bags,
In ſilks, in crapes, in Garters, and in rags,
From drawing-rooms, from colleges, from garrets,
On horſe, on foot, in hacks, and gilded chariots:
All who true Dunces in her cauſe appear'd,
And all who knew thoſe Dunces to reward.

Amid that area wide they took their ſtand,
Where the tall May-pole once o'erlook'd the Strand,
But now (ſo ANNE and Piety ordain)
A church collects the ſaints of Drury-lane.
With authors, ſtationers obey'd the call
(The field of glory is a field for all).
Glory and gain, th' induſtrious tribe provoke;
And gentle Dulneſs ever loves a joke.
A poet's form ſhe plac'd before their eyes,
And bade the nimbleſt racer ſeize the prize;
No meagre, muſe-rid mope, aduſt and thin,
In a dun night-gown of his own looſe ſkin;
But ſuch a bulk as no twelve bards could raiſe,
Twelve ſtarveling bards of theſe degenerate days.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-body'd air;
With pert flat eyes ſhe window'd well its head;
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead;
And empty words ſhe gave, and ſounding ſtrain,
But ſenſeleſs, lifeleſs! idol pert and vain!
Never was daſh'd out at one lucky hit,
A fool, ſo juſt a copy of a wit;
So like, that critics ſaid, and courtiers ſwore,
A wit it was, and call'd the phantom More.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 5. Great Tibbald nods.

Ver. 8. In the former edit.

On him, and crowds grow fooliſh as they gaze.

The four next lines are added.

Ver. 17.

To grace this honour'd day, the queen proclaims*

Ver. 19. She ſummons all her ſons, &c.

REMARKS.

be pardoned, as ſcarce poſſible to be avoided in writing of ſuch perſons and works as do ever ſhun the light. However, that we may not any way ſoften or extenuate the ſame, we give them thee in the very words of our antagoniſts: not defending, but ratracting them from our heart, and craving excuſe of the parties offended: For ſurely in this work, it hath been above all things our deſire to provoke no man. SCRIBL.

Ver. 15. Rome in her Capitol ſaw Querno ſit,] Camillo Querno was of Apulia, who hearing the great encouragement which Leo X, gave to poets, travelled to Rome with a harp in his hand, and ſung to it twenty thouſand verſes of a poem called Alexias. He was introduced as a buffoon to Leo, and promoted to the honour of the laurel; a jeſt which the Court of Rome and the Pope himſelf entered into ſo far, as to cauſe him to ride on an elephant to the Capitol, and to hold a ſolemn feſtival on his coronation; at which it is recorded the poet himſelf was ſo tranſported as to weep for joy*. He was ever after a conſtant frequenter of the Pope's table, drank abundantly, and poured forth verſes without number. Paulus Jovius, Elog. Vir. doct. cap. lxxxiii. Some idea of his poetry is given by Fam. Strada, in his Prolufions.

* See life of C. C. chap. vi. p. 149.

REMARKS.

Ver. 34. And gentle Dulneſs ever loves a joke.] This ſpecies of mirth called a joke, ariſing from a Malentendu, may be well ſuppoſed to be the delight of Dulneſs.

Ver. 47. Never was daſh'd out, at one lucky hit.] Our author here ſeems willing to give ſome account of the poſſibility of Dulneſs making a wit (which could be done no other way than by chance). The fiction is the more reconciled to probability by the known ſtory of Apelles, who being at a loſs to expreſs the foam of Alexander's horſe, daſhed his pencil in deſpair at the picture, and happened to do it by that fortunate ſtroke.

Ver. 50. and call'd the phantom More.] CURLL, in his Key to the Dunciad, affirmed this to be James-Moore Smith, Eſq.; and it is probable (conſidering what is ſaid of him in the Teſtimonies) that ſome might fancy our author obliged to repreſent this gentleman as a plagiary, or to paſs for one himſelf. His caſe indeed was like that of a man I have heard of, who, as he was ſitting in company, perceived his next neighbour had ſtolen his handkerchief: "Sir," (ſaid the thief, finding himſelf detected) "do not expoſe me, I "did it for mere want; be ſo good as take it pri-"vately out of my pocket again, and ſay nothing." The honeſt man did ſo, but the other cried out, "See, gentlemen, what a thief we have among "us! look, he is ſtealing my handkerchief!"

Some time before, he had borrowed of Dr. Arbuthnot a paper called an Hiſtorico-phyſical account of the South Sea; and of Mr. Pope the Memoirs of a Pariſh Clerk, which for two years he kept, and read to the Rev. Dr. Young; F. Billers, Eſq. and many others, as his own. Being applied to for them, he pretended they were loſt; but there happening to be another copy of the

All gaze with ardour: ſome a poet's name,
Others a ſword-knot and lac'd ſuit inflame.

REMARKS.

letter, it came out in Swift and Pope's Miſcellanies. Upon this, it ſeems, he was ſo far miſtaken as to confeſs his proceeding by an endeavour to hide it: unguardedly printing (in the Daily Journal of April 3, 1728.) "That the contempt "which he and others had for theſe pieces," (which only himſelf had ſhown, and handed about as his own) "occaſioned their being loſt, and "for that cauſe only not returned." A fact, of which as none but he could be conſcious, none but he could be the publiſher of it. The plagiariſms of this perſon gave occaſion to the following Epigram:

"Moore always ſmiles whenever he recites;
"He ſmiles (you think) approving what he writes.
"And yet in this no vanity is ſhown;
"A modeſt man may like what's not his own."

This young gentleman's whole misfortune was too inordinate a paſſion to be thought a wit. Here is a very ſtrong inſtance atteſted by Mr. Savage, ſon of the late Earl Rivers; who having ſhown ſome verſes of his in manuſcript to Mr. Moore wherein Mr. Pope was called firſt of the tuneful train, Mr. Moore the next morning ſent to Mr. Savage, to give thoſe verſes another turn, to wit, "That "Pope might now be the firſt, becauſe Moore, "had left him unrivalled, in turning his ſtyle to "Comedy." This was during the rehearſal of the Rival Modes, his firſt and only work; the town condemned it in the action, but he printed it in 1726-7, with this modeſt motto:

"Hic cœſtus, artemque repono."

The ſmaller pieces which we have heard attributed to this author are An Epigram on the Bridge at Blenheim, by Dr. Evans: Coſmelia, by Mr. Pit, Mr. Jones, &c. The Mock Marriage of a mad Divine, with a Cl. for a Parſon, by Dr. W. The Saw-pit, a Simile, by a Friend. Certain Phyſical works on Sir James Baker; and ſome unowned Letters, Advertiſements, and Epigrams againſt our author in the Daily Journal.

Notwithſtanding what is here collected of the perſon imagined by Curll to be meant in this place, we cannot be of that opinion; ſince our poet had certainly no need of vindicating half a dozen of verſes to himſelf, which every reader has done for him; ſince the name itſelf is not ſpelled Moore, but More; and, laſtly, ſince the learned Scriblerus has not proved the contrary.

Ver. 50. the phantom More.] It appears from hence, that this is not the name of a real perſon, but fictitious. More from μῶρος, ſtultus, μωρία, ſtultitia, to repreſent the folly of a plagiary. Thus Eraſmus, "Admonuit me Mori cognomen tibi, "quod tam ad Moriæ vocabulum accedit quam es "ipſe a re alienus"? Dedication of Moriæ Encomium on Sir Tho. More; the farewell of which may be our author's to his plagiary, Vale! More! et moriam tuam graviter defende. Adieu! More! and be ſure ſtrongly to defend thy own folly.

SCRIBL.

But lofty Lintot in the circle roſe:
"This prize is mine; who tempt it are my foes;
"With me began this genius, and ſhall end."
He ſpoke: and who with Lintot ſhall contend?
Fear held them mute. Alone, untaught to fear,
Stood dauntleſs Curll; "Behold that rival here;

REMARKS.

Ver. 53. But lofty Lintot] We enter here upon the epiſode of the bookſellers; perſons, whoſe names being more known and famous in the learned world than thoſe of the authors in this poem, do therefore need leſs explanation. The action of Mr. Lintot here imitates that of Dares in Virgil, riſing juſt in this manner to lay hold on a bull. This eminent bookſeller printed the Rival Modes before mentioned.

Ver. 58. Stood dauntleſs Curll;] We come now to a character of much reſpect, that of Mr. Edmund Curll. As a plain repetition of great actions is the beſt praiſe of them, we ſhall only ſay of this eminent man, that he carried the trade many lengths beyond what it had ever before arrived at; and that he was the envy and admiration of all his profeſſion. He poſſeſſed himſelf a command over all authors whatever; he cauſed them to write what he pleaſed; they could not call their very names their own. He was not only famous among theſe; he was taken notice of by the ſtate, the church, and the law, and received particular marks of diſtinction from each.

It will be owned that he is here introduced with all poſſible dignity: He ſpeaks like the intrepid Diomede; he runs like the ſwift-footed Achilles; if he falls, 'tis like the beloved Niſus; and (what Homer makes to be the chief of all praiſes) he is favoured of the gods; he ſays but three words, and his prayer is heard; a goddeſs conveys it to the ſeat of Jupiter: Though he loſes the prize, he gains the victory; the great mother comforts him, ſhe inſpires him with expedients, ſhe honours him with an immortal preſent (ſuch as Achilles receives from Thetis, and Æneas from Venus), at once inſtructive and prophetical; after this he is unrivalled and triumphant.

The tribute our author here pays him is a grateful return for ſeveral unmerited obligations: Many weighty animadverſions on the public affairs, and many excellent and diverting pieces on private perſons, has he given to his name. If ever he owed two verſes to any other, he owed Mr. Curll ſome thouſands. He was every day extending his fame, and enlarging his writings: Witneſs innumerable inſtances; but it ſhall ſuffice only to mention the Court Poems, which he meant to publiſh as the work of the true writer, a lady of quality; but being firſt threatened, and afterwards puniſhed for it by Mr. Pope, he generouſly transferred it from her to him, and ever

" The race by vigour, not by vaunts, is won;
" So take the hindmoſt, hell," (he ſaid) and run.
Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind,
He left huge Lintot, and outſtript the wind.
As when a dab-chick waddles through the copſe
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So labouring on, with ſhoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure ſpread,
With arms expanded Bernard rows his ſtate,
And left-legg'd Jacob ſeems to emulate.
Full in the middle way there ſtood a lake,
Which Curll's Corinna chanc'd that morn to make:
(Such was her wont, at early dawn to drop
Her evening cates before his neighbour's ſhop)
Here fortun'd Curll to ſlide; loud ſhout the band,
And Bernard! Bernard! rings through all the Strand.
Obſcene with filth the miſcreant lies bewray'd,
Fall'n in the plaſh his wickedneſs had laid:
Then firſt (if poets aught of truth declare)
The caitiff Vaticide conceiv'd a prayer.
Hear, Jove! whoſe name my bards and I adore,
As much at leaſt as any god's, or more;
And him and his, if more devotion warms,
Down with the Bible, up with the Pope's arms.
A place there is, betwixt earth, air, and ſeas,
Where, from ambroſia, Jove retires for eaſe.
There in his ſeat two ſpacious vents appear,
On this he ſits, to that he leans his ear,
And hears the various vows of fond mankind;
Some beg an eaſtern, ſome a weſtern wind;
All vain petitions, mounting to the ſky,
With reams abundant this abode ſupply;
Amus'd he reads, and then returns the bills
Sign'd with that Ichor which from gods diſtils.
In office here fair Cloacina ſtands,
And miniſters to Jove with pureſt hands.
Forth from the heap ſhe pick'd her vot'ry's prayer,
And plac'd it next him, a diſtinction rare!
Oft had the goddeſs heard her ſervant's call,
From her black grottos near the Temple-wall,
Liſtening delighted to the jeſt unclean
Of link-boys vile, and watermen obſcene;
Where as he fiſh'd her nether realms for wit,
She oft had favour'd him, and favours yet.
Renew'd by ordure's ſympathetic force,
As oil'd with magic juices for the courſe,
Vigorous he riſes; from the effluvia ſtrong,
Imbibes new life, and ſcours and ſtinks along;
Repaſſes Lintot, vindicates the race,
Nor heeds the brown diſhonours of his face.
And now the victor ſtretch'd his eager hand
Where the tall nothing ſtood, or ſeem'd to ſtand;
A ſhapeleſs ſhade, it melted from his ſight,
Like forms in clouds, or viſions of the night.
To ſeize his papers, Curll, was next thy care;
His papers, light, fly diverſe, toſt in air;
Songs, ſonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,
And whiſk them back to Evans, Young, and Swift.
Th' embroider'd ſuit at leaſt he deem'd his prey,
That ſuit an unpay'd taylor ſnatch'd away.
No rag, no ſcrap, of all the beau or wit,
That once ſo flatter'd, and that once ſo writ.
Heaven rings with laughter: Of the laughter vain,
Dulneſs, good queen, repeats the jeſt again.
Three wicked imps, of her own Grub-ſtreet choir,
She deck'd like Congreve, Addiſon, and Prior:

VARIATION.

Ver. 67.
With legs expanded, Bernard urg'd the race,
And ſeem'd to emulate great Jacob's pace.

REMARKS.

ſince printed it in his name. The ſingle time that ever he ſpoke to C. was on that affair, and to that happy incident he owed all the favour ſince received from him: So true is the ſaying of Dr. Sydenham, " that any one ſhall be, at ſome time " or other, the better or the worſe, for having " but ſeen or ſpoken to a good or bad man."

Ver. 70. Curll's Corinna] This name, it ſeems, was taken by one Mrs. Thomas, who procured ſome private letters of Mr. Pope, while almoſt a boy, to Mr. Cromwell, and ſold them without the conſent of either thoſe gentlemen to Curll, who printed them in 12mo, 1727. He diſcovered her to be the publiſher, in his Key, p. 12. We only take this opportunity of mentioning the manner in which thoſe letters got abroad, which the author was aſhamed of as very trivial things, full, not only of levities, but of wrong judgments of men and books, and only excuſeable from the youth and inexperience of the writer.

Ver. 82. Down with the Bible, up with the Pope's arms] The Bible, Curll's ſign: the Croſs-keys, Lintot's.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 99.—104. In former edit. thus:
(Oft as he fiſh'd her nether realms for wit,
The goddeſs favour'd him, and favours yet)

REMARKS.

Ver. 101. Where, as he fiſh'd, &c.] See the preface to Swift and Pope's Miſcellanies.

Ver. 116. Evans, Young, and Swift] Some of thoſe perſons, whoſe writings, epigrams, or jeſts he had owned, See note on ver. 50.

Ver. 118. an unpay'd taylor] This line has been loudly complained of in Miſt, June 8, Dedic. to Sawney, and others, as a moſt inhuman ſatire on the poverty of poets: But it is thought our author will be acquitted by a jury of Taylors. To me this inſtance ſeems unluckily choſen; if it be a ſatire on any body, it muſt on a bad paymaſter, ſince the perſon to whom they have here applied it, was a man of fortune. Not but poets may well be jealous of ſo great a prerogative as non-payment; which Mr. Dennis ſo far aſſerts, as boldly to pronounce, that " if Homer himſelf was not " in debt, it was becauſe nobody would truſt " him." Pref. to Rem. on the Rape of the Lock, p. 15.

Ver. 124. like Congreve, Addiſon, and Prior;] Theſe authors being ſuch whoſe names will reach

Meers, Warner, Wilkins, run: delusive thought!
Breval, Bond, Besaleel, the varlets caught.
Curll stretches after Gay, but Gay is gone,
He grasps an empty Joseph for a John:
So Proteus hunted in a nobler shape,
Became, when seiz'd, a puppy, or an ape.
To him the goddess: Son, thy grief lay down
And turn this whole illusion on the town:
As the sage dame, experienc'd in her trade,
By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade;
(Whence hapless Monsieur much complains at Paris
Of wrongs from Duchesses and Lady Maries;)
Be thine, my Stationer! this magic gift;
Cook shall be Prior; and Concanen, Swift:

REMARKS.

posterity, we shall not give any account of them, but proceed to those of whom it is necessary.—Besaleel Morris was author of some satires on the translators of Homer, with many other things printed in news-papers.—"Bond writ a sa-"tire against Mr. P.—. Capt. Breval was au-"thor of The Confederates, an ingenious drama-"tic performance to expose Mr. P. Mr. Gay, Dr. "Arb. and some ladies of quality," says, Curll, Key, p. 11.

Ver. 125. Mears, Warner, Wilkins] Booksellers, and printers of much anonymous stuff.

Ver. 126. Breval, Bund, Besaleel,] I foresee it will be objected from this line, that we were in an error in our assertion on ver. 50. of this book, that More was a fictitious name, since those persons are equally represented by the poet as phantoms. So at first sight it may be seen; but be not deceived, reader; these also are not real persons. 'Tis true, Curll declares Breval, a captain, author of a piece called the Confederates; but the same Curll first said it was written by Joseph Gay: Is his second assertion to be credited any more than his first? He likewise affirms Bond to be one who writ a satire on our poet: But where is such a satire to be found? where was such a writer ever heard of? As for Besaleel, it carries forgery in the very name; nor is it as the others are, a surname. Thou may'st depend upon it, no such authors ever lived; all phantoms. Scribl.

Ver. 128. Joseph Gay, a fictitious name put by Curll before several pamphlets, which made them pass with many for Mr. Gay's.—The ambiguity of the word Joseph, which likewise signifies a loose upper-coat, gives much pleasantry to the idea.

Ver. 132. And turn this whole illusion on the town:] It was a common practice of this bookseller to publish vile pieces of obscure hands under the names of eminent authors.

Ver. 138. Cook shall be Prior,] The man here specified writ a thing called The Battle of the Poets, in which Philips and Welsted were the heroes, and Swift and Pope utterly routed. He also published some malevolent things in the British, London, and Daily Journals: and at the same time wrote letters to Mr. Pope, protesting his innocence. His chief work was a translation of

So shall each hostile name become our own,
And we too boast our Garth and Addison.

REMARKS.

Hesiod, to which Theobald writ notes and half notes which he carefully owned.

Ver. 138 and Concanen, Swift:] In the first edition of this poem there were only asterisks in this place, but the names were since inserted, merely to fill the verse, and give ease to the reader.

Ver 140. And we too boast our Garth and Addison.] Nothing is more remarkable than our author's love of praising good writers. He has in this very poem celebrated Mr. Locke, Sir Isaac Newton, Dr. Barrow, Dr Atterbury, Mr. Dryden, Mr. Congreve, Dr. Garth, Mr. Addison; in a word, almost every man of his time that deserved it; even Cibber himself (presuming him to be the author of the Careless Husband). It was very difficult to have that pleasure in a poem on this subject, yet he has found means to insert their panegyric, and has made even Dulness out of her own mouth to pronounce it. It must have been particularly agreeable to him to celebrate Dr. Garth; both as his constant friend, and as he was his predecessor in this kind of satire The Dispensary attacked the whole body of Apothecaries, a much more useful one undoubtedly than that of the bad poets; if in truth this can be a body, of which no two members ever agreed. It also did, what Mr. Theobald says is unpardonable, draw in parts of private character, and introduced persons independent of his subject Much more would Boileau have incurred his censure, who left all subjects whatever, on all occasions to fall upon the bad poets (which, it is to be feared, would have been more immediately his concern.) But certainly next to commending good writers, the greatest service to learning is to expose the bad, who can only that way be made of any use to it. This truth is very well set forth in these lines addressed to our author.

"The craven rook, and pert jack-daw,
"(Though neither birds of moral kind)
"Yet serve, if hang'd, and stuff'd with straw,
"To show us which way blows the wind.

"Thus dirty knaves, or chattering fools,
"Strung up by dozens in thy lay,
"Teach more by half than Dennis' rules,
"And point instruction every way.

"With Egypt's art thy pen may strive:
"One potent drop let this but shed,
"And every rogue that stunk alive,
"Becomes a precious mummy dead."

Ver 142. rueful length of face] "The decre-"pid person or figure of a man are no reflections "upon his genius: An honest mind will love "and esteem a man of worth, though he be "deformed or poor. Yet the author of the "Dunciad hath libelled a person for his rueful

With that ſhe gave him (piteous of his caſe,
Yet ſmiling at his rueful length of face)
A ſhaggy tapeſtry, worthy to be ſpread,
On Codrus' old, or Dunton's modern bed;
Inſtructive work! whoſe wry-mouth'd portraiture
Diſplay'd the faces her confeſſors endure.
Earleſs on high, ſtood unabaſh'd De Foe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the ſcourge below
There Ridpath, Roper, cudgell'd might you view,
The very worſted ſtill look'd black and blue.
Himſelf among the ſtory'd chiefs he ſpies,
As, from the blanket high in air he flies.

REMARKS.

"length of face!" Miſt's Journal, June 8. The genius and man of worth, whom an honeſt mind ſhould love, is Mr. Curll. True it is, he ſtood on the pillory, an incident which will lengthen the face of any man, though it were ever ſo comely, therefore is no reflection on the natural beauty of Mr. Curll. But as to reflection on any man's face or figure, Mr. Dennis ſaith excellently; "Natural deformity comes not by our fault; "it is often occaſioned by calamities and diſeaſes, "which a man can no more help than a monſter "can his deformity. There is no one misfortune, "and no one diſeaſe, but what all mankind are "ſubject to.—But the deformity of this author is "viſible, preſent, laſting, unalterable, and pecu-"liar to himſelf. 'Tis the mark of God and Na-"ture upon him, to give us warning that we "ſhould hold no ſociety with him, as a creature "not of our original, nor of our ſpecies: and "they who have refuſed to take this warning, "which God and Nature has given them, and "have, in ſpite of it, by a ſenſeleſs preſumption "ventured to be familiar with him, have ſeverely "ſuffered. &c. It is certain his original is not "from Adam, but from the devil." &c.——Dennis, Character of Mr. P. 8vo. 1716.

Admirably it is obſerved by Mr. Dennis againſt Mr. Law, p. 33. "That the language of Billingſ-"gate can never be the language of charity, nor "conſequently of Chriſtianity." I ſhould elſe be tempted to uſe the language of a critic; for what is more provoking to a commentator than to behold his author thus pourtray'd? Yet I conſider it really hurts not him! whereas to call ſome others dull, might do them prejudice with a world too apt to believe it: Therefore, though Mr. D. may call another a little aſs or a young toad, far be it from us to call him a toothleſs lion or an old ſerpent. Indeed, had I written theſe notes (as was once my intent) in the learned language, I might have given him the appellations of balatro, calceatum caput, ſcurra in triviis, being phraſes in good eſteem and frequent uſage among the beſt learned. But in our mother-tongue, were I to tax any gentlemen of the Dunciad, ſurely it ſhould be in words not to the vulgar intelligible; whereby Chriſtian charity, decency, and good accord among authors, might be preſerved. SCRIBL.

The good Scriblerus here, as on all occaſions, eminently ſhows his humanity. But it was far

And oh! (he cry'd) what ſtreet, what lane, but knows
Our purgings, pumpings, blanketings, and blows?

REMARKS.

otherwiſe with the gentleman of the Dunciad, whoſe ſcurrilities were always perſonal, and of that nature which provoked every honeſt man but Mr. Pope; yet never to be lamented, ſince they occaſioned the following amiable verſes:

"While malice, Pope, denies thy page
"Its own celeſtial fire;
"While critics, and while bards in rage,
"Admiring, won't admire:

"While wayward pens thy worth aſſail,
"And envious tongues decry;
"Theſe times though many a friend bewail,
"Theſe times bewail not I.

"But when the world's loud praiſe is thine,
"And ſpleen no more ſhall blame,
"When with thy Homer thou ſhalt ſhine
"In one eſtabliſh'd fame:

"When none ſhall rail, and every lay
"Devote a wreath to thee;
"That day (for come it will) that day
"Shall I lament to ſee."

Ver. 143. A ſhaggy tapeſtry,] A ſorry kind of tapeſtry frequent in old inns, made of worſted or ſome coarſer ſtuff; like that which is ſpoken of by Donne. Faces as frightful as theirs who whipt Chriſt in old hangings. This imagery woven in it alludes to the mantle of Cloanthus, in Æn. v.

Ver 144. John Dunton was a broken bookſeller, and abuſive ſcribbler; he writ Neck or Nothing, a violent ſatire on ſome miniſters of ſtate; a libel on the Duke of Devonſhire and the Biſhop of Peterborough. &c.

Ver 148. And Tutchin flagrant from the ſcourge] John Tutchin, author of ſome vile verſes, and of a weekly paper called the Obſervator: He was ſentenced to be whipped through ſeveral towns in the weſt of England, upon which he petitioned King James II. to be hanged. When that prince died in exile, he wrote an invective againſt his memory, occaſioned by ſome humane elegies on his death. He lived to the time of Queen Anne.

Ver. 149. There Ridpath, Roper,] Authors of the Flying-Poſt and Poſt-Boy, two ſcandalous papers on different ſides, for which they equally and alternately deſerved to be cudgelled, and were ſo.

Ver. 151. Himſelf among the ſtory'd chiefs he ſpies,] The hiſtory of Curll's being toſſed in a blanket, and whipped by the ſcholars of Weſtminſter, is well known. Of his purging and vomiting, ſee A full and true account of a horrid Revenge on the body of Edmund Curll, &c. in Swift and Pope's Miſcellanies.

Ver. 157. See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,] In this game is expoſed, in the moſt contemptuous

In every loom our labours ſhall be ſeen,
And the freſh vomit run for ever green!
See in the circle next, Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love cloſe clinging to her waiſt;
Fair as before her works ſhe ſtands confeſs'd, 159
In flowers and pearls by bounteous Kirkall dreſs'd.
The goddeſs then: "Who beſt can ſend on high
"The ſalient ſpout, far ſtreaming to the ſky;
"His be yon Juno of majeſtic ſize,
"With cow-like udders, and with ox-like eyes.
"This China Jordan let the chief o'ercome
"Repleniſh, not inglorioufly, at home."
Oſborne and Curll accept the glorious ſtriſe,
(Though this his ſon diſſuades, and that his wife.)
One on his manly confidence relies,
One on his vigour and ſuperior ſize. 170
Firſt Oſborne lean'd againſt his letter'd poſt:
It roſe, and labour'd to a curve at moſt.
So Jove's bright bow diſplays its watery round
(Sure ſign that no ſpectator ſhall be drown'd).
A ſecond effort brought but new diſgrace,
The wild Meander waſh'd the artiſt's face:
Thus the ſmall jet, which haſty hands unlock,
Spirts in the gardener's eyes who turns the cock.
Not ſo from ſhameleſs Curll; impetuous ſpread
The ſtream, and ſmoking flouriſh'd o'er his head.
So (fam'd like thee for turbulence and horns) 181
Eridanus his humble fountain ſcorns;
Through half the heavens he pours th' exalted urn;
His rapid waters in their paſſage burn.

REMARKS.

manner, the profligate licentiouſneſs of thoſe ſhameleſs ſcribblers (for the moſt part of that ſex which ought leaſt to be capable of ſuch malice or impudence) who, in libellous memoirs and novels, reveal the faults or misfortunes of both ſexes, to the ruin of public fame, or diſturbances of private happineſs. Our good poet, (by the whole caſt of his work being obliged not to take off the irony) where he could not ſhow his indignation, hath ſhown his contempt, as much as poſſible; having here drawn as vile a picture as could be repreſented in the colours of epic poeſy. SCRIBL.

Ibid. Eliza Haywood; this woman was authoreſs of thoſe moſt ſcandalous books called the Court of Carimania, and the New Utopia. For the two babes of love, ſee Curll, Key, p. 22. But whatever reflection he is pleaſed to throw upon this lady, ſurely it was what from him ſhe little deſerved, who had celebrated Curll's undertakings for reformation of manners, and declared herſelf "to be ſo perfectly acquainted with the ſweetneſs "of his diſpoſition, and that tenderneſs with "which he conſidered the errors of his fellow-"creatures; that, though ſhe ſhould find the little "inadvertencies of her own life recorded in his "papers, ſhe was certain it would be done in ſuch "a manner as ſhe could not but approve." Mrs. Haywood, Hiſt. of Clar. printed in the Female Dunciad, p. 18.

Ver. 160. Kirkall,] the name of an engraver. Some of this lady's works were printed in four volumes in 12mo, with her picture thus dreſſed up before them.

Ver. 167. Oſborne, Thomas] A bookſeller in Gray's Inn, very well qualified by his impudence to act this part; therefore placed here inſtead of a leſs deſerving predeceſſor. [Chapman, the publiſher of Mrs. Haywood's New Utopia, &c.] This man publiſhed advertiſements for a year together, pretending to ſell Mr. Pope's Subſcription books of Homer's Iliad at half the price: Of which book he had none, but cut to the ſize of them (which was quarto) the common books in folio, without copper-plates, on a worſe paper, and never above half the value.

Upon this advertiſement the Gazetteer harangued thus, July 6, 1739. "How melancholy "muſt it be to a writer to be ſo unhappy as to ſee

REMARKS.

"his works hawked for ſale in a manner ſo fatal "to his fame! How, with honour to yourſelf, "and juſtice to your ſubſcribers, can this be done! "What an ingratitude to be charged on the only "honeſt poet that lived in 1738! and than whom "virtue has not had a ſhriller trumpeter for ma-"ny ages! That you were once generally admired "and eſteemed, can be denied by none; but that "you and your works are now deſpiſed, is veri-"fied by this fact:" which being utterly falſe, did not indeed much humble the author, but drew this juſt chaſtiſement on the bookſeller.

Ver. 183. Through half the heavens he pours th' exalted urn;] In a manuſcript Dunciad (where are ſome marginal corrections of ſome gentlemen ſome time deceaſed) I have found another reading of theſe lines: thus,

"And lifts his urn, through half the heavens to "flow;
"His rapid waters in their paſſage glow."

This I cannot but think the right: For, firſt, though the difference between burn and glow may ſeem not very material to others, to me I confeſs the latter has an elegance, a je ne ſçay quoy, which is much eaſier to be conceived than explained. Secondly, every reader of our poet muſt have obſerved how frequently he uſes this word glow in other parts of his works: To inſtance only in his Homer:

(1.) Iliad ix. ver. 726. With one reſentment glows,
(2.) Iliad xi. ver. 926. There the battle glows.
(3.) Ibid. ver. 985. The cloſing fleſh that inſtant ceas'd to glow.
(4.) Iliad xii. ver. 45. Encompaſs'd Hector glows.
(5.) Ibid. ver. 475. His beating breaſt with generous ardour glows.
(6.) Iliad xvii. ver. 591. Another part glow'd with refulgent arms.
(7.) Ibid. ver. 654. And curl'd on ſilver props in order glow.

I am afraid of growing too luxuriant in exam-

Swift as it mounts, all follow with their eyes:
Still happy impudence obtains the prize.
Thou triumph'ſt, victor of the high-wrought day,
And the pleas'd dame, ſoft ſmiling, lead'ſt away.
Oſborne, through perfect modeſty o'ercome,
Crown'd with the Jordan, walks contented home.
But now for authors nobler palms remain; 191
Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntſmen with a ſhout precede his chair:
He grins, and looks broad nonſenſe with a ſtare.
His honour's meaning Dulneſs thus expreſt,
"He wins this patron who can tickle beſt."
He chinks his purſe, and takes his ſeat of ſtate:
With ready quills the dedicators wait;
Now at his head the dextrous taſk commence,
And, inſtant, fancy feels th' imputed ſenſe; 200
Now gentle touches wanton o'er his face,
He ſtruts Adonis, and affects grimace;
Rolli the feather to his ear conveys,
Then his nice taſte directs our operas:
Bentley his mouth with claſſic flattery opes,
And the puff'd orator burſts out in tropes.
But Welſted moſt the poet's healing balm
Strives to extract from his ſoft, giving palm;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 205. In former edit. Welſted.
Ver. 207. In the firſt edit.

But Oldmixon the poet's healing balm, &c.

And again in ver. 209. Unlucky Oldmixon!

REMARKS.

ples, or I could ſtretch this catalogue to a great extent; but theſe are enough to prove his fondneſs for this beautiful word, which, therefore let all future editions replace here.

I am aware, after all, that burn is the proper word to convey an idea of what was ſaid to be Mr. Curll's condition at this time: But from that very reaſon I infer the direct contrary. For ſurely every lover of our author will conclude he had more humanity than to inſult a man on ſuch a misfortune or calamity, which could never befal him purely by his own fault, but from an unhappy communication with another. This note is half Mr. Theobald, half SCRIBL.

Ver. 203. Paolo Antonio Rolli,] an Italian poet, and writer of many operas in that language, which, partly by the help of his genius, prevailed in England near twenty years. He taught Italian to ſome fine gentlemen, who affected to direct the operas.

Ver. 205. Bentley his mouth, &c.] Not ſpoken of the famous Dr. Richard Bentley, but of one Thomas Bentley, a ſmall critic, who aped his uncle in a little Horace. The great one was intended to be dedicated to the Lord Halifax, but (on a change of the miniſtry) was given to the Earl of Oxford; for which reaſon the little one was dedicated to his ſon the Lord Harley.

Ver. 207. Welſted] Leonard Welſted, author of the Triumvirate, or a letter in verſe from Palæmon to Celia at Bath, which was meant for a ſatire on Mr. P. and ſome of his friends about the year 1718. [He writ other things which we cannot remember. Smedley, in his Metamorphoſis of Scriblerus, mentions one, the hymn of a gentleman to his Creator: And there was another in praiſe either of a cellar, or a garret. L. W. characteriſed in the Περι Βαθους, or the Art of Sinking, as a didapper, and after as an eel, is ſaid to be this perſon, by Dennis, Daily Journal of May 11, 1728. He was alſo characteriſed under another animal, a mole, by the author of the enſuing ſimile, which was handed about at the ſame time:

"Dear Welſted, mark, in dirty hole,
"That painful animal, a mole:
"Above ground never born to grow;
"What mighty ſtir it keeps below!
"To make a mole-hill all his ſtrife!
"It digs, pokes, undermines for life.
"How proud a little dirt to ſpread;
"Conſcious of nothing o'er its head!
"Till, labouring on for want of eyes,
"It blunders into light and dies."]

Unlucky Welſted! thy unfeeling maſter,
The more thou tickleſt, gripes his fiſt the faſter 210
While thus each hand promotes the pleaſing pain,
And quick ſenſations ſkip from vein to vein;
A youth unknown to Phœbus, in deſpair,
Puts his laſt refuge all in heaven and prayer.
What force have pious vows! The queen of love
Her ſiſter ſends, her votareſs, from above,
As, taught by Venus, Paris learnt the art
To touch Achilles' only tender part;
Secure, through her, the noble prize to carry,
He marches off, his grace's ſecretary. 220
Now turn to different ſports (the goddeſs cries)
And learn, my ſons, the wondrous power of noiſe.
To move, to raiſe, to raviſh every heart,
With Shakſpeare's nature, or with Jonſon's art,
Let others aim: 'Tis yours to ſhake the ſoul
With thunder rumbling from the muſtard-bowl,
With horns and trumpets now to madneſs ſwell,
Now ſink in ſorrows with a tolling bell!
Such happy arts attention can command,
When fancy flags, and ſenſe is at a ſtand. 230
Improve we theſe. Three cat-calls be the bribe
Of him, whoſe chattering ſhames the monkey tribe:
And his this drum, whoſe hoarſe heroic baſs
Drowns the loud clarion of the braying aſs.
Now thouſand tongues are heard in one loud din:
The monkey-mimics ruſh diſcordant in;

REMARKS.

You have him again in book iii. ver. 169.

Ver. 226. With thunder rumbling from the muſtard-bowl,] The old way of making thunder and muſtard were the ſame! but ſince, it is more advantageouſly performed by troughs of wood with ſtops in them. Whether Mr. Dennis was the inventor of that improvement, I know not; but it is certain, that being once at a tragedy of a

'Twas chattering, grinning, mouthing, jabbering all,
And Noiſe and Norton, Brangling and Breval,
Dennis and Diſſonance, and captious Art,
And Snip-ſnap ſhort, and Interruption ſmart,
And Demonſtration thin, and Theſes thick,
And Major, Minor, and Concluſion quick.
Hold (cry'd the queen); A cat-call each ſhall win;
Equal your merits! equal is your din:
But that this well-diſputed game may end,
Sound forth, my brayers, and the welkin rend.
As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At ſome ſick miſer's triple-bolted gate,
For their defrauded, abſent foals they make
A moan ſo loud, that all the Guild awake!
Sore ſighs Sir Gilbert, ſtarting at the bray,
From dreams of millions, and three groats to pay:
So ſwells each wind pipe; aſs intones to aſs,
Harmonic twang! of leather, horn, and braſs;
Such as from labouring lungs th' enthuſiaſt blows,
High ſounds, attemper'd to the vocal noſe;
Or ſuch as bellow from the deep divine; [thine.
There, Webſter! peal'd thy voice, and Whitfield!
But far o'er all ſonorous Blackmore's ſtrain;
Walls, ſteeples, ſkies, bray back to him again.
In Tottenham fields, the brethren, with amaze,
Prick all their ears up, and forget to graze!
Long Chancery-lane retentive rolls the ſound,
And courts to courts return it round and round;
Thames wafts it thence to Rufus' roaring hall,
And Hungerford re-echoes bawl for bawl.
All hail him victor in both gifts of ſong,
Who ſings ſo loudly, and who ſings ſo long.

This labour paſt, by Bridewell all deſcend,
(As morning-prayers and flagellation end)

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 241, 242. added ſince the firſt edition.

Ver. 257, 258. This couplet is an addition.

REMARKS.

new author, he fell into a great paſſion at hearing ſome, and cried, "'Sdeath! that is my thunder."

Ver. 238. Norton,] See ver. 417. J. Durant Breval, author of a very extraordinary book of travels, and ſome poems. See before, note on ver. 126.

Ver. 258. Webſter—and Whitfield] [The one the writer of a newſpaper called the Weekly Miſcellany, the other a field preacher. This thought the only means of advancing religion was by the new-birth of ſpiritual madneſs: That by the old death of fire and faggot: and therefore they agreed in this, though in no other earthly thing, to abuſe all the ſober clergy. From the ſmall ſucceſs of theſe two extraordinary perſons, we may learn how little hurtful bigotry and enthuſiaſm are, while the civil magiſtrate prudently forbears to lend his power to the one, in order to the employing it againſt the other.]

Ver. 263. Long Chancery-lane] The place where the offices of Chancery are kept. The long detention of clients in that court, and the difficulty of getting out, is humouroufly allegorized in theſe lines.

Ver. 268. Who ſings ſo loudly, and who ſings ſo long.] A juſt character of Sir Richard Blackmore, Knt. who (as Mr. Dryden expreſſeth it) and whoſe indefatigable muſe produced no leſs than ſix epic poems: Prince and King Arthur, twenty books; Eliza, ten; Alfred, twelve; the Redeemer, ſix; beſides Job, in folio; the whole book of Pſalms; the Creation, ſeven books; Nature of Man, three books; and many more. It is in this ſenſe he is ſtyled afterwards the everlaſting Blackmore. Notwithſtanding all which, Mr. Gildon ſeems aſſured, "that this admirable author did "not think himſelf upon the ſame foot with Homer." Comp. Art of Poetry, vol. i. p. 108.

"Writ to the rumbling of his coach's wheels;"

But how different is the judgment of the author of Characters of the Times? p. 25. who ſays, "Sir Richard Blackmore is unfortunate in happening to miſtake his proper talents; and that "he has not for many years been ſo much as "named, or even thought of among writers."—Even Mr. Dennis differs greatly from his friend Mr. Gildon: "Blackmore's action (ſaith he) has "neither unity, nor integrity, nor morality, nor "univerſality; and conſequently he can have no "fable, and no heroic poem: His narration is "neither probable, delightful, nor wonderful; "his characters have none of the neceſſary qualifications; the things contained in his narration "are neither in their own nature delightful, nor "numerous enough, nor rightly diſpoſed, nor "ſurpriſing, nor pathetic." Nay, he proceeds ſo far as to ſay Sir Richard has no genius; firſt laying down, that "genius is cauſed by a furious joy "and pride of ſoul, on the conception of an extraordinary hint. Many men (ſays he) have "their hints, without theſe motions of fury and "pride of ſoul, becauſe they want fire enough to "agitate their ſpirits; and theſe we call cold "writers. Others who have a great deal of fire, "but have not excellent organs, feel the fore-"mentioned notions, without the extraordinary "hints; and theſe we call fuſtian writers. But "he declares that Sir Richard had neither the "hints nor the motions." Remarks on Prince Arthur, octavo, 1696. Preface.

This gentleman in his firſt works abuſed the character of Mr. Dryden; and in his laſt, of Mr. Pope, accuſing him in very high terms of profaneneſs and immorality (Eſſay on Polite Writing, vol. ii. p. 270.) on a mere report from Edm. Curll, that he was author of a traveſtie on the firſt pſalm. Mr. Dennis took up the ſame report, but with the addition of what Sir Richard had neglected, an argument to prove it; which being very curious, we ſhall here tranſcribe. "It was "he who burleſqued the Pſalms of David. It is "apparent to me that pſalm was burleſqued by a "Popiſh rhymeſter. Let rhyming perſons who "have been brought up Proteſtants be otherwiſe "what they will, let them be rakes, let them be

To where Fleet-ditch with diſemboguing ſtreams
Rolls the large tribute of dead dogs to Thames,
The king of dikes! than whom no ſluice of mud
With deeper ſable blots the ſilver flood.
" Here ſtrip, my children! here at once leap in,
" Here prove who beſt can daſh through thick and
" thin,
" And who the moſt in love of dirt excel,
" Or dark dexterity of groping well.
" Who flings moſt filth, and wide pollutes around
" The ſtream, be his the weekly journals bound;
" A pig of lead to him who dives the beſt; 281
" A peck of coals a-piece ſhall glad the reſt."
In naked majeſty Oldmixon ſtands,
And, Milo-like, ſurveys his arms and hands;

VARIATION.

Ver 283. In former edit.
——great Dennis ſtands.

REMARKS.

" ſcoundrels, let them be atheiſts, yet education
" has made an invincible impreſſion on them in be-
" half of the ſacred writings. But a Popiſh rhyme-
" ſter has been brought up with a contempt for
" thoſe ſacred writings; now ſhow me another Po-
" piſh rhymeſter but he." This manner of argumentation is uſual with Mr. Dennis; he has employed the ſame againſt Sir Richard himſelf, in a like charge of impiety and irreligion. " All Mr.
" Blackmore's celeſtial machines, as they cannot " be defended ſo much as by common received
" opinion, ſo are they directly contrary to the " doctrine of the Church of England; for the vi-
" ſible deſcent of an angel muſt be a miracle. Now
" it is the doctrine of the Church of England, that
" miracles had ceaſed a long time before Prince
" Arthur came into the world. Now, if the doc-
" trine of the Church of England be true, as we
" are obliged to believe, then are all the celeſtial
" machines in Prince Arthur unſufferable, as want-
" ing not only human, but divine probability. But
" if the machines are ſufferable, that is, if they
" have ſo much as divine probability, then it fol-
" lows of neceſſity, that the doctrine of the Church
" is falſe. So I leave it to every impartial clergy-
" man to conſider," &c.——Preface to the Remarks on Prince Arthur.

Ver. 270. (As morning prayer and flagellation end)] It is between eleven and twelve in the morning, after church ſervice, that the criminals are whipt in Bridewell.—This is to mark punctually the time of the day: Homer does it by the circumſtance of the judges riſing from court, or of the labourers dinner: our author by one very proper, both to the perſons, and the ſcene of his poem, which we may remember commenced in the evening of the Lord Mayor's day: The firſt book paſſed in that night; the next morning the games begin in the Strand, thence along Fleet-ſtreet (places inhabited by booksellers), then they proceed by Bridewell, toward Fleet-ditch; and laſtly, through Ludgate, to the city and the temple of the goddeſs.

Then ſighing thus, " And am I now threeſcore?
" Ah, why, ye gods! ſhould two and two make
" four?"
He ſaid, and climb'd a ſtranded lighter's height,
Shot to the black abyſs, and plung'd downright.
The ſenior's judgment all the crowd admire,
Who but to ſink the deeper, roſe the higher. 290
Next Smedley div'd; ſlow circles dimpled o'er
The quaking mud, that clos'd and op'd no more.
All look, all ſigh, and call on Smedley loſt;
Smedley in vain reſounds through all the coaſt.
Then * * eſſay'd; ſcarce vaniſh'd out of ſight,
He buoys up inſtant, and returns to light:

VARIATION.

Ver. 295. in former edit.
Then * * try'd, but hardly ſnatch'd from ſight.

REMARKS.

Ver. 280. The weekly journals.] Papers of news and ſcandal, intermixed, on different ſides and parties, and frequently ſhifting from one ſide to the other, called the London Journal, Britiſh Journal, Daily Jonrnal, &c. the concealed writers of which, for ſome time, were Oldmixon, Roome, Arnall, Concanen, and others; perſons never ſeen by our author.

Ver. 283. In naked majeſty Oldmixon ſtands.] Mr. John Oldmixon, next to Mr. Dennis, the moſt ancient critic of our nation; an unjuſt cenſurer of Mr. Addiſon, in his proſe Eſſay on Criticiſm, whom alſo in his imitation of Bouhours (called the Arts of Logic and Rhetoric) he miſrepreſents in plain matter of fact; for in p. 45. he cites the Spectator as abuſing Dr. Swift by name, where there is not the leaſt hint of it; and in p. 304. is ſo injurious as to ſuggeſt that Mr. Addiſon himſelf writ that Tatler, No. 43.; which ſays of his own ſmile, that "'Tis as great as ever entered into the mind " of man." " In poetry he was not ſo happy as " laborious, and therefore characteriſed by the Tat-" ler, No. 62. by the name of Omicron the unborn " poet." Curll, Key, p. 13 " He writ dramatic " works, and a volume of poetry, conſiſting of he-" roic epiſtles, &c. ſome whereof were very well " done," ſaid that great judge, Mr. Jacob, in his Lives of Poets, vol. ii. p. 303.

In his Eſſay on Criticiſm, and the Arts of Logic and Rhetoric, he frequently reflects on our author. But the top of his character was a perverter of hiſtory, in that ſcandalous one of the Stuarts, in folio, and his Critical Hiſtory of England, two volumes, 8vo. Being employed by Biſhop Kennet in publiſhing the hiſtorians in his collection, he falſified Daniel's Chronicle in numberleſs places. Yet this very man, in the preface to the firſt of theſe books, advanced a particular fact, to charge three eminent perſons of falſifying the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory; which fact has been diſproved by Dr. Atterbury, late Biſhop of Rocheſter, then the only ſurvivor of them; and the particular part he pretended to be falſified, produced ſince, after almoſt ninety years, in that noble author's original manuſcript. He was all his life a virulent party-writer for hire, and received his reward in a ſmall place, which he enjoyed to his death.

He bears no tokens of the ſabler ſtreams,
And mounts far off among the ſwans of Thames.
True to the bottom, ſee Concanen creep,
A cold, long-winded, native of the deep:
If perſeverance gain the diver's prize,
Not everlaſting Blackmore this denies:
No noiſe, no ſtir, no motion canſt thou make,
Th' unconſcious ſtream ſleeps o'er thee like a lake.
Next plung'd a feeble, but a deſperate pack,
With each a ſickly brother at his back:
Sons of a day! juſt buoyant on the flood,
Then number'd with the puppies in the mud.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 298. in the firſt edit. followed theſe:
For worſe unhappy D——r ſucceeds,
He ſearch'd for coral, but he gather'd weeds.
Ver. 305.—314. Not in former edit.

REMARKS.

Ver. 291. Next Smedley div'd.] In the ſurreptitious editions, this whole epiſode was applied to an initial letter E—, by whom, if they meant the laureat, nothing was more abſurd, no part agreeing with his character. The allegory evidently demands a perſon dipped in ſcandal, and deeply immerſed in dirty work; whereas Mr. Euſden's writings rarely offended but by their length and multitude; and accordingly are taxed of nothing elſe in book i. ver 102. But the perſon here mentioned, an Iriſhman, was author and publiſher of many ſcurrilous pieces, a weekly Whitehall Journal, in the year 1722, in the name of Sir James Baker; and particularly whole volumes of Billingſgate againſt Dr. Swift and Mr. Pope, called Gulliveriana and Alexandriana, printed in 8vo, 1728.

Ver. 295. Then * * eſſay'd.] A gentleman of genius and ſpirit, who was ſecretly dipt in ſome papers of this kind, on whom our poet beſtows a panegyric inſtead of a ſatire, as deſerving to be better employed than in party-quarrels, and perſonal invectives.

Ver. 299. Concanen.] Matthew Concanen, an Iriſhman, bred to the law. Smedley (one of his brethren in enmity to Swift) in his Metamorphoſis of Scriblerus, p. 7. accuſes him of "having "boaſted of what he had not written, but others "had reviſed and done for him." He was author of ſeveral dull and dead ſcurrilities in the Britiſh and London Journals, and in a paper called the Speculatiſt. In a pamphlet, called a Supplement to the Profound, he dealt very unfairly with our poet, not only frequently imputing to him Mr. Broome's verſes (for which he might indeed ſeem in ſome degree accountable, having corrected what that gentleman did) but thoſe of the Duke of Buckingham, and others: To this rare piece ſomebody humorouſly cauſed him to take for his motto, "De profundis clamavi." He was ſince a hired ſcribler in the Daily Courant, where he poured forth much Billingſgate againſt the Lord Bolingbroke, and others; after which this man was ſurpriſingly promoted to adminiſter juſtice and law in Jamaica.

Aſk ye their names! I could as ſoon diſcloſe
The names of theſe blind puppies as of thoſe.
Faſt by, like Niobe (her children gone)
Sits Mother Oſborne, ſtupify'd to ſtone!
And monumental braſs this record bears,
"Theſe are—ah no! theſe were the gazetteers!"
Not ſo, bold Arnall; with a weight of ſkull,
Furious he dives, precipitately dull.
Whirlpools and ſtorms his circling arm inveſt,
With all the might of gravitation bleſt.
No crab more active in the dirty dance,
Downward to climb, and backward to advance,

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 315. In firſt edit.
Not Welſted ſo: drawn endlong by his ſkull,
Furiouſly he ſinks, percipitately dull.

REMARKS.

Ver. 306, 307. With each a ſickly brother at his back—Sons of a day, &c.] Theſe were daily papers, a number of which, to leſſen the expence, were printed one on the back of another.

Ver. 312. Oſborne.] A name aſſumed by the eldeſt and graveſt of theſe writers, who at laſt being aſhamed of his pupils, gave his paper over, and in his age remained ſilent.

Ver. 314. Gazetteers.] We ought not to ſuppoſe that a modern critic here taxeth the poet with an anachroniſm, affirming theſe gazetteers not to have lived within the time of his poem, and challenging us to produce any ſuch paper of that date. But we may with equal aſſurance aſſert theſe gazetteers not to have lived ſince, and challenge all the learned world to produce one ſuch paper at this day. Surely, therefore, where the point is ſo obſcure, our author ought not to be cenſured too raſhly. SCRIBL.

Notwithſtanding this affected ignorance of the good Scriblerus, the Daily Gazetteer was a title given very properly to certain papers, each of which laſted but a day. Into this, as a common ſink, was received all the traſh, which had been before diſperſed in ſeveral journals, and circulated at the public expence of the nation. The authors were the ſame obſcure men: though ſometimes relieved by occaſional eſſays from ſtateſmen, courtiers, biſhops, deans, and doctors. The meaner ſort were rewarded with money; others with places or benefices, from an hundred to a thouſand a-year. It appears from the report of the ſecret committee for inquiring into the conduct of R. Earl of O. "That no leſs than fifty thouſand "ſeventy-ſeven pounds eighteen ſhillings, were "paid to authors and printers of newſpapers, ſuch "as Free Britons, Daily Courants, Corn Cutter's "Journals, Gazetteers, and other political papers, "between Feb. 10, 1731, and Feb. 10, 1741." Which ſhows the benevolence of one miniſter, to have expended, for the current dulneſs of ten years in Britain, double the ſum which gained Louis XIV. ſo much honour, in annual penſions to learned men all over Europe. In which, and in a much longer time, not a penſion at court, nor pre-

He brings up half the bottom on his head,
And loudly claims the journals and the lead.
The plunging prelate, and his ponderous grace,
With holy envy gave one layman place:
When lo! a burſt of thunder ſhook the flood,
Slow roſe a form, in majeſty of mud;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 323.—326. In firſt edit. thus:
Sudden a burſt of thunder ſhook the flood,
Lo, Smedley roſe in majeſty of mud.

REMARKS.

ferment in the church or univerſities, of any conſideration, was beſtowed on any man diſtinguiſhed for his learning ſeparately from party merit, or pamphlet-writing.

It is worth a reflection, that of all the panegyrics beſtowed by theſe writers on this great miniſter, not one is at this day extant or remembered, not even ſo much credit done to his perſonal character by all they have written, as by one ſhort occaſional compliment of our author:

" Seen him I have; but in his happier hour
" Of ſocial pleaſure, ill exchang'd for power!
" Seen him, uncumber'd by the venal tribe,
" Smile without art, and win without a bribe."

Ver. 315 Arnall] WILLIAM ARNALL, bred an attorney, was a perfect genius in this ſort of work. He began under twenty with furious party papers; then ſucceeded Concanen in the Britiſh Journal. At the firſt publication of the Dunciad, he prevailed on the author not to give him his due place in it, by a letter profeſſing his deteſtation of ſuch practices as his predeceſſors. But ſince, by the moſt unexampled inſolence, and perſonal abuſe of ſeveral great men, the poet's particular friends, he moſt amply deſerved a niche in the Temple of Infamy: witneſs a paper, called the Free Briton, a dedication intituled, To the Genuine Blunderer, 1732, and many others. He writ for hire, and valued himſelf upon it; not indeed without cauſe, it appearing by the aforeſaid REPORT, that he received " for Free Britons, and other writings, in " the ſpace of four years, no leſs than ten thouſand " nine hundred and ninety-ſeven pounds ſix ſhil- " lings and eight-pence, out of the Treaſury." But frequently, through his fury or folly, he exceeded all the bounds of his commiſſion, and obliged his honourable patron to diſavow his ſcurrilities.

Ver. 323. The plunging prelate, &c.] It having been invidiouſly inſinuated that by this title was meant a truly great prelate, as reſpectable for his defence of the preſent balance of power in the civil conſtitution, as for his oppoſition to the ſcheme of no power at all, in the religious; I owe ſo much to the memory of my deceaſed friend as to declare, that when, a little before his death, I informed him of this inſinuation, he called it vile and malicious, as any candid man, he ſaid, might underſtand, by his having paid a willing compliment to this very prelate in another part of the poem.

Shaking the horrors of his ſable brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze,
Greater he looks, and more than mortal ſtares;
Then thus the wonders of the deep declares:
Firſt he relates, how ſinking to the chin,
Smit with his mien, the mud nymphs ſuck'd him in:
How young Lutetia, ſofter than the down,
Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,
Vy'd for his love in jetty bowers below,
As Hylas fair was raviſh'd long ago
Then ſung, how, ſhown him by the nut-brown maids,
A branch of Styx here riſes from the ſhades;
That tinctur'd as it runs with Lethe's ſtreams,
And wafting vapours from the land of dreams
(As under ſeas Alpheus' ſecret ſluice
Bears Piſa's offering to his Arethuſe),
Pours into Thames: and hence the mingled wave
Intoxicates the pert, and lulls the grave:
Here briſker vapours o'er the temple creep,
There all, from Paul's to Aldgate, drink and ſleep.
Thence to the banks where reverend bards repoſe,
They led him ſoft; each reverend bard aroſe;
And Milbourne chief, deputed by the reſt,
Gave him the caſſock, ſurcingle, and veſt.
" Receive (he ſaid), theſe robes which once were " mine,
" Dulneſs is ſacred in a ſound divine."
He ceas'd, and ſpread the robe; the crowd confeſs
The reverend flamen in his lengthen'd dreſs.
Around him wide a ſable army ſtand,
A low-born, cell-bred, ſelfiſh, ſervile band,

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 343.—351. In firſt edit. thus:
Pours into Thames: each city bowl is full
Of the mixt wave, and all who drink grow dull.
Here to the banks, where bards departed doſe,
They led him ſoft; here all the bards aroſe;
Taylor, ſweet bird of Thames, majeſtic bows,
And Shadwell nods the poppy on his brows;
While Milbourne there, deputed by the reſt,
Gave him the caſſock, ſurcingle, and veſt;
And " Take" (he ſaid), &c.

Ver. 355.—362. Not in the firſt edit. where, inſtead of ver. 365.—367. were originally theſe lines:

Slow moves the goddeſs from the ſable flood,
(Her prieſt preceding) through the gates of Lud.
Her critics there ſhe ſummons, and prociaims
A gentler exerciſe to cloſe the games.
Here you, in whoſe grave heads, &c.

REMARKS.

Ver. 349 And Milbourne] Luke Milbourne, a clergyman, the faireſt of critics; who, when he wrote againſt Mr. Dryden's Virgil, did him juſtice in printing at the ſame time his own tranſlations of him, which were intolerable. His manner of writing has a great reſemblance with that of the gentlemen of the Dunciad againſt our author, as will be ſeen in the parallel of Mr. Dryden and him. Append.

Prompt or to guard or ſtab, to ſaint or damn,
Heaven's Swiſs, who fight for any God, or man.
Through Lud's fam'd gates, along the well-known Fleet,
Rolls the black troop, and overſhades the ſtreet,
Till ſhowers of ſermons, characters, eſſays,
In circling fleeces whiten all the ways:
So clouds, repleniſh'd from ſome bog below,
Mount in dark volumes, and deſcend in ſnow.
Here ſtopt the goddeſs; and in pomp proclaims
A gentler exerciſe to cloſe the games.
" Ye critics! in whoſe heads, as equal ſcales,
" I weigh what author's heavineſs prevails:
" Which moſt conduce to ſooth the ſoul in ſlumbers,
" My Henley's periods, or my Blackmore's numbers,
" Attend the trial we propoſe to make:
" If there be man, who o'er ſuch works can wake,
" Sleep's all-ſubduing charms who dares defy,
" And boaſts Ulyſſes' ear with Argus' eye;
" To him we grant our ampleſt powers, to ſit
" Judge of all preſent, paſt, and future wit;
" To cavil, cenſure, dictate, right or wrong,
" Full and eternal privilege of tongue."
Three college ſophs and three pert templars came,
The ſame their talents, and their taſtes the ſame;
Each prompt to query, anſwer, and debate,
And ſmit with love of poeſy and prate.
The ponderous books two gentle readers bring!
The heroes ſit, the vulgar form a ring.
The clamorous crowd is huſh'd with mugs of mum,
Till all, tun'd equal, ſend a general hum.
Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long, heavy, painful page drawl on;
Soft creeping words on words, the ſenſe compoſe,
At every line they ſtretch, they yawn, they doſe.
As to ſoft gales top-heavy pines bow low
Their heads, and lift them as they ceaſe to blow;
Thus oft they rear, and oft the head decline,
As breathe, or pauſe by fits, the airs divine.

VARIATION.

Ver. 379. In firſt edit.
Three Cambridge ſophs.

REMARKS.

Ver. 255. Around him wide, &c.] It is to be hoped that the ſatire in theſe lines will be underſtood in the confined ſenſe in which the author meant it, of ſuch only of the clergy, who, though ſolemnly engaged in the ſervice of religion, dedicate themſelves for venal and corrupt ends to that of miniſters or factions; and though educated under an entire ignorance of the world, aſpire to interfere in the government of it, and conſequently to diſturb and diſorder it; in which they fall ſhort of their predeceſſors only by being inveſted with much leſs of that power and authority, which they employed indifferently (as is hinted at in the lines above) either in ſupporting arbitrary power, or in exciting rebellion; in canonizing the vices of tyrants, or in blackening the virtues of patriots; in corrupting religion by ſuperſtition, or betraying it by libertiniſm, as either was thought beſt to ſerve the ends of policy, or flatter the follies of the great.

And now to this ſide, now to that they nod,
As verſe, or proſe, infuſe the drowſy god.
Thrice Budgel aim'd to ſpeak, but thrice ſuppreſt
By potent Arthur, knock'd his chin and breaſt.
Toland and Tindal, prompt at prieſts to jeer,
Yet ſilent bow'd to "Chriſt's No kingdom here."
Who ſat the neareſt, by the words o'ercome,
Slept firſt, the diſtant nodded to the hum.
Then down are roll'd the books; ſtretch'd o'er them
Each gentle clerk, and muttering ſeals his eyes,
As what a Dutchman plumps into the lakes,
One circle firſt, and then a ſecond makes;
What Dulneſs dropt among her ſons impreſt,
Like motion from one circle to the reſt:
So from the midmoſt the nutation ſpreads,
Round and more round, o'er all the ſea of heads.
At laſt Centlivre felt her voice to fail,
Motteux himſelf unfiniſh'd left his tale,
Boyer the ſtate, and Law the ſtage gave o'er,
Morgan and Mandevil could prate no more;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 399. in the firſt edit. it was,
Collins and Tindal, prompt at prieſts to jeer.
Ver. 412. In firſt edit.
Old James himſelf.
Ver. 413. in the firſt edit. it was,
T—s and T— the church and ſtate gave o'er,
Nor * * * talk'd, nor S— whiſper'd more.
In the ſecond,
Boyer the ſtate, and Law the ſtage gave o'er,
Nor Motteux talk'd, nor Naſo whiſper'd more.

REMARKS.

Ver 397. Thrice Budgel aim'd to ſpeak,] Famous for his ſpeeches on many occaſions about the South Sea ſcheme, &c. "He is a very ingenious "gentleman, and hath written ſome excellent epi-"logues to plays, and one ſmall piece on Love, "which is very pretty." Jacob, Lives of Poets, vol. ii. p. 289. But this gentleman ſince made himſelf much more eminent, and perſonally well known to the greateſt ſtateſmen of all parties, as well as to all the courts of law in this nation.

Ver. 399. Toland and Tindal,] Two perſons not ſo happy as to be obſcure, who writ againſt the religion of their country. Toland, the author of the Atheiſt's Liturgy, called Pantheiſticon, was a ſpy, in pay to Lord Oxford. Tindal was author of the rights of the Chriſtian Church, and Chriſtianity as old as the Creation. He alſo wrote an abuſive pamphlet againſt Earl S— which was ſuppreſſed while yet in MS. by an eminent perſon, then out of the miniſtry, to whom he ſhowed it, expecting his approbation: This Doctor afterwards publiſhed the ſame piece, mutatis mutandis, againſt that very perſon.

Ver. 400. Chriſt's no kingdom, &c.] This is ſaid by Curll, Key to Dunc. to allude to a ſermon of a reverend biſhop.

Ver. 411. Centlivre] Mrs. Suſanna Centlivre, wife to Mr. Centlivre, yeoman of the mouth to his Majeſty. She writ many plays, and a ſong (ſays Mr. Jacob, vol. i. p. 32.) before ſhe was ſe-

Norton, from Daniel and Oſtræa ſprung,
Bleſs'd with his father's front, and mother's tongue,
Hung ſilent down his never-blushing head;
And all was huſh'd, as Folly's ſelf lay dead.
Thus the ſoft gifts of Sleep conclude the day,
And ſtretch'd on bulks, as uſual, poets lay.
Why ſhould I ſing, what bards the nightly muſe
Did ſlumbering viſit, and convey to ſtews;
Who prouder march'd with magiſtrates in ſtate,
To ſome fam'd round-houſe, ever-open gate!
How Henley lay inſpir'd beſide a ſink,
And to mere mortals ſeem'd a prieſt in drink:
While others, timely, to the neighbouring Fleet
(Haunt of the muſes) made their ſafe retreat.

VARIATION.

Ver. 425. In firſt edit.
How Laurus lay, &c.

REMARKS.

ven years old. She alſo writ a ballad againſt Mr. Pope's Homer, before he began it.

Ver. 413. Boyer the ſtate, and Law the ſtage gave o'er,] A. Boyer, a voluminous compiler of annals, political collections, &c.—William Law, A. M. wrote with great zeal againſt the ſtage; Mr. Dennis anſwered with as great: Their books were printed in 1726. The ſame Mr. Law is author of a book, intituled, "An Appeal to all that doubt of, or diſbelieve the truth of the Goſpel;" in which he has detailed a ſyſtem of the rankeſt ſpinoziſm, for the moſt exalted theology; and amongſt other things as rare, has informed us of this, that Sir Iſaac Newton ſtole the principles of his philoſophy from one Jacob Behmen, a German cobler.

Ver. 414. Morgan] A writer againſt religion, diſtinguiſhed no otherwiſe from the rabble of his tribe, than by the pompouſneſs of his title; for having ſtolen his morality from Tindal, and his philoſophy from Spinoſa, he calls himſelf, by the courteſy of England, a moral philoſopher.

Ibid. Mandevil] This writer, who prided himſelf in the reputation of an immoral philoſopher, was author of a famous book, called the Fable of the Bees; written to prove that moral virtue is the invention of knaves, and Chriſtian virtue the impoſition of fools; and that vice is neceſſary, and alone ſufficient to render ſociety flouriſhing and happy.

Ver. 415. Norton,] Norton de Foe, offspring of the famous Daniel, Fortes creantur fortibus. One of the authors of the Flying Poſt, in which well-bred work Mr. P. had ſome time the honour to be abuſed with his betters; and of many hired ſcurrilities and daily papers, to which he never ſet his name.

Ver. 427. Fleet.] A priſon for inſolvent debtors, on the bank of the Ditch.

BOOK III.

ARGUMENT.

After the other perſons are diſpoſed in their proper places of reſt, the goddeſs tranſports the king to her temple, and there lays him to ſlumber with his head on her lap; a poſition of marvellous virtue, which cauſeth all the viſions of wild enthuſiaſts, projectors, politicians, inamoratos, caſtle builders, chemiſts, and poets. He is immediately carried on the wings of fancy, and led by a mad poetical Sibyl, to the Elyſian ſhade; where, on the banks of Lethe, the ſouls of the dull are dipped by Bavius, before their entrance into this world. There he is met by the ghoſt of Settle, and by him made acquainted with the wonders of the place, and with thoſe which he himſelf is deſtined to perform. He takes him to a mount of viſion, from whence he ſhows him the paſt triumphs of the empire of Dulneſs, then the preſent, and laſtly the future: how ſmall a part of the world was ever conquered by ſcience, how ſoon thoſe conqueſts were ſtopped, and thoſe very nations again reduced to her dominion. Then diſtinguiſhing the iſland of Great Britain, ſhows by what aids, by what perſons, and by what degrees, it ſhall be brought to her empire. Some of the perſons he cauſes to paſs in review before his eyes, deſcribing each by his proper figure, character, and qualifications. On a ſudden the ſcene ſhifts, and a vaſt number of miracles and prodigies appear, utterly ſurpriſing and unknown to the king himſelf, till they are explained to be the wonders of his own reign now commencing. On this ſubject Settle breaks into a congratulation, yet not unmixed with concern, that his own times were but the types of theſe. He propheſies how firſt the nation ſhall be over-run with farces, operas, and ſhows; how the throne of Dulneſs ſhall be advanced over the theatres, and ſet up even at court: then how her ſons ſhall preſide in the ſeats of arts and ſciences: giving a glimpſe, or Piſgah ſight, of the future fulneſs of her glory, the accompliſhment whereof is the ſubject of the fourth and laſt Book.

But in her temple's laſt receſs enclos'd,
On Dulneſs' lap th' anointed head repos'd.
Him cloſe ſhe curtains round with vapours blue,
And ſoft beſprinkles with Cimmerian dew,
Then raptures high the ſeat of ſenſe o'erflow,
Which only heads refin'd from reaſon know.

REMARKS.

Ver. 5, 6, &c.] Hereby is intimated that the following viſion is no more than the chimera of the dreamer's brain, and not a real or intended ſatire on the preſent age, doubtleſs more learned, more enlightened, and more abounding with great genuiſes in divinity, politics, and whatever arts and ſciences, than all the preceding. For fear of any ſuch miſtake of our poet's honeſt meaning, he hath again, at the end of the viſion, repeated this monition, ſaying that it all paſſed through the ivory gate, which (according to the ancients) denoteth falſity. SCRIBL.

Hence, from the ſtraw where Bedlam's prophet nods,
He hears loud oracles, and talks with gods:
Hence the fool's paradiſe, the ſtateſman's ſcheme,
The air-built caſtle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantic wiſh, the chemiſt's flame,
And poet's viſion of eternal fame.

And now, on Fancy's eaſy wing convey'd,
The king deſcending, views th' Elyſian ſhade.
A ſlip-ſhod Sibyl led his ſteps along,
In lofty madneſs meditating ſong;
Her treſſes ſtaring from poetic dreams,
And never waſh'd, but in Caſtalia's ſtreams,
Taylor, their better Charon, lends an oar [more).
(Once ſwan of Thames, though now he ſings no
Benlowes, propitious ſtill to blockheads, bows;
And Shadwell nods the poppy on his brows.

Here, in a duſky vale where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius ſits, to dip poetic ſouls,
And blunt the ſenſe, and fit it for a ſkull
Of ſolid proof, impenetrably dull:
Inſtant, when dipt, away they wing their flight,
Where Brown and Meers unbar the gates of light,
Demand new bodies, and in calf's array,
Ruſh to the world, impatient for the day.
Millions and millions on theſe banks he views,
Thick as the ſtars of night, or morning dews,
As thick as bees o'er vernal bloſſoms fly,
As thick as eggs at Ward and Pillory.

VARIATION.

Ver. 15—22. Not in the firſt ed.

REMARKS.

How much the good Scriblerus was miſtaken, may be ſeen from the fourth Book, which, it is plain from hence, he had never ſeen. BENTL

Ver. 15. A ſlip-ſhod Sibyl] This allegory is extremely juſt, no conformation of the mind ſo much ſubjecting it to real madneſs, as that which produces real dulneſs. Hence we find the religious (as well as the poetical) enthuſiaſts of all ages were ever, in their natural ſtate, moſt heavy and lumpiſh, but on the leaſt application of heat, they run like lead, which of all metals falls quickeſt into fuſion Whereas fire in a genius is truly Promethean, it hurts not its conſtituent parts, but only fits it (as it does well-tempered ſteel) for the neceſſary impreſſions of art. But the common people have been taught (I do not know on what foundation) to regard lunacy as a mark of wit, juſt as the Turks and our modern Methodiſts do of holineſs. But if the cauſe of madneſs aſſigned by a great philoſopher be true, it will unavoidably fall upon the dunces. He ſuppoſes it to be the dwelling over long on one object or idea: Now as this attention is occaſioned either by grief or ſtudy, it will be fixed by dulneſs; which hath not quickneſs enough to comprehend what it ſeeks, nor force and vigour enough to divert the imagination from the object it laments.

Ver. 19. Taylor,] John Taylor, the Water-poet, an honeſt man, who owns he learned not ſo much as the accidence: A rare example of modeſty in a Poet!

"I muſt confeſs I do want eloquence,
"And never ſcarce did learn my accidence;
"For having got from poſſum to poſſet,
"I there was gravell'd, could no farther get."

He wrote fourſcore books in the reign of James I. and Charles I. and afterwards (like Edward Ward) kept an alehouſe in Long-Acre. He died in 1654.

Ver. 21. Benlowes,] A country gentleman, famous for his own bad poetry, and for patronizing bad poets, as may be ſeen from many dedications of Quarles and others to him. Some of theſe anagramed his name Benlowes into Benevolus: to verify which, he ſpent his whole eſtate upon them.

Ver. 22. And Shadwell nods the poppy, &c.] Shadwell took opium for many years; and died of too large a doſe, in the year 1692.

Ver. 24. Old Bavius ſits,] Bavius was an ancient poet celebrated by Virgil for the like cauſes as Bays by our author, though not in ſo Chriſtian-like a manner: For heatheniſhly it is declared by Virgil of Bavius, that he ought to be hated and deteſted for his evil works; Qui Bavium non odit; whereas we have often had occaſion to obſerve our poet's great good-nature and mercifulneſs through the whole courſe of this poem.

SCRIBL.

Ver. 28. Brown and Meers] Bookſellers, printers for any body.—The allegory of the ſouls of the dull coming forth in the form of books, dreſſed in calf's leather, and being let abroad in vaſt numbers by bookſellers, is ſufficiently intelligible.

Ver. 34. Ward in Pillory.] John Ward of Hackney, Eſq. Member of Parliament, being convicted of forgery, was firſt expelled the Houſe, and then ſentenced to the pillory on the 17th of February 1727. Mr Curll (having likewiſe ſtood there) looks upon the mention of ſuch a gentleman in a ſatire, as a great act of barbarity, Key to the Dunc. 3d edit. p. 16. And another author reaſons thus upon it. Durgen, 8vo. p. 11, 12. "How unworthy is it of Chriſtian charity to animate the rabble to abuſe a worthy man in ſuch "a ſituation? What could move the poet thus to "mention a brave ſufferer, a gallant priſoner, expoſed to the view of all mankind! It was laying "aſide his ſenſes, it was committing a crime for "which the law is deficient not to puniſh him! "nay, a crime which man can ſcarce forgive, or "time efface! nothing ſurely could have induced "him to it but being bribed by a great lady," &c. (to whom this brave, honeſt, worthy gentleman was guilty of no offence but forgery, proved in open court). But it is evident, this verſe could not be meant of him; it being notorious, that no eggs were thrown at that gentleman. Perhaps

IMITATION.

Ver. 28. unbar the gates of light,] An hemiſtich of Milton.

Wondering he gaz'd: When lo! a sage appears,
By his broad shoulders known, and length of ears,
Known by the band and suit which Settle wore
(His only suit) for twice three years before:

REMARKS.

therefore it might be intended of Mr. Edward Ward the poet, when he stood there.

Ver. 36. and length of ears] This is a sophisticated reading. I think I may venture to affirm all the copyists are mistaken here: I believe I may say the same of the critics; Dennis, Oldmixon, Welsted, have passed it in silence. I have also stumbled at it, and wondered how an error so manifest could escape such accurate persons. I dare assert, it proceedeth originally from the inadvertency of some transcriber, whose head ran on the pillory, mentioned two lines before; it is therefore amazing that Mr. Curll himself should overlook it! Yet that scholiast takes not the least notice hereof. That the learned Mist also read it thus, is plain from his ranging this passage among those in which our author was blamed for personal satire on a man's face (whereof doubtless he might take the ear to be a part); so likewise Concanen, Ralth, the Flying Post, and all the herd of commentators.—Tota armenta sequuntur.

A very little sagacity (which all these gentlemen therefore wanted) will restore to us the true sense of the poet thus:

By his broad shoulders known, and length of years.

See how easy a change; of one single letter! That Mr. Settle was old, is most certain; but he was (happily) a stranger to the pillory. This note partly Mr. THEOBALD'S, partly SCRIBL.

Ver. 37. Settle] Elkanah Settle was once a writer in vogue as well as Cibber, both for dramatic poetry and politics. Mr. Dennis tells us, that "he was a formidable rival to Mr. Dryden, "and that in the University of Cambridge there "were those who gave him the preference." Mr. Welsted goes yet farther in his behalf: "Poor "Settle was formerly the mighty rival of Dryden; "nay, for many years, bore his reputation above "him." Pref. to his Poems, 8vo. p. 31. And Mr. Milbourne cried out, "How little was Dryden "able, even when his blood ran high, to defend "himself against Mr. Settle!" Notes on Dryd. Virg. p. 175. These are comfortable opinions; and no wonder some authors indulge them.

He was author or publisher of many noted pamphlets in the time of King Charles II. He answered all Dryden's political poems! and being cried up on one side, succeeded not a little in his tragedy of the Empress of Morocco [the first that was ever printed with cuts]. "Upon this he "grew insolent, the wits writ against his play, he "replied, and the town judged he had the better. "In short, Settle was then thought a very formi- "dable rival to Mr. Dryden; and not only the "town, but the University of Cambridge was di- "vided which to prefer; and in both places the "younger sort inclined to Elkanah." Dennis, Pref. to Rem. on Hom.

All as the vest, appear'd the wearer's frame,
Old in new state, another yet the same.
Bland and familiar as in life, begun
Thus the great father to the greater son:
Oh born to see what none can see awake!
Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake.
Thou, yet unborn, hast touch'd this sacred shore;
The hand of Bavius drench'd thee o'er and o'er.
But blind to former, as to future fate,
What mortal knows his pre-existent state?
Who knows how long thy transmigrating soul
Might from Bœotian to Bœotian roll:
How many Dutchmen she vouchsaf'd to thrid?
How many stages through old monks she rid?
And all who since, in wild benighted days,
Mix'd the owl's ivy with the poet's bays.
As man's meanders to the vital spring
Roll all their tides, then back their circles bring;
Or whirligigs, twirl'd round by skilful swain,
Suck the thread in, then yield it out again:
All nonsense thus, of old or modern date,
Shall, in the centre, from thee circulate.
For this, our queen unfolds to vision true
Thy mental eye, for thou hast much to view:
Old scenes of glory, times long cast behind,
Shall, first recall'd, rush forward to thy mind:
Then stretch thy sight o'er all her rising reign,
And let the past and future fire thy brain.
Ascend this hill, whose cloudy point commands
Her boundless empire over seas and lands.
See, round the Poles where keener spangles shine,
Where spices smoke beneath the burning line,
(Earth's wide extremes) her sable flag display'd,
And all the nations cover'd in her shade!
Far eastward cast thine eye, from whence the sun
And orient science their bright course begun:
One godlike monarch all that pride confounds,
He, whose long wall the wandering Tartar bounds;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 73. in the former ed.

Far eastward cast thine eye, from whence the sun
And orient science at a birth begun.

But as this was thought to contradict that line of the introduction,

In eldest times, ere mortals writ or read,

which supposes the sun and science did not set out together, it was altered to "their bright course "begun." But this slip, as usual, escaped the gentlemen of the Dunciad.

REMARKS.

Ver. 50. Might from Bœotian, &c.] Bœotia lay under the ridicule of the wits formerly, as Ireland does now; though it produced one of the greatest poets, and one of the greatest general of Greece:

"Bœotum crasso jurares aëre natum." Horat.

Ver. 75. Chi Ho-am-ti Emperor of China, the same who built the great wall between China and Tartary, destroyed all the books and learned men of that empire.

Heavens! what a pile! whole ages perish there,
And one bright blaze turns Learning into air.
Thence to the south extend thy gladden'd eyes;
There rival flames with equal glory rise,
From shelves to shelves see greedy Vulcan roll,
And lick up all their physic of the soul.
How little, mark! that portion of the ball,
Where, faint at best, the beams of science fall:
Soon as they dawn, from Hyperborean skies
Embody'd dark, what clouds of Vandals rise!
Lo: where Mœotis sleeps, and hardly flows
The freezing Tanais through a waste of snows,
The north by myriads pours her mighty sons,
Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns!
See Alaric's stern port! the martial frame
Of Genseric; and Attila's dread name!
See, the bold Ostrogoths on Latium fall;
See, the fierce Visigoths on Spain and Gaul!
See, where the morning gilds the palmy shore
(The soil that arts and infant letters bore)
His conquering tribes th' Arabian prophet draws,
And saving Ignorance enthrones by laws.
See Christians, Jews, one heavy Sabbath keep,
And all the western world believe and sleep.
Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more
Of arts, but thundering against heathen lore;
Her gray-hair'd synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head.
Padua, with sighs, beholds her Livy burn,
And even th' Antipodes Virgilius mourn.

See, the Cirque falls, th' unpillar'd temple nods,
Streets pav'd with heroes, Tyber chok'd with gods:
Till Peter's keys some christen'd Jove adorn,
And Pan to Moses lends his Pagan horn;
See graceless Venus to a virgin turn'd,
Or Phidias broken, and Apelles burn'd.
Behold yon isle, by Palmers, pilgrim's trod,
Men bearded, bald, cowl'd, uncowl'd, shod, unshod.
Peel'd, patch'd, and pyebald, linsey-wolsey brothers, sothers.
Grave mummers! sleeveless some, and shirtless
That one was Britain—Happy! had she seen
No fiercer sons, had Easter never been.
In peace, great goddess, ever be ador'd;
How keen the war, if Dulness draw the sword!
Thus visit not thy own! on this blest age
Oh spread thy influence, but restrain thy rage.
And see, my son! the hour is on its way,
That lifts our goddess to imperial sway;
This favourite isle, long sever'd from her reign,
Dove-like she gathers to her wings again.
Now look through Fate! behold the scene she draws!
What aids, what armies, to assert her cause!
See all her progeny, illustrious sight!
Behold, and count them, as they rise to light.

REMARKS.

Ver. 81, 82. The Caliph, Omar I. having conquered Egypt, caused his general to burn the Ptolomæan library, on the gates of which was this inscription, ΨΥΧΗΣ ΙΑΤΡΕΙΟΝ, the physic of the soul.

Ver. 96. (The soil that arts and infant letters bore)] Phœnicia, Syria, &c. where letters are said to have been invented. In these countries Mahomet began his conquests.

Ver. 102. thundering against heathen lore;] A strong instance of this pious rage is placed to Pope Gregory's account. John of Salisbury gives a very odd encomium of this pope, at the same time that he mentions one of the strangest effects of this excess of zeal in him: "Doctor sanctissimus ille "Gregorius, qui melleo prædicationis imbre totam "rigavit et inebriavit ecclesiam; non modo Ma"thesin jussit ab aula, sed, ut traditur, a majoribus, "incendio dedit probatæ lectionis scripta, Palati"nus quæcunque tenebat Apollo." And in another place: "Fertur beatus Gregorius bibliothe"cam combussisse gentilem; quo divinæ paginæ "gratior esset locus, et major authoritas, et dili"gentia studiosor." Desiderius, Archbishop of Vienna, was sharply reproved by him for teaching grammar and literature, and explaining the poets; because (says this Pope) "In uno se ore cum Jovis "laudibus Christi laudes non capiunt: Et quam "grave nefandumque sit Episcopis canere quod nec "Laico religioso conveniat, ipse considera." He is said, among the rest, to have burned Livy; "Quia in superstitionibus et sacris Romanorum

REMARKS.

"perpetuo versatur" The same pope is accused by Vossius, and others, of having caused the noble monuments of the old Roman magnificence to be destroyed, lest those who came to Rome should give more attention to triumphal arches, &c. than to holy things. Bayle, Dict.

Ver 109. Till Peter's keys some christen'd Jove adorn,] After the government of Rome devolved to the popes, their zeal was for some time exerted in demolishing the heathen temples and statues, so that the Goths scarce destroyed more monuments of antiquity out of rage, than these out of devotion. At length they spared some of the temples, by converting them to churches; and some of the statues, by modifying them into images of saints. In much later times, it was thought necessary to change the statues of Apollo and Pallas, on the tomb of Sannazarius, into David and Judith; the lyre easily became a harp, and the Gorgon's head turned to that of Holofernes.

Ver. 117. 118. Happy! had Easter never been!] Wars in England anciently, about the right time of celebrating Easter.

Ver. 126. Dove-like, she gathers] This is fulfilled in the fourth book.

Ver. 128. What aids, what armies to assert her cause!] i. e. Of poets, antiquaries, critics, divines, free-thinkers. But as this revolution is only here set on foot by the first of these classes, the poets, they only are here particularly celebrated, and they only properly fall under the care and review of this colleague of dulness, the laureat. The others, who finish the great work, are reserved for the fourth book, where the Goddess herself appears in full glory.

As Berecynthia, while her offspring vie
In homage to the mother of the sky,
Surveys around her, in the bleſt abode,
An hundred ſons, and every ſon a God:
Not with leſs glory mighty Dulneſs crown'd
Shall take through Grub-ſtreet her triumphant round;
And, her Parnaſſus glancing o'er at once,
Behold an hundred ſons, and each a Dunce. [place,
Mark firſt that youth who takes the foremoſt
And thruſts his perſon full into your face.
With all thy father's virtues bleſt, be born!
And a new Cibber ſhall the ſtage adorn.
A ſecond ſee, by meeker manners known,
And modeſt as the maid that ſips alone;
From the ſtrong fate of drams if thou get free,
Another d'Urſey, Ward ſhall ſing in thee.
Thee ſhall each alehouſe, thee each gillhouſe mourn,
And anſwering gin-ſhops ſourer ſighs return.
Jacob, the ſcourge of grammar, mark with awe;
Nor leſs revere him, blunderbuſs of law.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 149. in the firſt edit. it was,
Woolſton, the ſcourge of Scripture, mark with awe!
And mighty Jacob, blunderbuſs of law!

Ver. 151, 152. Lo, P—p—le's brow, &c.] In the former edit. thus:

Lo, next two ſlip-ſhod muſes traipſe along,
In lofty madneſs, meditating ſong,
With treſſes ſtaring from poetic dreams,
And never waſh'd, but in Caſtalia's ſtreams.
Haywood, Centlivre, glories of their race,
Lo, Horneck's fierce, and Roome's funereal face.

REMARKS.

Ver. 149. Jacob, the ſcourge of Grammar, mark with awe;] "This gentleman is ſon of a "conſiderable maſter of Romſey in Southampton-"ſhire, and bred to the law under a very eminent "attorney: Who, between his more laborious "ſtudies, has diverted himſelf with poetry. He "is a great admirer of poets and their works, "which has occaſioned him to try his genius that "way. He has writ in proſe the Lives of the "Poets, Eſſays, and a great many law books, the "Accompliſhed Conveyancer, Modern Juſtice, "&c. Giles Jacob of himſelf, Lives of Poets, "vol. I." He very groſsly, and unprovoked, abuſed in that book the author's friend, Mr. Gay.

Ver. 149, 150.
Jacob, the ſcourge of grammar, mark with awe;
Nor leſs revere him, blunderbuſs of law.]

There may ſeem ſome error in theſe verſes, Mr. Jacob having proved our author to have a reſpect for him, by this undeniable argument. "He "had once a regard for my judgment; otherwiſe "he never would have ſubſcribed two guineas to "me, for one ſmall book in octavo." Jacob's Letter to Dennis, printed in Dennis's Remarks on the Dunciad, p. 49. Therefore I ſhould think the appellation of Blunderbuſs to Mr. Jacob, like that of Thunderbolt to Scipio, was meant in his honour.

Lo, P—p—le's brow, tremend'ous to the town,
Horneck's fierce eye, and Roome's funereal frown.
Lo ſneering Goode, half malice and half whim,
A fiend in glee, ridiculouſly grim.
Each Cygnet ſweet, of Bath and Tunbridge race,
Whoſe tuneful whiſtling makes the waters paſs:
Each ſongſter, riddler, every nameleſs name,
All crowd, who foremoſt ſhall be damn'd to Fame.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 155, 156, are added ſince the firſt edit.

Ver. 157. Each ſongſter, riddler, &c. In the former edit.
Lo Bond and Foxton, every nameleſs name.

After ver. 158. in the firſt edit. followed,
How proud, how pale, how earneſt all appear!
How rhymes eternal gingle in their ear!

REMARKS.

Mr. Dennis argues the ſame way. "My "writings have made great impreſſion on the "minds of all ſenſible men, Mr. P. repented, and "to give proof of his repentance, ſubſcribed to "my two volumes of Letters." Ibid. p. 80. We ſhould hence believe, the name of Mr. Dennis hath alſo crept into this poem by ſome miſtake. But from hence, gentle reader! thou may'ſt beware, when thou giveſt thy money to ſuch authors, not to flatter thyſelf that thy motives are goodnature, or charity.

Ver. 152. Horneck and Roome] Theſe two were virulent party-writers, worthily coupled together, and one would think prophetically, ſince, after the publiſhing of this piece, the former dying, the latter ſucceeded him in honour and employment. The firſt was Philip Horneck, author of a Billingſgate paper called the High German Doctor. Edward Roome was ſon of an undertaker for funerals in Fleet-ſtreet, and writ ſome of the papers called Paſquin, where, by malicious inuendoes, he endeavoured to repreſent our author guilty of malevolent practices with a great man then under proſecution of Parliament. Of this man was made the following epigram:

"You aſk why Roome diverts you with his jokes,
"Yet if he writes, as dull as other folks!
"You wonder at it—This, Sir, is the caſe,
"The jeſt is loſt unleſs he prints his face."

P—le was the author of ſome vile plays and pamphlets. He publiſhed abuſes on our author in a paper called the Prompter.

Ver. 153. Goode,] an ill natured critic, who writ a ſatire on our author, called The Mock Æſop, and many anonymous libels in newſpapers for hire.

Ver. 156. Whoſe tuneful whiſtling makes the waters paſs:] There were ſeveral ſucceſſions of theſe ſorts of minor poets at Tunbridge, Bath, &c. ſinging the praiſe of the annals flouriſhing for that ſeaſon; whoſe names indeed would be name-

Some ſtrain in rhyme; the muſes, on their racks,
Scream like the winding of ten thouſand jacks! 160
Some, free from rhyme or reaſon, rule or check,
Break Priſcian's head, and Pegaſus's neck;
Down, down the larum, with impetuous whirl,
The Pindars and the Miltons of a Curll.
Silence, ye wolves! while Ralph to Cynthia howls,
And makes night hideous—anſwer him, ye owls!
Senſe, ſpeech, and meaſure, living tongues and dead,
Let all give way, and Morris may be read.
Flow, Welſted, flow! like thine inſpirer, beer;
Though ſtale, not ripe; though thin, yet never clear;

VARIATION.

Ver. 168. In former edit.—and Durgen may he read.

REMARKS.

leſs, and therefore the poet ſhuts them over with others in general.

Ver. 165. Ralph] James Ralph, a name inſerted after the firſt editions, not known to our author till he writ a ſwearing piece called Sawney, very abuſive of Dr. Swift, Mr. Gay, and himſelf. Theſe lines allude to a thing of his, intituled Night, a poem. This low writer attended his own works with panegyrics in the Journals, and once in particular praiſed himſelf highly above Mr. Addiſon, in wretched remarks upon that author's Account of Engliſh Poets, printed in a London Journal, Sept. 1728. He was wholly illiterate, and knew no language, not even French. Being adviſed to read the rules of dramatic poetry before he began a play, he ſmiled and replied, "Shakeſpeare writ "without rules." He ended at laſt in the common ſink of all ſuch writers, a political newſpaper, to which he was recommended by his friend Arnal, and received a ſmall pittance for pay.

Ver. 168. Morris,] Befaleel. See book ii.

Ver. 169. Flow, Welſted, &c.] Of this author ſee the remark on book ii. v. 209. But (to be impartial) add to it the following different character of him.

Mr. Welſted had, in his youth raiſed ſo great expectations of his future genius, that there was a kind of ſtruggle between the moſt eminent of the two Univerſities, which ſhould have the honour of his education. To compound this he (civilly) became a member of both, and after having paſſed ſome time at the one, he removed to the other. From thence he returned to town, where he became the darling expectation of all the polite writers, whoſe encouragement he acknowledged in his occaſional poems, in a manner that will make no ſmall part of the fame of his protectors. It alſo appears from his works, that he was happy in the patronage of the moſt illuſtrious characters of the preſent age—Encouraged by ſuch a combination in his favour, he—publiſhed a book of poems, ſome in the Ovidian, ſome in the Horatian manner; in both which the moſt exquiſite

So ſweetly mawkiſh, and ſo ſmoothly dull;
Heady, not ſtrong; o'erflowing, though not full.
Ah Dennis! Gildon ah! what ill-ſtarr'd rage
Divides a friendſhip long confirm'd by age?
Blockheads with reaſon wicked wits abhor,
But fool with fool is barbarous civil war.
Embrace, embrace, my ſons! be foes no more!
Nor glad vile poets with true critics gore.
Behold yon pair, in ſtrict embraces join'd;
How like in manners, and how like in mind; 180

VARIATION.

After ver. 180. in many editions, ſtood,

Fam'd for good-nature, Burnet, and for truth;
Ducket for pious paſſion to the youth.

REMARKS.

judges pronounce he even rivalled his maſters—His love-verſes have reſcued that way of writing from contempt—In his tranſlations, he has given us the very ſoul and ſpirit of his author. His Ode—his Epiſtle—his Verſes—his Love-tale—all, are the moſt perfect things in all poetry Welſted of himſelf, Char. of the Times, 8vo, 1728, page 23, 24. It ſhould not be forgot for his honour, that he received at one time the ſum of five hundred pounds for ſecret ſervice, among the other excellent authors hired to write anonymouſly for the miniſtry. See Report of the Secret Committee, &c. in 1742.

Ver. 173. Ah Dennis! Gildon ah!] Theſe men became the public ſcorn by a mere miſtake of their talents. They would needs turn critics of their own country writers (juſt as Ariſtotle and Longinus did of theirs) and diſcourſe upon the beauties and defects of compoſition:

How parts relate to parts, and they to whole;
The body's harmony, the beaming ſoul.

Whereas had they followed the example of thoſe microſcopes of wit, Kuſter, Burman, and their followers, in verbal criticiſm on the learned languages, their acuteneſs and induſtry might have raiſed them a name equal to the moſt famous of the ſcholiaſts. We cannot therefore but lament the late apoſtacy of the Prebendary of Rocheſter, who beginning in ſo good a train, has now turned ſhort to write comments on the Fire-ſide, and Dreams upon Shakeſpeare; where we find the ſpirit of Oldmixon, Gildon, and Dennis, all revived in his belaboured obſervations. SCRIBL.

Here Scriblerus, in this affair of the Fire-ſide, I want thy uſual candour. It is true, Mr Upton did write notes upon it, but with all the honour and good faith in the world. He took it to be a panegyric on his patron. This it is to have to do with wits; a commerce unworthy a ſcholiaſt of ſo ſolid learning. ARIST.

Ver. 173, Ah, Dennis, &c.] The reader, who has ſeen, through the courſe of theſe notes, what a conſtant attendance Mr. Dennis paid to our author and all his works, may perhaps wonder he ſhould be mentioned but twice, and ſo ſlightly touched, in this poem. But in truth he looked upon him

Equal in wit, and equally polite,
Shall this a Pasquin, that a Grumbler write;
Like are their merits, like rewards they share,
That shines a Consul, this Commissioner.
" But who is he, in closet close y-pent,
" Of sober face, with learned dust besprent?"
Right well mine eyes arede the myster wight,
On parchment scraps y-fed, and Wormius hight.

REMARKS.

with some esteem, for having (more generously than all the rest) set his name to such writings. He was also a very old man at this time. By his own account of himself, in Mr. Jacob's Lives, he must have been above threescore, and happily lived many years after. So that he was senior to Mr. d'Urfey, who hitherto of all our poets enjoyed the longest bodily life.

Ver. 179. Behold yon pair, &c.] One of these was author of a weekly paper called the Grumbler, as the other was concerned in another called Pasquin, in which Mr. Pope was abused with the Duke of Buckingham, and Bishop of Rochester. They also joined in a piece against his first undertaking to translate the Iliad, intituled, Homerides, by Sir Iliad Doggrel, printed 1715.

Of the other works of these gentlemen the world has heard no more than it would of Mr. Pope's, had their united laudable endeavours discouraged him from pursuing his studies. How few good works had ever appeared (since men of true merit are always the least presuming) had there been always such champions to stifle them in their conception? And were it not better for the public, that a million of monsters should come into the world, which are sure to die as soon as born, than that the serpents should strangle one Hercules in his cradle?

The union of these two authors gave occasion to this epigram:

" Burnet and Ducket, friends in spite,
" Came hissing out in verse;
" Both were so forward, each would write,
" So dull, each hang an a——.
" Thus Amphisbœna (I have read)
" At either end assails;
" None knows which leads or which is led,
" For both heads are but tails."

After many editions of this poem, the author thought fit to omit the names of these two persons, whose injury to him was of so old a date.

Ver. 184. That shines a Consul, this Commissioner.] Such places were given at this time to such sort of writers.

Ver. 187 myster wight,] Uncouth mortal.

Ver 188 Wormius hight.] Let not this name, purely fictitious, be conceited to mean the learned Olaus Wormius; much less (as it was unwarrantably foisted into the surreptitious editions) our own antiquary, Mr. Thomas Hearne, who had no way aggrieved our poet, but on the contrary published many curious tracts which he hath to his great contentment perused.

To future ages may thy dulness last,
As thou preserv'st the dulness of the past!
There, dim in clouds, the poring scholiasts mark,
Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark,
A lumberhouse of books in every head,
For ever reading, never to be read?
But, where each Science lifts its modern type,
History her pot, Divinity her pipe,
While proud Philosophy repines to show,
Dishoneſt sight! his breeches rent below:
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henley stands,
Tuning his voice, and balancing his hands.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 197 in the first edit. it was,
And proud Philosophy with breeches tore,
And English Music with a dismal score.
Fast by in darkness palpable inshrin'd
W—s, B—r, M—n, all the poring kind.

REMARKS.

Ver. 192. Wits, who, like owls, &c.] These few lines exactly describe the right verbal critic: the darker his author is, the better he is pleased; like the famous quack doctor, who put up in his bills, he delighted in matters of difficulty. Somebody said well of these men, that their heads were libraries out of order.

Ver. 199 lo! Henley stands, &c.] J. Henley the orator; he preached on the Sundays upon Theological matters, and on the Wednesdays upon all other sciences. Each auditor paid one shilling. He declaimed some years against the greatest persons, and occasionally did our author that honour. WELSTED, in Oratory Transactions, N. 1. published by Henley himself, gives the following account of him: " He was born at Melton-Mow-" bray in Leicestershire. From his own parish " school he went to St. John's College in Cam-" bridge. He began there to be uneasy; for it " shocked him to find he was commanded to be-" lieve against his own judgment in points of re-" ligion, philosophy, &c. for his genius leading " him freely to dispute all propositions, and call all " points to account, he was impatient under those " fetters of the free-born mind.—Being admitted " to Priest's orders, he found the examination " very short and superficial, and that it was not " necessary to conform to the Christian religion, " in order either to deaconship or priesthood." He came to town, and, after having for some years been a writer for booksellers, he had an ambition to be so for ministers of state. The only reason he did not rise in the church, we are told, " was the envy of others, and a distelish en-" tertained of him, because he was not qualified " to be a complete Spaniel." However, he offered the service of his pen to two great men, of opinions and interests directly opposite; by both of whom being rejected, he set up a new project, and styled himself the Restorer of ancient Eloquence. He thought " it as lawful to take a li-" cense from the king and parliament in one place,

How fluent nonſenſe trickles from his tongue
How ſweet the periods, neither ſaid, nor ſung!
Still break the benches, Henley! with thy ſtrain,
While Sherlock, Hare, and Gibſon, preach in vain.
Oh great reſtorer of the good old ſtage,
Preacher at once, and Zany of thy age!
Oh worthy thou of Egypt's wiſe abodes,
A decent prieſt, where monkeys were the gods!
But Fate with butchers plac'd thy prieſtly ſtall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl; 210
And bade thee live, to crown Britannia's praiſe,
In Toland's Tindal's, and in Woolſton's days.
Yet oh, my ſon, a father's words attend:
(So may the fates preſerve the years you lend)

'Tis yours, a Bacon or a Locke to blame,
A Newton's genius, or a Milton's flame:
But oh! with One, immortal One, diſpenſe,
The ſource of Newton's light, of Bacon's ſenſe.
Content each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inſpires, 220
Each art he prompts, each charm he can create,
Whate'er he gives, are given for you to hate.
Perſiſt, by all divine in man unaw'd,
But, "Learn, ye Dunces! not to ſcorn your God."

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 204. In former ed.

While K, B, W, preach in vain.

After ver. 112. followed in former ed.

Here too, great Woolſton! here exalt thy throne;
And prove, no miracles can match thy own.

REMARKS.

"as another; at Hickes's Hall, as at Doctor's "Commons; ſo ſet up his oratory in Newport-"market, Butcher-row. There (ſays his friend) "he had the aſſurance to form a plan, which no "mortal ever thought of; he had ſucceſs againſt "all oppoſition; challenged his adverſaries to fair "diſputations, and none would diſpute with him; "writ, read, and ſtudied twelve hours a day; "compoſed three diſſertations a-week on all ſub-"jects; undertook to teach in one year what "ſchools and univerſities teach in five; was not "terrified by menaces, inſults, or ſatires, but ſtill "proceeded, matured his bold ſcheme, and put the "church, and all that in danger." WELSTED, Narrative in Orat. Tranſact. N. 1.

After having ſtood ſome proſecutions, he turned his rhetoric to buffoonry upon all public and private occurrences. All this paſſed in the ſame room; where ſometimes he broke jeſts, and ſometimes that bread which he called the Primitive Euchariſt.—This wonderful perſon ſtruck medals, which he diſperſed as tickets to his ſubſcribers: the device a ſtar riſing to the meridian, with this motto, AD SUMMA; and below INVENIAM VIAM AUT FACIAM. This man had an hundred pounds a-year given him for the ſecret ſervice of a weekly paper of unintelligible nonſenſe, called the Hyp-Doctor.

Ver. 204. Sherlock, Hare, Gibſon,] biſhops of Saliſbury, Chicheſter, and London; whoſe ſermons and paſtoral letters did honour to their country as well as ſtations.

Ver. 212. Of Toland, and Tindal, ſee Book ii. Tho. Woolſton was an impious madman, who wrote in a moſt inſolent ſtyle againſt the miracles of the Goſpel, in the year 1726, &c.

Ver. 213. Yet oh, my ſons, &c.] The caution againſt blaſphemy here given by a departed ſon of Dulneſs to his yet exiſting brethren, is, as the poet rightly intimates, not out of tenderneſs to the ears

VARIATION.

Ver. 216. In former ed.—or a ſeraph's flame.

REMARKS.

of others, but their own. And ſo we ſee that when that danger is removed, on the open eſtabliſhment of the Goddeſs in the fourth Book, ſhe encourages her ſons, and they beg aſſiſtance to pollute the ſource of light itſelf, with the ſame virulence they had before done the pureſt emanations from it.

Ver. 215. 'Tis yours, a Bacon or a Locke to blame, [flame:]
A NEWTON'S genius, or a Milton's

Thankfully received, and freely uſed, is this gracious licenſe by the beloved diſciple of that prince of Cabaliſtic dunces, the tremendous Hutchinſon. Hear with what honeſt plainneſs he treateth our great Geometer. "As to mathematical demon-"ſtration (ſaith he), founded upon the proportions "of lines and circles to each other, and the ring-"ing of changes upon figures, theſe have no more "to do with the greateſt part of philoſophy, than "they have with the Man in the Moon. Indeed, "the zeal for this ſort of gibberiſh [mathematical "principles] is greatly abated of late: and though "it is now upwards of twenty years that the Da-"gon of modern philoſophers, Sir ISAAC NEW-"TON, has lain with his face upon the ground "before the ark of God, Scripture philoſophy; "for ſo long MOSES'S PRINCIPIA have been pub-"liſhed; and the Treatiſe of Power Eſſential and "Mechanical, in which Sir Iſaac Newton's philo-"ſophy is treated with the UTMOST CONTEMPT, "has been publiſhed a dozen years; yet is there "not one of the whole ſociety who hath had the "COURAGE to attempt to raiſe him up. And ſo "let him lie."—The philoſophical principles of Moſes aſſerted, &c. p. 2. by JULIUS BATE, A M. Chaplain to the Right Honourable the Earl of Harrington. London, 1744, octavo. SCRIBL.

Ver. 224. But, "Learn ye Dunces! not to ſcorn your God."] The hardeſt leſſon a dunce can learn. For being bred to ſcorn what he does not underſtand, that which he underſtands leaſt he will be apt to ſcorn moſt. Of which, to the diſgrace of all government, and (in the poet's opinion) even of that of DULNESS herſelf, we have had a late example in a book intituled, Philoſophical Eſſays concerning human Underſtanding.

Ver. 224.—not to ſcorn your God."]. See this ſubject purſued in Book iv.

Thus he, for then a ray of reason stole
Half through the solid darkness of his soul;
But soon the cloud return'd—and thus the fire:
See now, what Dulness and her sons admire!
See what the charms, that smite the simple heart
Not touch'd by nature, and not reach'd by art.
His never-blushing head he turn'd aside
(Not half so pleas'd when Goodman prophesy'd);
And look'd, and saw a sable sorcerer rise,
Swift to whose hand a winged volume flies:
All sudden, gorgons hiss, and dragons glare,
And ten-horn'd fiends and giants rush to war.
Hell rises, heaven descends, and dance on earth:
Gods, imps, and monsters, music, rage and mirth,
A fire, a jig, a battle, and a ball,
Till one wide conflagration swallows all.
Thence a new world, to nature's laws unknown,
Breaks out refulgent, with a heaven its own;
Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other suns.
The forests dance, the rivers upward rise,
Whales sport in woods, and dolphins in the skies;
And last, to give the whole creation grace,
Lo! one vast egg produces human race.
Joy fills his soul, joy innocent of thought;
What power, he cries, what power these wonders wrought?
Son; what thou seek'st is in thee! Look, and find
Each monster meets his likeness in thy mind.
Yet would'st thou more! In yonder cloud behold,
Whose sarsenet skirts are edg'd with flamy gold,
A matchless youth! his nod these worlds controuls,
Wings the red lightning, and the thunder rolls.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 231, 232. Added when the hero was changed.

REMARKS.

Ver. 232. (Not half so pleas'd, when Goodman prophesy'd.)] Mr. Cibber tells us, in his Life, p. 149. that Goodman being at the rehearsal of a play, in which he had a part, clapped him on the shoulder, and cried, "If he does not make a good "actor, I'll be d—d.—And (says Mr. Cibber) I "make it a question, whether Alexander himself, "or Charles the twelfth of Sweden, when at the "head of their first victorious armies, could feel a "greater transport in their bosoms than I did in "mine."

Ver. 233. a sable sorcerer] Dr. Faustus, the subject of a set of Farces, which lasted in vogue two or three seasons, in which both playhouses strove to outdo each other for some years. All the extravagancies in the sixteen lines following were introduced on the stage, and frequented by persons of the first quality in England, to the twentieth and thirtieth time.

Ver. 237. Hell rises, Heaven descends, and dance on earth;] This monstrous absurdity was actually represented in Tibbald's Rape of Proserpine.

Ver. 248. Lo! one vast egg] In another of these Farces Harlequin is hatched upon the stage, out of a large egg.

Angel of Dulness, sent to scatter round
Her magic charms o'er all unclassic ground:
Yon stars, yon suns, he rears at pleasure higher,
Illumes their light, and sets their flames on fire.
Immortal Rich! how calm he sits at ease
'Midst snows of paper, and fierce hail of pease;
And, proud his mistress' orders to perform,
Rides in the whirlwind, and directs the storm.
But lo! to dark encounter in mid air,
New wizards rise; I see my Cibber there!
Booth in his cloudy tabernacle shrin'd
On grinning dragons thou shalt mount the wind.
Dire is the conflict, dismal is the din,
Here shouts all Drury, there all Lincoln's-Inn;
Contending Theatres our empire raise,
Alike their labours, and alike their praise.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 266. In the former edit.

New wizards rise: here Booth, and Cibber there.

Ver. 268. —Cibber mounts the wind.
After ver. 274. in the former edit. followed,

For works like these let deathless Journals tell,
"None but thyself can be thy parallel."

Var. None but thyself can be thy parallel.] A marvellous line of Theobald; unless the play called the Double Falsehood (be as he would have it believed) Shakspeare's: But whether this line be his or not, he proves Shakspeare to have written as bad (which methinks in an author, for whom he has a veneration almost rising to idolatry, might have been concealed); as for example:

"Try what repentance can: what can it not?
"But what can it, when one cannot repent?
"—For cogitation
"Resides not in the man who does not think,"
&c. MIST'S JOURN.

It is granted they are all of a piece, and no man doubts but herein he is able to imitate Shakspeare.

REMARKS.

Ver. 261. Immortal Rich!] Mr. John Rich, master of the Theatre-Royal in Covent Garden, was the first that excelled this way.

Ver. 266. I see my Cibber there!] The history of the foregoing absurdities is verified by himself, in these words (Life, chap. xv.) "Then sprung forth "that succession of monstrous medleys that have so "long infested the stage, which arose upon one ano-"ther alternately at both houses, outvying each "other in expence." He then proceeds to excuse his own part of them, as follows: "If I am "asked why I assented? I have no better excuse "for my error than to confess I did it against my "conscience, and had not virtue enough to starve. "Had Henry IV. of France a better for changing "his religion? I was still in my heart, as much "as he could be, on the side of truth and sense;

And are these wonders, son, to thee unknown?
Unknown to thee? These wonders are thy own.
These Fate reserv'd to grace thy reign divine,
Foreseen by me, but ah! with-held from mine.
In Lud's old walls though long I rul'd renown'd
Far as loud Bow's stupenduous bells resoun'd;
Though my own Aldermen conferr'd the bays,
To me committing their eternal praise.
Their full-fed heroes, their pacific mayors,
Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars:
Though long my party built on me their hopes,
For writing Pamphlets, and for roasting Popes:
Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on!
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon.
Avert it, heaven! that thou my Cibber, e'er
Should'st wag a serpent-tail in Smithfield fair!
Like the vile straw that's blown about the streets,
The needy poet sticks to all he meets,
Coach'd, carted, trod upon, now loose, now fast,
And carried off in some dog's tail at last.
Happier thy fortunes! like a rolling stone,
Thy giddy dulness still shall lumber on,
Safe in its heaviness, shall never stray,
But lick up every blockhead in the way.
Thee shall the patriot, thee the courtier taste,
And every year be duller than the last,
Till rais'd from booths, to theatre, to court,
Her seat imperial Dulness shall transport.
Already Opera prepares the way,
The sure forrunnner of her gentle sway;
Let her thy heart, next drabs and dice engage,
The third mad passion of thy doating age.
Teach thou the warbling Polypheme to roar,
And scream thyself as none e'er scream'd before!
To aid our cause, if Heaven thou canst not bend,
Hell thou shalt move; for Faustus is our friend:
Pluto with Cato thou for this shalt join,
And link the Mourning Bride to Proserpine.

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 284. in the former edit. followed,

Different our parties, but with equal grace
The goddess smiles on Whig and Tory race.
'Tis the same rope of several ends they twist;
To Dulness, Ridpath is as dear as Mist.

Ver. 290. In the former edit.

In the dog's tail his progress ends at last.

REMARKS.

"but with this difference, that I had their leave "to quit them when they could not support me. "But let the question go which way it will, Har- "ry IV. has always been allowed a great man." This must be confessed a full answer; only the question still seems to be, 1. How the doing a thing against once's conscience is an excuse for it? and, 2dly, It will be hard to prove how he got the leave of Truth and Sense to quit their service, unless he can produce a certificate that he ever was in it.

Ver. 266. 267 Booth and Cibber were joint managers of the theatre in Drury-lane.

Ver. 268. On grinning dragons thou shalt mount the wind.] In his letter to Mr. P. Mr. C. solemnly declares this not to be literally true. We hope therefore the reader will understand it allegorically only.

Ver. 282. Annual trophies on the Lord Mayor's day; and monthly wars in the Artillery ground.

Ver. 283. Though long my party] Settle, like most party-writers, was very uncertain in his political principles. He was employed to hold the pen in the character of a popish successor, but afterwards printed his narrative on the other side. He had managed the ceremony of a famous pope-burning on November 17, 1680; then became a trooper in King James's army, at Hounslow-heath. After the Revolution he kept a booth at Bartholomew-fair, where, in the droll called St. George for England, he acted in his old age in a Dragon of green leather of his own invention; he was at

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 295. Safe in its heaviness, &c.] In the former edit.

Too safe in inborn heaviness to stray;
And lick up every blockhead in the way,
Thy dragons, magistrates, and peers shall taste,
And from each show rise duller than the last.
Till rais'd from booths, &c.

Ver. 303,—306. Added with the new hero.

REMARKS.

last taken into the Charter-house, and there died, aged sixty years.

Ver. 297. Thee shall the patriot, thee the courtier taste,] It stood in the first edition with blanks, * * and * *. Concanen was sure "they must "needs mean no body but King GEORGE and "Queen CAROLINE; and said he would insist "it was so, till the poet cleared himself by fil- "ling up the blanks otherwise, agreeably to the "context, and consistent with his allegiance." Pref. to a Collection of verses, essays, letters, &c. against Mr P. printed for A. Moore, p. 6.

Ver. 305 Polypheme] He translated the Italian opera of Polifemo; but unfortunately lost the whole jest of the story. The Cyclops asks Ulysses his name, who tells him his name is Noman: After his eye is put out, he roars and calls the brother Cyclops to his aid: They inquire who has hurt him? he answers Noman: whereupon they all go away again. Our ingenious translator made Ulysses answer, I take no name; whereby all that followed became unintelligible. Hence it appears that Mr. Cibber (who values himself on subscribing to the English translations of Homer's Iliad) had not that merit with respect to the Odyssey, or he might have been better instructed in the Greek Punnology.

Ver. 308, 309. Faustus, Pluto, &c.] Names of miserable farces, which it was the custom to act at the end of the best tragedies, to spoil the digestion of the audience.

Grubſtreet! thy fall ſhould men and gods conſpire,
Thy ſtage ſhall ſtand, enſure it but from fire.
Another Æſchylus appears! prepare
For new abortions, all ye pregnant fair!
In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell ſpouts wild-fire at your head.
Now, Bavius, take the poppy from thy brow,
And place it here! here, all ye heroes, bow!
This, this is he, foretold by ancient rhymes:
Th' Auguſtus born to bring Saturnian times,
Signs following ſigns lead on the mighty year,
See! the dull ſtars roll round and re-appear.
See, ſee, our own true Phœbus wears thy bays!
Our Midas ſits Lord Chancellor of plays!
On poets' tombs ſee Benſon's titles writ!
Lo! Ambroſe Philips is preferr'd for wit!

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 323. See, ſee, our own, &c.] In the former edit.

Beneath his reign, ſhall Euſden wear the bays,
Cibber preſide Lord Chancellor of plays,
Benſon ſole judge of Architecture ſit,
And Namby Pamby be preſerr'd for wit!
I ſee th' unfiniſh'd Dormitory wall,
I ſee the Savoy totter to her fall;
Hibernian politics, O Swift! thy doom,
And Pope's tranſlating three whole years with Broome.
Proceed, great days!

Ver. 331. in the former edit. thus,

— O Swift! thy doom,
And Pope's tranſlating ten whole years with Broome.

On which was the following note: "He concludes his irony with a ſtroke upon himſelf: for "whoever imagines this a ſarcaſm on the other "ingenious perſon, is ſurely miſtaken. The opinion our author had of him was ſufficiently "ſhown by his joining him in the undertaking of "the Odyſſey; in which Mr. Broome, having "engaged without any previous agreement, diſcharged his part ſo much to Mr. Pope's ſatisfaction, that he gratified him with the full ſum "of five hundred pounds, and a preſent of all "thoſe books for which his own intereſt could "procure him ſubſcribers, to the value of one hundred more. The author only ſeems to lament, "that he was employed in tranſlation at all."

REMARKS.

Ver. 312. enſure it but from fire.] In Tibbald's farce of Proſerpine, a corn field was ſet on fire: whereupon the other playhouſe had a barn burnt down for the recreation of the ſpectators. They alſo rivalled each other in ſhowing the burnings of hell-fire, in Dr. Fauſtus.

Ver. 313. Another Æſchylus appears!] It is reported of Æſchylus, that when his tragedy of the Furies was acted, the audience were ſo terrified, that the children fell into fits, and the big-bellied women miſcarried.

See under Ripley riſe a new White-hall,
While Jones' and Boyle's united labours fall;
While Wren with ſorrow to the grave deſcends,
Gay dies unpenſion'd with a hundred friends;

REMARKS.

Ver. 325. On poets tombs ſee Benſon's titles writ!] W—m. Benſon (Surveyor of the buildings to his Majeſty King George I.) gave in a report to the lords, that their houſe and the Painted-chamber adjoining were in immediate danger of falling. Whereupon the lords met in a committee to appoint ſome other place to ſit in, while the houſe ſhould be taken down. But it being propoſed to cauſe ſome other builders firſt to inſpect it, they found it in very good condition. The lords, upon this, were going upon an addreſs to the king againſt Benſon, for ſuch a miſrepreſentation; but the Earl of Sunderland, then ſecretary, gave them aſſurance that his Majeſty would remove him, which was done accordingly. In favour of this man, the famous Sir Chriſtopher Wren, who had been architect to the Crown for above fifty years, who built moſt of the churches in London, laid the firſt ſtone of St. Paul's, and lived to finiſh it, had been diſplaced from his employment at the age of near ninety years.

Ver. 326. Ambroſe Philips.] "He was (ſaith "Mr. Jacob) one of the wits at Button's, and a "juſtice of the peace:" But he hath ſince met with higher preferment in Ireland: and a much greater character we have of him in Mr. Gildon's Complete Art of Poetry, vol. i p. 157. "Indeed, "he confeſſes, he dares not ſet him quite on the "ſame foot with Virgil, leſt it ſhould ſeem flattery; but he is much miſtaken if poſterity does "not afford him a greater eſteem than he at preſent enjoys." He endeavoured to create ſome miſunderſtanding between our author and Mr. Addiſon, whom alſo, ſoon after, he abuſed as much. His conſtant cry was, that Mr. P. was an enemy to the government; and in particular, he was the avowed author of a report very induſtriouſly ſpread, that he had a hand in a party-paper, called the Examiner; a falſehood well known to thoſe yet living, who had the direction and publication of it.

Ver. 328. While Jones' and Boyle's united labours fall.] At the time when this poem was written, the banquetting-houſe of Whitehall, the church and piazza of Covent-garden, and the palace and chapel of Somerſet-houſe, the works of the famous Inigo Jones, had been for many years ſo neglected, as to be in danger of ruin. The portico of Covent-garden church had been juſt then reſtored and beautified at the expence of the Earl of Burlington; who, at the ſame time, by his publication of the deſigns of that great maſter and Palladio, as well as by many noble buildings of his own, revived the true taſte of architecture in this kingdom.

Ver 330. Gay dies unpenſion'd, &c.] See Mr. Gay's fable of the Hare and many Friends. This gentleman was early in the friendſhip of our au-

Hibernian politics, O Swift! thy fate;
And Pope's, ten years to comment and tranſlate.
Proceed, great days! till learning fly the ſhore,
Till Birch ſhall bluſh with noble blood no more,
Till Thames ſee Eaton's ſons for ever play,
Till Weſtminſter's whole year be holiday,
Till Iſis' elders reel, their pupils ſport,
And Alma Mater lie diſſolv'd in Port!

VARIATIONS.

After ver. 338. in a former edit. were the following lines:

Signs following ſigns lead on the mighty year;
See, the dull ſtars roll round and re-appear.
She comes! the cloud-compelling power, behold!
With Night primæval, and with Chaos old.
Lo! the great anarch's ancient reign reſtor'd,
Light dies before her uncreating word.
As one by one, at dread Medea's ſtrain,
The ſickening ſtars fade off th' ætherial plain:
As Argus' eyes, by Hermes' wand oppreſt,
Clos'd one by one to everlaſting reſt;
Thus at her felt approach, and ſecret might,
Art after Art goes out, and all is night.
See ſculking Truth in her old craven lie,
Secur'd by mountains of heap'd caſuiſtry:
Philoſophy, that touch'd the heavens before,
Shrinks to her hidden cauſe, and is no more;
See Phyſic beg the Stagyrites defence!
See Metaphyſic call for aid on Senſe!
See Myſtery to Mathematics fly!
In vain they gaze, turn giddy, rave, and die.
Thy hand, great Dulneſs lets the curtain fall,
And univerſal darkneſs buries all.

REMARKS.

thor, which continued to his death. He wrote ſeveral works of humour, with great ſucceſs; the Shepherd's Week, Trivia, the What d'ye call it, Fables; and laſtly, the celebrated Beggar's Opera; a piece of ſatire which hit all taſtes and degrees of men, from thoſe of the higheſt quality to the very rabble: that verſe of Horace:

"Primores populi arripuit, populumque tributum,"

could never be ſo juſtly applied as to this. The vaſt ſucceſs of it was unprecedented, and almoſt incredible: what is related of the wonderful effects of the ancient muſic or tragedy, hardly came up to it: Sophocles and Euripides were leſs followed and famous. It was acted in London ſixty-three days, uninterrupted; and renewed the next ſeaſon with equal applauſes. It ſpread into all the great towns of England; was played in many places to the thirtieth and fortieth time, and at Bath and Briſtol fifty, &c. It made its progreſs into Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, where it was performed twenty-four days together: it was laſt acted in Minorca. The fame of it was not confined to the author; the ladies carried about with them the favourite ſongs of it in fans; and houſes were furniſhed with it in ſcreens. The perſon who acted Polly, till then obſcure, became all at once the favourite of the town; her pictures were engraved, and ſold in great numbers; her life written; books of letters and verſes to her publiſhed; and pamphlets made even of her ſayings and jeſts.

Enough! enough! the raptur'd Monarch cries;
And through the ivory gate the viſion flies.

REMARKS

Furthermore, it drove out of England, for that ſeaſon, the Italian opera, which had carried all before it for ten years. That idol of the nobility and people, which the great critic, Mr Dennis, by the labours and outcries of a whole life could not overthrow, was demoliſhed by a ſingle ſtroke of this gentleman's pen. This happened in the year 1728. Yet ſo great was his modeſty, that he conſtantly prefixed to all the editions of it this motto, "Nos hæc novimus eſſe nihil."

Ver. 332. And Pope's ten years to comment and tranſlate.] The author here plainly laments that he was ſo long employed in tranſlating and commenting. He began the Iliad in 1713 and finiſhed it in 1719. The edition of Shakſpeare (which he undertook merely becauſe no body elſe would) took up near two years more in the drudgery of comparing impreſſions, rectifying the ſcenery, &c.; and the tranſlation of half the Odyſſey employed him from that time to 1725.

Ver. 333. Proceed, great days! &c.] It may perhaps ſeem incredible, that ſo great a revolution in learning, as is here propheſied, ſhould be brought about by ſuch weak inſtruments as have been [hitherto] deſcribed in our poem: But do not thou, gentle reader, reſt too ſecure in thy contempt of theſe inſtruments. Remember what the Dutch ſtories ſomewhere relate, that a great part of their provinces was once overflowed, by a ſmall opening made in one of their dykes by a ſingle water-rat.

However, that ſuch is not ſeriouſly the judgment of our poet, but that he conceiveth better hopes from the diligence of our ſchools, from the regularity of our univerſities, the diſcernment of our great men, the accompliſhments of our nobility, the encouragement of our patrons, and the genius of our writers of all kinds (notwithſtanding ſome few exceptions in each), may plainly be ſeen from his concluſion; where, cauſing all this viſion to paſs through the ivory gate, he expreſsly, in the language of poeſy, declares all ſuch imaginations to be wild, ungrounded, and fictitious. SCRIBL.

BOOK IV.

ARGUMENT.

The poet being, in this book, to declare the completion of the prophecies mentioned at the end of the former, makes a new invocation; as the greater poets are wont, when ſome high and worthy matter is to be ſung. He ſhows the goddeſs coming in her majeſty, to deſtroy Order and Science, and to ſubſtitute the kingdom of the dull upon earth. How she leads captive the Sciences, and silences the Muses; and what they be who succeed in their stead. All her children, by a wonderful attraction, are drawn about her; and bear along with them divers others, who promote her empire by connivance, weak resistance, or discouragement of arts; such as half wits, tasteless admirers, vain pretenders, the flatterers of dunces, or the patrons of them. All these crowd round her; one of them offering to approach her, is driven back by a rival, but she commends and encourages both. The first who speak in form, are the geniuses of the schools, who assure her of their care to advance her cause, by confining youth to words, and keeping them out of the way of real knowledge. Their address, and her gracious answer; with her charge to them and the universities. The universities appear by their proper deputies; and assure her that the same method is observed in the progress of education. The speech of Aristarchus on this subject. They are driven off by a band of young gentlemen returned from travel with their tutors; one of whom delivers to the goddess in a polite oration, an account of the whole conduct and fruits of their travels: presenting to her at the same time a young nobleman perfectly accomplished. She receives him graciously, and endues him with the happy quality of want of shame. She sees loitering about her a number of indolent persons abandoning all business and duty, and dying with laziness: to these approaches the antiquary Annius, entreating her to make them virtuosos, and assign them over to him: but Mummius, another antiquary, complaining of his fraudulent proceeding, she finds a method to reconcile their difference. Then enter a troop of people fantastically adorned, offering her strange and exotic presents: among them, one stands forth and demands justice on another, who had deprived him of one of the greatest curiosities in nature; but he justifies himself so well, that the goddess gives them both her approbation. She recommends to them to find proper employment for the indolents before-mentioned, in the study of butterflies, shells, birds nests, mos, &c. but with particular caution, not to proceed beyond trifles, to any useful or extensive views of nature, or of the Author of nature. Against the last of these apprehensions, she is secured by a hearty address from the minute philosophers and free-thinkers, one of whom speaks in the name of the rest. The youth, thus instructed and principled, are delivered to her in a body, by the hands of Silenus; and then admitted to taste the cup of the Magus her high-priest, which causes a total oblivion of all obligations, divine, civil, moral, or rational To these her adepts she sends priests, attendants, and comforters, of various kinds; confers on them orders and degrees; and then dismissing them with a speech, confirming to each his privileges, and telling what she expects from each, concludes with a yawn of extraordinary virtue: the progress and effects whereof on all orders of men, and the consumation of all, in the restoration of Night and Chaos, conclude the poem.

YET, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread Chaos, and eternal Night!
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to show, half veil the deep intent.
Ye powers! whose mysteries restor'd I sing,
To whom Time bears me on his rapid wing,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong,
Then take at once the poet and the song.
Now flam'd the dog-star's unpropitious ray,
Smote every brain, and wither'd every bay; 10
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bower,
The moon-struck prophet felt the madding hour:
Then rose the seed of Chaos, and of Night,
To blot out Order, and extinguish Light,
Of dull and venal a new world to mold,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold.
She mounts the throne; her head a cloud conceal'd,
In broad effulgence all below reveal'd;

REMARKS.

The Dunciad, Book IV.] This book may properly be distinguished from the former, by the name of the Greater Dunciad, not so indeed in size, but in subject; and so far contrary to the distinction anciently made of the Greater and Lesser Iliad. But much are they mistaken who imagine this work in anywise inferior to the former, or of any other hand than of our poet; of which I am much more certain than that the Iliad itself was the work of Solomon, or the Batrachomuomachia of Homer, as Barnes hath affirmed.

BENT.

Ver. 1, &c.] This is an invocation of much piety. The poet, willing to approve himself a genuine son, beginneth by showing (what is ever agreeable to Dulness) his high respect for antiquity and a great family, how dead or dark soever: Next declareth his passion for explaining mysteries; and, lastly, his impatience to be re-united to her. SCRIBL.

Ver 2. dread Chaos, and eternal Night!] Invoked, as the restoration of their empire is the action of the poem.

Ver. 14. To blot out order and extinguish light,] The two great ends of her mission; the one in quality of daughter of Chaos, the other as daughter of Night. Order here is to be understood extensively, both as civil and moral; the distinction between high and low in society, and true and false in individuals: Light as intellectual only, Wit, Science, Arts.

Ver. 15 Of dull and venal] The allegory continued; dull referring to the extinction of light or science; venal to the destruction of order, and the truth of things.

Ibid. a new world] In allusion to the Epicurean opinion, that from the dissolution of the natural world into night and chaos, a new one should

'(Tis thus aſpiring Dulneſs ever ſhines)
Sóft on her lap her laureate ſon reclines.
Beneath her foot-ſtool, Science groans in chains,
And Wit dreads exile, penalties, and pains.

REMARKS.

ariſe; this the poet alluding to, in the production of a new moral world, makes it partake of its original principles.

Ver. 16. Lead and gold.] i. e. dull and venal

Ver 20. her laureate ſon reclines.] With great judgment it is imagined by the poet, that ſuch a colleague as Dulneſs had elected, ſhould ſleep on the throne, and have very little ſhare in the action of the poem. Accordingly he hath done little or nothing from the day of his anointing; having paſt through the ſecond book without taking part in any thing that was tranſacted about him; and through the third in profound ſleep. Nor ought this, well conſidered, to ſeem ſtrange in our days, when ſo many kings conforts have done the like.

SCRIBL.

This verſe our excellent laureate took ſo to heart, that he appealed to all mankind, "if he "was not as ſeldom aſleep as any fool." But it is hoped the poet hath not injured him, but rather verified his prophecy (p. 243 of his own Life, 8vo, ch. ix.) where he ſays, "the reader will be "as much pleaſed to find me a dunce in my old "age, as he was to prove me a briſk blockhead in "my youth." Wherever there was any room for briſkneſs, or alacrity of any ſort, even in ſinking, he hath had it allowed; but here, where there is nothing for him to do but to take his natural reſt, he muſt permit his hiſtorian to be ſilent. It is from their actions only that princes have their character, and poets from their works: And if in thoſe he be as much aſleep as any fool, the poet muſt leave him and them to ſleep to all eternity.

BENTL.

Ibid. her laureate] "When I find my name in "the ſatirical works of this poet, I never look up"on it as any malice meant to me, but Profit to "himſelf. For he conſiders that my face is more "known than moſt in the nation; and therefore "a lick at the laureate will be a ſure bait ad cap"tandum vulgus, to catch little readers." Life of Colly Cibber, ch. ii.

Now, if it be certain, that the works of our poet have owed their ſucceſs to this ingenious expedient, we hence derive an unanſwerable argument, that this Fourth Dunciad, as well as the former three, hath had the author's laſt hand, and was by him intended for the preſs: Or elſe to what purpoſe hath he crowned it, as we ſee, by this finiſhing ſtroke, the profitable lick at the laureate?

BENTL

Ver. 21, 22. Beneath her foot-ſtool, &c.] We are next preſented with the pictures of thoſe whom the goddeſs leads in captivity. Science is only depreſſed and confined ſo as to be rendered uſeleſs; but Wit or Genius, as a more dangerous and active enemy, puniſhed, or driven away:—

There foam'd rebellious Logic, gagg'd and bound;
There, ſtript, fair Rhetoric languiſh'd on the ground.
His blunted arms by Sophiſtry are borne,
And ſhameleſs Billingſgate her robes adorn.
Morality, by her falſe guardians drawn,
Chicane in furs, and Caſuiſtry in lawn,
Gaſps, as they ſtraiten at each end the cord,
And dies when Dulneſs gives her Page the word.
Mad Mátheſis alone was unconfin'd,
Too mad for mere material chains to bind,
Now to pure Space lifts her ecſtatic ſtare,
Now running round the circle, finds it ſquare.
But held in tenfold bonds the muſes lie,
Watch'd both by Envy's and by Flattery's eye;
There to her heart ſad Tragedy addreſt
The dagger wont to pierce the tyrant's breaſt;
But ſober Hiſtory reſtrain'd her rage,
And promis'd vengeance on a barbarous age.

REMARKS.

with Learning, but never upon any terms with Wit. And accordingly it will be ſeen that ſhe admits ſomething like each Science, as Caſuiſtry, Sophiſtry, &c. but nothing like Wit, Opera alone ſupplying its place.

Ver. 30. gives her Page the word.] There was a judge of this name, always ready to hang any man that came before him, of which he was ſuffered to give a hundred miſerable examples, during a long life, even to his dotage. Though the candid Scriblerus imagined Page here to mean no more than a page or mute, and to allude to the cuſtom of ſtrangling ſtate criminals in Turkey by mutes or pages. A practice more decent than that of our Page, who, before he hanged any one, loaded him with reproachful language.

SCRIBL.

Ver. 39. But ſober Hiſtory] Hiſtory attends on Tragedy, Satire on Comedy, as their ſubſtitutes in the diſcharge of their diſtinct functions; the one in high life, recording the crimes and puniſhments of the great; the other in low, expoſing the vices or follies of the common people. But it may be aſked, How came Hiſtory and Satire to be admitted with impunity to miniſter comfort to the muſes, even in the preſence of the goddeſs, and in the midſt of all her triumphs? A queſtion, ſays Scriblerus, which we thus reſolve: Hiſtory was brought up in her infancy by Dulneſs herſelf; but being afterwards eſpouſed into a noble houſe, ſhe forgot (as is uſual) the humility of her birth, and the cares of her early friends. This occaſioned a long eſtrangement between her and Dulneſs. At length, in proceſs of time, they met together in a monk's cell, were reconciled, and became better friends than ever. After this they had a ſecond quarrel, but it held not long, and are now again on reaſonable terms, and ſo are likely to continue. This accounts for the connivance ſhown to Hiſtory on this occaſion. But the boldneſs of Satire ſprings from a very different cauſe, for the reader ought to know, that ſhe alone of all the ſiſters is unconquerable, never to be ſilenced when truly inſpired and animated (as ſhould ſeem

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, cold, and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head:
Nor could'st thou, Chesterfield! a tear refuse,
Thou wept'st, and with thee wept each gentle muse.

When lo! a harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye:
Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
In patch-work fluttering, and her head aside;
By singing peers upheld on either hand,
She trip'd and laugh'd, too pretty much to stand:
Cast on the prostrate Nine a scornful look,
Then thus in quaint recitativo spoke.

O Cara! Cara! silence all that train:
Joy to great Chaos! let Division reign:
Chromatic tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense:
One Trill shall harmonise joy, grief, and rage,
Wake the dull Church, and lull the ranting Stage:

REMARKS.

from above, for this very purpose, to oppose the kingdom of Dulness to her last breath.

Ver. 43. Nor could'st thou, &c.] This noble person in the year 1737, when the act aforesaid was brought into the House of Lords, opposed it in an excellent speech (says Mr. Cibber) "with "a lively spirit, and uncommon eloquence."— This speech had the honour to be answered by the said Mr. Cibber, with a lively spirit also, and in a manner very uncommon, in the 8th Chapter of his Life and Manners. And here, gentle reader, would I gladly insert the other speech, whereby thou mightest judge between them; but I must defer it on account of some differences not yet adjusted between the noble author, and myself, concerning the true reading of certain passages.

BENTL.

Ver. 45. When lo! a harlot form] The attitude given to this phantom, represents the nature and genius of the Italian opera; its affected airs, its effeminate sounds, and the practice of patching up these operas with favourite songs, incoherently put together. These things were supported by the subscriptions of the nobility. This circumstance, that Opera should prepare for the opening of the grand sessions, was prophesied of in Book iii. ver. 304.

"Already Opera prepares the way,
"The sure forerunner of her gentle sway".

Ver. 54. Let Division reign;] Alluding to the false taste of playing tricks in music with numberless divisions, to the neglect of that harmony which conforms to the sense, and applies to the passions. Mr. Handel had introduced a great number of hands, and more variety of instruments into the orchestra, and employed even drums and cannon to make a fuller chorus; which proved so much too manly for the fine gentlemen of his age, that he was obliged to remove his music into Ireland. After which they were reduced, for want of composers, to practise the patch-work above-mentioned.

To the same notes thy sons shall hum, or snore,
And all thy yawning daughters cry, encore.
Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus, reigns,
Joys in my jiggs, and dances in my chains.
But soon, ah soon, Rebellion will commence,
If Music meanly borrows aid from Sense:
Strong in new arms, lo! giant Handel stands,
Like bold Briareus, with a hundred hands;
To stir, to rouse, to shake the soul he comes,
And Jove's own thunders follow Mars's drums.
Arrest him, empress, or you sleep no more—
She heard, and drove him to th' Hibernian shore.

And now had Fame's posterior trumpet blown,
And all the nations summon'd to the throne.
The young, the old, who feel her inward sway,
One instinct seizes, and transports away.
None need a guide, by sure Attraction led,
And strong impulsive gravity of head:
None want a place, for all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and cohered around.
Not closer orb in orb, conglob'd are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.

The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who, gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.
Not those alone who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause.
Whate'er of dunce in college or in town
Sneers at another, in toupee or gown;
Whate'er of mungril no one class admits,
A wit with dunces, and a dunce with wits.

Nor absent they, no members of her state,
Who pay her homage in her sons, the great;
Who, false to Phœbus, bow the knee to Baal;
Or impious, preach his word without a call,
Patrons, who sneak from living worth to dead,
Withhold the pension, and set up the head;
Or vest dull Flattery in the sacred gown;
Or give from fool to fool the laurel crown.
And (last and worst) with all the cant of wit,
Without the soul, the muses Hypocrit

There march'd the bard and blockhead side by side.
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride.
Narcissus, prais'd with all a parson's power,
Look'd a white lily sunk beneath a shower.
There mov'd Montalto with superior air;
His stretch'd-out arm display'd a volume fair;

REMARKS.

Ver. 76 to 101. It ought to be observed that here are three classes in this assembly. The first of men absolutely and avowedly dull, who naturally adhere to the goddess, and are imaged in the simile of the bees about their queen. The second involuntarily drawn to her, though not caring to own her influence; from ver. 81 to 90.— The third, of such as, though not members of her state, yet advance her service by flattering Dulness, cultivating mistaken talents, patronising vile scribblers, discouraging living merit, or setting up for wits, and men of taste in arts they understand not; from ver. 91 to 101.

Courtiers and patriots in two ranks divide,
Through both he paſs'd, and bow'd from ſide to ſide:
But as in graceful act, with awful eye,
Compos'd he ſtood, bold Benſon thruſt him by:
On two unequal crutches propt he came,
Milton's on this, on that one Johnſton's name.
The decent knight retir'd with ſober rage,
Withdrew his hand, and clos'd the pompous page.
But (happy for him as the times went then)
Appear'd Apollo's Mayor and Aldermen,
On whom three hundred gold-capt youths await,
To lug the ponderous volume off in ſtate.
When Dulneſs ſmiling, "Thus revive the wits!
But murder firſt, and mince them all to bits;
As erſt Medea (cruel, ſo to ſave!)
A new edition of old Æſon gave;
Let ſtandard-authors, thus, like trophies borne,
Appear more glorious, as more hack'd and torn.
And you, my critics! in the chequer'd ſhade,
Admire new light through holes yourſelves have made.
"Leave not a foot of verſe, a foot of ſtone,
A Page, a Grave, that they can call their own;
But ſpread, my ſons, your glory thin or thick,
On paſſive paper, or on ſolid brick.
So by each bard, an alderman ſhall ſit,
A heavy lord ſhall hang at every wit,
And while on Fame's triumphal car they ride,
Some ſlave of mine be pinion'd to their ſide."
Now crowds on crowds around the Goddeſs preſs,
Each eager to preſent the firſt addreſs.
Dunce ſcorning dunce beholds the next advance,
But fop ſhows fop ſuperior complaiſance.

VARIATION.

Ver. 114.
What! no reſpect, he cried, for Shakſpeare's page?

REMARKS.

Ver. 108—bow'd from ſide to ſide;] As being of no one party.

Ver. 110. bold Benſon] This man endeavoured to raiſe himſelf to fame by erecting monuments, ſtriking coins, ſetting up heads, and procuring tranſlations, of Milton; and afterwards by as great a paſſion for Arthur Johnſton, a Scots Phyſician's Verſion of the Pſalms, of which he printed many fine editions. See more of him, Book iii. ver. 325.

Ver. 113. The decent knight] An eminent perſon who was about to publiſh a very pompous edition of a great author at his own expence.

Ver. 115, &c.] Theſe four lines were printed in a ſeparate leaf by Mr. Pope in the laſt edition, which he himſelf gave, of the Dunciad, with directions to the printer, to put this leaf into its place as ſoon as Sir T. H.'s Shakſpeare ſhould be publiſhed.

Ver. 119. Thus revive, &c.] The goddeſs applauds the practice of tacking the obſcure names of perſons not eminent in any branch of learning, to thoſe of the moſt diſtinguiſhed writers; either by printing editions of their works, with impertinent alterations of their text, as in the former inſtances; or by ſetting up monuments diſgraced with their own vile names and inſcriptions, as in the latter.

Ver. 128. A Page, a Grave.] For what leſs than a grave can be granted to a dead author? or what leſs than a page can be allowed a living one!

Ver. 128. A Page.] Pagina, not Pediſſequus. A page of a book, not a ſervant, follower, or attendant: no poet having had a page ſince the death of Mr. Thomas Durfey. SCRIBL.

Ver. 131. So by each Bard an Alderman, &c.] Vide the Tombs of the Poets, Editio Weſtmonaſterienſis.

Ibid.—an Alderman ſhall ſit,] Alluding to the monument erected for Butler by Alderman Barber.

Ver. 132. A heavy Lord ſhall hang at every wit,] How unnatural an image, and how ill ſupported! ſaith Ariſtarchus. Had it been, ſomething might have been ſaid, in an age ſo diſtinguiſhed for well-judging patrons. For Lord, then, read Load; that is, of debts here, and of commentaries hereafter. To this purpoſe, conſpicuous is the caſe of the poor author of Hudibras, whoſe body, long ſince weighed down to the grave, by a load of debts, has lately had a more unmerciful load of commentaries laid upon his ſpirit; wherein the editor has atchieved more than Virgil himſelf, when he turned critic, could boaſt of, which was only, that he had picked gold out of another man's dung; whereas the editor has picked it out of his own. SCRIBL.

A heavy wit ſhall hang at every Lord,

Ariſtarchus thinks the common reading right: and that the author himſelf had been ſtruggling, and but juſt ſhaken off his load when he wrote the following epigram:

"My lord complains, that Pope, ſtark mad with "gardens,
"Has lopt three trees, the value of three farthings:
"But he's my neighbour, cries the peer polite,
"And if he'll viſit me, I'll wave my right.
"What? on compulſion? and againſt my will,
"A lord's acquaintance? Let him file his bill."

Ver. 137, 138.

Dunce ſcorning Dunce beholds the next advance,
But Fop ſhows Fop ſuperior complaiſance.]

This is not to be aſcribed ſo much to the different manners of a court and college, as to the different effects which a pretence to learning, and a pretence to wit, have on blockheads. For as judgment conſiſts in finding out the differences in things, and wit in finding out their likeneſſes, ſo the Dunce is all diſcord and diſſenſion, and conſtantly buſied in reproving, examining, confuting, &c. while the Fop flouriſhes in peace, with ſongs and hymns of praiſe, addreſſes, characters, epithalamiums, &c

When lo! a ſpectre roſe, whoſe index-hand
Held forth by virtue of the dreadful wand;
His beaver'd brow a birchen garland wears,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears.
O'er every vein a ſhuddering horror runs;
Eaton and Winton ſhake through all their ſons.
All fleſh is humbled, Weſtminſter's bold race
Shrink, and confeſs the Genius of the place:
The pale Boy-Senator yet tingling ſtands,
And holds his breeches cloſe with both his hands.
Then thus, ſince man from beaſt by words is known,
Words are man's province, words we teach alone.
When Reaſon doubtful, like the Samian letter,
Points him two ways, the narrower is the better.
Plac'd at the door of Learning, youth to guide,
We never ſuffer it to ſtand too wide.
To aſk, to gueſs, to know, as they commence,
As fancy opens the quick ſprings of ſenſe,
We ply the memory, we load the brain,
Blind rebel Wit, and double chain on chain,
Confine the thought, to exerciſe the breath;
And keep them in the pale of words till death.
Whate'er the talents, or howe'er deſign'd,
We hang one jingling padlock on the mind:
A poet the firſt day, he dips his quill;
And what the laſt? a very poet ſtill.
Pity! the charm works only in our wall,
Loſt, loſt too ſoon in yonder houſe or hall.
There truant Windham every muſe gave o'er,
There Talbot ſunk, and was a wit no more!
How ſweet an Ovid, Murray was our boaſt!
How many martials were in Pulteney loſt!
Elſe ſure ſome bard, to our eternal praiſe,
In twice ten thouſand rhyming nights and days,
Had reach'd the work, the all that mortal can;
And South beheld that maſterpiece of man.
Oh (cry'd the Goddeſs) for ſome pedant reign!
Some gentle James, to bleſs the land again;
To ſtick the Doctor's chair into the throne,
Give law to words, or war with words alone,
Senates and courts with Greek and Latin rule,
And turn the council to a Grammar School!
For ſure, if Dulneſs ſees a grateful day,
'Tis in the ſhade of arbitrary ſway.
O! if my ſons may learn one earthly thing,
Teach but that one, ſufficient for a king;
That which my prieſts, and mine alone, maintain,
Which, as it dies, or lives, we fall, or reign:
May you, my Cam, and Iſis, preach it long,
"The Right Divine of Kings to govern wrong."
Prompt at the call, around the Goddeſs roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a ſable ſhoal:
Thick and more thick the black blockade extends,
A hundred head of Ariſtotle's friends.
Nor wert thou, Iſis! wanting to the day,
[Though Chriſt Church long kept prudiſhly away.]
Each ſtaunch Polemic, ſtubborn as a rock,
Each fierce Logician, ſtill expelling Locke,
Came whip and ſpur, and daſh'd through thin and thick
On German Crouzaz, and Dutch Burgerſdyck.

REMARKS.

Ver. 140. the dreadful wand;] A cane uſually borne by ſchoolmaſters, which drives the poor ſouls about like the wand of Mercury. SCRIBL.

Ver. 151. like the Samian letter,] The letter Y uſed by Pythagoras as an emblem of the different roads of virtue and vice.

"Et tibi quæ Samios diduxit litera ramos." Perſ.

Ver. 174. that maſterpiece of man.] Viz. an epigram. The famous Dr. South declared a perfect epigram to be as difficult a performance as an epic poem. And the critics ſay, "An epic poem "is the greateſt work human nature is capable "of."

Ver. 176. Some gentle James, &c.] Wilſon tells us that this king, James the Firſt, took upon himſelf to teach the Latin tongue to Car, Earl of Somerſet; and that Gondomar the Spaniſh Ambaſſador would ſpeak falſe Latin to him, on purpoſe to give him the pleaſure of correcting it, whereby he wrought himſelf into his good graces.

REMARKS.

This great prince was the firſt who aſſumed the title of Sacred Majeſty, which his loyal clergy transferred from God to him. "The principles "of paſſive obedience and non-reſiſtance (ſays the "author of the Diſſertation on Parties, Letter 8.), "which before his time had ſkulked perhaps in "ſome old homily, were talked, written, and "preached into vogue in that inglorious reign."

Ver. 194. Though Chriſt Church, &c.] This line is doubtleſs ſpurious, and foiſted in by the impertinence of the editor; and accordingly we have put it in between Hooks. For I affirm this college came as early as any other, by its proper deputies; nor did any college pay homage to Dulneſs in its whole body. BENTL.

Ver. 196. ſtill expelling Locke,] In the year 1703 there was a meeting of the heads of the Univerſity of Oxford to cenſure Mr. Locke's Eſſay on Human Underſtanding, and to forbid the reading of it. See his Letters on the laſt edit.

Ver. 198. On German Crouzaz, and Dutch Burgerſdyck] There ſeems to be an improbability that the Doctors and Heads of Houſes ſhould ride on horſeback, who of late days, being gouty or unwieldy, have kept their coaches. But theſe are horſes of great ſtrength, and fit to carry any weight, as their German and Dutch extraction may manifeſt; and very famous we may conclude, being honoured with names, as were the horſes Pegaſus and Bucephalus. SCRIBL.

Though I have the greateſt deference to the penetration of this eminent ſcholiaſt, and muſt own that nothing can be more natural than his interpretation, or juſter than that rule of criticiſm, which directs us to keep to the literal ſenſe, when no apparent abſurdity accompanies it (and ſure there is no abſurdity in ſuppoſing a Logician on horſeback), yet ſtill I muſt needs think the hackneys here celebrated were not real horſes, nor even Centaurs, which, for the ſake of the learned Chiron, I ſhould rather be inclined to think, if I

As many quit the ſtreams that murmuring fall
To lull the ſons of Margaret and Clare-hall,
Where Bentley late tempeſtuous wont to ſport
In troubled waters, but now ſleeps in port.
Before them march'd that awful Ariſtarch;
Plough'd was his front with many a deep remark,
His hat, which never veil'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aſide.
Low bow'd the reſt: He, kingly, did but nod;
So upright Quakers pleaſe both man and God.
Miſtreſs! diſmiſs that rabble from your throne:
Avaunt——is Ariſtarchus yet unknown?
The mighty Scholiaſt, whoſe unweary'd pains
Made Horace dull, and humbled Milton's ſtrains.
Turn what they will to verſe, their toil is vain,
Critics like me ſhall make it proſe again.

REMARKS.

were forced to find them four legs, but downright plain men, though Logicians: and only thus metamorphoſed by a rule of rhetoric, of which Cardinal Perron gives us an example, where he calls Clavius, "Un Eſprit peſant, lourd, ſans ſubtilité, "ni gentilleſſe, un Groſs Cheval d'Allemagne."

Here I profeſs to go oppoſite to the whole ſtream of commentators. I think the poet only aimed, though awkwardly, at an elegant Græciſm in this repreſentation; for in that language the word ἵππος [horſe was often prefixed to others, to denote greatneſs of ſtrength; as ἱππολάπαθον, ἱππόγλωσσον, ἱππομάραθρον, and particularly ΙΠΠΟΓΝΩΜΩΝ, a great connoiſſeur, which comes neareſt to the caſe in hand. Scip. Maff.

Ver. 199. the ſtreams] The river Cam, running by the walls of theſe colleges, which are particularly famous for their ſkill in diſputation.

Ver. 202. ſleeps in Port.] viz. "Now retired "into harbour, after the tempeſts that had long "agitated his ſociety." So Scriblerus. But the learned Scipio Maffei underſtands it of a certain wine called Port, from Oporto, a city of Portugal, of which this profeſſor invited him to drink abundantly. Scip. Maff. De Compotationibus Academicis. [And to the opinion of Maffei inclineth the ſagacious Annotator on Dr. King's "Advice "to Horace."]

Ver. 210. Ariſtarchus.] A famous Commentator and Corrector of Homer, whoſe name has been frequently uſed to ſignify a complete critic. The compliment paid by our author to this eminent profeſſor, in applying to him ſo great a name, was the reaſon that he hath omitted to comment on this part which contains his own praiſes. We ſhall therefore ſupply that loſs to our beſt ability. Scribl.

Ver. 214. Critics like me—] Alluding to two famous editions of Horace and Milton; whoſe richeſt veins of poetry he had prodigally reduced to the pooreſt and moſt beggarly proſe.—Verily the learned ſcholiaſt is grievouſly miſtaken. Ariſtarchus is not boaſting here of the wonders of his art in annihilating the ſublime; but of the uſefulneſs of it, in reducing the turgid to its proper claſs; the words "make it proſe again," plainly

Roman and Greek grammarians! know your better:
Author or ſomething yet more great than letter;
While tow'ring o'er your alphabet like Saul,
Stands our Digamma, and o'ertops them all.
'Tis true, on words is ſtill our whole debate,
Diſputes of Me or Te, or Aut or At,
To ſound or ſink in cano O or A,
Or give up Cicero to C or K.
Let friend affect to ſpeak as Terence ſpoke,
And Alſop never but like Horace joke:
For me, what Virgil, Pliny may deny,
Manilius or Solinus ſhall ſupply:

REMARKS.

ſhowing that proſe it was, though aſhamed of its original, and therefore to proſe it ſhould return. Indeed, much it is to be lamented that Dulneſs doth not confine her critics to this uſeful taſk; and commiſſion them to diſmount what Ariſtophanes calls ῥῆμαθ' ἱππικὰ μόνα, all proſe on horſeback. Scribl.

Ver. 216 Author of ſomething yet more great than Letter.] Alluding to thoſe grammarians, ſuch as Palamedes and Simonides, who invented ſingle letters. But Ariſtarchus, who had found out a double one, was therefore worthy of double honour. Scribl.

Ver. 217, 218. While towering o'er your alphabet, like Saul,—Stands our Digamma,] Alludes to the boaſted reſtoration of the Æolic Digamma, in his long projected edition of Homer. He calls it ſomething more than Letter, from the enormous figure it would make among the other letters, being one Gamma ſet upon the ſhoulders of another.

Ver. 220. of Me or Te,] It was a ſerious diſpute, about which the learned were much divided, and ſome treatiſes written: had it been about Meum and Tuum it could not be more conteſted, than whether at the end of the firſt Ode of Horace, to read, Me doctarum hederæ præmia frontium, or, Te doctarum hederæ.—By this the learned ſcholiaſt would ſeem to inſinuate that the diſpute was not about Meum and Tuum, which is a miſtake: for, as a venerable ſage obſerveth, Words are the counters of wiſemen, but the money of fools; ſo that we ſee their property was indeed concerned. Scribl.

Ver. 222. Or give up Cicero to C or K.] Grammatical diſputes about the manner of pronouncing Cicero's name in Greek. It is a diſpute whether in Latin the name of Hermagoras ſhould end in as or a. Quintilian quotes Cicero as writing it Hermagora, which Bentley rejects, and ſays Quintilian muſt be miſtaken, Cicero could not write it ſo, and that in this caſe he would not believe Cicero himſelf. Theſe are his very words: Ego vero Ciceronem ita ſcripſiſſe ne Ciceroni quidem affirmanti crediderim.—Epiſt. ad Mill. in fin. Frag. Menand. et Phil.

Ver. 223, 224. Freind—Alſop] Dr. Robert Freind, maſter of Weſtminſter-ſchool, and canon of Chriſt Church—Dr. Anthony Alſop, a happy imitator of the Horatian ſtyle.

Ver. 226. Manilius and Solinus] Some critics

For Attic phraſe in Plato let them ſeek,
I poach in Suidas for unlicens'd Greek.
In ancient ſenſe if any needs will deal,
Be ſure I give them fragments, not a meal;
What Gellius or Stobæus haſh'd before,
Or chew'd by blind old ſcholiaſts o'er and o'er,
The critic eye, that microſcope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit:
How parts relate to parts, or they to whole;
The body's harmony, the beaming ſoul,
Are things which Kuſter, Burman, Waſſe ſhall ſee,
When man's whole frame is obvious to a flea.

Ah, think not, miſtreſs! more true Dulneſs lies
In Folly's cap, than Wiſdom's grave diſguiſe.
Like buoys, that never ſink into the flood,
On Learning's ſurface we but lie and nod,
Thine is the genuine head of many a houſe,
And much divinity without a Nose.
Nor could a Barrow work on every block,
Nor has one Atterbury ſpoil'd the flock.
See! ſtill thy own, the heavy Canon roll,
And metaphyſic ſmokes involve the Pole.
For thee we dim the eyes, and ſtuff the head
With all ſuch reading as was never read:
For thee explain a thing till all men doubt it,
And write about it, Goddeſs, and about it:
So ſpins the ſilk-worm ſmall its ſlender ſtore,
And labours, till it clouds itſelf all o'er.
What though we let ſome better ſort of fool
Thrid ev'ry ſcience, run through every ſchool?
Never by tumbler through the hoops was ſhown
Such ſkill in paſſing all, and touching none.
He may indeed (if ſober all this time)
Plague with Diſpute, or perſecute with Rhyme.
We only furniſh what he cannot uſe,
Or wed to what he muſt divorce, a muſe:
Full in the midſt of Euclid dip at once,
And petrify a Genius to a Dunce:
Or ſet on metaphyſic ground to prance,
Show all his paces, not a ſtep advance.
With the ſame cement, ever ſure to bind,
We bring to one dead level every mind.
Then take him to develope if you can,
And hew the block off, and get out the man.

But wherefore waſte I words? I ſee advance
Whore, Pupil, and lac'd Governor, from France.
Walker! our hat—nor more he deign'd to ſay,
But, ſtern as Ajax' ſpectre, ſtrode away.

In flow'd at once a gay embroider'd race,
And tittering puſh'd the pedants off the place:
Some would have ſpoken, but the voice was drown'd
By the French horn, or by the opening hound,
The firſt came forwards, with as eaſy mien,
As if he ſaw St. James's and the Queen.
When thus th' attendant orator begun,
Receive, great Empreſs! thy accompliſh'd Son:
Thine from the birth, and ſacred from the rod,
A dauntleſs infant! never ſcar'd with God.
The ſire ſaw, one by one, his virtues wake:
The mother begg'd the bleſſing of a rake.

REMARKS.

having had it in their choice to comment either on Virgil or Manilius, Pliny or Solinus, have choſen the worſe author, the more freely to diſplay their critical capacity.

Ver. 228, &c. Suidas, Gellius, Stobæus] The firſt a Dictionary writer, a collector of impertinent facts and barbarous words; the ſecond a minute critic; the third an author, who gave his common-place book to the public, where we happen to find much mince-meat of old books.

Ver. 245, 246. Barrow, Atterbury] Iſaac Barrow, Maſter of Trinity, Francis Atterbury, Dean of Chriſt Church, both great geniuſes and eloquent preachers; one more converſant in the ſublime geometry, the other in claſſical learning; but who equally made it their care to advance the polite arts in their ſeveral ſocieties.

REMARKS.

Ver. 272. lac'd Governor] Why lac'd? Becauſe gold and ſilver are neceſſary trimming to denote the dreſs of a perſon of rank, and the Governor muſt be ſuppoſed ſo in foreign countries, to be admitted into courts and other places of fair reception. But how comes Ariſtarchus to know at ſight that this Governor came from France? Know? Why, by the laced coat. SCRIBL.

Ibid. Whore, Pupil, and lac'd Governor] Some critics have objected to the order here, being of opinion that the Governor ſhould have the precedence before the Whore, if not before the Pupil. But were he ſo placed, it might be thought to inſinuate that the Governor led the Pupil to the Whore; and were the Pupil placed firſt, he might be ſuppoſed to lead the Governor to her. But our impartial poet, as he is drawing their picture, repreſents them in the order in which they are generally ſeen; namely, the Pupil between the Whore and the Governor; but placeth the Whore firſt, as ſhe uſually governs both the other.

Ver. 280. As if he ſaw St. James's] Reflecting on the diſreſpectful and indecent behaviour of ſeveral forward young perſons in the preſence, ſo offenſive to all ſerious men, and to none more than the good Scriblerus.

Ver 281. th' attendant orator] The Governor above-ſaid. The poet gives him no particular name; being unwilling, I preſume, to offend or to do injuſtice to any, by celebrating one only with whom this character agrees, in preference to ſo many who ſo equally deſerve it. SCRIBL.

Ver. 284. A dauntleſs infant! never ſcar'd with God] i. e. Brought up in the enlarged principles of modern education; whoſe great point is, to keep the infant mind free from the prejudices of opinion, and the growing ſpirit unbroken by terrifying names. Amongſt the happy conſequences of this reformed diſcipline, it is not the leaſt, that we have never afterwards any occaſion for the prieſt, whoſe trade, as a modern wit informs us, is only to finiſh what the nurſe began. SCRIBL.

Ver. 286.—the bleſſing of a rake.] Scriblerus is here much at a loſs to find out what this bleſſing ſhould be. He is ſometimes tempted to imagin

Thou gav'ſt that ripeneſs, which ſo ſoon began,
And ceas'd ſo ſoon, he ne'er was boy, nor man.
Through ſchool and college, thy kind cloud o'ercaſt,
Safe and unſeen the young Æneas paſt:
Thence burſting glorious, all at once let down,
Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town.
Intrepid then, o'er ſeas and lands he flew:
Europe he ſaw, and Europe ſaw him too.
There all thy gifts and graces we diſplay,
Thou, only thou, directing all our way:
To where the Seine, obſequious as ſhe runs,
Pours at great Bourbon's feet her ſilken ſons;
Or Tyber, now no longer Roman, rolls,
Vain of Italian arts, Italian ſouls:
To happy convents, boſom'd deep in vines,
Where ſlumber abbots, purple as their wines:
To iſles of fragrance, lily-ſilver'd vales,
Diffuſing langour in the panting gales:
To lands of ſinging, or of dancing ſlaves,
Love-whiſpering woods, and lute-reſounding waves.
But chief her ſhrine where naked Venus keeps,
And Cupids ride the lion of the deeps,
Where, eas'd of fleets, the Adriatic main
Wafts the ſmooth eunuch and enamour'd ſwain.
Led by my hand, he ſaunter'd Europe round,
And gather'd every vice on Chriſtian ground;
Saw every court, heard every king declare
His royal ſenſe of operas, or the fair;
The ſtews and palace equally explor'd,
Intrigued with glory, and with ſpirit whor'd;
Try'd all hors d'œuvres, all liqueurs defin'd,
Judicious drank, and greatly-daring din'd;
Dropt the dull lumber of the Latin ſtore,
Spoil'd his own language, and acquir'd no more;
All claſſic learning loſt on claſſic ground;
And laſt turn'd air, the echo of a ſound;
See now, half cur'd, and perfectly well-bred,
With nothing but a ſolo in his head;
As much eſtate, and principle, and wit,
As Janſen, Fleetwood, Cibber, ſhall think fit;
Stol'n from a duel, follow'd by a nun,
And, if a borough chooſe him, not undone!
See, to my country happy I reſtore
This glorious youth, and add one Venus more.
Her too receive (for her my ſoul adores),
So may the ſons of ſons of whores
Prop thine, O empreſs! like each neighbour throne,
And make a long poſterity thy own.
Pleas'd, ſhe accepts the hero and the dame,
Wraps in her veil, and frees from ſenſe or ſhame.
Then look'd, and ſaw a lazy, lolling ſort,
Unſeen at church, at ſenate, or at court,
Of ever-liſtleſs loiterers, that attend
No cauſe, no truſt, no duty, and no friend.
Thee too, my Paridel! ſhe mark'd thee there,
Stretch'd, on the rack of a too eaſy-chair,
And heard thy everlaſting yawn confeſs
The pains and penalties of idleneſs.
She pity'd! but her pity only ſhed
Benigner influence on thy nodding head.
But Annius, crafty ſeer, with ebon wand,
And well-diſſembled emerald on his hand,

REMARKS.

it might be the marrying a great fortune; but this, again, for the vulgarity of it, he rejects, as ſomething uncommon ſeemed to be prayed for. And after many ſtrange conceits, not at all to the honour of the fair ſex, he at length reſts in this, that it was, that her ſon might paſs for a wit; in which opinion he fortifies himſelf by ver. 316. where the orator, ſpeaking of his pupil, ſays, that he

Intrigued with glory, and with ſpirit whor'd,

which ſeems to inſinuate that her prayer was heard. Here the good ſcholiaſt, as indeed every where elſe, lays open the very ſoul of modern criticiſm, while he makes his own ignorance of a poetical expreſſion hold open the door to much erudition and learned conjecture: the bleſſing of a rake ſignifying no more than that he might be a rake; the effects of a thing for the thing itſelf, a common figure. The careful mother only wiſhed her ſon might be a rake, as well knowing that its attendant bleſſings would follow of courſe.

Ver. 307. But chief, &c.] Theſe two lines, in their force of imagery and colouring, emulate and equal the pencil of Rubens.

Ver. 308. And Cupids ride the lion of the deeps.] The winged lion, the arms of Venice. This republic heretofore the moſt conſiderable in Europe, for her naval force, and the extent of her commerce, now illuſtrious for her carnivals.

REMARKS.

Ver. 318. Greatly-daring din'd.] It being indeed no ſmall riſk to eat through thoſe extraordinary compoſitions, whoſe diſguiſed ingredients are generally unknown to the gueſts, and highly inflammatory and unwholeſome.

Ver. 374. With nothing but a ſolo in his head;] With nothing but a ſolo? Why, if it be a ſolo how ſhould there be any thing elſe? Palpable teutology! Read boldly an opera, which is enough of conſcience for ſuch a head as has loſt all its Latin. BENTL.

Ver. 326. Janſen, Fleetwood, Cibber.] Three very eminent perſons, all managers of plays; who, though not governors by profeſſion, had, each, in his way, concerned themſelves in the education of youth; and regulated their wits, their morals, or their finances, at that period of their age which is the moſt important, their entrance into the polite world. Of the laſt of theſe, and his talents for this end, ſee Book i. ver. 199, &c.

Ver. 331. Her too receive, &c.] This confirms what the learned Scriblerus advanced in his note on ver. 272, that the Governor, as well as the Pupil, had a particular intereſt in this lady.

Ver. 341. Thee too, my Paridel!] The poet ſeems to ſpeak of this young gentleman with great affection. The name is taken from Spenſer, who gives it to a wandering courtly 'ſquire, that travelled about for the ſame reaſon for which many young 'ſquires are now fond of travelling, and eſpecially to Paris.

Ver. 347. Annius.] The name taken from An-

False as his gems, and canker'd as his coins,
Came, cramm'd with capon, from where Pollio dines,
Soft, as the wily fox is seen to creep,
Where bask on sunny banks the simple sheep,
Walk round and round, now prying here, now there,
So he; but pious, whisper'd first his prayer.
Grant, gracious goddess! grant me still to cheat,
O may thy cloud still cover the deceit!
Thy choicer mists on this assembly shed,
But pour them thickest on the noble head.
So shall each youth, assisted by our eyes,
See other Cæsars, other Homers rise;
Through twilight ages hunt th' Athenian fowl,
Which Chalcis gods, and mortals call an owl,
Now see an Attys, now a Cecrops clear,
Nay, Mahomet! the pigeon at thine ear;
Be rich in ancient brass, though not in gold,
And keep his lares, though his house be sold;
To headless Phœbe his fair bride postpone,
Honour a Syrian prince above his own;
Lord of an Otho, if I vouch it true;
Blest in one Niger, till he knows of two.
Mummius o'erheard him; Mummius, fool-renown'd,
Who like his Cheops stinks above the ground,

REMARKS.

nius, the monk of Viterbo, famous for many impositions and forgeries of ancient manuscripts and inscriptions, which he was prompted to by mere vanity; but our Annius had a more substantial motive.

Ver. 363. Attys and Cecrops.] The first king of Athens, of whom it is hard to suppose any coins are extant; but not so improbable as what follows, that there should be any of Mahomet, who forbad all images; and the story of whose pigeon was a monkish fable. Nevertheless one of these Annius made a counterfeit medal of that impostor, now in the collection of a learned nobleman.

Ver. 371. Mummius.] This name is not merely an allusion to the Mummius he was so fond of, but probably referred to the Roman general of that name, who burned Corinth, and committed the curious statutes to the captain of a ship, assuring him, "that if any were lost or broken, he "should procure others to be made in their stead;" by which it should seem (whatever may be pretended) that Mummius was no virtuoso.

Ibid. —Fool-renown'd.] A compound epithet in the Greek manner, renown'd by fools, or renowned for making fools.

Ver. 372. Cheops.] A king of Egypt, whose body was certainly to be known, as being buried alone in his pyramid, and is therefore more genuine than any of the Cleopatras. This royal mummy, being stolen by a wild Arab, was purchased by the Consul of Alexandria, and transmitted to the museum of Mummius; for proof of which, he brings a passage in Sandys's Travels, where that accurate and learned voyager assures us, that he saw the sepulchre empty; which agrees exactly (saith he) with

Fierce as a startled adder, swell'd, and said,
Rattling an ancient sistrum at his head:
Speak'st thou of Syrian princes? traitor base!
Mine, Goddess! mine is all the horned race.
True, he had wit, to make their value rise;
From foolish Greeks to steal them, was as wise:
More glorious yet, from barbarous hands to keep,
When Sallee rovers chas'd him on the deep.
Then taught by Hermes, and divinely bold,
Down his own throat he risqu'd the Grecian gold,
Receiv'd each demi-god, with pious care,
Deep in his entrails—I rever'd them there,
I bought them, shrouded in that living shrine,
And, at their second birth, they issue mine.
Witness great Ammon! by whose horns I swore,
(Reply'd soft Annius) this our paunch before
Still bears them, faithful; and that thus I eat,
Is to refund the medals with the meat.
To prove me, goddess! clear of all design,
Bid me with Pollio sup, as well as dine:
There all the learn'd shall at the labour stand,
And Douglas lend his soft obstetric hand.
The Goddess smiling seem'd to give consent;
So back to Pollio, hand in hand, they went.

REMARKS.

the time of the theft above mentioned. But he omits to observe, that Herodotus tells the same thing of it in his time.

Ver. 375. Speak'st thou of Syrian princes? &c.] The strange story following, which may be taken for a fiction of the poet, is justified by a true relation in Spon's Voyages. Vaillant (who wrote the History of the Syrian Kings, as it is to be found on medals) coming from the Levant, where he had been collecting various coins; and being pursued by a Corsair of Sallee, swallowed down twenty gold medals. A sudden Bourasque freed him from the rover; and he got to land with them in his belly. On his road to Avignon, he met two physicians, of whom he demanded assistance. One advised purgations, the other vomits. In this uncertainty he took neither, but pursued his way to Lyons, where he found his ancient friend, the famous physician and antiquary Dufour, to whom he related his adventure. Dufour, without staying to inquire about the uneasy symptoms of the burden he carried, first asked him, whether the medals were of the higher empire? He assured him they were. Dufour was ravished with the hope of possessing so rare a treasure; he bargained with him on the spot for the most curious of them, and was to recover them at his own expence.

Ver. 387. Witness great Ammon] Jupiter Ammon is called to witness, as the father of Alexander, to whom those kings succeeded in the division of the Macedonian empire, and whose horns they wore on their medals.

Ver. 394. Douglass.] A physician of great learning and no less taste; above all, curious in what related to Horace, of whom he collected every edition, translation, and comment, to the number of several hundred volumes.

Then thick as locusts blackening all the ground,
A tribe, with weeds and shells fantastic crown'd,
Each with some wond'rous gift approach'd the power,
A nest, a toad, a fungus, or a flower.
But far the foremost, two, with earnest zeal,
And aspect ardent, to the throne appeal.
The first thus open'd: Hear thy suppliant's call,
Great queen, and common mother of us all!
Fair from its humble bed I rear'd this flower,
Suckled and cheer'd with air, and sun, and shower:
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread,
Bright with the gilded button tipt its head.
Then thron'd in glass, and nam'd it Caroline:
Each maid cried, Charming! and each youth Divine!
Did nature's pencil ever blend such rays,
Such varied light in one promiscuous blaze!
Now prostrate! dead! behold that Caroline:
No maid cries, Charming! and no youth, Divine!
And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose infect lust
Lay'd this gay daughter of the spring in dust.
Oh, punish him, or to th' Elysian shades
Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades!
He ceas'd, and wept. With innocence of mien
Th' accus'd stood forth, and thus address'd the queen:
Of all th' enamell'd race, whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,
Or swims along the fluid atmosphere,
Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air.
I saw, and started from its vernal bower
The rising game, and chas'd from flower to flower.
It fled, I follow'd; now in hope, now pain;
It stopt, I stop'd; it mov'd, I mov'd again.
At last it fixt, 'twas on what plant it pleas'd,
And where it fixt, the beauteous bird I seiz'd:
Rose or carnation was below my care;
I meddle, Goddess! only in my sphere.
I tell the naked fact without disguise,
And, to excuse it, need but show the prize;
Whose spoils this paper offers to your eye,
Fair ev'n in death! this peerless butterfly.
My sons! (she answer'd) both have done your parts:
Live happy both, and long promote our arts.
But hear a mother, when she recommends
To your fraternal care our sleeping friends.
The common soul, of Heaven's more frugal make,
Serves but to keep fools pert, and knaves awake;
A drowsy watchman, that just gives a knock,
And breaks our rest, to tell us what's a clock.
Yet by some object every brain is stirr'd;
The dull may waken to a humming-bird;
The most recluse, discreetly open'd, find
Congenial matter in the cockle kind;
The mind in metaphysics at a loss,
May wander in a wilderness of moss;
The head that turns at superlunar things,
Pois'd with a tail, may steer on Wilkins' wings.
O, would the sons of men once think their eyes
And reason giv'n them but to study flies!
See nature in some partial narrow shape,
And let the author of the whole escape;
Learn but to trifle; or who must observe,
To wonder at their Maker, not to serve.
Be that my task (replies a gloomy clerk,
Sworn foe to Mystery, yet divinely dark;
Whose pious hope aspires to see the day
When moral evidence shall quite decay,
And damns implicit faith, and holy lies,
Prompt to impose, and fond to dogmatise:)
Let others creep by timid steps, and slow,
On plain Experience lay foundations low,
By common sense to common knowledge bred,
And last, to nature's cause through nature led.
All seeing in thy mists, we want no guide,
Mother of Arrogance, and source of Pride!
We nobly take the high priori road,
And reason downward, till we doubt of God:
Make nature still encroach upon his plan;
And shove him off as far as e'er we can:
Thrust some mechanic cause into his place,
Or bind in matter, or diffuse in space.
Or, at one bound o'erleaping all his laws,
Make God man's image, man the final cause.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 441. The common soul, &c.] In the first edit. thus:

Of souls the greater part, heaven's common make,
Serve but to keep fools pert, and knaves awake;
And most but find that sentinel of God,
A drowsy watchman in the land of Nod.

REMARKS.

Ver. 409. And nam'd it Caroline:] It is a compliment which the florists usually pay to princes and great persons, to give their names to the most curious flowers of their raising: Some have been very jealous of vindicating this honour; but none more than that ambitious gardener at Hammersmith, who caused his favourite to be painted on his sign, with this inscription, "This is my Queen "Caroline."

Ver. 452. Wilkins' wings.] One of the first projectors of the Royal Society, who, among many enlarged and useful notions, entertained the extravagant hope of a possibility to fly to the moon; which has put some volatile geniuses upon making wings for that purpose.

Ver. 462. When moral evidence shall quite decay.] Alluding to a ridiculous and absurd way of some mathematicians, in calculating the gradual decay of moral evidence by mathematical proportions: according to which calculation, in about fifty years it will be no longer probable that Julius Cæsar was in Gaul, or died in the senate-house. See Craig's Theologiæ Christianæ Principia Mathematica. But as it seems evident, that facts of a thousand years old, for instance, are now as probable as they were five hundred years ago; it is plain, that if in fifty more they quite disappear, it must be owing, not to their arguments, but to the extraordinary power of our goddess; for whose help, therefore, they have reason to pray.

Find Virtue local, all relation ſcorn,
See all in ſelf, and but for ſelf be born:
Of nought ſo certain as our reaſon ſtill,
Of nought ſo doubtful as of ſoul and will.
Or hide the God ſtill more! and make us ſee
Such as Lucretius drew, a God like thee:
Wrapt up in ſelf, a God without a thought,
Regardleſs of our merit or default.
Or that bright image to our fancy draw,
Which Theocles in raptur'd viſion ſaw,
Wild through poetic ſcenes the Genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves;
That Nature our ſociety adores,
Where Tindal dictates, and Silenus ſnores.

Rous'd at his name, up roſe the bowſy ſire,
And ſhook from out his pipe the ſeeds of fire;
Then ſnap'd his box, and ſtrok'd his belly down,
Roſy and reverend, though without a gown.
Bland and familiar to the throne he came,
Led up the youth, and call'd the goddeſs dame.
Then thus: From prieſtcraft happily ſet free,
Lo! every ſiniſh'd ſon returns to thee:
Firſt ſlave to words, then vaſſal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the ſame;
Bounded by Nature, narrow'd ſtill by Art,
A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
Thus bred, thus taught, how many have I ſeen,
Smiling on all, and ſmil'd on by a queen!
Mark'd out for honour, honour'd for their birth,
To thee the moſt rebellious things on earth:
Now to thy gentle ſhadow all are ſhrunk,
All melted down in penſion, or in punk!
So K * *, ſo B * *, ſneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's ſlave.
Poor W * *, nipt in Folly's broadeſt bloom,
Who praiſes now? his chaplain on his tomb.
Then take them all, oh take them to thy breaſt!
Thy Magus, goddeſs! ſhall perform the reſt.

With that a Wizard old his cup extends;
Which whoſo taſtes, forgets his former friends,
Sire, anceſtors, himſelf. One caſts his eyes
Up to a ſtar, and like Endymion dies;
A feather, ſhooting from another's head,
Extracts his brain; and principle is fled;
Loſt is his God, his country, every thing;
And nothing left but homage to a king!
The vulgar herd turn off to roll with hogs,
To run with horſes, or to hunt with dogs;

REMARKS.

Ver. 492. Where Tindal dictates, and Silenus ſnores.] It cannot be denied but that this fine ſtroke of ſatire againſt atheiſm was well intended. But how muſt the reader ſmile at our author's officious zeal, when he is told, that at the time this was written, you might as ſoon have found a wolf in England as an atheiſt? The truth is, the whole ſpecies was exterminated. There is a trifling difference, indeed, concerning the author of the Atchievement. Some, as Dr. Aſhenhurſt, gave it to Bentley's Boylean Lectures. And he ſo well convinced that great man of the truth, that whatever afterwards he found atheiſt, he always read it A Theiſt. But, in ſpite of a claim ſo well made out, others gave the honour of this exploit to a latter Boylean lecturer. A judicious apologiſt for Dr. Clarke, againſt Mr. Whiſton, ſays, with no leſs elegance than poſitiveneſs of expreſſion, it is a moſt certain truth, that the demonſtration of the being and attributes of God, has extirpated and baniſhed atheiſm out of the Chriſtian world, p. 18. It is much to be lamented, that the cleareſt truths have ſtill their dark ſide. Here we ſee it becomes a doubt which of the two Herculeſes was the monſter queller. But what of that? Since the thing is done, and the proof of it ſo certain, there is no occaſion for ſo nice a canvaſſing of circumſtances.

SCRIBL.

Ibid. Silenus] Silenus was an Epicurean philoſopher, as appears from Virgil, Ecl. vi. where he ſings the principles of that philoſophy in his drink.

Ver. 501. Firſt ſlave to words, &c.] A recapitulation of the whole courſe of modern education deſcribed in this book, which confines youth to the ſtudy of words only in ſchools; ſubjects them to the authority of ſyſtems in the univerſities; and deludes them with the names of party-diſtinctions in the world. All equally concurring to narrow the underſtanding, and eſtabliſh ſlavery and error in literature, philoſophy, and politics. The whole finiſhed in modern free-thinking: the completion of whatever is vain, wrong, and deſtructive to the happineſs of mankind; as it eſtabliſhes ſelf-love for the ſole principle of action.

Ver. 506. ſmil'd on by a queen!] i. e. This queen or goddeſs of Dulneſs.

Ver. 517. With that a wizard old, &c.] Here beginneth the celebration of the Greater Myſteries of the goddeſs, which the poet, in his invocation, ver. 5. promiſed to ſing.

Ver. 518. —forgets his former friends,] Surely there little needed the force of charms or magic to ſet aſide an uſeleſs friendſhip For of all the accommodations of faſhionable life, as there are none more reputable, ſo there are none of ſo little charge as friendſhip. It fills up the void of life with a name of dignity and reſpect; and at the ſame time is ready to give place to every paſſion that offers to diſpute poſſeſſion with it.

SCRIBL.

Ver. 523, 524. Loſt is his God, his country—And nothing left but homage to a king!] So ſtrange as this may ſeem to a mere Engliſh reader, the famous Monſ. de la Bruyere declares it to be the character of every good ſubject in a Monarchy: "Where (ſays he) there is no ſuch thing "as love of our country, the intereſt, the glory, "and ſervice of the prince, ſupply its place." De la Republique, chap. x.

Of this duty another celebrated French author ſpeaks indeed a little more diſreſpectfully; which for that reaſon, we ſhall not tranſlate, but give in his own words, "L'Amour de la Patrie, le "grand motif des prémiers Heros, n'eſt plus re-"gardé que comme une Chimeére; l'idée du Ser-"vice du Roi, etendüe juſqu' à l'oubli de tout

But sad example! never to escape
Their infamy, still keep the human shape.
But she, good goddess, sent to every child
Firm Impudence, or Stupefaction mild;
And strait succeeded, leaving shame no room,
Cibberian forehead, or Cimmerian gloom.
Kind Self-conceit to some her glass applies,
Which no one looks in with another's eyes;
But as the flatterer or dependent paint,
Beholds himself a patriot, chief, or saint.
On others interest her gay livery flings,
Interest, that waves on party-colour'd wings:
Turn'd to the sun, she casts a thousand dyes,
And, as she turns, the colours fall or rise.
Others the syren-sisters warble round,
And empty heads console with empty sound.
No more, alas! the voice of Fame they hear,
The balm of Dulness trickling in their ear.
Great C, H, P, R, K*,
Why all your toils? your sons have learn'd to sing.
How quick Ambition hastes to ridicule!
The sire is made a peer, the son a fool.
On some, a priest succinct in amice white
Attends; all flesh is nothing in his sight!
Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,
And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn:
The board with specious miracles he loads,
Turns hares to larks, and pigeons into toads.
Another (for in all what one can shine?)
Explains the seve and verdeur of the vine.
What cannot copious sacrifice atone?
Thy treufles, Perigord! thy hams, Bayonne?
With French libation, and Italian strain.
Wash Bladen white, and expiate Hay's stain.
Knight lifts the head: for what are crowds undone,
To three essential partridges in one?
Gone every blush, and silent all reproach,
Contending princes mount them in their coach.
Next, bidding all draw near on bended knees,
The queen confers her titles and degrees.
Her children first of more distinguish'd sort,
Who study Shakspeare at the inns of court,

REMARKS.

" autre Principe, tient lieu de ce qu'on appelloit " autrefois Grandeur d'Ame et Fidelité." Boulainvilliers Hist. des Anciens Parlements de France, &c.

Ver. 528. still keep the human shape.] The effects of the Magus's Cup, by which is allegorised a total corruption of heart, are just contrary to that of Circe, which only represents the sudden plunging into pleasures. Her's, therefore, took away the shape, and left the human mind; his takes away the mind, and leaves the human shape.

Ver. 529. But she, good goddess, &c.] The only comfort people can receive, must be owing in some shape or other to Dulness; which makes some stupid, others impudent, gives self-conceit to some, upon the flatteries of their dependents, presents the false colours of interest to others, and busies or amuses the rest with idle pleasures or sensuality, till they become easy under any infamy. Each of which species is here shadowed under allegorical persons.

Ver. 532. Cibberian forehead, or Cimmerian gloom.] i. e. She communicates to them of her own virtue, or of her royal colleagues. The Cibberian forehead being to fit them for self-conceit, self-interest, &c. and the Cimmerian gloom, for the pleasures of opera, and the table. SCRIBL.

Ver. 553. The board with specious miracles he loads, &c.] Scriblerus seems at a loss in this place. Speciosa miraculu (says he) according to Horace, where the monstrous fables of the Cyclops, Læstrygons, Scylla, &c. What relation have these to transformation of hares into larks, or of pigeons into toads? I shall tell thee. The Læstrygons spitted men upon spears, as we do larks upon skewers; and the fair pigeon turned to a toad, is similar to the fair virgin Scylla ending in a filthy beast. But here is the difficulty, why pigeons in so shocking a shape should be brought to a table. Hares indeed might be cut into larks at a second dressing, out of frugality: Yet that seems no probable motive, when we consider the extravagance before mentioned, of dissolving whole oxen and boars into a small vial of jelly; nay, it is expressly said, that all flesh is nothing in his sight. I have searched Apicius, Pliny, and the feast of Trimalchio, in vain; I can only resolve it into some mysterious superstitious rite, as it is said to be done by a priest, and soon after called a sacrifice, attended (as all ancient sacrifices were) with libation and song. SCRIBL.

This good scholiast, not being acquainted with modern luxury, was ignorant that these were only the miracles of French cookery, and that particularly " Pigeons en crapeau" were a common dish.

Ver. 556. seve and verdeur] French terms relating to wines, which signify their flavour and poignancy.

" Et je gagerois que chez le commandeur
" Villandri prisoit sa Seve et sa Verdeur."
Despreaux.

St. Evremont has a very pathetic letter to a nobleman in disgrace, advising him to seek comfort in a good table, and particularly to be attentive to these qualities in his Champaigne.

Ver. 560. Bladen—Hays] Names of gamesters. Bladen is a black man. Robert Knight, cashier of the South Sea Company, who fled from England in 1720 (afterwards pardoned in 1742).—These lived with the utmost magnificence at Paris, and kept open tables, frequented by persons of the first quality of England, and even by princes of the blood of France.

Ibid. Bladen, &c.] The former note of " Bladen " is a black man," is very absurd. The manuscript here is partly obliterated, and doubtless could only have been, Wash blackmoors white, alluding to a known proverb. SCRIBL.

Impale a glow-worm, or Vertu profeſs,
Shine in the dignity of F. R. S.
Some, deep free-maſons, join the ſilent race
Worthy to fill Pythagoras's place:
Some botaniſts, or floriſts at the leaſt,
Or iſſue members of an annual feaſt.
Nor paſt the meaneſt unregarded, one
Roſe a Gregorian, one a Gormogon,

REMARKS.

Ver. 567. Her children firſt of more diſtinguiſh'd [court]
fort,
Who ſtudy Shakſpeare at the inns of

Ill would that ſcholiaſt diſcharge his duty, who ſhould neglect to honour thoſe whom Dulneſs has diſtinguiſhed; or ſuffer them to lie forgotten, when their rare modeſty would have left them nameleſs. Let us not, therefore, overlook the ſervices which have been done her cauſe by one Mr. Thomas Edwards, a gentleman, as he is pleaſed to call himſelf, of Lincoln's-Inn; but, in reality, a gentleman only of the Dunciad; or, to ſpeak him better, in the plain language of our anceſtors to ſuch muſhrooms, a gentleman of the laſt edition: who, nobly eluding the ſolicitude of his careful father, very early retained himſelf in the cauſe of Dulneſs againſt Shakſpeare, and with the wit and learning of his anceſtor Tom Thimble in the Rehearſal, and with the air of good nature and politeneſs of Caliban in the tempeſt, hath now happily finiſhed the Dunce's progreſs in perſonal abuſe. For a libeller is nothing but a Grub-ſtreet critic run to ſeed.

Lamentable is the dulneſs of theſe gentlemen of the Dunciad. This Fungoſo and his friends, who are all gentlemen, have exclaimed much againſt us for reflecting his birth, in the words, "a gen-"tlemen of the laſt edition," which we hereby declare concern not his birth, but his adoption only: and mean no more than that he is become a gentleman of the laſt edition of the Dunciad. Since gentlemen, then, are ſo captious, we think it proper to declare that Mr. Thomas Thimble, who is here ſaid to be Mr. Thomas Edwards's anceſtor, is only related to him by the muſe's ſide.

SCRIBL.

This tribe of men, which Scriblerus has here ſo well exemplified, our poet hath elſewhere admirably characteriſed in that happy line,

"A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead."

For the ſatire extends much further than to the perſon who occaſioned it, and takes in the whole ſpecies of thoſe on whom a good education (to fit them for ſome uſeful and learned profeſſion) has been beſtowed in vain. That worthleſs band

"Of ever-liſtleſs loiterers, that attend
"No cauſe, no truſt, no duty, and no friend;"

who, with an underſtanding too diſſipated and futile for the offices of civil life; and a heart too lumpiſh, narrow, and contracted for thoſe of ſocial, become fit for nothing: and ſo turn wits

The laſt, not leaſt in honour or applauſe,
Iſis and Cam made Doctors of her laws.
Then bleſſing all, Go, children of my care!
To practice now from theory repair.
All my commands are eaſy, ſhort, and full:
My ſons! be proud, be ſelfiſh, and be dull.
Guard my prerogative, aſſert my throne:
This nod confirms each privilege your own.
The cap and ſwitch be ſacred to his Grace;
With ſtaff and pumps the Marquis leads the race;
From ſtage to ſtage the licens'd Earl may run,
Pair'd with his fellow-charioteer the ſun;
The learned Baron butterflies deſign,
Or draw to ſilk Arachne's ſubtile line;

REMARKS.

and critics, where ſenſe and civility are neither required nor expected.

Ver. 571. Some, deep free-maſons, join the ſilent race] The poet all along expreſſes a very particular concern for this ſilent race: He has here provided, that in caſe they will not waken or open (as was before propoſed) to a humming bird or a cockle, yet at worſt they may be made free-maſons; where taciturnity is the only eſſential qualification, as it was the chief of the diſciples of Pythagoras.

Ver. 576. A Gregorian, one a Gormogon,] A ſort of lay-brothers, ſlips from the root of the free-maſons.

Ver. 584. each privilege your own, &c.] This ſpeech of Dulneſs to her ſons at parting may poſſibly fall ſhort of the reader's expectations; who may imagine the goddeſs might give them a charge of more conſequence, and, from ſuch a theory as is before delivered, incite them to the practice of ſomething more extraordinary, than to perſonate running footmen, jockies, ſtage coachmen, &c.

But if it be well conſidered, that whatever inclination they might have to do miſchief, her ſons are generally rendered harmleſs by their inability; and that it is the common effect of Dulneſs (even in her greateſt efforts) to defeat her own deſign; the poet, I am perſuaded, will be juſtified, and it will be allowed that theſe worthy perſons, in their ſeveral ranks, do as much as can be expected from them.

Ver. 585. The cap and ſwitch, &c.] The goddeſs's political balance of favour, in the diſtribution of her rewards, deſerves our notice. It conſiſts in joining with thoſe honours claimed by birth and high place, others more adapted to the genius and talents of the candidates. And thus her great forerunner, John of Leyden, king of Munſter, entered on his government, by making his ancient friend and companion, Knipper-dolling, general of his horſe, and hangman. And had but Fortune ſeconded his great ſchemes of reformation, it is ſaid, he would have eſtabliſhed his whole houſehold on the ſame reaſonable footing.

SCRIBL.

Ver. 590. Arachne's ſubtile line;] This is one of the moſt ingenious employments aſſigned, and therefore recommended only to peers of learning.

The judge to dance his brother ſerjeant call;
The ſenator at cricket urge the ball;
The biſhop ſtow (pontific luxury?)
An hundred ſouls of turkeys in a pye;
The ſturdy 'ſquire to Gallic maſters ſtoop,
And drown his lands and manors in a ſoupe.
Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make ſenates dance.
Perhaps more high ſome daring ſon may ſoar,
Proud to my liſt to add one monarch more:
And, nobly conſcious, princes are but things
Born for firſt miniſters, as ſlaves for kings,
Tyrant ſupreme! ſhall three eſtates command,
And make one mighty Dunciad of the land! [nods:
More ſhe had ſpoke, but yawn'd—All Nature
What mortal can reſiſt the yawn of gods?
Churches and chapels inſtantly it reach'd:
(St. James's firſt, for leaden G—— preach'd)
Then catch'd the ſchools; the hall ſcarce kept awake;
The convocation gap'd, but could not ſpeak;
Loſt was the Nation's ſenſe, nor could be found,
While the long ſolemn uniſon went round:
Wide, and more wide, it ſpread o'er all the realm;
Ev'n Palinurus nodded at the helm:
The vapour mild o'er each committee crept;
Unfiniſh'd treaties in each office ſlept;
And chiefleſs armies doz'd out the campaign!
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.
O Muſe! relate (for you can tell alone,
Wits have ſhort memories, and dunces none)
Relate, who firſt, who laſt reſign'd to reſt;
Whoſe heads ſhe partly, whoſe completely bleſt;
What charms could faction, what ambition lull,
The venal quiet, and entrance the dull;

REMARKS.

Of weaving ſtockings of the webs of ſpiders, ſee the Phil. Tranſ.

Ver. 591. The judge to dance his brother ſergeant call;] Alluding perhaps to that ancient and ſolemn dance, intitled, a call of ſergeants.

Ver. 598. Teach kings to fiddle,] An ancient amuſement of ſovereign princes, (viz.) Achilles, Alexander, Nero; though deſpiſed by Themiſtocles, who was a republican—Make ſenates dance, either after their prince, or to Pontoiſe, or Siberia.

Ver. 606. What mortal can reſiſt the yawn of gods?] This verſe is truly Homerical; as is the concluſion of the action, where the great mother compoſes all, in the ſame manner as Minerva at the period of the Odyſſey.—It may indeed ſeem a very ſingular epitaſis of the poem, to end as this does, with a great yawn; but we muſt conſider it as the yawn of a god, and of powerful effects. It is not out of nature, moſt long and grave counſels concluding in this very manner: Nor without authority, the incomparable Spenſer having ended one of the moſt conſiderable of his works with a roar; but then it is the roar of a lion, the effects whereof are deſcribed as the cataſtrophe of the poem.

Ver. 607. Church and chapels, &c.] The progreſs of this yawn is judicious and natural, and worthy to be noted. Firſt it ſeizeth the churches and chapels; then catcheth the ſchools, where, though the boys be unwilling to ſleep, the maſters are not: Next Weſtminſter-hall, much more hard indeed to ſubdue, and not totally put to ſilence even by the goddeſs: Then the convocation, which, though extremely deſirous to ſpeak, yet cannot: Even the Houſe of Commons, juſtly called the ſenſe of the nation, is loſt (that is to ſay ſuſpended) during the yawn; (far be it from the author to ſuggeſt that it could be loſt any longer!) but it ſpreadeth at large over all the reſt of the kingdom, to ſuch a degree, that Palinurus himſelf (though as incapable of ſleeping as Jupiter) yet noddeth for a moment; the effect of which, though ever ſo momentary, could not but cauſe ſome relaxation, for the time, in all public affairs. SCRIBL.

REMARKS.

Ver. 610. The convocation gap'd, but could not ſpeak;] Implying a great deſire ſo to do, as the learned ſcholiaſt on the place rightly obſerves. Therefore beware, reader, leſt thou take this gape for a yawn, which is attended with no deſire but to go to reſt: by no means the diſpoſition of the convocation; whoſe melancholy caſe in ſhort is this: She was, as is reported, infected with the general influence of the goddeſs; and while ſhe was yawning carelefsly at her eaſe, a wanton courtier took her at advantage, and in the very nick clapp'd a gag into her chops. Well therefore may we know her meaning by her gaping; and this diſtreſsful poſture our poet here deſcribes, juſt as ſhe ſtands at this day, a ſad example of the effects of Dulneſs and Malice unchecked, and deſpiſed BENTL.

Ver. 615,—618.] Theſe verſes were written many years ago, and may be found in the State Poems of that time. So that Scriblerus is miſtaken, or whoever elſe have imagined this poem of a freſher date.

Ver. 620. Wits have ſhort memories,] This ſeems to be the reaſon why the poets, when they give us a catalogue, conſtantly call for help on the muſes, who, as the daughters of Memory, are obliged not to forget any thing. So Homer, Iliad ii.

Πληθὺν δ' οὐκ ἂν ἐγὼ μυθήσομαι οὐδ' ὀνομήνω,
Εἰ μὴ Ὀλυμπιάδες Μοῦσαι, Διὸς αἰγιόχοιο
Θυγατέρες, μνησαίαθ'——

And Virgil, Æn. vii.

"Et meminiſtis enim, Divæ, et memorare poſ-
"teſtis:
"Ad nos vix tenuis famæ perlabitur aura."

But our poet had yet another reaſon for putting this taſk upon the muſe, that, all beſides being aſleep, ſhe only could relate what paſſed. SCRIBL.

Ver. 624. The venal quiet, and, &c.] It were a problem worthy the ſolution of Mr. Ralph and his patron, who had lights that we know nothing of, ——Which required the greateſt effort of our

Till drown'd was ſenſe, and ſhame, and right, and wrong——
O ſing, and huſh the nations with thy ſong!
* * * * * *
In vain, in vain, the all-compoſing hour
Reſiſtleſs falls: the muſe obeys the power.
She comes! ſhe comes! the ſable throne behold
Of Night primæval, and of Chaos old!
Before her, Fancy's gilded clouds decay,
And all its varying rain-bows die away,
Wit ſhoots in vain its momentary fires,
The meteor drops, and in a flaſh expires.
As one by one at dread Medea's ſtrain,
The ſickening ſtars fade off th' ethereal plain;
As Argus' eyes, by Hermes' wand oppreſt,
Clos'd one by one to everlaſting reſt;
Thus at her felt approach, and ſecret might,
Art after Art goes out, and all is night:
See ſculking Truth to her old cavern fled,
Mountains of caſuiſtry heap'd o'er her head!
Philoſophy, that lean'd on heaven before,
Shrinks to her ſecond cauſe, and is no more.

VARIATION.

Ver. 643. In the former edit. it ſtood thus:

Philoſophy, that reach'd the heavens before,
Shrinks to her hidden cauſe, and is no more.

And this way was intended as a cenſure of the Newtonian philoſophy. For the poet had been miſled by the prejudices of foreigners, as if that philoſophy had recurred to the occult qualities of Ariſtotle. This was the idea he received of it from a man educated much abroad, who had read every thing, but every thing ſuperficially. Had his excellent friend Dr. A. been conſulted in this matter, it is certain that ſo unjuſt a reflection had never diſcredited ſo noble a ſatire. When I hinted to him how he had been impoſed upon, he changed the lines with great pleaſure into a compliment (as they now ſtand) on that divine genius, and a ſatire on the folly by which he the poet himſelf had been miſled.

REMARKS.

goddeſſes power, to intrance the dull, or to quiet the venal. For though the venal may be more unruly than the dull, yet, on the other hand, it demands a much greater expence of her virtue to intrance than barely to quiet. SCRIBL.

Ver. 629. She comes! ſhe comes! &c.] Here the muſe, like Jove's eagle, after a ſudden ſtoop at ignoble game, ſoareth again to the ſkies. As prophecy hath ever been one of the chief provinces of poeſy, our poet here foretells from what we feel,

Phyſic of Metaphyſic begs defence,
And Metaphyſic calls for aid on Senſe!
See Myſtery to Mathematics fly!
In vain! they gaze, turn giddy, rave, and die.
Religion bluſhing veils her ſacred fires,
And unawares Morality expires.
Nor public flame, nor private dares to ſhine:
Nor human ſpark is left, nor glimpſe divine!
Lo! thy dread empire, Chaos! is reſtor'd,
Light dies before thy uncreating word:
Thy hand, great Anarch! lets the curtain fall;
And univerſal Darkneſs buries All.

REMARKS.

what we are to fear; and in the ſtyle of other prophets, hath uſed the future tenſe for the preterit: ſince what he ſays ſhall be, is already to be ſeen, in the writings of ſome even of our moſt adorned authors in divinity, philoſophy, phyſics, metaphyſics, &c. who are too good indeed to be named in ſuch company.

Ibid. The ſable throne behold.] The ſable thrones of night and chaos, here repreſented as advancing to extinguiſh the light of the ſciences, in the firſt place blot out the colours of fancy, and damp the fire of wit, before they proceed to their work.

Ver. 641. Truth to her old cavern fled.] Alluding to the ſaying of Democritus, that truth lay at the bottom of a deep well, from whence he had drawn her: Though Butler ſays, he firſt put her in, before he drew her out.

Ver. 649. Religion bluſhing veils her ſacred fires,] Bluſhing as well at the memory of the paſt overflow of Dulneſs, when the barbarous learning of ſo many ages was wholly employed in corrupting the ſimplicity, and defiling the purity of religion, as at the view of theſe her falſe ſupports in the preſent; of which it would be endleſs to recount the particulars. However, amidſt the extinction of all other lights, ſhe is ſaid only to withdraw hers! as hers alone in its own nature is unextinguiſhable and eternal.

Ver. 650. And unawares Morality expires.] It appears from hence that our Poet was of very different ſentiments from the Author of the Characteriſtics, who has written a formal treatiſe on Virtue, to prove it not only real but durable, without the ſupport of religion. The word Unawares alludes to the confidence of thoſe men, who ſuppoſe that morality would flouriſh beſt without it, and conſequently to the ſurpriſe ſuch would be in (if any ſuch there are) who indeed love virtue, and yet do all they can to root out the religion of their country.

BY THE AUTHOR.—A DECLARATION.

WHEREAS certain haberdashers of points and particles, being instigated by the spirit of pride, and assuming to themselves the name of critics and restorers, have taken upon them to adulterate the common and current sense of our glorious ancestors, poets of this realm, by clipping, coining, defacing the images, mixing their own base alloy, or otherwise falsifying the same; which they publish, utter, and vend as genuine: The said haberdashers having no right thereto, as neither heirs, executors, administrators, assigns, or in any sort related to such poets, to all or any of them: Now, we having carefully revised this our Dunciad, * beginning with the words the mighty mother, and ending with the words buries all, containing the entire sum of one thousand seven hundred and fifty-four verses, declare every word figure point, and comma of this impression to be authentic: And do therefore strictly enjoin and forbid any person or persons whatsoever, to erase, reverse, put between hooks, or by any other means, directly or indirectly, change or mangle any of them. And we do hereby earnestly exhort all our brethren to follow this our example, which we heartily wish our great predecessors had heretofore set, as a remedy and prevention of all such abuses. Provided always, that nothing in this declaration shall be construed to limit the lawful and undoubted right of every subject of this realm, to judge, censure, or condemn, in the whole or in part, any poem or poet whatsoever.

Given under our hand at London, this third day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred thirty and two.

Declarat' cor' me,
JOHN BARBER, Mayor.

* Read thus confidently, instead of "beginning with the word books, and ending with the "word flies," as formerly it stood: Read also, "containing the entire sum of one thousand seven "hundred and fifty-four verses," instead of "one thousand and twelve lines;" such being the initial and final words, and such the true and entire contents of this poem.

Thou art to know, reader! that the first edition thereof, like that of Milton, was never seen by the author (though living, and not blind): The editor himself confessed as much in his preface: And no two poems were ever published in so arbitrary a manner. The editor of this had as boldly suppressed whole passages, yea the entire last book, as the editor of Paradise Lost, added and augmented. Milton himself gave but ten books, his editor twelve; this author gave four books, his editor only three. But we have happily done justice to both; and presume we shall live, in this our last labour, as long as in any of our others. BENTLEY.

APPENDIX.

I.

PREFACE

Prefixed to the five first imperfect Editions of the DUNCIAD, in three Books, printed at DUBLIN and LONDON, in octavo and duodecimo, 1727.

THE PUBLISHER (a) TO THE READER.

It will be found a true observation, though somewhat surprising, that when any scandal is vented against a man of the highest distinction and character, either in the state or literature, the public in general afford it a most quiet reception: and the larger part accept it as favourably as if it were some kindness done to themselves: whereas, if a known scoundrel or blockhead but chanced to be touched upon, a whole legion is up in arms, and it becomes the common cause of all scribblers, and printers whatsoever.

Not to search too deeply into the reason hereof, I will only observe as a fact, that every week for these two months past, the town has been persecuted with (b) pamphlets, advertisements, letters, and weekly essays, not only against the wit and writings, but against the character and person of Mr. Pope. And that of all those men who have received pleasure from his works, which by modest computation may be about a (c) hundred thousand in these kingdoms of England and Ireland (not to mention Jersey, Guernsey, the Orcades, those in the new world, and foreigners who have translated him into their languages); of all this number not a man hath stood up to say one word in his defence.

(a) The Publisher] Who he was is uncertain; but Edward Ward tells us, in his Preface to Durgen, "that "most judges are of opinion this preface is not of Eng-" lish extraction, but Hibernian," &c. He means it was written by Dr. Swift, who, whether publisher or not, may be said in a sort to be author of the poem. For when he, together with Mr. Pope (for reasons specified in the preface to their Miscellanies) determined to own the most trifling pieces in which they had any hand, and to destroy all that remained in their power; the first sketch of this poem was snatched from the fire by Dr. Swift, who persuaded his friend to proceed in it, and to him it was therefore inscribed. But the occasion of printing it was as follows:

There was published in those Miscellanies, a Treatise of the Bathos, or Art of Sinking in Poetry, in which was a chapter, where the species of bad writers were ranged in classes, and initial letters of names prefixed, for the most part at random. But such was the number of poets eminent in that art, that some one or other took every letter to himself. All fell into so violent a fury, that for half a year, or more, the common newspapers (in most of which they had some property, as being hired writers) were filled with the most abusive falsehoods and scurrilities they could possibly devise; a liberty no ways to be wondered at in those people, and in those papers, that, for many years, during the uncontrouled license of the press, had aspersed almost all the great characters of the age; and this with impunity, their own persons and names being utterly secret and obscure. This gave Mr. Pope the thought, that he had now some opportunity of doing good, by detecting and dragging into light these common enemies of mankind; since to invalidate this universal slander, it sufficed to show what contemptible men were the authors of it. He was not without hopes, that by manifesting the dulness of those who had only malice to recommend them; either the booksellers would not find their account in employing them, or the men themselves, when discovered, want courage to proceed in so unlawful an occupation. This it was that gave birth to the Dunciad; and he thought it an happiness, that by the late flood of slander on himself, he had acquired such a peculiar right over their names, as was necessary to his design.

(b) Pamphlets, advertisements, &c.] See the list of those anonymous papers, with their dates and authors annexed, inserted before the poem.

(c) about a hundred thousand] It is surprising with what stupidity this preface, which is almost a continued irony, was taken by those authors. All such passages as these were understood by Curll, Cook, Gibber, and others, to be serious. Hear the Laureate (Letter to Mr. Pope, p. 9.) "Though I grant the Dunciad a better "poem of its kind than ever was writ; yet, when I "read it with those vain-glorious encumbrances of Notes "and Remarks upon it, &c.—it is amazing, that you, "who have writ with such masterly spirit upon the "ruling passion, should be so blind a slave to your own, "as not to see how far a low avarice of praise," &c. (taking it for granted that the notes of Scriblerus and others, were the author's own.)

The only exception is the (d) author of the following poem, who doubtleſs had either a better inſight into the grounds of this clamour, or a better opinion of Mr. Pope's integrity, joined with a greater perſonal love for him, than any other of his numerous friends and admirers.

Farther, that he was in his peculiar intimacy, appears from the knowledge he manifeſts of the moſt private authors of all the anonymous pieces againſt him, and from his having in this poem attacked (e) no man living, who had not before printed, or publiſhed ſome ſcandal againſt this gentleman.

How I came poſſeſt of it, is no concern to the reader: but it would have been a wrong to him had I detained the publication; ſince thoſe names which are its chief ornaments die off daily ſo faſt, as muſt render it too ſoon unintelligible If it provoke the author to give us a more perfect edition, I have my end.

Who he is I cannot ſay, and (which is a great pity) there is certainly (f) nothing in his ſtyle and manner of writing, which can diſtinguiſh or diſcover him: for if it bears any reſemblance to that of Mr. Pope, it is not improbable but it might be done on purpoſe, with a view to have it paſs for his. But by the frequency of his alluſions to Virgil, and a laboured (not to ſay affected) ſhortneſs in imitation of him, I ſhould think him more an admirer of the Roman poet than of the Grecian, and in that not of the ſame taſte with his friend.

I have been well informed, that this work was the labour of full (g) ſix years of his life, and that he wholly retired himſelf from all the avocations and pleaſures of the world, to attend diligently to its correction and perfection; and ſix years more he intended to beſtow upon it, as would ſeem by this verſe of Statius, which was cited at the head of his manuſcript:

" Oh mihi biſſenos multum vigilata per annos,
" Duncia! (b)"

Hence alſo we learn the true title of the poem: which with the ſame certainty as we call that of Homer the Iliad, of Virgil the Æneid, of Camoens the Luſiad, we may pronounce, could have been, and can be, no other than

THE DUNCIAD.

It is ſtyled heroic, as being doubly ſo; not only with reſpect to its nature, which according to the beſt rules of the ancients, and ſtricteſt ideas of the moderns, is critically ſuch; but alſo with regard to the heroical diſpoſition and high courage of the writer, who dared to ſtir up ſuch a formidable, irritable, and implacable race of mortals.

There may ariſe ſome obſcurity in chronology from the names in the poem, by the inevitable removal of ſome authors, and inſertion of others in their niches. For whoever will conſider the unity of the whole deſign, will be ſenſible, that the poem was not made for theſe authors, but theſe authors for the poem. I ſhould judge that they were clapped in as they roſe, freſh and freſh, and changed from day to day; in like manner as when the old boughs wither, we thruſt new ones into a chimney.

I would not have the reader too much troubled, or anxious, if he cannot decypher them: ſince when he ſhall have found them out, he will probably know no more of the perſons than before.

Yet we judged it better to preſerve them as they are, than to change them for fictitious names; by which the ſatire would only be multiplied, and applied to many inſtead of one. Had the hero, for inſtance, been called Codrus, how many would have affirmed him to have been Mr. T. Mr. E. Sir R. B. &c. But now all that unjuſt ſcandal is ſaved by calling him by a name, which, by good luck, happens to be that of a real perſon.

(d) The author of the following poem, &c.] A very plain irony, ſpeaking of Mr. Pope himſelf.

(e) The publiſher in theſe words went a little too far; but it is certain, whatever names the reader finds that are unknown to him, are of ſuch; and the exception is only of two or three, whoſe dulneſs, impudent ſcurrility, or ſelf-conceit, all mankind agreed to have juſtly entitled them to a place in the Dunciad.

(f) There is certainly nothing in his ſtyle, &c.] This irony had ſmall effect in concealing the author. The Dunciad, imperfect as it was, had not been publiſhed two days, but the whole town gave it to Mr. Pope.

(g) the labour of full ſix years, &c.] This alſo was boneſtly and ſeriouſly believed by divers gentlemen of the Dunciad. J. Ralph, pref. to Sawney, " We are told " it was the labour of ſix years, with the utmoſt aſſiduity " and application: It is no great compliment to the " author's ſenſe, to have employed ſo large a part of his " life, &c" So alſo Ward, pref. to Durgen, " The " Dunciad, as the publiſher very wiſely confeſſes, coſt " the author ſix years retirement from all the pleaſures " of life; though it is ſomewhat difficult to conceive, " from either its bulk or beauty, that it could be ſo long " in hatching, &c. But the length of time and cloſeneſs " of application were mentioned, to prepoſſeſs the reader " with a good opinion of it."

They juſt as well underſtood what Scriblerus ſaid of the poem.

II.

A LIST OF BOOKS, PAPERS, AND VERSES,

In which our Author was abuſed, before the Publication of the DUNCIAD; with the true Names of the Authors.

REFLECTIONS critical and ſatirical on a late Rhapſody, called, An Eſſay on Criticiſm. By Mr. Dennis, printed by B. Lintot, price 6 d.

(b) The preface to Curll's key, p. 3. took this word to be really in Statius: " By a quibble on the word " Duncia, the Dunciad is formed." Mr. Ward alſo follows him in the ſame opinion.

A New Rehearſal, or Bays the younger: containing an Examen of Mr. Rowe's plays, and a word or two on Mr. Pope's Rape of the Lock, Anon. [by Charles Gildon] printed for J. Roberts, 1714, price 1 s.

Homerides, or a Letter to Mr. Pope, occaſioned by his intended tranſlation of Homer. By Sir Iliad Doggrel. [Tho. Burnet and G. Ducket Eſquires] printed for W. Wilkins, 1715, price 9 d.

Æſop at the Bear-garden; a Viſion, in imitation of the Temple of Fame, by Mr. Preſton. Sold by John Morphew, 1715, price 6 d.

The Catholic Poet; or Proteſtant Barnaby's Sorrowful Lamentation; a Ballad about Homer's Iliad. By Mrs. Centlivre and others, 1715, price 1 d.

An Epilogue to a Puppet-ſhow at Bath, concerning the ſaid Iliad. By George Ducket, Eſq, printed by E. Curll.

A complete Key to the What-d'ye-call-it. Anon. [by Griffin a Player, ſupervifed by Mr. Th—] printed by J. Roberts, 1715.

A true character of Mr. P. and his writings, in a letter to a friend. Anon. [Dennis] printed for S. Popping, 1716, price 3 d.

The Confederates, a Farce. By Joſeph Gay, [J. D. Breval] printed for R. Burleigh, 1717, price 1 s.

Remarks upon Mr. Pope's tranſlation of Homer; with two letters concerning the Windſor Foreſt, and the Temple of Fame. By Mr. Dennis, printed for E. Curll, 1717, price 1 s. 6 d.

Satires on the Tranſlators of Homer, Mr. P. and Mr. T. Anon. [Bez. Morris] 1717, price 6 d.

The Triumvirate: or a Letter from Palæmon to Celia at Bath. Anon. [Leonard Welſted] 1711, folio, price 1 s.

The Battle of Poets, an heroic poem. By Tho. Cooke, printed for J. Roberts, folio, 1725.

Memoirs of Lilliput. Anon. [Eliz. Heywood] 8vo, printed in 1727.

An Eſſay on Criticiſm, in proſe. By the author of the Critical Hiſtory of England [J. Oldmixon] 8vo, printed 1728.

Gulliveriana and Alexandriana; with an ample preface and critique on Swift and Pope's Miſcellanies. By Jonathan Smedley, printed by J. Roberts, 8vo, 1728.

Characters of the Times; or an account of the writings, characters, &c. of ſeveral gentlemen libelled, by S— and P—, in a late Miſcellany, 8vo, 1728.

Remarks on Mr. Pope's Rape of the Lock, in letters to a friend. By Mr. Dennis; written in 1724, though not printed till 1728, 8vo.

Verſes, Letters, Eſſays, or Advertiſements, in the public Prints.

Britiſh Journal, Nov. 25, 1727. A letter on Swift and Pope's Miſcellanies. [Writ by M. Concannen.]

Daily Journal, March 18, 1728. A letter by Philomauri. James-Moore Smith.

Daily Journal, March 29. A letter about Therſites; accuſing the author of diſaffection to the Government, By James-Moore Smith.

Miſt's Weekly Journal, March 30. An Eſſay on the Arts of a Poet's ſinking in reputation; or, a Supplement to the Art of ſinking in Poetry. [Suppoſed by Mr. Theobald.]

Daily Journal, April 3. A Letter under the name of Philo-ditto. By James-Moore Smith.

Flying Poſt, April 4. A letter againſt Gulliver and Mr. P. [By Mr. Oldmixion.]

Daily Journal, April 5. An Auction of Goods at Twickenham. By James Moore Smith.

The Flying Poſt, April 6. A Fragment of a Treatiſe upon Swift and Pope. By Mr Oldmixon

The Senator, April 9. On the ſame. By Edward Roome.

Daily Journal, April 8. Advertiſement by James-Moore Smith

Flying Poſt, April 13. Verſes againſt Dr. Swift, and againſt Mr. P—'s Homer. By J. Oldmixon.

Daily Journal, April 23. Letter about the tranſlation of the character of Therſites in Homer. By Thomas Cooke, &c.

Miſt's Weekly Journal, April 27. A Letter of Lewis Theobald.

Daily Journal, May 11. A Letter againſt Mr. P. at large. Anon. [John Dennis.]

All theſe were afterwards reprinted, in a pamphlet, intituled, A Collection of all the Verſes, Eſſays, Letters, and Advertiſements occaſioned by Mr. Pope and Swift's Miſcellanies, prefaced by Concannen, Anonymous, 8vo, and printed for A. Moore, 1728, price 1 s. Others of an elder date, having lain as waſte paper many years, were, upon the publication of the Dunciad, brought out, and their authors betrayed by the mercenary booksellers (in hopes of ſome poſſibility of vending a few) by advertiſing them in this manner.—"The "Confederates, a Farce. By Capt. Breval (for "which he was put into the Dunciad). An Epi- "logue to Powell's Puppet-ſhow. By Col. Ducket "(for which he was put into the Dunciad). Eſ- "ſays, &c. By Sir Richard Blackmore. (N. B. "It was for a paſſage of this book that Sir Richard "was put into the Dunciad.") And ſo of others.

After the Dunciad, 1728.

An Eſſay on the Dunciad, 8vo, printed for J. Roberts. [In this book, p. 9. it was formally declared, "That the complaint of the aforeſaid "libels and advertiſements was forged and untrue: "that all mouths had been ſilent, except in Mr. "Pope's praiſe; and nothing againſt him publiſh- "ed, but by Mr. Theobald."]

Sawney, in blank verſe, occaſioned by the Dunciad; with a critique on that poem. By J. Ralph [a perſon never mentioned in it at firſt, but inſerted after], printed for J. Roberts, 8vo.

A complete Key to the Dunciad. By E. Curll, 12mo, price 6 d.

A ſecond and third edition of the ſame, with additions, 12mo.

The Popiad. By E. Curll, extracted from J. Dennis, Sir Richard Blackmore, &c. 12mo. price 6 d.

The Curliad. By the ſame E. Curll.

The Female Dunciad. Collected by the ſame

Mr. Curll, 12mo. price 6 d. With the Metamorphoſis of P. into a ſtinging Nettle. By Mr. Foxton, 12mo.

The Metamorphoſis of Scriblerus into Snarlerus. By. J. Smedley, printed for A. Moore, folio, price 6 d.

The Dunciad diſſected. By Curll and Mrs. Thomas, 12mo.

An Eſſay on the Taſte and Writings of the preſent Times. Said to be writ by a gentleman of C. C. C Oxon, printed for J. Roberts, 8vo.

The Arts of Logic and Rhetoric, partly taken from Bouhours, with new Reflections, &c. By John Oldmixon, 8vo.

Remarks on the Dunciad. By Mr. Dennis, dedicated to Theobald, 8vo.

A Supplement to the Profund. Anon. by Matthew Concannen, 8vo.

Miſt's Weekly Journal, June 8. A long letter, ſigned W. A. Writ by ſome or other of the club of Theobald, Dennis, Moore, Concannen, Cooke, who for ſome time held conſtant weekly meetings for thoſe kind of performances.

Daily Journal, June 11. A letter ſigned Philoſcriblerus, on the name of Pope.—Letter to Mr. Theobald, in verſe, ſigned B. M. [Bezaleel Morris] againſt Mr. P—. Many other little epigrams, about this time in the ſame papers, by James Moore, and others.

Miſt's Journal, June 22. A letter by Lewis Theobald.

Flying Poſt, Auguſt 8. Letter on Pope and Swift

Daily Journal, Auguſt 8. Letter charging the author of the Dunciad with treaſon.

Durgen: A plain ſatire on a pompous ſatiriſt. By Edward Ward, with a little of James Moore.

Apollo's Maggot in his cups. By E. Ward.

Gulliveriana Secunda. Being a collection of many of the libels in the newſpapers, like the former volume, under the ſame title, by Smedley. Advertiſed in the Craftſman, Nov. 9. 1728, with this remarkable promiſe, that "any thing which "any body ſhould ſend as Mr. Pope's or Dr. "Swift's, ſhould be inſerted and publiſhed as "theirs."

Pope Alexander's ſupremacy and infallibility examined, &c. By George Ducket and John Dennis, 4to.

Dean Jonathan's Paraphraſe on the fourth chapter of Geneſis. Writ by E. Roome, folio, 1729.

Labeo: A paper of verſes by Leonard Welſted, which after came into one epiſtle, and was publiſhed by James Moore, 4to, 1730. Another part of it came out in Welſted's own name, under the juſt title of Dulneſs and Scandal, folio, 1731.

There have been ſince publiſhed,

Verſes on the imitator of Horace. By a lady [or between a lady, a lord, and a court 'ſquire] printed for J. Roberts, folio.

An epiſtle from a nobleman to a doctor of divinity, from Hampton-court [Lord H—y.] Printed for J. Roberts alſo, folio.

A Letter from Mr. Cibber to Mr. Pope. Printed for W. Lewis in Covent-garden, 8vo.

III.

ADVERTISEMENT

To the firſt Edition with Notes, in 4to, 1729.

It will be ſufficient to ſay of this edition, that the reader has here a much more correct and complete copy of the Dunciad, than has hitherto appeared. I cannot anſwer but ſome miſtakes may have ſlipt into it, but a vaſt number of others will be prevented by the names being now not only ſet at length, but juſtified by the authorities and reaſons given. I make no doubt, the author's own motive to uſe real rather than feigned names, was his care to preſerve the innocent from any falſe application; whereas, in the former editions, which had no more than the initial letters, he was made, by keys printed here, to hurt the inoffenſive, and (what was worſe) to abuſe his friends, by an impreſſion at Dublin.

The commentary which attends this poem, was ſent me from ſeveral hands, and conſequently muſt be unequally written; yet will have one advantage over moſt commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures, or at a remote diſtance of time: and the reader cannot but derive one pleaſure from the very obſcurity of the perſons it treats of, that it partakes of the nature of a ſecret, which moſt people love to be let into, though the men or the things be ever ſo inconſiderable or trivial.

Of the perſons it was judged proper to give ſome account: for ſince it is only in this monument that they muſt expect to ſurvive (and here ſurvive they will, as long as the Engliſh tongue ſhall remain ſuch as it was in the reigns of Queen Anne and King George), it ſeemed but humanity to beſtow a word or two upon each, juſt to tell what he was, what he writ, when he lived, and when he died.

If a word or two more are added upon the chief offenders, it is only as a paper pinned upon the breaſt, to mark the enormities for which they ſuffered; leſt the correction only ſhould be remembered, and the crime forgotten.

In ſome articles it was thought ſufficient, barely to tranſcribe from Jacob, Curll, and other writers of their own rank, who were much better acquainted with them than any of the authors of this comment can pretend to be. Moſt of them had drawn each other's characters on certain occaſions; but the few here inſerted, are all that could be ſaved from the general deſtruction of ſuch works.

Of the part of Scriblerus I need ſay nothing; his manner is well enough known, and approved by all but thoſe who are too much concerned to be judges.

IV.

ADVERTISEMENT

To the firſt Edition of the fourth Book of the Dunciad, when printed ſeparately in the Year 1742.

We apprehend it can be deemed no injury to the author of the three firſt books of the Dunciad, that we publiſh this fourth. It was found merely by accident, in taking a ſurvey of the library of a late eminent nobleman; but in ſo blotted a condition, and in ſo many detached pieces, as plainly ſhowed it to be not only incorrect, but unfiniſhed. That the author of the three firſt books had a deſign to extend and complete his poem in this manner, appears from the diſſertation prefixed to it, where it is ſaid, that the deſign is more extenſive, and that we may expect other epiſodes to complete it: And from the declaration in the argument to the third book, that the accompliſhment of the prophecies therein would be the theme hereafter of a greater Dunciad. But whether or no he be the author of this, we declare ourſelves ignorant. If he be, we are no more to be blamed for the publication of it, than Tucca and Varius for that of the laſt ſix books of the Æneid, though perhaps inferior to the former.

If any perſon be poſſeſſed of a more perfect copy of this work, or of any other fragments of it, and will communicate them to the publiſher, we ſhall make the next edition more complete: In which we alſo promiſe to inſert any criticiſms that ſhall be publiſhed (if at all to the purpoſe) with the names of the authors; or any letters ſent us (though not to the purpoſe) ſhall yet be printed under the title of "Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum;" which, together with ſome others of the ſame kind, formerly laid by for that end, may make no unpleaſant addition to the future impreſſions of this poem.

V.
ADVERTISEMENT

To the complete Edition of 1743.

I HAVE long had a deſign of giving ſome ſort of notes on the works of this poet. Before I had the happineſs of his acquaintance, I had written a commentary on his Eſſay on Man, and have ſince finiſhed another on the Eſſay on Criticiſm. There was one already on the Dunciad, which had met with general approbation: But I ſtill thought ſome additions were wanting (of a more ſerious kind) to the humorous notes of Scriblerus, and even to thoſe written by Mr. Cleland, Dr. Arbuthnot, and others. I had lately the pleaſure to paſs ſome months with the author in the country, where I prevailed upon him to do what I had long deſired, and favour me with his explanation of ſeveral paſſages in his works. It happened, that juſt at that juncture was publiſhed a ridiculous book againſt him, full of perſonal reflections, which furniſhed him with a lucky opportunity of improving this poem, by giving it the only thing it wanted, a more conſiderable hero. He was always ſenſible of its defect in that particular, and owned he had let it paſs with the hero it had, purely for want of a better, not entertaining the leaſt expectation that ſuch an one was reſerved for this poſt, as has ſince obtained the laurel: But ſince that had happened, he could no longer deny this juſtice either to him or the Dunciad.

And yet I will venture to ſay, there was another motive which had ſtill more weight with our author: This perſon was one, who from every folly (not to ſay vice) of which another would be aſhamed, has conſtantly derived a vanity! and therefore was the man in the world who would leaſt be hurt by it. W. W.

VI.
ADVERTISEMENT

Printed in the Journals, 1730.

WHEREAS, upon occaſion of certain pieces relating to the gentlemen of the Dunciad, ſome have been willing to ſuggeſt, as if they looked upon them as an abuſe: We can do no leſs than own it is our opinion, that to call theſe gentlemen bad authors is no ſort of abuſe, but a great truth. We cannot alter this opinion without ſome reaſon; but we promiſe to do it in reſpect to every perſon who thinks it an injury to be repreſented as no wit or poet, provided he procures a certificate of his being really ſuch, from any three of his companions in the Dunciad, or from Mr. Dennis, ſingly, who is eſteemed equal to any three of the number.

VII.
A PARALLEL

Of the Characters of MR. DRYDEN and MR. POPE, as drawn by certain of their Contemporaries.

MR. DRYDEN, his Politics, Religion, Morals.

MR DRYDEN is a mere renegado from monarchy, poetry, and good ſenſe (a). A true republican ſon of monarchical church (b). A republican atheiſt (c),

(a) Milbourne on Dryden's Virgil, 8vo, 1698, p. 6.
(b) Page 38. (c) Page 192.

VII.
A PARALLEL

Of the Characters of MR. POPE and MR. DRYDEN, as drawn by certain of their Contemporaries.

MR. POPE, his Politics, Religion, Morals.

MR. Pope is an open and mortal enemy to his country and the commonwealth of learning (a). Some call him a Popiſh whig, which is directly

(a) Dennis, Rem. on the Rape of the Locke, Pref. p. 12.

Dryden was from the beginning an ἀλλοτρίοεπίλλος, and I doubt not will continue so to the last (d).

In the poem called Absalom and Achitophel, are notoriously traduced the King, the Queen, the Lords and Gentlemen, not only their honourable persons exposed, but the whole Nation and its Representatives notoriously libelled. It is scandalum magnatum, yea of Majesty itself (e).

He looks upon God's Gospel as a foolish fable, like the Pope, to whom he is a pitiful purveyor (f). His very Christianity may be questioned (g). He ought to expect more severity than other men, as he is most unmerciful in his own reflections on others (h): with as good a right as his Holiness, he sets up for poetical infallibility (i).

Mr Dryden only a Versifier.

His whole libel is all bad matter, beautified (which is all that can be said of it) with good metre (k). Mr. Dryden's genius did not appear in any thing more than his versification, and whether he is to be ennobled for that only, is a question (l).

Mr Dryden's Virgil.

Tonson calls it Dryden's Virgil, to show that this is not that Virgil so admired in the Augustian age; but a Virgil of another stamp, a silly, impertinent, nonsensical writer. None but a Bavius, a Mævius, or a Bathyllus, carped at Virgil (m); and none but such unthinking vermin admire his translator (n). It is true, soft and easy lines might become Ovid's Epistles or Art of Love—But Virgil, who is all great and majestic, &c. requires strength of lines, weight of words, and closeness of expression; not an ambling muse running on carpet ground, and shod as lightly as a Newmarket racer.—He has numberless faults in his author's meaning, and in propriety of expression (o).

Mr. Dryden understood no Greek nor Latin.

Mr. Dryden was once, I have heard, at Westminster school: Dr Busby would have whipt him for so childish a paraphrase (p). The meanest pedant in England would whip a lubber of twelve for construing so absurdly (q). The translator is mad: every line betrays his stupidity (r). The faults are innumerable, and convince me that Mr. Dryden did not, or would not understand his author (s). This shows how fit Mr. D. may be to inconsistent (b). Pope, as a Papist, must be a tory and high flyer (c). He is both whig and tory (d).

He hath made it his custom to cackle to more than one party in their own sentiments (e).

In his miscellanies, the persons abused are, The King, the Queen, his late Majesty, both Houses of Parliament, the Privy-Council, the Bench of Bishops, the established Church, the present Minister, &c. To make sense of some passages, they must be construed into Royal Scandal (f).

He is a Popish rhymester, bred up with a contempt of the sacred writings (g). His religion allows him to destroy heretics, not only with his pen, but with fire and sword; and such were all those unhappy wits whom he sacrificed to his accursed Popish principles (h). It deserved vengeance to suggest, that Mr. Pope had less infallibility, than his namesake at Rome (i).

Mr. Pope only a Versifier.

The smooth numbers of the Dunciad are all that recommend it, nor has it any other merit (k). It must be owned that he hath got a notable knack of rhyming and writing smooth verse (l).

Mr. Pope's Homer.

The Homer which Lintot prints, does not talk like Homer, but like Pope; and he who translated him, one would swear, had a hill in Tipperary for his Parnassus, and a puddle in some bog for his Hippocrene (m). He has no admirers, among those that can distinguish, discern, and judge (n).

He hath a knack at smooth verse, but without either genius or good sense, or any tolerable knowledge of English. The qualities which distinguish Homer are the beauties of his diction, and the harmony of his versification—But this little author, who is so much in vogue, has neither sense in his thoughts, nor English in his expressions (o).

Mr. Pope understood no Greek.

He hath undertaken to translate Homer from the Greek, of which he knows not one word, into English, of which he understands as little (p). I

(d) Milbourne on Dryden's Virgil, 8vo, 1698, p. 8.
(e) Whip and Key, 4to, printed for R. Janeway, 1682. Pref. (f) Ibid. (g) Milbourne, p. 9. (h) Ibid. p. 175. (i) Pag. 39. (k) Whip and Key, Pref. (l) Oldmixon, Essay on Criticism, p. 84. (m) Milbourne, p. 2. (n) Page 35.
(o) Milb. p. 22, and 192. (p) Page 72.
(q) Page 203. (r) Page 78. (s) Page 206.

(b) Dunciad dissected. (c) Pref. to Gulliveriana.
(d) Dennis, Character of Mr. P.
(e) Theobald, Letter in Mist's Journal, June 22, 1728.
(f) List, at the end of a Collection of Verses, Letters, Advertisements, 8vo, printed for A. Moore, 1728, and the Preface to it, p. 6. (g) Dennis's Remarks on Homer, p. 27. (h) Preface to Guiliveriana, p. 11.
(i) Dedication to the Collection of Verses, Letters, &c. p. 9. (k) Mist's Journal of June 8. 1728. (l) Character of Mr. P. and Dennis on Hom. (m) Dennis's Remarks on Pope's Homer, p. 12. (n) Ib. p. 14.
(o) Character of Mr. P. p. 17. and Remarks on Homer, p. 91. (p) Dennis's Remarks on Homer, p. 12.

tranſlate Homer! A miſtake in a ſingle letter might fall on the printer well enough, but ἴχωρ for ἰχῶρ muſt be the error of the author: nor had he art enough to correct it at the preſs (t). Mr. Dryden writes for the Court Ladies—He writes for the ladies, and not for uſe (u).

The tranſlator puts in a little burleſque now and then into Virgil, for a ragout to his cheated ſubſcribers (w).

Mr Dryden tricked his Subſcribers.

I wonder that any man, who could not but be conſcious of his own unfitneſs for it, ſhould go to amuſe the learned world with ſuch an undertaking! A man ought to value his reputation more than money; and not to hope that thoſe who can read for themſelves, will be impoſed upon, merely by a partiality and unſeaſonably celebrated name (x). "Poetis quidlibet audendi" ſhall be Mr. Dryden's motto, though it ſhould extend to picking of pockets (y).

Names beſtowed on Mr. Dryden.

An Ape.] A crafty ape dreſt up in a gawdy gown—Whips put into an ape's paw, to play pranks with—None but apiſh and Papiſh brats will heed him (z).

An Aſs.] A camel will take upon him no more burden than is ſufficient for his ſtrength, but there is another beaſt that crouches under all (a).

A Frog.] Poet ſquab endued with poet Maro's ſpirit! an ugly, croaking kind of vermin, which would ſwell to the bulk of an ox (b).

A Coward.] A Clinias or a Damætas, or a man of Mr. Dryden's own courage (c).

A Knave.] Mr. Dryden has heard of Paul the knave of Jeſus Chriſt: And if I miſtake not, I've read ſomewhere of John Dryden, ſervant to his Majeſty (d).

A Fool.] Had he not been ſuch a ſelf-conceited fool (e)—Some great poets are poſitive blockheads (f).

A Thing.] So little a thing as Mr. Dryden (g).

(t) Milb. p. 19. (u) Page 144, 190. (w) Page 67. (x) Page 192. (y) Page 125. (z) Whip and Key, Pref. (a) Milb. p. 105. (b) Page 11. (c) Page 176. (d) Page 57. (e) Whip and Key, Pr. (f) Milb. p. 34. (g) Ibid. p. 35.

wonder how this gentleman would look, ſhould it be diſcovered, that he has not tranſlated ten verſes together in any book of Homer with juſtice to the poet, and yet he dares reproach his fellow writers with not underſtanding Greek (q). He has ſtuck ſo little to his original, as to have his knowledge in Greek called in queſtion (r) I ſhould be glad to know which it is of all Homer's excellencies which has ſo delighted the ladies, and the gentlemen who judge like ladies (s).

But he has a notable talent at burleſque; his genius ſlides ſo naturally into it, that he hath burleſqued Homer without deſigning it (t).

Mr. Pope tricked his Subſcribers.

It is indeed ſomewhat bold, and almoſt prodigious, for a ſingle man to undertake ſuch a work: But it is too late to diſſuade by demonſtrating the madneſs of the project. The ſubſcribers expectations have been raiſed in proportion to what their pockets have been drained of (u). Pope has been concerned in jobs, and hired out his name to bookſellers (w).

Names beſtowed on Mr. Pope.

An Ape.] Let us take the initial letter of his Chriſtian name, and initial and final letters of his ſurname, viz. APE. and they give you the ſame idea of an ape as his face (x), &c.

An Aſs.] It is my duty to pull off the lion's ſkin from this little aſs (y).

A Frog.] A ſquab ſhort gentleman—a little creature that, like the frog in the fable, ſwells, and is angry that it is not allowed to be as big as an ox (z).

A Coward.] A lurking, way-laying coward (a).

A Knave.] He is one whom God and nature have marked for want of common honeſty (b).

A Fool.] Great fools will be chriſtened by the names of great poets, and Pope will be called Homer (c).

A Thing.] A little abject thing (d).

(q) Daily Journal, April 23. 1728 (r) Suppl. to the Profound, Pref. (s) Oldmixon, Eſſay on Criticiſm, p. 66. (t) Dennis's Remarks, p 28. (u) Homerides, p. 1, &c. (w) Britiſh Journal, Nov. 25. 1727. (x) Dennis, Daily Journal, May 11. 1728. (y) Dennis's Rem. on Hom. Pref. (z) Dennis's Rem. on the Rape of the Lock, Pref. p. 9. (a) Char. of Mr. P. p. 3. (b) Ibid. (c) Dennis's Rem. on Homer, p 37. (d) Ibid. p. 8.

INDEX

OF PERSONS CELEBRATED IN THIS POEM.

The first Number shows the Book, the second the Verse.

A

Ambrose Philips, i. 105. iii. 326.
Attila, iii. 92.
Alaric, iii. 91.
Alma Mater. iii. 338.
Annius, an antiquary, iv. 347.
Arnal, William, ii. 315.

B

Blackmore, Sir Richard, i. 104. ii. 268.
Befaleel Morris, ii. 126. iii. 168.
Banks, i. 146.
Broome, ibid.
Bond, ii. 126.
Brown, iii. 28.
Bladen, iv. 560.
Budgel, Esq. ii. 397.
Bentley, Richard, iv. 201.
Bentley, Thomas, ii. 205.
Boyer, Abel, ii. 413.
Bland, a Gazetteer, i. 231.
Breval, J. Durant, ii. 126. 238.
Benlowes, iii. 21.
Bavius, ibid.
Burmannus, iv. 237.
Benson, William, Esq. iii. 325. iv. 110.
Burgersdick, iv. 198.
Bœotians, iii. 50.
Bruin and Bears, i. 101.
Bear and fiddle, i. 224.

C

Cibber, Colley, hero of the poem, passim.
Cibber, jun. iii. 139. 326.
Caxton, William, i. 145.
Curll, Edm. i. 40. ii. 3. 58. 167, &c.
Cooke, Thomas, ii. 138.
Concanen, Matthew, ii. 299.
Centlivre, Susannah, ii. 411.
Cæsar in Egypt, i. 251.
Chi Ho-am-ti, emperor of China, iii. 75.
Crouzaz, iv. 198.
Codrus, ii. 144.

D

De Foe, Daniel, i. 103. ii. 147.
De Foe, Norton, ii. 415.
De Lyra, or Harpsfield, i. 153.
Dennis, John, i. 106. ii. 239. iii. 173.
Dunton, John, ii. 144.
D'Ursey, iii. 146.
Dutchmen, ii. 405. iii. 51.
Doctors, at White's, i. 203.
Douglas, iv. 394.

E

Eusden, Laurence, poet laureat, i. 104.
Eliza Haywood, ii. 157, &c.

F

Fleckno, Richard, ii. 2.
Faustus, Dr. iii. 233.
Fleetwood, iv. 326.
Free Masons, iv. 576.
French cooks, iv. 353.

G

Gildon, Charles. i. 296.
Goode, Barn. iii. 153.
Goths, iii. 90.
Gazetteers, i. 215. ii. 314.
Gregorians and Gormogons, iv. 575.

H

Holland, Philemon, i. 154.
Hearne, Thomas, iii. 185.
Horneck, Philip, iii. 152.
Heywood, Eliza, ii. 157, &c.
Howard, Edward, i. 297.
Henley, John, the orator, ii. 2. 425. iii. 199. &c.
Huns, iii. 90.
Heywood, John, i. 98.
Harpsfield, i. 153.
Hays, iv. 560.

J

John, King, i. 352.
James I. iv. 176.
Jacob, Giles, iii. 149.
Janssen, a gamester, iv. 326.

K

Knight, Robert, iv. 561.
Kuster, iv. 257.

L

Lintot, Bernard, i. 40. ii. 53.

Laws, William, ii. 413.
Log, King, i. lin. ult.
M
More, James, ii. 50, &c.
Morris, Beſaleel, ii. 126. iii. 168.
Miſt, Nathanael, i. 208.
Milbourne, Luke, ii. 349.
Mahomet, iii. 97.
Meers, William, ii, 125. iii. 28.
Motteux, Peter, ii. 412.
Monks, iii. 52.
Mandevil, ii. 414.
Morgan, ibid.
Montalto, iv. 105.
Mummius, an antiquary, iv. 371.
N
Newcastle, Ducheſs of, i. 141.
Nonjuror, i. 253.
O
Ogilvy, John, i. 141. 328.
Oldmixon, John, ii. 283.
Ozell, John, i. 285.
Oſtrogoths, iii. 93.
Omar, the Caliph, iii. 81.
Owls, i. 271. 290. iii. 54.
Owls, Athenian, iv. 362.
Oſborne, bookſeller, ii. 167.
Oſborne, Mother, ii. 312.
P.
Prynn, William, i. 103.
Philips, Ambroſe, i. 105. iii. 326.
Paridel, iv. 341.
Q
Quarles, Francis, i. 140.
Querno, Camillo, ii. 15.
R
Ralph, James, i. 216. iii. 165.
Roome, Edward, iii. 152.
Ripley, Tho. iii. 327.
Ridpath, George, i. 208. ii. 149.
Roper, Abel, ii. 149.
Rich, iii. 261.
S
Settle, Elkanah, i. 90. 146. iii. 37.
Smedley, Jonathan, ii. 291, &c.
Shadwell, Thomas, i. 240. iii. 22.
Scholiaſts, iv. 231.
Silenus, iv. 492.
Sooterkins, i. 126.
T
Tate, i. 105. 258.
Theobald, or Tibbald, i. 133. 286.
Tutchin, John, ii. 148.
Toland, John, ii. 399. iii. 212.
Tindal, Dr. ii. 399. iii. 212. iv. 492.
Taylor, John, the water-poet, iii. 19.
V
Vandals, iii. 86.
Viſigoths, iii. 94.
W
Walpole, Sir Robert, praiſed by our author, ii. 314.
Withers, George, i. 296.
Wynkin de Werde, i. 149.
Ward, Edw. i. 233. iii. 34.
Webſter, ii. 258.
Whitfield, ibid.
Warner, Thomas, ii. 125.
Wilkins, ibid.
Welſted, Leonard, ii. 207. iii. 170.
Woolſton, Thomas, iii. 212.
Wormius, iii. 188.
Waſſe, iv. 237.
Walker, hat-bearer to Bentley, iv. 206. 273.

INDEX

OF MATTERS CONTAINED IN THIS POEM AND NOTES.

THE FIRST NUMBER DENOTES THE BOOK, THE SECOND THE VERSE AND NOTE ON IT. TEST. TESTIMONIES. AP. APPENDIX.

A
Addison (Mr.) railed at by A. Philips, iii. 326.
——— abuſed by J. Oldmixon. in his proſe eſſay on Criticiſm, &c. ii. 283.
— by J. Ralph, in a London Journal, iii. 165.
— Celebrated by our author—Upon his Diſcourſe of Medals—In his Prologue to Cato—In his Imitation of Horace's Epiſtles to Auguſtus, and in his poem, ii. 140.
Falſe facts concerning him and our author related by anonymous perſons in Miſt's Journal, &c. Teſt.—Diſproved by the Teſtimonies of —The Earl of Burlington,
—Mr. Tickell,
—Mr. Addiſon himſelf, ib.
Anger, one of the characteriſtics of Mr. Dennis's Critical writings, i. 106.
——— Affirmation, another: Teſt. [To which are added by Mr. Theobald, Ill-nature, Spite, Revenge, i. 106.]
Altar of Cibber's Works, how built, and how founded, i. 159, &c.
Æſchylus, iii. 313.
Aſſes, at a citizen's gate in a morning, ii. 247.
Appearances, that we are never to judge by them, eſpecially of poets and divines, ii. 426.
Alehouſe, the birth-place of Mr. Cook, ii. 138.
——— one kept by Edw. Ward, i. 233.
——— and by Taylor the water-poet, iii. 19.

Arnal, William, what he received out of the Treasury for writing pamphlets, ii. 315.
Aristotle, his friends and confessors, who, iv. 192.
——— how his ethics came into disuse, ibid.

B

Bedlam, i. 29.
Banks, his resemblance to Mr. Cibber in Tragedy, i. 146.
Bates (Julius) see Hutchinson (John).
Broom, Ben Jonson's man, ibid.
Bavius, iii. 24. Mr. Dennis his great opinion of him, ib.
Bawdry, in plays, not disapproved of by Mr. Dennis, iii. 179.
Blackmore, (Sir Rich.) his impiety and irreligion, proved by Mr. Dennis, ii. 268.
——— his quantity of works, and various opinions of them—His abuse of Mr. Dryden and Mr. Pope, ibid.
Bray, a word much beloved by Sir Richard, ii. 260.
Braying, described, ii. 247.
Birch, by no means proper to be applied to young noblemen, iii. 334.
Bl—d, what became of his works, i. 231.
Broome, (Rev. Mr. Will.) His sentiments of our author's virtue, Test.
——— Our author of his, iii. 332.
Brooms (a seller of) taught Mr. John Jackson his trade, ii. 157.
Billingsgate language, how to be used by learned authors, ii. 142.
Bond, Besaleel, Breval, not living writers, but phantoms, ii. 126.
Booksellers, how they run for a poet, ii. 31, &c.
Bailiffs, how poets run from them, ii. 61.
Bridewell, ii. 269.
Bow-bell, iii. 278.
Balm of Dulness, the true and the spurious, its efficacy, and by whom prepared, iv. 544.

C

Cibber, hero of the poem, his character, i. 107. not absolutely stupid, 109. Not unfortunate as a coxcomb, ibid. Not a slow writer, but precipitate, though heavy, 123. His productions the effects of heat, though an imperfect one, 126. His folly heightened with frenzy, 125. He borrowed from Fletcher and Moliere, 131. Mangled Shakspeare, 133. His head distinguished for wearing an extraordinary periwig, 167. more than for its reasoning faculty, yet not without furniture, 177. His elasticity, and fire, and how he came by them, 187. He was once thought to have wrote a reasonable play, 188. The general character of his verse and prose, 190. His conversation, in what manner extensive and useful, 192, &c. Once designed for the Church, where he should have been a Bishop, 200. Since inclined to write for the Minister of State, 213. but determines to stick to his other talents; what those are, 217, &c. His apostrophe to his works before he burns them, 225, &c. His repentance and tears, 243. Dulness puts out the fire, 257. Inaugurates and anoints him, 287. His crown, by whom woven, 223. of what composed, i. 303. who let him into court, 300. who his supporters, 307. His entry, attendants, and proclamation, usque ad fin His enthronization, ii. 1. Passes his whole reign in seeing shows, through book ii. And dreaming dreams, through book iii. Settle appears to him, iii. 35. Resemblance between him and Settle, iii. 37. and i. 146. Goodman's prophecy of him, iii 232. How he translated an opera, without knowing the story, 305. and encouraged farces because it was against his conscience, 266. Declares he never mounted a dragon, 268. Apprehensions of acting in a serpent, 287. What were the passions of his old age, 303, 304. Finally subsides in the lap of Dulness, where he rests to all eternity, iv. 20. and note.
Cibber, his father, i. 31. His two brothers, 32. His son, iii. 142. His better progeny, i. 228.
Ciberian forehead, what is meant by it, i. 218.
———read by some Cerberian, ibid. note.
Cooke (Tho.) abused by Mr. Pope, ii. 138.
Concanen (Mat.) one of the authors of the Weekly Journals, ii. 299.
——— declared that when his poem had blanks, they meant treason, iii. 297.
——— of opinion that Juvenal never satirized the poverty of Codrus, ii. 144.
Corncutter's Journal, what it cost, ii. 314.
Critics, verbal ones, must have two postulata allowed them, ii. 1.
Cat-calls, ii. 231.
Curll (Edm.) his panegyric, ii. 58.
—— his Corinna, and what she did. 70.
—— his prayer, 80. Like Eridanus, 182.
—— Much favoured by Cloacina, 97, &c.
—— Tost in a blanket, and whipped, 151.
—— Pilloried, ii. 3.
Carolina, a curious flower, its fate, iv. 409, &c.

D

Dulness, the goddess; her original and parents, i. 12. Her ancient empire, 17. Her public college, i. 29. Academy for poetical education, 33. Her cardinal virtues, 45, &c. Her ideas, productions, and creation, 55, &c. Her survey and contemplation of her works, 79, &c. And of her children, 93. Their uninterrupted succession, 98, &c. to 108. Her appearance to Cibber, 261. She manifests to him her works, 271, &c. Anoints him, 287, &c. Institutes games at his coronation, ii. 18, &c. The manner how she makes a wit, ii. 47. A great lover of a joke, 34.—And loves to repeat the same over again, 122. Her ways and means to procure the pathetic and terrible in tragedy, 225, &c. Encourages chattering and bawling, 237, &c. And is patronness of party-writing and railing, 276, &c. Makes use of the heads of critics as scales to weigh the heaviness of authors, 367. Promotes slumber with the works of the said authors, ibid. The wonderful virtue of sleeping in her lap, iii. 5, &c. Her Elysium, 15, &c. The souls of her sons dipt in Lethe, 23. How brought into the world, 29. Their transfiguration and metempsychosis, 50. The extent and glories of her empire, and her conquests throughout the world, iii. 67 to 138. A catalogue of her poetical forces in this nation, 139 to 212. Prophecy of her reſtoration, 333, &c. Accompliſhment of it, book iv. Her appearance on the throne, with the ſciences led in triumph, iv. 21, &c. Tragedy and Comedy ſilenced, 37. General aſſembly of all her votaries, 73. Her patrons, 95. Her critics, 115. Her ſway in the ſchools, 149 to 180. And univerſities, 189 to 274. How ſhe educates gentlemen in their travels, 293 to 334. Conſtitutes virtuoſi in ſcience, 355, &c. Freethinkers in religion, 459. Slaves and dependents in government, 505. Finally turns them to beaſts, but preſerves the form of men, 525. What ſort of comforters ſhe ſends them, 529, &c. What orders and degrees ſhe confers on them, 565. What performances ſhe expects from them, according to their ſeveral ranks and degrees, 583. The powerful yawn ſhe breathes on them, 605, &c. Its progreſs and effects, 607, &c. till the conſummation of all in the total extinction of the reaſonable ſoul, and reſtoration of Night and Chaos, uſq. ad fin.

Diſpenſary of Dr. Garth, ii. 140.

De Foe, Daniel, in what reſembled to William Prynn, i. 103.

De Foe (Norton) a ſcandalous writer, ii. 415.

Dennis, (John) his character of himſelf, i. 106.

——— Senior to Mr. Durfey, iii. 173.

——— Eſteemed by our author, and why, ibid.

——— his love of puns, i. 63.

——— And politics, i. 106. ii 413.

——— His great loyalty to King George, how proved, i. 106.

——— A great friend to the ſtage—and to the ſtate, ii. 413.

——— How he proves that none but Nunjurors and diſaffected perſons writ againſt ſtage-plays, ibid.

——— His reſpect to the Bible and Alcoran ibid.

——— His excuſe for obſcenity in plays, iii. 179.

——— His mortal fear of Mr. Pope, founded on Mr. Curll's aſſurances, i. 106.

——— Of opinion that he poiſoned Curll, ibid.

——— His reaſon why Homer was, or was not in debt, ii. 118.

——— His accuſation of Sir Richard Blackmore,—

——— As no Proteſtant, ii. 268.

——— As no poet, ibid.

——— His wonderful Dedication to G. D. Eſq. iii. 179.

Drams, dangerous to a poet, iii. 146.

Dedicators, ii. 198.

Dunciad, how to be correctly ſpelled, i. 1.

E

Edwards, (Thomas) iv. 567.

——— A gentleman of the laſt edition, ibid.

Euſden, (Laurence) i. 104,

——— Taxed by Oldmixon with nonſenſe, ibid.

Ears, ſome people adviſed how to preſerve them, iii. 214.

F

Falſehoods, told of our author in print.

——— Of his taking verſes from James Moore, Teſt.

——— And of his intending to abuſe Biſhop Burnet, ibid.

Falſehoods, by John Dennis, of his really poiſoning Mr. Curll, i. 106.

——— And of contempt for the Sacred Writings, ii. 268.

——— By Edward Ward, of his being bribed by a Ducheſs to ſatirize Ward of Hackney in the pillory, iii. 34.

——— By Miſt the Journaliſt, of unfair proceeding in the undertaking of the Odyſſey and Shakſpeare, Teſt.

——— Diſproved by the teſtimony of the Lords Harcourt and Bathurſt.

——— By Miſt the Journaliſt, concerning Mr. Addiſon and him, two or three lies, Teſt.

——— By Paſquin, of his being in a plot, iii. 179.

——— By Sir Richard Blackmore, of his burleſquing Scripture upon the authority of Curll, ii. 268.

Fleas and verbal critics compared, as equal judges of the human frame and wit, iv. 238.

Fletcher, made Cibber's property, i. 131.

Mac Flecknoe, not ſo decent and chaſte in the diction as the Dunciad, ii. 75.

Friendſhip, underſtood by Mr. Dennis to be ſomewhat elſe in Niſus and Euryalus, &c. iii. 179.

French cooks, iv. 553.

Furius, Mr. Dennis called ſo by Mr. Theobald, i. 106.

Fleet-ditch, ii. 271. Its nymphs, 333. Diſcoveries there, ibid.

Flies not the ultimate object of human ſtudy, iv. 454.

Falſehoods and flatteries permitted to be inſcribed on churches, i. 43.

G

Good nature of our author; inſtances of it in this work, i. 328. ii. 282.

Good ſenſe, grammar, and verſe, deſired to give place for the ſake of Mr. Beſ. Morris and his works, iii. 168.

Gildon (Charles) abuſed our author in many things, Teſt. i. 296.

——— Printed againſt Jeſus Chriſt, i. 296.

Gildon and Dennis, their unhappy difference lamented, iii. 173.

Gentleman, his Hymn to his Creator, by Welſted, ii. 207.

Gazetteers, the monſtrous price of their writings, ii. 314. the miſerable fate of their works, ibid.

H

Handel, an excellent muſician, baniſhed to Ireland, by the Engliſh nobility, iv. 65.

Heydeggre, a ſtrange bird from Switzerland, i. 290.

Horace, cenſured by Mr. Welſted, Teſt.

——— Did not know what he was about when he wrote his Art of Poetry, ibid.

Henley (John the Orator) his Tub and Euchariſt, ii. 2. His Hiſtory, iii. 199. His opinion of Ordination and Chriſtian Prieſthood, iii. 199. His medals, ibid,

Haywood (Mrs.) What ſort of game for her, ii. 157. Won by Curll, 187. Her great reſpect for him. The offspring of her brain and body (according to Curll), ibid. Not undervalued by being ſet againſt a Jordan, 165.

Hints, extraordinary ones, ii. 268.
Horneck and Roome, two party-writers, iii. 152.
Hutchinſon (John) with his man Julius, a ſubminiſter of the rites of Dulneſs, iii. 215.
——— never bowed the knee to Senſe.
——— Cuts down the groves of the Academy, iii. 334.
——— defiles the high places of Geometry.
——— and tramples on the fallen Dagon of Newtonian Philoſophy, iii. 216.

I

Index-learning, the uſe of it, i. 279.
Journals, how dear they coſt the nation, ii. 314.
Jus Divinum, iv. 188.
Impudence, celebrated Mr. Curll, ii. 159. 186.
——— in Mr. Norton De Foe, ii. 415.
——— in Mr. Henley, iii. 199.
——— in Mr. Cibber, jun. iii. 139.
——— in Mr. Cibber, ſen. paſſim.

L

Lord Mayor's ſhow, i. 185
Libeller, a Grub-ſtreet critic run to ſeed, iv. 567.
Library of Bays, i. 131.
Liberty and Monarchy, miſtaken for one another, iv. 181.
Lud (King), ii. 349.
Log (King), i. ver. ult.
Lintot (Bernard), ii. 53.
Laureate; his crown, of what compoſed, i. 303.
Lycophron, his dark lanthorn, by whom turned, iv. 6.

M

Madmen, two related to Cibber, i. 32.
Magazines, their character, i. 42.
Moliere, crucified, i. 132.
Moore (James) his ſtory of ſix verſes, and of ridiculing Biſhop Burnet in the memoirs of a pariſh clerk, proved falſe, by the Teſtimonies of ——— The Lord Bolingbroke, Teſt.
——— Hugh Bethel, Eſq. ibid.
——— Earl of Peterborough, ibid.
——— Dr. Arbuthnot, ibid.
——— His plagiariſms, ſome few of them, ibid. and ii 50. What he was real author of (beſide the ſtory above mentioned) vide Liſt of ſcurrilous Papers.
——— Eraſmus his advice to him, ii. 50.
Milbourne, a fair critic, and why, ii. 349.
Madneſs, of what ſort Mr. Dennis's was, according to Plato, i. 106.
——— according to himſelf, ii. 268.
——— how allied to Dulneſs, iii. 15.
Mercuries and Magazines, i. 42.
May-pole in the Strand, turned into a church, ii. 28.
Morris (Beſaleel) ii. 126. iii. 168.
Monuments of poets, with inſcriptions to other men, iv. 131, &c.
Medals, how ſwallowed and recovered, iv. 375.

N

Nodding deſcribed, ii. 391.
Needham's i. 324.
Nis, where wanted, iv. 244.

O

Oldmixon (John) abuſed Mr. Addiſon and Mr. Pope, ii. 283. Falſified Daniel's Hiſtory, then accuſed others of falſifying Lord Clarendon's; proven a ſlanderer in it, ibid.
——— abuſed Mr. Euſden and my Lord Chamberlain, i. 104.
Odyſſey, Falſehoods concerning Mr. P.'s Propoſals for that Work, Teſt.
———Diſproved by thoſe very Propoſals, ibid.
Owls and Opium, i. 271.
Oranges, and their uſe, i. 236.
Opera, her Advancement, iii. 301. iv. 45, &c.
Opiates, two very conſiderable ones, ii. 370. Their efficacy, 390, &c.
Oſborne, bookſeller, crowned with a Jordan, ii. 190.
Oſborne (Mother) turned to ſtone, ii. 312.
Owls, deſired to anſwer Mr. Ralph, iii. 166.

P

Pope, Mr. his Life. Educated by Jeſuits—by a Parſon—by a Monk—at St. Omer's—at Oxford—at home—no where at all. Teſt. init. His father a merchant, a huſbandman, a farmer, a hatter, the devil, ib.
——His death threatened by Dr. Smedley, ibid. but afterwards adviſed to hang himſelf, or cut his throat, ibid. To be hunted down like a wild beaſt, by Mr. Theobald, ibid. unleſs hanged for treaſon, on information of Paſquin, Mr. Dennis, Mr. Curll, and Concanen, ibid.
Poverty, never to be mentioned in ſatire, in the opinion of the Journaliſts and Hackney Writers —The poverty of Codrus, not touched upon by Juvenal, ii. 143. When, and how far poverty may be ſatirized, Leter, p. vi. Whenever mentioned by our author, it is only as an extenuation and excuſe for bad writers, ii. 282.
Perſonal abuſes not to be endured, in the opinion of Mr. Dennis, Theobald, Curll, &c. ii. 142.
Perſonal abuſes on our author by Mr. Dennis, Gildon, &c. ibid.—By Mr. Theobald, Teſt.—By Mr. Ralph, iii. 165.—By Mr. Welſted, ii. 207.—By Mr. Cooke, ii. 138.—By Mr. Concanen, ii. 299.—By Sir Richard Blackmore, ii. 268.—By Edw. Ward, iii. 34.—and their brethren, paſſim.
Perſonal abuſes of others. Mr. Theobald of Mr. Dennis for his poverty, i. 106. Mr. Dennis of Mr. Theobald for his livelihood by the Stage, and the Law, i. 286. Mr. Dennis of Sir Richard Blackmore for impiety, ii. 268. Dr. Smedley, of Mr. Concanen, ii. 299. Mr. Oldmixon's of Mr. Euſden, i. 104. Of Mr. Addiſon, ii. 283. Mr. Cooke's of Mr. Euſden, 104
Politics, very uſeful in criticiſm, Mr. Dennis's, i. 106. ii. 413.
Pillory, a poſt of reſpect, in the opinion of Mr. Curll, iii. 34.
——and of Mr. Ward, ibid.
Plagiary deſcribed, ii. 47, &c.
Priori, Arguments à priori not the beſt to prove a God, iv. 471.
Poverty and poetry, their cave, i. 33.
Profaneneſs, not to be endured in our author, but very allowable in Shakſpeare, i. 50.
Party-writers, their three qualifications, ii. 276.

Proteus (the fable of), what to be underſtood by it, i. 31.
Palmers, pilgrims, iii. 113.
Pindars and Miltons, of the modern ſort, iii. 164.

Q

Querno, his reſemblance to Mr. Cibber, ii. 15. Wept for joy, ibid. So did Mr. C. i. 243.

R

Reſemblance of the hero to ſeveral great authors, To Querno, ut ſupra. To Settle, iii. 37. To Banks and Broome, i. 146.
Round houſe, ii. prope fin.
Ralph (James), iii. 165. See Sawney.
Roome and Horneck, iii. 152.

S

Shakſpeare, to be ſpelled always with an e at the end, i. 1. but not with an e in the middle, ibid. An edition of him in marble, ibid. mangled, altered, and cut by the players and critics, i. 133. Very ſore ſtill of Tibbald, ibid.
Sepulchral lies on church walls, i. 43.
Settle (Elkanah) Mr. Dennis's account of him, iii. 37. And Mr. Welſted's, ibid. Once preferred to Dryden, iii. 37. A party-writer of pamphlets, ibid. and iii. 283. A writer of farces and drolls, and employed at laſt in Bartholomew Fair, iii. 283.
Sawney, a Poem: the author's great ignorance in claſſical learning, i. 1.
——In languages, iii. 165.
——His praiſes on himſelf above Mr. Addiſon ibid.
Swiſs of Heaven, who they are, ii. 358.
A ſlipſhod Sibyl, iii. 15.
Silenus deſcribed, iv. 492.
Scholiaſts, iii. 191. iv. 211. 232.
Supperleſs, a miſtake concerning this word ſet right with reſpect to poets and other temperate ſtudents, i. 115.
Sevenfold Face, who maſter of it, i. 224.
Soul (the vulgar Soul) its office, iv. 441.
Schools, their homage paid to Dulneſs, and in what, iv. 150, &c.

T

Tibbald, not hero of this poem, i. init. Publiſhed an edition of Shakſpeare, i. 133. Author, ſecretly an abettor of ſcurrilities againſt Mr. P. Vide Teſtimonies, and Liſt of Books.
Thule, a very Northern poem, puts out a fire, i. 258.
Taylors, a good word for them, againſt poets and ill paymaſters, ii. 118.
Thunder, how to make it by Mr. Dennis's receipt, ii. 226.
Travelling deſcribed, and its advantages, iv. 293, &c.

V

Verbal critics. Two points always to be granted them, ii. 1.
Venice, the city of, for what famous, iv. 308.
Univerſity, how to paſs through it, iv. 255. 289.

W

Ward (Edw.) a poet and alehouſe-keeper in Moorfields, i. 233. What became of his works, ibid.—His high opinion of his nameſake, and his reſpect for the pillory, iii. 34.
Welſted (Leonard), one of the authors of the Weekly Journals, abuſed our author, &c. many years ſince, ii. 207. Taken by Dennis for a Didapper, ibid. The character of his poetry, iii. 170.
Weekly Journals, by whom written, ii. 280.
Whirligigs, iii. 57.
Wizard, his cup, and the ſtrange effects of it, iv. 517, &c.

THE

POETICAL WORKS

OF

JOHN GAY.

Containing

RURAL SPORTS,	TALES,
THE FAN,	SONGS,
THE SHEPHERD'S WEEK,	EPISTLES,
TRIVIA,	ECLOGUES,
DIONE,	ELEGIES,
FABLES,	TRANSLATIONS,

&c. &c. &c.

To which is prefixed

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild,
In wit a man, ſimplicity a child:
With native humour temp'ring virtuous rage,
Form'd to delight at once and laſh the age;
Above temptation in a low eſtate,
And uncorrupted, even among the great;
A ſafe companion, and an eaſy friend,
Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end.
Theſe are thy honours! not that here thy buſt
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy duſt;
But that the virtuous and the good ſhall ſay,
Striking their penſive boſoms—Here lies GAY.

POPE'S EPITAPH ON GAY.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED BY MUNDELL AND SON, ROYAL BANK CLOSE.

Anno 1794.

THE LIFE OF GAY.

JOHN GAY was born at or near Barnſtaple in Devonſhire, in 1688. His family was ancient, and had been long in poſſeſſion of the eſtate of Goldworthy in that county; but being much reduced, he was born, as he himſelf tells us in his Rural Sports, without proſpect of hereditary riches.

> But I, who ne'er was bleſt by fortune's hand,
> Nor brighten'd ploughſhares in paternal land.

He was educated at the Free School of Barnſtaple, by Mr. Luck, a maſter of good reputation, and author of a volume of Latin and Engliſh verſes, from whom he acquired a taſte for claſſical literature and poetry.

His fortune being inſufficient to ſupport the rank of a gentleman, and inadequate to the expence of a liberal education, he was ſent to London, and placed apprentice with a ſilk mercer in the Strand.

The reſtraint and ſervility of his occupation ſoon became his averſion: and in a few years, his maſter, upon the offer of a ſmall conſideration, willingly conſented to give up his indentures.

He was now at leiſure to indulge his propenſity to poetry; and as genius concurred with inclination, he ſoon produced his Rural Sports, a Georgic, printed in 1711, which he inſcribed to Pope, who was then riſing faſt into reputation.

This performance procured him the acquaintance of Pope, who found ſuch attractions in his manners and converſation, that he received him into his inmoſt confidence; and a friendſhip was formed between them, which laſted till their ſeparation by death, without any known abatement on either part.

The ſame year he publiſhed, in proſe, The Preſent State of Wit, containing a character of the periodical papers of the time.

His reputation was now ſo greatly advanced, that he attracted the notice of the Ducheſs of Monmouth, who, in 1712, appointed him her Secretary, with a handſome ſalary.

The kindneſs of the Ducheſs was very ſeaſonable; for it relieved him from the importunities of want, occaſioned by improvident thoughtleſsneſs, and afforded him leiſure to purſue his poetical ſtudies; of which he made ſo good uſe, that the ſame year he produced Trivia, or the Art of Walking the Streets of London, one of the happieſt of his poetical performances.

The ſame year appeared The Mohocks, a tragi-comical Farce, as it was acted near the Watch-houſe in Covent-Garden, which is generally ſuppoſed to have proceeded from his pen. In 1713, when Steele began "The Guardian," aſſiſted by Addiſon and other wits, he contributed to it, Nos. 11, and 149.

The ſame year he brought on the ſtage, at Drury-Lane, his Wife of Bath, a Comedy, which was acted with very indifferent ſucceſs; and on its revival, with ſome alterations, at Lincoln's Inn Fields, in 1730, he had the mortification to ſee it again rejected.

In 1714 he publiſhed The Shepherd's Week, in ſix paſtorals, with a Proeme, in obſolete language, and a Prologue, addreſſed to Bolingbroke, who was then high in reputation and influence among the Tories. It was written at the inſtigation of Pope, and deſigned to degrade the compoſitions of A. Philips, his rival in paſtoral poetry, by ſhewing, that if it be neceſſary to copy nature with minuteneſs, rural life muſt be exhibited, ſuch as groſſneſs and ignorance have made it. The execution of the plan exceeded the expectation of Pope, for the effect of reality and truth became conſpicuous, even when the intention was to ſhow them groveling and degraded; and The Shepherd's Week was read with delight, as a juſt repreſentation of rural manners and occupations, by thoſe who had no intereſt in the rivalry of Pope and Philips.

The moſt promiſing views of preferment now opened to him at court. He was careſſed by Bolingbroke, Swift, and the leading perſons in the Tory Miniſtry, and his patroneſs rejoiced to ſee him taken from her ſervice to attend the Earl of Clarendon, as Secretary to his embaſſy to the Court of Hanover, in the laſt year of Queen Anne's life.

This was a ſtation that naturally gave him hopes of kindneſs from every party; but the Queen's death, which happened fifteen days after his arrival at Hanover, put an end to her favours, and the dedication of his Shepherd's Week to Bolingbroke, is ſuppoſed to have obſtructed all kindneſs from the houſe of Hanover.

His office, however, made him perſonally known to the royal family; and his Epiſtle to a Lady occaſioned by the arrival of her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs of Wales, procured him a favourable admittance at the new court.

In 1715, he brought on the ſtage his What-d'ye-Call-it, a tragi-comic-paſtoral Farce, which was acted with great applauſe, and honoured with the attendance of the Prince and Princeſs of Wales.

The novelty of this mock tragedy, the images of which were comic, and the action grave, and the favour with which it was received by the audience, produced a pamphlet againſt it, called, "The Key to the What-d'ye-Call-it," written by Griffin, a player, in conjunction with Theobald.

The exhibition of The What-d'ye-Call-it, pleaſed the town and the court, and advanced the reputation of its author, but failed to raiſe his fortune.

Places he found were daily given away,
And yet no friendly gazette mentioned Gay.

The profits, however, recruited his finances; and his poetical merit being endeared by the ſweetneſs and ſincerity of his diſpoſition, made him the general favourite of the whole aſſociation of wits, and the companion of perſons of the higheſt diſtinction, both in rank and abilities.

In 1716, he made a viſit to Devonſhire, at the expence of the Earl of Burlington, whom he repaid with an Epiſtle, containing an humorous account of his journey.

The year following, he made a ſimilar return to the kindneſs of Mr. Pulteney, who, on reſigning his place of Secretary at War, took him to Aix.

Soon after his return from France, he endeavoured to entertain the town with The Three Hours after Marriage, a Comedy, written by the joint aſſiſtance of Pope and Arbuthnot, which was deſervedly driven off the ſtage with general condemnation. It was printed under the name of Gay, but his hand is not very diſcernible in any part of it. The character of Sir Tremendous, being apparently deſigned for Dennis, was probably introduced by Pope. Foſſile, who was meant to ridicule Dr. Woodward, a man not really nor juſtly contemptible, might have been the production of Arbuthnot, whoſe knowledge in his profeſſion would furniſh a ſufficient train of phyſical terms and obſervations. Phœbe Clinket alſo ſhould ſeem to have been intended to ridicule one of the females, whoſe petulant attacks had irritated Pope. Cibber ſays, that his own quarrel with him was occaſioned by a joke thrown into the "Rehearſal," at the expence of this unſucceſsful performance.

In 1718, he accompanied Pope on a viſit to Lord Harcourt, at his ſeat in Oxfordſhire, where he conſecrated to poſterity the death of two rural lovers, unfortunately killed in the neighbouring fields by a ſtroke of lightning, in his letter to Fenton, printed among Pope's Letters.

In 1720, he publiſhed a collection of his Poems, with Dione, a paſtoral-tragedy, in 4to, by ſubſcription, which, as he was generally known, was ſo ſucceſsful, that he raiſed a thouſand pounds, with which Pope adviſed him, and was ſeconded by Swift, to purchaſe an annuity; but the advice was thrown away.

Mr. Secretary Caggs having made him a preſent of ſome South Sea ſtock, he fell into the general infatuation of that diſaſtrous year, and once ſuppoſed himſelf to be maſter of twenty thouſand pounds.

His friends endeavoured to perſuade him to ſell his ſhare; but he could not bear to obſtruct his own fortune. He was then importuned to ſell as much as would purchaſe a hundred a-year for life, "which," ſays Fenton, "would make you ſure of a clean ſhirt and a ſhoulder of mutton every day." This advice was rejected; the profit and principal were loſt; and he ſunk under the calamity ſo low, that his life became in danger.

After languiſhing ſome time, he removed to Hampſtead, in 1722, where, by the care of his friends, among whom Arbuthnot and Pope appear to have ſhown particular tenderneſs, his health was reſtored; and returning to his ſtudies, he wrote The Captives, a Tragedy, which he was invited to read to the Princeſs of Wales, at Leiceſter-houſe.

On this occaſion Mr. Victor relates, that when the hour came, and he ſaw the Princeſs and her ladies all in expectation, advancing with reverence, too great for any other attention, "he did not ſee a low foot-ſtool that happened to be near him, and ſtumbling over it, he fell againſt a large ſcreen, which he overſet, and threw the ladies into no ſmall diſorder."

The Captives was brought on the ſtage at Drury-Lane, in 1723, and acted eleven nights with great applauſe. The author's third night, was, by the expreſs command of the Prince and Princeſs of Wales.

He now thought himſelf in favour; and having promiſes made him of preferment, he undertook to write Fables for the improvement of the young Duke of Cumberland, which he publiſhed, with a dedication to that Prince, in 1726. In ſome of the Fables "he was thought to be ſomething too bold with the court," and in The Hare with many Friends, he figuratively deſcribed his own dependence on the promiſes of the Great.

Upon the acceſſion of George II., the year following, his patroneſs became Queen, and he expected to be provided for in ſome office ſuitable to his inclination and abilities; but, on the ſettlement of the houſehold, he found himſelf appointed Gentleman Uſher to the Princeſs Louiſa. By this offer he thought himſelf inſulted, and ſent a meſſage to the Queen, that he was too old for the place. Remonſtrances and ſolicitations were afterwards employed in his favour, and verſes and flatteries were addreſſed to Mrs. Howard, afterwards Counteſs of Suffolk, who was much beloved by the King and Queen, to engage her intereſt in his promotion; but remonſtrances and ſolicitations availed him nothing, and the verſes and flatteries were thrown away.

The public favour, however, made him ample amends for the neglect of the court; and the pain which he ſuffered from his private diſappointment, may be ſuppoſed to have been driven away by the unprecedented, and almoſt incredible ſucceſs of the Beggar's Opera, written in ridicule of the muſical Italian drama, and acted at Lincoln's Inn-fields, in 1727. It was firſt offered to Cibber and his brethren at Drury-Lane, and rejected; it being then carried to Rich, had the effect, as was ludicrouſly ſaid, of making Gay rich, and Rich gay.

Of the original and progreſs of this new ſpecies of compoſition, Spence has given the relation in Pope's words.

"Dr. Swift had been obſerving once to Mr. Gay, what an odd pretty ſort of a thing a Newgate paſtoral might make. Gay was inclined to try at ſuch a thing for ſome time, but afterwards thought it would be better to write a Comedy on the ſame plan. This was what gave riſe to the Beggar's Opera. He began on it; and when firſt he mentioned it to Swift, the Doctor did not much like the project. As he carried it on, he ſhowed it to both of us, and we now and then gave a correction, or a word or two of advice; but it was wholly of his own writing.—When it was done, neither of us thought it would ſucceed—We ſhowed it to Congreve, who, after reading it over, ſaid, it would either take greatly, or be damned confoundedly.—We were all at the firſt night of it, in very great uncertainty of the event; 'till we were very much encouraged, by overhearing the Duke of Argyle, who ſat in the next box to us, ſay, "It will do; it muſt do; I ſee it in the eyes of them." This was a good while before the firſt act was over, and ſo gave us eaſe ſoon; for that Duke (beſides his own good taſte) has a particular knack, as any one living, in diſcovering the taſte of the public. He was quite right in this, as uſual; the good nature of the audience appeared ſtronger and ſtronger every act, and ended in a clamour of applauſe."

Its reception is thus recorded in the notes to the Dunciad, (Book iii. l. 320.)

" This piece was received with greater applauſe than was ever known. Beſides being acted in London ſixty-three days without interruption, and renewed the next ſeaſon with equal applauſe, it ſpread into all the great towns of England; was played in many places to the thirtieth and fortieth time; at Bath and Briſtol fifty, &c. It made its progreſs into Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, where it was performed twenty-four days ſucceſſively. The ladies carried about with them the favourite ſongs of it in fans, and houſes were furniſhed with it in ſcreens. The fame of it was not confined to the author only. The perſon who acted Polly, [Miſs Fenton, afterwards Ducheſs of Bolton] till then obſcure, became, all at once, the favourite of the town; her pictures were engraved and ſold in great numbers; her life written; books of letters and verſes to her publiſhed; and pamphlets made even of her ſayings and jeſts. Furthermore, it drove out of England (for that ſeaſon) the Italian Opera, which had carried all before it for ten years."

Of the Beggar's Opera, when it was printed, the reception was different, according to the different opinion of its readers. Swift commended it for the excellence of its morality, as a piece, that, " by a turn of humour, entirely new, placed all kinds of vice in the ſtrongeſt and moſt odious light." [Intelligencer, No. III.]

Dr. Herring, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury, cenſured it as giving encouragement, not only to vice, but to crimes, by making a highwayman the hero, and diſmiſſing him at laſt unpuniſhed. Both theſe deciſions are perhaps exaggerated; but it muſt be confeſſed, that the laſt has received the ſanction of ſome reſpectable magiſtrates, who have ſaid, that, after the exhibition of the Beggar's Opera, the gangs of robbers were evidently multiplied.

Encouraged by the unexampled ſucceſs of the Beggar's Opera, he produced a ſecond part, called Polly; but the objections to the firſt part, either political or moral, had obtained ſuch prevalence, that when it was ready for rehearſal at Covent-Garden, a meſſage was ſent from the Lord Chamberlain, that it was not allowed to be acted, but commanded to be ſuppreſſed.

Being deprived of the produce of his talents by this act of power, he was forced to recompenſe his repulſe, by printing it by a ſubſcription, which drew the humanity of the public to his ſide, and was ſo liberal and extenſive, that though the firſt part gained him four hundred pounds, the profits of the ſecond were near thrice as much.—Conſidering its inferiority to the other in ſatire, wit, plot, and execution, in all probability he would not have been much a gainer, if it had been left to its own fate.

He received yet another recompenſe for this ſuppoſed hardſhip, in the kindneſs of the Duke and Ducheſs of Queenſberry, who reſented the indignity put upon him, reſigned their reſpective employments at court, and took him into their family, and treated him with the moſt affectionate attention during the remaining part of his life. Spence relates, that the Duke, conſidering his want of economy, undertook the management of his money, and gave it to him as he wanted it. But it is ſuppoſed that the diſcountenance of the court, aggravated by the rejection of his Wife of Bath, which he brought again on the ſtage, in 1730, ſunk deep into his heart, and gave him more diſcontent than the applauſes or tenderneſs of his friends could overpower.

His dejection was ſoon accompanied by the return of his conſtitutional diſtemper, the colic, which he in vain endeavoured to remove, by a journey to Ameſbury, the ſeat of his noble patron, in Wiltſhire. " My melancholy," he writes to Pope, " increaſes, and every hour threatens me with ſome return of my diſtemper."

In this diſpoſition, it is no wonder that he rejected Pope's propoſal, in 1732, of writing verſes on the Queen's hermitage; to which he anſwers, with a fixed deſpondency, " I know myſelf unworthy of royal patronage." He exerted himſelf, however, ſufficiently to exhibit at the Haymarket this year; his Acis and Galatea, a Serenata, in air and recitative; the ſtory taken from Ovid, and the muſic compoſed by Handel.

In the beginning of October 1732, he became apprehenſive of his approaching end. " I begin, ſays he, " to look upon myſelf as one already dead, and deſire my dear Mr. Pope, whom I love as my own ſoul, if you ſurvive me, as you certainly will, if a ſtone ſhould mark the place of my grave, ſee theſe words put upon it, with what elſe you may think proper.

Life is a jeſt, and all things ſhow it;
I thought ſo once, but now I know it.

He found, however, in the delightful retirement of Ameſbury, many intervals of eaſe and cheerfulneſs, which enabled him to finiſh the Opera of Achilles; and coming with the family to their houſe in Burlington Gardens, to paſs the winter ſeaſon, he gave it to the theatre; and the week after, was ſuddenly ſeized with a violent inflammatory fever, which ending in a mortification of his bowels, put a period to his life, December 4th, 1732, in the 54th year of his age.

He was buried in Weſtminſter Abbey, where his noble patrons erected a handſome monument to his memory; and Pope, agreeable to his dying requeſt, gave him an epitaph, written with fondneſs and reſpect, but apparently with more eſteem of his worth than veneration for his talents.

Then follows this inſcription:

Here lie the aſhes of Mr. John Gay,
The warmeſt friend,
The moſt benevolent man;
Who maintained
Independency
In low circumſtances of fortune;
Integrity
In the midſt of a corrupt age;
And that equal ſerenity of mind
Which conſcious goodneſs alone can give,
Through the whole courſe of his life.
Favourite of the muſes
He was led by them to every elegant art;
Refined in taſte,
And fraught with graces all his own:
In various kinds of poetry
Superior to many,
Inferior to none,
His works continue to inſpire
What his example taught,
Contempt of folly, however adorned;
Deteſtation of vice, however dignified;
Reverence of virtue, however diſgraced.

Charles and Catherine, Duke and Ducheſs of Queenſberry, who loved this excellent man living, and regret him dead, have cauſed this monument to be erected to his memory.

The Opera of Achilles was acted ſoon after his death, and the profits were given to two widow ſiſters, Mrs. Ballet and Mrs. Forteſcue, who, as heirs at law, ſhared his fortune, amounting to 3000l., between them.

In 1738, was publiſhed a ſecond volume of his Fables, more grave, and more political than the former.

There have appeared likewiſe under his name, The Diſtreſt Wife, a Comedy, firſt printed in 1743, and acted at Covent-Garden in 1772, and a humorous piece, called The Rehearſal at Gotham.

His Poems on Several Occaſions, were printed in 2 vols. 12mo, 1737. Two additional volumes, profeſſing to be The Miſcellaneous Works of Mr. John Gay, were printed in 12mo, 1773; in which a fraud of ſingular importance to his reputation has been attempted. The "Elegiac Epiſtle to a Friend," "A Ballad on Ale," "Story of Cephiſa," "Gondibert, Cantos 7, 8, 9," "The Man Mountain's Anſwer to the Liliputian verſes," need no comment. The impoſition is undeniable. The poem on Wine firſt printed in 1710, is inſerted on the authority of Hill.

The character of Gay ſeems to have been very amiable. He was of an affable, ſweet diſpoſition, generous in his temper, and pleaſant in his converſation. He was univerſally beloved, and eſteemed as a ſoft and civil companion. His chief fault was an exceſſive indolence, without the leaſt knowledge of economy, which often ſubjected him to pecuniary difficulties. "He was a natural man," ſays Spence in Pope's words, "without deſign, who ſpoke what he thought, and juſt as he thought it; he was of timid temper, and fearful of giving offence to the great; which caution, however, was of no avail." In the "Dunciad," he ſays, with juſt indignation,

Gay dies unpenſion'd with a hundred friends;

And, in the "Epiſtle to Arbuthnot," he has this tender and indignant apoſtrophe—

Of all thy blameleſs life the ſole return,
My verſe, and Queenſb'ry weeping o'er thy urn!

As a poet, he is characteriſed by variety, ſprightlineſs, eaſe, and elegance. His compoſitions, though original in ſome parts, are not of the higheſt kind. They are, in general, more diſtinguiſhed by vivacity, penetration, good ſenſe, and perſpicuity of expreſſion, than by ſublimity, tenderneſs, imagination, and ſtrength or harmony of numbers. His Paſtorals, Fables, and Beggar's Opera, are the chief foundation of his fame. His paſtorals ſeem to have the higheſt finiſhing. They are perfectly Doric. The rural ſimplicity neglected by Pope, and admired in Philips, appears in its true guiſe in the Shepherd's Week: "There only nature is ſeen exactly ſuch as the country affordeth, and the manner meetly copied from the ruſtical folk therein." His Fables have obtained more popularity. They are the favourites of the nurſery and of the ſchool, and the delight of perſons of every rank and of every age. The verſification is poliſhed, the apologues, in general, are correct; they poſſeſs originality, wit, and humour; and to theſe is ſuperadded, a conſiderable portion of poetical ſpirit. He is ſometimes, however, deficient in that quality, and in the harmony of his numbers; but he is, upon the whole, the moſt agreeable metrical fabuliſt in our language. The merits of the Beggar's Opera are univerſally acknowledged. "We owe to Gay," ſays Dr. Johnſon, "the Ballad Opera: a mode of Comedy, which at firſt was ſuppoſed to delight only by its novelty; but has now, by the experience of half a century, been found ſo well accommodated to the diſpoſition of a popular audience, that it is likely to keep long poſſeſſion of the ſtage. Whether this new drama was the product of judgment or of luck, the praiſe of it muſt be given to the inventor: and there are many writers read with more reverence, to whom ſuch merit of originality cannot be attributed."

Of his Tales, Epiſtles, Eclogues, Songs, &c. it would be ſuperfluous to enumerate the brighter paſſages. Many of theſe little compoſitions are favourites with the public. His Tales and Eclogues unite a conſiderable portion of the grace and eaſe of Prior, with the humour of Swift; but they are not remarkable for the beauty of their images, or the harmony of their numbers. His Paſtoral Tragedy of Dione is claſſical and elegant; but will not greatly entertain without the proper embelliſhments, acting and muſic. His Contemplation on Night, and Thoughts on Eternity, merit the higheſt praiſe. His Sweet William's Farewell, is one of the moſt popular ballads in the Engliſh language.

The eſtimate of his poetical character, as given by Dr. Johnſon, is, in ſome inſtances, too ſevere to be approved by readers uncorrupted by literary prejudices.

"As a poet, he cannot be rated very high. He was, as I once heard a female critic remark, "of a lower order." He had not, in any great degree, the mens divinior, the dignity of genius. His firſt performance, the Rural Sports, is ſuch as was eaſily planned and executed: it is never contemptible, nor ever excellent. The Fan is one of thoſe mythological fictions which antiquity delivers ready to the hand, but which, like other things that lie open to every one's uſe, are of little value. His Fables ſeem to have been a favourite work. Of this kind of fables he does not appear to have formed any diſtinct or ſettled notion. For a Fable he gives now and then a Tale, or an abſtracted Allegory; and from ſome, by whatever name they are called, it will be difficult to extract any moral principle. They are, however, told with liveline's; the verſification is ſmooth, and the diction, though now and then a little conſtrained by the meaſure or the rhyme, is generally happy. To Trivia may be allowed all that it claims: it is ſprightly, various, and pleaſant. The ſubject is of that kind which Gay was, by nature, qualified to adorn; yet ſome of his decorations may be juſtly wiſhed away. The appearance of Cloacina is nauſeous and ſuperfluous. Dione, is a counterpart to "Amyuta" and "Paſtor Fido," and other trifles of the ſame kind, eaſily imitated, and unworthy of imitation. What the Italians call Comedies, from a happy concluſion, Gay calls a Tragedy, from a mournful event; but the ſtyle of the Italians and of Gay is equally tragical.

"Of his little poems the public judgment ſeems to be right; they are neither much eſteemed, nor totally deſpiſed. The Story of the Apparition is borrowed from one of the tales of Poggio. Thoſe that pleaſe leaſt, are the pieces to which Culliver gave occaſion; for who can much delight in the echo of an unnatural fiction?"

POEMS BY MR. GAY.

RURAL SPORTS:

A GEORGIC.

INSCRIBED TO MR. POPE, 1713 *.

"—Securi prælia ruris
Pandimus." NEMESIAN

CANTO I.

You, who the ſweets of rural life have known,
Deſpiſe th' ungrateful hurry of the town;
In Windſor groves your eaſy hours employ,
And, undiſturb'd, yourſelf and muſe enjoy,
Thames liſtens to thy ſtrains, and ſilent flows,
And no rude wind through ruſtling oſiers blows;
While all his wondering nymphs around thee throng,
To hear the Syrens warble in thy ſong.

But I, who ne'er was bleſt by fortune's hand,
Nor brighten'd ploughſhares in paternal land,
Long in the noiſy town have been immur'd,
Reſpir'd its ſmoke, and all its cares endur'd,
Where news and politics divide mankind,
And ſchemes of ſtate involve th' uneaſy mind;
Faction embroils the world; and every tongue
Is mov'd by flattery, or with ſcandal hung:
Friendſhip, for ſylvan ſhades, the palace flies,
Where all muſt yield to intereſt's dearer ties,
Each rival Machiavel with envy burns,
And honeſty forſakes them all by turns;
While calumny upon each party's thrown,
Which both promote, and both alike diſown.
Fatigu'd at laſt, a calm retreat I choſe,
And ſooth'd my haraſs'd mind with ſweet repoſe,
Where fields and ſhades, and the refreſhing clime,
Inſpire the ſylvan ſong, and prompt my rhyme.
My muſe ſhall rove through flowery meads and plains,
And deck with Rural Sports her native ſtrains;
And the ſame road ambitiouſly purſue,
Frequented by the Mantuan ſwain and you.
'Tis not that rural ſports alone invite,
But all the grateful country breathes delight;
Here blooming health exerts her gentle reign,
And ſtrings the ſinews of th' induſtrious ſwain.
Soon as the morning lark ſalutes the day,
Through dewy fields I take my frequent way,
Where I behold the farmer's early care
In the revolving labours of the year.

When the freſh ſpring in all her ſtate is crown'd,
And high luxuriant graſs o'erſpreads the ground,
The labourer with a bending ſcythe is ſeen,
Shaving the ſurface of the waving green;
Of all her native pride diſrobes the land,
And meads lays waſte before his ſweeping hand;
While with the mounting ſun the meadow glows,
The fading herbage round he looſely throws:
But, if ſome ſign portend a laſting ſhower,
Th' experienc'd ſwain foreſees the coming hour;
His ſun-burnt hands the ſcattering fork forſake,
And ruddy damſels ply the ſaving rake;
In riſing hills the fragrant harveſt grows,
And ſpreads along the field in equal rows. [gains;

Now when the height of heaven bright Phœbus
And level rays cleave wide the thirſty plains,
When heifers ſeek the ſhade and cooling lake,
And in the middle path-way baſks the ſnake;
O lead me, guard me from the ſultry hours,
Hide me, ye foreſts, in your cloſeſt bowers,
Where the tall oak his ſpreading arms entwines,
And with the beech a mutual ſhade combines;
Where flows the murmuring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bordering hazel overhangs the ſtreams,
Whoſe rolling current, winding round and round,
With frequent falls makes all the wood reſound;
Upon the moſſy couch my limbs I caſt,
And e'en at noon the ſweets of evening taſte.

Here I peruſe the Mantuan's Georgic ſtrains,
And learn the labours of Italian ſwains;
In every page I ſee new landſcapes riſe,
And all Heſperia opens to my eyes;

* This poem received many material corrections from the author after it was firſt publiſhed.

wander o'er the various rural toil,
And know the nature of each different ſoil:
This waving field is gilded o'er with corn,
That ſpreading trees with bluſhing fruit adorn:
Here I ſurvey the purple vintage grow,
Climb round the poles, and riſe in graceful row:
Now I behold the ſteed curvet and bound,
And paw with reſtleſs hoof the ſmoking ground:
The dew-lap'd bull now chaſes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in every vein;
His well-arm'd front againſt his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his miſtreſs claims:
The careful inſect 'midſt his works I view,
Now from the flowers exhauſt the fragant dew;
With golden treaſures load his little thighs,
And ſteer his diſtant journey through the ſkies;
Some againſt hoſtile drones the hive defend,
Others with ſweets the waxen cells diſtend;
Each in the toil his deſtin'd office bears,
And in the little bulk a mighty ſoul appears.

Or when the ploughman leaves the taſk of day,
And trudging homeward whiſtles on the way;
When the big-udder'd cows with patience ſtand,
Waiting the ſtroakings of the damſel's hand;
No warbling cheers the woods; the feather'd choir
To court kind ſlumbers, to the ſprays retire;
When no rude gale diſturbs the ſleeping trees,
Nor aſpen leaves confeſs the gentleſt breeze;
Engag'd in thought, to Neptune's bounds I ſtray,
To take my farewell of the parting day;
Far in the deep the ſun his glory hides,
A ſtreak of gold the ſea and ſky divides:
The purple clouds their amber linings ſhow,
And edg'd with flame rolls every wave below:
Here penſive I behold the fading light,
And o'er the diſtant billow loſe my ſight.

Now night in ſilent ſtate begins to riſe,
And twinkling orbs beſtrow th' uncloudy ſkies;
Her borrow'd luſtre growing Cythia lends,
And on the main a glittering path extends:
Millions of worlds hang in the ſpacious air,
Which round their ſuns their annual circles ſteer;
Sweet contemplation elevates my ſenſe,
While I ſurvey the works of providence.
O could the muſe in loftier ſtrains rehearſe
The glorious Author of the univerſe,
Who reins the winds, gives the vaſt ocean bounds,
And circumſcribes the floating worlds their rounds;
My ſoul ſhould overflow in ſongs of praiſe,
And my Creator's name inſpire my lays!
As in ſucceſſive courſe the ſeaſons roll,
So circling pleaſures recreate the ſoul.
When genial ſpring a living warmth beſtows,
And o'er the year her verdant mantle throws,
No ſwelling inundation hides the grounds,
But cryſtal currents glide within their bounds;
The ſinny brood their wonted haunts forſake.
Float in the ſun, and ſkim along the lake;
With frequent leap they range the ſhallow ſtreams,
Their ſilver coats reflect the dazzling beams.
Now let the fiſherman his toils prepare,
And arm himſelf with every watery ſnare;
His hooks, his lines, peruſe with careful eye,
Increaſe his tackle, and his rod retie.

When floating clouds their ſpongy fleeces drain,
Troubling the ſtreams with ſwift deſcending rain;
And waters tumbling down the mountain's ſide,
Bear the looſe ſoil into the ſwelling tide;
Then ſoon as vernal gales begin to riſe,
And drive the liquid burthen through the ſkies,
The fiſher to the neighbouring current ſpeeds,
Whoſe rapid ſurface purls unknown to weeds:
Upon a riſing border of the brook
He ſits him down, and ties the treacherous hook;
Now expectation cheers his eager thought,
His boſom glows with treaſures yet uncaught,
Before his eyes a banquet ſeems to ſtand,
Where every gueſt applauds his ſkilful hand.

Far up the ſtream the twiſted hair he throws,
Which down the murmuring current gently flows;
When, if or chance or hunger's powerful ſway
Directs the roving trout this fatal way,
He greedily ſucks in the twining bait,
And tugs and nibbles the fallacious meat;
Now, happy fiſherman, now twitch the line!
How thy rod bends! behold, the prize is thine!
Caſt on the bank, he dies with gaſping pains,
And trickling blood his ſilver mail diſtains.

You muſt not every worm promiſcuous uſe,
Judgment will tell the proper bait to chooſe:
The worm that draws a long immoderate ſize,
The trout abhors, and the rank morſel flies;
And, if too ſmall, the naked fraud's in ſight,
And fear forbids, while hunger does invite.
Thoſe baits will beſt reward the fiſher's pains,
Whoſe poliſh'd tails a ſhining yellow ſtains:
Cleanſe them from filth, to give a tempting gloſs,
Cheriſh the fully'd reptile race with moſs;
Amid the verdant bed they twine, they toil,
And from their bodies wipe their native ſoil.

But when the ſun diſplays his gracious beams,
And ſhallow rivers flow with ſilver ſtreams,
Then the deceit the ſcaly breed ſurvey,
Baſk in the ſun, and look into the day:
You now a more deluſive art muſt try,
And tempt their hunger with the curious fly.

To frame the little animal, provide
All the gay hues that wait on female pride;
Let nature guide thee; ſometimes golden wire
The ſhining bellies of the fly require;
The peacock's plumes thy tackle muſt not fail,
Nor the dear purchaſe of the ſable's tail.
Each gaudy bird ſome ſlender tribute brings,
And lends the growing inſect proper wings:
Silks of all colours muſt their aid impart,
And every fur promote the fiſher's art.
So the gay lady, with exceſſive care
Borrows the pride of land, of ſea, and air;
Furs, pearls, and plumes, the glittering thing diſplays,
Dazzles our eyes, and eaſy hearts betrays.

Mark well the various ſeaſons of the year,
How the ſucceeding inſect race appear;
In this revolving moon one colour reigns,
Which in the next the fickle trout diſdains,
Oft have I ſeen the ſkilful angler try
The various colours of the treacherous fly,
When he with fruitleſs pain hath ſkimm'd the brook,
And the coy fiſh rejects the ſkipping hook,

He ſhakes the boughs that on the margin grow,
Which o'er the ſtream a waving foreſt throw;
When, if an inſect fall (his certain guide),
He gently takes him from the whirling tide;
Examines well his form with curious eyes,
His gaudy veſt, his wings, his horns, and ſize,
Then round his hook the choſen fur he winds,
And on the back a ſpeckled feather binds,
So juſt the colours ſhine through every part,
That nature ſeems again to live in art.
Let not thy wary ſtep advance too near,
While all thy hope hangs on a ſingle hair;
The new-form'd inſect on the water moves,
The ſpeckled trout the curious ſnare approves;
Upon the curling ſurface let it glide,
With natural motion from thy hand ſupply'd,
Againſt the ſtream now gently let it play,
Now in the rapid eddy roll away.
The ſcaly ſhoals float by, and, ſeiz'd with fear,
Behold their fellows toſt in thinner air;
But ſoon they leap, and catch the ſwimming bait,
Plunge on the hook, and ſhare an equal fate.

When a briſk gale againſt the current blows,
And all the watery plain in wrinkles flows,
Then let the fiſherman his art repeat,
Where bubbling eddies favour the deceit.
If an enormous ſalmon chance to ſpy
The wanton errors of the floating fly,
He lifts his ſilver gills above the flood,
And greedily ſucks in th' unfaithful food;
Then downward plunges with the fraudful prey,
And bears with joy the little ſpoil away:
Soon in ſmart pain he feels the dire miſtake,
Laſhes the wave, and beats the foamy lake;
With ſudden rage he now aloft appears,
And in his eye convulſive anguiſh bears;
And now again, impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreaths his ſhining body round;
Then headlong ſhoots beneath the daſhing tide,
The trembling fins the boiling wave divide.
Now hope exalts the fiſher's beating heart,
Now he turns pale, and fears his dubious art;
He views the tumbling fiſh with longing eyes,
While the line ſtretches with th' unwieldy prize;
Each motion humours with his ſteady hands,
And one ſlight hair the mighty bulk commands:
Till, tir'd at laſt, deſpoil'd of all his ſtrength,
The game athwart the ſtream unfolds his length.
He now, with pleaſure, views the gaſping prize
Gnaſh his ſharp teeth, and roll his blood-ſhot eyes;
Then draws him to the ſhore, with artful care,
And lifts his noſtrils in the ſickening air;
Upon the burthen'd ſtream he floating lies,
Stretches his quivering fins and gaſping dies.

Would you preſerve a numerous finny race;
Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chaſe
(Th' amphibious monſter ranges all the ſhores, Darts through the waves, and every haunt explores):
Or let the gin his roving ſteps betray,
And ſave from hoſtile jaws the ſcaly prey.

I never wander where the bordering reeds
O'erlook the muddy ſtream, whoſe tangling weeds
Perplex the fiſher; I nor chooſe to bear
The thieviſh nightly net, nor barbed ſpear;
Nor drain I ponds, the golden carp to take,
Nor troll for pikes, diſpeoplers of the lake;
Around the ſteel no tortur'd worm ſhall twine,
No blood of living inſect ſtain my line.
Let me, leſs cruel, caſt the feather'd hook,
With pliant rod athwart the pebbled brook,
Silent along the mazy margin ſtray,
And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey.

CANTO II.

Now, ſporting muſe, draw in the flowing reins,
Leave the clear ſtreams awhile for ſunny plains.
Should you the various arms and toils rehearſe,
And all the fiſherman adorn thy verſe;
Should you the wide encircling net diſplay,
And in its ſpacious arch incloſe the ſea;
Then haul the plunging load upon the land,
And with the ſoal and turbot hide the ſand;
It would extend the growing theme too long,
And tire the reader with the watery ſong.

Let the keen hunter from the chace reſrain,
Nor render all the ploughman's labour vain,
When Ceres pours out plenty from her horn,
And clothes the fields with golden ears of corn.
Now, now, ye reapers, to your taſk repair,
Haſte! ſave the product of the bounteous year:
To the wide-gathering hook long furrows yield,
And riſing ſheaves extend through all the field.

Yet, if for Sylvan ſports thy boſom glow,
Let thy fleet greyhound urge his flying foe.
With what delight the rapid courſe I view!
How does my eye the circling race purſue!
He ſnaps deceitful air with empty jaws;
The ſubtle hare darts ſwift beneath his paws;
She flies, ſhe ſtretches, now with nimble bound
Eager he preſſes on, but overſhoots his ground;
She turns, he winds, and ſoon regains the way,
Then tears with gory mouth the ſcreaming prey.
What various ſport does rural life afford! [hoard!
What unbought dainties heap the wholeſome

Nor leſs the ſpaniel, ſkilful to betray,
Rewards the fowler with the feather'd prey.
Soon as the labouring horſe, with ſwelling veins,
Hath safely hous'd the farmer's doubtful gains,
To ſweet repaſt th' unwary patridge flies,
With joy amid the ſcatter'd harveſt lies;
Wandering in plenty, danger he forgets,
Nor dreads the ſlavery of entangling nets.
The ſubtle dog ſcours with ſagacious noſe
Along the field, and ſnuffs each breeze that blows;
Againſt the wind he takes his prudent way,
While the ſtrong gale directs him to the prey;
Now the warm ſcent aſſures the covey near,
He treads with caution, and he points with fear;
Then (leſt ſome ſentry fowl the fraud deſcry,
And bid his fellows from the danger fly)
Cloſe to the ground in expectation lies,
Till in the ſnare the fluttering covey riſe.
Soon as the bluſhing light begins to ſpread,
And glancing Phœbus gilds the mountain's head,
His early flight th' ill fated partridge takes,
And quits the friendly ſhelter of the brakes.
Or, when the ſun caſts a declining ray,
And drives his chariot down the weſtern way

Let your obſequious ranger ſearch around,
Where yellow ſtubble withers on the ground:
Nor will the roving ſpy direct in vain,
But numerous coveys gratify thy pain.
When the meridian ſun contracts the ſhade,
And friſking heifers ſeek the cooling glade;
Or when the country floats with ſudden rains,
Or driving miſts deface the moiſten'd plains;
In vain his toils th' unſkilful fowler tries,
While in thick woods the feeding partridge lies.
Nor muſt the ſporting verſe the gun forbear,
But what's the fowler's be the muſes' care.
See how the well-taught pointer leads the way:
The ſcent grows warm; he ſtops; he ſprings the prey;
The fluttering coveys from the ſtubble riſe,
And on ſwift wing divide the ſounding ſkies;
The ſcattering lead purſues the certain ſight,
And death in thunder overtakes their flight.
Cool breathes the morning air, and winter's hand
Spreads wide her hoary mantle o'er the land;
Now to the copſe thy leſſer ſpaniel take,
Teach him to range the ditch, and force the brake;
Not cloſeſt coverts can protect the game:
Hark! the dog opens; take thy certain aim.
The woodcock flutters; how he wavering flies!
The wood reſounds; he wheels, he drops, he dies.
The towering hawk let future poets ſing,
Who terror bears upon his ſoaring wing:
Let them on high the frighted hern ſurvey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray.
Nor ſhall the mounting lark the muſe detain,
That greets the morning with his early ſtrain;
When, 'midſt his ſong, the twinkling glaſs betrays,
While from each angle flaſh the glancing rays,
And in the ſun the tranſient colours blaze,
Pride lures the little warbler from the ſkies:
The light-enamour'd bird deluded dies.
But ſtill the chace, a pleaſant taſk, remains;
The hound muſt open in theſe rural ſtrains.
Soon as Aurora drives away the night,
And edges eaſtern clouds with roſy light,
The healthy huntſman, with the cheerful horn,
Summons the dogs, and greets the dappled morn;
The jocund thunder wakes th' enliven'd hounds,
They rouſe from ſleep, and anſwer ſounds for ſounds;
Wide through the furſy field their rot they take,
Their bleeding boſoms force the thorny brake:
The flying game their ſmoking noſtrils trace,
No bounding hedge obſtructs their eager pace;
The diſtant mountains echo from afar,
And hanging woods reſound the flying war:
The tuneful noiſe the ſprightly courſer hears,
Paws the green turf, and pricks his trembling ears;
The ſlacken'd rein now gives him all his ſpeed,
Back flies the rapid ground beneath the ſteed;
Hills, dales, and foreſts, far behind remain,
While the warm ſcent draws on the deep-mouth'd train.
Where ſhall the trembling hare a ſhelter find?
Hark! death advances in each guſt of wind!
Now ſtratagems and doubling wiles ſhe tries,
Now circling turns, and now at large ſhe flies;
Till ſpent at laſt, ſhe pants, and heaves for breath,
Then lays her down, and waits devouring death.
But ſtay, adventurous muſe! haſt thou the force
To wind the twiſted horn, to guide the horſe?
To keep the ſeat unmov'd, haſt thou the ſkill,
O'er the high gate, and down the headlong hill?
Canſt thou the ſtag's laborious chace direct,
Or the ſtrong fox through all his arts detect?
The theme demands a more experienc'd lay:
Ye mighty hunters! ſpare this weak eſſay.
O happy plains, remote from war's alarms,
And all the ravages of hoſtile arms!
And happy ſhepherds, who, ſecure from fear,
On open downs preſerve your fleecy care!
Whoſe ſpacious barns groan with increaſing ſtore,
And whirling flails disjoint the cracking floor!
No barbarous ſoldier, bent on cruel ſpoil,
Spreads deſolation o'er your fertile ſoil;
No trampling ſteed lays waſte the ripen'd grain,
Nor crackling fires devour the promis'd gain:
No flaming beacons caſt their blaze afar,
The dreadful ſignal of invaſive war:
No trumpet's clangour wounds the mother's ear,
And calls the lover from his ſwooning fair.
What happineſs the rural maid attends,
In cheerful labour while each day ſhe ſpends!
She gratefully receives what Heaven has ſent,
And, rich in poverty, enjoys content.
(Such happineſs, and ſuch unblemiſh'd fame,
Ne'er glad the boſom of the courtly dame):
She never feels the ſpleen's imagin'd pains,
Nor melancholy ſtagnates in her veins;
She never loſes life in thoughtleſs eaſe,
Nor on the velvet couch invites diſeaſe;
Her home-ſpun dreſs in ſimple neatneſs lies,
And for no glaring equipage ſhe ſighs:
Her reputation, which is all her boaſt,
In a malicious viſit ne'er was loſt;
No midnight maſquerade her beauty wears,
And health, not paint, the fading bloom repairs;
If love's ſoft paſſion in her boſom reign,
An equal paſſion warms her happy ſwain;
No homebred jars her quiet ſtate control,
Nor watchful jealouſy torments her ſoul;
With ſecret joy ſhe ſees her little race
Hang on her breaſt, and her ſmall cottage grace;
The fleecy ball their buſy fingers cull,
Or from the ſpindle draw the lengthening wool;
Thus flow her hours with conſtant peace of mind,
Till age the lateſt thread of life unwind.
Ye happy fields, unknown to noiſe and ſtrife,
The kind rewarders of induſtrious life;
Ye ſhady woods, where once I us'd to rove,
Alike indulgent to the muſe and love;
Ye murmuring ſtreams that in meanders roll,
The ſweet compoſers of the penſive ſoul;
Farewell!—The city calls me from your bowers:
Farewell, amuſing thoughts and peaceful hours;

THE FAN,

IN THREE BOOKS.

—ἔνθα δὲ οἱ θελκτήρια πάντα τέτυκτο.
Ἔνθ' ἔνι μὲν φιλότης, ἐν δ' ἵμερος, ἐν δ' ὀαριστὺς,
Πάρφασις, ἥ τ' ἔκλεψε νόον πύκα περ φρονεόντων·
Τὴν ῥά οἱ ἔμβαλε χερσίν.

HOM. Iliad. xiv. 215.

BOOK I.

I SING that graceful toy, whoſe waving play
With gentle gales relieves the ſultry day;
Not the wide fan by Perſian dames diſplay'd,
Which o'er their beauty caſts a grateful ſhade;
Nor that long known in China's artful land,
Which, while it cools the face, fatigues the hand:
Nor ſhall the muſe in Aſian climates rove,
To ſeek in Indoſtan ſome ſpicy grove,
Where, ſtretch'd at eaſe, the panting lady lies,
To ſhun the fervor of meridian ſkies,
While ſweating ſlaves catch every breeze of air,
And with wide-ſpreading fans refreſh the fair;
No buſy gnats her pleaſing dreams moleſt,
Inflame her cheek, or ravage o'er her breaſt;
But artificial zephyrs round her fly,
And mitigate the fever of the ſky.
Nor ſhall Bermudas long the muſe detain,
Whoſe fragrant foreſts bloom in Waller's ſtrain,
Where breathing ſweets from every field aſcend,
And the wild woods with golden apples bend.
Yet let me in ſome odorous ſhade repoſe,
Whilſt in my verſe the fair palmetto grows:
Like the tall pine it ſhoots its ſtately head;
From the broad top depending branches ſpread;
No knotty limbs the taper body bears;
Hung on each bough a ſingle leaf appears,
Which, ſhrivell'd in its infancy, remains
Like a clos'd fan, nor ſtretches wide its veins,
But, as the ſeaſons in their circle run,
Opes its ribb'd ſurface to the nearer ſun:
Beneath this ſhade the weary peaſant lies,
Plucks the broad leaf, and bids the breezes riſe.
Stay, wandering muſe! nor rove in foreign climes;
To thy own native ſhore confine thy rhymes.
Aſſiſt, ye Nine, your loftieſt notes employ;
Say what celeſtial ſkill contriv'd the toy;
Say how this inſtrument of love began,
And in immortal ſtrains diſplay the Fan.
Strephon had long confeſs'd his amorous pain,
Which gay Corinna rallied with diſdain:
Sometimes in broken words he ſigh'd his care,
Look'd pale, and trembled when he view'd the fair;
With bolder freedoms now the youth advanc'd,
He dreſs'd, he laugh'd, he ſung, he rhym'd, he danc'd;
Now call'd more powerful preſents to his aid;
And, to ſeduce the miſtreſs, brib'd the maid;
Smooth flattery in her ſofter hours apply'd,
The ſureſt charm to bend the force of pride:
But ſtill unmov'd remains the ſcornful dame,
Inſults her captive, and derides his flame.
When Strephon ſaw his vows diſpers'd in air,
He ſought in ſolitude to loſe his care;
Relief in ſolitude he ſought in vain,
It ſerv'd, like muſic, but to feed his pain.
To Venus now the ſlighted boy complains,
And calls the goddeſs in theſe tender ſtrains:
O potent queen! from Neptune's empire ſprung;
Whoſe glorious birth admiring Nereids ſung,
Who 'midſt the fragrant plains of Cyprus rove,
Whoſe radiant preſence gilds the Paphian grove,
Where to thy name a thouſand altars riſe,
And curling clouds of incenſe hide the ſkies:
O beauteous goddeſs! teach me how to move,
Inſpire my tongue with eloquence of love!
If loſt Adonis e'er thy boſom warm'd,
If e'er his eyes or godlike figure charm'd,
Think on thoſe hours when firſt you felt the dart;
Think on the reſtleſs fever of thy heart;
Think how you pine in abſence of the ſwain:
By thoſe uneaſy minutes know my pain.
Ev'n while Cydippe to Diana bows,
And at her ſhrine renews her virgin vows,
The lover, taught by thee, her pride o'ercame;
She reads his oaths, and feels an equal flame.
Oh, may my flame, like thine, Acontius, prove!
May Venus dictate, and reward my love!
When crowds of ſuitors Atalanta try'd,
She wealth and beauty, wit and fame defy'd;
Each daring lover with adventurous pace
Purſued his wiſhes in the dangerous race;
Like the ſwift hind, the bounding damſel flies;
Strains to the goal, the diſtanc'd lover dies.
Hippomenes, O Venus! was thy care,
You taught the ſwain to ſtay the flying fair;
Thy golden preſent caught the virgin's eyes:
She ſtoops; he ruſhes on, and gains the prize.
Say, Cyprian deity, what gift, what art,
Shall humble into love Corinna's heart?
If only ſome bright toy can charm her ſight,
Teach me what preſent may ſuſpend her flight.
Thus the deſponding youth his flame declares:
The goddeſs with a nod his paſſion hears.

Far in Cythera ſtands a ſpacious grove,
Sacred to Venus and the God of Love:
Here the luxuriant myrtle rears her head,
Like the tall oak the fragrant branches ſpread;
Here nature all her ſweets profuſely pours,
And paints th' enamell'd ground with various flowers;
Deep in the gloomy glade a grotto bends,
Wide through the craggy rock an arch extends,
The rugged ſtone is cloth'd with mantling vines,
And round the cave the creeping woodbine twines.
Here buſy Cupids, with pernicious art,
Form the ſtiff bow, and forge the fatal dart;
All ſhare the toil; while ſome the bellows ply,
Others with feathers teach the ſhafts to fly:
Some with joint force whirl round the ſtony wheel,
Where ſtreams the ſparkling fire from temper'd ſteel;
Some point their arrows with the niceſt ſkill,
And with the warlike ſtore their quivers fill.
A different toil another forge employs:
Here the loud hammer faſhions female toys;
Hence is the fair with ornament ſupply'd;
Hence ſpring the glittering implements of pride;
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame
Firſt to theſe little artiſts ow'd its frame:
Here an unfiniſh'd diamond croſslet lay,
To which ſoft lovers adoration pay;
There was the poliſh'd cryſtal bottle ſeen,
That with quick ſcents revives the modiſh ſpleen;
Here the yet rude unjointed ſnuff-box lies,
Which ſerves the rally'd fop for ſmart replies;
There piles of paper roſe in gilded reams,
The future records of the lover's flames;
Here clouded canes 'midſt heaps of toys are found,
And inlaid tweezer-caſes ſtrow the ground;
There ſtands the toilette, nurſery of charms,
Completely furniſh'd with bright beauty's arms:
The patch, the powder-box, pulville, perfumes,
Pins, paint, a flattering glaſs, and black-lead combs.
The toilſome hours in different labours ſlide,
Some work the file, and ſome the graver guide;
From the loud anvil the quick blow rebounds,
And their rais'd arms deſcend in tuneful ſounds.
Thus when Semiramis, in ancient days,
Bade Babylon her mighty bulwarks raiſe,
A ſwarm of labourers different taſks attend:
Here pullies make the ponderous oak aſcend;
With echoing ſtrokes the craggy quarry groans,
While there the chiſſel forms the ſhapeleſs ſtones;
The weighty mallet deals reſounding blows,
Till the proud battlements her towers encloſe.
Now Venus mounts her car, ſhe ſhakes the reins,
And ſteers her turtles to Cythera's plains;
Strait to the grott with graceful ſtep ſhe goes,
Her looſe ambroſial hair behind her flows:
The ſwelling bellows heave for breath no more;
All drop their ſilent hammers on the floor;
In deep ſuſpenſe the mighty labour ſtands;
While thus the goddeſs ſpoke her mild commands:
Induſtrious loves! your preſent toils forbear;
A more important taſk demands your care:
Long has the ſcheme employ'd my thoughtful mind,
By judgment ripen'd, and by time refin'd,
That glorious bird have ye not often ſeen,
Who draws the car of the celeſtial queen?
Have ye not oft ſurvey'd his varying dyes,
His tail all gilded o'er with Argus' eyes?
Have ye not ſeen him in a ſunny day
Unfurl his plumes, and all his pride diſplay;
Then ſuddenly contract his dazzling train;
And with long-trailing feathers ſweep the plain?
Learn from this hint, let this inſtruct your art;
Thin taper ſticks muſt from one centre part:
Let theſe into the quadrant's form divide,
The ſpreading ribs with ſnowy paper hide;
Here ſhall the pencil bid its colours flow,
And make a miniature creation grow.
Let the machine in equal foldings cloſe,
And now its plaited ſurface wide diſpoſe.
So ſhall the fair her idle hand employ,
And grace each motion with the reſtleſs toy;
With various play bid zephyrs riſe,
While Love in every grateful zephyr flies.
The maſter Cupid traces out the lines,
And with judicious hand the draught deſigns:
Th' expecting loves with joy the model view,
And the joint labour eagerly purſue.
Some ſlit their arrows with the niceſt art,
And into ſticks convert the ſhiver'd dart;
The breathing bellows wake the ſleeping fire,
Blow off the cinders, and the ſparks aſpire;
Their arrow's point they ſoften in the flame,
And ſounding hammers break its barbed frame:
Of this the little pin they neatly mould,
From whence their arms the ſpreading ſticks unfold;
In equal plaits they now the paper bend,
And at juſt diſtance the wide ribs extend;
Then on the frame they mount the limber ſkreen,
And finiſh inſtantly the new machine.
The goddeſs, pleas'd, the curious work receives,
Remounts her chariot, and the grotto leaves;
With the light Fan ſhe moves the yielding air,
And gales till then unknown play round the fair.
Unhappy lovers, how will ye withſtand,
When theſe new arms ſhall grace your charmer's hand?
In ancient times, when maids in thought were pure,
When eyes were artleſs, and the look demure;
When the wide ruff the well-turn'd neck enclos'd:
And heaving breaſts within the ſtays repos'd;
When the cloſe hood conceal'd the modeſt ear,
Ere black-lead combs diſown'd the virgin's hair;
Then in the muff unactive fingers lay,
Nor taught the Fan in fickle forms to play.
How are the ſex improv'd in amorous arts!
What new-found ſnares they bait for human hearts,
When kindling war the ravag'd globe ran o'er,
And ſatten'd thirſty plains with human gore,
At firſt, the brandiſh'd arm the javelin threw,
Or ſent wing'd arrows from the twanging yew;
In the bright air the dreadful faulchion ſhone,
Or whiſtling flings diſmiſs'd th' uncertain ſtone.
Now men thoſe leſs deſtructive arms deſpiſe;
Wide-waſteful death from thundering cannon flies:
One hour with more battalions ſtrows the plain,
Than were of yore in weekly battles ſlain.
So Love with fatal airs the nymph ſupplies,
Her dreſs diſpoſes, and directs her eyes.

The bosom now its panting beauties shows;
Th' experienc'd eye resistless glances throws;
Now vary'd patches wander o'er the face,
And strike each gazer with a borrow'd grace;
The fickle head-dress sinks, and now aspires
A towery front of lace on branching wires;
The curling hair in tortur'd ringlets flows,
Or round the face in labour'd order grows.
How shall I soar, and on unweary wing
Trace varying habits upward to their spring!
What force of thought, what numbers can express
Th' inconstant equipage of female dress!
How the strait stays the slender waist constrain,
How to adjust the manteau's sweeping train!
What fancy can the petticoat surround,
With the capacious hoop of whalebone bound!
But stay, presumptuous muse! nor boldly dare
The toilette's sacred mysteries declare.
Let a just distance be to beauty paid;
None here must enter but the trusty maid.
Should you the wardrobe's magazine rehearse,
And glossy manteaus rustle in thy verse;
Should you the rich brocaded suit unfold,
Where rising flowers grow stiff with frosted gold;
The dazzled muse would from her subject stray,
And in a maze of fashions lose her way.

BOOK II.

Olympus' gates unfold; in heaven's high towers
Appear in council all th' immortal powers.
Great Jove above the rest exalted sat,
And in his mind revolv'd succeeding fate;
His awful eye with ray superior shone;
The thunder-grasping eagle guards his throne;
On silver clouds the great assembly laid,
The whole creation at one view survey'd.
But see! fair Venus comes in all her state;
The wanton Loves and Graces round her wait;
With her loose robe officious zephyrs play,
And strew with odoriferous flowers the way;
In her right hand she waves the fluttering Fan;
And thus in melting sounds her speech began:
Assembled powers! who fickle mortals guide,
Who o'er the sea, the skies, and earth, preside;
Ye fountains! whence all human blessings flow,
Who pour your bounties on the world below;
Bacchus first rais'd and prun'd the climbing vine,
And taught the grape to stream with generous wine;
Industrious Ceres tam'd the savage ground,
And pregnant fields with golden harvests crown'd;
Flora with bloomy sweets enrich'd the year;
And fruitful autumn is Pomona's care.
I first taught woman to subdue mankind,
And all her native charms with dress refin'd;
Celestial synod! this machine survey,
That shades the face, or bids cool zephyrs play;
If conscious blushes on her cheek arise,
With this she veils them from her lover's eyes;
No levell'd glance betrays her amorous heart,
From the Fan's ambush she directs the dart.
The royal sceptre shines in Juno's hand,
And twisted thunder speaks great Jove's command;
On Pallas' arm the Gorgon field appears,
And Neptune's mighty grasp the trident bears;
Ceres is with the bending sickle seen,
And the strong bow points out the Cynthian Queen;
Henceforth the waving Fan my hands shall grace,
The waving Fan supply the sceptre's place.
Who shall, ye powers! the forming pencil hold?
What story shall the wide machine unfold?
Let Loves and Graces lead the dance around,
With myrtle wreathes and flowery chaplets crown'd;
Let Cupid's arrow strow the smiling plains
With unresisting nymphs and amorous swains:
May glowing pictures o'er the surface shine,
To melt flow virgins with a warm design!
Diana rose, with silver crescent crown'd,
And fix'd her modest eyes upon the ground;
Then with becoming mien she rais'd her head,
And thus with graceful voice the virgin said:
Has woman then forgot all former wiles,
The watchful ogle, and delusive smiles?
Does man against her charms too powerful prove?
Or are the sex grown novices in love?
Why then these arms? or why should artful eyes,
From this slight ambush, conquer by surprise?
No guilty thought the spotless virgin knows,
And o'er her cheek no conscious crimson glows.
Since blushes then from shame alone arise,
Why should we veil them from her lover's eyes?
Let Cupid rather give up his command,
And trust his arrows in a female hand.
Have not the gods already cherish'd pride,
And woman with destructive arms supply'd?
Neptune on her bestows his choicest stores,
For her the chambers of the deep explores;
The gaping shell its pearly charge resigns,
And round her neck the lucid bracelet twines:
Plutus for her bids earth its wealth unfold,
Where the warm ore is ripen'd into gold;
Or where the ruby reddens in the soil,
Where the green emerald pays the searcher's toil.
Does not the diamond sparkle in her ear,
Glow on her hand, and tremble in her hair?
From the gay nymph the glancing lustre flies,
And imitates the lightning of her eyes.
But yet, if Venus' wishes must succeed,
And this fantastic engine be decreed,
May some chaste story from the pencil flow,
To speak the virgin's joy, and Hymen's woe!
Here let the wretched Ariadne stand,
Seduc'd by Theseus to some desert land,
Her locks dishevel'd waving in the wind,
The crystal tears confess her tortur'd mind.
The perjur'd youth unfurls his treacherous sails,
And their white bosoms catch the swelling gales.
Be still! ye winds, she cries; stay, Theseus, stay!
But faithless Theseus hears no more than they.
All desperate, to some craggy cliff she flies,
And spreads a well-known signal in the skies;
His lessening vessel ploughs the foamy main;
She sighs, she calls, she waves the sign in vain.
Paint Dido there amidst her last distress,
Pale cheeks and blood-shot eyes her grief express:
Deep in her breast the reeking sword is drown'd;
And gushing blood streams purple from the wound

Her ſiſter Anna hovering o'er her ſtands,
Accuſes Heaven with lifted eyes and hands,
Upbraids the Trojan with repeated cries,
And mixes curſes with her broken ſighs.
View this, ye maids; and then each ſwain believe:
They're Trojans all, and vow but to deceive.
Here draw Oenone in the lonely grove,
Where Paris firſt betray'd her into love:
Let wither'd garlands hang on every bough,
Which the falſe youth wove for Oenone's brow;
The garlands loſe their ſweets, their pride is ſhed,
And like their odours all his vows are fled.
On her fair arm her penſive head ſhe lays,
And Xanthus' waves with mournful look ſurveys;
That flood which witneſs'd his inconſtant flame,
When thus he ſwore, and won the yielding dame:
"Theſe ſtreams ſhall ſooner to their fountain move,
"Than I forget my dear Oenone's love."
Roll back, ye ſtreams; back to your fountain run!
Paris is falſe; Oenone is undone.
Ah, wretched maid! think how the moments flew,
Ere you the pangs of this curſt paſſion knew,
When groves could pleaſe, and when you lov'd the plain,
Without the preſence of your perjur'd ſwain.
Thus may the nymph, whene'er ſhe ſpreads the Fan,
In his true colours view perfidious man;
Pleas'd with her virgin ſtate, in foreſts rove,
And never truſt the dangerous hopes of Love.
The Goddeſs ended; merry Momus roſe,
With ſmiles and grins he waggiſh glances throws;
Then with a noiſy laugh foreſtalls his joke,
Mirth flaſhes from his eyes while thus he ſpoke:
Rather let heavenly deeds be painted there,
And by your own examples teach the fair.
Let chaſte Diana on the piece be ſeen,
And the bright creſcent own the Cynthian Queen.
On Latmos' top ſee young Endymion lies,
Feign'd ſleep has clos'd the bloomy lover's eyes:
See, to his ſoft embraces how ſhe ſteals,
And on his lips her warm careſſes ſeals;
No more her hand the glittering javelin holds,
But round his neck her eager arms ſhe folds.
Why are our ſecrets by our bluſhes ſhown?
Virgins are virgins ſtill—while 'tis unknown.
Here let her on ſome flowery bank be laid,
Where meeting beeches weave a graceful ſhade;
Her naked boſom wanton treſſes grace,
And glowing expectation paints her face;
O'er her fair limbs a thin looſe veil is ſpread,
(Stand off! ye ſhepherds; fear Actæon's head)!
Let vigorous Pan th' unguarded minute ſeize,
And in a ſhaggy goat the virgin pleaſe.
Why are our ſecrets by our bluſhes ſhown?
Virgins are virgins ſtill—while 'tis unknown.
There with juſt warmth Aurora's paſſion trace,
Let ſpreading crimſon ſtain her virgin face.
See Cephalus her wantom airs deſpiſe,
While ſhe provokes him with deſiring eyes;
To raiſe his paſſions, ſhe diſplays her charms,
His modeſt hand upon her boſom warms; [ſuade;
Nor looks, nor prayers, nor force, his heart per-
But with diſdain he quits the roſy maid.
Here let diſſolving Leda grace the toy,
Warm cheeks and heaving breaſts reveal her joy;
Beneath the preſſing ſwan ſhe pants for air,
While with his fluttering wings he fans the fair.
There let all-conquering gold exert its power,
And ſoften Danaë in a glittering ſhower.
Would you warn beauty not to cheriſh pride,
Nor vainly in the treacherous bloom confide,
On the machine the ſage Minerva place,
With lineaments of wiſdom mark her face.
See, where ſhe lies near ſome tranſparent flood,
And with her pipe cheers the reſounding wood:
Her image in the floating glaſs ſhe ſpies,
Her bloated cheeks, worn lips, and ſhrivel'd eyes;
She breaks the guiltleſs pipe, and with diſdain
Its ſhatter'd ruins flings upon the plain;
With the loud reed no more her cheek ſhall ſwell,
What! ſpoil her face! No. Warbling ſtrains, farewell.
Shall arts, ſhall ſciences, employ the fair?
Thoſe trifles are beneath Minerva's care.
From Venus let her learn the married life,
And all the virtuous duties of a wife.
Here on a couch extend the Cyprian dame,
Let her eye ſparkle with the glowing flame;
The god of war within her clinging arms
Sinks on her lips, and kindles all her charms.
Paint limping Vulcan with a huſband's care,
And let his brow the cuckold's honours wear;
Beneath the net the captive lovers place,
Their limbs entangled in a cloſe embrace.
Let theſe amours adorn the new machine,
And female nature on the piece be ſeen;
So ſhall the fair, as long as Fans ſhall laſt,
Learn from your bright examples to be chaſte.

BOOK III.

Thus Momus ſpoke. When ſage Minerva roſe;
From her ſweet lips ſmooth elocution flows;
Her ſkilful hand an ivory pallet grac'd,
Where ſhining colours were in order plac'd.
As gods are bleſs'd with a ſuperior ſkill,
And, ſwift as mortal thought, perform their will;
Straight ſhe propoſes, by her art divine,
To bid the paint expreſs her great deſign.
Th' aſſembled powers conſent. She now began,
And her creating pencil ſtain'd the Fan.
O'er the fair field trees ſpread, and rivers flow,
Towers rear their heads, and diſtant mountains grow;
Life ſeems to move within the glowing veins,
And in each face ſome lively paſſion reigns.
Thus have I ſeen woods, hills, and dales appear,
Flocks graze the plains, birds wing the ſilent air,
In darken'd rooms, where light can only paſs
Through the ſmall circle of a convex glaſs;
On the white ſheet the moving figures riſe,
The foreſt waves, clouds float along the ſkies.
She various fables on the piece deſign'd,
That ſpoke the follies of the female kind.
The fate of pride in Niobe ſhe drew
(Be wiſe, ye nymphs, that ſcornful vice ſubdue);
In a wide plain th' imperious mother ſtood,
Whoſe diſtant bounds roſe in a winding wood;

Upon her shoulder flows her mantling hair,
Pride marks her brow, and elevates her air;
A purple robe behind her sweeps the ground,
Whose spacious border golden flowers surround;
She made Latona's altars cease to flame,
And of due honours robb'd her sacred name;
To her own charms she bade fresh incense rise,
And adoration own her brighter eyes.
Seven daughters from her fruitful loins were born,
Seven graceful sons her nuptial bed adorn,
Who, for a mother's arrogant disdain,
Were by Latona's double offspring slain.
Here Phœbus his unnerring arrow drew,
And from his rising steed her first-born threw;
His opening fingers drop the slacken'd rein,
And the pale corse falls headlong to the plain.
Beneath her pencil here two wrestlers bend,
See, to the grasp their swelling nerves distend;
Diana's arrow joins them face to face,
And death unites them in a strict embrace.
Another here flies trembling o'er the plain
(When Heaven pursues, we shun the stroke in vain):
This lifts his supplicating hands and eyes,
And 'midst his humble adoration dies.
As from his thigh this tears the barbed dart,
A surer weapon strikes his throbbing heart:
While that to raise his wounded brother tries,
Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes.
The tender sisters, bath'd in grief, appear
With sable garments and dishevel'd hair,
And o'er their gasping brothers weeping stood;
Some with their tresses stopt the gushing blood;
They strive to stay the fleeting life too late,
And in the pious action share their fate.
Now the proud dame, o'ercome by trembling fear,
With her wide robe protects her only care;
To save her only care in vain she tries,
Close at her feet the latest victim dies.
Down her fair cheek the trickling sorrow flows,
Like dewy spangles on the blushing rose;
Fixt in astonishment she weeping stood,
The plain all purple with her children's blood;
She stiffens with her woes; no more her hair
In easy ringlets wantons in the air;
Motion forsakes her eyes; her veins are dry'd,
And beat no longer with the sanguine tide;
All life is fled; firm marble now she grows,
Which still in tears the mother's anguish shows.

Ye haughty fair, your painted Fans display,
And the just fate of lofty pride survey.
Though lovers oft extol your beauty's power,
And in celestial similies adore;
Though from your features Cupid borrows arms,
And goddesses confess inferior charms;
Do not, vain maid, the flattering tale believe,
Alike thy lovers and thy glass deceive.

Here lively colours Procris' passion tell,
Who to her jealous fears a victim fell.
Here kneels the trembling hunter o'er his wife,
Who rolls her sickening eyes, and gasps for life;
Her drooping head upon her shoulder lies,
And purple gore her snowy bosom dyes.
What guilt, what horror, on his face appears!
See, his red eye-lid seems to swell with tears;
With agony his wringing hands he strains,
And strong convulsions stretch his branching veins.

Learn hence, ye wives! bid vain suspicion cease,
Lose not, in sullen discontent, your peace:
For, when fierce love to jealousy ferments,
A thousand doubts and fears the soul invents;
No more the days in pleasing converse flow,
And nights no more their soft endearments know.

There on the piece the Volscian queen expir'd,
The love of spoils her female bosom fir'd.
Gay Chloreus' arms attract her longing eyes,
And for the painted plume and helm she sighs;
Fearless she follows, bent on gaudy prey,
Till an ill-fated dart obstructs her way;
Down drops the martial maid; the bloody ground
Floats with a torrent from the purple wound;
The mournful nymphs her drooping head sustain,
And try to stop the gushing life in vain.

Thus the raw maid some tawdry coat surveys,
Where the fop's fancy in embroidery plays;
His snowy feather, edg'd with crimson dyes,
And his bright sword-knot, lure her wandering eyes;
Fring'd gloves and gold brocade conspire to move,
Till the nymph falls a sacrifice to love.

Here young Narcissus o'er the fountain stood,
And view'd his image in the crystal flood:
The crystal flood reflects his lovely charms,
And the pleas'd image strives to meet his arms:
No nymph his unexperienc'd breast subdued,
Echo in vain the flying boy pursued,
Himself alone the foolish youth admires,
And with fond look the smiling shade desires:
O'er the smooth lake with fruitless tears he grieves,
His spreading fingers shoot in verdant leaves,
Through his pale veins green sap now gently flows,
And in a short-liv'd flower his beauty blows.

Let vain Narcissus warn each female breast,
That beauty's but a transient good at best.
Like flowers it withers with th' advancing year;
And age, like winter, robs the blooming fair.
Oh, Araminta! cease thy wonted pride,
Nor longer in thy faithless charms confide;
Ev'n while the glass reflects thy sparkling eyes,
Their lustre and thy rosy colour flies!

Thus on the Fan the breathing figures shine,
And all the powers applaud the wise design.

The Cyprian queen the painted gift receives,
And with a grateful bow the synod leaves.
To the low world she bends her steepy way,
Where Strephon pass'd the solitary day.
She found him in a melancholy grove,
His down-cast eyes betray'd desponding love;
The wounded bark confess'd his slighted flame,
And every tree bore false Corinna's name:
In a cool shade he lay with folded arms,
Curses his fortune, and upbraids her charms;
When Venus to his wondering eyes appears,
And with these words relieves his amorous cares:

Rise! happy youth; this bright machine survey,
Whose rattling sticks my busy fingers sway;
This present shall thy cruel charmer move,
And in her fickle bosom kindle love.

The Fan shall flutter in all female hands,
And various fashions learn from various lands.

For this ſhall elephants their ivory ſhed;
And poliſh'd ſticks the waving engine ſpread:
His clouded mail the tortoiſe ſhall reſign,
And round the rivet pearly circles ſhine.
On this ſhall Indians all their art employ,
And with bright colours ſtain the gaudy toy;
Their paint ſhall here in wildeſt fancies flow,
Their dreſs, their cuſtoms, their religion, ſhow:
So ſhall the Britiſh fair their minds improve,
And on the Fan to diſtant climates rove.
Here China's ladies ſhall their pride diſplay,
And ſilver figures gild their looſe array;
This boaſts her little feet and winking eyes;
That tunes the fife, or tinkling cymbal plies
Here croſs-legg'd nobles in rich ſtate ſhall dine;
There in bright mail diſtorted heroes ſhine.
The peeping Fan in modern times ſhall riſe,
Through which unſeen the female ogle flies;
This ſhall in temples the fly maid conceal,
And ſhelter love beneath devotion's veil.
Gay France ſhall make the Fan her artiſt's care,
And with the coſtly trinket arm the fair.
As learned orators, that touch the heart,
With various action raiſe their ſoothing art,
Both head and hand affect the liſtening throng,
And humour each expreſſion of the tongue;
So ſhall each paſſion by the Fan be ſeen,
From noiſy anger to the ſullen ſpleen.
While Venus ſpoke, joy ſhone in Strephon's eyes;
Proud of the gift, he to Corinna flies:
But Cupid (who delights in amorous ill, Wounds hearts, and leaves them to a woman's will)
With certain aim a golden arrow drew,
Which to Leander's panting boſom flew.
Leander lov'd, and to the ſprightly dame
In gentle ſighs reveal'd his growing flame:
Sweet ſmiles Corinna to his ſighs returns,
And for the ſop in equal paſſion burns.
Lo, Strephon comes! and, with a ſuppliant bow,
Offers the preſent, and renews his vow.
When ſhe the fate of Niobe beheld,
Why has my pride againſt my heart rebell'd?
She ſighing cry'd. Diſdain forſook her breaſt,
And Strephon now was thought a worthy gueſt.
In Procris' boſom when ſhe ſaw the dart,
She juſtly blames her own ſuſpicious heart;
Imputes her diſcontent to jealous fear,
And knows her Strephon's conſtancy ſincere.
When on Camilla's fate her eye ſhe turns,
No more for ſhow and equipage ſhe burns:
She learns Leander's paſſion to deſpiſe,
And looks on merit with diſcerning eyes.
Narciſſus' change to the vain virgin ſhows,
Who truſts to beauty, truſts the fading roſe.
Youth flies apace, with youth your beauty flies;
Love then, ye virgins, ere the bloſſom dies.
Thus Pallas taught her. Strephon weds the dame;
And Hymen's torch diffus'd the brighteſt flame.

THE SHEPHERD'S WEEK,

IN SIX PASTORALS. 1714.

WITH THE AUTHOR'S NOTES.

" —— Libeat mihi ſordida rura,
" Atque humiles habitare caſas.—"——VIRG.

PROEME TO THE COURTEOUS READER.

GREAT marvel hath it been (and that not unworthily) to divers worthy wits, that in this our iſland of Britain, in all rare ſciences ſo greatly abounding, more eſpecially in all kinds of poeſy highly flouriſhing, no poet (though otherwiſe of notable cunning in roundelays) hath hit on the right ſimple eclogue, after the true ancient guiſe of Theocritus, before this mine attempt.

Other poet travailing in this plain high-way of paſtoral, know I none. Yet, certes, ſuch it behoved a paſtoral to be, as nature in the country affordeth; and the manners alſo meetly copied from the ruſtical folk therein. In this alſo my love to my native country (Britain) much pricketh me forward, to deſcribe aright the manners of our own honeſt and laborious ploughmen, in no wiſe, ſure, more unworthy a Britiſh poet's imitation, than thoſe of Sicily or Arcadie; albeit, not ignorant I am, what a rout and rabblement of critical gallimawfry hath been made of late days by certain young men of inſipid delicacy, concerning, I wiſt not what, golden age, and other outrageous conceits, to which they would confine paſtoral. Whereof, I avow, I account nought at all, knowing no age ſo juſtly to be inſtiled golden, as this of our ſovereign lady Queen Anne.

This idle trumpery (only fit for ſchools and ſchool boys) unto that ancient Doric ſhepherd, Theocritus, or his mates, was never known; he rightly, throughout his fifth Idyll, maketh his louts give full language, and behold their goats at rut in all ſimplicity:

Ὦπόλος ὄκκ' ἐσορῇ τὰς μηκάδας, οἷα βατεῦνται,
Τάκεται ὀφθαλμιὼς, ὅτι ἐ τράγος αὐτὸς ἐγένετο.
THEOC. Id. i. 87.

Verily, as little pleaſance receiveth a true home-bred taſte, from all the fine finical new-fangled fooleries of this gay Gothic garniture, wherewith they ſo nicely bedeck their court-clowns, or clown-courtiers (for which to call them rightly I wot not), as would a prudent citizen journeying to his country farms, ſhould he find them occupied by people of this motley make, inſtead of plain down-right hearty cleanly folk, ſuch as be now tenants to the burgeſſes of this realm.

Furthermore, it is my purpoſe, gentle reader, to ſet before thee, as it were a picture, or rather lively landſcape of thy own country, juſt as thou mighteſt ſee it, didſt thou take a walk into the fields at the proper ſeaſon: even as Maiſter Milton hath elegantly ſet forth the ſame:

" As one who long in populous city pent,
" Where houſes thick, and ſewers annoy the air,
" Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
" Among the pleaſant villages and farms
" Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives de-
" light;
" The ſmell of grain, or tedded graſs, or kine,
" Or dairy, each rural ſight, each rural ſound."

Thou wilt not find my ſhepherdeſſes idly piping on oaten reeds, but milking the kine, tying up the ſheaves, or, if the hogs are aſtray, driving them to the ſtyes. My ſhepherd gathereth none other noſegays but what are the growth of our own fields; he ſleepeth not under myrtle ſhades, but under a hedge; nor doth he vigilantly defend his flocks from wolves, becauſe there are none, as Maiſter Spenſer well obſerveth:

" Well is known that, ſince the Saxon king,
" Never was wolf ſeen, many or ſome,
" Nor in all Kent nor in Chriſtendom."

For as much as I have mentioned Maiſter Spenſer, ſoothly I muſt acknowledge him a bard of ſweeteſt memorial. Yet hath his ſhepherd's boy at ſome times raiſed his ruſtic reed to rhymes more rumbling than rural. Divers grave points alſo hath he handled of churchly matter, and doubts in religion daily ariſing, to great clerks only appertaining. What liketh me beſt are his names' indeed right ſimple and meet for the country' ſuch as Lobbin, Cuddy, Hobbinol, Diggon, and others, ſome of which I have made bold to borrow. Moreover, as he called his Eclogues, the " Shepherd's Calendar," and divided the ſame into twelve months, I have choſen (peradventure not over raſhly) to name mine by the days of the week, omitting Sunday, or the Sabbath, ours being ſuppoſed to be Chriſtian ſhepherds, and to be then at church-worſhip. Yet further, of many of Maiſter Spenſer's eclogues it may be obſerved, though months they be called, of the ſaid months therein nothing is ſpecified; wherein I have alſo eſteemed him worthy mine imitation.

That principally, courteous reader, whereof I would have thee to be advertiſed (ſeeing I depart from the vulgar uſage), is touching the language of my ſhepherds; which is, ſoothly to ſay, ſuch as is neither ſpoken by the country maiden, or the courtly dame; nay, not only ſuch as in the preſent times is not uttered, but was never uttered in times paſt; and, if I judge aright, will never be uttered in times future: it having too much of the country to be fit for the court, too much of the court to be fit for the country; too much of the language of old times to be fit for the preſent, too much of the preſent to have been fit for the old, and too much of both to be fit for any time to come. Granted alſo it is, that in this my language I ſeem unto myſelf as a London maſon, who calculateth his work for a term of years, when he buildeth with old materials upon a ground-rent that is not his own, which ſoon turns to rubbiſh and ruins. For this point no reaſon can I allege, only deep learned enſamples having led me thereunto.

But here again much comfort ariſeth in me, from the hopes, in that I conceive, when theſe words, in the courſe of tranſitory things, ſhall decay, it may ſo hap, in meet time, that ſome lover of ſimplicity ſhall ariſe, who ſhall have the hardineſs to render theſe mine eclogues into ſuch modern dialect as ſhall be then underſtood, to which end gloſſes and explications of uncouth paſtoral terms are annexed.

Gentle reader, turn over the leaf, and entertain thyſelf with the proſpect of thine own country, limned by the painful hand of thy loving countryman,

JOHN GAY.

PROLOGUE

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD VISCOUNT BOLINGBROKE.

Lo I, who erſt beneath a tree,
Sung Bumkinet and Bowzybee,
And Blouzelind, and Marian bright,
In apron blue, or apron white,
Now write my ſonnets in a book,
For my good Lord of Bolingbroke.

As lads and laſſes ſtood around
To hear my boxen hautboy ſound,
Our clerk came poſting o'er the green
With doleful tidings of the queen;
The queen, he ſaid, to whom we owe
Sweet peace, that maketh riches flow;

That queen, who eas'd our tax of late,
Was dead, alas! and lay in ſtate.
At this, in tears was Cicely ſeen,
Buxoma tore her pinners clean,
In doleful dumps ſtood every clown,
The parſon rent his band and gown.
For me, when as I heard that death
Had ſnatch'd queen Anne to Elizabeth,
I broke my reed, and ſighing, ſwore
I'd weep for Blouzelind no more.
While thus we ſtood as in a ſtound,
And wet with tears, like dew the ground,
Full ſoon by bonefire and by bell
We learnt our liege was paſſing well.
A ſkilful leach (ſo God him ſpeed)
They ſaid had wrought this bleſſed deed.
This leach Arbuthnot was yclept,
Who many a night not once had ſlept;
But watch'd our gracious ſovereign ſtill;
For who could reſt when ſhe was ill?
Oh, may'ſt thou henceforth ſweetly ſleep!
Sheer, ſwains, oh! ſheer your ſofteſt ſheep,
To ſwell his couch; for well I ween,
He ſav'd the realm, who ſav'd the queen.
Quoth I, pleaſe God, I'll hye with glee
To court, this Arbuthnot to ſee.
I ſold my ſheep and lambkins too,
For ſilver loops and garment blue;
My boxen hautboy, ſweet of ſound,
For lace that edg'd mine hat around;
For Lightfoot and my ſcrip, I got
A gorgeous ſword, and eke a knot.
So forth I far'd to court with ſpeed,
Of ſoldier's drum withouten dreed;
For peace allays the ſhepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of grenadier.
There ſaw I ladies all a-row,
Before their queen in ſeemly ſhow.
No more I'll ſing Buxoma brown,
Like goldfinch in her Sunday gown;
Nor Clumſilis, nor Marian bright,
Nor damſel that Hobnelia hight.
But Lanſdowne, freſh as flower of May,
And Berkeley, lady blithe and gay;
And Angleſea, whoſe ſpeech exceeds
The voice of pipe, or oaten reeds;
And blooming Hyde, with eyes ſo rare;
And Montague beyond compare:
Such ladies fair would I depaint,
In roundelay or ſonnet quaint.
There many a worthy wight I've ſeen,
In ribbon blue and ribbon green:
As Oxford, who a wand doth bear,
Like Moſes, in our bibles fair;
Who for our traffic forms deſigns,
And gives to Britain Indian mines.
Now, ſhepherds, clip your fleecy care;
Ye maids, your ſpinning-wheels prepare;
Ye weavers, all your ſhuttles throw,
And bid broad cloths and ſerges grow;
For trading free ſhall thrive again,
Nor leaſings lewd affright the ſwain.
There ſaw I St. John, ſweet of mien,
Full ſtedfaſt both to church and queen;
With whoſe fair name I'll deck my ſtrain;
St. John, right courteous to the ſwain.
For thus he told me on a day,
Trim are thy ſonnets, gentle Gay;
And, certes, mirth it were to ſee
Thy joyous madrigals twice three,
With preface meet, and notes profound,
Imprinted fair, and well y-bound.
All ſuddenly then home I ſped,
And did ev'n as my lord had ſaid.
Lo, here thou haſt mine eclogues fair,
But let not theſe detain thine ear.
Let not th' affairs of ſtates and kings
Wait, while our Bowzybeus ſings.
Rather than verſe of ſimple ſwain
Should ſtay the trade of France or Spain;
Or for the plaint of parſon's maid,
Yon emperor's packets be delay'd;
In ſooth, I ſwear by holy Paul,
I'd burn book, preface, notes, and all.

MONDAY; OR THE SQUABBLE.

LOBBIN CLOUT, CUDDY, CLODDIPOLE.

Lobbin Clout.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but juſt awake,
No thruſtles ſhrill the bramble-buſh forſake,
No chirping lark the welkin ſheen invokes,
No damſel yet the ſwelling udder ſtrokes;
O'er yonder hill does ſcant the dawn appear:
Then why does Cuddy leave his cot ſo rear?

Cuddy.

Ah Lobbin Clout! I ween my plight is gueſt,
For he that loves, a ſtranger is to reſt;
If ſwains belie not, thou haſt prov'd the ſmart,
And Blouzelinda's miſtreſs of thy heart.

Ver. 3. Welkin, the ſame as welken, an old Saxon word, ſignifying a cloud; by poetical licence it is frequently taken for the element or ſky, as may appear by this verſe in the dream of Chaucer,

" Ne in all the welkin was no cloud."

—Sheen or ſhine, an old word for ſhining or bright.

Ver. 5. Scant, uſed in the ancient Britiſh authors for ſcarce.

Ver. 6. Rear, an expreſſion in ſeveral counties of England, for early in the morning.

Ver. 7. To ween, derived from the Saxon, to think or conceive.

This rising rear betokeneth well thy mind,
Those arms are folded for thy Blouzelind.
And well, I trow, our piteous plights agree:
Thee Blouzelinda smites, Buxoma me.

Lobbin Clout.

Ah, Blouzelind! I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the newn-fall'n calf:
Woe worth the tongue! may blisters sore it gall,
That names Buxoma Blouzelind withal.

Cuddy.

Hold, witless Lobbin Clout, I thee advise,
Lest blisters sore on thy own tongue arise.
Lo, yonder, Cloddipole, the blithsome swain,
The wisest lout of all the neighbouring plain!
From Cloddipole we learn to read the skies,
To know when hail will fall, or winds arise.
He taught us erst the heifer's tail to view, [sue:
When stuck aloft, that showers would straight en-
He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gathering rain.
When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear.
Let Cloddipole then hear us twain rehearse,
And praise his sweetheart in alternate verse.
I'll wager this same oaken staff with thee,
That Cloddipole shall give the prize to me.

Lobbin Clout.

See this tobacco-pouch, that's lin'd with hair,
Made of the skin of sleekest fallow-deer.
This pouch, that's ty'd with tape of reddest hue,
I'll wager that the prize shall be my due.

Cuddy.

Begin thy carols then, thou vaunting slouch!
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch.

Lobbin Clout.

My Blouzelinda is the blithest lass,
Than primrose sweeter, or the clover-glass.
Fair is the king-cup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daizy that beside her grows;
Fair is the gilliflower, of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet:
But Blouzelind's than gilliflower more fair,
Than daizy, marygold, or king-cup rare.

Cuddy.

My brown Buxoma is the featest maid,
That e'er at wake delightsome gambol play'd.
Clean as young lambkins or the goose's down,
And like the goldfinch in her Sunday gown.
The witless lamb may sport upon the plain,
The frisking kid delight the gaping swain,
The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,
And my cur Tray play defter feats around;
But neither lamb, nor kid, nor calf, nor Tray,
Dance like Buxoma on the first of May.

Lobbin Clout.

Sweet is my toil when Blouzelind is near;
Of her bereft, 'tis winter all the year.
With her no sultry summer's heat I know;
In winter, when she's nigh, with love I glow.

Come, Blouzelinda, ease thy swain's desire,
My summer's shadow, and my winter's fire!

Cuddy.

As with Buxoma once I work'd at hay,
Ev'n noon-tide labour seem'd an holiday;
And holidays, if haply she were gone,
Like worky-days I wish'd would soon be done.
Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind! my love repay,
And all the year shall then be holiday.

Lobbin Clout.

As Blouzelinda, in a gamesome mood,
Behind a haycock loudly laughing stood,
I slily ran, and snatch'd a hasty kiss;
She wip'd her lips, nor took it much amiss.
Believe me, Cuddy, while I'm bold to say,
Her breath was sweeter than the ripen'd hay.

Cuddy.

As my Buxoma, in a morning fair,
With gentle finger strok'd her milky care,
I queintly stole a kiss; at first, 'tis true,
She frown'd, yet after granted one or two.
Lobbin, I swear, believe who will my vows,
Her breath by far excell'd the breathing cows.

Lobbin Clout.

Leek to the Welch, to Dutchmen butter's dear,
Of Irish swains potatoe is the cheer;
Oats for their feasts the Scottish shepherds grind,
Sweet turnips are the food of Blouzelind.
While she loves turnips, butter I'll despise,
Nor leeks, nor oatmeal, nor potatoe, prize.

Cuddy.

In good roast-beef my landlord sticks his knife,
The capon fat delights his dainty wife,
Pudding our parson eats, the squire loves hare,
But white-pot thick is my Buxoma's fare.
While she loves white-pot, capon ne'er shall be,
Nor hare, nor beef, nor pudding, food for me.

Lobbin Clout.

As once I play'd at blindman's buff, it hapt
About my eyes the towel thick was wrapt.
I miss'd the swains, and seiz'd on Blouzelind.
True speaks that ancient proverb, "Love is blind."

Cuddy.

As at hot-cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown;
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye.

Ver. 25. Erst, a contraction of ere this; it signifies some time ago, or formerly.

Ver. 56. Deft, an old word, signifying brisk or nimble.

Ver. 69. Eftsoons, from eft, an ancient British word, signifying soon. So that eftsoons is a doubling of the word soon; which is, as it were, to say, twice soon or very soon.

Ver. 79. Queint has various significations in the ancient English authors. I have used it in this place in the same sense as Chaucer hath done in his Miller's Tale. "As Clerkes being full subtle and queint" (by which he means arch or waggish); and not in that obscene sense wherein he useth it in the line immediatelly following.

Ver. 85.

" Populus Alcidæ gratissima, Vitis Iaccho,
" Formosæ Myrtus Veneri, sua Laurea Phœbo,
" Phillis amat Corylos. Illas dum Phillis amabit,
" Nec Myrtus vincet Corylos nec Laurea Phœbi."
&c. VIRG.

Lobbin Clout.

On two near elms the slacken'd cord I hung,
Now high, now low, my Blouzelinda swung.
With the rude wind her rumpled garment rose,
And show'd her taper leg, and scarlet hose.

Cuddy.

Across the fallen oak the plank I laid,
And myself pois'd against the tottering maid.
High leap'd the plank; adown Buxoma fell;
I spy'd—but faithful sweethearts never tell.

Lobin Clout.

This riddle, Cuddy, if thou canst explain,
This wily riddle puzzles every swain.
"What flower is that which bears the virgin's
"name,
"The richest metal joined with the same?"

Cuddy.

Answer, thou carle, and judge this riddle right,
I'll frankly own thee for a cunning wight.
"What flower is that which royal honour craves,
"Adjoin the virgin, and 'tis strown on graves?"

Cloddipole.

Forbear, contending louts, give o'er your strains!
An oaken staff each merits for his pains.
But see the sun-beams bright to labour warn,
And gild the thatch of goodman Hodge's barn.
Your herds for want of water stand a-dry,
They're weary of your songs—and so am I.

TUESDAY; OR, THE DITTY.

Marian.

Young Colin Clout, a lad of peerless meed,
Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed;
In every wood his carols sweet were known,
At every wake his nimble feats were shown.
When in the ring the rustic routs he threw,
The damsels' pleasures with his conquests grew;
Or when aslant the cudgel threats his head,
His danger smites the breast of every maid,
But chief of Marian. Marian lov'd the swain,
The parson's maid, and neatest of the plain;
Marian, that soft could stroke the udder'd cow,
Or lessen with her sieve the barley-mow;
Marbled with sage the hardening cheese she press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill confess'd;
But Marian now, devoid of country cares,
Nor yellow butter, nor sage cheese, prepares;
For yearning love the witless maid employs,
And love, say swains, "all busy heed destroys."
Colin makes mock at all her piteous smart;
A lass that Cicely hight had won his heart,
Cicely the western lass that tends the kee,
The rival of the parson's maid was she.
In dreary shade now Marian lies along,
And, mixt with sighs, thus wails in plaining song:

Ver. 103—110 were not in the early editions.
Ver. 113. Marygold.
Ver. 117. Rosemary.

"Dic quibus in terris inscripti nomina Regum
"Nascantur Flores."——VIRG.

Ver. 120. "Et vitula tu dignus et hic."—VIRG.
Ver. 21. Kee, a west country word for kine or cows.

Ah, woful day! ah, woful noon and morn!
When first by thee my younglings white were shorn;
Then first, I ween, I cast a lover's eye,
My sheep were silly, but more silly I.
Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart,
They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart.
Ah, Colin? canst thou leave thy sweetheart true?
What I have done for thee, will Cicely do?
Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn?
Will she with housewife's hand provide thy meat?
And every Sunday morn thy neckcloth plait,
Which o'er thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
In service-time drew Cicely's eyes aside?
Where'er I gad, I cannot hide my care,
My new disasters in my look appear.
White as the curd my ruddy cheek is grown,
So thin my features that I'm hardly known.
Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of ashes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk;
Unwittingly of Marian they divine,
And wist not that with thoughtful love I pine.
Yet Colin Clout, untoward shepherd swain,
Walks whistling blithe, while pitiful I plain.
Whilom with thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To moil all day, and merry-make at night.
If in the soil you guide the crooked share,
Your early breakfast is my constant care;
And when with even hand you strow the grain,
I fright the thievish rooks from off the plain.
In misling days, when I my thresher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd;
Lest in the music of the whirling flail,
To gaze on thee I left the smoking pail:
In harvest when the sun was mounted high,
My leathern bottle did thy draught supply;
Whene'er you mow'd, I follow'd with the sake,
And have full oft been sun-burnt for thy sake:
When in the welkin gathering showers were seen,
I lagg'd the last with Colin on the green;
And when at eve returning with thy car,
Awaiting heard the jingling bells from far,
Straight on the fire the sooty pot I plac'd,
To warm thy broth I burnt my hands for haste.
When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
I slic'd the luncheon from the barley-loaf;
With crumbled bread I thicken'd well thy mess.
Ah, love me more, or love thy pottage less!
Last Friday's eve, when as the sun was set,
I, near yon stile, three fallow gypsies met.
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook:
They said that many crosses I must prove;
Some in my wordly gain, but most in love.
Next morn I miss'd three hens and our old cock,
And off the hedge two pinners and a smock;
I bore these losses with a Christian mind,
And no mishaps could feel while thou wert kind.
But since, alas! I grew my Colin's scorn,
I've known no pleasure, night, or noon, or morn.
Help me, ye gypsies; bring him home again,
And to a constant lass give back her swain.
Have I not sat with thee full many a night,
When dying embers were our only light,

When every creature did in ſlumbers lie,
Beſides our cat, my Colin Clout, and I?
No troublous thoughts the cat or Colin move,
While I alone am kept awake by love.
Remember, Colin, when at laſt year's wake
I bought the coſtly preſent for thy ſake;
Could'ſt thou ſpell o'er the poſy on thy knife,
And with another change thy ſtate of life?
If thou forget'ſt, I wot, I can repeat,
My memory can tell the verſe ſo ſweet:
"As this is grav'd upon this knife of thine,
"So is thy image on this heart of mine."
But woe is me! ſuch preſents luckleſs prove,
For knives, they tell me, always ſever love.
Thus Marian wail'd, her eyes with tears brim-full,
When Goody Dobbins brought her cow to bull.
With apron blue to dry her tears ſhe fought;
Then ſaw the cow well ſerv'd, and took a groat.

WEDNESDAY; OR, THE DUMPS *.

Sparabella.

THE wailings of a maiden I recite,
A maiden fair that Sparabella hight.
Such ſtrains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat,
Nor the gay goldfinch chaunts ſo ſweet a note.
No magpye chatter'd, nor the painted jay,
No ox was heard to low, nor aſs to bray;
No ruſtling breezes play'd the leaves among,
While thus her madrigal the damſel ſung.
A while, O d'Urfey, lend an ear or twain
Nor, though in homely guiſe, my verſe diſdain;
Whether thou ſeek'ſt new kingdoms in the ſun,
Whether thy muſe does at Newmarket run,
Or does with goſſips at a feaſt regale,
And heighten her conceits with ſack and ale,
Or elſe at wakes with Joan and Hodge rejoice,
Where d'Urfey's lyrics ſwell in every voice;
Yet ſuffer me, thou bard of wond'rous meed,
Amid thy bays to weave this rural weed.
Now the ſun drove adown the weſtern road,
And oxen laid at reſt forgot the goad,
The clown fatigued trudg'd homeward with his ſpade,
Acroſs the meadows ſtretch'd the lengthen'd ſhade;
When Sparabella, penſive and forlorn,
Alike with yearning love and labour worn,
Lean'd on her rake, and ſtraight with doleful guiſe
Did this ſad plaint in mournful notes deviſe.
Come night as dark as pitch, ſurround my head,
From Sparabella Bumkinet is fled;
The ribbon that his valorous cudgel won,
Laſt Sunday happier Clumſilis put on.
Sure if he'd eyes (but love they ſay has none)
I whilom by that ribbon had been known.
Ah, well-a-day! I'm ſhent with baneful ſmart,
For with the ribbon he beſtow'd his heart.
"My plaint, ye laſſes, with this burthen aid,
"'Tis hard ſo true a damſel dies a maid."
Shall heavy Clumſilis with me compare?
View this, ye lovers, and like me deſpair.
Her blubber'd lip by ſmutty pipes is worn,
And in her breath tobacco whiffs are borne!
The cleanly cheeſe-preſs ſhe could never turn,
Her aukward fiſt did ne'er employ the churn;
If e'er ſhe brew'd, the drink would ſtraight go ſour,
Before it ever felt the thunder's power;
No houſewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To ſum up all, her tongue confeſs'd the ſhrew.
"My plaint, ye laſſes, with this burthen aid,
"'Tis hard ſo true a damſel dies a maid."
I've often ſeen my viſage in yon lake,
Nor are my features of the homelieſt make:
Though Clumſilis may boaſt a whiter dye,
Yet the black ſloe turns in my rolling eye;
And faireſt bloſſoms drop with every blaſt,
But the brown beauty will like hollies laſt.
Her wan complexion's like the wither'd leek,
While Katherine pears adorn my ruddy cheek.
Yet ſhe, alas! the witleſs lout hath won,
And by her gain poor Sparabell's undone!
Let hares and hounds in coupling ſtraps unite,
The clucking hen make friendſhip with the kite;

---

* Dumps, or dumbs, made uſe of to expreſs a fit of the ſullens. Some have pretended that it is derived from Dumops, a king of Egypt, that built a pyramid, and died of melancholy. So mopes, after the ſame manner, is thought to have come from Merops, another Egyptian king, that died of the ſame diſtemper. But our Engliſh antiquaries have conjectured that dumps, which is a grievous heavineſs of ſpirits, comes from the word dumplin, the heavieſt kind of pudding that is eaten in this country; much uſed in Norfolk, and other counties of England.

Ver. 5.
"Immemor herbarum quos eſt mirata juvenca
"Certantes, quorum ſtupefactæ carmine lynces,
"Et mutata ſuos requiêrunt flumina curſus."
VIRG.

Ver. 9.
"Tu mihi, ſeu magni ſuperas jam ſaxa Timavi,
"Sive oram Illyrici legis æquoris—"——VIRG.

Ver. 11. An opera written by this author, called, "The World in the Sun, or the Kingdom of Birds;" he is alſo famous for his ſong on the Newmarket horſe-race, and ſeveral others that are ſung by the Britiſh ſwains.

Ver. 17. Meed, an old word for fame or renown.

Ver. 18.
—"Hanc ſine tempora circum
"Inter victrices ederam tibi ſerpere lauros."
VIRG.

Ver. 25. "Incumbens tereti Damon ſit cœpit
"olivæ."——VIRG.

Ver. 33. Shent, an old word, ſignifying hurt or harmed.

Ver. 37. "Mopſo Niſa datur, quid non ſpere-
"mus amantes?"——VIRG.

Ver. 49. "Nec ſum adeo informis, nuper me in
"littore vidi."——VIRG.

Ver. 53. "Alba liguſtra cadunt, vaccinia nigra
"leguntur."——VIRG.

Ver. 59.
"Jungentur jam gryphes equis; ævoque ſequenti
"Cum canibus timidi venient ad pocula damæ."
VIRG.

Let the fox ſimply wear the nuptial nooſe,
And join in wedlock with the wadd'ling gooſe;
For love hath brought a ſtranger thing to paſs,
The faireſt ſhepherd weds the ſouleſt laſs.
" My plaint, ye laſſes, with this burthen aid,
" 'Tis hard ſo true a damſel dies a maid."
Sooner ſhall cats diſport in waters clear,
And ſpeckled mackrel graze the meadows fair;
Sooner ſhall ſcreech-owls baſk in ſunny day,
And the ſlow aſs on trees, like ſquirrels, play;
Sooner ſhall ſnails on inſect pinions rove;
Than I forget my ſhepherd's wonted love.
" My plaint, ye laſſes, with this burthen aid,
" 'Tis hard ſo true a damſel dies a maid."
Ah! didſt thou know what proffers I withſtood,
When late I met the 'ſquire in yonder wood!
To me he ſped, regardleſs of his game,
While all my cheek was glowing red with ſhame;
My lip he kiſs'd, and prais'd my healthful look,
Then from his purſe of ſilk a guinea took,
Into my hand he forc'd the tempting gold,
While I with modeſt ſtruggling broke his hold.
He ſwore that Dick, in livery ſtriped with lace,
Should wed me ſoon, to keep me from diſgrace;
But I nor footman priz'd, nor golden fee;
For what is lace or gold compar'd to thee?
" My plaint, ye laſſes, with this burthen aid,
" 'Tis hard ſo true a damſel dies a maid."
Now plain I ken whence love his riſe begun;
Sure he was born ſome bloody butcher's ſon,
Bred up in ſhambles where our younglings ſlain
Erſt taught him miſchief, and to ſport with pain.
The father only ſilly ſheep annoys,
The ſon the fillier ſhepherdeſs deſtroys.
Does ſon or father greater miſchief do?
The ſire is cruel, ſo the ſon is too.
" My plaint, ye laſſes, with this burthen aid,
" 'Tis hard ſo true a damſel dies a maid."
Farewell, ye woods, ye meads, ye ſtreams that flow;
A ſudden death ſhall rid me of my woe.
This penknife keen my windpipe ſhall divide.
What! ſhall I fall as ſqueaking pigs have dy'd!
No.—To ſome tree this carcaſe I'll ſuſpend.
But worrying curs find ſuch untimely end!
I'll ſpeed me to the pond, where the high ſtool
On the long plank hangs o'er the muddy pool,
That ſtool, the dread of every ſcolding queen
Yet, ſure a lover ſhould not die ſo mean!
There plac'd aloft, I'll rave and rail by fits,
Through all the pariſh ſay I've loſt my wits;
And thence, if courage holds, myſelf I'll throw,
And quench my paſſion in the lake below.
" Ye laſſes, ceaſe your burden, ceaſe to moan,
" And, by my caſe forewarn'd, go mind your own."
The ſun was ſet; the night came on apace,
And falling dews bewet around the place;
The bat takes airy rounds on leathern wings,
And the hoarſe owl his woful dirges ſings;
The prudent maiden deems it now too late,
And till to-morrow comes defers her fate.

Ver. 67.
" Ante leves ergo paſcentur in æthere cervi,
" Et freta deſtituent nudos in littore piſces—
" Quàm noſtro illius labatur pectore vultus."
VIRG.

Ver. 89. To ken. Scire. Chaucer, to ken, and kend; notus A. S. cunnan. Goth. kunnan. Germanis, kennen. Danit, kiende. Iſlandis, kunna. Belgis, kennen. This word is of general uſe, but not very common, though not unknown to the vulgar Ken for proſpicere is well known, and uſed to diſcover by the eye—RAY, F. R. S.

" Nunc ſcio quid ſit amor, &c.
" Crudelis mater magis an puer improbus ille?
" Improbus ille puer, crudelis tu quoque mater."
VIRG.

Ver. 99. " —vivite ſylvæ:
" Præceps aërii ſpeculâ de montis in undas
" Deferar."——VIRG.

THURSDAY; OR, THE SPELL.

Hobnelia.

HOBNELIA, ſeated in a dreary vale,
In penſive mood rehears'd her piteous tale;
Her piteous tale the winds in ſighs bemoan,
And pining Echo anſwers groan for groan.
I rue the day, a rueful day I trow,
The woful day, a day indeed of wo!
When Lubberkin to town his cattle drove,
A maiden fine bedight he hapt to love;
The maiden fine bedight his love retains,
And for the village he forſakes the plains.
Return, my Lubberkin, theſe ditties hear;
Spells will I try, and ſpells ſhall eaſe my care.
" With my ſharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
When firſt the year I heard the cuckow ſing,
And call with welcome note the budding ſpring,
I ſtraightway ſet a-running with ſuch haſte,
Deborah that won the ſmock ſcarce ran ſo faſt;
Till ſpent for lack of breath, quite weary grown,
Upon a riſing bank I ſat adown,
Then doff'd my ſhoe, and by my troth, I ſwear,
Therein I ſpy'd this yellow frizzled hair,
As like to Lubberkin's in curl and hue,
As if upon his comely pate it grew.
" With my ſharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
At eve laſt midſummer no ſleep I fought,
But to the field a bag of hemp-ſeed brought;
I ſcatter'd round the ſeed on every ſide,
And three times in a trembling accent cry'd,
" This hemp-ſeed with my virgin hand I ſow,
" Who ſhall my true-love be, the crop ſhall mow."
I ſtrait look'd back, and, if my eyes ſpeak truth,
With his keen ſcythe behind me came the youth.
" With my ſharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
Laſt Valentine, the day when birds of kind
Their paramours with mutual chirpings find;

Ver. 8. Dight, or bedight, from the Saxon word dightan, which ſignifies to ſet in order.

Ver. 21. Doff and don, contracted from the words do off and do on.

I early rose, just at the break of day,
Before the sun had chas'd the stars away;
A-field I went, amid the morning dew
To milk my kine (for so should housewives do);
Thee first I spy'd; and the first swain we see,
In spite of fortune shall our true-love be.
See, Lubberkin, each bird his partner take;
And canst thou then thy sweetheart dear forsake?
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
Last May-day fair I search'd to find a snail,
That might my secret lover's name reveal.
Upon a gooseberry-bush a snail I found
(For always snails near sweetest fruit abound).
I seiz'd the vermine, whom I quickly sped,
And on the earth the milk-white embers spread.
Slow crawl'd the snail, and, if a right can spell,
In the soft ashes mark'd a curious L;
Oh, may this wond'rous omen lucky prove!
For L is found in Lubberkin and Love. [ground,
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
Two hazel nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This with the loudest bounce me sore amaz'd,
That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd.
As blaz'd the nut, so may thy passion grow;
For 'twas thy nut that did so brightly glow.
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
As peascods once I pluck'd, I chanc'd to see,
One that was closely fill'd with three times three,
Which when I opp'd I safely home convey'd,
And o'er the door the spell in secret laid;
My wheel I turn'd, and sung a ballad new,
While from the spindle I the fleeces drew; [in
The latch mov'd up, when, who should first come
But, in his proper person—Lubberkin.
I broke my yarn, surpris'd the sight to see;
Sure sign that he would break his word with me.
Eftsoons I join'd it with my wonted slight:
So may again his love with mine unite!
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
This lady-fly I take from off the grass,
Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass,
" Fly, lady-bird, north, south, or east, or west,
" Fly where the man is found that I love best."
He leaves my hand; see to the west he's flown,
To call my true-love from the faithless town.
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."

I pare this pippin round and round again,
My shepherd's name to flourish on the plain,
I fling th' unbroken paring o'er my head,
Upon the grass a perfect L is read;
Yet on my heart a fairer L is seen,
Than what the paring makes upon the green.
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
This pippin shall another trial make,
See from the core two kernels brown I take;
This on my cheek for Lubberkin is worn;
And Boobyclod on t' other side is borne.
But Boobyclod soon drops upon the ground,
A certain token that his love's unsound;
While Lubberkin sticks firmly to the last:
Oh were his lips to mine but join'd so fast!
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
As Lubberkin once slept beneath a tree,
I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee.
He wist not when the hempen string I drew.
Now mine I quickly doff, of inkle blue.
Together fast I tye the garters twain;
And while I knit the knot repeat this strain:
" Three times a true-love's knot I tye secure,
" Firm be the knot, firm may his love endure!"
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
As I was wont, I trudg'd last market-day,
To town, with new-laid eggs preserv'd in hay.
I made my market long before 'twas night,
My purse grew heavy, and my basket light.
Strait to the 'pothecary's shop I went,
And in love-powder all my money spent.
Behap what will, next Sunday after prayers,
When to the ale-house Lubberkin repairs,
These golden flies into his mug I'll throw,
And soon the swain with fervent love shall glow.
" With my sharp heel I three times mark the ground,
" And turn me thrice around, around, around."
But hold—our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears,
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears.
He comes! he comes! Hobnelia's not bewray'd,
Nor shall she crown'd with willow die a maid.
He vows, he swears, he'll give me a green gown:
O dear! I fall adown, adown, adown!

Ver. 66.

——ἐγὼ δ' ἐπὶ Δέλφιδι δάφναν
Αἴθω. χ' ὡς αὐτὰ λακέει, μέγα καππυρίσασα. THEOC.

Ver. 66. " Daphnis me malus urit, ego hanc in " Daphnide."——VIRG.

Ver. 93. " Transque caput jace; ne respex- " eris."——VIRG.

Ver. 109.

" Necte tribus nodis ternos, Amarylli, colores:
" Necte, Amarylli, modo; et Veneris dic vincu- " la necto."——VIRG.

Ver. 123.

" Has herbas, atque hæc Ponto mihi lecta venena
" Ipse dedit Mœris."——VIRG.

Ver. 127. —Ποτὸν κακὸν αὖριον οἰσῶ. THEOC.

Ver. 131. " Nescio quid certe est; et Hylax in- " limine latrat."——VIRG.

FRIDAY; OR, THE DIRGE *.

BUMKINET, GRUBBINOL.

Bumkinet.

Why, Grubbinol, doſt thou ſo wiſtful ſeem?
There's ſorrow in thy look, if right I deem.
'Tis true, yon oaks with yellow tops appear,
And chilly blaſts begin to nip the year;
From the tall elm a ſhower of leaves is borne,
And their loſt beauty riven beeches mourn.
Yet ev'n this ſeaſon pleaſance blithe affords,
Now the ſqueez'd preſs foams with our apple hoards.
Come, let us hie, and quaff a cheery bowl,
Let cyder new "waſh ſorrow from thy ſoul."

Grubbinol.

Ah, Bumkinet! ſince thou from hence wert gone,
From theſe ſad plains all merriment is flown;
Should I reveal my grief, 'twould ſpoil thy cheer,
And make thine eye o'erflow with many a tear.

Bumkinet.

"Hang ſorrow!" Let's to yonder hut repair,
And with trim ſonnets "caſt away our care."
"Gillian of Croydon" well thy pipe can play;
Thou ſing'ſt moſt ſweet, "O'er hills and far away."
Of "Patient Griſſel" I deviſe to ſing,
And catches quaint ſhall make the vallies ring.
Come, Grubbinol, beneath this ſhelter, come;
From hence we view our flocks ſecurely roam.

Grubbinol.

Yes, blithſome lad, a tale I mean to ſing,
But with my woe ſhall diſtant vallies ring.
The tale ſhall make our kidlings droop their head,
For, woes is me!—our Blouzelind is dead;

Bumkinet.

Is Blouzelinda dead? farewell, my glee!
No happineſs is now reſerv'd for me.
As the wood-pigeon cooes without his mate,
So ſhall my doleful dirge bewail her fate.
Of Blouzelinda fair I mean to tell,
The peerleſs maid that did all maids excel.
Henceforth the morn ſhall dewy ſorrow ſhed,
And evening tears upon the graſs be ſpread;
The rolling ſtreams with watery grief ſhall flow,
And winds ſhall moan aloud—when loud they blow.
Henceforth, as oft' as autumn ſhall return,
The dropping trees, whene'er it rains, ſhall mourn,
The ſeaſon quite ſhall ſtrip the country's pride,
For 'twas in autumn Blouzelinda dy'd.

Where'er I gad, I Blouzelind ſhall view,
Woods, dairy, barn, and mows, our paſſion knew.
When I direct my eyes to yonder wood,
Freſh riſing ſorrow curdles in my blood.
Thither I've often been the damſel's guide,
When rotten ſticks our fuel have ſupply'd;
There I remember how her faggots large
Were frequently theſe happy ſhoulders charge.
Sometimes this crook drew hazel-boughs adown,
And ſtuff'd her apron wide with nuts ſo brown;
Or when her feeding hogs had miſs'd their way,
Or wallowing 'mid a feaſt of acorns lay;
Th' untoward creatures to the ſtye I drove,
And whiſtled all the way—or told my love.
If by the dairy's hatch I chanc'd to hie,
I ſhall her goodly countenance eſpy;
For there her goodly countenance I've ſeen,
Set off with kerchief ſtarch'd and pinners clean.
Sometimes, like wax, ſhe rolls her butter round,
Or with the wooden lily prints the pound.
Whilom I've ſeen her ſkim the clouted cream,
And preſs from ſpungy curds the milky ſtream:
But now, alas! theſe ears ſhall hear no more
The whining ſwine ſurround the dairy door;
No more her care ſhall fill the hollow tray,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.
Lament, ye ſwine, in grunting ſpend your grief,
For you, like me, have loſt your ſole relief.
When in the barn the ſounding flail I ply,
Where from her ſieve the chaff was wont to fly;
The poultry there will ſeem around to ſtand,
Waiting upon her charitable hand.
No ſuccour meet the poultry now can find,
For they, like me, have loſt their Blouzelind.
Whenever by yon barley-mow I paſs,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy laſs.
I pitch'd the ſheaves, (oh, could I do ſo now!)
Which ſhe in rows pil'd on the growing mow.
There every deale my heart by love was gain'd,
There the ſweet kiſs my courtſhip has explain'd.
Ah, Blouzelind! that mow I ne'er ſhall ſee,
But thy memorial will revive in me.
Lament, ye fields, and rueful ſymptoms ſhow;
Henceforth let not the ſmelling primroſe grow;
Let weeds, inſtead of butter-flowers appear,
And meads, inſtead of daiſies, hemlock bear;
For cowſlips ſweet, let dandelions ſpread;
For Blouzelinda, blithſome maid, is dead!
Lament, ye ſwains, and o'er her grave bemoan,
And ſpell ye right this verſe upon her ſtone:
"Here Blouzelinda lies—Alas, alas!
"Weep, ſhepherds—and remember fleſh is graſs."

Grubbinol.

Albeit thy ſongs are ſweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirſty cattle rivers clear;

---

* Dirge, or Dyrge, a mournful ditty, or ſong of lamentation over the dead; not a contraction of the Latin Dirige, in the Popiſh Hymn, Dirige greſſus meos, as ſome pretend. But from the Teutonic Dyrke, Laudare, to praiſe and extol. Whence it is poſſible their Dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory ſong to commemorate and applaud the dead. COWELL's Interpreter.

Ver. 15.

"Incipe, Mopſe, prior, ſi quos aut Phyllidis ignes
"Aut Alconis habes laudes, aut jurgia Codri."
VIRG.

Ver. 27. Glee joy; from the Dutch Glooren, to recreate.

Ver. 84.

"Pro molli violâ, pro purpureo narciſſo,
"Carduus et ſpinis ſurgit paliurus acutis." VIRG.

Ver. 90.

"Et tumulum facite, et tumulo ſuperaddite car-
"men." VIRG.

Ver. 93.

"Tale tuum carmen nobis, divine poeta,
"Quale ſopor feſſis in gramine: quale per æſtum

Or winter porridge to the labouring youth,
Or buns and sugar to the damsel's tooth;
Yet Blouzelinda's name shall tune my lay,
Of her I'll sing for ever and for aye.
When Blouzelind expir'd, the wether's bell
Before the drooping flock toll'd forth her knell;
The solemn death-watch click'd the hour she dy'd,
And shrilling crickets in the chimney cry'd;
The boding raven on her cottage sate,
And with hoarse croaking warn'd us of her fate;
The lambkin, which her wonted tendance bred,
Dropp'd on the plains that fatal instant dead;
Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when Goody Dobson dy'd.
How shall I, void of tears, her death relate,
When on her darling's bed her mother sate!
These words the dying Blouzelinda spoke,
And of the dead let none the will revoke:
"Mother, quoth she, let not the poultry need,
And give the goose wherewith to raise her breed:
Be these my sister's care—and every morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn;
The sickly calf that's hous'd be sure to tend,
Feed him with milk, and from bleak colds defend.
Yet ere I die—see, mother, yonder shelf,
There secretly I've hid my worldly pelf.
Twenty good shillings in a rag I laid,
Be ten the Parson's, for my sermon paid.
The rest is yours—my spinning-wheel and rake
Let Susan keep for her dear sister's sake;
My new straw hat, that's trimly lin'd with green,
Let Peggy wear, for she's a damsel clean.
My leathern bottle, long in harvests try'd,
Be Grubbinol's—this silver ring beside:
Three silver pennies, and a nine-pence bent,
A token kind to Bumkinet is sent."
Thus spoke the maiden, while the mother cry'd;
And peaceful, like the harmless lamb, she dy'd.
To show their love, the neighbours far and near
Follow'd with wistful look the damsel's bier.
Sprigg'd rosemary the lads and lasses bore,
While dismally the Parson walk'd before.
Upon her grave the rosemary they threw,
The daisy, butter-flower, and endive blue.
After the good man warn'd us from his text,
That none could tell whose turn would be the next;
He said, that Heaven would take her soul, no doubt,
And spoke the hour-glass in her praise—quite out.
To her sweet memory, flowery garlands strung,
O'er her now empty seat aloft were hung.
With wicker rods we fenc'd her tomb around,
To ward from man and beast the hallow'd ground;
Lest her new grave the Parson's cattle raze,
For both his horse and cow the church-yard graze.
Now we trudg'd homeward to her mother's farm,
To drink new cyder mull'd, with ginger warm.

" Dulcis aquæ saliente sitim restinguere rivo.
" Nos tamen hæc quocunque modo tibi nostra
" vicissim
" Dicemus, Daphninque tuum tollemus ad astra"
VIRG.

Ver. 96. An imitation of Theocritus.

For Gaffer Treadwell told us, by the bye,
"Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry."
While bulls bear horns upon their curled brow,
Or lasses with soft stroakings milk the cow;
While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or battening hogs roll in the sinking mire;
While moles the crumbled earth in hillocks raise;
So long shall swains tell Blouzelinda's praise.
Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain.
They seiz'd the lass in apron clean array'd,
And to the ale-house forc'd the willing maid;
In ale and kisses they forget their cares,
And Susan Blouzelinda's loss repairs.

SATURDAY; OR, THE FLIGHTS.

Bowzybeus.

SUBLIMER strains, O rustic muse! prepare;
Forget awhile the barn and dairy's care;
Thy homely voice to loftier numbers raise,
The drunkard's flights require sonorous lays;
With Bowzybeus' songs exalt thy verse,
While rocks and woods the various notes rehearse.
'Twas in the season when the reapers' toil
Of the ripe harvest 'gan to rid the soil;
Wide through the field was seen a goodly rout,
Clean damsels bound the gather'd sheaves about;
The lads with sharpen'd hook and sweating brow
Cut down the labours of the winter plough.
To the near hedge young Susan steps aside,
She feign'd her coat or garter was unty'd;
Whate'er she did, she stoop'd adown unseen,
And merry reapers what they list will ween.
Soon she rose up, and cry'd with voice so shrill,
That echo answer'd from the distant hill;
The youths and damsels ran to Susan's aid,
Who thought some adder had the lass dismay'd.
When fast asleep they Bowzybeus spy'd,
His hat and oaken staff lay close beside;
That Bowzybeus who could sweetly sing,
Or with the rosin'd bow torment the string;
That Bowzybeus who, with fingers speed,
Could call soft warblings from the breathing reed;
That Bowzybeus who, with jocund tongue,
Ballads and roundelays and catches sung:
They loudly laugh to see the damsel's fright,
And in disport surround the drunken wight.
Ah, Bowzybee, why didst thou stay so long?
The mugs were large, the drink was wond'rous strong!
Thou should'st have left the fair before 'twas night;
But thou sat'st topping till the morning light.
Cicely, brisk maid, steps forth before the rout,
And kiss'd with smacking lip the snoaring lout:
(For custom says, "Whoe'er this venture proves,
" For such a kiss demands a pair of gloves.")

Ver. 153.
" Dum juga montis aper, fluvios dum piscis amabit,
" Dumque thymo pascentur apes, dum rore ci-
" Semper honos, nomenque tuum, laudesque ma-
" nebunt." VIRG.
Ver. 22. " Serta procul tantum capiti delapsa jacebant." VIRG.

By her example Dorcas bolder grows,
And plays a tickling ſtraw within his noſe.
He rubs his noſtril, and in wonted joke
The ſneering ſwains with ſtammering ſpeech beſpoke:
To you, my lads; I'll ſing my carols o'er,
As for the maids—I've ſomething elſe in ſtore.
No ſooner 'gan he raiſe his tuneful ſong,
But lads and laſſes round about him throng.
Not ballad-ſinger plac'd above the crowd
Sings with a note ſo ſhrilling ſweet and loud;
Nor pariſh-clerk, who calls the pſalm ſo clear,
Like Bowzybeus ſooths th' attentive ear.
Of nature's laws his carols firſt begun,
Why the grave owl can never face the ſun.
For owls, as ſwains obſerve, deteſt the light,
And only ſing and ſeek their prey by night.
How turnips hide their ſwelling heads below;
And how the cloſing coleworts upwards grow;
How Will-a-wiſp miſleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills, and ſinking bogs, and pathleſs downs.
Of ſtars he told, that ſhoot with ſhining trail,
And of the glow-worm's light that gilds his tail.
He ſung where wood-cocks in the ſummer feed,
And in what climates they renew their breed
(Some think to northern coaſts their flight they tend,
Or to the moon in midnight hours aſcend);
Where ſwallows in the winter's ſeaſon keep,
And how the drowſy bat and dormouſe ſleep;
How nature does the puppy's eyelid cloſe
Till the bright ſun has nine times ſet and roſe
(For huntſmen by their long experience find,
That puppies ſtill nine rolling ſuns are blind).
Now he goes on, and ſings of fairs and ſhows,
For ſtill new fairs before his eyes aroſe.
How pedlars' ſtalls with glittering toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country-maid.
Long ſilken laces hang upon the twine,
And rows of pins and amber bracelets ſhine;
How the tight laſs, knives, combs, and ſciſſars ſpies,
And looks on thimbles with deſiring eyes.
Of lotteries next with tuneful note he told,
Where ſilver ſpoons are won, and rings of gold.
The lads and laſſes trudge the ſtreet along,
And all the fair is crowded in his ſong.
The mountebank now treads the ſtage, and ſells
His pills, his balſams, and his ague-ſpells;
Now o'er and o'er the nimble tumbler ſprings,
And on the rope the venturous maiden ſwings;
Jack Pudding in his party-colour'd jacket
Toſſes the glove, and jokes at every packet.
Of raree-ſhows he ſung, and Punch's feats,
Of pockets pick'd in crowds, and various cheats.
Then ſad he ſung "the Children in the Wood:"
(Ah, barbarous uncle, ſtain'd with infant blood!)
How blackberries they pluck'd in deſarts wild,
And fearleſs at the glittering faulchion ſmil'd;
Their little corpſe the robin-red-breaſts found,
And ſtrow'd with pious bill the leaves around.
(Ah gentle birds! if this verſe laſts ſo long,
Your names ſhall live for ever in my ſong.)
For "Buxom Joan" he ſung the doubtful ſtriſe,
How the fly ſailor made the maid a wife.
To louder ſtrains he rais'd his voice, to tell
What woeful wars in "Chevy-chace" befell,
When "Percy drove the deer with hound and horn,
"Wars to be wept by children yet unborn!"
Ah, Witherington, more years thy life had crown'd,
If thou hadſt never heard the horn or hound!
Yet ſhall the ſquire, who fought on bloody ſtumps,
By future bards be wail'd in doleful dumps.
"All in the land of Eſſex" next he chaunts,
How to ſleek mares ſtarch Quakers turn gallants:
How the grave brother ſtood on bank ſo green—
Happy for him if mares had never been!
Then he was ſeiz'd with a religious qualm.
And on a ſudden ſung the hundredth pſalm.
He ſung of "Taffey Welch," and "Sawney Scot,"
"Lilly-bullero" and the "Iriſh Trot."
Why ſhould I tell of "Bateman," or of "Shore,"
Or "Wantley's Dragon" ſlain by valiant Moore,
"The Bower of Roſamond," or "Robin Hood,"
And how the "graſs now grows where Troy town ſtood?"
His carols ceas'd: the liſtening maids and ſwains
Seem ſtill to hear ſome ſoft imperfect ſtrains.
Sudden he roſe; and, as he reels along,
Swears kiſſes ſweet ſhould well reward his ſong.
The damſels laughing fly: the giddy clown
Again upon a wheat-ſheaf drops adown;
The power that guards the drunk, his ſleep attends,
Till, ruddy, like his face, the ſun deſcends.

Ver. 40. "Sanguineis frontem moris et tempora pingit." VIRG.

Ver. 43.
"Carmina, quæ vultis, cognoſcite: carmina vobis;
"Huic aliud mercedis erit." VIRG.

Ver. 47.
"Nec tantum Phœbo gaudet Parnaſſia rupes:
"Nec tantum Rhodope mirantur et Iſmarus Orphea." VIRG.

Ver. 51. Our ſwain had poſſibly read Tuſſer, from whence he might have collected theſe philoſophical obſervations:
"Namque canebat, uti magnum per inane coacta, &c."

Ver. 97.
"Fortunati ambo, ſi quid mea carmina poſſunt,
"Nulla dies unquam memori vos eximet ævo." VIRG.

Ver. 99. A Song in the Comedy of "Love for Love," beginning "A Soldier and a Sailor," &c.

Ver. 109. A Song of Sir J. Denham's. See his Poms.

Ver. 112.
"Et fortunatam, ſi nunquam armenta fuiſſent,
"Paſiphaen." VIRG.

Ver. 117.
"Quid loquar aut Scyllam Niſi, &c. VIRG.

Ver. 117—120. Old Engliſh ballads.

ALPHABETICAL CATALOGUE

OF NAMES, PLANTS, FLOWERS, FRUITS, BIRDS, BEASTS, INSECTS,

And other Material Things, mentioned in these Pastorals.

A

Acorns, Past. v. 52
Adder - vi. 20
Ale-house - v. 8
Apple - iv. 126
Apron - ii. 105. v. 50
Ass - iii. 6. 70
Autumn - v. 3. 37

B

Barley - ii. 70. v. 78
Ballad-singer - vi. 47
Bat - iii. 117
Bateman - vi. 117
Bays - iii. 18
Barn - i. 122. v. 69
Beech - v. 6.
Bee - - v. 107
Barn - ii. 44
Blackberry - vi. 93
Blind-man's-buff i. 95
Bramble - i. 2
Blouzelind i. 10. v. 26
Breakfast - ii. 52
Bull - ii. 104
Bumkinet - iii. 28
Bun - v. 96
Boobyclod - iv. 102
Butter - i. 33
Bowzybeus - vi.
Butcher - iii. 90
Butterflower - v. 85
Buxoma - i. 14

C

Calf - i. 16. 55
Capon - i. 90
Car - ii. 65
Cat - ii. 90. iii. 67
Cicely ii. 20. vi. 35
Clover-grass - i. 42
Cloddipole - i.
Churn - iii. 42
Coleworts - vi. 56
Clumsilis - iii. 30
Cock - ii. 79
Comb - vi. 77
Cow i. 16. 82. ii. 104
Colin Clout - ii. 1
Clouted cream v. 61
Cowslips - v. 87
Chalk - ii. 44
Cricket - v. 102
Curd - v. 62
Cuddy - i.
Church-yard - v. 148
Cuckow - iv. 15
Cur - i. 56
Cyder - v. 150
Corns - i. 28

D

Dairy - v. 42
Daisie - i. 44
Dandelion - v. 87
Deborah - iv. 18
Death-watch v. 101
D' Urfey - iii. 9
Goody Dobbins ii. 104
Deer - - i. 36
Dick - iii. 83
Doe - - i. 16
Dorcas - vi. 39
Dragon - vi. 118
Drink - iii. 43
Goody Dobson v. 108
Duck - v. 155
Duckling - v. 116
Duckling stool iii. 105

E

Eggs - iv. 120
Elm - - v. 5
Endive - v. 138
Epitaph - v. 90

F

Fair - vi. 91
Fawn - i. 16
Fox - iii. 61
Fuel - v. 46

G

Gilly-flower - i. 45
Gloves - vi. 38
Glow-worm - vi. 60
Garter - iv. 110
Goldfinch - i. 52
Ginger - v. 150
Goose - v. 114
Gillian of Croydon v. 17
Gooseberry - iv. 51
Green gown - iv. 135
Grass - iv. 94
Grubbinol - v.
Gypsy - ii. 74

H

Hare - iii 59
Holiday - i. 66
Haycock - i. 72
Hazel-nut - iv. 61
Harvest - vi. 8
Hemlock - v. 86
Hemp-seed - iv. 28
Heifer - i. 25
Hen - iii. 60
Hour-glass - v. 142
Holly - iii. 54
Hosen - ii. 33
Hobnelia - iv.
Hot-cockles - i. 99
Hog - v. 51
Hodge - iii. 15
Horse - v. 148
Goodman Hodges i 122
Hound - iii. 59

I

Jack Pudding - vi. 87
Jay - iii. 5
Joan - vi. 99
Irish Trot - vi. 116

K

Katharine Pear iii. 56
Kerchief - v. 58
Kid - - i. 54
Kidling - v. 25
Kiss - - i. 73
Kite - iii. 60
Kersey doublet ii. 37
Knife - i. 89
Kingcup - i. 43

L

Lady-bird - iv. 85
Leather - ii. 44
Lamb - i. 53
Lobbin Clout - i.
Love-powder iv. 124
Lambkin - v. 105
Lottery - vi. 79
Lark - - i. 3
Leathern bottle v. 127
Lubberkin - iv 7
Lily - - v. 60
Leek - iii. 55
Lilly-bullero - vi. 116
Linnet - iii. 3

M

Mackrel - iii. 68
May-day - i. 58
Magpye - iii. 5
Milk-pail - ii. 58
Mare - vi. 110
Mug - vi. 32
Marian - ii. 9
Moore - vi. 118
Marygold - i. 46
Midsummer-eve iv. 27
Mole - v. 157
Mountebank - vi. 83
Mow - v. 75

N

Neckcloth - ii. 36
Nuts - - v. 50
Ninepence - v. 129

O

Oak - - v. 3
Oatmeal - ii. 44
Owl - - vi. 52
Oxen - iii. 20

P

Ploughing - ii. 51
Peasc-cod - iv. 69
Penny - v. 129
Peggy - v. 126
Penknife - iii. 101
Pigeon - v. 29
Pedlar - vi. 73
Pig - iii. 102
Pinner - v. 58
Pippin - iv. 91
Pottage - v. 95
Potatoe - i. 84
Pudding - i. 91
Primrose - v. 84
Patient Griselda - v. 19
Poultry - v. 113
Parish-clerk - vi. 49
Puppy - vi. 67

R

Rake - i. 123
Raven - v. 103
Robin Hood - vi. 119
Robin-red-breast vi. 95
Ring - vi. 80
Rook - ii. 54
Rosamond - vi. 119
Roast-beef - i. 89
Ribbon - iii. 29
Rosemary - v. 137
Riddle - i. 111

S

Swinging - i. 103
Spring - iv. 16
Sawney - vi. 115

Sage - - ii. 13
Sciſſars - vi. 77
Sheep - ii. 28
Straw-hat - v. 125
Sloe - iii. 52
Smock - iv. 18
Sail - iii. 71
Spinning-wheel v. 123
Squirrel - iii. 70
Sugar - v. 96
Suſan - v. 124
'Squire - iii. 76
Sowing - ii. 53
Swallow - i. 29
Shore - vi. 117
Swine - v. 64
Summer - i. 61
Silver ſpoon - vi. 80
Sparabella - iii.
See-ſawing - viii. 107
T
Thimble - vi. 79
Throſtle - i. 2
Tobacco - iii. 40
Gaffer[Treadweſl]v. 151
Troy town - vi. 120
Turnip - i. 86
Threſhing - ii. 55
True-love's knot iv. 115
V
Valentine's day iv. 37
Udder - i. 4
W
Wake - ii. 4
Weather - v. 99
Winter - i. 60
Weed - v. 85
Will-a-wiſp - vi. 57
Wheat ſheaf - vi. 126
Whey - v. 66
Whitepot - i. 92
Wood - v. 43
Worky-day - i. 63
Woodcock - vi. 61
Whiſtling - v. 54
Y
Yarn - iv. 77
Youngling - ii. 26

TRIVIA;

OR, THE ART OF WALKING THE STREETS OF LONDON.

IN THREE BOOKS.

"Quo te Mœri pedes? an, quo via ducit, in urbem?"——VIRG.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The world, I believe, will take ſo little notice of me, that I need not take much of it. The critics may ſee by this poem, that I walk on foot, which probably may ſave me from their envy. I ſhould be ſorry to raiſe that paſſion in men whom I am ſo much obliged to, ſince they allow me an honour hitherto only ſhown to better writers, That of denying me to be the author of my own works.

Gentlemen, if there be any thing in this poem good enough to diſpleaſe you, and if it be any advantage to you to aſcribe it to ſome perſon of greater merit; I ſhall acquaint you, for your comfort, that, among many other obligations, I owe ſeveral hints of it to Dr. Swift. And, if you will ſo far continue your favour as to write againſt it, I beg you to oblige me in accepting the following motto:

"—Non tu, in triviis, indocte ſolebas
"Stridenti, miſerum, ſtipulâ, diſperdere carmen."

BOOK I.

OF THE IMPLEMENTS FOR WALKING THE STREETS, AND SIGNS OF THE WEATHER.

THROUGH winter ſtreets to ſteer your courſe aright,
How to walk clean by day, and ſafe by night;
How joſtling crowds with prudence to decline,
When to aſſert the wall, and when reſign,
I ſing; thou, Trivia, goddeſs, aid my ſong,
Through ſpacious ſtreets conduct thy bard along;
By thee tranſported, I ſecurely ſtray
Where winding alleys lead the doubtful way,
The ſilent court and opening ſquare explore,
And long perplexing lanes untrod before.
To pave thy realm, and ſmooth the broken ways,
Earth from her womb a flinty tribute pays;
For thee the ſturdy pavior thumps the ground,
Whilſt every ſtroke his labouring lungs reſound;
For thee the ſcavenger bids kennels glide
Within their bounds, and heaps of dirt ſubſide.
My youthful boſom burns with thirſt of fame,
From the great theme to build a glorious name,
To tread in paths to ancient bards unknown,
And bind my temples with a civic crown:
But more my country's love demands my lays;
My country's be the profit, mine the praiſe!
When the black youth at choſen ſtands rejoice,
And "clean your ſhoes" reſounds from every voice;
When late their miry ſides ſtage-coaches ſhow,
And their ſtiff horſes through the town move ſlow;
When all the Mall in leafy ruin lies,
And damſels firſt renew their oyſter-cries:
Then let the prudent walker ſhoes provide,
Not of the Spaniſh or Morocco hide;
The wooden heel may raiſe the dancer's bound,
And with the ſcallop'd top his ſtep be crown'd:
Let firm, well-hammer'd ſoles protect thy feet
Through freezing ſnows, and rains, and ſoaking ſleet.
Should the big laſt extend the ſhoe too wide,
Each ſtone will wrench th' unwary ſtep aſide;
The ſudden turn may ſtretch the ſwelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ankle ſprain;
And, when too ſhort the modeſt ſhoes are worn,
You'll judge the ſeaſons by your ſhooting corn.

Nor ſhould it prove thy leſs important care,
To chooſe a proper coat for winter's wear,
Now in thy trunk thy D'Oily habit fold,
The ſilken drugget ill can fence the cold;
The frieze's ſpongy nap is ſoak'd with rain,
And ſhowers ſoon drench the camlet's cockled grain;
True Witney* broad-cloth, with its ſhag unſhorn,
Unpierc'd is in the laſting tempeſt worn:
Be this the horſeman's fence, for who would wear
Amid the town the ſpoils of Ruſſia's bear?
Within the roquelaure's claſp thy hands are pent,
Hands, that, ſtretch'd forth, invading harms prevent.
Let the loop'd bavaroy the ſop embrace,
Or his deep cloke beſpatter'd o'er with lace.
That garment beſt the winter's rage defends,
Whoſe ample form without one plait depends,
By various names † in various counties known,
Yet held in all the true ſurtout alone;
Be thine of kerſey firm, though ſmall the coſt,
Then brave unwet the rain, unchill'd the froſt.
If the ſtrong cane ſupport thy walking hand,
Chairmen no longer ſhall the wall command;
Ev'n ſturdy carmen ſhall thy nod obey,
And rattling coaches ſtop to make thee way:
This ſhall direct thy cautious tread aright,
Though not one glaring lamp enliven night.
Let beaux their canes with amber tipt produce;
Be theirs for empty ſhow, but thine for uſe.
In gilded chariots while they loll at eaſe,
And lazily enſure a life's diſeaſe;
While ſofter chairs the tawdry load convey
To Court, to White's ‡, aſſemblies, or the play;
Roſy complexion'd health thy ſteps attends,
And exerciſe thy laſting youth defends.
Imprudent men Heaven's choiceſt gifts profane:
Thus ſome beneath their arm ſupport the cane;
The dirty point oft check the careleſs pace,
And miry ſpots the clean cravat diſgrace.
Oh! may I never ſuch miſfortune meet!
May no ſuch vicious walkers crowd the ſtreet!
May Providence o'erſhade me with her wings,
While the bold muſe experienc'd danger ſings!
Not that I wander from my native home,
And (tempting perils) foreign cities roam.
Let Paris be the theme of Gallia's muſe,
Where ſlavery treads the ſtreets in wooden ſhoes.
Nor do I rove in Belgia's frozen clime,
And teach the clumſy boor to ſkate in rhyme;
Where, if the warmer clouds in rain deſcend,
No miry ways induſtrious ſteps offend:
The ruſhing flood from ſloping pavements pours,
And blackens the canals with dirty ſhowers.
Let others Naples' ſmoother ſtreets rehearſe,
And with proud Roman ſtructures grace their verſe,
Where frequent murders wake the night with groans,
And blood in purple torrents dies the ſtones.
Nor ſhall the muſe through narrow Venice ſtray,
Where gondolas their painted oars diſplay.
O happy ſtreets! to rumbling wheels unknown,
No carts, no coaches, ſhake the floating town!

Thus was of old Britannia's city bleſs'd,
Ere pride and luxury her ſons poſſeſs'd;
Coaches and chariots yet unfaſhion'd lay,
Nor late-invented chairs perplex'd the way;
Then the proud lady tripp'd along the town,
And tuck'd-up petticoats ſecur'd her gown;
Her roſy cheek with diſtant viſits glow'd,
And exerciſe unartful charms beſtow'd:
But ſince in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long training mantua ſweeps the ground,
Her ſhoe diſdains the ſtreet; the lazy fair
With narrow ſtep affects a limping air.
Now gaudy pride corrupts the laviſh age,
And the ſtreets flame with glaring equipage;
The tricking gameſter inſolently rides,
With loves and graces on his chariot ſides;
In ſaucy ſtate the griping broker ſits.
And laughs at honeſty and trudging wits.
For you, O honeſt men, theſe uſeful lays
The muſe prepares! I ſeek no other praiſe.
When ſleep is firſt diſturb'd by morning cries;
From ſure prognoſtics learn to know the ſkies,
Leſt you of rheums and coughs at night complain;
Surpris'd in dreary fogs, or driving rain.
When ſuffocating miſts obſcure the morn,
Let thy worſt wig, long us'd to ſtorms, be worn
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care;
Beneath his flapping hat ſecures his hair.
Be thou for every ſeaſon juſtly dreſt,
Nor brave the piercing froſt with open breaſt;
And, when the burſting clouds a deluge pour,
Let thy ſurtout defend the drenching ſhower.
The changing weather certain ſigns reveal.
Ere winter ſheds her ſnow, or froſts congeal,
You'll ſee the coals in brighter flame aſpire,
And ſulphur tinge with blue the riſing fire;
Your tender ſhins the ſcorching heat decline,
And at the dearth of coals the poor repine;
Before her kitchen hearth, the nodding dame,
In flannel mantle wrapt, enjoys the flame;
Hovering, upon her feeble knees ſhe bends,
And all around the grateful warmth aſcends.
Nor do leſs certain ſigns the town adviſe
Of milder weather and ſerener ſkies.
The ladies, gaily dreſs'd, the Mall adorn
With various dyes, and paint the ſunny morn:
The wanton fawns with friſking pleaſure range,
And chirping ſparrows greet the welcome change;
* Not that their minds with greater ſkill are fraught,
Endued by inſtinct, or by reaſon taught:
The ſeaſons operate in every breaſt;
'Tis hence the fawns are briſk, and ladies dreſt.
When on his box the nodding coachman ſnores,
And dreams of fancy'd fares; when tavern doors
The chairman idly crowd; then ne'er refuſe
To truſt thy buſy ſteps in thinner ſhoes.
But when the ſwinging ſigns your ears offend
With creaking noiſe, then rainy floods impend;
Soon ſhall the kennels ſwell with rapid ſtreams,
And ruſh in muddy torrents to the Thames.
The bookſeller, whoſe ſhop's an open ſquare,
Foreſees the tempeſt, and with early care

* A town in Oxfordſhire.
† A Joſeph, Wrap-raſcal, &c.
‡ A chocolate-houſe in St. James's-ſtreet.

* " Haud equidem credo, quia ſit divinitus illis
" Ingenium, aut rerum fato prudentia major."
VIRG. Georg. i.

Of learning ſtrips the rails; the rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue;
On hoſiers' poles depending ſtockings ty'd
Flag with the ſlacken'd gale from ſide to ſide;
Church monuments foretel the changing air,
Then Niobe diſſolves into a tear, [ſounds
And ſweats with ſacred grief; you'll hear the
Of whiſtling winds, ere kennels break their bounds:
Ungrateful odours common-ſhores diffuſe,
And dropping vaults diſtil unwholeſome dews,
Ere the tiles rattle with the ſmoking ſhower,
And ſpouts on heedleſs men their torrents pour.

All ſuperſtition from thy breaſt repel:
Let credulous boys and prattling nurſes tell,
How, if the feſtival of Paul be clear,
Plenty from liberal horn ſhall ſtrew the year;
When the dark ſkies diſſolve in ſnow or rain,
The labouring hind ſhall yoke the ſteer in vain;
But, if the threatening winds in tempeſts roar,
Then war ſhall bathe her waſteful ſword in gore.
How, if on Swithin's feaſt the welkin lours,
And every penthouſe ſtreams with haſty ſhowers,
Twice twenty days ſhall clouds their fleeces drain,
And waſh the pavements with inceſſant rain.
Let not ſuch vulgar tales debaſe thy mind;
Nor Paul nor Swithin rule the clouds and wind.

If you the precepts of the muſe deſpiſe,
And ſlight the faithful warning of the ſkies,
Others you'll ſee, when all the town's afloat,
Wrapt in th' embraces of a kerſey coat,
Or double-bottom'd frieze; their guarded feet
Defy the muddy dangers of the ſtreet;
While you, with hat unloop'd, the fury dread
Of ſpouts high ſtreaming, and with cautious tread
Shun every daſhing pool, or idly ſtop,
To ſeek the kind protection of a ſhop.
But buſineſs ſummons; now with haſty ſcud
You joſtle for the wall; the ſpatter'd mud
Hides all thy hoſe behind; in vain you ſcower,
Thy wig, alas! uncurl'd, admits the ſhower.
So fierce Alecto's ſnaky treſſes ſell,
When Orpheus charm'd the rigorous powers of hell;
Or thus hung Glaucus' beard, with briny dew
Clotted and ſtrait, when firſt his amorous view
Surpris'd the bathing fair; the frighted maid
Now ſtands a rock, transform'd by Circe's aid.

Good houſewives all the winter's rage deſpiſe,
Defended by the riding-hood's diſguiſe;
Or, underneath th' umbrella's oily ſhed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread.
Let Perſian dames th' umbrella's ribs diſplay,
To guard their beauties from the ſunny ray;
Or ſweating ſlaves ſupport the ſhady load,
When eaſtern monarchs ſhow their ſtate abroad:
Britain in winter only knows its aid,
To guard from chilly ſhowers the walking maid.
But, O! forget not, muſe, the patten's praiſe,
That female implement ſhall grace thy lays;
Say from what art divine th' invention came,
And from its origin deduce its name.

Where Lincoln wide extends her fenny ſoil,
A goodly yeoman liv'd, grown white with toil;
One only daughter bleſs'd his nuptial bed,
Who from her infant hand the poultry fed;
Martha (her careful mother's name) ſhe bore,
But now her careful mother was no more.
Whilſt on her father's knee the damſel play'd,
Patty he fondly call'd the ſmiling maid;
As years increas'd, her ruddy beauty grew,
And Patty's fame o'er all the village flew.

Soon as the gray-ey'd morning ſtreaks the ſkies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies,
Her cleanly pail the pretty houſewife bears,
And ſinging to the diſtant field repairs;
And, when the plains with evening dews are ſpread,
The milky burden ſmokes upon her head,
Deep through a miry lane ſhe pick'd her way,
Above her ancle roſe the chalky clay.

Vulcan by chance the bloomy maiden ſpies,
With innocence and beauty in her eyes:
He ſaw, he lov'd; for yet he ne'er had known
Sweet innocence and beauty meet in one.
Ah, Mulciber! recal thy nuptial vows,
Think on the graces of thy Paphian ſpouſe,
Think how her eyes dart inexhauſted charms,
And canſt thou leave her bed for Patty's arms?

The Lemnian Power forſakes the realms above,
His boſom glowing with terreſtrial love:
Far in the lane a lonely hut he found;
No tenant ventur'd on th' unwholſome ground.
Here ſmokes his forge, he bares his ſinewy arm,
And early ſtrokes the ſounding anvil warm:
Around his ſhop the ſteely ſparkles flew,
As for the ſteed he ſhap'd the bending ſhoe.

When blue-ey'd Patty near his window came,
His anvil reſts, his forge forgets to flame.
To hear his ſoothing tales, ſhe feigns delays;
What woman can reſiſt the force of praiſe?
At firſt ſhe coyly every kiſs withſtood,
And all her cheek was flaſh'd with modeſt blood:
With headleſs nails he now ſurrounds her ſhoes,
To ſave her ſteps from rains and piercing dews.
She lik'd his ſoothing tales, his preſents wore,
And granted kiſſes, but would grant no more.
Yet winter chill'd her feet, with cold ſhe pines,
And on her cheek the fading roſe declines;
No more her humid eyes their luſtre boaſt,
And in hoarſe ſounds her melting voice is loſt.

This Vulcan ſaw, and in his heavenly thought
A new machine mechanic fancy wrought.
Above the mire her ſhelter'd ſteps to raiſe,
And bear her ſafely through the wintery ways.
Strait the new engine on his anvil glows,
And the pale virgin on the patten roſe.
No more her lungs are ſhook with dropping rheums,
And on her cheek reviving beauty blooms.
The god obtain'd his ſuit: though flattery fail,
Preſents with female virtue muſt prevail.
The patten now ſupports each frugal dame,
Which from the blue-ey'd Patty takes the name.

BOOK II.

OF WALKING THE STREETS BY DAY.

Thus far the muſe has trac'd in uſeful lays
The proper implements for wintery ways;

Has taught the walker, with judicious eyes,
To read the various warnings of the skies:
Now venture, muse, from home to range the town,
And for the public safety risk thy own.
For ease and for dispatch, the morning's best;
No tides of passengers the streets molest;
You'll see a draggled damsel here and there,
From Billingate her fishy traffic bear;
On doors the sallow milk maid chalks her gains:
Ah! how unlike the milk-maid of the plains!
Before proud gates attending asses bray,
Or arrogate with solemn pace the way;
These grave physicians with their milky cheer
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair;
Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum thunder shake the pile,
To greet the new-made bride. Are sounds like these
The proper prelude to a state of peace?
Now industry awakes her busy sons;
Full-charg'd with news the breathless hawker runs:
Shops open, coaches roll, carts shake the ground,
And all the streets with passing cries resound.
If cloth'd in black you tread the busy town,
Or if distinguish'd by the reverend gown,
Three trades avoid: oft' in the mingling press
The barber's apron soils the sable dress;
Shun the perfumer's touch with cautious eye,
Nor let the baker's step advance too nigh.
Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three sullying trades avoid with equal care:
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng:
When small coal murmurs in the hoarser throat,
From smutty dangers guard thy threat'ned coat;
The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies;
But, whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket, on his shoulders borne,
With tallow spots thy coat; resign the way,
To shun the surly butcher's greasy tray,
Butchers, whose hands are dy'd with blood's foul stain,
And always foremost in the hangman's train.
Let due civilities be strictly paid:
The wall surrender to the hooded maid;
Nor let thy sturdy elbow's hasty rage
Justle the feeble steps of trembling age:
And when the porter bends beneath his load,
And pants for breath, clear thou the crowded road.
But, above all, the groping blind direct;
And from the pressing throng the lame protect.
You'll sometimes meet a fop, of nicest tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head;
At every step he dreads the wall to lose,
And risks, to save a coach, his red-heel'd shoes;
Him, like the miller, pass with caution by,
Left from his shoulder clouds of powder fly.
But when the bully, with assuming pace,
Cocks his broad hat, edg'd round with tarnish'd lace,
Yield not the way, defy his strutting pride,
And thrust him to the muddy kennel's side;
He never turns again, nor dares oppose,
But mutters coward curses as he goes.

If drawn by business to a street unknown,
Let the sworn porter point thee through the town;
Be sure observe the signs, for signs remain
Like faithful landmarks to the walking train.
Seek not from 'prentices to learn the way,
Those fabling boys will turn thy steps astray;
Ask the grave tradesman to direct thee right,
He ne'er deceives—but when he profits by't.
Where fam'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An inrail'd column rears its lofty head,
Here to seven streets seven dials count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray.
Here oft' the peasant, with inquiring face,
Bewilder'd, trudges on from place to place;
He dwells on every sign with stupid gaze,
Enters the narrow alley's doubtful maze,
Tries every winding court and street in vain,
And doubles o'er his weary steps again.
Thus hardy Theseus, with intrepid feet,
Travers'd the dangerous labyrinth of Crete;
But still the wandering passes force his stay,
Till Ariadne's clue unwinds the way.
But do not thou, like that bold chief, confide
Thy venturous footsteps to a female guide;
She'll lead thee with delusive smiles along,
Dive in thy fob, and drop thee in the throng.
When waggish boys the stunted besom ply,
To rid the slabby pavement, pass not by [flirt
Ere thou hast held their hands; some heedless
Will overspread thy calves with spattering dirt.
Where porters hogsheads roll from carts aslope,
Or brewers down steep cellars stretch the rope,
Where counted billets are by carmen tost,
Stay thy rash step, and walk without the post.
What though the gathering mire thy feet besmear,
The voice of industry is always near.
Hark! the boy calls thee to his destin'd stand,
And the shoe shines beneath his oily hand,
Here let the muse, fatigued amid the throng,
Adorn her precepts with digressive song;
Of shirtless youths the secret rise to trace,
And show the parent of the sable race.
Like mortal man, great Jove (grown fond of change)
Of old was wont this nether world to range,
To seek amours; the vice the monarch lov'd
Soon through the wide æthereal court improv'd:
And ev'n the proudest goddess now and then
Would lodge a night among the sons of men;
To vulgar deities descends the fashion,
Each, like her betters, had her earthly passion.
Then * Cloacina (goddess of the tide
Whose sable streams beneath the city glide)
Indulg'd the modish flame; the town she rov'd,
A mortal scavenger she saw, she lov'd;
The muddy spots that dry'd upon his face,
Like female patches, heighten'd every grace:

* Cloacina was a goddess, whose image Tatius (a king of the Sabines) found in the common shore; and, not knowing what goddess it was, he called it Cloacina, from the place in which it was found, and paid to it divine honours.—Lactant. 1. 20. Minuc. Fel. Oct. p. 232.

She gaz'd; she sigh'd; (for love can beauties spy
In what seem faults to every common eye.)
Now had the watchman walk'd his second round,
When Cloacina hears the rumbling sound
Of her brown lover's cart (for well she knows
That pleasing thunder): swift the goddess, rose,
And through the streets pursu'd the distant noise,
Her bosom panting with expected joys.
With the night-wandering harlot's airs she past,
Brush'd near his side, and wanton glances cast;
In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place, had banish'd shame;
To the dark alley, arm in arm they move:
O may no link-boy interrupt their love! [space,
When the pale moon had nine times fill'd her
The pregnant goddess (cautious of disgrace)
Descends to earth; but sought no midwife's aid,
Nor 'midst her anguish to Lucina pray'd;
No cheerful gossip wish'd the mother joy,
Alone, beneath a bulk she dropt the boy.
The child, through various risks in years improv'd,
At first a beggar's brat compassion mov'd;
His infant tongue soon learnt the canting art,
Knew all the prayers and whines to touch the heart.
Oh happy unown'd youths! your limbs can bear
The scorching dog-star, and the winter's air;
While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,
Thirsts with each heat, and coughs with every rain!
The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress.
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art
Practis'd in streets: the gods her suit allow'd,
And made him useful to the walking crowd;
To cleanse the miry feet, and o'er the shoe
With nimble skill the glossy black renew.
Each power contributes to relieve the poor:
With the strong bristles of the mighty boar
Diana forms his brush; the god of day
A tripod gives, amid the crowded way
To raise the dirty foot, and ease his toil;
Kind Neptune fills his vase with fetid oil
Prest from th' enormous whale; the god of fire,
From whose dominions smoky clouds aspire,
Among these generous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new japanning art.
Pleas'd she receives the gifts; she downward glides,
Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the tides.
Now dawns the morn, the sturdy lad awakes,
Leaps from his stall, his tangled hair he shakes;
Then leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep:
Pensive through idleness, tears flow'd apace,
Which eas'd his loaded heart, and wash'd his face!
At length he sighing cry'd, That boy was blest,
Whose infant lips have drain'd a mother's breast;
But happier far are those (if such he known)
Whom both a father and a mother own:
But I, alas! hard fortune's utmost scorn,
Who ne'er knew parent, was an orphan born!
Some boys are rich by birth beyond all wants,
Belov'd by uncles, and kind good old aunts;
When time comes round, a Christmas box they bear,
And one day makes them rich for all the year.
Had I the precepts of a father learn'd,
Perhaps I then the coachman's fare had earn'd,
For lesser boys can drive; I thirsty stand,
And see the double flaggon charge their hand,
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain.
While thus he fervent prays, the heaving tide,
In widen'd circles, beats on either side;
The goddess rose amid the inmost round,
With wither'd turnip-tops her temples crown'd;
Low reach'd her dripping tresses, lank, and black
As the smooth jet, or glossy raven's back;
Around her waist a circling eel was twin'd,
Which bound her robe that hung in rags behind.
Now beckoning to the boy, she thus begun:
Thy prayers are granted; weep no more, my son:
Go thrive. At some frequented corner stand;
This brush I give thee, grasp it in thy hand,
Temper the soot within this vase of oil,
And let the little tripod aid thy toil;
On this methinks I see the walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe; [brown'd,
The foot grows black that was with dirt em-
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound.
The goddess plunges swift beneath the flood,
And dashes all around her showers of mud:
The youth strait chose his post; the labour ply'd
Where branching streets from Charing-Cross divide;
His treble voice resounds along the Meuse,
And Whitehall echoes—"Clean your Honour's "shoes!"
Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the walker on his way;
While he attends, new dangers round him throng;
The busy city asks instructive song.
Where, elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjur'd head is bow'd,
Betimes retreat; here, thick as hailstones pour,
Turnips and half-hatch'd eggs (a mingled shower)
Among the rabble rain: some random throw
May with the trickling yolk thy cheek o'erflow.
Though expedition bids, yet never stray
Where no rang'd posts defend the rugged way.
Here laden carts with thundering waggons meet,
Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;
The lashing whip resounds, the horses strain,
And blood in anguish bursts the swelling vein.
O barbarous men! your cruel breasts assuage;
Why vent ye on the generous steed your rage?
Does not his service earn your daily bread?
Your wives, your children, by his labours feed!
If, as the Samian taught, the soul revives,
And, shifting seats, in other bodies lives;
Severe shall be the brutal coachman's change,
Doom'd in a hackney horse the town to range;
Carmen, transform'd, the groaning load shall draw,
Whom other tyrants with the lash shall awe.

Who would of Watling-ſtreet the dangers ſhare,
When the broad pavement of Cheapſide is near?
Or who that rugged ſtreet * would traverſe o'er,
That ſtretches, O Fleet-ditch, from thy black ſhore
To the Tower's moated walls? Here ſteams aſcend
That, in mix'd fumes, the wrinkled noſe offend.
Where chandlers' cauldrons boil; where ſiſhy prey
Hide the wet ſtall, long abſent from the ſea;
And where the cleaver chops the heifer's ſpoil.
And where huge hogſheads ſweat with trainy oil;
Thy breathing noſtril hold; but how ſhall I
Paſs, where in piles Carnavian † cheeſes lie;
Cheeſe, that the table's cloſing rites denies,
And bids me with th' unwilling chaplain riſe?
O bear me to the paths of fair Pall-mall!
Safe are thy pavements, grateful is thy ſmell!
At diſtance rolls along the gilded coach,
Nor ſturdy carmen on thy walks encroach;
No lets would bar thy ways were chairs deny'd,
The ſoft ſupports of lazineſs and pride:
Shops breathes perfumes, through faſhes ribbons glow,
The mutual arms of ladies and the beau.
Yet ſtill ev'n here, when rains the paſſage hide,
Oft the looſe ſtone ſpirts up a muddy tide
Beneath thy careleſs foot; and from on high,
Where manſions mount the ladder, fragments fly,
Mortar and crumbled lime in ſhowers deſcend,
And o'er thy head deſtructive tiles impend.
But ſometimes let me leave the noiſy roads,
And ſilent wander in the cloſe abodes,
Where wheels ne'er ſhake the ground; there penſive ſtray,
In ſtudious thought, the long uncrowded way.
Here I remark each walker's different face,
And in their look their various buſineſs trace.
The broker here his ſpacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow ſit jealouſies and cares;
Bent on ſome mortage (to avoid reproach)
He ſeeks by-ſtreets, and ſaves th' expenſive coach.
Soft, at low doors, old letchers tap their cane,
For fair recluſe, who travels Drury-Lane;
Here roams uncomb'd the laviſh rake, to ſhun
His Fleet-ſtreet draper's everlaſting dun.
Careful obſervers, ſtudious of the town,
Shun the misfortunes that diſgrace the clown;
Untempted, they contemn the juggler's feats,
Paſs by the Meuſe, nor try the * thimble's cheats.
When drays bound high, they never croſs behind,
Where bubbling yeſt is blown by guſts of wind:
And when up Ludgate-hill huge carts move ſlow,
Far from the ſtraining ſteeds ſecurely go,
Whoſe daſhing hoofs behind them fling the mire,
And mark with muddy blots the gazing 'ſquire.
The Parthian thus his javelin backward throws,
And as he flies infeſts purſuing foes.
The thoughtleſs wits ſhall frequent forfeits pay,
Who 'gainſt the ſentry's box diſcharge their tea.
Do thou ſome court or ſecret corner ſeek,
Nor ſluſh with ſhame the paſſing virgin's cheek.
Yet let me not deſcend to trivial ſong,
Nor vulgar circumſtance my verſe prolong.

Why ſhould I teach the maid, when torrents pour,
Her head to ſhelter from the ſudden ſhower?
Nature will beſt her ready hand inform,
With her ſpread petticoat to fence the ſtorm.
Does not each walker know the warning ſign,
When wiſps of ſtraw depend upon the twine
Croſs the cloſe ſtreet; that then the paver's art
Renews the ways, deny'd to coach and cart?
Who knows not that the coachman laſhing by
Oft with his flouriſh cuts the heedleſs eye;
And when he takes his ſtand, to wait a fare,
His horſes foreheads ſhun the winter's air?
Nor will I roam where ſummer's ſultry rays
Parch the dry ground, and ſpread with duſt the ways;
With whirling guſts the rapid atoms riſe,
Smoke o'er the pavement, and involve the ſkies.
Winter my theme confines; whoſe nitry wind
Shall cruſt the ſlabby mire, and kennels bind;
She bids the ſnow deſcend in flaky ſheets,
And in her hoary mantle clothe the ſtreets.
Let not the virgin tread theſe ſlippery roads,
The gathering fleece the hollow patten loads;
But if thy footſtep ſlide with clotted froſt,
Strike off the breaking balls againſt the poſt.
On ſilent wheel the paſſing coaches roll;
Oft look behind, and ward the threatening pole.
In harden'd orbs the ſchool-boy moulds the ſnow,
To mark the coachman with a dext'rous throw.
Why do ye, boys, the kennel's ſurface ſpread,
To tempt with faithleſs paſs the matron's tread?
How can you laugh to ſee the damſel ſpurn,
Sink in your frauds, and her green ſtocking mourn?
At White's the harneſs'd chairman idly ſtands,
And ſwings around his waiſt his tingling hands;
The ſempſtreſs ſpeeds to change with red-tipt noſe;
The Belgian ſtove beneath her footſtool glows;
In half-whipt muſlin needles uſeleſs lie,
And ſhuttle-cocks acroſs the counter fly.
Theſe ſports warm harmleſs; why then will ye prove,
Deluded maids, the dangerous flame of love?
Where Covent-garden's famous temple ſtands,
That boaſts the work of Jones' immortal hands;
Columns with plain magnificence appear,
And graceful porches lead along the ſquare:
Here oft my courſe I bend; when lo! from far
I ſpy the furies of the foot-ball war:
The 'prentice quits his ſhop, to join the crew,
Increaſing crowds the flying game purſue.
Thus, as you roll the ball o'er ſnowy ground,
The gathering globe augments with every round.
But whither ſhall I run! the throng draws nigh,
The ball now ſkims the ſtreet, now ſoars on high;
The dext'rous glazier ſtrong returns the bound,
And jingling faſhes on the pent-houſe ſound.
O, roving muſe! recal that wondrous year,
When winter reign'd in bleak Britannia's air;
When hoary Thames, with froſted oziers crown'd,
Was three long moons in icy fetters bound.
The waterman, forlorn, along the ſhore,
Penſive reclines upon his uſeleſs oar;
See harneſs'd ſteeds deſert the ſtony town,
And wander roads unſtable, not their own;

---

* Thames-ſtreet. † Cheſhire, anciently ſo called.
‡ A cheat commonly practiſed in the ſtreets with three thimbles and a little ball.

Wheels o'er the harden'd waters ſmoothly glide,
And raſe with whiten'd tracks the ſlippery tide;
Here the fat cook piles high the blazing fire
And ſcarce the ſpit can turn the ſteer entire;
Booths ſudden hide the Thames, long ſtreets appear,
And numerous games proclaim the crowded fair.
So when a general bids the martial train
Spread their encampment o'er the ſpacious plain:
Thick riſing tents a canvas city build,
And the loud dice reſound through all the field.
'Twas here the matron found a doleful fate:
Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of diſtant flutes, at hours
When ſilent evening cloſes up the flowers;
Lulling as falling water's hollow noiſe;
Indulging grief, like Philomela's voice.
Doll every day had walk'd theſe treacherous roads;
Her neck grew warpt beneath autumnal loads
Of various fruit: ſhe now a baſket bore;
That head, alas! ſhall baſket bear no more.
Each booth ſhe frequent paſt, in queſt of gain,
And boys with pleaſure heard her ſhrilling ſtrain.
Ah, Doll! all mortals muſt reſign their breath,
And induſtry itſelf ſubmit to death!
The cracking cryſtal yields; ſhe ſinks, ſhe dies,
Her head, chopt off, from her loſt ſhoulders flies;
Pippins ſhe cry'd; but death her voice confounds;
And pip- pip- pip- along the ice reſounds.
So when the Thracian furies Orpheus tore,
And left his bleeding trunk deform'd with gore,
His ſever'd head floats down the ſilver tide,
His yet warm tongue for his loſt conſort cry'd;
Eurydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd.
But now the weſtern gale the flood unbinds,
And blackening clouds move on with warmer winds;
The wooden town its frail foundation leaves,
And Thames' full urn rolls down his plenteous waves;
From every pent-houſe ſtreams the fleeting ſnow,
And with diſſolving froſt the pavements flow.
Experienc'd men, inur'd to city ways,
Need not the calendar to count their days.
When through the town with ſlow and ſolemn air,
Led by the noſtril, walks the muzzled bear;
Behind him moves, majeſtically dull,
The pride of Hockley-hole, the ſurly bull.
Learn hence the periods of the week to name,
Mondays and Thurſdays are the days of game.
When fiſhy ſtalls with double ſtore are laid;
The golden-belly'd carp, the broad-finn'd maid,
Red ſpeckled trouts, the ſalmon's ſilver jowl,
The jointed lobſter, and unſcaly ſoal,
And luſcious 'ſcallops to allure the taſtes
Of rigid zealots to delicious faſts;
Wedneſdays and Fridays you'll obſerve from hence,
Days when our fires were doom'd to abſtinence.
When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dext'rous damſels twirl the ſprinkling mop,
And cleanſe the ſpatter'd ſaſh, and ſcrub the ſtairs;
Know Saturday's concluſive morn appears.

Succeſſive cries the ſeaſons' change declare,
And mark the monthly progreſs of the year.
Hark! how the ſtreets with treble voices ring,
To ſell the bounteous product of the ſpring:
Sweet-ſmelling flowers, and alder's early bud,
With nettle's tender ſhoots, to cleanſe the blood;
And, when June's thunder cools the ſultry ſkies,
E'en Sundays are profan'd by mackrel cries.
Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in autumn ſtain,
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain;
Next oranges the longing boys entice,
To truſt their copper fortunes to the dice.
When roſemary, and bays, the poet's crown,
Are bawl'd, in frequent cries, through all the town,
Then judge the feſtival of Chriſtmas near,
Chriſtmas, the joyous period of the year.
Now with bright holly all your temples ſtrow,
With laurel green, and ſacred miſletoe.
Now, heaven-born Charity! thy bleſſings ſhed;
Bid meagre Want uprear her ſickly head;
Bid ſhivering limbs be warm; let Plenty's bowl
In humble roofs make glad the needy ſoul!
See, ſee! the heaven-born maid her bleſſings ſhed;
Lo! meagre Want uprears her ſickly head;
Cloth'd are the naked, and the needy glad,
While ſelfiſh Avarice alone is ſad.
Proud coaches paſs, regardleſs of the moan
Of infant orphans, and the widow's groan;
While Charity ſtill moves the walker's mind,
His liberal purſe relieves the lame and blind.
Judiciouſly thy halfpence are beſtow'd,
Where the laborious beggar ſweeps the road.
Whate'er you give, give ever at demand,
Nor let old age long ſtretch his palſy'd hand.
Thoſe who give late are importun'd each day,
And ſtill are teas'd becauſe they ſtill delay.
If e'er the miſer durſt his farthings ſpare,
He thinly ſpreads them through the public ſquare,
Where, all beſide the rail, rang'd beggars lie,
And from each other catch the doleful cry;
With Heaven, for two-pence, cheaply wipes his ſcore,
Lifts up his eyes, and haſtes to beggar more.
Where the braſs-knocker, wrapt in flannel band,
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath;
As vultures o'er a camp, with hovering flight,
Snuff up the future carnage of the fight.
Here canſt thou paſs, unmindful of a prayer,
That Heaven in mercy may thy brother ſpare?
Come, Forteſcue, ſincere, experienc'd friend,
Thy briefs, thy deeds, and ev'n thy fees ſuſpend;
Come let us leave the Temple's ſilent walls,
Me buſineſs to my diſtant lodging calls;
Through the long Strand together let us ſtray;
With thee converſing, I forget the way.
Behold that narrow ſtreet which ſteep deſcends,
Whoſe building to the ſlimy ſhore extends,
Here Arundel's fam'd ſtructure rear'd its frame,
The ſtreet alone retains the empty name.
Where Titian's glowing paint the canvas warm'd,
And Raphael's fair deſign, with judgment, charm'd,
Now hangs the bellman's ſong, and paſted here
The colour'd prints of Overton appear.

Where ſtatues breath'd the works of Phidias' hands,
A wooden pump, or lonely watch-houſe, ſtands.
There Eſſex' ſtately pile adorn'd the ſhore,
There Cecil's, Bedford's, Villiers', now no more.
Yet Burlington's fair palace ſtill remains;
Beauty within, without proportion reigns.
Beneath his eye declining art revives,
The wall with animated picture lives;
There Handel ſtrikes the ſtrings, the melting ſtrain
Tranſports the ſoul, and thrills through every vein;
There oft' I enter (but with cleaner ſhoes),
For Burlington's belov'd by every muſe.
O ye aſſociate walkers, O my friends,
Upon your ſtate what happineſs attends!
What though no coach to frequent viſit rolls,
Nor for your ſhilling chairmen ſling their poles;
Yet ſtill your nerves rheumatic pains defy,
Nor lazy jaundice dulls your ſaffron eye;
No waſting cough diſcharges ſounds of death,
Nor wheezing aſthma heaves in vain for breath;
Nor from your reſtleſs couch is heard the groan
Of burning gout, or ſedentary ſtone.
Let others in the jolting coach confide,
Or in the leaky boat the Thames divide;
Or, box'd within the chair, contemn the ſtreet,
And truſt their ſafety to another's feet:
Still let me walk; for oft' the ſudden gale
Ruffles the tide, and ſhifts the dangerous ſail;
Then ſhall the paſſenger too late deplore
The whelming billow, and the faithleſs oar;
The drunken chairman in the kennel ſpurns,
The glaſſes ſhatters, and his charge o'erturns.
Who can recount the coach's various harms,
The legs diſjointed, and the broken arms?
I've ſeen a beau, in ſome ill-fated hour,
When o'er the ſtones choak'd kennels ſwell the ſhower,
In gilded chariot loll; he with diſdain
Views ſpatter'd paſſengers all drench'd in rain.
With mud fill'd high, the rumbling cart draws near;
Now rule thy prancing ſteeds, lac'd charioteer:
The duſtman laſhes on with ſpiteful rage,
His ponderous ſpokes thy painted wheel engage;
Cruſh'd is thy pride, down falls the ſhrieking beau,
The ſlabby pavement cryſtal fragments ſtrow;
Black floods of mire th' embroider'd coat diſgrace,
And mud enwraps the honours of his face.
So, when dread Jove the ſon of Phœbus hurl'd,
Scar'd with dark thunder, to the nether world,
The headſtrong courſers tore the ſilver reins,
And the ſun's beamy ruin gilds the plains.
If the pale walker pant with weakening ills,
His ſickly hand is ſtor'd with friendly bills;
From hence he learns the ſeventh-born doctor's fame,
From hence he learns the cheapeſt tailor's name.
Shall the large mutton ſmoke upon your boards?
Such Newgate's copious market beſt affords.
Would'ſt thou with mighty beef augment thy meal?
Seek Leaden-hall; St. James's ſends thee veal;
Thames-ſtreet gives cheeſes; Covent-garden fruits;
Moorfields old books; and Monmouth-ſtreet old ſuits.
Hence mayſt thou well ſupply the wants of life,
Support thy family and clothe thy wife.
Volumes on ſhelter'd ſtalls expanded lie,
And various ſcience lures the learned eye:
The bending ſhelves with ponderous ſcholiaſts groan,
And deep divines, to modern ſhops unknown;
Here, like the bee, that on induſtrious wing
Collects the various odours of the ſpring,
Walkers' at leiſure, learning's flowers may ſpoil,
Nor watch the waſting of the midnight oil;
May morals ſnatch from Plutarch's tatter'd page,
A mildew'd Bacon, or Stagyra's ſage:
Here ſauntering 'prentices o'er Otway weep,
O'er Congreve ſmile, or over D'Urfey ſleep;
Pleas'd ſempſtreſſes the Lock's fam'd Rape unfold;
And * Squirts read Garth, till apozems grow cold.
O Lintot! let my labours obvious lie,
Rang'd on thy ſtall, for every curious eye!
So ſhall the poor theſe precepts gratis know,
And to my verſe their future ſafeties owe.
What walker ſhall his mean ambition fix
On the falſe luſtre of a coach and ſix?
Let the vain virgin, lur'd by glaring ſhow,
Sigh for the liveries of th' embroider'd beau.
See yon bright chariot on its braces ſwing,
With Flanders mares, and on an arched ſpring.
That wretch, to gain an equipage and place,
Betray'd his ſiſter to a lewd embrace.
This coach that with the blazon'd 'ſcutcheon glows,
Vain of his unknown race, the coxcomb ſhows.
Here the brib'd lawyer, ſunk in velvet, ſleeps;
The ſtarving orphan, as he paſſes, weeps;
There flames a fool, begirt with tinſel ſlaves,
Who waſtes the wealth of a whole race of knaves;
That other, with a cluſtering train behind,
Owes his new honours to a ſordid mind!
This next in court-fidelity excels,
The public rifles, and his country ſells.
May the proud chariot never be my fate,
If purchas'd at ſo mean, ſo dear a rate!
Or rather give me ſweet content on foot,
Wrapt in my virtue, and a good ſurtout!

BOOK III.

OF WALKING THE STREETS BY NIGHT.

O TRIVIA, goddeſs! leave theſe low abodes,
And traverſe o'er the wide etherial roads;
Celeſtial queen! put on thy robes of light,
Now Cynthia nam'd, fair regent of the night.
At ſight of thee, the villain ſheathes his ſword,
Nor ſcales the wall, to ſteal the wealthy hoard.
O may thy ſilver lamp from heaven's high bower
Direct my footſteps in the midnight hour!
When night firſt bids the twinkling ſtars appear.
Or with her cloudy veſt inwraps the air,

* An apothecary's boy, in "The Diſpenſary."

Then ſwarms the buſy ſtreet: with caution tread,
Where the ſhop-windows * falling threat thy head;
Now labourers home return, and join their ſtrength
To bear the tottering plank, or ladder's length;
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the paſſes open, wind along.
Where the fair columns of St. Clement ſtand,
Whoſe ſtraiten'd bounds encroach upon the Strand;
Where the low penthouſe bows the walker's head,
And the rough pavement wounds the yielding tread;
Where not a poſt protects the narrow ſpace,
And, ſtrung in twines, combs dangle in thy face;
Summon at once thy courage, rouze thy care,
Stand firm, look back, be reſolute, beware.
Forth iſſuing from ſteep lanes, the collier's ſteeds
Drag the black load; another cart ſucceeds;
Team follows team, crowds heap'd on crowds appear,
And wait impatient till the road grow clear.
Now all the pavement ſounds with trampling feet,
And the mix'd hurry barricades the ſtreet.
Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team
Cracks the tough harneſs; here a ponderous beam
Lies over-turn'd athwart: for ſlaughter fed,
Here lowing bullocks raiſe their horned head.
Now oaths grow loud, with coaches coaches jar,
And the ſmart blow provokes the ſturdy war;
From the high box they whirl the thong around,
And with the twining laſh their ſhins reſound:
Their rage ferments, more dangerous wounds they try,
And the blood guſhes down their painful eye.
And now on foot the frowning warriors light,
And with their ponderous fiſts renew the fight;
Blow anſwers blow, their cheeks are ſmear'd with blood,
Till down they fall, and grappling roll in mud.
So when two boars, in wild Ytene † bred,
Or on Weſtphalia's fattening cheſnuts fed,
Gnaſh their ſharp tuſks, and, rous'd with equal fire,
Diſpute the reign of ſome luxurious mire,
In the black flood they wallow o'er and o'er,
Till their arm'd jaws diſtil with foam and gore.
Where the mob gathers, ſwiftly ſhoot along,
Nor idly mingle in the noiſy throng:
Lur'd by the ſilver hilt, amid the ſwarm,
The ſubtle artiſt will thy ſide diſarm.
Nor is the flaxen wig with ſafety worn;
High on the ſhoulder, in a baſket borne,
Lurks the fly boy, whoſe hand, to rapine bred,
Plucks off the curling honours of thy head.
Here dives the ſkulking thief, with practis'd ſleight,
And unfelt fingers make thy pocket light.
Where's now the watch, with all its trinkets, flown?
And thy late ſnuff-box is no more thy own.
But lo! his bolder theft ſome tradeſman ſpies,
Swift from his prey the ſcudding lurcher flies;
Dext'rous he 'ſcapes the coach with nimble bounds,
Whilſt every honeſt tongue "ſtop thief" reſounds.

So ſpeeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately ſilch'd the turkey's callow care;
Hounds following hounds grow louder as he flies,
And injur'd tenants join the hunter's cries.
Breathleſs, he ſtumbling falls. Ill-fated boy!
Why did not honeſt work thy youth employ?
Seiz'd by rough hands, he's dragg'd amid the rout.
And ſtretch'd beneath the pump's inceſſant ſpout,
Or, plung'd in miry ponds, he gaſping lies,
Mud choaks his mouth, and plaiſters o'er his eyes.
Let not the ballad-ſinger's ſhrilling ſtrain
Amid the ſwarm thy liſtening ear detain:
Guard well thy pocket; for theſe ſyrens ſtand
To aid the labours of the diving hand;
Confederate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambric handkerchiefs reward the ſong.
But ſoon as coach or cart drives rattling on,
The rabble part, in ſhoals they backward run.
So Jove's loud bolts the mingled war divide,
And Greece and Troy retreat on either ſide.
If the rude throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop ſhort; nor ſtruggle through the crowd in vain,
But watch with careful eye the paſſing train.
Yet I (perhaps too fond), if chance the tide
Tumultuous bear my partner from my ſide,
Impatient venture back; deſpiſing harm,
I force my paſſage where the thickeſt ſwarm.
Thus his loſt bride the Trojan ſought in vain
Through night, and arms, and flames, and hills of ſlain.
Thus Niſus wander'd o'er the pathleſs grove,
To find the brave companion of his love.
The pathleſs grove in vain he wanders o'er:
Euryalus, alas! is now no more.
That walker, who, regardleſs of his pace,
Turns oft' to pore upon the damſel's face,
From ſide to ſide by thruſting elbows toſt,
Shall ſtrike his aching breaſt againſt a poſt;
Or water, daſh'd from ſiſhy ſtalls, ſhall ſtain
His hapleſs coat with ſpirts of ſcaly rain.
But, if unwarily he chance to ſtray
Where twirling turnſtiles intercept the way,
The thwarting paſſenger ſhall force them round,
And beat the wretch half breathleſs to the ground.
Let conſtant vigilance thy footſteps guide,
And wary circumſpection guard thy ſide;
Then ſhalt thou walk unharm'd the dangerous night,
Nor need th' officious linkboys ſmoky light.
Thou never wilt attempt to croſs the road,
Where ale houſe benches reſt the porter's load,
Grievous to heedleſs ſhins; no barrows wheel,
That bruiſes oft' the truant ſchool-boy's heel,
Behind thee rolling, with inſidious pace,
Shall mark thy ſtocking with a miry trace.
Let not thy venturous ſteps approach too nigh,
Where, gaping wide, low ſteepy cellars lie.
Should thy ſhoe wrench aſide, down, down you fall,
And overturn the ſcolding huckſter's ſtall;
The ſcolding huckſter ſhall not o'er thee moan,
But pence exact for nuts and pears o'erthrown.

* A ſpecies of window now almoſt forgotten.
† New Foreſt in Hampſhire, anciently ſo called.

Though you through cleanlier allies wind by day,
To ſhun the hurries of the public way,
Yet ne'er to thoſe dark paths by night retire;
Mind only ſafety, and contemn the mire.
Then no impervious courts thy haſte detain.
Nor ſneering alewives bid thee turn again.
Where Lincoln's-inn, wide ſpace, is rail'd around,
Croſs not with venturous ſtep; there oft' is found
The lurking thief, who while the day-light ſhone
Made the walls echo with his begging tone:
That crutch, which late compaſſion mov'd, ſhall wound
Thy bleeding head, and fell thee to the ground.
Though thou art tempted by the link-man's call,
Yet truſt him not along the lonely wall;
In the mid-way he'll quench the flaming brand,
And ſhare the booty with the pilfering band.
Still keep the public ſtreets, where oily rays,
Shot from the cryſtal lamp, o'erſpread the ways.
Happy Auguſta! law-defended town!
Here no dark lanterns ſhade the villain's frown;
No Spaniſh jealouſies thy lanes infeſt,
Nor Roman vengeance ſtabs th' unwary breaſt;
Here tyranny ne'er lifts her purple hand,
But liberty and juſtice guard the land;
No bravos here profeſs the bloody trade,
Nor is the church the murderer's refuge made.
Let not the chairman, with aſſuming ſtride,
Preſs near the wall, and rudely thruſt thy ſide:
The laws have ſet him bounds; his ſervile feet
Should ne'er encroach where poſts defend the ſtreet.
Yet who the footman's arrogance can quell,
Whoſe flambeau gilds the ſaſhes of Pall-mall,
When in long rank a train of torches flame,
To light the midnight viſits of the dame?
Others, perhaps, by happier guidance led,
May where the chairman reſts with ſafety tread;
Whene'er I paſs, their poles (unſeen below)
Make my knee tremble with a jarring blow.
If wheels bar up the road, where ſtreets are croſt,
With gentle words the coachman's ear accoſt:
He ne'er the threat or harſh command obeys,
But with contempt the ſpatter'd ſhoe ſurveys.
Now man with utmoſt fortitude thy ſoul,
To croſs the way where carts and coaches roll;
Yet do not in thy hardy ſkill confide,
Nor raſhly riſk the kernel's ſpacious ſtride;
Stay till afar the diſtant wheel you hear,
Like dying thunder in the breaking air;
Thy foot will ſlide upon the miry ſtone,
And paſſing coaches cruſh thy tortur'd bone,
Or wheels incloſe the road; on either hand
Pent round with perils, in the midſt you ſtand,
And call for aid in vain; the coachman ſwears,
And carmen drive, unmindful of thy prayers.
Where wilt thou turn? ah! whither wilt thou fly?
On every ſide the preſſing ſpokes are nigh.
So ſailors, while Charybdis' gulf they ſhun,
Amaz'd on Scylla's craggy dangers run.
Be ſure obſerve where brown Oſtrea ſtands,
Who boaſts her ſhelly ware from Walfleet ſands;
There may'ſt thou paſs with ſafe unmiry feet,
Where the rais'd pavement leads athwart the ſtreet,
If where Fleet-ditch with muddy current flows,
You chance to roam; where oyſter-tubs in rows
Are rang'd beſide the poſts; there ſtay thy haſte,
And with the ſavoury fiſh indulge thy taſte:
The damſel's knife the gaping ſhell commands,
While the ſalt liquor ſtreams between her hands.
The man had ſure a palate cover'd o'er
With braſs or ſteel, that on the rocky ſhore
Firſt broke the oozy oyſter's pearly coat,
And riſk'd the living morſel down his throat.
What will not luxury taſte Earth, ſea, and air,
Are daily ranſack'd for the bill of fare!
Blood ſtuff'd in ſkins is Britiſh Chriſtian's food;
And France robs marſhes of the croaking brood!
Spungy morels in ſtrong ragouts are found,
And in the ſoup the ſlimy ſnail is drown'd.
When from high ſpouts the daſhing torrents fall,
Ever be watchful to maintain the wall;
For ſhould'ſt thou quit thy ground, the ruſhing throng
Will with impetuous fury drive along;
All preſs to gain thoſe honours thou haſt loſt,
And rudely ſhove thee far without the poſt.
Then to retrive the ſhed you ſtrive in vain,
Draggled all o'er, and ſoak'd in floods of rain.
Yet rather bear the ſhower, and toils of mud,
Than in the doubtful quarrel riſk thy blood.
O think on Œdipus' dereſted ſtate,
And by his woes be warn'd to ſhun thy fate.
Where three roads join'd, he met his ſire unknown;
(Unhappy ſire, but more unhappy ſon!)
Each claim'd the way, their ſwords the ſtrife decide,
The hoary monarch fell he groan'd, and died!
Hence ſprung the fatal plague that thinn'd thy reign,
Thy curſed inceſt! and thy children ſlain!
Hence wert thou doom'd in endleſs night to ſtray,
Through Theban ſtreets, and cheerleſs grope thy way.
Contemplate, mortal, on thy fleeting years;
See, with black train the funeral pomp appears!
Whether ſome heir attends in ſable ſtate,
And mourns with outward grief a parent's fate;
Or the fair virgin, nipt in beauty's bloom,
A crowd of lovers follow to her tomb:
Why is the hearſe with 'ſcutcheons blazon'd round,
And with the nodding plume of oſtrich crown'd?
No: the dead know it not, nor profit gain;
It only ſerves to prove the living vain.
How ſhort is life! how frail is human truſt!
Is all this pomp for laying duſt to duſt?
Where the nail'd hoop defends the painted ſtall,
Bruſh not thy ſweeping ſkirt too near the wall:
Thy heedleſs ſleeve will drink the colour'd oil,
And ſpot indelible thy pocket ſoil.
Has not wiſe nature ſtrung the legs and feet
With firmeſt nerves, deſign'd to walk the ſtreet?
Has ſhe not given us hands to grope aright,
Amidſt the frequent dangers of the night?
And think'ſt thou not the double noſtril meant,
To warn from oily woes by previous ſcent?

Who can the various city frauds * recite,
With all the petty rapines of the night?
Who now the guinea dropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards?
Why should I warn thee ne'er to join the fray,
Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way?
Lives there in these our days so soft a clown,
Brav'd by the bully's oaths, or threatening frown?
I need not strict enjoin the pocket's care,
When from the crowded play thou lead'st the fair;
Who has not here or watch or snuff-box lost,
Or handkerchiefs that India's shuttle boast?
O! may thy virtue guard thee through the roads
Of Drury's mazy courts, and dark abodes!
The harlots' guileful paths, who nightly stand
Where Catharine-street descends into the Strand;
Say, vagrant muse, their wiles and subtle arts,
To lure the strangers' unsuspecting hearts:
So shall our youth on healthful sinews tread,
And city cheeks grow warm with rural red.

'Tis she who nightly strolls with sauntering pace,
No stubborn stays her yielding shape embrace;
Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
The new-scour'd manteau, and the slattern-air;
High-draggled petticoats her travels show,
And hollow cheeks with artful blushes glow;
With flattering sounds she sooths the credulous ear,
"My noble captain! charmer! love! my dear!"
In riding-hood, near tavern-doors she plies,
Or muffled pinners hide her livid eyes.
With empty bandbox she delights to range,
And feigns a distant errand from the 'Change;
Nay, she will oft' the Quaker's hood profane,
And trudge demure the rounds of Drury-lane.
She darts from sarsenet ambush wily leers,
Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
Her fan will pat thy cheek; these snares disdain,
Nor gaze behind thee, when she turns again.

I knew a yeoman, who, for thirst of gain,
To the great city drove, from Devon's plain,
His numerous lowing herd; his herds he sold,
And his deep leathern pocket hagg'd with gold.
Drawn by a fraudful nymph, he gaz'd, he sigh'd:
Unmindful of his home, and distant bride,
She leads the willing victim to his doom,
Through winding alleys to her cobweb room.
Thence through the street he reels from post to post,
Valiant with wine, nor knows his treasure lost.
The vagrant wretch th' assembled watchmen spies,
He waves his hanger, and their poles defies;
Deep in the round-house pent, all night he snores,
And the next morn in vain his fate deplores.

Ah, hapless swain! unus'd to pains and ills!
Canst thou forego roast-beef for nauseous pills
How wilt thou lift to heaven thy eyes and hands,
When the long scroll the surgeon's fees demands!
Or else (ye gods avert that worst disgrace!)
Thy ruin'd nose falls level with thy face!
Then shall thy wife thy loathsome kiss disdain,
And wholesome neighbours from thy mug refrain.

Yet there are watchmen, who with friendly light,
Will teach thy reeling steps to tread aright;
For sixpence will support thy helpless arm,
And home conduct thee, safe from nightly harm.
But, if they shake their lanterns, from afar
To call their brethren to confederate war,
When rakes resist their power; if hapless you
Should chance to wander with the scowering crew;
Though fortune yield thee captive, ne'er despair,
But seek the constable's considerate ear;
He will reverse the watchman's harsh decree,
Mov'd by the rhetoric of a silver fee.
Thus, would you gain some favourite courtier's word,
Fee not the petty clerks, but bribe my lord.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep;
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep.
His scatter'd pence the flying nicker * flings,
And with the copper shower the casement rings.
Who has not heard the Scowerer's midnight fame?
Who has not trembled at the Mohock's name?
Was there a watchman took his hourly rounds,
Safe from their blows, or new-invented wounds?
I pass their desperate deeds, and mischiefs done,
Where from Snow-hill black sleepy torrents run;
How matrons, hoop'd within the hogshead's womb,
Were tumbled furious thence; the rolling tomb
O'er the stones thunders, bounds from side to side:
So Regulus to save his country dy'd.

Where a dim gleam the paly lanthorn throws
O'er the mid pavement, heapy rubbish grows;
Or arched vaults their gaping jaws extend,
Or the dark caves to common shores descend;
Oft' by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne;
In the wide gulph the shatter'd coach o'erthrown
Sinks with the snorting steeds; the reins are broke,
And from the cracking axle flies the spoke.
So, when sam'd Eddystone's far-shooting ray,
That led the sailor through the stormy way,
Was from its rocky roots by billows torn,
And the high turret in the whirlwind borne;
Fleets bulg'd their sides against the craggy land,
And pitchy ruins blacken'd all the strand.

Who then through night would hire the harness'd steed?
And who would choose the rattling wheel for speed?
But hark! distress with screaming voice draws nigher,
And wakes the slumbering street with cries of fire.
At first a glowing red inwraps the skies,
And borne by winds the scattering sparks arise;
From beam to beam the fierce contagion spreads;
The spiry flames now lift aloft their heads;
Through the burst sash a blazing deluge pours,
And splitting tiles descend in rattling showers;
Now with thick crowds th' enlighten'd pavement swarms,
The fireman sweats beneath his crooked arms;
A leathern casque his venturous head defends,
Boldly he climbs where thickest smoke ascends;

* Various cheats formerly in practice.

* Gentlemen who delighted to break windows with halfpence.

Mov'd by the mother's ſtreaming eyes and prayers,
The helpleſs infant through the flame he bears,
With no leſs virtue, than through hoſtile fire
The Dardan hero bore his aged ſire.
See forceful engines ſpout their levell'd ſtreams,
To quench the blaze that runs along the beams;
The grappling hook plucks rafters from the walls,
And heaps on heaps the ſmoky ruin falls;
Blown by ſtrong winds, the fiery tempeſt roars,
Bears down new walls, and pours along the floors;
The heavens are all a-blaze, the face of night
Is cover'd with a ſanguine dreadful light.
'Twas ſuch a light involv'd thy towers, O Rome!
The dire preſage of mighty Cæſar's doom,
When the ſun veil'd in ruſt his mourning head,
And frightful prodigies the ſkies o'erſpread.
Hark! the drum thunders! far, ye crowds retire;
Behold! the ready match is tipt with fire,
The nitrous ſtore is laid, the ſmutty train
With running blaze awakes the barrel'd grain;
Flames ſudden wrap the walls; with ſullen ſound
The ſhatter'd pile ſinks on the ſmoky ground.
So, when the years ſhall have revolv'd the date,
Th' inevitable hour of Naples' fate,
Her ſap'd foundations ſhall with thunders ſhake,
And heave and toſs upon the ſulphurous lake;
Earth's womb at once the fiery flood ſhall rend,
And in th' abyſs her plunging towers deſcend.

Conſider, reader, what fatigues I've known,
The toils, the perils of the wintery town;
What riots ſeen, what buſtling crowds I bore,
How oft' I croſs'd where carts and coaches roar;
Yet ſhall I bleſs my labours, if mankind
Their future ſafety from my dangers find.
Thus the bold traveller (inur'd to toil,
Whoſe ſteps have printed Aſia's deſert ſoil,
The barbarous Arabs haunt; or ſhivering croſs
Dark Greenland's mountains of eternal froſt;
Whom Providence in length of years reſtores
To the wiſh'd harbour of his native ſhores)
Sets forth his journals to the public view,
'To caution, by his woes, the wandering crew.
And now complete my generous labours lie,
Finiſh'd, and ripe for immortality.
Death ſhall entomb in duſt this mouldering frame,
But never reach th' eternal part, my fame.
When W—— and G———, mighty names!* are dead;
Or but at Chelſea under cuſtards read;
When critics crazy bandboxes repair,
And tragedies, turn'd rockets, bounce in air;
High rais'd on Fleet-ſtreet poſts, conſign'd to fame,
This work ſhall ſhine, and walkers bleſs my name.

* Probably Ward and Gildon.

INDEX

A

Author, for whom he wrote the poem, Book i. ver. - - - 119
Aſſes, their arrogance - - ii. 13
Ariadne's clue - - ii. 83
Alley, the pleaſure of walking in one ii 271
—— not to be walked in by night iii. 127
Almanacks, uſeleſs to judicious walkers ii 406
Autumn, what cries then in uſe - ii. 434
Arundel-ſtreet - - - ii. 484
Author, his wiſh - - ii. 587

B

Bavaroy, by whom worn - i. 53
Brokers, keep coaches - - i. 117
Bookſeller, ſkilled in the weather - i. 161
Barber, by whom to be ſhunned - ii. 28
Baker, to whom prejudicial - - ii. 30
Butchers, to be avoided - - ii. 43
Bully, his inſolence to be corrected - ii. 59
Broker, where he uſually walks - ii. 277
Burlington-houſe - - - ii. 494
Beau's chariot overturned - - ii. 523
Bills, diſperſed to walkers - - ii. 538
Ballad-ſingers - - - iii. 77

C

Country, the author's love of his - i. 21
Civic crown - - - - - i. 20
Cane, the convenience of one - i. 61
—— an amber-headed one uſeleſs - i. 67
—— the abuſe of it - - i. 75
Camlet, how affected by rain - - i. 46
Coat, how to chooſe one for the winter i. 41
Chairs and chariots, prejudicial to health i. 69
Coachman aſleep on his box, what the ſign i. 153
———— his metamorphoſis - ii. 241
———— his whip dangerous - ii. 310
———— his care of his horſes - ii. 311
———— deſpiſes dirty ſhoes - iii. 165
Chairmen, an obſervation upon them i. 154
Church monuments, foretel the weather i. 167
Common-ſhores - - - i. 171
Cold, the deſcription of one - i. 267
Clergy, what tradeſmen to avoid - ii. 25
Chimney-ſweeper, by whom to be avoided ii. 33
Chandlers, prejudicial to walkers - ii. 49
Civility to be paid to walkers - ii. 45
Carman, when unmerciful, his puniſhment ii. 245
Cheapſide, - - - ii. 248
Cheeſe not loved by the author - ii. 254
Countryman, perplexed to find the way ii. 73
Catharine-ſtreet - - - ii. 360
Chairmen, their exerciſe in froſty weather ii. 335
Covent-garden - - ii. 343. 347
Cries of the town, obſervations upon them ii. 426

Chriſtmas, what cries forerun it - ii. 438
——— a ſeaſon for general charity ii. 414
Coaches, dangerous in ſnowy weather ii. 327
——— thoſe that keep them uncharitable ii. 42
——— attended with ill accidents - ii. 511
——— deſpiſed by walkers - ii. 570
——— kept by coxcombs and pimps ii. 577
——— a ſtop of them deſcribed iii. 35
——— a man ſurrounded by them iii. 177
Cloacina, goddeſs of common ſhores ii. 115
Charing-croſs - - - ii. 214
Chriſtmas-box - - - ii. 185
Charity, moſt practiſed by walkers - ii. 454
——— where given with judgment ii. 456
——— not to be delayed - ii. 458
Chairs, the danger of them - ii. 513
Clement's church, the paſs of it deſcribed iii. 18
Colliers carts - - - iii. 25
Coachmen, a fight of them - - ibid.
Crowd, parted by a coach - - iii. 83
Cellar, the misfortune of falling into one iii. 121
Chairmen, law concerning them - iii. 153
——— their poles dangerous - iii. 161
Conſtable, his conſideration - iii. 315
Coach fallen into a hole, deſcribed iii. 335
Critics, their fate - - iii. 413

D

D'oily ſtuffs, uſeleſs in water - i. 43
Drugget-ſilk, improper in cold weather i. 44
Dreſs, propriety therein to be obſerved i. 129
Drummers, improper at a wedding - ii. 17
Duſtman, to whom offenſive - ii. 37
Drays, when not to be walked behind ii. 288
Doll, a melancholy ſtory of her death ii. 382
Duſtman, ſpiteful to gilded chariots - ii. 527
Drury-lane, dangerous to virtue - iii. 259

E

Evening deſcribed - - iii. 9
Eddyſtone light-houſe - - iii. 345

F

Frieze, its defects - - - ii. 45
Footman, his prudence in rainy weather i. 127
Fair weather, ſigns of it - - i. 143
Farrier's ſhop, a deſcription of one - ii. 251
Fop, the deſcription of one walking ii. 53
——— the ill conſequence of paſſing too near one - - - ii. 57
Female guides, not to be made uſe of ii. 87
Foot-ball deſcribed - - - ii. 347
Froſt, an epiſode of the great one - ii. 357
Fair, one kept on the Thames - ii. 369
Fiſhmonger, the deſcription of his ſtall ii. 414
Friday, how to know it - - ii. 416
Friend, the author walks with one - ii. 276
——— rules to walk with one - iii. 87
Fox, like a pick-pocket - - iii. 67
Footman very arrogant - - iii. 157
Fleet-ditch - - - iii. 189
Funeral, the walker's contemplation of one iii. 225
Fire, the deſcription of one - iii. 353
Fireman, his virtue - - iii. 362
Fire-engines - - - iii. 369
Father, the happineſs of a child who knows his own - - - ii. 177
Female walkers, what neceſſary for them i. 209

G

Gameſter, his chariot deſcribed - i. 115
Glazier, his ſkill at foot-ball - ii. 395
Guinea-droppers - - iii. 249

H

Health acquired by walking - i. 69
Holland, the ſtreets of that country deſcribed i. 87
Hoſiers poles, what obſerved by them i. 165
Hawker, at what time he cries news ii. 21
Horſes, like Parthians - - ii. 294
Hands, their uſe - - iii. 241
Houſe blown up, the deſcription of it iii. 381
Holborn-hill - - - ii. 174

I

Invention of pattens - - i. 219
Jugglers to be avoided - - ii. 285
Induſtry not exempt from death - ii. 389
June, what cry denotes that month - ii. 432
James, (St.) its market - - iii. 546

K

Knocker of a door, an obſervation on one ii. 497

L

London, its happineſs before the invention of coaches and chairs - - i. 101
Ladies walking the ſtreets - i. 105
——— in the Park, what they betoken - - - i. 145
——— dreſs neither by reaſon nor inſtinct i. 149
Letchers (old), where they frequent - ii. 280
Leadenhall-market - - ii. 546
Lintot (Mr.), advice to him - ii. 565
Lawyer paſſing the ſtreet in a coach - ii. 579
Labourers returned from work - iii. 13
Lincoln's-inn-fields - - iii. 133
Link-man, where not to be truſted - iii. 139
Luxury, a reflection on it - iii. 195
Legs, their uſe - - iii. 241
Lantern, what it ſhows in the middle of the ſtreet - - - iii. 335
Ludgate-hill - - - ii. 292

M

Martha, a milk-maid of Lincolnſhire i. 125
Morning, then what firſt to be conſidered i. 121
Morning deſcribed - - ii. 7
Milford-lane - - - iii. 25
Meuſe, jugglers often ply thereabouts to inveigle walkers to play - - ii. 287
Milk-maid of the city, unlike a rural one ii. 11
Mercy recommended to coachmen and carmen - - - - ii. 237
Maſons, dangerous to paſs where at work ii. 266
Modeſty not to be offended - ii. 298
Monday, by what obſervations to know it ii. 408
Miſer, his manner of charity - ii. 462
Moorfields - - - ii. 548
Monmouth-ſtreet - - - ibid.
Mobs to be avoided - - iii. 51
Mohocks, a ſet of modern rakes - iii. 326
Matrons put in hogſheads - iii. 329

N

Naples, the ſtreets of that city - i. 93
Newgate-market - - ii. 544
Niſus and Euryalus - - iii. 97
Noſe, its uſe - - - iii. 245
Nicker, his art - - - iii. 323

Naples, its future fate - iii. 387

O

Oysters, at what time first cry'd - i. 28
Old woman, an observation upon one i. 139
Observations on the looks of walkers ii. 274
Ox roasted on the Thames - ii. 368
Orpheus, his death - - ii. 393
Overton the print-seller - - ii. 489
Oyster-wench - - - iii. 185
Oyster, the courage of him that first ate one iii. 195
Oedipus - - - - iii. 215

P

Pavers, their duty - - i 11
Paris, the streets of that city - i. 85
Poor, their murmurs, what the sign of i. 178
Paul (St.), his festival - - i. 176
Precepts, what the consequence if neglected i. 189
Pattens, a female implement - i. 212
Presents better than flattery - i. 280
Patten, its derivation - - i. 282
Perfumer, by whom to be avoided - ii. 29
Porter sworn, useful to walkers - ii. 65
'Prentices not to be relied on - ii. 69
Post, when to walk on the outside of it ii. 7
Pillory, not to be gazed upon - ii. 225
Pall-mall celebrated - - ii. 256
Pythagoras, his doctrine - - ii. 241
Petticoat, its use in bad weather - ii. 304
Pavers, a signal for coaches to avoid them ii. 306
Pattens inconvenient in snowy weather ii. 324
Phaëton, a beau compared to him - ii. 535
Perriwigs, how stolen off the head - iii. 55
Pick-pocket, his art and misfortunes iii. 59
Paint, how to be avoided - - iii. 337
Play-house, a caution when you lead a lady out of it - - - iii. 253

Q

Quarrels for the wall to be avoided iii. 213
Quarrels, sham ones, dangerous - iii. 251

R

Riding-hood, its use - - i. 209
Rome, the streets of it - - i. 94
Rain, signs of it - - - i. 157
Rakes, how they avoid a dun - ii. 282
Raphael Urbin - - - ii. 487
Rakes, their time of walking - iii. 321
Regulus, his death - - iii. 330
Reader, the author addresses him - iii. 393

S

Scavengers, their duty - - i. 15
Stage-coaches, an observation upon them i. 25
Shoe-cleaning boys, the time of their first appearance - - - i. 23
Shoes, when to provide them - i. 29
——— what sort improper for walkers - i 33
——— what proper for dancers - i. 30
——— what most proper for walkers ibid.
Surtout, Kersey, its description - i. 55
Shower, a man in one described - i. 191
Shins, what they betoken when scorched i. 137
Signs creaking, what they betoken - i. 157
Superstition to be avoided - i. 175
St. Swithin, his festival - - i. 183
Small-coal-man, by whom to be avoided ii. 35
Summer, foreign to the author's design ii. 315
Signs, the use of them - - ii. 67
Seven dials of St. Giles's parish described ii. 80
Stockings, how to prevent their being spattered - - - - ii. 91
Streets, narrow ones to be avoided - ii. 247
Snowy weather - - - ii 320
Shoes, how to free them from snow - ii. 325
Snow-balls, coachmen pelted with them ii. 329
School-boys mischievous in frosty weather ii. 331
Sempstress, the description of her in a frosty morning - - - ii. 337
——— advice to her - - ii. 341
Saturday, by what observations to know it ii. 422
Spring, the cries then in use - ii. 428
Streets formerly noblemen's houses - ii. 492
Swords, silver, lure thieves - iii. 53
Street, how to cross it - - iii. 165
Scylla and Charybdis - - iii. 183
Street, where to cross it by night - iii. 185
Shoe-cleaning boy, his birth - ii. 135
——— his lamentation - ii. 177
——— his happiness - ii. 145
——— without father or mother ii. 181
Scowerers, a set of rakes - - iii. 325
Snow-hill - - - iii. 330

T

Trivia, the goddess of streets and highways, invoked - - - i. 5
Trades prejudicial to walkers - - ii. 25
Tradesmen, in what to be trusted - ii. 71
Theseus in the labyrinth of Crete - ii. 83
Thames-street - - - ii. 244
Trades offensive to the smell - ii. 246
Tea-drinkers, a necessary caution to them ii. 296
Thames, coaches driven over it - ii. 365
Thaw, the description of one - - ii. 400
Thursday, by what observations to know it ii. 408
Titian - - - - ii. 486
Trivia invoked as Cynthia - - iii. 1
Turn-stiles - - - iii. 107
Tragedies, their fate - - iii. 414

U

Umbrella, its use - - i. 211
Venice, the streets of it - - i. 97
Vaults, an observation upon them - i. 172
Vulcan in love with a milk-maid - i. 241
——— advice to him - - i. 245
——— metamorphosed to a country farrier i. 253
——— the inventor of hobnails and sparables - - - - i. 263
——— the inventor of pattens - i. 275
Upholder, where he frequents - - ii. 470

W

Winter, the beginning of it described - i. 2
Weather, signs of cold - - i. 135
——— signs of fair - - i. 143
——— signs of rainy - - i. 157
Witney broad-cloth proper for horsemen i. 47
Wig compared to Alecto's snakes - i. 202
——— to Glaucus's beard - i. 205
Wig, what to be worn in a mist - i. 125
Waterman, judicious in the weather - i. 163
Winds whistling, what they foretel - i. 169
Wall, to whom to be given - - ii. 45
—— to whom to be denied - ii. 59

Wall, when to keep it - - - iii. 205
Way, of whom to be inquired - - ii. 65
Watling-ſtreet - - - ii. 247
Walkers, inadvertent, to what misfortunes liable - - - - ii. 285
Wits, a caution to them - - ii. 296
Walker diſtreſſed by a foot-ball - ii. 347
Waterman, his dominion invaded - ii. 361
Wedneſday, how to know it - ii. 416
Walkers, their happineſs - - ii. 502
——— free from diſeaſes - ii. 506
Water, the danger of being upon it - ii. 515
Walking advantageous to learning - ii. 551
Women, the ill conſequence of gazing on them - - - - iii. 101
Wheel-barrows, how they prejudice walkers - - - - - iii. 107
Whore, how to know one - - - iii. 267
Whores, the ſtreets where they ply - iii. 259
Watchmen, the method of treating with them - - - - - iii. 307
——— their ſignal to their fellows iii. 311
——— what to do if taken by them iii. 313

Y

Yeomen, a dreadful ſtory of one - iii. 285

EPISTLES ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS.

EPISTLE I.

To a Lady. Occaſioned by the Arrival of her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs of Wales.

MADAM, to all your cenſures I ſubmit,
And frankly own I ſhould long ſince have writ.
You told me, ſilence would be thought a crime,
And kindly ſtrove to teaze me into rhyme:
No more let trifling themes your muſe employ,
Nor laviſh verſe, to paint a female toy:
No more on plains with rural damſels ſport;
But ſing the glories of the Britiſh court.
By your commands and inclination ſway'd,
I call'd th' unwilling muſes to my aid:
Reſolv'd to write, the noble theme I choſe,
And to the princeſs thus the poem roſe.
" Aid me, bright Phœbus! aid, ye ſacred nine!
" Exalt my genius, and my verſe refine.
" My ſtrains with Carolina's name I grace,
" The lovely parent of our royal race.
" Breathe ſoft, ye winds! ye waves, in ſilence ſleep!
" Let proſperous breezes wanton o'er the deep,
" Swell the white ſails, and with the ſtreamers play,
" To waft her gently o'er the watery way."
Here I to Neptune form'd a pompous prayer,
To rein the winds, and guard the royal fair;
Bid the blue tritons ſound their twiſted ſhells,
And call the nereids from their pearly cells.
Thus my warm zeal had drawn the muſe along,
Yet knew no method to conduct her ſong:
I then reſolv'd ſome model to purſue,
Perus'd French critics, and began anew.
Long open panegyric drags at beſt,
And praiſe is only praiſe when well addreſs'd.
Straight Horace for ſome lucky ode I ſought:
And all along I trac'd him thought by thought.
This new performance to a friend I ſhow'd:
For ſhame! ſays he; what, imitate an ode!
I'd rather ballads write, and Grub-ſtreet lays,
Than pillage Cæſar for my patron's praiſe:
One common fate all imitators ſhare,
To ſave mince-pyes, and cap the grocer's ware.
Vex'd at the charge, I to the flames commit
Rhymes, ſimilies, lords names, and ends of wit:
In blotted ſtanzas ſcraps of odes expire,
And fuſtian mounts in pyramids of fire.
Ladies! to you I next inſcrib'd my lay,
And writ a letter in familiar way:
For ſtill impatient till the princeſs came,
You from deſcription wiſh'd to know the dame.
Each day my pleaſing labour larger grew,
For ſtill new graces open'd to my view.
Twelve lines ran on to introduce the theme;
And then I thus purſued the growing ſcheme:
" Beauty and wit were ſure by nature join'd,
" And charms are emanations of the mind:
" The ſoul, tranſpiercing through the ſhining frame,
" Forms all the graces of the princely dame:
" Benevolence her converſation guides,
" Smiles on her cheek, and in her eye reſides.
" Such harmony upon her tongue is found,
" As ſoftens Engliſh to Italian ſound:
" Yet in thoſe ſounds ſuch ſentiments appear,
" As charm the judgment, while they ſoothe the ear.
" Religion's cheerful flame her boſom warms,
" Calms all her hours, and brightens all her charms.
" Henceforth, ye fair, at chapel mind your prayers,
" Nor catch your lover's eyes with artful airs;
" Reſtrain your looks, kneel more, and whiſper leſs,
" Nor moſt devoutly criticiſe on dreſs.
" From her form all your characters of life,
" The tender mother, and the faithful wife.
" Oft have I ſeen her little infant-train,
" The lovely primroſe of a future reign;
" Obſerv'd with pleaſure every dawning grace,
" And all the mother opening in their face.
" The ſon ſhall add new honours to the line,
" And early with paternal virtues ſhine:
" When he the tale of Audenard repeats,
" His little heart with emulation beats;
" With conqueſts yet to come his boſom glows,
" He dreams of triumphs, and of vanquiſh'd foes;

" Each year with arts ſhall ſtore his ripening brain,
" And from his grandſire he ſhall learn to reign."
Thus far I'd gone: Propitious riſing gales
Now bid the ſailor hoiſt the ſwelling ſails.
Fair Carolina lands; the cannons roar;
White Albion's cliffs reſound from ſhore to ſhore.
Behold the bright original appear,
All praiſe is faint when Carolina's near.
Thus to the nation's joy, but poet's coſt,
The princeſs came, and my new plan was loſt.
Since all my ſchemes were baulk'd (my laſt reſort),
I left the muſes, to frequent the court:
Penſive each night from room to room I walk'd,
To one I bow'd, and with the other talk'd;
Inquir'd what news, or ſuch a lady's name,
And did the next day, and the next, the ſame.
Places, I found, were daily given away,
And yet no friendly gazette mention'd Gay.
I aſk'd a friend what method to purſue;
He cry'd, I want a place as well as you.
Another aſk'd me, why I had not writ;
A poet owes his fortune to his wit.
Straight I reply'd, with what a courtly grace
Flows eaſy verſe from him that has a place!
Had Virgil ne'er at court improv'd his ſtrains,
He ſtill had ſung of flocks and homely ſwains;
And, had not Horace ſweet preferment found,
The Roman lyre had never learnt to ſound.
Once ladies fair in homely guiſe I ſung, [rung.
And with their names wild woods and mountains
O teach me now to ſtrike a ſofter ſtrain!
The court refines the language of the plain.
You muſt, cries one, the miniſtry rehearſe,
And with each patriot's name prolong your verſe:
But ſure this truth to poets ſhould be known,
That praiſing all alike, is praiſing none.
Another told me, if I wiſh'd ſucceſs,
To ſome diſtinguiſh'd lord I muſt addreſs;
One whoſe high virtues ſpeak his noble blood,
One always zealous for his country's good;
Where valour and ſtrong eloquence unite,
In council cautious, reſolute in fight;
Whoſe generous temper prompts him to defend,
And patroniſe the man that wants a friend.
You have, 'tis true, the noble patron ſhown;
But I, alas! am to Argyll unknown.
Still every one I met in this agreed,
That writing was my method to ſucceed;
But now preferments ſo poſſeſs'd my brain,
That ſcarce I could produce a ſingle ſtrain:
Indeed I ſometimes hammer'd out a line,
Without connection, as without deſign.
One morn upon the princeſs this I writ,
An epigram that boaſts more truth than wit.
" The pomp of titles eaſy faith might ſhake,
" She ſcorn'd an empire for religion's ſake:
" For this on earth the Britiſh crown was given,
" And an immortal crown decreed in heaven."
Again, while George's virtues rais'd my thought,
The following lines prophetic fancy wrought.
" Methinks I ſee ſome bard, whoſe heavenly rage
" Shall riſe in ſong, and warm a future age;
" Look back through time, and, wrapt in wonder, trace
" The glorious ſeries of the Brunſwick race.
" From the firſt George theſe godlike kings deſcend,
" A line which only with the world ſhall end.
" The next a generous prince renown'd in arms,
" And bleſs'd, long bleſs'd, in Carolina's charms;
" From theſe the reſt. 'Tis thus, ſecure in peace,
" We plough the fields, and reap the year's increaſe:
" Now commerce, wealthy goddeſs, rears her head,
" And bids Britannia's fleets their canvas ſpread;
" Unnumber'd ſhips the peopled ocean hide,
" And wealth returns with each revolving tide."
Here paus'd the ſullen muſe; in haſte I dreſs'd,
And through the crowd of needy courtiers preſs'd;
Though unſucceſsful, happy whilſt I ſee
Thoſe eyes, that glad a nation, ſhine on me.

EPISTLE II.

To the Right Honourable the Earl of Barlington.

A Journey to Exeter. 1716.

While you, my lord, bid ſtately piles aſcend,
Or in your Chiſwick bowers enjoy your friend;
Where Pope unloads the boughs within his reach,
The purple vine, blue plum, and bluſhing peach,
I journey far.—You knew fat bards might tire,
And, mounted, ſent me forth your truſty 'ſquire.
'Twas on the day when city-dames repair
To take their weekly doſe of Hyde-park air;
When forth we trot: no carts the road infeſt,
For ſtill on Sundays country horſes reſt.
Thy gardens, Kenſington, we leave unſeen;
Through Hammerſmith jog on to Turnham-green.
That Turnham-green, which dainty pigeons fed,
But feeds no more: for * Solomon is dead.
Three duſty miles reach Brentford's tedious town,
For dirty ſtreets and white-legg'd chickens known:
Thence, o'er wide ſhrubby heaths and furrow'd lanes,
We come where Thames divides the meads of Stains.
We ferry'd o'er; for late the winter's flood
Shook her frail bridge, and tore her piles of wood.
Prepar'd for war, now Bagſhot-heath we croſs,
Where broken gameſters oft repair their loſs.
At Hartley-row the foaming bit we preſt,
While the fat landlord welcom'd every gueſt.
Supper was ended, healths the glaſſes crown'd,
Our hoſt extoll'd his wine at every round;
Relates the juſtices late meeting there,
How many bottles drank, and what their cheer;
What lords had been his gueſts in days of yore,
And prais'd their wiſdom much, their drinking more.
Let travellers the morning-vigils keep:
The morning roſe, but we lay faſt aſleep.
Twelve tedious miles we bore the ſultry ſun,
And Popham-lane was ſcarce in ſight by one:
The ſtraggling village harbour'd thieves of old,
'Twas here the ſtage-coach'd laſs reſign'd her gold;
That gold which had in London purchas'd gowns,
And ſent her home a belle to country towns.

---

* A man once famous for feeding pigeons.

But robbers haunt no more the neighbouring wood:
Here unown'd infants find their daily food;
For should the maiden-mother nurse her son,
'Twould spoil her match when her good name is gone.
Our jolly hostess nineteen children bore,
Nor fail'd her breast to suckle nineteen more.
Be just, ye prudes, wipe off the long arrear:
Be virgins still in town, but mothers here.
Sutton we pass, and leave her spacious down,
And with the setting sun reach Stockbridge town.
O'er our parch'd tongue the rich metheglin glides,
And the red dainty trout our knife divides.
Sad melancholy every visage wears;
What, no election come in seven long years!
Of all our race of mayors, shall Snow * alone
Be by Sir Richard's dedication known?
Our streets no more with tides of ale shall float,
Nor coblers feast thee years upon one vote. [plain,
Next morn, twelve miles led o'er th' unbounded
Where the cloak'd shepherd guides his fleecy train.
No leafy bowers a noon-day shelter lend,
Nor from the chilly dews at night defend:
With wond'rous art, he counts the straggling flock,
And by the sun informs you what's o'clock.
How are your shepherds fall'n from ancient days!
No Amaryllis chaunts alternate lays!
From her no listening echoes learn to sing,
Nor with his reed the jocund valleys ring.
Here sheep the pasture hide, there harvests bend,
See Sarum's steeple o'er yon hill ascend;
Our horses faintly trot beneath the heat,
And our keen stomachs know the hour to eat.
Who can forsake thy walls, and not admire
The proud cathedral, and the lofty spire?
What sempstress has not prov'd thy sciffars good?
From hence first came th' intriguing riding-hood.
Amid † three boarding-schools well stock'd with misses, [ses?
Shall three knight-errants starve for want of kis-
O'er the green turf the miles slide swift away,
And Blandford ends the labours of the day.
The morning rose; the supper reckoning paid,
And our due fees discharg'd to man and maid,
The ready ostler near the stirrup stands,
And, as we mount, our half-pence load his hands.
Now the steep hill fair Dorchester o'erlooks,
Border'd by meads, and wash'd by silver brooks.
Here sleep my two companions eyes suppress,
And propt in elbow-chairs they snoring rest:
I weary sit, and with my pencil trace
Their painful postures, and their eyeless face;
Then dedicate each glass to some fair name,
And on the sash the diamond scrawls my flame.
Now o'er true Roman way our horses sound,
Grævius would kneel, and kiss the sacred ground.
On either side low fertile valleys lie,
The distant prospects tire the travelling eye.
Through Bridport's stony lanes our rout we take,
And the proud steep descend to Morcombe's lake.

As hearses pass'd, our landlord robb'd the pall,
And with the mournful 'scutcheon hung his hall.
On unadulterate wine we here regale,
And strip the lobster of his scarlet mail.
We climb'd the hills, when starry night arose,
And Axminster affords a kind repose.
The maid, subdued by fees, her trunk unlocks,
And gives the cleanly aid of dowlass-smocks.
Mean time our shirts her busy fingers rub,
While the soap lathers o'er the foaming tub.
If women's geer such pleasing dreams incite,
Lend us your smocks, ye damsels, every night!
We rise, our beards demand the barber's art;
A female enters, and performs the part.
The weighty golden chain adorns her neck,
And three gold rings her skilful hand bedeck:
Smooth o'er our chin her easy fingers move,
Soft as when Venus stroak'd the beard of Jove.
Now from the steep, 'midst scatter'd farms and groves,
Our eye through Honiton's fair valley roves.
Behind us soon the busy town we leave,
Where finest lace industrious lasses weave.
Now swelling clouds roll'd on; the rainy load
Stream'd down our hats, and smok'd along the road;
When (O blest sight!) a friendly sign we spy'd,
Our spurs are slacken'd from the horses side;
For sure a civil host the house commands,
Upon whose sign this courteous motto stands:
"This is the ancient hand, and eke the pen;
"Here is for horses hay, and meat for men."
How rhyme would flourish, did each son of fame
Know his own genius, and direct his flame!
Then he, that could not epic flights rehearse,
Might sweetly mourn in elegiac verse.
But were his muse for elegy unfit,
Perhaps a distich might not strain his wit:
If epigram offend, his harmless lines
Might in gold letters swing on ale-house signs.
Then Hobbinol might propagate his bays,
And Tuttle-fields record his simple lays; [eyes,
Where rhymes like these might lure the nurses
While gaping infants squawl for farthing pies:
"Treat here, ye shepherds blithe, your damsels
"sweet,
"For pies and cheese-cakes are for damsels meet."
Then Maurus in his proper sphere might shine,
And these proud numbers grace great William's sign:
"This is the man, this the Nassovian, whom
"I nam'd the brave deliverer to come *."
But now the driving gales suspend the rain,
We mount our steeds, and Devon's city gain.
Hail, happy native land!—but I forbear
What other counties must with envy hear.

EPISTLE III.

To the Right Honourable William Pulteney, Esq 1717.

PULTENEY, methinks you blame my breach of word;
What! cannot Paris one poor page afford?

---

* Sir Richard Steele, member for Stockbridge, wrote a treatise called "The Importance of Dunkirk consider-"ed," and dedicated it to Mr. John Snow, bailiff of Stockbridge.

† There are three boarding-schools in this town.

* Blackmore's Prince Arthur, book v.

Yes, I can fagely, when the times are paſt,
Laugh at thoſe follies which I ſtrove to taſte,
And each amuſement, which we ſhar'd, review,
Pleas'd with mere talking, ſince I talk to you.
But how ſhall I deſcribe in humble proſe
Their balls, aſſemblies, operas, and beaux?
In proſe? you cry: oh no, the muſe muſt aid,
And leave Parnaſſus for the Tuilleries' ſhade:
Shall he (who late Britannia's city trod,
And led the draggled muſe, with pattens ſhod,
Through dirty lanes, and alleys' doubtful ways)
Refuſe to write, when Paris aſks his lays!

Well then, I'll try. Deſcend, ye beauteous Nine,
In all the colours of the rainbow ſhine,
Let ſparkling ſtars your neck and ear adorn,
Lay on the bluſhes of the crimſon morn;
So may ye balls and gay aſſemblies grace,
And at the opera claim the foremoſt place.

Travellers ſhould ever fit expreſſion chooſe,
Nor with low phraſe the lofty theme abuſe.
When they deſcribe the ſtate of eaſtern lords,
Pomp and magnificence ſhould ſwell their words;
And, when they paint the ſerpent's ſcaly pride,
Their lines ſhould hiſs, their numbers ſmoothly ſlide;
But they, unmindful of poetic rules,
Deſcribe alike Mockaws and Great Moguls.
Dampier would thus, without ill-meaning ſatire,
Dreſs forth in ſimple ſtyle the Petit-maitre:

" In Paris there's a race of animals
" I've ſeen them at their operas and balls):
" They ſtand erect, they dance whene'er they walk,
" Monkeys in action, parroquets in talk;
" They're crown'd with feathers, like the cockatoo,
" And, like camelions, daily change their hue;
" From patches juſtly plac'd they borrow graces,
" And with vermilion lacquer o'er their faces.
" This cuſtom, as we viſibly diſcern,
" They, by frequenting ladies toilettes, learn."
Thus might the traveller eaſy truth impart.
Into the ſubject let me nobly ſtart.

How happy lives the man, how ſure to charm,
Whoſe knot embroider'd flutters down his arm!
On him the ladies caſt the yielding glance,
Sigh in his ſongs, and languiſh in his dance:
While wretched is the wit, contemn'd, forlorn,
Whoſe gummy hat no ſcarlet plumes adorn;
No broider'd flowers his worſted ankle grace,
Nor cane embroſs'd with gold directs his pace;
No lady's favour on his ſword is hung;
What though Apollo dictate from his tongue,
His wit is ſpiritleſs and void of grace,
Who wants th' aſſurance of brocade and lace.
While the gay fop genteelly talks of weather,
The fair in raptures doat upon his feather;
Like a court-lady though he write and ſpell,
His minuet-ſtep was faſhion'd by Marcell *;
He dreſſes, fences. What avails to know?
For women chooſe their men, like ſilks, for ſhow.
Is this the thing, you cry, that Paris boaſts?
Is this the thing renown'd among our toaſts?
For ſuch a fluttering ſight we need not roam;
Our own aſſemblies ſhine with theſe at home.

* A famous dancing-maſter.

Let us into the field of beauty ſtart;
Beauty's a theme that ever warm'd my heart.
Think not, ye fair, that I the ſex accuſe:
How ſhall I ſpare you, prompted by the muſe?
(The muſes all are prudes!) She rails, ſhe frets,
Amidſt this ſprightly nation of coquettes:
Yet let not us their looſe coquetry blame;
Women of every nation are the ſame.

You aſk me, if Pariſian dames, like ours,
With rattling dice profane the Sunday's hours;
If they the gameſter's pale-ey'd vigils keep,
And ſtake their honour while their huſbands ſleep?
Yes, Sir; like Engliſh toaſts, the dames of France
Will riſk their income on a ſingle chance.
Nannette laſt night a tricking pharaon play'd,
The cards the Taillier's ſliding hand obey'd:
To-day her neck no brilliant circle wears,
Nor the ray-darting pendant loads her ears.
Why does old Chloris an aſſembly hold?
Chloris each night divides the ſharper's gold.
Corinna's cheek with frequent loſſes burns,
And no bold Trente le va her fortune turns.
Ah, too raſh virgin! where's thy virtue flown?
She pawns her perſon for the ſharper's loan.
Yet who with juſtice can their fair upbraid,
Whoſe debts of honour are ſo duly paid?

But let me not forget the toilette's cares,
Where art each morn the languid cheek repairs:
This red's too pale, nor gives a diſtant grace;
Madame to-day puts on her opera face;
From this we ſcarce extract the milk maid's bloom:
Bring the deep dye that warms acroſs the room:
Now flames her cheek, ſo ſtrong her charms prevail,
That on her gown the ſilken roſe looks pale!
Not but that France ſome native beauty boaſts,
Clermont and Charolois might grace our toaſts.
When the ſweet breathing ſpring unfolds the buds,
Love flies the duſty town for ſhady woods.
Then Tottenham-fields with roving beauty ſwarm,
And Hamſtead balls the city virgin warm?
Then Chelſea's meads o'erhear perfidious vows,
And the preſt graſs defrauds the grazing cows.
'Tis here the ſame; but in a higher ſphere,
For ev'n court-ladies ſin in open air.
What cit with a gallant would truſt his ſpouſe
Beneath the tempting ſhade of Greenwich boughs?
What peer of France would let his ducheſs rove,
Where Boulogne's cloſeſt woods invite to love?
But here no wife can blaſt her huſband's fame,
Cuckold is grown an honourable name.
Stretch'd on the graſs, the ſhepherd ſighs his pain;
And on the graſs what ſhepherd ſighs in vain?
On Chloe's lap here Damon laid along,
Melts with the languiſh of her amorous ſong;
There Iris flies Palæmon through the glade,
Nor trips by chance—till in the thickeſt ſhade;
Here Celimene defends her lips and breaſt,
For kiſſes are by ſtruggling cloſer preſt:
Alexis there with eager flame grows bold,
Nor can the nymph his wanton fingers hold:
Be wiſe; Alexis, what, ſo near the road!
Hark, a coach rolls, and huſbands are abroad!
Such were our pleaſures in the days of yore,
When amorous Charles Britannia's ſceptre bore;

The nightly ſcene of joy the Park was made,
And Love in couples peopled every ſhade.
But, ſince at court the rural taſte is loſt,
What mighty ſums have velvet couches coſt!
Sometimes the Tuilleries' gaudy walk I love,
Where I through crowds of ruſtling mantuas rove.
As here from ſide to ſide my eyes I caſt,
And gaz'd on all the glittering train that paſt,
Sudden a fop ſteps forth before the reſt;
I knew the bold embroidery of his veſt.
He thus accoſts me with familiar air,
"Parbleu! on a fait cet habit en Angleterre!
"Quelle manche! ce galon eſt groſſiérement rangé;
"Voila quelque choſe de fort beau et degaggé!"
This ſaid: on his red heel he turns, and then
Hums a ſoft minuet, and proceeds again:
"Well; now you've Paris ſeen, you'll frankly own
"Your boaſted London ſeems a country town.
"Has Chriſtianity yet reach'd your nation?
"Are churches built? Are maſquerades in faſhion?
"Do daily ſoups your dinners introduce?
"Are muſic, ſnuff, and coaches, yet in uſe?"
Pardon me, Sir; we know the Paris mode,
And gather politeſſe from courts abroad.
Like you, our courtiers keep a numerous train
To load their coach, and tradeſmen dun in vain.
Nor has religion left us in the lurch;
And, as in France, our vulgar crowd the church:
Our ladies too ſupport the maſquerade;
The ſex by nature love th' intriguing trade.
Straight the vain fop in ignorant raptures cries,
"Paris the barbarous world will civilize!"
Pray, Sir, point out among the paſſing band
The preſent beauties who the town command.
"See yonder dame; ſtrict virtue chills her breaſt,
"Mark in her eye demure the prude profeſt;
"That frozen boſom native fire muſt want,
"Which boaſts of conſtancy to one gallant!
"This next the ſpoils of fifty lovers wears,
"Rich Dandin's brilliant favours grace her ears;
"The necklace Florio's generous flame beſtow'd,
"Clitander's ſparkling gems her finger load;
"But now her charms grow cheap by conſtant uſe,
"She ſins for ſcarfs, clock'd-ſtockings, knots, and
"ſhoes.
"This next, with ſober gait and ſerious leer,
"Wearies her knees with morn and evening prayer;
"She ſcorns th' ignoble love of feeble pages,
"But with three abbots in one night engages.
"This with the cardinal her night employs,
"Where holy ſinews conſecrate her joys.
"Why have I promis'd things beyond my power?
"Five aſſignations wait me at this hour!
"The ſprightly counteſs firſt my viſit claims,
"To-morrow ſhall indulge inferior dames.
"Pardon me, Sir, that thus I take my leave;
"Gay Florimella ſlily twitch'd my ſleeve."
Adieu, Monſieur!—The opera hour draws near.
Not ſee the opera! all the world is there; [France
Where on the ſtage th' embroider'd youth of
In bright array attract the female glance:
This languiſhes, this ſtruts, to ſhow his mien,
And not a gold-clock'd ſtocking moves unſeen.
But hark! the full orcheſtra ſtrike the ſtrings;
The hero ſtruts, and the whole audience ſings.

My jarring ear harſh grating murmurs wound,
Hoarſe and confus'd, like Babel's mingled ſound.
Hard chance had plac'd me near a noiſy throat,
That in rough quivers bellow'd every note.
Pray, Sir, ſays I ſuſpend awhile your ſong;
The opera's drown'd; your lungs are wondrous
ſtrong;
I wiſh to hear your Roland's ranting ſtrain,
While he with rooted foreſts ſtrows the plain.
Sudden he ſhrugs ſurpriſe, and anſwers quick,
"Monſieur apparement n'aime pas la muſique!"
Then turning round, he join'd th' ungrateful noiſe;
And the loud chorus thunder'd with his voice.
O ſoothe me with ſome ſoft Italian air,
Let harmony compoſe my tortur'd ear!
When Anaſtaſia's voice commands the ſtrain,
The melting warble thrills through every vein;
Thought ſtands ſuſpenſe, and ſilence pleas'd attends,
While in her notes the heavenly choir deſcends.
But you'll imagine I'm a Frenchman grown,
Pleas'd and content with nothing but my own,
So ſtrongly with this prejudice poſſeſt,
He thinks French muſic and French painting beſt.
Mention the force of learn'd Corelli's notes,
Some ſcraping fiddler of their ball he quotes;
Talk of the ſpirit Raphael's pencil gives,
Yet warm with life whoſe ſpeaking picture lives;
Yes, Sir, ſays he, in colour and deſign,
Rigaut and Raphael are extremely fine!
'Tis true his country's love tranſports his breaſt
With warmer zeal than your old Greeks profeſt.
Ulyſſes lov'd his Ithaca of yore,
Yet that ſage traveller left his native ſhore.
What ſtronger virtue in the Frenchman ſhines!
He to dear Paris all his life confines.
I'm not ſo fond. There are, I muſt confeſs,
Things which might make me love my country leſs.
I ſhould not think my Britain had ſuch charms,
If loſt to learning, if enſlav'd by arms.
France has her Richlieus and her Colberts known;
And then, I grant it, France in ſcience ſhone.
We too, I own, without ſuch aids may chance
In ignorance and pride to rival France.
But let me not forget Corneille, Racine, [ſcene.
Boileau's ſtrong ſenſe, and Moliere's humorous
Let Cambray's name be ſung above the reſt,
Whoſe maxims, Pulteney, warm thy patriot breaſt;
In Mentor's precepts wiſdom ſtrong and clear
Dictates ſublime, and diſtant nations hear.
Hear, all ye princes, who the world controul,
What cares, what terrors, haunt the tyrant's ſoul;
His conſtant train are, Anger, Fear, Diſtruſt.
To be a king, is to be good and juſt;
His people he protects, their rights he ſaves,
And ſcorns to rule a wretched race of ſlaves.
Happy, thrice happy, ſhall the monarch reign,
Where guardian laws deſpotic power reſtrain!
There ſhall the ploughſhare break the ſtubborn land,
And bending harveſt tire the peaſant's hand:
There Liberty her ſettled manſion boaſts,
There Commerce plenty brings from foreign coaſts.
O Britain! guard thy laws, thy rights defend:
So ſhall theſe bleſſings to thy ſons deſcend!
You'll think 'tis time ſome other theme to chooſe,
And not with beaux and fops fatigue the muſe:

Should I let satire loose on English ground,
There fools of various character abound;
But here my verse is to one race confin'd,
All Frenchmen are of petit-maitre kind.

EPISTLE IV.

To the Right Honourable Paul Methuen, Esq.

THAT 'tis encouragement makes science spread,
Is rarely practis'd, though 'tis often said.
When learning droops and sickens in the land,
What patron's found, to lend a saving hand?
True generous spirits prosperous vice detest,
And love to cherish virtue when distrest:
But, ere our mighty lords this scheme pursue,
Our mighty lords must think and act like you.
Why must we climb the Alpine mountain's sides,
To find the seat where harmony resides?
Why touch we not so soft the silver lute,
The cheerful hautboy, and the mellow flute?
'Tis not th' Italian clime improves the sound;
But there the patrons of her sons are found.
Why flourish'd verse in great Augustus' reign?
He and Mæcenas lov'd the muse's strain.
But now that wight in poverty must mourn
Who was (O cruel stars!) a poet born.
Yet there are ways for authors to be great;
Write rancorous libels to reform the state:
Or, if you choose more sure and ready ways,
Spatter a minister with fulsome praise:
Launch out with freedom, flatter him enough;
Fear not—all men are dedication proof.
Be bolder yet, you must go farther still,
Dip deep in gall thy mercenary quill.
He, who his pen in party-quarrels draws,
Lifts an hir'd bravo to support the cause;
He must indulge his patron's hate and spleen,
And stab the fame of those he ne'er had seen.
Why then should authors mourn their desperate case?
Be brave, do this, and then demand a place.
Why art thou poor? Exert the gifts to rise,
And banish timorous virtue from thy eyes.
All this seems modern preface, where we're told
That wit is prais'd, but hungry lives and cold:
Against th' ungrateful age these authors roar,
And fancy learning starves because they're poor.
Yet why should learning hope success at court?
Why should our patriots virtue's cause support?
Why to true merit should they have regard?
They know that virtue is its own reward.
Yet let not me of grievances complain,
Who (though the meanest of the muses' train)
Can boast subscriptions to my humble lays,
And mingle profit with my little praise.
Ask Painting, why she loves Hesperian air?
Go view, she cries, my glorious labours there;
There in rich palaces I reign in state,
And on the temples lofty domes create.
The noble view my works with knowing eyes,
They love the science, and the painter prize.
Why didst thou, Kent, forego thy native land,
To emulate in picture Raphael's hand?
Think'st thou for this to raise thy name at home?
Go back, adorn the palaces of Rome;
There on the walls let thy just labours shine,
And Raphael live again in thy design.
Yet stay awhile; call all thy genius forth,
For Burlington unbiass'd knows thy worth;
His judgment in thy master-strokes can trace
Titian's strong fire, and Guido's softer grace.
But, oh, consider, ere thy works appear,
Canst thou unhurt the tongue of Envy hear?
Censure will blame; her breath was ever spent
To blast the laurels of the eminent.
While Burlington's proportion'd columns rise,
Does not he stand the gaze of envious eyes?
Doors, windows, are condemn'd by passing fools,
Who know not that they damn Palladio's rules.
If Chandos with a liberal hand bestow,
Censure imputes it all to pomp and show;
When, if the motive right were understood,
His daily pleasure is in doing good. [page,
Had Pope with groveling numbers fill'd his
Dennis had never kindled into rage.
'Tis the sublime that hurts the critic's ease;
Write nonsense, and he reads and sleeps in peace.
Were Prior, Congreve, Swift, and Pope, unknown;
Poor slander-selling Curll would be undone.
He, who would free from malice pass his days,
Must live obscure, and never merit praise.
But let this tale to valiant virtue tell
The daily perils of deserving well.
A crow was strutting o'er the stubbled plain,
Just as a lark descending clos'd his strain.
The crow bespoke him thus, with solemn grace:
"Thou most accomplish'd of the feather'd race!
"What force of lungs! how clear! how sweet you
"sing!
"And no bird soars upon a stronger wing."
The lark, who scorn'd soft flattery, thus replies:
"True, I sing sweet, and on strong pinion rise;
"Yet let me pass my life from envy free,
"For what advantage are these gifts to me?
"My song confines me to the wiry cage,
"My flight provokes the falcon's fatal rage.
"But, as you pass, I hear the fowler's say,
"To shoot at crows is powder flung away."

EPISTLE V.

To her Grace Henrietta, Duchess of Marlborough, 1722.

EXCUSE me, madam, if amidst your tears
A muse intrudes, a muse who feels your cares;
Numbers, like music, can ev'n grief controul,
And lull to peace the tumults of the soul.
If partners in our woes the mind relieve,
Consider for your loss ten thousand grieve;
Th' affliction burthens not your heart alone;
When Marlborough died, a nation gave a groan.
Could I recite the dangerous toils he chose,
To bless his country with a fix'd repose;
Could I recount the labours he o'ercame,
To raise his country to the pitch of fame;
His councils, sieges, his victorious fights,
To save his country's laws and native rights;
No father (every generous heart must own)
Has stronger fondness to his darling shown.
Britannia's sighs a double loss deplore,
Her father and her hero is no more.

Does Britain only pay her debt of tears?
Yes. Holland sighs, and for her freedom fears.
When Gallia's monarch pour'd his wasteful bands,
Like a wide deluge, o'er her level lands,
She saw her frontier towers in ruin lie,
Ev'n Liberty had prun'd her wings to fly:
Then Marlborough came, defeated Gallia fled;
And shatter'd Belgia rais'd her languid head;
In him secure, as in her strongest mound
That keeps the raging sea within its bound.
O Germany! remember Hockstet's plain,
Where prostrate Gallia bled at every vein:
Think on the rescue of th' imperial throne,
Then think of Marlborough's death without a groan!
Apollo kindly whispers me: "Be wise:
"How to his glory shall thy numbers rise?
"The force of verse another theme might raise,
"But here the merit must transcend the praise.
"Hast thou, presumptuous bard! that godlike flame
"Which with the sun shall last, and Marlborough's fame?
"Then sing the man. But who can boast this fire?
"Resign the task, and silently admire."
Yet shall he not in worthy lays be read?
Raise Homer, call up Virgil from the dead.
But he requires not the strong glare of verse:
Let punctual history his deeds rehearse;
Let truth in native purity appear,
You'll find Achilles and Æneas there.
Is this the comfort which the muse bestows?
I but indulge and aggravate your woes.
A prudent friend, who seeks to give relief,
Ne'er touches on the spring that mov'd the grief.
Is it not barbarous, to the sighing maid
To mention broken vows and nymphs betray'd?
Would you the ruin'd merchant's soul appease,
With talk of sands, and rocks, and stormy seas?
Ev'n while I strive on Marlborough's fame to rise,
I call up sorrow in a daughter's eyes.
Think on the laurels that his temple's shade,
Laurels that (spite of time) shall never fade.
Immortal honour has enroll'd his name;
Detraction's dumb, and Envy put to shame.
Say, who can soar beyond his eagle flight;
Has he not reach'd to glory's utmost height.?
What could he more, had Heav'n prolong'd his date?
All human power is limited by fate.
Forbear. 'Tis cruel further to commend;
I wake your sorrow, and again offend.
Yet sure your goodness must forgive a crime,
Which will be spread through every age and clime;
Though in your life ten thousand summers roll,
And though you compass earth from pole to pole,
Where'er men talk of war and martial fame,
They'll mention Marlborough's and Cæsar's name.
But vain are all the counsels of the muse;
A soul like yours could not a tear refuse:
Could you your birth and filial love forego,
Still sighs must rise, and generous sorrow flow;
For, when from earth such matchless worth removes,
A great mind suffers. Virtue virtue loves.

EPISTLE VI.

To Mr. Pope, on his having finished his Translation of Homer's Iliad.

A WELCOME FROM GREECE.

I.

Long hast thou, friend! been absent from my soil,
Like patient Ithacus at siege of Troy;
I have been witness of thy six years toil,
Thy daily labours, and thy night's annoy,
Lost to thy native land, with great turmoil,
On the wide sea, oft threatening to destroy:
Methinks with thee I've trod Sigæan ground,
And heard the shores of Hellespont resound.

II.

Did I not see thee when thou first set'st sail
To seek adventures fair in Homer's land?
Did I not see thy sinking spirits fail,
And wish thy bark had never left the strand?
Ev'n in mid ocean often didst thou quail,
And oft lift up thy holy eye and hand,
Praying the virgin dear, and saintly choir,
Back to the port to bring thy bark entire.

III.

Cheer up, my friend! thy dangers now are o'er;
Methinks—nay, sure the rising coasts appear;
Hark! how the guns salute from either shore,
As thy trim vessel cuts the Thames so fair:
Shouts answering shouts from Kent and Essex roar,
And bells break loud through every gust of air:
Bonfires do blaze, and bones and cleavers ring,
As at the coming of some mighty king.

IV.

Now pass we Gravesend with a friendly wind,
And Tilbury's white fort, and long Blackwall;
Greenwich, where dwells the friend of human kind,
More visited than or her park or hall,
Withers the good, and (with him ever join'd)
Facetious Disney, greet thee first of all:
I see his chimney smoke, and hear him say,
Duke*! that's the room for Pope, and that for Gay.

V.

Come in, my friends! here shall ye dine and lie,
And here shall breakfast, and here dine again;
And sup and breakfast on (if ye comply),
For I have still some dozens of champaign:
His voice still lessens as the ship sails by;
He waves his hand to bring us back in vain;
For now I see, I see proud London's spires;
Greenwich is lost, and Deptford dock retires.

VI.

Oh, what a concourse swarms on yonder quay!
The sky re-echoes with new shouts of joy;
By all this show, I ween, 'tis Lord Mayor's-day;
I hear the voice of trumpet and hautboy.—
No, now I see them near.—Oh, these are they
Who come in crowds to welcome thee from Troy.
Hail to the bard, whom long as lost we mourn'd;
From siege, from battle, and from storm, return'd!

* He was usually called "Duke Disney."

VII.

Of goodly dames, and courteous knights, I view
The silken petticoat, and broider'd veſt;
Yea peers, and mighty dukes, with ribbands blue
(True blue, fair emblem of unſtained breaſt).
Others I ſee, as noble, and more true,
By no court-badge diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt:
Firſt ſee I Methuen, of ſincereſt mind,
As Arthur grave, as ſoft as womankind.

VIII.

What lady's that, to whom he gently bends?
Who knows not her? ah! thoſe are Wortley's eyes:
How art thou honour'd, number'd with her friends!
For ſhe diſtinguiſhes the good and wiſe.
The ſweet-tongu'd Murray near her ſide attends;
Now to my heart the glance of Howard flies;
Now Harvey, fair of face, I mark full well,
With thee, youth's youngeſt daughter, ſweet Lepell.

IX.

I ſee two lovely ſiſters, hand in hand,
The fair-hair'd Martha, and Tereſa brown;
Madge Bellenden, the talleſt of the land;
And ſmiling Mary, ſoft and fair as down.
Yonder I ſee the cheerful ducheſs ſtand, [known:
For friendſhip, zeal, and blitheſome humours
Whence that loud ſhout in ſuch a hearty ſtrain?
Why, all the Hamiltons are in her train.

X.

See next the decent Scudamore advance,
With Winchelſea, ſtill meditating ſong:
With her perhaps Miſs Howe came there by chance,
Nor knows with whom, or why ſhe comes along.
Far off from theſe ſee Santlow, fam'd for dance;
And frolic Bicknell, and her ſiſter young;
With other names, by me not to be nam'd,
Much lov'd in private, not in public fam'd!

XI.

But now behold the female band retire,
And the ſhrill muſic of their voice is ſtill'd!
Methinks I ſee fam'd Buckingham admire,
That in Troy's ruin thou hadſt not been kill'd;
Sheffield, who knows to ſtrike the living lyre
With hand judicious, like thy Homer ſkill'd,
Bathurſt impetuous haſtens to the coaſt,
Whom you and I ſtrive who ſhall love the moſt.

XII.

See generous Burlington, with goodly Bruce
(But Bruce comes wafted in a ſoft ſedan;)
Dan Prior next, belov'd by every Muſe;
And friendly Congreve, unreproachful man!
(Oxford by Cunningham hath ſent excuſe;)
See hearty Watkins comes with cup and can;
And Lewis, who has never friend forſaken;
And Laughton whiſpering aſks—Is Troy town taken?

XIII.

Earl Warwick comes, of free and honeſt mind;
Bold, generous Craggs, whoſe heart was ne'er diſguis'd:
Ah why, ſweet St. John, cannot I thee find!
St. John, for every ſocial virtue priz'd.—
Alas! to foreign climates he's confin'd,
Or elſe to ſee thee here I well ſurmis'd:
Thou too, my Swift, doſt breathe Bœotian air;
When wilt thou bring back wit and humour here?

XIV.

Harcourt I ſee, for eloquence renown'd,
The mouth of juſtice, oracle of law!
Another Simon is beſide him found,
Another Simon, like as ſtraw to ſtraw.
How Lanſdown ſmiles, with laſting laurel crown'd!
What mitred prelate there commands our awe?
See Rocheſter approving nods his head,
And ranks one modern with the mighty dead.

XV.

Carleton and Chandos thy arrival grace;
Hanmer, whoſe eloquence th' unbiaſs'd ſways;
Harley, whoſe goodneſs opens in his face,
And ſhows his heart the ſeat where virtue ſtays.
Ned Blount advances next, with buſy pace,
In haſte, but ſauntering, hearty in his ways:
I ſee the friendly Carylls come by dozens, [couſins.
Their wives, their uncles, daughters, ſons, and

XVI.

Arbuthnot there I ſee, in phyſic's art,
As Galen learn'd, or fam'd Hippocrate;
Whoſe company drives ſorrow from the heart,
As all diſeaſe his medicines diſſipate:
Kneller amid the triumph bears his part,
Who could (were mankind loſt) anew create:
What can th' extent of his vaſt ſoul confine?
A painter, critic, engineer, divine!

XVII.

Thee Jervas hails, robuſt and debonair, [cries:
Now have [we] conquer'd Homer, friends, he
Darteneuf, grave joker, joyous Ford is there,
And wondering Maine, ſo fat with laughing eyes,
(Gay, Maine, and Cheney, boon companions dear,
Gay fat, Maine fatter, Cheney huge of ſize)
Yea Dennis, Gildon (hearing thou haſt riches),
And honeſt, hatleſs Cromwell, with red breeches.

XVIII.

O Wanley, whence com'ſt thou with ſhorten'd hair,
And viſage from thy ſhelves with duſt beſprent;
"Forſooth (quoth he) from placing Homer there,
"For ancients to compyle is myne entente:
"Of ancients only hath Lord Harley care;
"But hither me hath my meekle lady ſent:—
"In manuſcript of Greeke rede we thilke ſame,
"But book yprint beſt pleſyth myn gude dame."

XIX.

Yonder I ſee, among th' expecting crowd,
Evans with laugh jocoſe, and tragic Young;
High-buſkin'd Booth, grave Mawbert, wandering Frowde,
And Titcomb's belly waddles ſlow along.
See Digby faints at Southerne talking loud,
Yea Steele and Tickell mingle in the throng:
Tickell, whoſe ſkiff (in partnerſhip they ſay)
Set forth for Greece, but founder'd in the way.

XX.

Lo, the two Doncaſtles in Berkſhire known!
Lo Bickford, Forteſcue, of Devon land!
Lo Tooker, Eckerſhall, Sykes, Rawlinſon!
See hearty Morley takes thee by the hand;
Ayrs, Graham, Buckridge, joy thy voyage done;
But who can count the leaves, the ſtars, the ſand?

Lo Stonor, Fenton, Caldwell, Ward, and Broome!
Lo thousands more; but I want rhyme and room!

XXI.

How lov'd! how honour'd thou! yet be not vain:
And sure thou art not, for I hear thee say,
All this, my friends, I owe to Homer's strain,
On whose strong pinions I exalt my lay.
What from contending cities did he gain?
And what rewards his grateful country pay?
None, none were paid—why then all this for me?
These honours, Homer, had been just to thee.

EPISTLE VII.

To Mr. Thomas Snow, Goldsmith, near Temple-Bar. A Panegyric, occasioned by his buying and selling of the third South-Sea subscriptions, taken in by the Directors at a thousand per cent.

Disdain not, Snow, my humble verse to hear:
Stick thy black pen awhile behind thy ear.
Whether thy compter shine with sums untold,
And thy wide-grasping hand grow black with gold;
Whether thy mien erect, and sable locks,
In crowds of brokers overawe the stocks;
Suspend the worldly business of the day,
And, to enrich thy mind, attend my lay.
O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The South-Sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drown'd!
When credit sunk, and commerce gasping lay,
Thou stood'st; nor sent'st one bill unpaid away.
When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwell's self was drain'd of all his hoards,
Thou stood'st (an Indian king in size and hue),
Thy unexhausted shop was our Peru.
Why did 'Change-Alley waste thy precious hours
Among the fools who gap'd for golden showers?
No wonder if we found some poets there,
Who live on fancy, and can feed on air; [schemes,
No wonder they were caught by South-Sea
Who ne'er enjoy'd a guinea, but in dreams;
No wonder they their third subscriptions sold,
For millions of imaginary gold;
No wonder, that their fancies wild can frame
Strange reasons, that a thing is still the same,
Though chang'd throughout in substance and in name.
But you (whose judgment scorns poetic flights)
With contracts furnish boys for paper kites.
Let vulture Hopkins stretch his rusty throat,
Who'd ruin thousands for a single groat.
I know thou spurn'st his mean, his sordid mind;
Nor with ideal debts would'st plague mankind.
Why strive his greedy hands to grasp at more?—
The wretch was born to want, whose soul is poor.
Madmen alone their empty dreams pursue,
And still believe the fleeting vision true;
They sell the treasure which their slumbers get,
Then wake, and fancy all the world in debt.
If to instruct thee all my reasons fail,
Yet be diverted by this moral tale. [feat,
Through fam'd Moorfields extends a spacious
Where mortals of exalted wit retreat;
Where, wrapp'd in contemplation and in straw,
The wiser few from the mad world withdraw.
There, in full opulence, a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pangs of riches felt:
His sideboard glitter'd with imagin'd plate;
And his proud fancy held a vast estate.
As on a time he pass'd the vacant hours,
In raising piles of straw and twisted bowers;
A poet enter'd, of the neighbouring cell,
And with fix'd eyes observ'd the structure well;
A sharpen'd skewer cross his bare shoulders bound
A tatter'd rug, which dragg'd upon the ground.
The banker cry'd, "Behold my castle walls,
"My statues, gardens, fountains, and canals;
"With land of twenty thousand acres round;
"All these I sell thee for ten thousand pound."
The bard with wonder the cheap purchase saw,
So sign'd the contract (as ordains the law). [clear;
The banker's brain was cool'd, the mist grew
The visionary scene was lost in air.
He now the vanish'd prospect understood,
And fear'd the fancied bargain was not good:
Yet, loath the sum entire should be destroy'd,
"Give me a penny, and thy contract's void."
The startled bard with eye indignant frown'd.
"Shall I, ye gods (he cries), my debts compound!"
So saying, from his rug the skewer he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground;
"There, take my tally of ten thousand pound!"

EPISTLE VIII.

Mary Gulliver to Captain Lemuel Gulliver.

Argument.

The captain, some time after his return, being retired to Mr. Sympson's in the country; Mrs. Gulliver, apprehending from his late behaviour some estrangement of his affections, writes him the following expostulating, soothing, and tenderly-complaining epistle.

Welcome, thrice welcome, to thy native place!
—What! touch me not? What! shun a wife's embrace?
Have I for this thy tedious absence borne, [turn?
And wak'd and wish'd whole nights for thy re-
In five long years I took no second spouse;
What Redriff wife so long hath kept her vows?
Your eyes, your nose, inconstancy betray;
Your nose you stop, your eyes you turn away."
'Tis said that thou should'st cleave unto thy wife;
Once thou didst cleave, and I could cleave for life.
Hear, and relent! hark how thy children moan:
Be kind at least to these—they are thy own!
Be bold, and count them all; secure to find
The honest number that you left behind.
See how they pat thee with their pretty paws;
Why start you? are they snakes? or have they claws?
Thy Christian seed, our mutual flesh and bone:
Be kind at least to these—they are thy own?
* Biddel, like thee, might farthest India rove;
He chang'd his country, but retains his love:

* Names of the sea-captains mentioned in the Travels.

There's Captain * Pannel, abſent half his life,
Comes back, and is the kinder to his wife;
Yet Pannel's wife is brown, compar'd to me,
And Miſtreſs Biddel ſure is fifty-three!
Not touch me! never neighbour call'd me ſlut:
Was Flimnap's dame more ſweet in Lilliput?
I've no red hair, to breathe an odious fume;
At leaſt thy conſort's cleaner than thy groom.
Why then that dirty ſtable-boy thy care?
What mean thoſe viſits to the ſorrel mare?
Say, by what witchcraft, or what dæmon led,
Preferr'ſt thou litter to the marriage-bed?
Some ſay the devil himſelf is in that mare:
If ſo, our dean ſhall drive him forth by prayer.
Some think you mad; ſome think you are poſſeſt;
That Bedlam and clean ſtraw will ſuit you beſt.
Vain means, alas, this phrenzy to appeaſe!
That ſtraw, that ſtraw would heighten the diſeaſe.
My bed (the ſcene of all our former joys,
Witneſs two lovely girls, two lovely boys)
Alone I preſs; in dreams I call my dear,
I ſtretch my hand; no Gulliver is there!
I wake, I riſe, and, ſhivering with the froſt,
Search all the houſe: my Gulliver is loſt!
Forth in the ſtreets I ruſh with frantic cries;
The windows open; all the neighbours riſe:
Where ſleeps my Gulliver? O tell me where!
The neighbours anſwer, "With the ſorrel mare!"
At early morn, I to the market haſte
(Studious in every thing to pleaſe thy taſte);
A curious fowl and 'ſparagus I choſe
(For I remember'd you were fond of thoſe):
Three ſhillings coſt the firſt, the laſt ſeven groats;
Sullen you turn from both, and call for oats.
Others bring goods and treaſure to their houſes,
Something to deck their pretty babes and ſpouſes;
My only token was a cup like horn,
That's made of nothing but a lady's corn.
'Tis not for that I grieve; no, 'tis to ſee
The groom and ſorrel mare preferr'd to me!
Theſe for ſome moments when you deign to quit,
And (at due diſtance) ſweet diſcourſe admit,
'Tis all my pleaſure thy paſt toil to know,
For pleas'd remembrance builds delight on woe.
At every danger pants thy conſort's breaſt,
And gaping infants ſquall to hear the reſt.
How did I tremble when, by thouſands bound,
I ſaw thee ſtretch'd on Lilliputian ground!
When ſcaling armies climb'd up every part,
Each ſtep they trod I felt upon my heart.
But when thy torrent quench'd the dreadful blaze,
King, queen, and nation, ſtaring with amaze,
Full in my view how all my huſband came!
And what extinguiſh'd theirs, increas'd my flame.
Thoſe ſpectacles, ordain'd thine eyes to ſave,
Were once my preſent; love that armour gave.
How did I mourn at Bolgolam's decree!
For, when he ſign'd thy death, he ſentenc'd me.
When folks might ſee thee all the country round
For ſixpence, I'd have given a thouſand pound.
Lord! when that giant babe that head of thine
Got in his mouth, my heart was up in mine!

* Names of the ſea-captains mentioned in the Travels.

When in the marrow-bone I ſee thee ramm'd,
Or on the houſe-top by the monkey cramm'd,
The piteous images renew my pain,
And all thy dangers I weep o'er again.
But on the maiden's nipple when you rid,
Pray Heav'n 'twas all a wanton maiden did!
Glumdalclitch too!—with thee I mourn her caſe;
Heaven guard the gentle girl from all diſgrace!
O may the king that one neglect forgive,
And pardon her the fault by which I live!
Was there no other way to ſet him free?
My life, alas! I fear, prov'd death to thee.
O teach me, dear, new words to ſpeak my flame!
Teach me to woo thee by thy beſt-lov'd name.
Whether the ſtyle of Grildrig pleaſe thee moſt,
So call'd on Brobdingnag's ſtupendous coaſt,
When on the monarch's ample hand you ſate,
And halloo'd in his ear intrigues of ſtate;
Or Quinbus Fleſtrin more endearment brings,
When like a mountain you look'd down on kings;
If Ducal Nardac, Lilliputian peer,
Or Glumblum's humbler title ſooth thy ear;
Nay, would kind Jove my organs ſo diſpoſe,
To hymn harmonious Houyhnhnm through the noſe,
I'd call the Houyhnhnm, that high-ſounding name,
Thy children's noſes all ſhould twang the ſame.
So might I find my loving ſpouſe of courſe
Endued with all the virtues of a horſe.

EPISTLE IX.

BOUNCE TO FOP.

From a Dog at Twickenham, to a Dog at Court.

To thee, ſweet Fop, theſe lines I ſend,
Who, though no ſpaniel, am a friend.
Though once my tail in wanton play,
Now friſking this, and then that way,
Chanc'd, with a touch of juſt the tip,
To hurt your lady-lap-dog-ſhip;
Yet thence to think I'd bite your head off,
Sure Bounce is one you never read of.
Fop! you can dance, and make a leg,
Can fetch and carry, cringe and beg;
And (what's the top of all your tricks)
Can ſtoop to pick up ſtrings and ſticks.
We country dogs love nobler ſport,
And ſcorn the pranks of dogs at court.
Fy, naughty Fop! where'er you come
To fart and piſs about the room,
To lay your head in every lap,
And when they think not of you—ſnap;
The worſt that envy, or that ſpite,
E'er ſaid of me is, I can bite;
That ſturdy vagrants, rogues in rags,
Who poke at me, can make no brags;
And that to touze ſuch things as flutter,
The honeſt Bounce is bread and butter.
While you and every courtly fop
Fawn on the devil for a chop;
I've the humanity to hate
A butcher, though he brings me meat:
And, let me tell you, have a noſe
(Whatever ſtinking fops ſuppoſe)

That, under cloth of gold or tiſſue,
Can ſmell a plaſter, or an iſſue.
Your pilfering lord, with ſimple pride,
May wear a pick-lock at his ſide:
My maſter wants no key of ſtate,
For Bounce can keep his houſe and gate.
When all ſuch dogs have had their days,
As knaviſh Pams, and fawning Trays:
When pamper'd Cupids, beaſtly Veni's,
And motly, ſquinting Harlequini's *,
Shall lick no more their lady's breech,
But die of looſeneſs, claps, or itch;
Fair Thames from either echoing ſhore
Shall hear and dread my manly roar.
See Bounce, like Berecynthia crown'd,
With thundering off-ſpring all around,
Beneath, beſide me, and at top,
A hundred ſons! and not one Fop.
Before my children ſet your beef,
Not one true Bounce will be a thief;
Not one without permiſſion feed
(Though ſome of J——'s hungry breed);
But whatſoe'er the father's race,
From me they ſuck a little grace:
While your fine whelps learn all to ſteal,
Bred up by hand on chick and veal.
My eldeſt-born reſides not far
Where ſhines great Stafford's glittering ſtar;
My ſecond (child of fortune!) waits
At Burlington's Palladian gates;
A third majeſtically ſtalks
(Happieſt of dogs) in Cobham's walks!
One uſhers friends to Bathurſt's door,
One fawns at Oxford's on the poor.
Nobles, whom arms or arts adorn,
Wait for my infants yet unborn.
None but a peer of wit and grace
Can hope a puppy of my race:
And, oh! would fate the bliſs decree
To mine (a bliſs too great for me),
That two my talleſt ſons might grace,
Attending each with ſtately pace,
Iülus' ſide, as erſt Evander's †,
To keep off flatterers, ſpies, and panders;
To let no noble ſlave come near,
And ſcare Lord Fannies from his ear:
Then might a royal youth, and true,
Enjoy at leaſt a friend——or two;
A treaſure, which, of royal kind,
Few but himſelf deſerve to find;
Then Bounce ('tis all that Bounce can crave)
Shall wag her tail within the grave.
And though no doctors, Whig or Tory ones,
Except the ſect of Pythagoreans,
Have immortality aſſign'd
To any beaſt but Dryden's hind ‡:
Yet Maſter Pope, whom truth and ſenſe
Shall call their friend ſome ages hence,
Though now on loftier themes he ſings,
Than to beſtow a word on kings,
Has ſworn by Styx *, the poet's oath,
And dread of dogs and poets both,
Man and his works he'll ſoon renounce,
And roar in numbers worthy Bounce.

* Alii legunt Harvequini's.
† Virg. Æn. viii.
‡ "A milk-white hind, immortal and unchang'd."——Hind and Panther, ver. 1.

EPISTLE X.

To the Learned Ingenious Author † of "Licentia Po-
"etica Diſcuſſed;" or, the "True Teſt of Po-
"etry." Written in 1709.

The vulgar notion of poetic fire
Is, that laborious art can ne'er aſpire,
Nor conſtant ſtudies the bright bays acquire;
And that high flights the unborn bard receives,
And only nature the due laurel gives:
But you, with innate ſhining flames endow'd,
To wide Caſtalian ſprings point out the god;
Through your perſpective we can plainly ſee
The new-diſcoverr'd road of poetry;
To ſteep Parnaſſus you direct the way
So ſmooth, that venturous travellers cannot ſtray,
But with unerring ſteps rough ways diſdain,
And by you led, the beauteous ſummit gain,
Where poliſh'd lays ſhall raiſe their growing fames,
And with their tuneful guide enrol their honour'd names.

EPISTLE XI.

To my Ingenious and Worthy Friend, WILLIAM LOWNDS, Eſq. Author of that Celebrated Treatiſe, in folio, called "The Land-Tax Bill."

When poets print their works, the ſcribbling crew
Stick the bard o'er with bays, like Chriſtmas-pew.
Can meagre poetry ſuch fame deſerve?
Can poetry, that only writes to ſtarve?
And ſhall no laurel deck that famous head,
In which the ſenate's annual law is bred?
That hoary head, which greater glory fires,
By nobler ways and means true fame acquires.
O had I Virgil's force, to ſing the man,
Whoſe learned lines can millions raiſe per ann.,
Great Lownds's praiſe ſhould ſwell the trump of fame,
And rapes and weapontakes reſound his name!
If the blind poet gain'd a long renown
By ſinging every Grecian chief and town;
Sure Lownds's proſe much greater fame requires,
Which ſweetly counts five thouſand knights and ſquires,
Their ſeats, their cities, pariſhes, and ſhires.
Thy copious preamble ſo ſmoothly runs,
Taxes no more appear like legal duns: [obey;
Lords, knights, and 'ſquires, th' aſſeſſor's power
We read with pleaſure, though with pain we pay.
Ah! why did Coningſby thy works defame!
That author's long harangue betrays his name.
After his ſpeeches can his pen ſucceed?
Though forc'd to hear, we're not oblig'd to read.
Under what ſcience ſhall thy works be read?
All know thou wert not poet born and bred.

* Orig. Sticks; purpoſely mis-ſpelt, to make it "the "dread of dogs"
† Dr. William Coward.

Or doſt thou boaſt th' hiſtorian's laſting pen,
Whoſe annals are the acts of worthy men?
No. Satire is thy talent; and each laſh
Makes the rich miſer tremble o'er his caſh.
What on the drunkard can be more ſevere,
Than direful taxes on his ale and beer?
Ev'n Button's wits are nought, compar'd to thee,
Who ne'er were known or prais'd but o'er his tea; [ſpread;
While thou through Britain's diſtant iſle ſhalt
In every hundred and diviſion read.
Critics in claſſics oft interpolate,
But every word of thine is fix'd as fate.
Some works come forth at morn, but die at night,
In blazing fringes round a tallow-light.
Some may perhaps to a whole week extend,
Like Steele (when unaſſiſted by a friend):
But thou ſhalt live a year, in ſpite of fate;
And where's your author boaſts a longer date?
Poets of old had ſuch a wond'rous power,
That with their verſes they could raiſe a tower:
But in thy proſe a greater force is found;
What poet ever rais'd ten thouſand pound?
Cadmus, by ſowing dragons teeth, we read,
Rais'd a vaſt army from the poiſonous ſeed.
Thy labours, Lownds, can greater wonders do;
Thou raiſeſt armies and canſt pay them too.
Truce with thy dreaded pen; thy annals ceaſe;
Why need we armies when the land's in peace?
Soldiers are perfect devils in their way; [lay.
When once they're rais'd, they're curſed hard to

EPISTLE XII.

To a young Lady, with ſome Lampreys.

With lovers 'twas of old the faſhion
By preſents to convey their paſſion;
No matter what the gift they ſent,
The lady ſaw that love was meant.
Fair Atalanta, as a favour,
Took the boar's head her hero gave her;
Nor could the briſtly thing affront her;
'Twas a fit preſent from a hunter.
When 'ſquires ſend woodcocks to the dame,
It ſerves to ſhow their abſent flame.
Some by a ſnip of woven hair,
In poeſy'd lockets, bribe the fair.
How many mercenary matches
Have ſprung from diamond-rings and watches?
But hold—a ring, a watch, a locket,
Would drain at once a poet's pocket;
He ſhould ſend ſongs that coſt him nought,
Nor ev'n be prodigal of thought.
Why then ſend lampreys? Fye, for ſhame!
'Twill ſet a virgin's blood on flame.
This to fifteen a proper gift!
It might lend ſixty-five a lift.
I know your maiden aunt will ſcold,
And think my preſent ſomewhat bold.
I ſee her lift her hands and eyes:
"What! eat it, niece; eat Spaniſh flies!
"Lamprey's a moſt immodeſt diet:
"You'll neither wake nor ſleep in quiet.
"Should I to-night eat Sago-cream,
"'Twould make me bluſh to tell my dream;
"If I eat lobſter, 'tis ſo warming,
"That every man I ſee looks charming.
"Wherefore had not the filthy fellow
"Laid Rocheſter upon your pillow?
"I vow and ſwear, I think the preſent
"Had been as modeſt and as decent.
"Who has her virtue in her power?
"Each day has its unguarded hour;
"Always in danger of undoing,
"A prawn, a ſhrimp, may prove our ruin!
"The ſhepherdeſs, who lives on ſallad,
"To cool her youth, controuls her palate.
"Should Dian's maids turn liquoriſh livers,
"And of huge lampreys rob the rivers,
"Then, all beſide each glade and viſto,
"You'd ſee nymphs lying like Caliſto.
"The man, who meant to heat your blood,
"Needs not himſelf ſuch vicious food—"
In this, I own, your aunt is clear,
I ſent you what I well might ſpare:
For, when I ſee you (without joking),
Your eyes, lips, breaſts, are ſo provoking,
They ſet my heart more cock-a-hoop,
Than could whole ſeas of craw-fiſh ſoup.

EPISTLE XIII.

To a Lady, on her Paſſion for Old China.

What eccſtaſies her boſom fire!
How her eyes languiſh with deſire!
How bleſt, how happy, ſhould I be,
Were that fond glance beſtow'd on me!
New doubts and fears within me war:
What rival's near? a china jar.
China's the paſſion of her ſoul:
A cup, a plate, a diſh, a bowl,
Can kindle wiſhes in her breaſt,
Inflame with joy, or break her reſt.
Some gems collect, ſome medals prize,
And view the ruſt with lovers eyes;
Some court the ſtars at midnight hours;
Some doat on nature's charms in flowers:
But every beauty I can trace
In Laura's mind, in Laura's face;
My ſtars are in this brighter ſphere,
My lily and my roſe is here.
Philoſophers, more grave than wiſe,
Hunt ſcience down in butterflies;
Or, fondly poring on a ſpider,
Stretch human contemplation wider.
Foſſils give joy to Galen's ſoul;
He digs for knowledge, like a mole;
In ſhells ſo learn'd, that all agree
No fiſh that ſwims knows more than he!
In ſuch purſuits if wiſdom lies,
Who, Laura, ſhall thy taſte deſpiſe?
Where I ſome antique jar behold,
Or white, or blue, or ſpeck'd with gold;
Veſſels ſo pure, and ſo refin'd,
Appear the types of womankind:
Are they not valued for their beauty,
Too fair, too fine, for houſehold duty?
With flowers, and gold, and azure, dy'd,
Of every houſe the grace and pride?

How white, how poliſh'd is their ſkin,
And valued moſt when only ſeen!
She, who before was higheſt priz'd,
Is for a crack or flaw deſpis'd.
I grant they're frail; yet they're ſo rare,
The treaſure cannot coſt too dear!
But man is made of coarſer ſtuff,
And ſerves convenience well enough;
He's a ſtrong earthen veſſel, made
For drudging, labour, toil, and trade;
And, when wives loſe their other ſelf,
With eaſe they bear the loſs of pelf.
Huſbands, more covetous than ſage,
Condemn this china-buying rage;
They count that woman's prudence little,
Who ſets her heart on things ſo brittle.
But are thoſe wiſe men's inclinations
Fix'd on more ſtrong, more ſure foundations?
If all that's frail we muſt deſpiſe,
No human view or ſcheme is wiſe.
Are not Ambition's hopes as weak?
They ſwell like bubbles, ſhine, and break.
A courtier's promiſe is ſo ſlight,
'Tis made at noon, and broke at night.
What pleaſure's ſure? The miſs you keep
Breaks both your fortune and your ſleep.
The man who loves a country life
Breaks all the comforts of his wife;
And, if he quit his farm and plough,
His wife in town may break her vow.
Love, Laura, love, while youth is warm,
For each new winter breaks a charm;
And woman's not like china ſold,
But cheaper grows in growing old;
Then quickly chooſe the prudent part,
Or elſe you break a faithful heart.

EPISTLE XIV.

On a Miſcellany of Poems. To Bernard Lintott.

" Ipſa varietate tentamus efficere ut alia aliis, quæ-
" dam fortaſſe omnibus placeant." PLIN. Epiſt.

As when ſome ſkilful cook, to pleaſe each gueſt,
Would in one mixture comprehend a feaſt,
With due proportion and judicious care
He fills his diſh with different ſorts of fare,
Fiſhes and fowls deliciouſly unite,
To feaſt at once the taſte, the ſmell, and ſight.
So, Bernard, muſt a miſcellany be
Compounded of all kinds of poetry;
The muſes olio, which all taſtes may fit,
And treat each reader with his darling wit.
Would'ſt thou for miſcellanies raiſe thy fame,
And bravely rival Jacob's mighty name,
Let all the muſes in the piece conſpire;
The lyric bard muſt ſtrike th' harmonious lyre;
Heroic ſtrains muſt here and there be found,
And nervous ſenſe be ſung in lofty ſound;
Let elegy in moving numbers flow,
And fill ſome pages with melodious woe;
Let not your amorous ſongs too numerous prove,
Nor glut thy reader with abundant love;
Satire muſt interfere, whoſe pointed rage
May laſh the madneſs of a vicious age;
Satire! the muſe that never fails to hit,
For if there's ſcandal, to be ſure there's wit.
Tire not our patience with Pindaric lays,
Thoſe ſwell the piece, but very rarely pleaſe;
Let ſhort-breath'd epigram its force confine,
And ſtrike at follies in a ſingle line. [ſown,
Tranſlations ſhould throughout the work be
And Homer's godlike muſe be made our own;
Horace in uſeful numbers ſhould be ſung,
And Virgil's thoughts adorn the Britiſh tongue.
Let Ovid tell Corinna's hard diſdain,
And at her door in melting notes complain;
His tender accents pitying virgins move,
And charm the liſtening ear with tales of love.
Let every claſſic in the volume ſhine,
And each contribute to thy great deſign;
Through various ſubjects let the reader range,
And raiſe his fancy with a grateful change.
Variety's the ſource of joy below,
From whence ſtill freſh revolving pleaſures flow.
In books and love, the mind one end purſues,
And only change th' expiring flame renews.
Where Buckingham will condeſcend to give,
That honour'd piece to diſtant times muſt live;
When noble Sheffield ſtrikes the trembling ſtrings,
The little loves rejoice, and clap their wings;
Anacreon lives, they cry, th' harmonious ſwain
Retunes the lyre, and tries his wonted ſtrain,
'Tis he—our loſt Anacreon lives again.
But, when th' illuſtrious poet ſoars above
The ſportive revels of the God of Love,
Like Maro's muſe, he takes a loftier flight,
And towers beyond the wondering Cupid's ſight.
If thou would'ſt have thy volume ſtand the teſt,
And of all others be reputed beſt,
Let Congreve teach the liſtening groves to mourn,
As when he wept o'er fair Paſtora's urn.
Let Prior's muſe with ſoftening accents move,
Soft as the ſtrains of conſtant Emma's love:
Or let his fancy chooſe ſome jovial theme,
As when he told Hans Carvel's jealous dream;
Prior th' admiring reader entertains
With Chaucer's humour, and with Spenſer's ſtrains.
Waller in Granville lives; when Mira ſings,
With Waller's hand he ſtrikes the ſounding ſtrings,
With ſprightly turns his noble genius ſhines,
And manly ſenſe adorns his eaſy lines.
On Addiſon's ſweet lays attention waits,
And ſilence guards the place while he repeats;
His muſe alike on every ſubject charms,
Whether ſhe paints the god of love, or arms:
In him pathetic Ovid ſings again,
And Homer's Iliad ſhines in his campaign.
Whenever Garth ſhall raiſe his ſprightly ſong,
Senſe flows in eaſy numbers from his tongue;
Great Phœbus in his learned ſon we ſee,
Alike in phyſic, as in poetry.
When Pope's harmonious muſe with pleaſure roves, [groves,
Amids the plains, the murmuring ſtreams, and

Attentive echo, pleas'd to hear his ſongs,
Through the glad ſhade each warbling note prolongs;
His various numbers charm our raviſh'd ears,
His ſteady judgment far out-ſhoots his years,
And early in the youth the god appears.
From theſe ſucceſsful bards collect thy ſtrains;
And praiſe with profit ſhall reward thy pains:
Then, while calves-leather-binding bears the ſway,
And ſheep-ſkin to its ſleeker gloſs gives way;
While neat old Elzevir is reckon'd better
Than Pirate Hill's brown ſheets and ſcurvy letter;
While print admirers careful Aldus chooſe,
Before John Morphew, or the weekly news;
So long ſhall live thy praiſe in books of fame,
And Tonſon yield to Lintott's lofty name.

EPISTLE XV.

To the moſt honourable the Earl of Oxford, the Lord High Treaſurer.

The Epigrammatical Petition of your Lordſhip's moſt humble Servant,

JOHN GAY.

I'm no more to converſe with the ſwains,
But go where fine people reſort:
One can live without money on plains,
But never without it at court.

If when with the ſwains I did gambol,
I array'd me in ſilver and blue;
When abroad and in courts I ſhall ramble,
Pray, my lord, how much money will do?

ECLOGUES.

THE BIRTH OF THE SQUIRE.

In Imitation of the Pollio of Virgil.

YE ſylvan muſes, loftier ſtrains recite:
Not at all in ſhades and humble cots delight.
Hark! the bells ring; along the diſtant grounds
The driving gales convey the ſwelling ſounds;
Th' attentive ſwain, forgetful of his work,
With gaping wonder, leans upon his fork.
What ſudden news alarms the waking morn?
To the glad Squire a hopeful heir is born.
Mourn, mourn, ye ſtags, and all ye beaſts of chaſe;
This hour deſtruction brings on all your race:
See the pleas'd tenants duteous offerings bear,
Turkeys and geeſe, and grocer's ſweeteſt ware;
With the new health the ponderous tankard flows,
And old October reddens every noſe.
Beagles and ſpaniels round his cradle ſtand,
Kiſs his moiſt lip, and gently lick his hand.
He joys to hear the ſhrill horn's echoing ſounds,
And learns to liſp the names of all the hounds.
With frothy ale to make his cup o'erflow,
Barley ſhall in paternal acres grow;
The bee ſhall ſip the fragrant dew from flowers,
To give metheglin for his morning-hours;
For him the cluſtering hop ſhall climb the poles,
And his own orchard ſparkle in his bowls.
His ſire's exploits he now with wonder hears,
The monſtrous tales indulge his greedy ears;
How, when youth ſtrung his nerves and warm'd his veins,
He rode the mighty Nimrod of the plains.
He leads the ſtaring infant through the hall,
Points out the horny ſpoils that grace the wall;
Tells, how this ſtag through three whole counties fled,
What rivers ſwam, where bay'd, and where he bled.
Now he the wonders of the fox repeats,
Deſcribes the deſperate chaſe, and all his cheats;
How in one day, beneath his furious ſpeed,
He tir'd ſeven courſers of the fleeteſt breed;
How high the pale he leap'd, how wide the ditch,
When the hound tore the haunches of the * witch!
Theſe ſtories, which deſcend from ſon to ſon,
The forward boy ſhall one day make his own.
Ah, too fond mother, think the time draws nigh,
That calls the darling from thy tender eye;
How ſhall his ſpirit brook the rigid rules,
And the long tyranny of grammar-ſchools?
Let younger brothers o'er dull authors plod,
Laſh'd into Latin by the tingling rod;
No, let him never feel that ſmart diſgrace:
Why ſhould he wiſer prove than all his race?
When ripening youth with down o'erſhades his chin,
And every female eye incites to ſin;
The milk-maid (thoughtleſs of her future ſhame)
With ſmacking lip ſhall raiſe his guilty flame;
The dairy, barn, the hay-loft, and the grove,
Shall oft be conſcious of their ſtolen love.
But think, Priſcilla, on that dreadful time,
When pangs and watery qualms ſhall own thy crime.
How wilt thou tremble when thy nipple's preſt,
To ſee the white drops bathe thy ſwelling breaſt!
Nine moons ſhall publicly divulge thy ſhame,
And the young ſquire foreſtall a father's name.
When twice twelve times the reaper's ſweeping hand
With levell'd harveſts has beſtrown the land;
On ſam'd St. Hubert's feaſt, his winding horn
Shall cheer the joyful hound, and wake the morn:
This memorable day his eager ſpeed
Shall urge with bloody heel the riſing ſteed.
O check the foamy bit, nor tempt thy fate,
Think on the murders of a five-bar gate!

* The moſt common accident to ſportſmen, to hunt a witch in the ſhape of a hare.

Yet, prodigal of life, the leap he tries,
Low in the duſt his groveling honour lies,
Headlong he falls, and on the rugged ſtone
Diſtorts his neck, and cracks the collar-bone.
O venturous youth, thy thirſt of game allay:
May'ſt thou ſurvive the perils of this day!
He ſhall ſurvive; and in late years be ſent
To ſnore away debates in parliament.
The time ſhall come, when his more ſolid ſenſe
With nod important ſhall the laws diſpenſe;
A Juſtice with grave Juſtices ſhall ſit;
He praiſe their wiſdom, they admire his wit.
No greyhound ſhall attend the tenant's pace,
No ruſty gun the farmer's chimney grace;
Salmons ſhall leave their covers void of fear,
Nor dread the thieviſh net or triple ſpear;
Poachers ſhall tremble at his awful name, [game.
Whom vengeance now o'ertakes for murder'd
Aſſiſt me, Bacchus, and ye drunken powers,
To ſing his friendſhips and his midnight hours!
Why doſt thou glory in thy ſtrength of beer,
Firm-cork'd and mellow'd till the twentieth year;
Brew'd, or when Phœbus warms the fleecy ſign,
Or when his languid rays in Scorpio ſhine?
Think on the miſchiefs which from hence have ſprung!
It arms with curſes dire the wrathful tongue;
Foul ſcandal to the lying lip affords,
And prompts the memory with injurious words.
O where is wiſdom when by this o'erpower'd?
The ſtate is cenſur'd, and the maid deflower'd!
And wilt thou ſtill, O Squire, brew ale ſo ſtrong?
Hear then the dictates of prophetic ſong.
Methinks I ſee him in his hall appear,
Where the long table floats in clammy beer,
'Midſt mugs and glaſſes ſhatter'd o'er the floor,
Dead drunk, his ſervile crew ſupinely ſnore;
Triumphant, o'er the proſtrate brutes he ſtands,
The mighty bumper trembles in his hands;
Boldly he drinks, and, like his glorious fires,
In copious gulps of potent ale expires.

THE TOILETTE,

A TOWN ECLOGUE.

Lydia.

Now twenty ſprings had cloth'd the park with green,
Since Lydia knew the bloſſom of fifteen;
No lovers now her morning hours moleſt,
And catch her at her toilette half undreſt;
The thundering knocker wakes the ſtreet no more,
No chairs, no coaches, crowd her ſilent door;
Her midnights once at cards and hazard fled,
Which now, alas! ſhe dreams away in bed.
Around her wait ſhocks, monkeys, and mockaws,
To fill the place of ſops and perjur'd beaux;
In theſe ſhe views the mimickry of man,
And ſmiles when grinning Pug gallants her fan;
When Poll repeats, the ſounds deceive her ear
(For ſounds like his once told her Damon's care);
With theſe alone her tedious mornings paſs;
Or, at the dumb devotion of her glaſs,
She ſmooths her brow, and frizzles forth her hairs,
And fancies youthful dreſs gives youthful airs;
With crimſon wool ſhe fixes every grace,
That not a bluſh can diſcompoſe her face.
Reclin'd upon her arm, ſhe penſive ſate,
And curs'd th' inconſtancy of youth too late.
O youth! O ſpring of life! for ever loſt!
No more my name ſhall reign the favourite toaſt;
On glaſs no more the diamond grave my name,
And rhymes miſ-ſpelt record a lover's flame:
Nor ſhall ſide-boxes watch my reſtleſs eyes,
And, as they catch the glance, in rows ariſe
With humble bows; nor white lov'd beaux encroach
In crowds behind, to guard me to my coach.
Ah, hapleſs nymph! ſuch conqueſts are no more;
For Chloe's now what Lydia was before!
'Tis true, this Chloe boaſts the peach's bloom.
But does her nearer whiſper breathe perfume?
I own, her taper ſhape is form'd to pleaſe.
Yet if you ſaw her unconfin'd by ſtays!
She doubly to fifteen may make pretence;
Alike we read it in her face and ſenſe.
Her reputation! but that never yet
Could check the freedoms of a young coquette.
Why will ye then, vain fops, her eyes believe?
Her eyes can, like your perjur'd tongues, deceive.
What ſhall I do? how ſpend the hateful day?
At chapel ſhall I wear the morn away?
Who there frequents at theſe unmodiſh hours,
But ancient matrons with their frizzled towers,
And gray religious maids? My preſence there
Amid that ſober train would own deſpair;
Nor am I yet ſo old; nor is my glance
As yet fixt wholly to devotion's trance. [range
Straight then I'll dreſs, and take my wonted
Through every Indian ſhop through all the Change;
Where the tall jar erects his coſtly pride,
With antic ſhapes in china's azure dy'd;
There careleſs lies the rich brocade unroll'd;
Here ſhines a cabinet with burniſh'd gold:
But then remembrance will my grief renew,
'Twas there the raffling dice falſe Damon threw;
The raffling dice to him decide the prize;
'Twas there he firſt convers'd with Chloe's eyes.
Hence ſprung th' ill-fated cauſe of all my ſmart;
To me the toy he gave, to her his heart.
But ſoon thy perjury in the gift was found,
The ſhiver'd china dropt upon the ground;
Sure omen that thy vows would faithleſs prove;
Frail was thy preſent, frailer is thy love.
O happy Poll, in wiry poiſon pent;
Thou ne'er haſt known what love or rivals meant,
And Pug with pleaſure can his fetters bear,
Who ne'er believ'd the vows that lovers ſwear!
How am I curſt (unhappy and forlorn)
With perjury, with love, and rival's ſcorn!
Falſe are the looſe coquette's inveigling airs,
Falſe is the pompous grief of youthful heirs,
Falſe is the cringing courtier's plighted word,
Falſe are the dice when gameſters ſtamp the board,
Falſe is the ſprightly widow's public tear;
Yet theſe to Damon's oaths are all ſincere.
Fly from perfidious man, the ſex diſdain;
Let ſervile Chloe wear the nuptial chain.
Damon is practis'd in the modiſh life,
Can hate, and yet be civil to a wife.

He games; he ſwears; he drinks; he fights; he roves;
Yet Chloe can believe he fondly loves.
Miſtreſs and wife can well ſupply his need;
A miſs for pleaſure, and a wife for bread.
But Chloe's air is unconfin'd and gay,
And can perhaps an injur'd bed repay;
Perhaps her patient temper can behold
The rival of her love adorn'd with gold.
Powder'd with diamonds; free from thought and care,
A huſband's ſullen humours ſhe can bear. [eyes?
Why are theſe ſobs? and why theſe ſtreaming
Is love the cauſe? No, I the ſex deſpiſe;
I hate, I lothe his baſe perfidious name.
Yet if he ſhould but feign a rival flame?
But Chloe boaſts and triumphs in my pains;
To her he's faithful, 'tis to me he feigns.
Thus love-ſick Lydia rav'd. Her maid appears;
A band-box in her ſteady hand ſhe bears.
How well this ribband's gloſs becomes your face;
She cries, in raptuaes; then, ſo ſweet a lace!
How charmingly you look! ſo bright! ſo fair!
'Tis to your eyes the head-dreſs owes its air.
Straight Lydia ſmil'd; the comb adjuſts her locks
And at the playhouſe Harry keeps her box.

THE TEA-TABLE,

A TOWN ECLOGUE.

Doris and Melanthe.

SAINT James's noon-day bell for prayers had toll'd,
And coaches to the patron's levee roll'd,
When Doris roſe. And now through all the room
From flowery tea exhales a fragrant fume.
Cup after cup they ſipt, and talk'd by fits,
For Doris here, and there Melanthe ſits.
Doris was young, a laughter-loving dame,
Nice of her own alike and others' fame:
Melanthe's tongue could well a tale advance,
And ſooner gave than ſunk a circumſtance;
Lock'd in her memory, ſecrets never dy'd.
Doris begun: Melanthe thus reply'd.

Doris.

Sylvia the vain fantaſtic ſop admires;
The rake's looſe gallantry her boſom fires:
Sylvia like that is vain, like this ſhe roves;
In liking them, ſhe but herſelf approves.

Melanthe.

Laura rails on at men, the ſex reviles,
Their vice condemns, or at their folly ſmiles.
Why ſhould her tongue in juſt reſentment fail,
Since men at her with equal freedom rail?

Doris.

Laſt maſquerade was Sylvia nymph-like ſeen,
Her hand a crook ſuſtain'd, her dreſs was green;
An amorous ſhepherd led her through the crowd,
The nymph was innocent, the ſhepherd vow'd;
But nymphs their innocence with ſhepherds truſt;
So both withdrew, as nymph and ſhepherd muſt.

Melanthe.

Name but the licence of the modern ſtage,
Laura takes fire, and kindles into rage;
The whining tragic love ſhe ſcarce can bear,
But nauſeous comedy ne'er ſhock'd her ear;
Yet, in the gallery mobb'd, ſhe ſits ſecure,
And laughs at jeſts that turn the box demure.

Doris.

Truſt not, ye ladies, to your beauty's power,
For beauty withers like a ſhrivel'd flower;
Yet thoſe fair flowers, that Sylvia's temples bind,
Fade not with ſudden blights or winter's wind;
Like thoſe, her face defies the rolling years;
For art her roſes and her charms repairs.

Melanthe.

Laura deſpiſes every outward grace,
The wanton ſparkling eye, the blooming face;
The beauties of the ſoul are all her pride,
For other beauties nature has deny'd:
If affectation ſhow a beauteous mind,
Lives there a man to Laura's merits blind?

Doris.

Sylvia be ſure defies the town's reproach,
Whoſe diſhabille is ſoil'd in hackney coach;
What though the ſaſh was clos'd, muſt we conclude,
That ſhe was yielding, when her ſop was rude?

Melanthe.

Laura learnt caution at too dear a coſt,
What fair could e'er retrieve her honour loſt?
Secret ſhe loves; and who the nymph can blame,
Who durſt not own a footman's vulgar flame?

Doris.

Though Laura's homely taſte deſcends ſo low;
Her footman well may vie with Sylvia's beau.

Melanthe.

Yet why ſhould Laura think it a diſgrace,
When proud Miranda's groom wears Flanders lace?

Doris.

What though for muſic Cynthio boaſts an ear?
Robin perhaps can hum an opera air.
Cynthio can bow, takes ſnuff, and dances well;
Robin talks common-ſenſe, can write and ſpell.
Sylvia's vain fancy dreſs and ſhow admires;
But 'tis the man alone whom Laura fires.

Melanthe.

Plato's wiſe morals Laura's ſoul improve:
And this, no doubt, muſt be Platonic love!
Her ſoul to generous acts was ſtill inclin'd.
What ſhows more virtue than an humble mind?

Doris.

What though young Sylvia love the park's cool ſhade,
And wander in the duſk the ſecret glade?
Maſqu'd and alone (by chance) ſhe met her ſpark;
That innocence is weak which ſhuns the dark.

Melanthe.

But Laura for her flame has no pretence;
Her footman is a footman too in ſenſe.
All prudes I hate; and thoſe are rightly curſt
With ſcandal's double load, who cenſure firſt.

Doris.

And what if Cynthio Sylvia's garter ty'd?
Who ſuch a foot and ſuch a leg would hide;
When crook-kneed Phyllis can expoſe to view
Her gold-clock'd ſtocking, and her tawdry ſhoe?

elanthe

If pure devotion centre in the face,
If cenſuring others ſhow intrinſic grace,

If guilt to public freedoms be combin'd,
Prudes (all muſt own) are of the holy kind!

Doris.

Sylvia diſdains reſerve, and flies conſtraint;
She neither is, nor would be thought, a ſaint.

Melanthe.

Love is a trivial paſſion, Laura cries:
May I be bleſt with friendſhip's ſtricter ties!
To ſuch a breaſt all ſecrets we commend;
Sure the whole drawing-room is Laura's friend.

Doris.

At marriage Sylvia rails; who men would truſt?
Yet huſbands' jealouſies are ſometimes juſt.
Her favours Sylvia ſhares among mankind:
Such generous love ſhould never be confin'd.

As thus alternate chat employ'd their tongue.
With thundering raps the brazen knocker rung.
Laura and Sylvia came; the nymphs ariſe;
"This unexpected viſit," Doris cries,
"Is doubly kind!" Melanthe Laura led:
"Since I was laſt ſo bleſt, my dear," ſhe ſaid,
"Sure 'tis an age." They ſate; the hour was ſet;
And all again that night at ombre met.

THE FUNERAL.

A TOWN ECLOGUE.

Sabina. Lucy.

Twice had the moon perform'd her earthly race,
Since firſt the veil o'ercaſt Sabina's face.
Then dy'd the tender partner of her bed.
And lives Sabina when Fidelio's dead?
Fidelio's dead, and yet Sabina lives.
But ſee the tribute of her tears ſhe gives;
Their abſent lord her rooms in ſable mourn,
And all the day the glimmering tapers burn;
Stretch'd on the couch of ſtate ſhe penſive lies,
While oft' the ſnowy cambric wipes her eyes.
Now enter'd Lucy: truſty Lucy knew
To roll a ſleeve, or bear a billet-doux;
Her ready tongue, in ſecret ſervice try'd,
With equal fluency ſpoke truth or ly'd;
She well could fluſh or humble a gallant,
And ſerve at once as maid and confidant!
A letter from her faithful ſtays ſhe took,
Sabina ſnatch'd it with an angry look,
And thus in haſty words her grief confeſt;
While Lucy ſtrove to ſoothe her troubled breaſt.

Sabina.

What, ſtill Myrtillo's hand! his flame I ſcorn;
Give back his paſſion with the ſeal untorn.
To break our ſoft repoſe, has man a right?
And are we doom'd to read whate'er they write?
Not all the ſex my firm reſolves ſhall move;
My life's a life of ſorrow, not of love.
May Lydia's wrinkles all my forehead trace,
And Celia's paleneſs ſicken o'er my face;
May fops of mine, as Flavia's favours, boaſt,
And coquettes triumph in my honour loſt;
May cards employ my nights, and never more
May theſe curſt eyes behold a matadore;
Break china, periſh ſhock, die perroquet;
When I Fidelio's dearer love forget!
Fidelio's judgment ſcorn'd the foppiſh train;
His air was eaſy, and his dreſs was plain;
His words ſincere, reſpect his preſence drew,
And on his lips ſweet converſation grew.
Where's wit, where's beauty, where is virtue fled?
Alas! they're now no more; Fidelio's dead!

Lucy.

Yet, when he liv'd, he wanted every grace;
That eaſy air was then an aukward pace:
Have not your ſighs in whiſpers often ſaid,
His dreſs was ſlovenly, his ſpeech ill-bred?
Have not I heard you, with a ſecret tear,
Call that ſweet converſe ſullen and ſevere?
Think not I come to take Myrtillo's part:
Let Chloe, Daphne, Doris, ſhare his heart;
Let Chloe's love in every ear expreſs
His graceful perſon and genteel addreſs;
All well may judge what ſhaft has Daphne hit,
Who ſuffers ſilence, to admire his wit.
His equipage and liveries Doris move;
But Chloe, Daphne, Doris, fondly love.
Sooner ſhall cits in faſhions guide the court,
And beaux upon the buſy Change reſort;
Sooner the nation ſhall from ſnuff be freed,
And fops apartments ſmoke with India's weed;
Sooner I'd wiſh and ſigh through nunnery grates;
Than recommend the flame Sabina hates.

Sabina.

Becauſe ſome widows are in haſte ſubdued;
Shall every fop upon our tears intrude?
Can I forget my lov'd Fidelio's tongue,
Soft as the warbling of Italian ſong?
Did not his roſy lips breathe forth perfume,
Fragrant as ſteams from tea's imperial bloom?

Lucy.

Yet once you thought that tongue a greater curſe
Than ſqualls of children for an abſent nurſe.
Have you not fancy'd, in his frequent kiſs,
Th' ungrateful leavings of a filthy miſs?

Sabina.

Love, I thy power defy; no ſecond flame
Shall ever raze my dear Fidelio's name.
Fannia without a tear might loſe her lord,
Who ne'er enjoy'd his preſence but at board.
And why ſhould ſorrow ſit on Leſbia's face?
Are there ſuch comforts in a ſot's embrace?
No friend, no lover, is to Leſbia dead;
For Leſbia long had known a ſeparate bed.
Guſh forth, ye tears; waſte, waſte, ye ſighs, my breaſt;
My days, my nights, were by Fidelio bleſt!

Lucy.

You cannot ſure forget how oft' you ſaid,
His teazing fondneſs jealouſy betray'd!
When at the play the neighbouring box he took,
You thought you read ſuſpicion in his look.
When cards and counters flew around the board,
Have you not wiſh'd the abſence of your lord?
His company was then a poor pretence,
To check the freedom of a wife's expence.

Sabina.

But why ſhould I Myrtillo's paſſion blame,
Since love's a fierce involuntary flame?

Lucy.

Could he the ſallies of his heart withſtand,
Why ſhould he not to Chloe give his hand?
For Chloe's handſome; yet he ſlights her flame;
Laſt night ſhe fainted at Sabina's name.

Why, Daphne, doſt thou blame Sabina's charms?
Sabina keeps no lover from thy arms.
At crimp Myrtillo play'd; in kind regards
Doris threw love, unmindful of the cards;
Doris was touch'd with ſpleen; her ſan he rent,
Flew from the table, and to tears gave vent.
Why, Doris, doſt thou curſe Sabina's eyes?
To her Myrtillo is a vulgar prize.

Sabina.

Yet ſay, I lov'd; how loud would cenſure rail!
So ſoon to quit the duties of the veil!
No, ſooner plays and operas I'd forſwear,
And change theſe china jars for Tunbridge ware;
Or truſt my mother as a confidant,
Or fix a friendſhip with my maiden aunt;
Than till—to-morrow throw my weeds away.
Yet let me ſee him, if he comes to-day!

THE ESPOUSAL,

A SOBER ECLOGUE.

Between two of the People called Quakers.

CALEB. TABITHA.

Beneath the ſhadow of a beaver hat,
Meek Caleb at a ſilent meeting ſat;
His eye-balls oft' forgot the holy trance,
While Tabitha demure return'd the glance.
The meeting ended, Caleb ſilence broke,
And Tabitha her inward yearnings ſpoke.

Caleb.

Beloved, ſee how all things follow love;
Lamb fondleth lamb, and dove diſports with dove;
Yet fondled lambs their innocence ſecure,
And none can call the turtle's bill impure.
O faireſt of our ſiſters, let me be
The billing dove and fondling lamb to thee.

Tabitha.

But, Caleb, know that birds of gentle mind
Elect a mate among the ſober kind;
Not the mockaws, all deck'd in ſcarlet pride,
Entice their mild and modeſt hearts aſide;
But thou, vain man! beguil'd by Popiſh ſhows,
Doateſt on ribbands, flounces, furbelows.
If thy falſe heart be fond of tawdry dyes,
Go, wed the painted arch in ſummer-ſkies;
Such love will like the rainbow's hue decay,
Strong at the firſt, but paſſeth ſoon away.

Caleb.

Name not the frailties of my youthful days,
When vice miſled me through the harlot's ways;
When I with wanton look the ſex beheld,
And nature with each wanton look rebell'd;
Then party-colour'd pride my heart might move
With lace, the net to catch unhallow'd love.
All ſuch like love is fading as the flower,
Springs in a day, and withereth in an hour:
But now I feel the ſpouſal love within,
And ſpouſal love no ſiſter holds a ſin.

Tabitha.

I know thou longeſt for the flaunting maid,
Thy falſehood own, and ſay I am betray'd;
The tongue of man is bliſter'd o'er with lies,
But truth is ever read in woman's eyes.
O that my lip obey'd a tongue like thine!
Or that thine eye bewray'd a love like mine!

Caleb.

How bitter are thy words! forbear to teaſe,
I too might blame—but love delights to pleaſe.
Why ſhould I tell thee, that, when laſt the ſun
Painted the downy peach of Newington,
Joſiah led thee through the garden's walk,
And mingled melting kiſſes with his talk?
Ah, jeajouſy! turn, turn thine eyes aſide:
How can I ſee that watch adorn thy ſide?
For verily no gift the ſiſters take,
For luſt of gain, but for the giver's ſake.

Tabitha.

I own, Joſiah gave the golden toy,
Which did the righteous hand of Quare employ,
When Caleb hath aſſign'd ſome happy day,
I look on this, and chide the hours delay:
And, when Joſiah would his love purſue,
On this I look, and ſhun his wanton view.
Man but in vain with trinkets tries to move;
The only preſent love demands is love.

Caleb.

Ah, Tabitha, to hear theſe words of thine,
My pulſe beats high, as if enflam'd with wine!
When to the brethren firſt with fervent zeal
The ſpirit mov'd the yearnings to reveal,
How did I joy thy trembling lip to ſee
Red as the cherry from the Kentiſh tree!
When eceſtaſy had warm'd thy look ſo meek,
Gardens of roſes bluſhed on thy cheek! [eyes!
With what ſweet tranſport didſt thou roll thine
How did thy words provoke the brethren's ſighs!
Words that with holy ſighs might others move,
But, Tabitha, my ſighs were ſighs of love.

Tabitha.

Is Tabitha beyond her wiſhes bleſt?
Does no proud worldly dame divide thy breaſt?
Then hear me, Caleb, witneſs what I ſpeak,
This ſolemn promiſe death alone can break:
Sooner I would bedeck my brow with lace,
And with immodeſt favourites ſhade my face,
Sooner like Babylon's lewd whore be dreſt
In flaring diamonds and a ſcarlet veſt,
Or make a curtſey in Cathedral pew,
Than prove inconſtant, while my Caleb's true.

Caleb.

When I prove falſe, and Tabitha forſake,
Teachers ſhall dance a jig at country wake;
Brethren unbeaver'd then ſhall bow their head,
And with profane mince-pies our babes be fed.

Tabitha.

If that Joſiah were with paſſion fir'd,
Warm as the zeal of youth when firſt inſpir'd;
In ſteady love though he might perſevere,
Unchanging as the decent garb we wear,
And thou wert fickle as the wind that blows,
Light as the feather on the head of beaux;
Yet I for thee would all thy ſex reſign:
Siſters, take all the reſt—be Caleb mine.

Caleb.

Though I had all that ſinful love affords,
And all the concubines of all the lords,
Whoſe couches creak with whoredom's ſinful ſhame,
Whoſe velvet chairs are with adultery lame;
Ev'n in the harlot's hall, I would not ſip
The dew of lewdneſs from her lying lip;

I'd ſhun her paths, upon thy mouth to dwell,
More ſweet than powder which the merchants ſell.
O ſolace me with kiſſes pure like thine!
Enjoy, ye lords, the wanton concubine.
The ſpring now calls us forth; come, ſiſter, come,
To ſee the primroſe and the daiſy bloom.
Let ceremony bind the worldly pair;
Siſters eſteem the brethren's words ſincere.

Tabitha.

Eſpouſals are but forms. O lead me hence,
For ſecret love can never give offence.

Then hand in hand the loving mates withdraw:
True love is nature unreſtrain'd by law.
This tenet all the holy ſect allows;
So Tabitha took earneſt of a ſpouſe.

ELEGIES.

PANTHEA.

Long had Panthea felt love's ſecret ſmart,
And hope and fear alternate rul'd her heart;
Conſenting glances had her flame confeſt:
In woman's eyes her very ſoul's expreſt.
Perjur'd Alexis ſaw the bluſhing maid,
He ſaw, he ſwore, he conquer'd, and betray'd.
Another love now calls him from her arms,
His fickle heart another beauty warms;
Thoſe oaths, oft' whiſper'd in Panthea's ears,
He now again to Galatea ſwears.
Beneath a beech th' abandon'd virgin laid,
In grateful ſolitude enjoys the ſhade; [ſtrains,
There with faint voice ſhe breath'd theſe moving
While ſighing zephyrs ſhar'd her amorous pains.
Pale ſettled ſorrow hangs upon my brow,
Dead are my charms; Alexis breaks his vow!
Think, think, dear ſhepherd, on the days you knew,
When I was happy, when my ſwain was true;
Think how thy looks and tongue are form'd to move;
And think yet more—that all my fault was love.
Ah, could you view me in this wretched ſtate,
You might not love me, but you could not hate.
Could you behold me in this conſcious ſhade,
Where firſt thy vows, where firſt my love was paid,
Worn out with watching, ſullen with deſpair,
And ſee each eye ſwell with a guſhing tear;
Could you behold me on this moſſy bed,
From my pale cheek the lively crimſon fled,
Which in my ſofter hours you oft' have ſworn,
With roſy beauty far outbluſh'd the morn;
Could you untouch'd this wretched object bear,
And would not loſt Panthea claim a tear? [ſteal,
You could not, ſure—tears from your eyes would
And unawares thy tender ſoul reveal.
Ah no! thy ſoul with cruelty is fraught,
No tenderneſs diſturbs thy ſavage thought;
Sooner ſhall tigers ſpare the trembling lambs,
And wolves with pity hear their bleating dams;
Sooner ſhall vultures from their quarry fly;
Than falſe Alexis for Panthea ſigh.
Thy boſom ne'er a tender thought confeſt,
Sure ſtubborn flint has arm'd thy cruel breaſt;
But hardeſt flints are worn by frequent rains,
And the ſoft drops diſſolve their ſolid veins;
While thy relentleſs heart more hard appears,
And is not ſoften'd by a flood of tears.
Ah, what is love! Panthea's joys are gone,
Her liberty, her peace, her reaſon, flown!
And when I view me in the watery glaſs,
I find Panthea now, not what ſhe was.
As northern winds the new-blown roſes blaſt,
And on the ground their fading ruins caſt;
As ſudden blights corrupt the ripen'd grain,
And of its verdure ſpoil the mournful plain;
So hapleſs love on blooming features preys,
So hapleſs love deſtroys our peaceful days.
Come, gentle ſleep, relieve theſe weary'd eyes,
All ſorrow in thy ſoft embraces dies:
There, ſpite of all thy perjur'd vows, I find
Faithleſs Alexis languiſhingly kind:
Sometimes he leads me by the mazy ſtream,
And pleaſingly deludes me in my dream;
Sometimes he guides me to the ſecret grove,
Where all our looks, and all our talk is love.
Oh, could I thus conſume each tedious day,
And in ſweet ſlumbers dream my life away!
But ſleep, which now no more relieves theſe eyes,
To my ſad ſoul the dear deceit denies.
Why does the ſun dart forth its cheerful rays?
Why do the woods reſound with warbling lays?
Why does the roſe her grateful fragrance yield,
And yellow cowſlips paint the ſmiling field?
Why do the ſtreams with murmuring muſic flow,
And why do groves their friendly ſhade beſtow?
Let fable clouds the cheerful ſun deface,
Let mournful ſilence ſeize the feather'd race;
No more, ye roſes, grateful fragrance yield,
Droop, droop, ye cowſlips, in the blaſted field;
No more, ye ſtreams, with murmuring muſic flow,
And let not groves a friendly ſhade beſtow:
With ſympathiſing grief let nature mourn,
And never know the youthful ſpring's return.

And shall I never more Alexis see?
Then what is spring, or grove, or stream, to me?
Why sport the skipping lambs on yonder plain?
Why do the birds their tuneful voices strain?
Why frisk those heifers in the cooling grove?
Their happier life is ignorant of love.
Oh, lead me to some melancholy cave,
To lull my sorrows in a living grave;
From the dark rock where dashing waters fall,
And creeping ivy hangs the craggy wall;
Where I may waste in tears my hours away,
And never know the seasons or the day?
Die, die, Panthea—fly this hateful grove;
For what is life without the swain I love?

ARAMINTA.

AN ELEGY.

Now Phœbus rose, and with his early beams
Wak'd slumbering Delia from her pleasing dreams;
Her wishes by her fancy were supply'd,
And in her sleep the nuptial knot was ty'd.
With secret joy she saw the morning ray
Chequer the floor, and through the curtains play;
The happy morn that shall her bliss complete,
And all her rivals' envious hopes defeat.
In haste she rose, forgetful of her prayers,
Flew to the glass, and practis'd o'er her airs:
Her new-set jewels round her robe are plac'd,
Some in a brilliant buckle bind her waist,
Some round her neck a circling light display,
Some in her hair diffuse a trembling ray;
The silver knot o'erlooks the Mechlin lace,
And adds becoming beauties to her face;
Brocaded flowers o'er the gay mantua shine,
And the rich stays her taper shape confine;
Thus all her dress exerts a graceful pride,
And sporting loves surround th' expecting bride;
For Daphnis now attends the blushing maid,
Before the priest the solemn vows are paid;
This day, which ends at once all Delia's cares,
Shall swell a thousand eyes with secret tears.
Cease, Araminta, 'tis in vain to grieve,
Canst thou from Hymen's bonds the youth retrieve?
Disdain his perjuries, and no longer mourn:
Recal my love, and find a sure return.
But still the wretched maid no comfort knows,
And with resentment cherishes her woes:
Alone she pines, and, in these mournful strains,
Of Daphnis' vows, and her own fate complains:
Was it for this I sparkled at the Play,
And loiter'd in the Ring whole hours away?
When if thy chariot in the circle shone,
Our mutual passion by our looks was known:
Through the gay crowd my watchful glances flew,
Where'er I pass, thy grateful eyes pursue. [pain;
" Ah, faithless youth! too well you saw my
" For eyes the language of the soul explain."
Think, Daphnis, think that scarce five days are fled, [you said;
Since (O false tongue!) those treacherous things
How did you praise my shape and graceful air:
And woman thinks all compliments sincere.
Didst thou not then in rapture speak thy flame,
And in soft sighs breathe Araminta's name?
Didst thou not then with oaths thy passion prove,
And with an awful trembling, say—I love? [pain;
" Ah, faithless youth! too well you saw my
" For eyes the language of the soul explain."
How could'st thou thus, ungrateful youth, deceive?
How could I thus, unguarded maid, believe?
Sure thou canst well recal that fatal night,
When subtle love first enter'd at my sight:
When in the dance I was thy partner chose,
Gods! what a rapture in my bosom rose!
My trembling hand my sudden joy confess'd,
My glowing cheeks a wounded heart express'd;
My looks spoke love; while you, with answering eyes,
In killing glances made as kind replies. [said,
Think, Daphnis, think what tender things you
Think what confusion all my soul betray'd.
You call'd my graceful presence Cynthia's air;
And, when I sung, the syrens charm'd your ear:
My flame, blown up by flattery, stronger grew;
A gale of love in every whisper flew. [" pain;
" Ah, faithless youth! too well you saw my
" For eyes the language of the soul explain."
Whene'er I dress'd, my maid, who knew my flame,
Cherish'd my passion with thy lovely name;
Thy picture in her talk so lively grew,
That thy dear image rose before my view;
She dwelt whole hours upon thy shape and mien,
And wounded Delia's fame, to sooth my spleen:
When she beheld me at the name grow pale,
Strait to thy charms she chang'd her artful tale;
And, when thy matchless charms were quite run o'er,
I bid her tell the pleasing tale once more.
Oh, Daphnis! from thy Araminta fled!
Oh, to my love for ever, ever dead!
Like death, his nuptials all my hope remove,
And ever part me from the man I love. [" pain;
" Ah, faithless youth! too well you saw my
" For eyes the language of the soul explain."
O might I by my cruel fate be thrown,
In some retreat far from this hateful town!
Vain dress and glaring equipage, adieu!
Let happier nymphs those empty shows pursue.
Me let some melancholy shade surround,
Where not the print of human step is found.
In the gay dance my feet no more shall move,
But bear me faintly through the lonely grove.
No more these hands shall o'er the spinnet bound,
And from the sleeping strings call forth the sound:
Music, adieu! farewell, Italian airs!
The croaking raven now shall sooth my cares.
On some old ruin, lost in thought, I rest,
And think how Araminta once was blest;
There o'er and o'er thy letters I peruse,
And all my grief in one kind sentence lose;
Some tender line by chance my woe beguiles,
And on my cheek a short-liv'd pleasure smiles.
Why is this dawn of joy? flow, tears again!
Vain are these oaths, and all these vows are vain;
Daphnis, alas the Gordian knot has ty'd;
Nor force nor cunning can the band divide. [plain,
" Ah, faithless youth since eyes the soul ex-
" Why knew I not that artful tongue could feign."

AN ELEGY ON A LAP-DOG.

SHOCK's fate I mourn; poor Shock is now no more;
Ye muſes, mourn; ye chambermaids, deplore.
Unhappy Shock! yet more unhappy fair,
Doom'd to ſurvive thy joy and only care!
Thy wretched fingers now no more ſhall deck,
And tie the favourite ribband round his neck;
No more thy hand ſhall ſmooth his gloſſy hair,
And comb the wavings of his pendent ear.
Yet ceaſe thy flowing grief, forſaken maid;
All mortal pleaſures in a moment fade;
Our ſureſt hope is in an hour deſtroy'd;
And love, beſt gift of Heaven, not long enjoy'd.
Methinks I ſee her frantic with deſpair,
Her ſtreaming eyes, wrung hands, and flowing hair;
Her Mechlin pinners, rent, the floor beſtrow,
And her torn fan gives real ſigns of woe.
Hence ſuperſtition, that tormenting gueſt,
That haunts with fancy'd fears the coward breaſt;
No dread events upon this fate attend,
Stream eyes no more, no more thy treſſes rend.
Though certain omens oft' forewarn a ſtate,
And dying lions ſhow the monarch's fate;
Why ſhould ſuch fears bid Cælia's ſorrow riſe?
For, when a lap-dog falls, no lover dies.
Ceaſe, Cælia, ceaſe; reſtrain thy flowing tears;
Some warmer paſſion will diſpel thy cares.
In man you'll find a more ſubſtantial bliſs,
More grateful toying, and a ſweeter kiſs.
He's dead. Oh lay him gently in the ground!
And may his tomb be by this verſe renown'd:
"Here Shock, the pride of all his kind, is laid:
"Who fawn'd like man, but ne'er like man be-
"tray'd."

SONGS AND BALLADS.

SWEET WILLIAM'S FAREWELL TO BLACK-EYED SUSAN.

ALL in the Downs the fleet was moor'd,
The ſtreamers waving in the wind,
When black-ey'd Suſan came aboard.
Oh! where ſhall I my true-love find?
Tell me, ye jovial ſailors, tell me true,
If my ſweet William ſails among the crew.

William, who high upon the yard
Rock'd with the billow to and fro,
Soon as her well-known voice he heard,
He ſigh'd, and caſt his eyes below:
The cord ſlides ſwiftly through his glowing hands,
And (quick as lightning) on the deck he ſtands.

So the ſweet lark, high pois'd in air,
Shuts cloſe his pinions to his breaſt
(If chance his mate's ſhrill call he hear),
And drops at once into her neſt.
The nobleſt captain in the Britiſh fleet
Might envy William's lip thoſe kiſſes ſweet.

O Suſan, Suſan, lovely dear,
My vows ſhall ever true remain;
Let me kiſs off that falling tear;
We only part to meet again.
Change, as ye liſt, ye winds; my heart ſhall be
The faithful compaſs that ſtill points to thee.

Believe not what the landmen ſay,
Who tempt with doubts thy conſtant mind.
They'll tell thee, ſailors, when away,
In every port a miſtreſs find:
Yes, yes, believe them when they tell thee ſo,
For thou art preſent wherefoe'er I go.

If to fair India's coaſt we ſail,
Thy eyes are ſeen in diamonds bright,
Thy breath is Afric's ſpicy gale,
Thy ſkin is ivory ſo white.
Thus every beauteous object that I view,
Wakes in my ſoul ſome charm of lovely Sue.

Though battle call me from thy arms,
Let not my pretty Suſan mourn;
Though cannons roar, yet, ſafe from harms,
William ſhall to his dear return.
Love turns aſide the balls that round me fly,
Leſt precious tears ſhould drop from Suſan's eyes.

The boatſwain gave the dreadful word,
The ſails their ſwelling boſom ſpread;
No longer muſt ſhe ſtay aboard:
They kiſs'd, ſhe ſigh'd, he hung his head.
Her leſſening boat unwilling rows to land:
Adieu! ſhe cries; and wav'd her lily hand.

A BALLAD,

FROM THE WHAT-D'YE-CALL-IT.

'TWAS when the ſeas were roaring
With hollow blaſts of wind;
A damſel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.
Wide o'er the foaming billows
She caſt a wiſtful look;
Her head was crown'd with willows,
That trembled o'er the brook.

Twelve months are gone and over,
And nine long tedious days.
Why didſt thou, venturous lover,
Why didſt thou truſt the ſeas;

Ceaſe, ceaſe, thou cruel ocean,
And let my lover reſt:
Ah! what's thy troubled motion
To that within my breaſt?

The merchant, robb'd of pleaſure,
Sees tempeſts in deſpair;
But what's the loſs of treaſure,
To loſing of my dear?
Should you ſome coaſt be laid on,
Where gold and diamonds grow,
You'd find a richer maiden,
But none that loves you ſo.

How can they ſay that nature
Has nothing made in vain;
Why then beneath the water
Should hideous rocks remain?
No eyes the rocks diſcover,
That lurk beneath the deep,
To wreck the wandering lover,
And leave the maid to weep.

All melancholy lying,
Thus wail'd ſhe for her dear;
Repay'd each blaſt with ſighing,
Each billow with a tear;
When o'er the white wave ſtooping,
His floating corpſe ſhe ſpy'd;
Then, like a lily drooping,
She bow'd her head, and dy'd.

THE LADY'S LAMENTATION.

A BALLAD.

PHYLLIDA, that lov'd to dream
In the grove, or by the ſtream;
Sigh'd on velvet pillow.
What alas! ſhould fill her head,
But a fountain, or a mead,
Water and a willow?

Love in cities never dwells,
He delights in rural cells
Which ſweet woodbine covers.
What are your aſſemblies then?
There, 'tis true, we ſee more men;
But much fewer lovers.

Oh, how chang'd the proſpect grows!
Flocks and herds to fops and beaux,
Coxcombs without number!
Moon and ſtars that ſhone ſo bright,
To the torch and waxen light,
And whole nights at ombre.

Pleaſant as it is, to hear
Scandal tickling in our ear,
Ev'n of our own mothers;
In the chit-chat of the day,
To us is pay'd, when we're away,
What we lent to others.

Though the favourite toaſt I reign;
Wine, they ſay, that prompts the vain,
Heightens defamation.
Muſt I live 'twixt ſpite and fear,
Every day grow handſomer,
And loſe my reputation?

Thus the fair to ſighs gave way,
Her empty purſe beſide her lay.
Nymph, ah, ceaſe thy ſorrow.
Though curſt fortune frown to-night,
This odious town can give delight,
If you win to-morrow.

DAMON AND CUPID.

A SONG.

THE ſun was now withdrawn,
The ſhepherds home were ſpe'd;
The moon wide o'er the lawn
Her ſilver mantle ſpread;
When Damon ſtay'd behind,
And ſaunter'd in the grove.
Will ne'er a nymph be kind,
And give me love for love?

Oh! thoſe were golden hours,
When love, devoid of cares,
In all Arcadia's bowers
Lodg'd ſwains and nymphs by pairs;
But now from wood and plain
Flies every ſprightly laſs;
No joys for me remain,
In ſhades, or on the graſs.

The winged boy draws near,
And thus the ſwain reproves:
While beauty revel'd here,
My game lay in the groves;
At court I never fail
To ſcatter round my arrows;
Men fall as thick as hail,
And maidens love like ſparrows.

Then, ſwain, if me you need,
Straight lay your ſheep-hook down;
Throw by your oaten reed,
And haſte away to town.
So well I'm known at court,
None aſks where Cupid dwells;
But readily reſort
To Bellenden's or Lepell's.

DAPHNIS AND CHLOE.

A SONG.

DAPHNIS ſtood penſive in the ſhade,
With arms acroſs, and head reclin'd;
Pale looks accus'd the cruel maid,
And ſighs reliev'd his love-ſick mind:
His tuneful pipe all broken lay;
Looks, ſighs, and actions, ſeem'd to ſay,
My Chloe is unkind.

Why ring the woods with warbling throats?
Ye larks, ye linnets, ceaſe your ſtrains;
I faintly hear in your ſweet notes
My Chloe's voice that wakes my pains:
Yet why ſhould you your ſong forbear?
Your mates delight your ſong to hear;
But Chloe mine diſdains.

As thus he melancholy ſtood,
Dejected as the lonely dove,
Sweet ſounds broke gently through the wood.
I feel the ſound; my heart-ſtrings move.

'Twas not the nightingale that ſung;
No. 'Tis my Chloe's ſweeter tongue.
Hark, hark, what ſays my love?

How fooliſh is the nymph (ſhe cries)
Who trifles with her lover's pain!
Nature ſtill ſpeaks in woman's eyes,
Our artful lips were made to feign.
O Daphnis, Daphnis, 'twas my pride,
'Twas not my heart thy love deny'd;
Come back, dear youth, again.

As t'other day my hand he ſeiz'd,
My blood with thrilling motion flew;
Sudden I put on looks diſpleas'd,
And haſty from his hold withdrew.
'Twas fear alone, thou ſimple ſwain;
Then hadſt thou preſt my hand again,
My heart had yielded too!

'Tis true, thy tuneful reed I blam'd,
That ſwell'd thy lip and roſy cheek;
Think not thy ſkill in ſong defam'd,
That lip ſhould other pleaſures ſeek:
Much, much thy muſic I approve;
Yet break thy pipe, for more I love,
Much more to hear thee ſpeak.

My heart forbodes that I'm betray'd,
Daphnis, I fear, is ever gone;
Laſt night with Delia's dog he play'd,
Love by ſuch trifles firſt comes on.
Now, now, dear ſhepherd, come away,
My tongue would now my heart obey.
Ah, Chloe, thou art won!

The youth ſtepp'd forth with haſty pace,
And found where wiſhing Chloe lay;
Shame ſudden lighten'd in her face,
Confus'd, ſhe knew not what to ſay.
At laſt, in broken words, ſhe cry'd;
To-morrow you in vain had try'd,
But I am loſt to-day!

THE COQUETTE MOTHER AND DAUGHTER.

A SONG.

At the cloſe of the day,
When the bean-flower and hay
Breath'd odours in every wind;
Love enliven'd the veins
Of the damſels and ſwains;
Each glance and each action was kind.

Molly, wanton and free,
Kiſs'd, and ſat on each knee,
Fond ecſtaſy ſwam in her eyes.
See, thy mother is near;
Hark! ſhe calls thee to hear
What age and experience adviſe.

Haſt thou ſeen the blithe dove
Stretch her neck to her love,
All gloſſy with purple and gold?
If a kiſs he obtain,
She returns it again:
What follows, you need not be told.

Look ye, mother, ſhe cry'd,
You inſtruct me in pride,
And men by good manners are won.
She who trifles with all
Is leſs likely to fall
Than ſhe who but trifles with one.

Pr'ythee, Molly, be wiſe,
Leſt by ſudden ſurpriſe
Love ſhould tingle in every vein:
Take a ſhepherd for life,
And when once you're a wife,
You ſafely may trifle again.

Molly ſmiling reply'd,
Then I'll ſoon be a bride;
Old Roger has gold in his cheſt.
But I thought all you wives
Choſe a man for your lives,
And trifled no more with the reſt.

MOLLY MOG:

Or, the Fair Maid of the Inn. A Ballad *.

Says my uncle, I pray diſcover
What hath been the cauſe of your woes;
Why you pine and you whine like a lover!
—I have ſeen Molly Mog of the Roſe.

O nephew! your grief is but folly,
In town you may find better prog;
Half a crown there will get you a Molly,
A Molly much better than Mog.

I know that by wits 'tis recited
That women are beſt at a clog;
But I am not ſo eaſily frighted
From loving of ſweet Molly Mog.

The ſchool-boy's deſire is a play-day;
The ſchoolmaſter's joy is to flog;
The milk-maid's delight is on May-day;
But mine is on ſweet Molly Mog.

Will-a-wiſp leads the traveller gadding
Through ditch, and through quagmire, and bog;
But no light can ſet me a-madding
Like the eyes of my ſweet Molly Mog.

For guineas in other men's breeches
Your gameſters will palm and will cog;
But I envy them none of their riches,
So I may win ſweet Molly Mog.

The heart when half wounded is changing,
It here and there leaps like a frog;
But my heart can never be ranging,
'Tis ſo fix'd upon ſweet Molly Mog.

Who follows all ladies of pleaſure,
In pleaſure is thought but a hog;
All the ſex cannot give ſo good meaſure
Of joys, as my ſweet Molly Mog.

I feel I'm in love to diſtraction,
My ſenſes all loſt in a fog;
And nothing can give ſatisfaction,
But thinking of ſweet Molly Mog.

---

* This ballad was written on an inn-keeper's daughter at Oakingham in Berkſhire, who in her youth was a celebrated beauty and toaſt: ſhe lived to a very advanced age, dying ſo lately as the month of March, 1766.

A letter when I am inditing,
Comes Cupid and gives me a jog,
And I fill all the paper with writing
Of nothing but ſweet Molly Mog.

If I would not give up the three Graces,
I wiſh I were hang'd like a dog,
And at court all the drawing-room faces,
For a glance of my ſweet Molly Mog.

Thoſe faces want nature and ſpirit,
And ſeem as cut out of a log:
Juno, Venus, and Pallas's merit,
Unite in my ſweet Molly Mog.

Thoſe who toaſt all the Family Royal,
In bumpers of Hogan and Nog,
Have hearts not more true or more loyal
Than mine to my ſweet Molly Mog.

Were Virgil alive with his Phyllis,
And writing another eclogue;
Both his Phyllis and fair Amaryllis
He'd give up for ſweet Molly Mog.

When ſhe ſmiles on each gueſt, like her liquor,
Then jealouſy ſets me agog;
To be ſure ſhe's a bit for the Vicar.
And ſo I ſhall loſe Molly Mog.

BALLAD

Of all the girls that e'er were ſeen,
There's none ſo fine as Nelly,
For charming face, and ſhape, and mien,
And what's not fit to tell ye:
Oh! the turn'd neck, and ſmooth white ſkin,
Of lovely deareſt Nelly!
For many a ſwain it well had been
Had ſhe ne'er been at Calai-.

For when as Nelly came to France
(Invited by her couſins),
Acroſs the Tuilleries each glance
Kill'd Frenchmen by whole dozens.
The king, as he at dinner ſat,
Did beckon to his huſſar,
And bid him bring his tabby cat,
For charming Nell to buſs her.

The ladies were with rage provok'd,
To ſee her ſo reſpected;
The men look'd arch, as Nelly ſtrok'd,
And puſs her tail erected.
But not a man did look employ,
Except on pretty Nelly;
Then ſaid the Duke de Villeroy,
"Ah! qu'elle eſt bien jolie!"

But who's that great philoſopher,
That carefully looks at her?
By his concern it ſhould appear,
The fair one is his daughter.
Ma foy! (quoth then a courtier fly)
He on his child does leer too:
I wiſh he has no mind to try
What ſome papa's will here do.

The courtiers all, with one accord,
Broke out in Nelly's praiſes,
Admir'd her roſe, and lys ſans farde,
(Which are your termes Françoiſes).
Then might you ſee a painted ring
Of dames that ſtood by Nelly;
She like the pride of all the ſpring,
And they, like Fleurs de Palais.

In Marli's gardens, and St. Clou,
I ſaw this charming Nelly,
Where ſhameleſs nymphs, expos'd to view,
Stand naked in each allée:
But Venus had a brazen face
Both at Verſailles and Meudon,
Or elſe ſhe had reſign'd her place,
And left the ſtone ſhe ſtood on.

Were Nelly's figure mounted there,
'Twould put down all th' Italian:
Lord! how thoſe foreigners would ſtare!
But I ſhould turn Pygmalion:
For, ſpite of lips, and eyes, and mien,
Me nothing can delight ſo,
As does that part that lies between
Her left toe and her right toe.

A BALLAD ON QUADRILLE.

When as corruption hence did go,
And left the nation free;
When Ay ſaid ay, and No ſaid no,
Without or place or ſee;
Then Satan, thinking things went ill,
Sent forth his ſpirit called Quadrille.
Quadrille, Quadrille, &c.

Kings, queens, and knaves, made up his pack,
And four fair ſuits he wore;
His troops they were with red and black
All blotch'd and ſpotted o'er;
And every houſe, go where you will,
Is haunted by this imp Quadrille, &c.

Sure cards he has for every thing,
Which well court cards they name,
And, ſtateſman-like, calls in the king,
To help out a bad game;
But, if the parties manage ill,
The king is forc'd to loſe Codille, &c.

When two and two were met of old,
Though they ne'er meant to marry,
They were in Cupid's books enroll'd,
And call'd a Partie Quarrée;
But now, meet when and where you will,
A Partie Quarrée is Quadrille, &c.

The commoner, and knight, and peer,
Men of all ranks and fame,
Leave to their wives the only care
To propagate their name;
And well that duty they fulfil,
When the good huſband's at Quadrille, &c.

When patients lie in piteous caſe,
In comes th' apothecary;
And to the doctor cries, Alas!
Non debes Quadrillare:
The patient dies without a pill;
For why? the doctor's at Quadrille, &c.

Should France and Spain again grow loud,
The Muſcovite grow louder;
Britain, to curb her neighbours proud,
Would want both ball and powder;

Muſt want both ſword and gun to kill:
For why? the general's at Quadrille, &c.

The king of late drew forth his ſword
(Thank God 'twas not in wrath),
And made, of many a 'ſquire and lord,
An unwaſh'd Knight of Bath:
What are their feats of arms and ſkill?
They're but nine parties at Quadrille, &c.

A party late at Cambray met,
Which drew all Europe's eyes;
'Twas call'd in Poſt-Boy and Gazette
The Quadruple Allies;
But ſomebody took ſomething ill,
So broke this party at Quadrille, &c.

And now God ſave this noble realm,
And God ſave eke Hanover;
And God ſave thoſe who hold the helm,
When as the king goes over;
But let the king go where he will,
His ſubjects muſt play at Quadrille,
Quadrille, Quadrille, &c.

A NEW SONG OF NEW SIMILIES.

My paſſion is as muſtard ſtrong;
I ſit all ſober ſad;
Drunk as a piper all day long,
Or like a March-hare mad.

Round as a hoop the bumpers flow;
I drink, yet can't forget her;
For, though as drunk as David's ſow,
I love her ſtill the better.

Pert as a pear-monger I'd be,
If Molly were but kind;
Cool as a cucumber could ſee
The reſt of womankind.

Like a ſtuck pig I gaping ſtare,
And eye her o'er and o'er;
Lean as a rake with ſighs and care,
Sleek as a mouſe before.

Plump as a partridge was I known,
And ſoft as ſilk my ſkin,
My cheeks as fat as butter grown;
But as a groat now thin!

I, melancholy as a cat,
And kept awake to weep;
But ſhe, inſenſible of that,
Sound as a top can ſleep.

Hard is her heart as flint or ſtone,
She laughs to ſee me pale;
And merry as a grig is grown,
And briſk as bottled ale.

The God of Love at her approach
Is buſy as a bee;
Hearts, ſound as any bell or roach,
Are ſmit and ſigh like me.

Ay me! as thick as hops or hail,
The fine men crowd about her;
But ſoon as dead as a door nail
Shall I be, if without her.

Straight as my leg her ſhape appears;
O were we join'd together!
My heart would be ſcot-free from cares,
And lighter than a feather.

As fine as fivepence is her mien,
No drum was ever tighter;
Her glance is as the razor keen,
And not the ſun is brighter.

As ſoft as pap her kiſſes are,
Methinks I taſte them yet;
Brown as a berry is her hair,
Her eyes as black as jet:

As ſmooth as glaſs, as white as curds,
Her pretty hand invites;
Sharp as a needle are her words;
Her wit, like pepper, bites:

Briſk as a body-louſe ſhe trips,
Clean as a penny dreſt;
Sweet as a roſe her breath and lips,
Round as the globe her breaſt.

Full as an egg was I with glee;
And happy as a king.
Good Lord! how all men envy'd me!
She lov'd like any thing.

But, falſe as hell! ſhe, like the wind,
Chang'd, as her ſex muſt do;
Though ſeeming as the turtle kind,
And like the goſpel true.

If I and Molly could agree,
Let who would take Peru!
Great as an emperor ſhould I be,
And richer than a Jew.

Till you grow tender as a chick,
I'm dull as any poſt;
Let us, like burs, together ſtick,
And warm as any toaſt.

You'll know me truer than a dye;
And wiſh me better ſped;
Flat as a flounder when I lie,
And as a herring dead.

Sure as a gun, ſhe'll drop a tear,
And ſigh, perhaps, and wiſh,
When I am rotten as a pear,
And mute as any fiſh.

NEWGATE'S GARLAND:

BEING A NEW BALLAD,

Showing how MR. JONATHAN WILD'S Throat was cut from Ear to Ear with a Penknife, by MR. BLAKE, alias BLUESKIN, the bold Highwayman, as he ſtood at his Trial in the Old-Bailey, 1725.

To the Tune of—"The Cut-purſe."

Ye gallants of Newgate, whoſe fingers are nice,
In diving in pockets, or cogging of dice;
Ye ſharpers ſo rich, who can buy off the nooſe;
Ye honeſter poor rogues, who die in your ſhoes;
Attend and draw near,
Good news you ſhall hear,
How Jonathan's throat was cut from ear to ear;
How Blueſkin's ſharp penknife hath ſet you at eaſe,
And every man round me may rob if he pleaſe.

When to the Old-Bailey this Blueſkin was led,
He held up his hand, his indictment was read,
Loud rattled his chains, near him Jonathan ſtood,
For full forty pounds was the price of his blood.
Then, hopeleſs of life,
He drew his penknife,
And made a ſad widow of Jonathan's wife.
But forty pounds paid her, her grief ſhall appeaſe,
And every man round me may rob if he pleaſe.

Some ſay there are courtiers of higheſt renown,
Who ſteal the king's gold, and leave him but a crown; [men,
Some ſay there are peers, and ſome parliament-
Who meet once a year, to rob courtiers again:
Let them all take their ſwing,
To pillage the king,
And get a blue ribbon inſtead of a ſtring.
Now Blueſkin's ſharp penknife hath ſet you at eaſe,
And every man round me may rob if he pleaſe.

Knaves of old, to hide guilt by their cunning inventions, [ſions;
Call'd briberies grants, and plain robberies pen-
Phyſicians and lawyers (who take their degrees
To be learned rogues) call'd their pilfering fees:
Since this happy day,
Now every man may
Rob (as ſafe as in office) upon the highway.
For Blueſkin's ſharp penknife hath ſet you at eaſe,
And every man round me may rob if he pleaſe.

Some cheat in the cuſtoms, ſome rob the exciſe,
But he who robs both is eſteemed moſt wiſe.
Church-wardens, too prudent to hazard the halter,
As yet only venture to ſteal from the altar:
But now to get gold,
They may be more bold, [cold.
And rob on the highway, ſince Jonathan's
For Blueſkin's ſharp penknife hath ſet you at eaſe,
And every man round me may rob if he pleaſe.

MISCELLANIES.

PROLOGUE,

Deſigned for the Paſtoral Tragedy of Dione.

THERE was a time (O were thoſe days renew'd!)
Ere tyrant-laws had woman's will ſubdued;
Then nature rul'd; and love, devoid of art,
Spoke the conſenting language of the heart.
Love uncontroul'd! inſipid, poor delight!
'Tis the reſtraint that whets our appetite.
Behold the beaſts who range the foreſts free;
Behold the birds who fly from tree to tree;
In their amours ſee nature's power appear!
And do they love? Yes—one month in the year.
Were theſe the pleaſures of the golden reign?
And did free nature thus inſtruct the ſwain?
I envy not, ye nymphs, your amorous bowers:
Such harmleſs ſwains!—I'm ev'n content with ours.
But yet there's ſomething in theſe ſylvan ſcenes,
That tells our fancy what the lover means.
Name but the moſſy bank, and moon-light grove,
Is there a heart that does not beat with love?
To-night we treat you with ſuch country fare:
Then for your lover's ſake our author ſpare.
He draws no Hemſkirk boors, or home-bred clowns,
But the ſoft ſhepherds of Arcadia's downs.
When Paris on the three his judgment paſs'd;
I hope you'll own the ſhepherd ſhow'd his taſte:
And Jove, all know, was a good judge of beauty,
Who made the nymph Caliſto break her duty;
Then was the country-nymph no aukward thing.
See what ſtrange revolutions time can bring!
Yet ſtill methinks an author's fate I dread,
Were it not ſafer beaten paths to tread
Of tragedy; than o'er wide heaths to ſtray,
And ſeeking ſtrange adventures loſe his way?
No trumpet's clangour makes his heroine ſtart,
And tears the ſoldier from her bleeding heart.
He, fooliſh bard! nor pomp nor ſhow regards.
Without the witneſs of a hundred guards
His lovers ſigh their vows.—If ſleep ſhould take ye,
He has no battle, no loud drum to wake ye.
What, no ſuch ſhifts? there's danger in't, 'tis true;
Yet ſpare him, as he gives you ſomething new.

A CONTEMPLATION ON NIGHT.

WHETHER amid the gloom of night I ſtray,
Or my glad eyes enjoy revolving day,
Still nature's various face informs my ſenſe,
Of an all-wiſe, all-powerful Providence.
When the gay ſun firſt breaks the ſhades of night,
And ſtrikes the diſtant eaſtern hills with light,
Colour returns, the plains their livery wear,
And a bright verdure clothes the ſmiling year:
The blooming flowers with opening beauties glow,
And grazing flocks their milky fleeces ſhow;
The barren cliffs with chalky fronts ariſe,
And a pure azure arches o'er the ſkies.
But when the gloomy reign of night returns,
Stript of her fading pride all nature mourns:
The trees no more their wonted verdure boaſt,
But weep in dewy tears their beauty loſt:
No diſtant landſcapes draw our curious eyes;
Wrapt in night's robe the whole creation lies.
Yet ſtill, ev'n now, while darkneſs clothes the land,
We view the traces of th' Almighty hand;
Millions of ſtars in heaven's wide vault appear,
And with new glories hangs the boundleſs ſphere;
The ſilver moon her weſtern couch forſakes,
And o'er the ſkies her nightly circle makes;
Her ſolid globe beats back the ſunny rays,
And to the world her borrow'd light repays.

Whether thoſe ſtars, that twinkling luſtre ſend,
Are ſuns, and rolling worlds thoſe ſuns attend,
Man may conjecture, and new ſchemes declare;
Yet all his ſyſtems but conjectures are.
But this we know, that heaven's eternal King,
Who bade this univerſe from nothing ſpring,
Can at his word bid numerous worlds appear,
And riſing worlds th' all-powerful word ſhall hear.
When to the weſtern main the ſun deſcends,
To other lands a riſing day he lends;
The ſpreading dawn another ſhepherd ſpies,
The wakeful flocks from their warm folds ariſe;
Refreſh'd, the peaſant ſeeks his early toil,
And bids the plough correct the fallow ſoil.
While we in ſleep's embraces waſte the night,
The climes oppos'd enjoy meridian light:
And when thoſe lands the buſy ſun forſakes,
With us again the roſy morning wakes;
In lazy ſleep the night rolls ſwift away,
And neither clime laments his abſent ray.
When the pure ſoul is from the body flown,
No more ſhall night's alternate reign be known;
The ſun no more ſhall rolling light beſtow,
But from th' Almighty ſtreams of glory flow.
Oh, may ſome nobler thought my ſoul employ,
Than empty, tranſient, ſublunary joy!
The ſtars ſhall drop, the ſun ſhall loſe his flame:
But thou, O God! for ever ſhine the ſame.

A THOUGHT ON ETERNITY.

Ere the foundations of the world were laid,
Ere kindling light th' Almighty word obey'd,
Thou wert; and when the ſubterraneous flame
Shall burſt its priſon, and devour this frame,
From angry heaven when the keen lightning flies,
When fervent heat diſſolves the melting ſkies,
Thou ſtill ſhalt be; ſtill as thou wert before,
And know no change, when time ſhall be no more.
O endleſs thought! divine Eternity!
Th' immortal ſoul ſhares but a part of thee!
For thou wert preſent when our life began,
When the warm duſt ſhot up in breathing man.
Ah! what is life? with ills encompaſs'd round,
Amidſt our hopes, fate ſtrikes the ſudden wound:
To-day the ſtateſman of new honour dreams,
To-morrow death deſtroys his airy ſchemes;
Is mouldy treaſure in thy cheſt confin'd?
Think all that treaſure thou muſt leave behind;
Thy heir with ſmiles ſhall view thy blazon'd herſe,
And all thy hoards with laviſh hand diſperſe.
Should certain fate th' impending blow delay,
Thy mirth will ſicken, and thy bloom decay;
Then feeble age will all thy nerves diſarm,
No more thy blood its narrow channels warm.
Who then would wiſh to ſtretch this narrow ſpan,
To ſuffer life beyond the date of man?
The virtuous ſoul purſues a nobler aim,
And life regards but as a fleeting dream:
She longs to wake, and wiſhes to get free,
To launch from earth into eternity.
For while the boundleſs theme extends our thought,
Ten thouſand thouſand rolling years are nought.

AN EPIGRAMMATICAL EXPOSTULATION*.

From Mohock and from Hawkubite,
Good Lord deliver me!
Who wander through the ſtreets by night,
Committing cruelty.
They ſlaſh our ſons with bloody knives,
And on our daughters fall;
And if they raviſh not our wives,
We have good luck withal.
Coaches and chairs they overturn,
Nay carts moſt eaſily:
Therefore from Gog, and eke Magog,
Good Lord deliver me!

EPITAPH OF BYE-WORDS.

Here lies a round woman, who thought mighty odd [God.
Every word ſhe e'er heard in this church about
To convince her of God, the good dean did endeavour,
But ſtill in her heart ſhe held nature more clever.
Though he talk'd much of virtue, her head always run
Upon ſomething or other, ſhe found better fun.
For the dame, by her ſkill in affairs aſtronomical,
Imagin'd to live in the clouds was but comical.
In this world ſhe deſpis'd every ſoul ſhe met here,
And now ſhe's in t' other, ſhe thinks it but queer.

MY OWN EPITAPH.

Life is a jeſt, and all things ſhow it;
I thought ſo once, but now I know it.

A MOTTO

For the Opera of Mutius Scævola †.

Who here blames words, or verſes, ſongs, or ſingers,
Like Mutius Scævola will burn his fingers.

WINE:

A POEM.

"Nulla placere diu, nec vivere carmina poſſunt,
"Quæ ſcribuntur aquæ potoribus."

Of happineſs terreſtrial, and the ſource [muſe;
Whence human pleaſures flow, ſing, heavenly
Of ſparkling juices, of th' enlivening grape,
Whoſe quickening taſte adds vigour to the ſoul,
Whoſe ſoverein power revives decaying nature,
And thaws the frozen blood of hoary age,
A kindly warmth diffuſing;—youthful fires
Gild his dim eyes, and paint with ruddy hue
His wrinkled viſage, ghaſtly wan before:
Cordial reſtorative to mortal man,
With copious hand by bounteous gods beſtow'd!

---

* Annexed, in 1712, to Gay's "Wonderful Prophecy," a humorous treatiſe on the Mohocks.

† An opera by Mr. Rolli, performed in 1727.

Bacchus divine, and my adventurous ſong,
That with no middle flight intends to ſoar.
Inſpir'd, ſublime, on Pegaſean wing,
By thee upborne, I draw Miltonic air.
When fumy vapours clog our loaded brows
With furrow'd frowns; when ſtupid, downcaſt eyes,
Th' external ſymptoms of remorſe within,
Expreſs our grief; or when in ſullen dumps,
With head incumbent on expanded palm,
Moping we ſit, in ſilent ſorrow drown'd:
Whether inveigling Hymen has trepann'd
Th' unwary youth, and tied the Gordian knot
Of jangling wedlock not to be diſſolv'd;
Worry'd all day by loud Xantippe's din,
Who fails not to exalt him to the ſtars,
And fix him there among the branched crew
(Taurus, and Aries, and Capricorn,
The greateſt monſters of the zodiac):
Or for the loſs of anxious worldly pelf,
Or Cælia's ſcornful ſlights, and cold diſdain,
Which check'd his amorous flame with coy repulſe;
The worſt events that mortals can befall:
By cares depreſs'd, in penſive hyppiſh mood,
With ſloweſt pace the tedious minutes roll.
Thy charming ſight, but much more charming guſt,
New life incites, and warms our chilly blood.
Straight with pert looks, we raiſe our drooping fronts,
And pour in cryſtal pure, thy purer juice;—
With cheerful countenance and ſteady hand
Raiſe it lip-high, then fix the ſpacious rim
To the expecting mouth;—with grateful taſte,
The ebbing wine glides ſwiftly o'er the tongue;
The circling blood with quicker motion flies:
Such is thy powerful influence, thou ſtraight
Diſpell'ſt thoſe clouds, that, louring dark, eclips'd
The whilom glories of the gladſome face;—
While dimpled cheeks, and ſparkling, rolling eyes,
Thy cheering virtues and thy worth proclaim.
So miſts and exhalations, that ariſe
From hills or ſteamy lake, duſky or gray,
Prevail; till Phœbus ſheds Titanian rays,
And paints their fleecy ſkirts with ſhining gold:
Unable to reſiſt, the foggy damps,
That veil'd the ſurface of the verdant fields,
At the god's penetrating beams diſperſe;
The earth again in former beauty ſmiles,
In gaudieſt livery dreſt, all gay and clear.
When diſappointed Strephon meets repulſe,
Scoff'd at, deſpis'd, in melancholic mood,
Joyleſs he waſtes in ſighs the lazy hours;
Till, reinforc'd by thy moſt potent aid,
He ſtorms the breach, and wins the beauteous fort.
To pay thee homage, and receive thy bleſſing,
The Britiſh ſeamen quits his native ſhore,
And ventures through the trackleſs, deep abyſs,
Ploughing the ocean, while the upheav'd oak,
"With beaked prow, rides tilting o'er the waves;"
Shock'd by tempeſtuous jarring winds, ſhe rolls
In dangers imminent, till ſhe arrives [ſence.
At thoſe beſt climes thou favour'ſt with thy pre-
Whether at Luſitania's ſultry coaſt,
Or lofty Teneriff, Palma, Ferro,
Provence, or at the Celtiberian ſhores;
With gazing pleaſure and aſtoniſhment
At Paradiſe (ſeat of our ancient ſire)
He thinks himſelf arriv'd; the purple grapes,
In largeſt cluſters pendant, grace the vines
Innumerous; in fields groteſque and wild
They with implicit curls the oak entwine,
And load with fruit divine his ſpreading boughs;
Sight moſt delicious! not an irkſome thought,
Or of left native iſle, or abſent friends,
Or deareſt wife, or tender ſucking babe,
His kindly-treacherous memory now preſents;
The jovial god has left no room for cares.
Celeſtial liquor! thou that didſt inſpire
Maro and Flaccus, and the Grecian bard,
With lofty numbers, and heroic ſtrains
Unparallel'd; with eloquence profound,
And arguments convictive, didſt enforce
Fam'd Tully, and Demoſthenes renown'd:
Ennius, firſt fam'd in Latin ſong, in vain
Drew Heliconian ſtreams, ungrateful whet
To jaded muſe, and oft, with vain attempt,
Heroic acts, in flagging numbers dull,
With pains eſſay'd; but, abject ſtill and low,
His unrecruited muſe could never reach
The mighty theme, till, from the purple fount
Of bright Lenæan fire, her barren drought
He quench'd, and with inſpiring nectarous juice
Her drooping ſpirits cheer'd;—aloft ſhe towers,
Borne on ſtiff pennons, and of war's alarms,
And trophies won, in loftieſt numbers ſings.
'Tis thou the hero's breaſt to martial acts,
And reſolution bold, and ardour brave,
Excit'ſt: thou check'ſt inglorious, lolling eaſe,
And ſluggiſh minds with generous fires inflam'ſt.
O thou, that firſt my quicken'd ſoul didſt warm,
Still with thy aid aſſiſt me, that thy praiſe,
Thy univerſal ſway o'er all the world,
In everlaſting numbers, like the theme,
I may record, and ſing thy matchleſs worth.
Had the Oxonian bard thy praiſe rehears'd,
His muſe had yet retain'd her wonted height;
Such as of late o'er Blenheim's field ſhe ſoar'd
Aërial: now in Ariconian bogs
She lies inglorious floundering, like her theme
Languid and faint, and on damp wing, immerg'd
In acid juice, in vain attempts to riſe.
With what ſublimeſt joy from noiſy town,
At rural ſeat, Lucretelus retir'd:
Flaccus, untainted by perplexing cares,
Where the white poplar, and the lofty pine,
Join neighbouring boughs, ſweet hoſpitable ſhade
Creating, from Phœbean rays ſecure,
A cool retreat, with few well-choſen friends,
On flowery mead recumbent, ſpent the hours
In mirth innocuous, and alternate verſe!
With roſes interwoven, poplar wreaths
Their temples bind, dreſs of ſylveſtrian gods!
Choiceſt nectarean juice crown'd largeſt bowls,
And overlook'd the brim, alluring ſight,
Of fragrant ſcent, attractive, taſte divine!
Whether from Formian-grape depreſs'd, Falern,
Or Setin, Maſſic, Gauran, or Sabine,
Leſbian, or Cœcuban, the cheering bowl
Mov'd briſkly round, and ſpurr'd their heighten'd wit
To ſing Mæcenas' praiſe, their patron kind.

But we not as our priſtine fires repair
T' umbrageous grot or vale; but, when the ſun
Faintly from weſtern ſkies his rays oblique
Darts ſloping, and to Thetis' watery lap
Haſtens in prone career, with friends ſelect
Swiftly we hie to Devil *, young or old,
Jocund and boon, where at the entrance ſtands
A ſtripling, who with ſcrapes and humil cringe
Greets us in winning ſpeech, and accent bland;
With lighteſt bound, and ſafe, unerring ſtep,
He ſkips before, and nimbly climbs the ſtairs:
Melampus thus, panting with lolling tongue,
And wagging tail, gambols, and friſks before
His ſequent lord, from penſive walk return'd,
Whether in ſhady wood, or paſture green,
And waits his coming at the well-known gate—
Nigh to the ſtairs' aſcent, in regal port,
Sits a majeſtic dame, whoſe looks denounce
Command and ſovereignty; with haughty air,
And ſtudied mien, in ſemi-circular throne
Enclos'd, ſhe deals around her dread commands;
Behind her (dazzling ſight!) in order rang'd,
Pile above pile, cryſtalline veſſels ſhine;
Attendant ſlaves with eager ſtrides advance,
And, after homage paid, bawl out aloud
Words unintelligible, noiſe confus'd:
She knows the jargon ſounds, and ſtraight deſcribes,
In characters myſterious, words obſcure;
More legible are algebraic ſigns,
Or myſtic figures by magicians drawn,
When they invoke th' infernal ſpirits aid.
Drive hence the rude and barbarous diſſonance
Of ſavage Thracians, and Croation boors;
The loud Centaurian broils with Lapithæ
Sound harſh and grating to Lenæan god;
Chaſe brutal feuds of Belgian ſkippers hence
(Amid their cups, whoſe innate temper's ſhown),
In clumſy liſt wielding ſcymmeterian knife,
Who laſh each other's eyes and blubber'd face,
Profaning Bacchanalian, ſolemn rites:
Muſic's harmonious numbers better ſuit
His feſtivals, from inſtruments or voice,
Or Gaſperini's hand the trembling ſtring
Should touch; or from the dulcet Tuſcan dames,
Or warbling Toft's far more melodious tongue,
Sweet Symphonies ſhould flow, the Delian god
For airy Bacchus is aſſociate meet.
The ſtairs aſcent now gain'd, our guide unbars
The doors of ſpacious room, and creeking chairs
(To ear offenſive) round the table ſets.
We ſit, when thus his florid ſpeech begins:
"Name, Sirs, the wine that moſt invites your taſte,
"Champaign, or Burgundy, or Florence pure,
"Or Hock antique, or Liſbon new or old,
"Bourdeaux, or neat French wine, or Alicant."
For Bourdeaux we with voice unanimous
Declare (ſuch ſympathy's in hoon compeers).
He quits the room alert, but ſoon returns;
One hand capacious gliſtering veſſels bears
Reſplendent; t'other with a graſp ſecure;
A bottle (mighty charge)! upſtaid, full-fraught
With goodly wine. He, with extended hand
Rais'd high, pours forth his ſanguine frothy juice,
O'erſpread with bubbles, diſſipated ſoon:
We ſtrait to arms repair, experien'd chiefs;
Now glaſſes claſh with glaſſes (charming ſound!)
And glorious Anna's health, the firſt, the beſt,
Crowns the full glaſs;—at her inſpiring name,
The ſprightly wine reſults, and ſeems to ſmile;
With hearty zeal, and wiſh unanimous,
Her health we drink, and in her health our own.
A pauſe enſues; and now with grateful chat
W' improve the interval; and joyous mirth
Engages our rais'd ſouls, pat repartee,
Or witty joke our airy ſenſes moves
To pleaſant laughter; ſtraight the echoing room
With univerſal peals and ſhouts reſounds.
The royal Dane, bleſt conſort of the queen,
Next crowns the ruby'd nectar, all whoſe bliſs
In Anna's plac'd:—with ſympathetic flame,
And mutual endearments, all her joys,
Like the kind turtle's pure untainted love,
Centre in him, who ſhares the grateful hearts
Of loyal ſubjects with his ſovereign queen;
For by his prudent care, united ſhores
Were ſav'd from hoſtile fleets invaſion dire.
The hero Marlborough next, whoſe vaſt exploits
Fame's clarion ſounds; freſh laurels triumphs new,
We wiſh, like thoſe he won at Hochſtet's field.
Next Devonſhire illuſtrious, who from race
Of nobleſt patriots ſprang, whoſe worthy ſoul
Is with each fair and virtuous gift adorn'd.
That ſhone in his moſt worthy anceſtors:
For then diſtinct in ſeparate breaſts were ſeen
Virtues diſtinct, but all in him unite.
Prudent Godolphin, of the nation's weal
Frugal, but free and generous of his own,
Next crowns the bowl; with faithful Sunderland,
And Halifax, the muſes' darling ſon,
In whom conſpicuous, with full luſtre, ſhine
The ſureſt judgment, and the brighteſt wit,
Himſelf Mæcenas and a Flaccus too—
And all the worthies of the Britiſh realm,
In order rang'd, ſucceed; ſuch healths as tinge
The dulcet wine with a more charming guſt.
Now each his miſtreſs toaſts, by whoſe bright eye
He's fir'd; Coſmelia fair, or Dulcibel',
Or Sylvia, comely black, with jetty eyes
Piercing; or airy Celia, ſprightly maid!—
Inſenſibly thus flow unnumber'd hours;
Glaſs ſucceeds glaſs, till the Dircean god
Shines in our eyes, and with his fulgent rays
Enlightens our glad looks with lovely dye;
All blithe and jolly, that, like Arthur's knights,
Of rotund table, fam'd in old records,
Now moſt we ſeem'd—ſuch is the power of Wine.
Thus we the winged hours in harmleſs mirth
And joys unfully'd paſs, till humid night
Has half her race perform'd; now all abroad
Is huſh'd and ſilent, nor the rumbling noiſe
Of coach or cart, or ſmoky link-boy's call,
Is heard—but univerſal ſilence reigns:
When we in merry plight, airy and gay,

* The Devil-tavern, Temple-bar, frequented by his Grace.

Surpris'd to find the hours so swiftly fly,
With hasty knock, or twang of pendent cord,
Alarm the drowsy youth from slumbering nod;
Startled he flies, and stumbles o'er the stairs
Erroneous, and with busy knuckles plies
His yet clung eye-lids, and with staggering reel
Enters confus'd, and muttering asks our wills;
When we with liberal hand the score discharge,
And homeward each his course with steady step
Unerring steers, of cares and coin bereft.

THE LAMENTATION OF GLUMDALCLITCH

For the Loss of Grildrig *.

A PASTORAL.

Soon as Glumdalclitch miss'd her pleasing care,
She wept, she blubber'd, and she tore her hair.
No British miss sincerer grief has known,
Her squirrel missing, or her sparrow flown.
She furl'd her sampler, and haul'd in her thread,
And stuck her needle into Grildrig's bed;
Then spread her hands, and with a bounce let fall
Her baby, like the giant in Guildhall.
In peals of thunder now she roars, and now
She gently whimpers, like a lowing cow:
Yet lovely in her sorrow still appears;
Her locks dishevel'd, and her flood of tears,
Seem like the lofty barn of some rich swain,
When from the thatch drips fast a shower of rain.
In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse.
"Was it for this (she cry'd) with daily care
"Within thy reach I set the vinegar;
"And fill'd the cruet with the acid tide,
"While pepper-water worms thy bait supply'd,
"Where twin'd the silver eel around thy hook,
"And all the little monsters of the brook?
"Sure in that lake he dropt: My Grilly's drown'd."—
She dragg'd the cruet, but no Grildrig found.
"Vain is thy courage, Grilly, vain thy boast:
"But little creatures enterprise the most.
"Trembling, I've seen thee dare the kitten's paw,
"Nay, mix with children as they play'd at taw,
"Nor fear'd the marbles, as they bounding flew:
"Marbles to them, but rolling rocks to you.
"Why did I trust thee with that giddy youth!
"Who from a page can ever learn the truth?
"Vers'd in court-tricks, that money-loving boy
"To some lord's daughter sold the living toy;
"Or rent him limb from limb in cruel play,
"As children tear the wings of flies away.
"From place to place o'er Brobdingnag I'll roam,
"And never will return or bring thee home.
"But who hath eyes to trace the passing wind?
"How then thy fairy footsteps can I find?
"Dost thou bewilder'd wander all alone,
"In the green thicket of a mossy stone;
"Or, tumbled from the toadstool's slippery round,
"Perhaps, all maim'd, lie grovelling on the ground?
"Dost thou, imbosom'd in the lovely rose,
"Or sunk within the peach's down, repose?
"Within the king-cup if thy limbs are spread,
"Or in the golden cowslip's velvet head:
"O showme, Flora, 'midst those sweets, the flower,
"Where sleeps my Grildrig in his fragrant bower!
"But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves
"On little females, and on little loves;
"Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,
"The baby-playthings that adorn thy house,
"Doors, windows, chimneys, and the spacious rooms
"Equal in size to cells of honeycombs.
"Hast thou for these now ventur'd from the shore,
"Thy bark a bean-shell, and a straw thy oar?
"Or in thy box now bounding on the main?
"Shall I ne'er bear thyself and house again?
"And shall I set thee on my hand no more,
"To see thee leap the lines, and traverse o'er
"My spacious palm? of stature scarce a span,
"Mimic the actions of a real man?
"No more behold thee turn my watch's key,
"As seamen at a capstan anchors weigh? [tread,
"How wast thou wont to walk with cautious
"A dish of tea, like milk-pail on thy head!
"How chase the mite that bore thy cheese away,
"And keep the rolling maggot at a bay!"
She said; but broken accents stopt her voice,
Soft as the speaking trumpet's mellow noise.
She sobb'd a storm, and wip'd her flowing eyes,
Which seem'd like two broad suns in misty skies:—
O! squander not thy grief; those tears command
To weep upon our cod in Newfoundland:
The plenteous pickle shall preserve the fish,
And Europe taste thy sorrows in a dish.

* In Faulkener's edition, this poem is ascribed to Pope, and the Lilliputian Ode to Arbuthnot.

TO QUINBUS FLESTRIN,

The Man-Mountain.—A Lilliputian Ode.

I.

In amaze
Lost, I gaze.
Can our eyes
Reach thy size?
May my lays
Swell'd with praise,
Worthy thee!
Worthy me!
Muse, inspire
All thy fire!
Bards of old
Of him told,
When they said
Atlas' head
Propt the skies: [eyes!
See! and believe your

II.

See him stride
Valleys wide:
Over woods,
Over floods.
When he treads,
Mountains heads
Groan and shake:
Armies quake,
Lest his spurn
Overturn
Man and steed.
Troops, take heed!
Left and right
Speed your flight!
Lest an host
Beneath his foot be lost.

III.

Turn'd aside
From his hide,
Safe from wound
Darts rebound.
From his nose
Clouds he blows
When he speaks,
Thunder breaks!
When he eats,
Famine threats!
When he drinks,
Neptune shrinks!
Nigh thy ear,
In mid air,
On thy hand,
Let me stand,
So shall I
(I [illegible]

VERSES

To be placed under the Picture of SIR RICHARD BLAKMORE, England's Arch-poet, containing a complete Catalogue of his Works.

SEE who ne'er was nor will be half read:
Who firſt ſang (1) Arthur, then ſang (2) Alfred,
Prais'd great (3) Eliza in God's anger,
Till all true Engliſhmen cry'd, Hang her!
Made William's virtues wipe the bare a—
And hang'd up Marlborough in (4) arras;
Then, hiſs'd from earth, grew heavenly quite;
Made every reader curſe the (5) light:
Maul'd human wit in one thick (6) ſatire,
Next in three books ſpoil'd (7) human nature;
Undid (8) creation at a jirk,
And of (9) redemption made damn'd work.
Then took his muſe at once and dipt her
Full in the middle of the Scripture.
What wonders there the man, grown old, did?
Sternhold himſelf, he out-Sternholded,
Made (10) David ſeem ſo mad and freakiſh,
All thought him juſt what thought king Achiſh.
No mortal read his (11) Solomon,
But judg'd Re'boam his own ſon.
Moſes he ſerv'd as Moſes Pharoah,
And Deborah (12), as ſhe Siſe-rah:
Made (13) Jeremy full ſore to cry,
And (14) Job himſelf curſe God and die.
What puniſhment all this muſt follow?
Shall Arthur uſe him like King Tollo?
Shall David as Uriah ſlay him?
Or dext'rous Deborah Siſera-him?
Or ſhall Eliza lay a plot,
To treat him like her ſiſter Scot?
Shall William dub his better end *,
Or Marlborough ſerve him like a friend?
No!—none of theſe!—Heaven ſpare his life!
But ſend him, honeſt Job, thy wife!

A RECEIPT FOR STEWING VEAL.

WITH NOTES BY THE AUTHOR.

TAKE a knuckle of veal;
You may buy it or ſteal.
In a few pieces cut it:
In a ſtewing-pan put it.

Salt, pepper, and mace
Muſt ſeaſon this knuckle;
Then † when what's join'd to place
With other herbs muckle;
That which killed King ‡ Will.;
And what never ‖ ſtands ſtill.
Some § ſprigs of that bed
Where children are bred,
Which much you will mend, if
Both ſpinnage and endive,
And lettice, and beet,
With marigold meet.
Put no water at all,
For it maketh things ſmall,
Which, leſt it ſhould happen,
A cloſe cover clap on.
Put this pot of  Wood's metal
In a hot boiling kettle,
And there let it be
(Mark the doctrine I teach)
About—let me ſee—
Thrice as long as you preach ††;
So ſkimming the fat off.
Say grace with your hat off.
O, then, with what rapture
Will it fill dean and chapter!

(1) Two Heroic Poems, in folio, twenty books.
(2) Heroic Poem, in twelve books,
(3) Heroic Poem, in folio, ten books.
(4) Inſtructions to Vanderbank, a tapeſtry weaver.
(5) Hymn to the light.
(6) Satire againſt wit.
(7) Of the nature of man.
(8) Creation, a Poem, in ſeven books.
(9) Redemption, another Heroic Poem, in ſix books.
(10) Tranſlation of all the Pſalms.
(11) Canticles and Eccleſiaſtes.
(12) Paraphraſes of the Canticles of Moſes and Deborah, &c.
(13) The Lamentations.
(14) The whole Book of Job, a Poem.

* Kick him on the breech, not knight him on the ſhoulder.

† Vulgo, ſalary. ‡ Suppoſed ſorrel.
‖ This is, by Dr. Bently, thought to be time, or thyme.
§ Parſley. Vide Chamberlayne.
 Of this compoſition, ſee the works of the Copper-farthing Dean.
†† Which we ſuppoſe to be near four hours.

ACIS AND GALATEA,

A SERENATA.

The Muſic by Mr. Handel.

PART I.

[A rural proſpect, diverſified with rocks, groves, and a river. Acis and Galatea ſeated by a fountain. Chorus of nymphs and ſhepherds, diſtributed about the landſcape; and Polyphemus diſcovered ſitting upon a mountain.]

CHORUS.

O THE pleaſure of the plains!
Happy nymphs and happy ſwains
(Harmleſs, merry, free, and gay)
Dance and ſport the hours away.

For us the zephyr blows,
For us diſtils the dew,
For us unfolds the roſe,
And flowers diſplay their hue:

For us the winters rain;
For us the ſummers ſhine;
Spring ſwells for us the grain,
And autumn bleeds the vine.

Da Capo.

RECITATIVE.

Galatea.

Ye verdant plains, and woody mountains,
Purling ſtreams, and bubbling fountains,

Ye painted glories of the field,
Vain are the pleaſures which you yield;
Too thin the ſhadow of the grove,
Too faint the gales, to cool my love.

AIR.

Huſh, you pretty warbling choir,
Your thrilling ſtrains
Awake my pains,
And kindle fierce deſire:
Ceaſe your ſong, and take your flight;
Bring back my Acis to my ſight.

Da Capo.

AIR.

Acis.

Where ſhall I ſeek the charming fair?
Direct the way, kind genius of the mountains;
O tell me if you ſaw my dear;
Seeks ſhe the groves, or bathes in cryſtal fountains?

Da Capo.

RECITATIVE.

Damon.

Stay, ſhepherd, ſtay!
See how thy flocks in yonder valley ſtray.
What means this melancholy air?
No more thy tuneful pipe we hear.

AIR.

Shepherd, what art thou purſuing,
Heedleſs running to thy ruin?
Share our joy, our pleaſure ſhare:
Leave thy paſſion till to-morrow;
Let the day be free from ſorrow,
Free from love, and free from care.

Da Capo.

RECITATIVE.

Acis.

Lo here, my love!
Turn, Galatea, hither turn thine eyes;
See at thy feet the longing Acis lies.

AIR.

Love in her eyes ſits playing,
And ſheds delicious death;
Love in her lips is ſtraying,
And warbling in her breath:
Love on her breaſt ſits panting,
And ſwells with ſoft deſire;
Nor grace, nor charm, is wanting
To ſet the heart on fire.

RECITATIVE.

Galatea.

O! didſt thou know the pains of abſent love,
Acis would ne'er from Galatea rove.

AIR.

As when the dove
Laments his love,
All on the naked ſpray;
When he returns,
No more ſhe mourns,
But loves the live-long day.
Billing, cooing,
Panting, wooing,
Melting murmurs fill the grove;
Melting murmurs, laſting love.

DUET.

Acis and Galatea.

Happy we!
What joys I feel!—What charms I ſee!
Of all youths, thou deareſt boy!
Of all nymphs, thou brighteſt fair!
Thou all my bliſs, thou all my joy!

Da Capo.

CHORUS.

Happy we, &c.

PART II.

A Concerto on the Organ.

CHORUS.

Wretched lovers! fate has paſs'd
This ſad decree—no joy ſhall laſt.
Wretched lovers! quit your dream;
Behold the monſter Polypheme.
See what ample ſtrides he takes;
The mountain nods, the foreſt ſhakes;
The waves run frighten'd to the ſhores:
Hark, how the thundering giant roars!

RECITATIVE accompanied.

Polypheme.

I rage, I melt, I burn,
The feeble god has ſtabb'd me to the heart.
Thou truſty pine,
Prop of my godlike ſteps, I lay thee by.
Bring me a hundred reads, of decent growth,
To make a pipe for my capacious mouth;
In ſoft enchanting accents let me breathe
Sweet Galatea's beauty, and my love.

AIR.

O ruddier than the cherry!
O ſweeter than the berry!
O nymph more bright
Than moon-ſhine night,
Like kidlings blithe and merry!
Ripe as the melting cluſter!
No lily has ſuch luſtre;
Yet hard to tame
As raging flame,
And fierce as ſtorms that bluſter!

Da Capo.

RECITATIVE.

Polyphemus, Galatea.

Poly. Whither, faireſt, art thou running,
Still my warm embraces ſhunning?

Gal. The lion calls not to his prey;
Nor bids the wolf the lambkin ſtay.

Poly. Thee Polyphemus, great as Jove,
Calls to empire, and to love:
To his palace in the rock,
To his dairy, to his flock;
To the grape of purple hue,
To the plum of gloſſy blue;
Wildings which expecting ſtand,
Proud to be gather'd by thy hand.

Gal. Of infant-limbs to make my food,
And ſwill full draughts of human blood!
Go, monſter! bid ſome other gueſt:
I lothe the hoſt; I lothe the feaſt.

AIR.

Polyphemus.

Ceaſe to beauty to be ſuing:
Ever whining love diſdaining,
Let the brave, their aims purſuing,
Still be conquering, not complaining.

Da Capo.

AIR.

Damon.

Would you gain the tender creature?
Softly, gently, kindly treat her:
Suffering is the lover's part:
Beauty by conſtraint poſſeſſing,
You enjoy but half the bleſſing,
Lifeleſs charms without the heart.

Da Capo.

RECITATIVE.

Acis.

His hideous love provokes my rage;
Weak as I am, I muſt engage:
Inſpir'd with thy victorious charms,
The god of love will lend his arms.

AIR.

Love ſounds th' alarm,
And fear is a flying:
When beauty's the prize,
What mortal fears dying?
In defence of my treaſure,
I'd bleed at each vein:
Without her no pleaſure;
For life is a pain.

Da Capo.

AIR.

Damon.

Conſider, fond ſhepherd,
How fleeting's the pleaſure.
That flatters our hopes
In purſuit of the fair:
The joys that attend it,
By moments we meaſure;
But life is too little
To meaſure our care.

Da Capo.

RECITATIVE.

Galatea.

Ceaſe, O ceaſe, thou gentle youth;
Truſt my conſtancy and truth;
Truſt my truth, and powers above,
The powers propitious ſtill to love.

TRIO.

Acis, Galatea, and Polypheme.

Acis and Gal. The flocks ſhall leave the mountains,
The woods the turtle-dove,
The nymphs forſake the fountains,
Ere I forſake my love.

Poly. Torture! fury! rage! deſpair!
I cannot, cannot, cannot bear.

Acis and Gal. Not ſhowers to larks ſo pleaſing,
Nor ſun-ſhine to the bee;
Not ſleep to toil ſo eaſing,
As theſe dear ſmiles to me.

Poly. Fly ſwift, thou maſſy ruin, fly:
Die, preſumptuous Acis, die.

RECITATIVE.

Acis.

Help, Galatea! help, ye parent gods!
And take me dying to your deep abodes!

CHORUS.

Mourn, all ye muſes; weep, ye ſwains;
Tune, tune your reeds to doleful ſtrains;
Groans, cries, and howlings, fill the neighbouring ſhore,
Ah!—the gentle Acis is no more.

SONG AND CHORUS.

Galatea.

Muſt I my Acis ſtill bemoan,
Inglorious cruſh'd beneath that ſtone?
Muſt the lovely charming youth
Die for his conſtancy and truth?
Say, what comfort can you find?
For dark deſpair o'erclouds my mind.

CHORUS.

Ceaſe, Galatea, ceaſe to grieve;
Bewail not, when thou canſt relieve:
Call forth thy power, employ thy art;
The goddeſs ſoon can heal thy ſmart:
To kindred gods the youth return,
Through verdant plains to roll his urn.

RECITATIVE.

Galatea.

'Tis done: thus I exert my power divine;
Be thou immortal, though thou art not mine.

AIR.

Heart, thou ſeat of ſoft delight!
Be thou now a fountain bright;
Purple be no more thy blood,
Glide thou like a cryſtal flood;
Rock, thy hollow womb diſcloſe:
The bubbling fountain, lo! it flows.
Through the plains he joys to rove,
Murmuring ſtill his gentle love.

CHORUS.

Galatea, dry thy tears:
Acis now a god appears.
See how he rears him from his bed;
See the wreath that binds his head.
Hail! thou gentle murmuring ſtream,
Shepherds' pleaſure, muſes' theme;
Through the plain ſtill joy to rove,
Murmuring ſtill thy gentle love.

TRANSLATIONS.

THE STORY OF ACHELOUS AND HERCULES.

FROM OVID'S METAMORPHOSES. BOOK IX.

The Argument.

Theſeus, returning from a great hunting-match in Calydon, is ſtopped from proceeding by the overflowing of the river Acheloüs. The god of the ſtream courteouſly invites him into his cave, where they paſs the time in diſcourſing of various metamorphoſes. At laſt, to prove the poſſibility of ſuch changes, he aſſerts that he has himſelf the power of varying his form within certain limitations, among which he mentions his having loſt one of his horns when in the ſhape of a bull; and this gives riſe to the following ſtory.

THESEUS requeſts the god to tell his woes,
Whence his maim'd brow, and whence his groans aroſe;
When thus the Calydonian ſtream reply'd,
With twining reeds his careleſs treſſes tied:
" Ungrateful is the tale; for who can bear,
" When conquer'd, to rehearſe the ſhameful war?
" Yet I'll the melancholy ſtory trace;
" So great a conqueror ſoftens the diſgrace;
" Nor was it ſtill ſo mean the prize to yield,
" As great and glorious to diſpute the field.
" Perhaps you've heard of Deïanira's name,
" For all the country ſpoke her beauty's fame.
" Long was the nymph by numerous ſuitors woo'd,
" Each with addreſs his envy'd hopes purſued:
" I join'd the loving band; to gain the fair,
" Reveal'd my paſſion to her father's ear.
" Their vain pretenſions all the reſt reſign;
" Alcides only ſtrove to equal mine:
" He boaſts his birth from Jove, recounts his ſpoils,
" His ſtep-dame's hate ſubdued, and finiſh'd toils.
" Can mortals then (ſaid I) with gods compare?
" Behold a god; mine is the watery care:
" Through your wide realms I take my mazy way,
" Branch into ſtreams, and o'er the region ſtray:
" No foreign gueſt your daughter's charms adores,
" But one who riſes in your native ſhores.
" Let not his puniſhment your pity move;
" Is Juno's hate an argument for love?
" Though you your life from fair Alcmena drew,
" Jove's a feign'd father, or by fraud a true.
" Chooſe then; confeſs thy mother's honour loſt,
" Or thy deſcent from Jove no longer boaſt."
While thus I ſpoke, he look'd with ſtern diſdain,
Nor could the ſallies of his wrath reſtrain,
Which thus broke forth: " This arm decides our right: [fight!"
" Vanquiſh'd in words; he mine the prize in
" Bold he ruſh'd on. My honour to maintain,
" I fling my verdant garments on the plain,
" My arms ſtretch forth, my pliant limbs prepare,
" And with bent hands expect the furious war.
" O'er my ſleek ſkin now gather'd duſt he throws,
" And yellow ſand his mighty muſcles ſtrows.
" Oft' he my neck and nimble legs aſſails,
" He ſeems to graſp me, but as often fails:
" Each part he now invades with eager hand;
" Safe in my bulk, immoveable I ſtand.
" So when loud ſtorms breaks high, and foam and roar
" Againſt ſome mole that ſtretches from the ſhore;
" The firm foundation laſting tempeſts braves,
" Defies the warring winds, and driving waves.
" Awhile we breathe, then forward ruſh amain,
" Renew the combat, and our ground maintain;
" Foot ſtrove with foot, I prone extend my breaſt,
" Hands war with hands, and forehead forehead preſs'd.
" Thus have I ſeen two furious bulls engage,
" Inflam'd with equal love, and equal rage;
" Each claims the faireſt heifer of the grove,
" And conqueſt only can decide their love:
" The trembling herds ſurvey the fight from far,
" Till victory decides th' important war.
" Three times in vain he ſtrove my joints to wreſt;
" To force my hold, and throw me from his breaſt;
" The fourth he broke my gripe, that claſp'd him round.
" Then with new force he ſtretch'd me on the ground;
" Cloſe to my back the mighty burden clung,
" As if a mountain o'er my limbs were flung.
" Believe my tale; nor do I, boaſtful aim
" By feign'd narration to extol my fame.
" No ſooner from his graſp I freedom get,
" Unlock my arms, that flow'd with trickling ſweat,
" But quick he ſeiz'd me, and renew'd the ſtrife,
" As my exhauſted boſom pants for life;
" My neck he gripes, my knee to earth he ſtrains;
" I fall, and bite the ſand with ſhame and pains.

" O'er-match'd in ſtrength, to wiles and arts I take,
" And ſlip his hold, in form of ſpeckled ſnake;
" Who, when I wreath'd in ſpires my body round,
" Or ſhow'd my forky-tongue with hiſſing ſound,
" Smiles at my threats. Such foes my cradle knew,
" He cries; dire ſnakes my infant hand o'erthrew;
" A dragon's form might other conqueſts gain;
" To war with me you take that ſhape in vain.
" Art thou proportion'd to the Hydra's length,
" Who by his wounds receiv'd augmented ſtrength?
" He rais'd a hundred hiſſing heads in air;
" When one I lopp'd, up ſprung a dreadful pair.
" By his wounds fertile, and with ſlaughter ſtrong,
" Singly I quell'd him, and ſtretch'd dead along.
" What canſt thou do, a form precarious, prone,
" To rouſe my rage with terrors not thy own?"
" He ſaid; and round my neck his hands he caſt,
" And with his ſtraining fingers wrung me faſt:
" My throat he tortur'd, cloſe as pincers claſp,
" In vain I ſtrove to looſe the forceful graſp.
" Thus vanquiſh'd too, a third form ſtill remains,
" Chang'd to a bull, my lowing fills the plains.
" Straight on the left his nervous arms were thrown
" Upon my brindled neck, and tugg'd it down;
" Then deep he ſtruck my horn into the ſand,
" And fell'd my bulk along the duſty land.
" Nor yet his fury cool'd; 'twixt rage and ſcorn,
" From my maim'd front he tore the ſtubborn horn;
" This, heap'd with flowers and fruits, the Naiads
" Sacred to plenty, and the bounteous year."

He ſpoke; when lo! a beauteous nymph appears,
Girt, like Diana's train, with flowing hairs;
The horn ſhe brings, in which all autumn's ſtor'd,
And ruddy apples for the ſecond board.

Now morn begins to dawn, the ſun's bright fire
Gilds the high mountains, and the youths retire;
Nor ſtay'd they, till the troubled ſtream ſubſides,
And in its bound with peaceful current glides.
But Acheloüs in his oozy bed
Deep hides his brow deform'd, and ruſtic head:
No real wound the victor's triumph ſhow'd,
But his loſt honours griev'd the watery god;
Yet ev'n that loſs the willow's leaves o'erſpread,
And verdant reeds, in garlands, bind his head.

The Death of Neſſus the Centaur.

This virgin too, thy love, O Neſſus, found,
To her alone you owe the fatal wound.
As the ſtrong ſon of Jove his bride conveys,
Where his paternal lands their bulwarks raiſe;
Where from her ſlopy urn Evenus pours
Her rapid current, ſwell'd by wintery ſhowers,
He came. The frequent eddies whirl'd the tide,
And the deep rolling waves all paſs deny'd.
As for himſelf, he ſtood unmov'd by fears,
For now his bridal charge employ'd his cares.
The ſtrong-limb'd Neſſus thus officious cry'd
(For he the ſhallows of the ſtream had try'd),
Swim thou, Alcides, all thy ſtrength prepare;
On yonder bank I'll lodge thy nuptial care.
Th' Aonian chief to Neſſus truſts his wife,
All pale, and trembling for her hero's life;
Cloth'd as he ſtood in the fierce lion's hide,
The laden quiver o'er his ſhoulder ty'd
(For croſs the ſtream his bow and club were caſt);
Swift he plung'd in; theſe billows ſhall be paſs'd.
He ſaid, nor ſought where ſmoother waters glide,
But ſtemm'd the rapid dangers of the tide.
The bank he reach'd: again the bow he bears;
When, hark! his bride's known voice alarms his ears.
Neſſus, to thee I call (aloud he cries);
Vain is thy truſt in flight, be timely wiſe:
Thou monſter double-ſhap'd, my right ſet free:
If thou no reverence owe my fame and me,
Yet kindred ſhould thy lawleſs luſt deny.
Think not, perfidious wretch, from me to fly,
Though wing'd with horſe's ſpeed; wounds ſhall purſue;
Swift as his words the fatal arrow flew:
The Centaur's back admits the feather'd wood,
And through his breaſt the barbed weapon ſtood;
Which when, in anguiſh, through the fleſh he tore,
From both the wounds guſh'd forth the ſpumy gore
Mix'd with Lernæon venom; this he took,
Nor dire revenge his dying breaſt forſook.
His garment, in the reeking purple dy'd,
To rouſe love's paſſion, he preſents the bride.

The Death of Hercules.

Now a long interval of time ſucceeds,
When the great ſon of Jove's immortal deeds,
And ſtepdame's hate, had fill'd earth's utmoſt round;
He from Oechalia, with new laurels crown'd,
In triumph was return'd. He rites prepares,
And to the king of gods directs his prayers,
When Fame (who falſehood clothes in truth's diſguiſe,
And ſwells her little bulk with growing lies)
Thy tender ear, O Deïanira, mov'd,
That Hercules the fair Iole lov'd,
Her love believes the tale; the truth ſhe fears
Of his new paſſion, and gives way to tears.
The flowing tears diffus'd her wretched grief,
Why ſeek I thus, from ſtreaming eyes, relief?
She cries; indulge not thus theſe fruitleſs cares,
The harlot will but triumph in thy tears:
Let ſomething be reſolv'd, while yet there's time;
My bed not conſcious of a rival's crime.
In ſilence ſhall I mourn, or loud complain?
Shall I ſeek Calydon, or here remain?
What though, ally'd to Meleager's fame,
I boaſt the honours of a ſiſter's name?
My wrongs, perhaps, now urge me to purſue
Some deſperate deed, by which the world ſhall view
How far revenge and woman's rage can riſe,
When weltering in her blood the harlot dies.
Thus various paſſions rul'd by turns her breaſt.
She now reſolves to ſend the fatal veſt, [move
Dy'd with Lernæan gore, whoſe power might
His ſoul anew, and rouſe declining love.
Nor knew ſhe what her ſudden rage beſtows,
When ſhe to Lichas truſts her future woes;
With ſoft endearments ſhe the boy commands
To bear the garment to her huſband's hands.

Th' unwitting hero takes the gift in haſte,
And o'er his ſhoulders Lerna's poiſon caſt.
As firſt the fire with frankincenſe he ſtrows,
And utters to the gods his holy vows;
And on the marble altar's poliſh'd frame
Pours forth the grapy ſtream; the riſing flame
Sudden diſſolves the ſubtle poiſonous juice,
Which taints his blood, and all his nerves bedews.
With wonted fortitude he bore the ſmart,
And not a groan confeſs'd his burning heart.
At length his patience was ſubdued by pain,
He rends the ſacred altar from the plain;
Oete's wide foreſts echo with his cries!
Now to rip off the deathful robe he tries.
Where'er he plucks the veſt, the ſkin he tears,
The mangled muſcles and huge bones he bares,
(A ghaſtly ſight!) or, raging with his pain,
To rend the ſticking plague he tugs in vain.
As the red iron hiſſes in the flood,
So boils the venom in his curdling blood.
Now with the greedy flame his entrails glow,
And livid ſweats down all his body flow;
The cracking nerves burnt up are burſt in twain,
The lurking venom melts his ſwimming brain.
Then, lifting both his hands aloft, he cries,
Glut thy revenge, dread empreſs of the ſkies;
Sate with my death the rancour of thy heart,
Look down with pleaſure, and enjoy my ſmart.
Or, if e'er pity mov'd a hoſtile breaſt
(For here I ſtand thy enemy profeſt),
Take hence this hateful life, with tortures torn,
Inur'd to trouble, and to labours born.
Death is the gift moſt welcome to my woe,
And ſuch a gift a ſtepdame may beſtow.
Was it for this Buſiris was ſubdued, [blood?
Whoſe barbarous temples reek'd with ſtrangers'
Preſs'd in theſe arms, his fate Antæus found,
Nor gain'd recruited vigour from the ground.
Did I not triple-form'd Geryon fell?
Or did I fear the triple dog of hell?
Did not theſe hands the bull's arm'd forehead hold?
Are not our mighty toils in Elis told?
Did not Stymphalian lakes proclaim my fame?
And fair Parthenian woods reſound my name?
Who ſeiz'd the golden belt of Thermodon?
And who the dragon-guarded apples won?
Could the fierce Centaur's ſtrength my force withſtand;
Or the fell boar that ſpoil'd th' Arcadian land?
Did not theſe arms the Hydra's rage ſubdue,
Who from his wounds to double fury grew?
What if the Thracian horſes, fat with gore,
Who human bodies in their mangers tore,
I ſaw, and with their barbarous lord o'erthrew?
What if theſe hands Nemæa's lion ſlew?
Did not this neck the heavenly globe ſuſtain?—
The female partner of the thunderer's reign,
Fatigu'd, at length ſuſpends her harſh commands;
Yet no fatigue hath ſlack'd theſe valiant hands.
But now new plagues purſue me; neither force,
Nor arms, nor darts, can ſtop their raging courſe.
Devouring flame through my rack'd entrails ſtrays,
And on my lungs and ſhrivell'd muſcles preys;
Yet ſtill Euryſtheus breathes the vital air!
What mortal now ſhall ſeek the gods with prayer?

The Transformation of Lychas into a Rock.

The hero ſaid; and, with the torture ſtung,
Furious o'er Oete's lofty hills he ſprung:
Stuck with the ſhaft, thus ſcours the tiger round,
And ſeeks the flying author of his wound.
Now might you ſee him trembling, now he vents
His anguiſh'd ſoul in groans and loud laments;
He ſtrives to tear the clinging veſt in vain,
And with up-rooted foreſts ſtrews the plain;
Now, kindling into rage, his hands he rears,
And to his kindred gods directs his prayers.
When Lychas, lo, he ſpies, who trembling flew,
And, in a hollow rock conceal'd from view,
Had ſhunn'd his wrath. Now grief renew'd his pain,
His madneſs chaf'd, and thus he raves again:
Lychas, to thee alone my fate I owe;
Who bore the gift, the cauſe of all my woe.
The youth all pale with ſhivering fear was ſtung,
And vain excuſes faulter'd on his tongue.
Alcides ſnatch'd him, as with ſuppliant face
He ſtrove to claſp his knees, and beg for grace.
He toſs'd him o'er his head with airy courſe,
And hurl'd with more than with an engine's force;
Far o'er th' Eubœan main aloft he flies,
And hardens by degrees amid the ſkies.
So ſhowery drops, when chilly tempeſts blow,
Thicken at firſt, then whiten into ſnow;
In balls congeal'd the rolling fleeces bound,
In ſolid hail reſult upon the ground.
Thus, whirl'd with nervous force through diſtant air,
The purple tide forſook his veins with fear;
All moiſture left his limbs. Transform'd to ſtone,
In ancient days the craggy flint was known:
Still in th' Eubœan waves his front he rears,
Still the ſmall rock in human form appears,
And ſtill the name of hapleſs Lychas bears.

The Apotheoſis of Hercules.

But now the hero of immortal birth
Fells Oete's foreſts on the groaning earth;
A pile he builds; to Philoctetes' care
He leaves his deathful inſtruments of war;
To him commits thoſe arrows, which again
Muſt ſee the bulwarks of the Trojan reign.
The ſon of Pæan lights the lofty pyre,
High round the ſtructure climbs the greedy fire;
Plac'd on the top, thy nervous ſhoulders ſpread
With the Nemæan ſpoils thy careleſs head;
Rais'd on the knotty club, with look divine;
Here thou, dread hero of celeſtial line,
Waſt ſtretch'd at eaſe; as when, a cheerful gueſt,
Wine crown'd thy bowls, and flowers thy temples dreſt.
Now on all ſides the potent flames aſpire,
And crackle round thoſe limbs that mock the fire.
A ſudden tremor ſeiz'd th' immortal hoſt,
Who thought the world's profeſt defender loſt.
This when the thunderer ſaw, with ſmiles he cries,
'Tis from your fears, ye gods, my pleaſures riſe;
Joy ſwells my breaſt, that my all ruling hand
O'er ſuch a grateful people boaſts command,

That you my suffering progeny would aid;
Though to his deeds this just respect be paid,
Me you've oblig'd. Be all your fears forborn,
Th' Oetean fires do thou, great hero, scorn.
Who vanquish'd all things, shall subdue the flame.
That part alone of gross maternal frame
Fire shall devour; while what from me he drew
Shall live immortal, and its force subdue;
That, when he's dead, I'll raise to realms above;
May all the powers the righteous act approve!
If any god dissent, and judge too great
The sacred honours of the heavenly seat,
Ev'n he shall own, his deeds deserve the sky,
Ev'n he, reluctant, shall at length comply.
Th' assembled powers assent. No frown till now
Had mark'd with passion vengeful Juno's brow.
Mean while whate'er was in the power of flame
Was all consum'd, his body's nervous frame
No more was known;—of human form bereft,
Th' eternal part of Jove alone was left.
As an old serpent casts his scaly vest,
Wreathes in the sun, in youthful glory dress;
So when Alcides mortal mould resign'd,
His better part enlarg'd, and grew refin'd,
August his visage shone; almighty Jove
In his swift car his honour'd offspring drove;
High o'er the hollow clouds the courscrs fly,
And lodge the hero in the starry sky.

The Transformation of Galanthis.

Atlas perceiv'd the load of heaven's new guest.
Revenge still rancour'd in Eurystheus' breast
Against Alcides' race. Alcmena goes
To Iole, to vent maternal woes;
Here she pours forth her grief, recounts the spoils
Her son had bravely reap'd in glorious toils.
This Iole, by Hercules' commands,
Hyllus had lov'd, and join'd in nuptial bands.
Her swelling womb the teeming birth confess'd;—
To whom Alcmena thus her speech address'd:
O may the gods protect thee, in that hour,
When 'midst thy throes thou call'st th' Ilithyan
May no delays prolong thy racking pain, [power!
As when I sued for Juno's aid in vain!
When now Alcides' mighty birth drew nigh,
And the tenth sign roll'd forward on the sky,
My womb extends with such a mighty load,
As Jove the parent of the burden show'd.
I could no more th' increasing smart sustain:
My horror kindles to recount the pain;
Cold chills my limbs while I the tale pursue,
And now methinks I feel my pangs anew.
Seven days and nights amidst incessant throes,
Fatigued with ills I lay, nor knew repose;
When lifting high my hands, in shrieks I pray'd,
Implor'd the gods, and call'd Lucina's aid.
She came, but prejudic'd to give my fate
A sacrifice to vengeful Juno's hate.
She hears the groaning anguish of my fits,
And on the altar at my door she sits;
O'er her left knee her crossing leg she cast,
Then knits her fingers close, and wrings them fast:
This stay'd the birth; in muttering verse she pray'd,
The muttering verse th' unfinish'd birth delay'd.
Now with fierce struggles, raging with my pain,
At Jove's ingratitude I rave in vain.
How did I wish for death! such groans I sent,
As might have made the flinty heart relent.
Now the Gadmeian matrons round me press,
Offer their vows, and seek to bring redress.
Among the Theban dames Galanthis stands,
Strong-limb'd, red-hair'd, and just to my commands:
She first perceiv'd that all these racking woes
From the persisting hate of Juno rose.
As here and there she pass'd, by chance she sees
The seated goddess; on her close-press'd knees
Her fast-knit hands she leans: with cheerful voice
Galanthis cries, Whoe'er thou art, rejoice;
Congratulate the dame, she lies at rest,
At length the gods Alcmena's womb have blest.
Swift from her seat the startled goddess springs,
No more conceal'd, her hands abroad she flings;
The charm unloos'd, the birth my pangs reliev'd;
Galanthis' laughter vex'd the power deceiv'd.
Fame says, the goddess dragg'd the laughing maid
Fast by the hair; in vain her force essay'd
Her groveling body from the ground to rear;
Chang'd to fore feet her shrinking arms appear;
Her hairy back her former hue retains,
The form alone is lost; her strength remains;
Who, since the lie did from her mouth proceed,
Shall from her pregnant mouth bring forth her breed;
Nor shall she quit her long-frequented home,
But haunt those houses where she lov'd to roam.

The Story of Iolaüs Restored to Youth.

ARGUMENT.

Iolé having related the fable of her sister Dryope, who was changed into a tree for violating the blossoms of the plant Lotis (once a nymph); while she is discoursing on these matters with Alcmena, she finds new matter of wonder, in the sudden change of Ioalüs to a youth.

While Iolé the fatal change declares,
Alcmena's pitying hand oft wip'd her tears. [flies,
Grief too stream'd down her cheeks; soon sorrow
And rising joy the trickling moisture dries:
Lo Iolaüs stands before their eyes.
A youth he stood; and the soft down began
O'er his smooth chin to spread, and promise man:
Hebe submitted to her husband's prayers,
Instill'd new vigour, and restor'd his years.

The Prophesy of Themis.

Now from her lips a solemn oath had pass'd,
That Iolaüs the gift alone should taste,
Had not just Themis thus maturely said
(Which check'd her vow, and aw'd the blooming maid):
Thebes is embroil'd in war. Capaneus stands
Invincible; but by the thunderer's hands
Ambition shall the guilty * brothers fire,
Both rush to mutual wounds, and both expire:

* Eteocles and Polynices.

The reeling earth shall ope her gloomy womb,
Where the * yet breathing bard shall find his tomb.—
The † son shall bathe his hands in parent's blood,
And in one act be both unjust and good.
Of home and sense depriv'd, where'er he flies,
The furies and his mother's ghost he spies.
His wife the fatal bracelet shall implore,
And Phegeus stain his sword in kindred gore.
Callirhoe shall then with suppliant prayer
Prevail on Jupiter's relenting ear.
Jove shall with youth her infant sons inspire,
And bid their bosoms glow with manly fire.

The Debate of the Gods.

When Themis thus with prescient voice had spoke
Among the gods a various murmur broke;
Dissension rose in each immortal breast,
That one should grant what was deny'd the rest.
Aurora for her aged spouse complains,
And Ceres grieves for Jason's freezing veins;
Vulcan would Erichthonius' years renew;
Her future race the care of Venus drew,
She would Anchises' blooming age restore;
A different care employ'd each heavenly power.
Thus various interests did their jars increase,
Till Jove arose;—he spoke, their tumults cease.
—Is any reverence to our presence given?
Then why this discord 'mong the powers of heaven?
Who can the settled will of Fate subdue?
'Twas by the fates that Iolaüs knew
A second youth. The fates' determin'd doom
Shall give Callirhoe's race a youthful bloom.
Arms nor ambition can this power obtain:
Quell your desires; even me the fates restrain.
Could I their will controul, no rolling years
Had Æacus bent down with silver hairs;
Then Rhadamanthus still had youth possess'd,
And Minos with eternal bloom been bless'd.
Jove's words the synod mov'd; the power give o'er,
And urge in vain unjust complaint no more.
Since Rhadamanthus' veins now slowly flow'd,
And Æacus and Minos bore the load;
Minos, who, in the flower of youth and fame,
Made mighty nations tremble at his name,
Infirm with age, the proud Miletus fears,
Vain of his birth, and in the strength of years;
And now, regarding all his realms as lost,
He durst not force him from his native coast.
But you by choice, Miletus, fled his reign,
And your swift vessel plow'd th' Ægean main;
On Asiatic shores a town you frame,
Which still is honour'd with the founder's name.
Here you Cyanëe knew, the beauteous maid,
As on her father's winding banks she stray'd:
Caunus and Byblis hence their lineage trace,
The double offspring of your warm embrace.

* Amphiaraus.
† Alcmæon.

The Story of Arachne,

FROM THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH BOOK OF OVID'S METAMORPHOSES.

ARGUMENT.

Pallas, visiting the muses on their hill to see the fountain Hippocrene, is by them informed how the Pierides were changed into chattering pies for rivaling the nine sisters in song.—This stimulating the goddess to take vengeance on Arachne, the daughter of Idmon, who defied her in her own art, gives rise to the following story.

Pallas, attentive, heard the muses' song,
Pleas'd that so well they had reveng'd their wrong;
Reflecting thus—A vulgar soul can praise,
My fame let glorious emulation raise:
Swift vengeance shall pursue th' audacious pride
That dares my sacred deity deride:
Revenge the goddess in her breast revolves;
And, straight the bold Arachne's fate resolves;
Her haughty mind to Heaven disdain'd to bend,
And durst with Pallas in her art contend.
No famous town she boasts, or noble name;
But to her skilful hand owes all her fame;
Idmon her father on his trade rely'd,
And thirsty wool in purple juices dy'd;
Her mother, whom the shades of death confine,
Was, like her husband, born of vulgar line.
At small Hypæpe though she did reside,
Yet industry proclaim'd what birth deny'd:
All Lydia to her name due honour pays,
And every city speaks Arachne's praise.
Nymphs of Timolus quit their shady woods,
Nymphs of Pactolus leave their golden floods,
And oft with pleasure round her gazing stand,
Admire her work, and praise her artful hand:
They view'd each motion, with new wonder seiz'd;
More than the work her graceful manner pleas'd.
Whether raw wool in its first orbs she wound,
Or with swift fingers twirl'd the spindle round;
Whether she pick'd with care the knotty piece,
Or comb'd like streaky clouds the stretching fleece;
Whether her needle play'd the pencil's part;
'Twas plain from Pallas she deriv'd her art.
But she, unable to sustain her pride,
The very mistress of her art defy'd.—
Pallas obscures her bright celestial grace,
And takes an old decrepit beldame's face.
Her head is scatter'd o'er with silver hairs,
Which seems to bend beneath a load of years.
Her trembling hand, embos's'd with livid veins,
On trusty staff her feeble limbs sustains.
She thus accosts the nymph: "Be timely wise,
"Do not the wholesome words of age despise,
"For in the hoary head experience lies:
"On earth contend the greatest name to gain;
"To Pallas yield;—with Heaven you strive in "vain."
Contempt contracts her brow, her passions rise,
Wrath and disdain enflame her rolling eyes:
At once the tangling thread away she throws,
And scarce can curb her threatening hands from blows.

" Worn out with age, and by diſeaſe declin'd,
" (She cries) thy carcaſe has ſurviv'd thy mind;
" Theſe lectures might thy ſervile daughters move,
" And wary doctrines for thy nieces prove:
" My counſel 's from myſelf, my will commands,
" And my firſt reſolution always ſtands:
" Let her contend; or does her fear impart
" That conqueſt waits on my ſuperior art?"
The goddeſs ſtraight throws off her old diſguiſe,
And heavenly beauty ſparkles in her eyes,
A youthful bloom fills up each wrinkled trace,
And Pallas ſmiles with every wonted grace.
The nymphs ſurpris'd, the Deity adore,
And Lydian dames confeſs her matchleſs power;
The rival maid alone unmov'd remains,
Yet a ſwift bluſh her guilty feature ſtains;
In her unwilling cheek the crimſon glows,
And her check'd pride a ſhort confuſion knows.
So when Aurora firſt unveils her eyes,
A purple dawn inveſts the bluſhing ſkies;
But ſoon bright Phœbus gains th' horizon's height,
And gilds the hemiſphere with ſpreading light.
Deſire of conqueſt ſways the giddy maid,
To certain ruin by vain hopes betray'd:
The goddeſs with her ſtubborn will comply'd,
And deign'd by trial to convince her pride.
Both take their ſtations, and the piece prepare,
And order every ſlender thread with care.
The web enwraps the beam; the reed divides,
While through the widening ſpace the ſhuttle glides,
Which their ſwift hands receive; then, pois'd with lead, [thread.
The ſwinging weight ſtrikes cloſe th' inſerted
They gird their flowing garments round the waiſt,
And ply their feet and arms with dext'rous haſte.
Here each inweaves the richeſt Tyrian dye,
There fainter ſhades in ſoften'd order lie;
Such various mixtures in the texture ſhine,
Set off the work, and brighten each deſign.
As when the ſun his piercing rays extends, [cends,
When from thin clouds ſome driſling ſhower deſ-
We ſee the ſpacious humid arch appear,
Whoſe tranſient colours paint the ſplendid air:
By ſuch degrees the deepening ſhadows riſe
As pleaſingly deceive our dazzled eyes;
And though the ſame th' adjoining colour ſeems,
Yet hues of different natures dye th' extremes.
Here heightening gold they 'midſt the woof diſpoſe,
And in the web this antique ſtory roſe.
Pallas the lofty mount of Mars deſigns,
Celeſtial judgment guides th' unerring lines;
Here, in juſt view, th' Athenian ſtructures ſtand,
And there the gods contend to name the land;
Twelves deities ſhe frames with ſtately mien,
And in the midſt ſuperior Jove is ſeen;
A glowing warmth the blended colours give,
The figures in the picture ſeem to live.
Heaven's thundering monarch ſits with awful grace,
And dread omnipotence imprints his face;
There Neptune ſtood, diſdainfully he frown'd,
And with his trident ſmote the trembling ground;
The parting rocks a ſpacious chaſm diſcloſe,
From whence a fiery, prancing ſteed aroſe;
And on that uſeful gift he founds his claim,
To grace the city with his honour'd name.
See her own figure next with martial air,
A ſhining helmet decks her flowing hair;
Her thoughtful breaſt her well-pois'd ſhield defends,
And her bare arm a glittering ſpear extends,
With which ſhe wounds the plain; from thence aroſe
A ſpreading tree; green olives load the boughs.
The powers her gift behold with wandering eyes,
And to the goddeſs give the rightful prize.
Such mercy checks her wrath, that, to diſſuade
By others fate the too preſumptuous maid,
With miniatures ſhe fills each corner ſpace,
To curb her pride, and ſave her from diſgrace.
Hæmus and Rhodope in this ſhe wrought,
The beauteous colours ſpoke her lively thought!
With arrogance and fierce ambition fir'd,
They to the ſacred names of gods aſpir'd;
To mountains chang'd, their lofty heads ariſe,
And loſe their leſſening ſummits in the ſkies.
In that, in all the ſtrength of art was ſeen
The wretched fate of the Pygmæan queen;
Juno, enrag'd, reſents th' audacious aim,
And to a crane transforms the vanquiſh'd dame;
In that voracious ſhape ſhe ſtill appears,
And plagues her people with perpetual wars.
In this, Antigone for beauty ſtrove
With the bright conſort of imperial Jove;
Juno, incens'd, her royal power diſplay'd,
And to a bird converts the haughty maid.
Laomedon his daughter's fate bewails,
Nor his, nor Ilion's fervent prayer prevails,
But on her lovely ſkin white feathers riſe;
Chang'd to a clamorous ſtork, ſhe mounts the ſkies.
In the remaining orb, the heavenly maid
The tale of childleſs Cynaras diſplay'd;
A ſettled anguiſh in his look appears,
And from his bloodſhot eyes flow ſtreams of tears;
On the cold ground, no more a father, thrown,
He for his daughters claſp'd the poliſh'd ſtone.
And, when he ſought to hold their wonted charms,
The temple's ſteps deceiv'd his eager arms.
Wreathes of green olive round the border twine,
And her own tree encloſes the deſign.
Arachne paints th' amours of mighty Jove,
How in a bull the god diſguis'd his love;
A real bull ſeems in the piece to roar,
And real billows breaking on the ſhore:
In fair Europa's face appears ſurpriſe,
To the retreating land ſhe turns her eyes,
And ſeems to call her maids, who wondering ſtood,
And with her tears increas'd the briny flood.
Her trembling feet ſhe by contraction ſaves
From the rude inſult of the riſing waves.
Here amorous Jove diſſolving Læda trod,
And in the vigorous ſwan conceal'd the god.
Love lends him now an eagle's new diſguiſe,
Beneath his fluttering wings Aſteria lies,
Th' enlivening colours here with force expreſs'd
How Jove the fair Antiope careſs'd.
In a ſtrong ſatyr's muſcled form he came,
Inſtilling love tranſports the glowing dame,
And lufty twins reward his nervous flame.

Here how he sooth'd the bright Alcmena's love,
Who for Amphitryon took th' impostor Jove;
And how the god in golden shower allur'd
The guarded nymph, in brazen walls immur'd:
How, in a swain, Mnemosyne he charms;
How lambent flame the fair Ægina warms:
And how with various glittering hues inlaid
In serpent's form Deois he betray'd.
Here you, great Neptune, with a short-liv'd flame
In a young bull enjoy th' Æolian dame.
Then in Enipeus' shape intrigues pursue:
'Tis thus th' Aloids boast descent from you.
Here to Bisaltis was thy love convey'd,
When a rough ram deceiv'd the yielding maid.
Ceres, kind mother of the bounteous year,
Whose golden locks a sheafy garland bear;
And the dread dame, with hissing serpents hung,
(From whom the Pegasæan courier sprung)
Thee in a snuffling stallion's form enjoy,
Exhaust thy strength, and every nerve employ;
Melantho as a dolphin you betray,
And sport in pleasures on the rolling sea:
Such just proportion graces every part,
Nature herself appears improv'd by art.
Here in disguise was mighty Phœbus seen,
With clownish aspect, and a rustic mien;
Again transform'd, he's dress'd in falcon's plumes,
And now the lion's noble shape assumes;
Now in a shepherd's form, with treacherous smiles
He Macarean Isse's heart beguiles.
Here his plump shape enamour'd Bacchus leaves,
And in the grape Erigone deceives.
There Saturn, in a neighing horse, she wove,
And Chiron's double form rewards his love.
Festoons of flowers, inwove with ivy, shine,
Border the wondrous piece, and round the texture twine.
Not Pallas, nor ev'n spleen itself, could blame
The wondrous work of the Mæonian dame;
With grief her vast success the goddess bore,
And of celestial crimes the story tore.
Her boxen shuttle now, enrag'd, she took,
And thrice the proud Idmonian artist struck:
Th' unhappy maid, to see her labours vain,
Grew resolute with pride, and shame, and pain:
Around her neck a fatal noose she ty'd,
And sought by sudden death her guilt to hide.
Pallas with pity saw the desperate deed,
And thus the virgin's milder fate decreed:
"Live, impious rival, mindful of thy crime,
"Suspended thus to waste thy future time;
"Thy punishment involves thy numerous race,
"Who for thy fault shall share in thy disgrace."
Her incantation magic juices aid,
With sprinkling drops she bath'd the pendent maid,
And thus the charm its noxious power display'd.
Like leaves in autumn drop her falling hairs,
With these her nose, and next her rising ears.
Her head to the minutest substance shrunk,
The potent juice contracts her changing trunk;
Close to her sides her slender fingers clung,
There chang'd to nimble feet in order hung;
Her blotted belly swells to larger size,
Which now with smallest threads her work supplies;
The virgin in the spider still remains;
And in that shape her former art retains.

TALES.

AN ANSWER

TO THE SOMPNER'S PROLOGUE OF CHAUCER.

In Imitation of Chaucer's Style.

The Sompner lewdly hath his prologue told,
And saine on the Freers his tale japing and bold;
How that in Hell they searchen near and wide,
And ne one Freer in all thilke place espyde:
But lo! the devil turn'd his erse about,
And twenty thousand Freers wend in and out.
By which in Geoffry's rhyming it appears,
The devil's belly is the hive of Freers.
Now listneth lordings! forthwith ye shall hear,
What happen'd at a house in Lancashire.
A misere that had londs and tenement,
Who taketh from his villaines taxes and rent,
Owned a house which emptye long ystood,
Full deeply sited in a derkning wood;
Murmring a shallow brook runneth along,
Moug the round stones it maken doleful song.
Now there spreaden a rumour that everich night
The rooms yhaunted been by many a sprite;
The miller avoucheth, and all thereabout,
That they full oft hearen the hellish rout;
Some saine they hear the jingling of chains,
And some hath yheard the psautries straines;
At midnight some the heedless horse ymeet,
And some espien a corse in a white sheet,
And oother things, saye, elfin, and elfe,
And shapes that fear createn to itselfe.
Now it so hapt, there was not ferre away,
Of grey Freers a fair and rich Abbaye,
Were liven a Freer ycleped Pere Thomas,
Who daren alone in derke through church-yerd pass.
This Freer would lye in thilke house all night,
In hope he might espyen a dreadful sprite.
He taketh candle, beades, and holy watere,
And legends eke of saintes, and bookes of prayere,
He entereth the room, and looketh round about,
And haspen the door, to haspen the goblin out.
The candle hath he put close by the bed,
And in low tone his ave marye said.
With water now besprinkled hath the floore,
And maken cros on key-hole of the doore.

Ne was there not a mouſe-hole in-thilke place,
But he ycroſſed hath by God his grace:
He croſſed hath this, and eke he croſſed that,
With benedicite and God knows what.
Now he goeth to bed and lieth adown,
When the clock had juſt ſtricken the twelfth ſoun.
Bethinketh him now what the cauſe had ybeen,
Why many ſprites by mortals have been ſeen.
Hem remembreth how Dan Plutarch hath yſed
That Cæſar's ſprite came to Brute his bed;
Of chains that frighten erſt Artemidore,
The tales of Pline, Valere, and many more.
Hem thinketh that ſome murdere here been done,
And he mought ſee ſome bloodye ghoſt anone,
Or that ſome orphlines writings here be ſtor'd,
Or pot of gold laine deep beneath a board:
Or thinketh hem, if he might ſee no ſprite,
The Abbaye mought buy this houſe cheap outright.
As hem thus thinketh, anone aſleep he lies,
Up ſtarten Sathanas with faucer eyes.
He turned the Freer upon his face downright,
Diſplaying his nether cheeks full broad and white.
Then quoth Dan Sathanas as he thwacked him ſore,
Thou didſt forget to guard thy poſtern-dore.
There is an hole which hath not croſſed been:
Farewell, from whence I came, I creepen in.
Now plain it is ytellen in my verſe,
If devils in hell bear Freers in their erſe,
On earth the devil in Freers doth ydwell;
Were there no Freers, the devil mought keep in hell.

WORK FOR A COOPER.

A MAN may lead a happy life,
Without that needful thing a wife:
This long have luſty abbots known,
Who ne'er knew ſpouſes—of their own.
What though your houſe be clean and neat,
With couches, chairs, and beds complete;
Though you each day invite a friend,
Though he ſhould every diſh commend;
On Bagſhot-heath your mutton fed,
Your fowls at Brentford born and bred;
Though pureſt wine your cellars boaſt,
Wine worthy of the faireſt toaſt;
Yet there are other things requir'd:
Ring, and let's ſee the maid you hir'd.—
Bleſs me! thoſe hands might hold a broom.
Twirl round a mop, and waſh a room:
A bachelor his maid ſhould keep,
Not for that ſervile uſe to ſweep;
Let her his humour underſtand,
And turn to every thing her hand.
Get you a laſs that's young and tight,
Whoſe arms are, like her apron, white.
What though her ſhift be ſeldom ſeen,
Let that, though coarſe, be always clean;
She might each morn your tea attend,
And on your wriſt your ruffle mend;
Then, if you break a roguiſh jeſt,
Or ſqueeze her hand, or pat her breaſt,
She cries, Oh, dear Sir, don't be naught!
And bluſhes ſpeak her laſt night's fault.
To her your houſehold cares conſide,
Let your keys jingle at her ſide.
A footman's blunders teaze and fret ye;
Ev'n while you chide, you ſmile on Betty.
Diſcharge him then, if he's too ſpruce;
For Betty's for his maſter's uſe.
Will you your amorous fancy baulk,
For fear ſome prudiſh neighbour talk?
But you'll object, that you're afraid
Of the pert freedoms of a maid.
Beſides, your wiſer heads will ſay,
That ſhe who turns her hand this way,
From one vice to another drawn,
Will lodge your ſilver ſpoons in pawn.
Has not the homely wrinkled jade
More need to learn the pilfering trade?
For love all Betty's wants ſupplies,
Laces her ſhoes, her mantua dyes,
All her ſtuff-ſuits ſhe flings away,
And wears thread-ſattin every day.
Who then a dirty drab would hire,
Brown as the hearth of kitchen fire;
When all muſt own, were Betty put
To the black duties of the ſlut,
As well ſhe ſcours or ſcrubs a floor,
And ſtill is good for ſomething more?
Thus, to avoid the greater vice,
I knew a prieſt, of conſcience nice,
To quell his luſt for neighbour's ſpouſe,
Keep fornication in his houſe.
But you're impatient all this time,
Fret at my counſel, curſe my ryhme.
Be ſatisfy'd: I'll talk no more,
For thus my tale begins—Of yore
There dwelt at Blois a prieſt full fair,
With rolling eye and criſped hair;
His chin hung low, his brow was ſleek,
Plenty lay baſking on his cheek;
Whole days at cloyſter-grates he ſate,
Ogled, and talk'd of this and that
So feelingly, the nuns lamented
That double bars were e'er invented.
If he the wanton wife confeſt,
With downcaſt eye, and heaving breaſt;
He ſtroak'd her cheek to ſtill her fear,
And talk'd of ſins en cavalier;
Each time enjoin'd her penance mild,
And fondled on her like his child.
At every jovial goſſip's feaſt
Pere Bernard was a welcome gueſt;
Mirth ſuffer'd not the leaſt reſtraint,
He could at will ſhake off the ſaint;
Nor frown'd he when they freely ſpoke,
But ſhook his ſides, and took the joke;
Nor fail'd he to promote the jeſt,
And ſhar'd the ſins which they confeſt.
Yet, that he might not always roam,
He kept conveniencies at home.
His maid was in the bloom of beauty,
Well-limb'd for every ſocial duty;
He meddled with no houſehold cares,
To her conſign'd his whole affairs:
She of his ſtudy kept the keys,
For he was ſtudious—of his eaſe:
She had the power of all his locks,
Could rummage every cheſt and box.
Her honeſty ſuch credit gain'd,
Not ev'n the cellar was reſtrain'd.

In troth it was a goodly ſhow,
Lin'd with full hogſheads all a-row.
One veſſel, from the rank remov'd,
Far dearer than the reſt he lov'd;
Pour la bonne bouche 'twas ſet aſide,
To all but choiceſt friends deny'd.
He now and then would ſend a quart,
To warm ſome wife's retentive heart,
Againſt confeſſion's ſullen hour:
Wine has all ſecrets in its power.
At common feaſts it had been waſte,
Nor was it fit for layman's taſte.
If monk or friar were his gueſt,
They drank it; for they know the beſt.
Nay, he at length ſo fond was grown,
He always drank it when—alone.
Who ſhall recount his civil labours,
In pious viſits to his neighbours?
Whene'er weak huſbands went aſtray,
He gueſs'd their wives were in the way:
'Twas then his charity was ſhown,
He choſe to ſee them when alone.
Now was he bent on cuckuldom:
He knew friend Dennis was from home:
His wife (a poor neglected beauty,
Defrauded of a huſband's duty)
Had often told him at confeſſion,
How hard ſhe ſtruggled 'gainſt tranſgreſſion,
He now reſolves, in heat of blood,
To try how firm her virtue ſtood.
He knew that wine (to love beſt aid)
Has oft made bold the ſhame-fac'd maid,
Taught her to romp, and take more freedoms,
Than nymphs train'd up at Smith's or Needham's.
A mighty bottle ſtrait he choſe,
Such as might give two friars their doſe.
Nannette he call'd: the cellar door
She ſtraight unlocks, deſcends before;
He follow'd cloſe. But when he ſpies
His favourite caſk; with lifted eyes
And lifted hands aloud he cries,
Heigh-day! my darling wine aſtoop!
It muſt alas! have ſprung a hoop.
That there's a leak is paſt all doubt,
(Reply'd the maid)—I'll find it out.
She ſets the candle down in haſte,
Tucks her white apron round her waiſt.
The hogſhead's mouldy ſide aſcends;
She ſtraddles wide, and downward bends:
So low ſhe ſtoops to ſeek the flaw,
Her coats roſe up, her maſter ſaw—
I ſee—he cries—(then claſpt her faſt)
The leak through which my wine has paſt.
Then all in haſte the maid deſcended,
And in a trice the leak was mended.
He found in Nannette all he wanted,
So Dennis' brows remain'd unplanted.
Ere ſi ice this time, all luſty friars
(Warm'd with predominant deſires,
Whene'er the fleſh with ſpirit quarrels)
Look on the ſex as leaky barrels.
Beware of theſe, ye jealous ſpouſes!
From ſuch like coopers guard your houſes;
For, if they find not work at home,
For jobs through all the town they roam,

THE EQUIVOCATION.

An abbot rich (whoſe taſte was good Alike in ſcience and in food)
His biſhop had reſolv'd to treat;
The biſhop came, the biſhop eat.
'Twas ſilence, till their ſtomachs fail'd;
And now at heretics they rail'd.
What hereſy (the prelate ſaid)
Is in that church where prieſts may wed!
Do not we take the church for life?
But thoſe divorce her for a wife;
Like laymen, keep her in their houſes,
And own the children of their ſpouſes.
Vile practiſes! the abbot cry'd,
For pious uſe we're ſet aſide!
Shall we take wives? Marriage at beſt
Is but carnality profeſt!
Now, as the biſhop took his glaſs,
He ſpy'd our abbot's buxom laſs,
Who croſs'd the room; he mark'd her eye
That glow'd with love; his pulſe beat high.
Fye, father, fye, (the prelate cries)
A maid ſo young! for ſhame, be wiſe.
Theſe indiſcretions lend a handle
To lewd lay-tongues, to give us ſcandal.
For your vow's ſake, this rule I give t' ye;
Let all your maids be turn'd of fifty.
The prieſt reply'd, I have not ſwerv'd,
But your chaſte precept well obſerv'd:
That laſs full twenty-five has told;
I've yet another who's as old;
Into one ſum their ages caſt;
So both my maids have fifty paſt.
The prelate ſmil'd, but durſt not blame;
For why? his lordſhip did the ſame.
Let thoſe who reprimand their brothers,
Firſt mend the faults they find in others.

A TRUE STORY OF AN APPARITION.

Sceptics (whoſe ſtrength of argument makes out,
That wiſdom's deep inquiries end in doubt)
Hold this aſſertion poſitive and clear,
That ſprites are poor deluſions, rais'd by fear.
Not that fam'd ghoſt, which in preſaging ſound
Call'd Brutus to Philippi's fatal ground,
Nor can Tiberius Gracchus' goary ſhade,
Theſe ever-doubting diſputants perſuade.
Straight they with ſmiles reply, thoſe tales of old
By viſionary prieſts were made and told.
Oh, might ſome ghoſt at dead of night appear,
And make you own conviction by your fear!
I know your ſneers my eaſy faith accuſe,
Which with ſuch idle legends ſcares the muſe:
But think not that I tell thoſe vulgar ſprites,
Which frighted boys relate on winter nights,
How cleanly milk-maids meet the fairy train,
How heedleſs horſes drag the clinking chain,
Night-roaming ghoſts, by faucer eye-balls known,
The common ſpectres of each country-town.
No, I ſuch fables can like you deſpiſe,
And laugh to hear theſe nurſe-invented lies.
Yet has not oft the fraudful guardian's fright
Compell'd him to reſtore an orphan's right?

And can we doubt that horrid ghosts ascend,
Which on the conscious murderer's steps attend?
Hear then, and let attested truth prevail;
From faithful lips I learnt the dreadful tale.

Where Arden's forest spreads its limits wide,
Whose branching paths the doubtful road divide,
A traveller took his solitary way,
When low beneath the hills was sunk the day.
And now the skies with gathering darkness lour,
The branches rustle with the threaten'd shower;
With sudden blasts the forest murmurs loud,
Indented lightnings cleave the sable cloud,
Thunder on thunder breaks, the tempest roars,
And heaven discharges all its watery stores.
The wandering traveller shelter seeks in vain,
And shrinks and shivers with the beating rain:
On his steed's neck the slacken'd bridle lay,
Who chose with cautious step th' uncertain way;
And now he checks the rein, and halts to hear
If any noise foretold a village near.
At length from far a stream of light he sees
Extend its level ray between the trees;
Thither he speeds, and, as he nearer came,
Joyful he knew the lamp's domestic flame
That trembled through the window; cross the way
Darts forth the barking cur, and stands at bay.

It was an ancient lonely house, that stood
Upon the borders of the spacious wood;
Here towers and antique battlements arise,
And there in heaps the moulder'd ruin lies.
Some lord this mansion held in days of yore,
To chase the wolf, and pierce the foaming boar:
How chang'd, alas, from what it once had been!
'Tis now degraded to a public inn.

Straight he dismounts, repeats his loud commands:
Swift at the gate the ready landlord stands;
With frequent cringe he bows, and begs excuse,
His house was full, and every bed in use.
What, not a garret, and no straw to spare?
Why then the kitchen-fire and elbow-chair
Shall serve for once to nod away the night.
The kitchen ever is the servant's right,
Replies the host; there, all the fire around,
The count's tir'd footmen snore upon the ground.

The maid, who listen'd to this whole debate,
With pity learn'd the weary stranger's fate.
Be brave, she cries, you still may be our guest;
Our haunted room was ever held the best;
If then your valour can the fright sustain
Of rattling curtains and the clinking chain;
If your courageous tongue have power to talk,
When round your bed the horrid ghost shall walk;
If you dare ask it, why it leaves its tomb;
I'll see your sheets well air'd, and show the room.
Soon as the frighted maid her tale had told,
The stranger enter'd, for his heart was bold.

The damsel led him through a spacious hall,
Where ivy hung the half-demolish'd wall:
She frequent look'd behind, and chang'd her hue,
While fancy tipt the candle's flame with blue.
And now they gain'd the winding stairs ascent,
And to the lonesome room of terrors went.
When all was ready, swift retir'd the maid, [laid
The watch-lights burn, tuck'd warm in bed was
The hardy stranger, and attends the sprite
Till his accustom'd walk at dead of night.

At first he hears the wind with hollow roar
Shake the loose lock, and swing the creaking door:
Nearer and nearer draws the dreadful sound
Of rattling chains, that dragg'd upon the ground:
When lo! the spectre came with horrid stride,
Approach'd the bed, and drew the curtains wide!
In human form the ghastful phantom stood,
Expos'd his mangled bosom dy'd with blood.
Then, silent pointing to his wounded breast,
Thrice wav'd his hand. Beneath the frighted guest
The bed-cords trembled, and with shuddering fear,
Sweat chill'd his limbs, high rose his bristled hair;
Then muttering hasty prayers, he mann'd his heart,
And cry'd aloud—say, whence and who thou art?
The stalking ghost with hollow voice replies,
Three years are counted since with mortal eyes
I saw the sun, and vital air respir'd.
Like thee benighted, and with travel tir'd,
Within these walls I slept. O thirst of gain!
See, still the planks the bloody mark retain.
Stretch'd on this very bed, from sleep I start,
And see the steel impending o'er my heart;
The barbarous hostess held the lifted knife,
The floor ran purple with my gushing life.
My treasure now they seize, the golden spoil
They bury deep beneath the grass-grown soil,
Far in the common field. Be bold, arise,
My steps shall lead thee to the secret prize;
There dig and find; let that thy care reward:
Call loud on justice, bid her not retard
To punish murder; lay my ghost at rest:
So shall with peace secure thy nights be blest;
And when beneath these boards my bones are found,
Decent inter them in some sacred ground. [bed.

Here ceas'd the ghost. The stranger springs from
And boldly follows where the phantom led:
The half-worn stony stairs they now descend,
Where passages obscure their arches bend.
Silent they walk; and now through groves they pass, [grass.
Now through wet meads their steps imprint the
At length amidst a spacious field they came:
There stops the spectre, and ascends in flame.
Amaz'd he stood, no bush or brier was found,
To teach his morning search to find the ground.
What could he do? the night was hideous dark,
Fear shook his joints, and nature dropt the mark:
With that he starting wak'd, and rais'd his head,
But found the golden mark was left in bed.

What is the statesman's vast ambitious scheme,
But a short vision and a golden dream?
Power, wealth, and title, elevate his hope;
He wakes: but, for a garter, finds a rope.

THE MAD-DOG.

A PRUDE, at morn and evening prayer,
Had worn her velvet-cushion bare;
Upward she taught her eyes to roll,
As if she watch'd her soaring soul;
And, when devotion warm'd the crowd,
None sung, or smote their breast so loud:
Pale penitence had mark'd her face
With all the meagre signs of grace,

Her mass book was completely lin'd
With painted saints of various kind:
But when in every page she view'd
Fine ladies who the flesh subdu'd,
As quick her beads she counted o'er,
She cry'd—such wonders are no more!
She chose not to delay confession,
To bear at once a year's transgression;
But every week set all things even,
And balanc'd her accounts with heaven.
Behold her now in humble guise,
Upon her knees with down-cast eyes
Before the priest: she thus begins,
"And, sobbing, blubbers forth her sins:
"Who could that tempting man resist;
"My virtue languish'd as he kiss'd;
"I strove—till I could strive no longer:
"How can the weak subdue the stronger?"
The father ask'd her where and when?
How many? and what sort of men?
By what degrees her blood was heated?
How oft the frailty was repeated?
Thus have I seen a pregnant wench
All flush'd with guilt before the bench:
The judges (wak'd by wanton thought)
Dive to the bottom of her fault;
They leer, they simper at her shame,
And make her call all things by name.
And now to sentence he proceeds,
Prescribes how oft to tell her beads;
Shows her what saints could do her good,
Doubles her fasts, to cool her blood.
Eas'd of her sins, and light as air,
Away she trips, perhaps to prayer.
'Twas no such thing. Why then this haste?
The clock has struck, the hour is past;
And, on the spur of inclination,
She scorn'd to bilk her assignation.
Whate'er she did, next week she came,
And piously confest the same.
The priest, who female frailties pity'd,
First chid her, then her sins remitted.
But did she now her crime bemoan
In penitential sheets alone?
And was no bold, no beastly fellow
The nightly partner of her pillow?
No, none: for next time in the grove
A bank was conscious of her love.
Confession-day was come about,
And now again it all must out.
She seems to wipe her twinkling eyes:
"What now, my child?" the father cries.
"Again!" says she.—With threatening looks,
He thus the prostrate dame rebukes:
"Madam, I grant there's something in it,
"That virtue has th' unguarded minute;
"But pray now tell me what are whores,
"But women of unguarded hours?
"Then you must sure have lost all shame.
"What! every day, and still the same,
"And no fault else! 'tis strange to find
"A woman to one sin confin'd!
"Pride is this day her darling passion,
"The next day slander is in fashion;
"Gaming succeeds; if fortune crosses,
"Then virtue's mortgaged for her losses;
"By use her favourite vice she loathes,
"And loves new follies like new clothes:
"But you, beyond all thought unchaste,
"Have all sin center'd near your waist!
"Whence is this appetite so strong?
"Say, madam, did your mother long?
"Or is it luxury and high diet
"That won't let virtue sleep in quiet?"
She tells him now, with meekest voice,
That she had never err'd by choice;
Nor was there known a virgin chaster,
Till ruin'd by a sad disaster.
That she a favourite lap-dog had,
Which (as she stroak'd and kiss'd) grew mad;
And on her lip a wound indenting,
First set her youthful blood fermenting.
The priest reply'd, with zealous fury,
"You should have fought the means to cure ye.
"Doctors by various ways, we find,
"Treat these distempers of the mind.
"Let gaudy ribbands be deny'd
"To her who raves with scornful pride;
"And, if religion crack her notions,
"Lock up her volumes of devotions;
"But, if for man her rage prevail,
"Bar her the sight of creatures male.
"Or else, to cure such venom'd bites,
"And set the shatter'd thoughts aright;
"They send you to the ocean's shore,
"And plunge the patient o'er and o'er."
The dame reply'd, "Alas! in vain
"My kindred forc'd me to the main;
"Naked, and in the face of day:
"Look not, ye fishermen, this way!
"What virgin had not done as I did?
"My modest hand, by nature guided,
"Debarr'd at once from human eyes
"The seat where female honour lies;
"And though thrice dipt from top to toe,
"I still secur'd the post below,
"And guarded it with grasp so fast
"Not one drop through my fingers past.
"Thus owe I to my bashful care,
"That all the rage is settled there."
Weigh well the projects of mankind;
Then tell me, reader, canst thou find
The man from madness wholly free?
They all are mad—save you and me,
Do not the statesman, sop, and wit,
By daily follies prove they're bit?
And, when the briny cure they try'd,
Some part still kept above the tide?
Some men (when drench'd beneath the wave)
High o'er their heads their fingers save:
Those hands by mean extortion thrive,
Or in the pocket lightly dive:
Or, more expert in pilfering vice,
They burn and itch to cog the dice.
Plunge in a courtier; straight his fears
Direct his hands to stop his ears.
And now truth seems a grating noise,
He loves the slanderer's whispering voice;
He hangs on flattery with delight,
And thinks all fulsome praise is right.
All women dread a watery death:
They shut their lips, to hold their breath;

And, though you duck them ne'er so long,
Not one felt drop e'er wets their tongue:
'Tis hence they ſcandal have at will,
And that this member ne'er lies ſtill.

THE QUIDNUNKI'S:

Occaſioned by the Death of the Duke Regent of France.

How vain are mortal man's endeavours?
(Said, at Dame Elliot's *, Maſter Travers)
Good Orleans dead! in truth 'tis hard:
Oh, may all ſtateſmen die prepar'd!
I do foreſee (and for foreſeeing
He equals any man in being)
The army ne'er can be diſbanded.
—I wiſh the king were ſafely landed.
Ah, friends! great changes threat the land;
All France and England at a ſtand!
There's Merowcis—mark! ſtrange work!
And there's the Czar, and there's the Turk;
The Pope—an Indian merchant by,
Cut ſhort the ſpeech with this reply:
" All at a ſtand? You ſee great changes?
" Ah, Sir! you never ſaw the Ganges.
" There dwell the nations of Quidnunki's
" (So Monomotapa calls monkies):
" On their bank, from bough to bough,
" They meet and chat (as we may now).
" Whiſpers go round, they grin, they ſhrug,
" They bow, they ſnarl, they ſcratch, they hug;
" And, juſt as chance or whim provoke them,
" They either bite their friends, or ſtroke them.
" There have I ſeen ſome active prig,
" To ſhow his parts, beſtride a twig:
" Lord! how the chattering tribe admire,
" Not that he's wiſer, but he's higher:
" All long to try the venturous thing
" (For power is but to have one's ſwing);
" From ſide to ſide he ſprings, he ſpurns,
" And bangs his foes and friends by turns.
" Thus, as in giddy freaks he bounces,
" Crack goes the twig, and in he flounces!
" Down the ſwift ſtream the wretch is borne;
" Never, ah never, to return!
" Zounds! what a fall had our dear brother;
" Morbleu! cries one; and Damme! t' other.
" The nations give a general ſcreech;
" None cocks his tail, none claws his breech;
" Each trembles for the public weal,
" And for a while forgets to ſteal.
" A while, all eyes, intent and ſteady,
" Purſue him, whirling down the eddy.
" But, out of mind when out of view,
" Some other mounts the twig anew;
" And buſineſs, on each monkey-ſhore,
" Runs the ſame track it went before."

* A coffee-houſe near St. James's.

FABLES. IN TWO PARTS.

" Shall not my fables cenſure vice,
" Becauſe a knave is over-nice?—
" If I laſh vice in general fiction,
" Is't I apply, or ſelf-conviction?
" Brutes are my theme. Am I to blame,
" If men in morals are the ſame?
" I no man call or ape or aſs;
" 'Tis his own conſcience holds the glaſs.
" Thus void of all offence I write:
" Who claims the fable, knows his right."

Prologue to the Shepherd's Week.

INTRODUCTION TO THE FABLES.

PART I.

The Shepherd and the Philoſopher.

Remote from cities liv'd a ſwain,
Unvex'd with all the cares of gain;
His head was ſilver'd o'er with age,
And long experience made him ſage;
In ſummer's heat, and winter's cold,
He fed his flock, and penn'd the fold;
His hours in cheerful labour flew,
Nor envy nor ambition knew;
His wiſdom and his honeſt fame
Through all the country rais'd his name.

A deep philoſopher (whoſe rules
Of moral life were drawn from ſchools)
The ſhepherd's homely cottage ſought,
And thus explor'd his reach of thought.
Whence is thy learning? hath thy toil
O'er books conſum'd the midnight oil?
Haſt thou old Greece and Rome ſurvey'd,
And the vaſt ſenſe of Plato weigh'd?
Hath Socrates thy ſoul refin'd,
And haſt thou fathom'd Tully's mind?
Or, like the wiſe Ulyſſes, thrown,
By various fates, on realms unknown,

Haſt thou through many cities ſtray'd,
Their cuſtoms, laws, and manners, weigh'd?
The ſhepherd modeſtly reply'd,
I ne'er the paths of learning try'd;
Nor have I roam'd in foreign parts,
To read mankind, their laws and arts;
For man is practis'd in diſguiſe,
He cheats the moſt diſcerning eyes:
Who by that ſearch ſhall wiſer grow,
When we ourſelves can never know?
The little knowledge I have gain'd,
Was all from ſimple nature drain'd;
Hence my life's maxims took their riſe,
Hence grew my ſettled hate to vice.
The daily labours of the bee
Awake my ſoul to induſtry:
Who can obſerve the careful ant,
And not provide for future want?
My dog (the truſtieſt of his kind)
With gratitude inflames my mind:
I mark his true, his faithful way,
And in my ſervice copy Tray.
In conſtancy and nuptial love,
I learn my duty from the dove.
The hen, who from the chilly air,
With pious wing, protects her care,
And every fowl that flies at large,
Inſtructs me in a parent's charge.
From nature too I took my rule,
To ſhun contempt and ridicule,
I never, with important air,
In converſation overbear.
Can grave and formal paſs for wiſe,
When men the ſolemn owl deſpiſe?
My tongue within my lips I rein;
For who talks much muſt talk in vain.
We from the wordy torrent fly:
Who liſtens to the chattering pye?
Nor would I, with felonious ſlight,
By ſtealth invade my neighbour's right.
Rapacious animals we hate:
Kites, hawks, and wolves, deſerve their fate.
Do not we juſt abhorrence find
Againſt the toad and ſerpent-kind?
But envy, calumny, and ſpite,
Bear ſtronger venom in their bite.
Thus every object of creation
Can furniſh hints to contemplation;
And, from the moſt minute and mean,
A virtuous mind can morals glean.
Thy fame is juſt, the ſage replies;
Thy virtue proves thee truly wiſe.
Pride often guides the author's pen;
Books as affected are as men:
But he who ſtudies nature's laws,
From certain truth his maxims draws;
And thoſe, without our ſchools, ſuffice
To make men moral, good, and wiſe.

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS,

WILLIAM DUKE OF CUMBERLAND.

FABLE I.

The Lion, the Tiger, and the Traveller.

Accept, young prince! the moral lay,
And in theſe Tales mankind ſurvey;
With early virtues plant your breaſt,
The ſpecious arts of vice deteſt.
Princes, like beauties from their youth
Are ſtrangers to the voice of truth.
Learn to contemn all praiſe betimes,
For flattery's the nurſe of crimes:
Friendſhip by ſweet reproof is ſhown
(A virtue never near a throne):
In courts ſuch freedom muſt offend;
There none preſumes to be a friend.
To thoſe of your exalted ſtation,
Each courtier is a dedication.
Muſt I, too flatter like the reſt,
And turn my morals to a jeſt?
The muſe diſdains to ſteal from thoſe
Who thrive in courts by fulſome proſe.
But ſhall I hide your real praiſe,
Or tell you what a nation ſays?
They in your infant boſom trace
The virtues of your royal race;
In the fair dawning of your mind,
Diſcern you generous, mild, and kind:
They ſee you grieve to hear diſtreſs,
And pant already to redreſs.
Go on, the height of good attain,
Nor let a nation hope in vain:
For hence we juſtly may preſage
The virtues of a riper age
True courage ſhall your boſom fire,
And future actions own your ſire.
Cowards are cruel; but the brave
Love mercy, and delight to ſave.
A tiger, roaming for his prey,
Sprung on a traveller in the way;
The proſtrate game a lion ſpies,
And on the greedy tyrant flies:
With mingled roar reſounds the wood,
Their teeth, their claws, diſtil with blood;
Till, vanquiſh'd by the lion's ſtrength,
The ſpotted foe extends his length,
The man beſought the ſhaggy lord,
And on his knees for life implor'd.
His life the generous hero gave,
Together walking to his cave,
The lion thus beſpoke his gueſt:
"What hardy beaſt ſhall dare conteſt
"My matchleſs ſtrength? You ſaw the fight,
"And muſt atteſt my power and right.
"Forc'd to forego their native home,
"My ſtarving ſlaves at diſtance roam.
"Within theſe woods I reign alone;
"The boundleſs foreſt is my own.
"Bears, wolves, and all the ſavage brood,
"Have dy'd the regal den with blood.
"Theſe carcaſes on either hand,
"Thoſe bones that whiten all the land,
"My former deeds and triumphs tell,
"Beneath theſe jaws what numbers fell."
"True," ſays the man, "the ſtrength I ſaw
"Might well the brutal nation awe;
"But ſhall a monarch, brave, like you,
"Place glory in ſo falſe a view?
"Robbers invade their neighbour's right.
"Be lov'd; let juſtice bound your might.
"Mean are ambitious heroes' boaſts
"Of waſted lands and ſlaughter'd hoſts.

" Pirates their power by murders gain;
" Wife kings by love and mercy reign.
" To me your clemency hath fhown
" The virtue worthy of a throne.
" Heaven gives you power above the reft,
" Like heaven, to fuccour the diftreft."
" The cafe is plain," the monarch faid;
" Falfe glory hath my youth mifled;
" For beafts of prey, a fervile train,
" Have been the flatterers of my reign.
" You reafon well. Yet tell me, friend,
" Did ever you in courts attend?
" For all my fawning rogues agree,
" That human heroes rule like me."

FABLE II.

The Spaniel and the Cameleon.

A SPANIEL, bred with all the care
That waits upon a favourite heir,
Ne'er felt correction's rigid hand;
Indulg'd to difobey command,
In pamper'd eafe his hours were fpent;
He never knew what learning meant.
Such forward airs, fo pert, fo fmart,
Were fure to win his lady's heart;
Each little mifchief gain'd him praife;
How pretty were his fawning ways!
The wind was fouth, the morning fair,
He ventures forth to take the air:
He ranges all the meadow round;
And rolls upon the fofteft ground;
When near him a cameleon feen,
Was fcarce diftinguifh'd from the green.
" Dear emblem of the flattering hoft,
" What, live with clowns! a genius loft!
" To cities and the court repair;
" A fortune cannot fail thee there:
" Preferments fhall thy talents crown;
" Believe, me, friend; I know the town."
" Sir," fays the fycophant, " like you,
" Of old, politer life I knew:
" Like you, a courtier born and bred,
" Kings lean'd their ear to what I faid.
" My whifper always met fuccefs;
" The ladies prais'd me for addrefs.
" I knew to hit each courtier's paffion,
" And flatter'd every vice in fafhion.
" But Jove, who hates the liar's ways,
" At once cut fhort my profperous days,
" And, fentenc'd to retain my nature,
" Transform'd me to this crawling creature.
" Doom'd to a life obfcure and mean,
" I wander in the fylvan fcene:
" For Jove the heart alone regards;
" He punifhes what man rewards.
" How different is thy cafe and mine!
" With men at leaft you fup and dine;
" While I, condemn'd to thinneft fare,
" Like thofe I flatter'd, feed on air."

FABLE III.

The Mother, the Nurfe, and the Fairy.

GIVE me a fon. The bleffing fent,
Were ever parents more content?
How partial are their doating eyes!
No child is half fo fair and wife.
Wak'd to the morning's pleafing care,
The mother rofe, and fought her heir.
She faw the nurfe like one poffeft,
With wringing hands and fobbing breaft.
" Sure fome difafter has befel!
" Speak, nurfe; I hope the boy is well."
" Dear madam, think not me to blame;
Invifibly the fairy came:
Your precious babe is hence convey'd,
And in the place a changeling laid.
Where are the father's mouth and nofe?
The mother's eyes, as black as floes?
See, here, a fhocking aukward creature,
That fpeaks a fool in every feature!"
" The woman's blind," the mother cries,
" I fee wit fparkle in his eyes."
" Lord! madam, what a fquinting leer!
No doubt the fairy hath been here."
Juft as fhe fpoke, a pigmy fprite
Pops through the key-hole fwift as light;
Perch'd on the cradle's top he ftands,
And thus her folly reprimands.
" Whence fprung this vain conceited lie,
That we the world with fools fupply?
What! give our fprightly race away
For the dull helplefs fons of clay!
Befides, by partial fondnefs fhown
Like you, we doat upon our own.
Where yet was ever found a mother
Who'd give her booby for another?
And, fhould we change with human breed,
Well might we pafs for fools indeed."

FABLE IV.

The Eagle and the Aſſembly of Animals.

As Jupiter's all-feeing eye
Survey'd the worlds beneath the fky,
From this fmall fpeck of earth were fent
Murmurs and founds of difcontent;
For every thing alive complain'd,
That he the hardeft life fuftain'd.
Jove calls his eagle. At the word,
Before him ftands the royal bird.
The bird, obedient, from heaven's height,
Downward directs his rapid flight;
Then cited every living thing,
To hear the mandates of his king.
" Ungrateful creatures! whence arife
Thefe murmurs which offend the fkies?
Why this diforder? fay the cauſe;
For juft are Jove's eternal laws.
Let each his difcontent reveal;
To you' four dog I firft appeal."
" Hard is my lot, the hound replies;
On what fleet nerves the greyhound flies!
While I, with weary ftep and flow,
O'er plains, and vales, and mountains, go.
The morning fees my chafe begun,
Nor ends it till the fetting fun."
" When (fays the greyhound) I purfue,
My game is loft, or caught in view;
Beyond my fight the prey's fecure;
The hound is flow, but always fure;

And, had I his ſagacious ſcent,
Jove ne'er had heard my diſcontent."
The lion crav'd the fox's art;
The fox the lion's force and heart:
The cock implor'd the pigeon's flight,
Whoſe wings were rapid, ſtrong, and light:
The pigeon ſtrength of wing deſpis'd,
And the cock's matchleſs valour priz'd.
The fiſhes wiſh'd to graze the plain;
The beaſts, to ſkim beneath the main.
Thus, envious of another's ſtate,
Each blam'd the partial hand of fate.
The bird of heaven then cry'd aloud:
"Jove bids diſperſe the murmuring crowd;
The god rejects your idle prayers.
Would ye, rebellious mutineers!
Entirely change your name and nature,
And be the very envy'd creature?
What! ſilent all, and none conſent?
Be happy, then, and learn content;
Nor imitate the reſtleſs mind,
And proud ambition, of mankind."

FABLE V.

The Wild Boar and the Ram.

AGAINST an elm a ſheep was ty'd,
The butcher's knife in blood was dy'd;
The patient flock, in ſilent fright,
From far beheld the horrid ſight.
A ſavage boar, who near them ſtood,
Thus mock'd to ſcorn the fleecy brood.
"All cowards ſhould be ſerv'd like you.
See, ſee your murderer is in view:
With purple hands, and reeking knife,
He ſtrips the ſkin yet warm with life.
Your quarter'd ſires, your bleeding dams,
The dying bleat of harmleſs lambs,
Call for revenge. O ſtupid race!
The heart that wants revenge is baſe."
"I grant, an ancient ram replies,
We bear no terror in our eyes;
Yet think us not of ſoul ſo tame,
Which no repeated wrongs inflame;
Inſenſible of every ill,
Becauſe we want thy tuſks to kill.
Know, thoſe, who violence purſue,
Give to themſelves the vengeance due;
For in theſe maſſacres they find
The two chief plagues that waſte mankind,
Our ſkin ſupplies the wrangling bar,
It wakes their ſlumbering ſons to war;
And well revenge may reſt contented,
Since drums and parchment were invented."

FABLE VI.

The Miſer and Plutus.

THE wind was high, the window ſhakes,
With ſudden ſtart the miſer wakes;
Along the ſilent room he ſtalks,
Looks back, and trembles as he walks.
Each lock and every bolt he tries,
In every creek and corner pries;
Then opes the cheſt with treaſure ſtor'd,
And ſtands in rapture o'er his hoard.
But now, with ſudden qualms poſſeſt,
He wrings his hands, he beats his breaſt;
By conſcience ſtung, he wildly ſtares,
And thus his guilty ſoul declares:
"Had the deep earth her ſtores confin'd,
This heart had known ſweet peace of mind.
But virtue's ſold. Good gods! what price
Can recompenſe the pangs of vice!
O bane of good! ſeducing cheat!
Can man, weak man, thy power defeat?
Gold baniſh'd honour from the mind,
And only left the name behind;
Gold ſow'd the world with every ill;
Gold taught the murderer's ſword to kill:
'Twas gold inſtructed coward-hearts
In treachery's more pernicious arts.
Who can recount the miſchiefs o'er?
Virtue reſides on earth no more!"
He ſpoke, and ſigh'd. In angry mood
Plutus, his god, before him ſtood.
The miſer, trembling, lock'd his cheſt:
The viſion frown'd, and thus addreſs'd:
"Whence is this vile ungrateful rant,
Each ſordid raſcal's daily cant?
Did I, baſe wretch! corrupt mankind?
The fault's in thy rapacious mind.
Becauſe my bleſſings are abus'd,
Muſt I be cenſur'd, curs'd, accus'd?
Ev'n virtue's ſelf by knaves is made
A cloak to carry on the trade;
And power (when lodg'd in their poſſeſſion)
Grows tyranny, and rank oppreſſion.
Thus, when the villain crams his cheſt,
Gold is the canker of the breaſt;
'Tis avarice, inſolence, and pride,
And every ſhocking vice beſide:
But, when to virtuous hands 'tis given,
It bleſſes, like the dews of heaven:
Like heaven, it hears the orphan's cries,
And wipes the tears from widows eyes.
Their crimes on gold ſhall miſers lay,
Who pawn'd their ſordid ſouls for pay?
Let bravos, then, when blood is ſpilt,
Upbraid the paſſive ſoul with guilt."

FABLE VII.

The Lion, the Fox, and the Geeſe.

A LION, tir'd with ſtate-affairs,
Quite ſick of pomp, and worn with cares,
Reſolv'd (remote from noiſe and ſtrife)
In peace to paſs his latter life.
It was proclaim'd; the day was ſet;
Behold the general council met.
The fox was viceroy nam'd. The crowd
To the new regent humbly bow'd.
Wolves, bears, and mighty tigers bend,
And ſtrive who moſt ſhall condeſcend.
He ſtraight aſſumes a ſolemn grace,
Collects his wiſdom in his face.
The crowd admire his wit, his ſenſe;
Each word hath weight and conſequence,
The flatterer all his art diſplays:
He who hath power is ſure of praiſe.

A fox ſtept forth before the reſt,
And thus the ſervile throng addreſt:
"How vaſt his talents, born to rule,
And train'd in virtue's honeſt ſchool!
What clemency his temper ſways!
How uncorrupt are all his ways!
Beneath his conduct and command,
Rapine ſhall ceaſe to waſte the land.
His brain hath ſtratagem and art;
Prudence and mercy rule his heart.
What bleſſings muſt attend the nation
Under this good adminiſtration."
He ſaid. A gooſe who diſtant ſtood,
Harangu'd apart the cackling brood:
"Whene'er I hear a knave commend,
He bids me ſhun his worthy friend.
What praiſe! what mighty commendation!
But 'twas a fox who ſpoke th' oration.
Foxes this government may prize,
As gentle, plentiful, and wiſe;
If they enjoy the ſweets, 'tis plain
We geeſe muſt feel a tyrant reign.
What havock now ſhall thin our race,
When every petty clerk in place,
To prove his taſte, and ſeem polite,
Will feed on geeſe both noon and night!"

FABLE VIII.

The Lady and the Waſp.

What whiſpers muſt the beauty bear!
What hourly nonſenſe haunts her ear!
Where'er her eyes diſpenſe their charms,
Impertinence around her ſwarms.
Did not the tender nonſenſe ſtrike,
Contempt and ſcorn might look diſlike;
Forbidding airs might thin the place,
The ſlighteſt flap a fly can chaſe:
But who can drive the numerous breed?
Chaſe one, another will ſucceed.
Who knows a fool, muſt know his brother;
One fop will recommend another:
And with this plague ſhe's rightly curſt.
Becauſe ſhe liſten'd to the firſt.
As Doris, at her toilette's duty,
Sat meditating on her beauty,
She now was penſive, now was gay,
And lull'd the ſultry hours away.
As thus in indolence ſhe lies,
A giddy waſp around her flies.
He now advances, now retires,
Now to her neck and cheek aſpires.
Her fan in vain defends her charms;
Swift he returns, again alarms;
For by repulſe he bolder grew,
Perch'd on her lip, and ſipt the dew.
She frowns; ſhe frets. "Good gods! ſhe cries,
Protect me from theſe teazing flies!
Of all the plagues that heaven hath ſent,
A waſp is moſt impertinent."
The hovering inſect thus complain'd:
"Am I then ſlighted, ſcorn'd, diſdain'd?
Can ſuch offence your anger wake?
'Twas beauty caus'd the bold miſtake.
Thoſe cherry lips that breathe perfume,
That cheek ſo ripe with youthful bloom,
Made me with ſtrong deſire purſue
The faireſt peach that ever grew."
"Strike him not, Jenny, Doris cries,
Nor murder waſps like vulgar flies!
For though he's free (to do him right),
The creature's civil and polite."
In ecſtaſies away he poſts;
Where'er he came, the favour boaſts;
Brags how her ſweeteſt tea he ſips,
And ſhows the ſugar on his lips.
The hint alarm'd the forward crew;
Sure of ſucceſs away they flew:
They ſhare the dainties of the day,
Round her with airy muſic play:
And now they flutter, now they reſt,
Now ſoar again, and ſkim her breaſt.
Nor were they baniſh'd, till ſhe found
That waſps have ſtings, and felt the wound.

FABLE IX.

The Bull and the Maſtiff.

Seek you to train your favourite boy?
Each caution, every care employ;
And, ere you venture to confide,
Let his preceptor's heart be try'd:
Weigh well his manners, life, and ſcope;
On theſe depends thy future hope.
As on a time, in peaceful reign,
A bull enjoy'd the flowery plain,
A maſtiff paſs'd; inflam'd with ire,
His eye-balls ſhot indignant fire.
He foam'd, he rag'd with thirſt of blood.
Spurning the ground, the monarch ſtood,
And roar'd aloud: "Suſpend the fight;
In a whole ſkin go ſleep to-night:
Or tell me, ere the battle rage,
What wrongs provoke thee to engage?
Is it ambition fires thy breaſt,
Or avarice, that ne'er can reſt?
From theſe alone unjuſtly ſprings
The world-deſtroying wrath of kings."
The ſurly maſtiff thus returns:
"Within my boſom glory burns.
Like heroes of eternal name,
Whom poets ſing, I fight for fame.
The butcher's ſpirit-ſtirring mind
To daily war my youth inclin'd;
He train'd me to heroic deed,
Taught me to conquer, or to bleed."
"Curs'd dog, the bull reply'd, no more
I wonder at thy thirſt of gore;
For thou (beneath a butcher train'd,
Whoſe hands with cruelty are ſtain'd,
His daily murders in thy view)
Muſt, like thy tutor, blood purſue.
Take, then, thy fate." With goring wound
At once he lifts him from the ground:
Aloft the ſprawling hero flies,
Mangled he falls, he howls, and dies.

FABLE X.

The Elephant and the Bookſeller

The man who with undaunted toils
Sails unknown ſeas to unknown ſoils;

With various wonders feasts his sight:
What stranger wonders does he write!
We read, and in description view
Creatures which Adam never knew;
For, when we risk no contradiction,
It prompts the tongue to deal in fiction.
Those things that startle me or you
I grant are strange; yet may be true.
Who doubts that elephants are found
For science and for sense renown'd?
Borri records their strength of parts,
Extent of thought, and skill in arts;
How they perform the law's decrees,
And save the state the hangman's fees;
And how by travel understand
The language of another land.
Let those, who question this report,
To Pliny's ancient page resort.
How learn'd was that sagacious breed!
Who now (like them) the Greek can read?
As one of these, in days of yore,
Rummag'd a shop of learning o'er,
Not like our modern dealers, minding
Only the margin's breadth and binding,
A book his curious eye detains,
Where, with exactest care and pains,
Were every beast and bird pourtray'd,
That e'er the search of man survey'd;
Their natures and their powers were writ
With all the pride of human wit:
The page he with attention spread,
And thus remark'd on what he read:
"Man with strong reason is endow'd;
A beast scarce instinct is allow'd:
But, let this author's worth be try'd,
'Tis plain that neither was his guide.
Can he discern the different natures,
And weigh the power of other creatures,
Who by the partial work hath shown
He knows so little of his own?
How falsely is the spaniel drawn!
Did man from him first learn to fawn?
A dog proficient in the trade!
He the chief flatterer nature made!
Go, man! the ways of courts discern,
You'll find a spaniel still might learn.
How can the fox's theft and plunder
Provoke his censure or his wonder?
From courtiers' tricks and lawyers' arts,
The fox might well improve his parts.
The lion, wolf, and tiger's brood,
He curses, for their thirst of blood.
But is not man to man a prey?
Beasts kill for hunger, men for pay."
The bookseller, who heard him speak,
And saw him turn a page of Greek,
Thought, what a genius have I found!
Then thus address'd with bow profound:
"Learn'd Sir, if you'd employ your pen
Against the senseless sons of men,
Or write the history of Siam;
No man is better pay than I am.
Or, since you 're learn'd in Greek, let's see Something against the Trinity."
When wrinkling with a sneer his trunk,
Friend, quoth the elephant, you' re drunk:
E'en keep your money, and be wise;
Leave man on man to criticise:
For that you ne'er can want a pen
Among the senseless sons of men.
They unprovok'd will court the fray;
Envy's a sharper spur than pay.
No author ever spar'd a brother;
Wits are game cocks to one another."

FABLE XI.

The Peacock, the Turkey, and the Goose.

In beauty faults conspicuous grow;
The smallest speck is seen on snow.
As near a barn, by hunger led,
A peacock with the poultry fed,
All view'd him with an envious eye,
And mock'd his gaudy pageantry.
He, conscious of superior merit,
Contemns their base reviling spirit;
His state and dignity assumes,
And to the sun displays his plumes,
Which, like the heavens' o'er-arching skies,
Are spangled with a thousand eyes.
The circling rays, and varied light,
At once confound their dazzled sight;
On every tongue detraction burns,
And malice prompts their spleen by turns.
"Mark with what insolence and pride
The creature takes his haughty stride,
The turkey cries. Can spleen contain?
Sure never bird was half so vain!
But, were intrinsic merit seen,
We turkeys have the whiter skin!"
From tongue to tongue they caught abuse;
And next was heard the hissing goose:
"What hideous legs! what filthy claws;
I scorn to censure little flaws.
Then what a horrid squaling throat!
Ev'n owls are frighted at the note."
"True. Those are faults, the peacock cries;
My scream, my shanks, you may despise;
But such blind critics rail in vain.
What! overlook my radiant train!
Know, did my legs (your scorn and sport)
The turkey or the goose support,
And did ye scream with harsher sound,
Those faults in you had ne'er been found:
To all apparent beauties blind,
Each blemish strikes an envious mind.
Thus in assemblies have I seen
A nymph of brightest charms and mien,
Wake envy in each ugly face,
And buzzing scandal fills the place.

FABLE XII.

Cupid, Hymen, and Plutus.

As Cupid in Cythera's grove
Employ'd the lesser powers of love.
Some shape the bow, or fit the string,
Some give the taper shaft its wing,
Or turn the polish'd quiver's mould,
Or head the darts with temper'd gold.
Amid their toil and various care,
Thus Hymen, with assuming air,

Addreſs'd the god: "Thou purblind chit,
Of aukward and ill-judging wit.
If matches are not better made,
At once I muſt forſwear my trade.
You ſend me ſuch ill-coupled folks,
That 'tis a ſhame to ſell them yokes.
They ſquabble for a pin, a feather,
And wonder how they came together.
The huſband's ſullen, dogged, ſhy,
The wife grows flippant in reply:
He loves command and due reſtriction;
And ſhe as well likes contradiction:
She never ſlaviſhly ſubmits;
She'll have her will, or have her fits.
He this way tugs, ſhe th' other draws;
The man grows jealous, and with cauſe.
Nothing can ſave him but divorce;
And here the wife complains of courſe."
"When, ſays the boy, had I to do
With either your affairs or you?
I never idly ſpend my darts;
You trade in mercenary hearts.
For ſettlements the lawyer's fee'd;
Is my hand witneſs to the deed?
If they like cat and dog agree,
Go rail at Plutus, not at me."
Plutus appear'd, and ſaid, "Tis true,
In marriage, gold is all their view;
They ſeek not beauty, wit, or ſenſe,
And love is ſeldom the pretence.
All offer incenſe at my ſhrine,
And I alone the bargain ſign.
How can Belinda blame her fate
She only aſk'd a great eſtate.
Doris was rich enough, 'tis true;
Her lord muſt give her title too:
And every man, or rich or poor,
A fortune aſks, and aſks no more."
Avarice, whatever ſhape it bears,
Muſt ſtill be coupled with its cares.

FABLE XIII.

The tame Stag.

As a young ſtag the thicket paſt,
The branches held his antlers faſt.
A clown who ſaw the captive hung,
Acroſs the horns his halter flung.
Now ſafely hamper'd in the cord,
He bore the preſent to his lord.
His lord was pleas'd; as was the clown,
When he was tipp'd with half-a-crown.
The ſtag was brought before his wife.
The tender lady begg'd his life.
How ſleek's the ſkin! how ſpeck'd like ermine!
Sure never creature was ſo charming!
At firſt within the yard confin'd,
He flies and hides from all mankind;
Now bolder grown, with fix'd amaze,
And diſtant awe, preſumes to gaze;
Munches the linen on the lines,
And on a hood or apron dines:
He ſteals my little maſter's bread
Follows the ſervants to be fed;
Nearer and nearer now he ſtands,
To feel the praiſe of patting hands;
Examines every fiſt for meat,
And, though repuls'd, diſdains retreat;
Attacks again with level'd horns,
And man, that was his terror, ſcorns.
Such is the country maiden's fright,
When firſt a redcoat is in ſight;
Behind the door ſhe hides her face,
Next time at diſtance eyes the lace:
She now can all his terrors ſtand,
Nor from his ſqueeze withdraws her hand.
She plays familiar in his arms,
And every ſoldier hath his charms.
From tent to tent ſhe ſpreads her flame;
For cuſtom conquers fear and ſhame.

FABLE XIV.

The Monkey who had ſeen the World.

A MONKEY, to reform the times,
Reſolv'd to viſit foreign climes;
For men in diſtant regions roam,
To bring politer manners home.
So forth he fares, all toil defies:
Misfortune ſerves to make us wiſe.
At length the treacherous ſnare was laid;
Poor Pug was caught; to town convey'd;
There ſold. (How envy'd was his doom,
Made captive in a lady's room!)
Proud, as a lover, of his chains,
He day by day her favour gains.
Whene'er the duty of the day
The toilette calls, with mimic play
He twirls her knots, he cracks her fan,
Like any other gentleman.
In viſits too, his parts and wit,
When jeſts grew dull, were ſure to hit.
Proud with applauſe he thought his mind
In every courtly art refin'd;
Like Orpheus, burnt with public zeal,
To civilize the monkey-weal;
So watch'd occaſion, broke his chain,
And ſought his native woods again.
The hairy ſylvans round him preſs,
Aſtoniſh'd at his ſtrut and dreſs.
Some praiſe his ſleeve, and others glote
Upon his lich embroider'd coat,
His dapper perriwig commending,
With the black tail behind depending;
His powder'd back, above, below,
Like hoary froſts, or fleecy ſnow;
But all, with envy and deſire,
His fluttering ſhoulder-knot admire.
Hear and improve, he pertly cries;
I come to make a nation wiſe.
Weigh your own worth; ſupport your place,
The next in rank to human race.
In cities long I paſs'd my days,
Convers'd with men, and learn'd their ways.
Their dreſs, their courtly manners ſee;
Reform your ſtate, and copy me.
Seek ye to thrive? In flattery deal;
Your ſcorn, your hate, with that conceal,

Seem only to regard your friends,
But uſe them for your private ends.
Stint not to truth the flow of wit;
Be prompt to lie whene'er 'tis fit.
Pend all your force to ſpatter merit;
Scandal is converſation's ſpirit,
Boldly to every thing pretend,
And men your talents ſhall commend.
I knew the great. Obſerve me right;
So ſhall you grow, like man, polite.
He ſpoke, and bow'd. With muttering jaws
The wondering circle grinn'd applauſe.
Now, warm'd with malice, envy, ſpite,
Their moſt obliging friends they bite;
And, ſond to copy human ways,
Practiſe new miſchiefs all their days.
Thus the dull lad, too tall for ſchool,
With travel finiſhes the fool;
Studious of every coxcomb's airs,
He drinks, games, dreſſes, whores, and ſwears;
O'erlooks with ſcorn all virtuous arts,
For vice is fitted to his parts.

FABLE XV.

The Philoſopher and the Pheaſants.

The ſage, awak'd at early day,
Through the deep foreſt took his way;
Drawn by the muſic of the groves,
Along the winding gloom he roves:
From tree to tree the warbling throats
Prolong the ſweet alternate notes:
But, where he paſt, he terror threw,
The ſong broke ſhort, the warblers flew;
The thruſhes chatter'd with affright,
And nightingales abhorr'd his ſight:
All animals before him ran,
To ſhun the hateful ſight of man.
Whence is this dread of every creature?
Fly they our figure, or our nature!
As thus he walk'd in muſing thought,
His ear imperfect accents caught;
With cautious ſtep he nearer drew,
By the thick ſhade conceal'd from view.
High on the branch a pheaſant ſtood,
Around her all her liſtening brood;
Proud of the bleſſings of her neſt,
She thus a mother's care expreſs'd.
"No dangers here ſhall circumvent,
Within the woods enjoy content.
Sooner the hawk or vulture truſt
Than man, of animals the worſt.
In him ingratitude you find,
A vice peculiar to the kind.
The ſheep whoſe annual fleece is dy'd
To guard his health, and ſerve his pride,
Forc'd from his fold and native plain,
Is in the cruel ſhambles ſlain.
The ſwarms who with induſtrious ſkill,
His hives with wax and honey fill,
In vain whole ſummer-days employ'd,
Their ſtores are ſold, the race deſtroy'd.
What tribute from the gooſe is paid!
Does not her wing all ſcience aid?
Does it not lovers' hearts explain,
And drudge to raiſe the merchant's gain?
What now rewards this general uſe?
He takes the quills, and eats the gooſe.
Man then avoid, deteſt his ways,
So ſafety ſhall prolong your days.
When ſervices are thus acquitted,
Be ſure we pheaſants muſt be ſpitted."

FABLE XIV.

The Pin and the Needle.

A pin who long had ſerv'd a beauty,
Proficient in the toilette's duty,
Had form'd her ſleeve, confin'd her hair,
Or given her knot a ſmarter air,
Now neareſt to her heart was plac'd,
Now in her mantua's tail diſgrac'd:
But could ſhe partial fortune blame,
Who ſaw her lovers ſerv'd the ſame?
At length from all her honours caſt,
Through various turns of life ſhe paſt;
Now glitter'd on a taylor's arm,
Now kept a beggar's infant warm;
Now, rang'd within a miſer's coat,
Contributes to his yearly groat;
Now, rais'd again from low approach,
She viſits in the doctor's coach:
Here, there, by various fortune toſt,
At laſt in Greſham hall was loſt.
Charm'd with the wonders of the ſhow,
On every ſide, above, below,
She now of this or that inquires,
What leaſt was underſtood admires.
'Tis plain, each thing ſo ſtruck her mind,
Her head's of virtuoſo kind.
"And pray what's this, and this, dear Sir?"
"A needle," ſays th' interpreter.
She knew the name; and thus the fool
Addreſs'd her as a tailor's tool.
"A needle with that filthy ſtone,
Quite idle, all with ruſt o'ergrown;
You better might employ your parts,
And aid the ſempſtreſs in her arts;
But tell me how the friendſhip grew
Between that paltry flint and you."
"Friend, ſays the needle, ceaſe to blame;
I follow real worth and fame.
Know'ſt thou the loadſtone's power and art,
That virtue virtues can impart?
Of all his talents I partake:
Who then can ſuch a friend forſake?
'Tis I direct the pilot's hand
To ſhun the rocks and treacherous ſand:
By me the diſtant world is known,
And either India is our own.
Had I with milliners been bred,
What had I been? the guide of thread,
And drudg'd as vulgar needles do,
Of no more conſequence than you."

FABLE XVII.

The Shepherd's Dog and the Wolf.

A wolf, with hunger fierce and bold,
Ravag'd the plains, and thinn'd the fold;

Deep in the wood ſecure he lay,
The thefts of night regal'd the day.
In vain the ſhepherd's wakeful care
Had ſpread the toils, and watch'd the ſnare;
In vain the dog purſued his pace,
The fleeter robber mock'd the chaſe.
As Lightfoot rang'd the foreſt round,
By chance his foe's retreat he found.
Let us a while the war ſuſpend,
And reaſon as from friend to friend.
" A truce?" replies the wolf. 'Tis done.
The dog the parley thus begun.
" How can that ſtrong intrepid mind
Attack a weak defenceleſs kind?
Thoſe jaws ſhould prey on nobler food,
And drink the boar and lion's blood.
Great ſouls with generous pity melt,
Which coward tyrants never felt.
How harmleſs is our fleecy care!
Be brave, and let thy mercy ſpare."
" Friend, ſays the wolf, the matter weigh;
Nature deſign'd us beaſts of prey;
As ſuch, when hunger finds a treat,
'Tis neceſſary wolves ſhould eat.
If, mindful of the bleating weal,
Thy boſom burn with real zeal,
Hence, and thy tyrant lord beſeech;
To him repeat the moving ſpeech:
A wolf eats ſheep but now and then,
Ten thouſands are devour'd by men.
An open foe may prove a curſe,
But a pretended friend is worſe."

FABLE XVIII.

The Painter who pleaſed nobody and every body.

Lest men ſuſpect your tale untrue,
Keep probability in view.
The traveller leaping o'er thoſe bounds,
The credit of his book confounds.
Who with his tongue hath armies routed,
Makes even his real courage doubted.
But flattery never ſeems abſurd;
The flatter'd always take your word:
Impoſſibilities ſeem juſt;
They take the ſtrongeſt praiſe on truſt.
Hyperboles, though ne'er ſo great,
Will ſtill come ſhort of ſelf-conceit.
So very like a painter drew,
That every eye the picture knew,
He hit complexion, feature, air,
So juſt, the life itſelf was there.
No flattery with his colours laid,
To bloom reſtor'd the faded maid;
He gave each muſcle all its ſtrength;
The mouth, the chin, the noſe's length;
His honeſt pencil touch'd with truth,
And mark'd the date of age and youth.
He loſt his friends, his practice fail'd;
Truth ſhould not always be reveal'd:
In duſty piles his pictures lay,
For no one ſent the ſecond pay.
Two buſtos, fraught with every grace,
A Venus' and Apollo's face,
He plac'd in view; reſolv'd to pleaſe,
Whoever ſat he drew from theſe,
From theſe corrected every feature,
And ſpirited each aukward creature.
All things were ſet; the hour was come,
His pallet ready o'er his thumb.
My lord appear'd; and ſeated right,
In proper attitude and light,
The painter look'd, he ſketch'd the piece,
Then dipt his pencil, talk'd of Greece,
Of Titian's tints, of Guido's air;
Thoſe eyes, my lord, the ſpirit there
Might well a Raphael's hand require,
To give them all the native fire;
The features, fraught with ſenſe and wit,
You'll grant, are very hard to hit;
But yet with patience you ſhall view
As much as paint and art can do."
Obſerve the work. My Lord replied,
" Till now I thought my mouth was wide;
Beſides, my noſe is ſomewhat long:
Dear Sir, for me, 'tis far too young."
" Oh! pardon me, the artiſt cry'd;
In this we painters muſt decide.
The piece ev'n common eyes muſt ſtrike,
I warrant it extremely like."
My Lord examin'd it anew;
No looking-glaſs ſeem'd half ſo true.
A lady came with borrow'd grace
He from his Venus form'd her face.
Her lover prais'd the painter's art;
So like the picture in his heart!
To every age ſome charm he lent;
Ev'n beauties were almoſt content.
Through all the town his art they prais'd;
His cuſtom grew, his price was rais'd.
Had he the real likeneſs ſhown,
Would any man the picture own?
But, when thus happily he wrought,
Each found the likeneſs in his thought.

FABLE XIX.

The Lion and the Cub.

How fond are men of rule and place,
Who court it from the mean and baſe!
Theſe cannot bear an equal nigh,
But from ſuperior merit fly.
They love the cellar's vulgar joke,
And loſe their hours in ale and ſmoke.
There o'er ſome petty club preſide;
So poor, ſo paltry, is their pride!
Nay, ev'n with fools whole nights will ſit,
In hopes to be ſupreme in wit.
If theſe can read, to theſe I write,
To ſet their worth in trueſt light.
A lion cub, of ſordid mind,
Avoided all the lion kind;
Fond of applauſe he ſought the feaſts
Of vulgar and ignoble beaſts;
With aſſes all his time he ſpent,
Their clubs perpetual preſident.
He caught their manners, looks, and airs;
An aſs in every thing but ears!

If e'er his Highneſs meant a joke,
They grinn'd applauſe before he ſpoke;
But at each word what ſhouts of praiſe!
Good gods! how natural he brays!
Elate with flattery and conceit,
He ſeeks his royal ſire's retreat;
Forward and fond to ſhow his parts,
His Highneſs brays; the lion ſtarts.
"Puppy! that curs'd vociferation
Betrays thy life and converſation:
Coxcombs, an ever-noiſy race,
Are trumpets of their own diſgrace."
"Why ſo ſevere? the cub replies;
Our ſenate always held me wiſe."
"How weak is pride: returns the ſire:
All fools are vain when fools admire!
But know, what ſtupid aſſes prize,
Lions and noble beaſts deſpiſe."

FABLE XX.

The Old Hen and the Cock.

RESTRAIN your child; you'll ſoon believe
The text which ſays we ſprung from Eve.
As an old hen led forth her train,
And ſeem'd to peck to ſhow the grain,
She rak'd the chaff, ſhe ſcratch'd the ground,
And glean'd the ſpacious yard around.
A giddy chick, to try her wings,
On the well's narrow margin ſprings,
And prone ſhe drops. The mother's breaſt
All day with ſorrow was poſſeſt.
A cock ſhe met; her ſon ſhe knew;
And in her heart affection grew.
"My ſon, ſays ſhe, I grant your years
Have reach'd beyond a mother's cares.
I ſee you vigorous, ſtrong, and bold;
I hear with joy your triumphs told.
'Tis not from cocks thy fate I dread;
But let thy ever-wary tread
Avoid yon well; that fatal place
Is ſure perdition to our race.
Print this my counſel on thy breaſt:
To the juſt gods I leave the reſt."
He thank'd her care; yet day by day
His boſom burn'd to diſobey,
And every time the well he ſaw,
Scorn'd in his heart the fooliſh law:
Near and more near each day he drew,
And long'd to try the dangerous view.
"Why was this idle charge? he cries;
Let courage female fears deſpiſe.
Or did ſhe doubt my heart was brave,
And therefore this injunction gave:
Or does her harveſt ſtore the place
A treaſure for her younger race?
And would ſhe thus my ſearch prevent?
I ſtand reſolv'd, and dare th' event."
Thus ſaid, he mounts the margin's round,
And pries into the depth profound.
He ſtretch'd his neck; and from below
With ſtretching neck advanc'd a foe:
With wrath his ruffled plumes he rears,
The foe with ruffled plumes appears.
Threat anſwer'd threat; his fury grew;
Headlong to meet the war he flew;
But, when the watery death he found,
He thus lamented as he drown'd:
"I ne'er had been in this condition,
But for my mother's prohibition."

FABLE XXI.

The Rat-catcher and Cats.

THE rats by night ſuch miſchief did,
Betty was every morning chid:
They undermin'd whole ſides of bacon,
Her cheeſe was ſapp'd, her tarts were taken;
Her paſties, fenc'd with thickeſt paſte,
Were all demoliſh'd and laid waſte:
She curs'd the Cat, for want of duty,
Who left her foes a conſtant booty.
An engineer, of noted ſkill,
Engag'd to ſtop the growing ill.
From room to room he now ſurveys
Their haunts, their works, their ſecret ways;
Finds where they 'ſcape an ambuſcade,
And whence the nightly ſally's made.
An envious Cat from place to place,
Unſeen, attends his ſilent pace:
She ſaw that, if his trade went on,
The purring race muſt be undone;
So ſecretly removes his baits,
And every ſtratagem defeats.
Again he ſets the poiſon'd toils;
And Puſs again the labour foils.
"What foe (to fruſtrate my deſigns)
My ſchemes thus nightly countermines?
Incens'd, he cries, this very hour
The wretch ſhall bleed beneath my power."
So ſaid, a ponderous trap he brought,
And in the fact poor Puſs was caught.
"Smuggler, ſays he, thou ſhalt be made
A victim to our loſs of trade."
The captive Cat, with piteous mews,
For pardon, life, and freedom ſues.
"A ſiſter of the ſcience ſpare;
One intereſt is our common care."
"What inſolence! the Man reply'd;
Shall Cats with us the game divide?
Were all your interloping band
Extinguiſh'd, or expell'd the land.
We Rat-catchers might raiſe our fees,
Sole guardians of a nation's cheeſe!"
A Cat, who ſaw the lifted knife,
Thus ſpoke, and ſav'd her ſiſter's life.
"In every age and clime we ſee,
Two of a trade can ne'er agree.
Each hates his neighbour for encroaching:
'Squire ſtigmatizes 'ſquire for poaching;
Beauties with beauties are in arms,
And ſcandal pelts each others charms;
Kings, too, their neighbour kings dethrone,
In hope to make the world their own:
But let us limit our deſires,
Not war like beauties, kings, and 'ſquires;
For though we both one prey purſue,
There's game enough for us and you."

FABLE XXII.

The Goat without a Beard.

'Tis certain that the modish passions
Descend among the crowd like fashions.
Excuse me, then, if pride, conceit,
(The manners of the fair and great)
I give to monkies, asses, dogs,
Fleas, owls, goats, butterflies, and hogs,
I say that these are proud: what then?
I never said they equal men.
A Goat (as vain as goat can be)
Affected singularity:
Whene'er a thymy bank he found,
He roll'd upon the fragrant ground,
And then with fond attention stood,
Fix'd o'er his image in the flood.
"I hate my frowzy beard, he cries,
My youth is lost in this disguise.
Did not the females know my vigour,
Well might they lothe this reverend figure."
Resolv'd to smooth his shaggy face,
He sought the barber of the place.
A flippant monkey, spruce and smart,
Hard by, profess'd the dapper art:
His pole with pewter-basons hung,
Black rotten teeth in order strung,
Rang'd cups, that in the window stood,
Lin'd with red rags to look like blood;
Did well his threefold trade explain,
Who shav'd, drew teeth, and breath'd a vein.
The Goat he welcomes with an air,
And seats him in his wooden chair:
Mouth, nose, and cheek, the lather hides;
Light, smooth, and swift, the razor glides.
"I hope your custom, Sir, says Pug,
Sure never face was half so snug!"
The Goat, impatient for applause,
Swift to the neighbouring hill withdraws.
The shaggy people grinn'd and star'd.
"Heigh-day! what's here? without a beard!
Say, Brother, whence the dire disgrace?
What envious hand hath robb'd your face?"
When thus the fop, with smiles of scorn,
"Are beards by civil nations worn?
Ev'n Muscovites have mow'd their chins.
Shall we, like formal Capuchins,
Stubborn in pride, retain the mode,
And bear about the hairy load?
Whene'er we through the village stray,
Are we not mock'd along the way,
Insulted with loud shouts of scorn,
By boys our beards disgrac'd and torn?"
"Were you no more with goats to dwell,
Brother, I grant you reason well,"
Replies a bearded chief. "Beside,
If boys can mortify thy pride,
How wilt thou stand the ridicule
Of our whole flock? Affected fool!"
Coxcombs, distinguish'd from the rest,
To all but coxcombs are a jest.

FABLE XXIII.

The Old Woman and her Cats.

Who friendship with a knave hath made,
Ravag'd a partner in the trade.
The matron, who conducts abroad
A willing nymph, is thought a bawd;
And, if a modest girl is seen
With one who cures a lover's spleen,
We guess her not extremely nice,
And only wish to know her price.
'Tis thus that on the choice of friends
Our good or evil name depends.
A wrinkled hag, of wicked fame,
Beside a little smoky flame
Sat hovering, pinch'd with age and frost;
Her shrivell'd hands, with veins emboss'd,
Upon her knees her weight sustains,
While palsy shook her crazy brains:
She mumbles forth her backward prayers,
An untam'd scold of fourscore years.
About her swarm'd a numerous brood
Of cats, who, lank with hunger, mew'd,
Teaz'd with their cries, her choler grew,
And thus she sputter'd. "Hence, ye crew!
Fool that I was, to entertain
Such imps, such fiends, a hellish train!
Had ye been never hous'd and nurs'd,
I for a witch had ne'er been curs'd.
To you I owe that crowds of boys
Worry me with eternal noise;
Straws laid across my pace retard,
The horse shoe's nail'd (each threshold's guard);
The stunted broom the wenches hide,
For fear that I should up and ride;
They stick with pins my bleeding seat,
And bid me show my secret teat."
"To hear you prate, would vex a saint;
Who hath most reason of complaint?"
Replies a Cat. "Let's come to proof.
Had we ne'er starv'd beneath your roof,
We had, like others of our race,
In credit liv'd as beasts of chase.
'Tis infamy to serve a hag;
Cats are thought imps, her broom a nag;
And boys against our lives combine,
Because 'tis said your cats have nine."

FABLE XXIV.

The Butterfly and the Snail.

All upstarts, insolent in place,
Remind us of their vulgar race.
As in the sunshine of the morn
A butterfly (but newly born)
Sat proudly perking on a rose,
With pert conceit his bosom glows;
His wings (all glorious to behold)
Bedropt with azure, jet, and gold,
Wide he displays; the spangled dew
Reflects his eyes and various hue.
His now-forgotten friend, a snail,
Beneath his house, with slimy trail,
Crawls o'er the grass; whom when he spies,
In wrath he to the gardner cries:
"What means yon peasant's daily toil,
From choking weeds to rid the soil?
Why wake you to the morning's care?
Why with new arts correct the year?
Why grows the peach with crimson hue?
And why the plumb's inviting blue?

Were they to feaſt his taſte deſign'd,
That vermin of voracious kind!
Cruſh then the flow, the pilfering race,
So purge thy garden from diſgrace."
"What arrogance! the ſnail reply'd;
How inſolent is upſtart pride!
Hadſt thou not thus, with inſult vain,
Provok'd my patience to complain,
I had conceal'd thy meaner birth,
Nor trac'd thee to the ſcum of earth:
Or ſcarce nine ſuns have wak'd the hours,
To ſwell the fruit, and paint the flowers,
Ere I thy humbler life ſurvey'd,
In baſe, in ſordid guiſe array'd;
A hideous inſect, vile, unclean,
You dragg'd a ſlow and noiſome train;
And from your ſpider bowels drew
Foul film, and ſpun the dirty clue.
I own my humble life, good friend;
Snail was I born, and ſnail ſhall end.
And what's a butterfly? at beſt
He's but a caterpillar dreſt;
And all thy race (a numerous ſeed)
Shall prove of caterpillar breed."

FABLE XXV.

The Scold and the Parrot.

The huſband thus reprov'd his wife:
"Who deals in ſlander, lives in ſtrife.
Art thou the herald of diſgrace,
Denouncing war to all thy race;
Can nothing quell thy thunder's rage,
Which ſpares nor friend, nor ſex, nor age?
That vixen tongue of your's, my dear,
Alarms our neighbours far and near.
Good gods! 'tis like a rolling river,
That murmuring flows, and flows for ever!
Ne'er tir'd, perpetual diſcord ſowing:
Like fame, it gathers ſtrength by going."
"Heigh-day!" the flippant tongue replies,
"How ſolemn is the fool! how wiſe!
Is nature's choiceſt gift debarr'd?
Nay, frown not; for I will be heard.
Women of late are finely ridden,
A parrot's privilege forbidden!
You praiſe his talk, his ſqualling ſong;
But wives are always in the wrong."
Now reputations flew in pieces
Of mothers, daughters, aunts, and nieces:
She ran the parrot's language o'er,
Bawd, huſſy, drunkard, ſlattern, whore;
On all the ſex ſhe vents her fury,
Tries and condemns without a jury.
At once the torrent of her words
Alarm'd cat, monkey, dogs, and birds:
All join their forces to confound her,
Puſs ſpits, the monkey chatters round her;
The yelping cur her heels aſſaults;
The magpie blabs out all her faults;
Poll, in the uproar, from his cage,
With this rebuke outſcream'd her rage.
"A parrot is for talking priz'd,
But prattling women are deſpis'd.
She who attacks another's honour,
Draws every living thing upon her.
Think, madam, when you ſtretch your lungs,
That all your neighbours too have tongues:
One ſlander muſt ten thouſand get;
The world with intereſt pays the debt."

FABLE XXVI.

The Cur and the Maſtiff.

A sneaking cur, the maſter's ſpy,
Rewarded for his daily lie,
With ſecret jealouſies and fears
Set all together by the ears.
Poor puſs to-day was in diſgrace,
Another cat ſupply'd her place;
The hound was beat, the maſtiff chid,
The monkey was the room forbid;
Each to his deareſt friend grew ſhy,
And none could tell the reaſon why.
A plan to rob the houſe was laid:
The thief with love ſeduc'd the maid,
Cajol'd the cur, and ſtroak'd his head,
And bought his ſecrecy with bread;
He next the maſtiff's honour try'd,
Whoſe honeſt jaws the bribe deſy'd;
He ſtretch'd his hand to proffer more:
The ſurly dog his fingers tore.
Swift ran the cur; with indignation
The maſter took his information.
"Hang him, the villain's curs'd," he cries;
And round his neck the halter ties.
The dog his humble ſuit preferr'd,
And beg'd in juſtice to be heard.
The maſter ſate. On either hand
The cited dogs confronting ſtand;
The cur the bloody tale relates,
And, like a lawyer, aggravates.
"Judge not unheard (the maſtiff cry'd),
But weigh the cauſe of either ſide.
Think not that treachery can be juſt;
Take not informers' words on truſt;
They ope their hand to every pay,
And you and me by turns betray."
He ſpoke; and all the truth appear'd:
The cur was hang'd, the maſtiff clear'd.

FABLE XXVII.

The Sick Man and the Angel.

"Is there no hope?" the ſick man ſaid.
The ſilent doctor ſhook his head,
And took his leave with ſigns of ſorrow,
Deſpairing of his fee to-morrow.
When thus the man, with gaſping breath;
"I feel the chilling wound of death.
Since I muſt bid the world adieu,
Let me my former life review.
I grant my bargains well were made,
But all men over-reach in trade;
'Tis ſelf-defence in each profeſſion:
Sure ſelf-defence is no tranſgreſſion.
The little portion in my hands,
By good ſecurity on lands

Is well increas'd. If, unawares,
My juſtice to myſelf and heirs
Hath let my debtor rot in jail,
For want of good ſufficient bail;
If I, by writ, or bond, or deed,
Reduc'd a family to need;
My will hath made the world amends;
My hope on charity depends
When I am number'd with the dead,
And all my pious gifts are read,
By heaven and earth 'twill then be known
My charities were amply ſhown."
An angel came. "Ah, friend! (he cry'd).
No more in flattering hope confide.
Can thy good deeds in former times
Outweigh the balance of thy crimes?
What widow or what orphan prays
To crown thy life with length of days?
A pious action's in thy power,
Embrace with joy the happy hour.
Now, while you draw the vital air,
Prove your intention is ſincere:
This inſtant give a hundred pound:
Your neighbours want, and you abound."
"But why ſuch haſte, the ſick man whines;
Who knows as yet what Heaven deſigns?
Perhaps I may recover ſtill,
That ſum and more are in my will."
"Fool, ſays the viſion, now 'tis plain
Your life, your ſoul, your Heaven, was gain.
From every ſide, with all your might,
You ſcrap'd, and ſcrap'd beyond your right;
And after death would fain atone,
By giving what is not your own."
"While there is life, there's hope, he cry'd;
Then why ſuch haſte?" ſo groan'd and dy'd.

FABLE XXVII.

The Perſian, the Sun, and the Cloud.

Is there a bard whom genius fires,
Whoſe every thought the god inſpires?
When envy reads the nervous lines,
She frets, ſhe rails, ſhe raves, ſhe pines;
Her hiſſing ſnakes with venom ſwell;
She calls her venal train from hell:
The ſervile fiends her nod obey,
And all Curll's authors are in pay.
Fame calls up calumny and ſpite:
Thus ſhadow owes its birth to light.
As, proſtrate to the god of day,
With heart devout, a Perſian lay,
His invocation thus begun:
"Parent of light! all-ſeeing ſun!
Prolific beam, whoſe rays diſpenſe
The various gifts of Providence,
Accept our praiſe, our daily prayer;
Smile on our fields, and bleſs the year."
A cloud, who mock'd his grateful tongue,
The day with ſudden darkneſs hung;
With pride and envy ſwell'd, aloud
A voice thus thunder'd from the cloud.
"Weak is this gaudy god of thine,
Whom I at will forbid to ſhine.
Shall I nor vows nor incenſe know?
Where praiſe is due, the praiſe beſtow."
With fervent zeal the Perſian mov'd,
Thus the proud calumny reprov'd:
"It was that god who claims my prayer
Who gave thee birth, and rais'd thee there;
When o'er his beams the veil is thrown,
Thy ſubſtance is but plainer ſhown:
A paſſing gale, a puff of wind,
Diſpels thy thickeſt troops combin'd."
The gale aroſe; the vapour toſt
(The ſport of winds) in air was loſt;
The glorious orb the day refines.
Thus envy breaks, thus merit ſhines.

FABLE XXIX.

The Fox at the point of Death.

A FOX, in life's extreme decay,
Weak, ſick, and faint, expiring lay:
All appetite had left his maw,
And age diſarm'd his mumbling jaw.
His numerous race around him ſtand,
To learn their dying ſire's command:
He rais'd his head with whining moan,
And thus was heard the feeble tone:
"Ah! Sons! from evil ways depart;
My crimes lie heavy on my heart.
See, ſee, the murder'd geeſe appear!
Why are thoſe bleeding turkeys there;
Why all around this cackling train,
Who haunt my ears for chicken ſlain?"
The hungry foxes round them ſtar'd,
And for the promis'd feaſt prepar'd.
"Where, Sir, is all this dainty cheer?
Nor turkey, gooſe, nor hen, is here.
Theſe are the phantoms of your brain;
And your ſons lick their lips in vain."
"O gluttons! ſays the drooping ſire,
Reſtrain inordinate deſire.
Your liquoriſh taſte you ſhall deplore,
When peace of conſcience is no more.
Does not the hound betray our pace,
And gins and guns deſtroy our race?
Thieves dread the ſearching eye of power!
And never feel the quiet hour
Old age (which few of us ſhall know)
Now puts a period to my woe.
Would you true happineſs attain,
Let honeſty your paſſions rein;
So live in credit and eſteem,
And the good name you loſt redeem."
"The counſel's good, a fox replies,
Could we perform what you adviſe.
Think what our anceſtors have done;
A line of thieves from ſon to ſon.
To us deſcends the long diſgrace,
And infamy hath mark'd our race.
Though we, like harmleſs ſheep, ſhould feed,
Honeſt in thought, in word, and deed,
Whatever hen-rooſt is decreas'd,
We ſhall be thought to ſhare the feaſt.
The change ſhall never be believ'd.
A loſt good name is ne'er retriev'd."
"Nay, then, replies the feeble fox,
(But, hark! I hear a hen that clucks)
Go; but be moderate in your food;
A chicken, too, might do me good."

FABLE XXX.

The ſetting Dog and the Partridge.

The ranging dog the ſtubble tries,
And ſearches every breeze that flies;
The ſcent grows warm: with cautious fear
He creeps, and points the covey near;
The men in ſilence, far behind,
Conſcious of game, the net unbind.
A partridge, with experience wiſe,
The fraudful preparation ſpies;
She mocks their toils, alarms her brood,
The covey ſprings and ſeeks the wood;
But ere, her certain wings ſhe tries:
Thus, to the creepng ſpaniel cries:
"Thou fawning ſlave to man's deceit,
Thou pimp of luxry, ſneaking cheat,
Of thy whole ſpecies thou diſgrace;
Dogs ſhould diſown thee of their race!
For, if I judge their native parts,
They're born with honeſt open hearts;
And, ere they ſerv'd man's wicked ends,
Were generous foes, or real friends."
When thus the dog, with ſcornful ſmile:
"Secure of wing, thou dar'ſt revile.
Clowns are to poliſh'd manners blind;
How ignoraut is the ruſtic mind!
My worth ſagacious courtiers ſee,
And to preferment riſe, like me.
The thriving pimp who beauty ſets,
How oft enhanc'd a nation's debts:
Friend ſets his friend, without regard,
And miniſters his ſkill reward.
Thus train'd by man, I learn'd his ways;
And growing favour feaſts my days."
"I might have gueſs'd, the partridge ſaid,
The place where you were train'd and fed;
Servants are apt, and in a trice
Ape to a hair their maſter's vice.
You came from court, you ſay. Adieu!"
She ſaid, and to the covey flew.

FABLE XXXI.

The univerſal Apparition.

A rake, by every paſſion rul'd,
With every vice his youth had cool'd;
Diſeaſe his tainted blood aſſails;
His ſpirits droop, his vigour fails:
With ſecret ills at home he pines,
And, like infirm old age, declines.
As, twing'd with pain, he penſive ſits,
And raves, and prays, and ſwears, by fits,
A ghaſtly phantom, lean and wan,
Before him roſe, and thus began:
"My name, perhaps, hath reach'd your ear;
Attend, and be advis'd by Care.
Nor love, nor honour, wealth, nor power,
Can give the heart a cheerful hour,
When health is loſt. Be timely wiſe:
With health all taſte of pleaſure flies."
Thus ſaid, the phantom diſappears.
The wary counſel wak'd his fears:
He now from all exceſs abſtains,
With phyſic purifies his veins;
And, to procure a ſober life,
Reſolves to venture on a wife.
But now again the ſprite aſcends,
Where'er he walks, his ear attends,
Inſinuates that beauty's frail,
That perſeverence muſt prevail;
With jealouſies his brain inflames,
And whiſpers all her lovers names.
In other hours ſhe repreſents
His houſehold charge, his annual rents,
Increaſing debts, perplexing duns,
And nothing for his younger ſons.
Straight all his thought to gain he turns,
And with the thirſt of lucre burns.
But, when poſſeſs'd of fortune's ſtore,
The ſpectre haunts him more and more;
Sets want and miſery in view,
Bold thieves and all the murdering crew;
Alarms him with eternal frights,
Inſeſt his dream, or wakes his nights.
How ſhall he chaſe this hideous gueſt?
Power may perhaps protect his reſt.
To power he roſe. Again the ſprite
Beſets him morning, noon, and night;
Talks of ambition's tottering ſeat,
How envy perſecutes the great,
Of rival hate, of treacherous friends,
And what diſgrace his fall attends.
The court he quits, to fly from Care,
And ſeeks the peace of rural air:
His groves, his fields, amus'd his hours;
He prun'd his trees, he rais'd his flowers.
But care again his ſteps purſues,
Warns him of blaſts, of blighting dews,
Of plundering inſects, ſnails, and rains,
And droughts that ſtarv'd the labour'd plains.
Abroad, at home, the ſpectre's there;
In vain we ſeek to fly from Care.
At length he thus the ghoſt addreſt:
"Since thou muſt be my conſtant gueſt,
Be kind, and follow me no more;
For Care, by right, ſhould go before."

FABLE XXXII.

The two Owls and the Sparrow.

Two formal owls together ſat,
Conferring thus in ſolemn chat:
"How is the modern taſte decay'd!
Where's the reſpect to wiſdom paid?
Our worth the Grecian ſages knew;
They gave our ſires the honour due;
They weigh'd the dignity of fowls,
And pry'd into the depth of owls.
Athens, the ſeat of learned fame,
With general voice rever'd our name,
On merit title was conferr'd,
And all ador'd th' Athenian bird."
"Brother, you reaſon well, replies
The ſolemn mate with half-ſhut eyes.
Right. Athens was the ſeat of learning,
And truly wiſdom is diſcerning.
Beſides, on Pallas' helm we ſit,
The type and ornament of wit:

But now, alas! we're quite neglected,
And a pert ſparrow's more reſpected."
A ſparrow, who was lodg'd beſide,
O'erhears them ſooth each other's pride;
And thus he nimbly vents his heat:
"Who meets a fool muſt find conceit.
I grant you were at Athens grac'd;
And on Minerva's helm were plac'd;
But every bird that wings the ſky,
Except an owl, can tell you why:
From hence they taught their ſchools to know
How falſe we judge by outward ſhow;
That we ſhould never looks eſteem,
Since fools as wiſe as you might ſeem.
Would ye contempt and ſcorn avoid,
Let your vain-glory be deſtroy'd;
Humble your arrogance of thought,
Purſue the ways by nature taught:
So ſhall you find delicious fare,
And grateful farmers praiſe your care;
So ſhall ſleek mice your chaſe reward,
And no keen cat find more regard."

FABLE XXXIII.

The Courtier and Proteus.

Whenever a courtier's out of place,
The country ſhelters his diſgrace;
Where, doom'd to exerciſe and health,
His houſe and gardens own his wealth.
He builds new ſchemes, in hope to gain
The plunder of another reign;
Like Philip's ſon, would fain be doing,
And ſighs for other realms to ruin.
As one of theſe (without his wand)
Penſive along the winding ſtrand
Employ'd the ſolitary hour,
In projects to regain his powrr,
The waves in ſpreading circles ran,
Proteus aroſe, and thus began:
"Came you from court? for in your mien
A ſelf-important air is ſeen."
He frankly own'd his friends had trick'd him,
And how he fell his party's victim.
"Know, ſays the god, by matchleſs ſkill
I change to every ſhape at will;
But yet, I'm told, at court you ſee
Thoſe who preſume to rival me"
Thus ſaid: a ſnake, with hideous trail,
Proteus extends his ſcaly mail.
"Know, ſays the man, though proud in place,
All courtiers are of reptile race
Like you, they take that dreadful form,
Baſk in the ſun, and fly the ſtorm;
With malice hiſs, with envy glote,
And for convenience change their coat;
With new-got luſtre rear their head,
Though on a dunghill born and bred."
Sudden the god a lion ſtands;
He ſhakes his mane, he ſpurns the ſands.
Now a fierce lynx, with fiery glare;
A wolf, an aſs, a fox, a bear.
"Had I ne'er liv'd at court, he cries,
Such transformations might ſurpriſe;
But there, in queſt of daily game,
Each able courtier acts the ſame;
Wolves, lions, lynxes, while in place,
Their friends and fellows are their chaſe.
They play the bear's and foxe's part,
Now rob by force, now ſteal with art.
They ſometimes in the ſenate bray,
Or, chang'd again to beaſts of prey,
Down from the lion to the ape,
Practiſe the frauds of every ſhape."
So ſaid: upon the god he flies,
In cords the ſtruggling captive ties.
"Now, Proteus! now (to truth compell'd)
Speak, and confeſs thy art excell'd.
Uſe ſtrength, ſurpriſe, or what you will,
The courtier finds evaſions ſtill;
Not to be bound by any ties,
And never forc'd to leave his lies."

FABLE XXXIV.

The Maſtiff.

Those who in quarrels interpoſe,
Muſt often wipe a bloody noſe.
A maſtiff, of true Engliſh blood,
Lov'd fighting better than his food.
When dogs were ſnarling for a bone,
He long'd to make the war his own,
And often found (when two contend)
To interpoſe obtain'd his end.
He glory'd in his limping pace;
The ſcars of honour ſeam'd his face;
In every limb a gaſh appears,
And frequent fights retrench'd his ears.
As on a time he heard from far
Two dogs engag'd in noiſy war,
Away he ſcours, and lays about him,
Reſolv'd no fray ſhould be without him.
Forth from his yard a tanner flies,
And to the bold intruder cries:
"A cudgel ſhall correct your manners:
Whence ſprung this curſed hate to tanners?
While on my dog you vent your ſpite,
Sirrah! 'tis me you dare not bite."
To ſee the battle thus perplex'd,
With equal rage a butcher, vex'd,
Hoarſe-screaming from the circled crowd,
To the curs'd maſtiff cries aloud:
Both Hockleyhole and Marybone
The combats of my dog have known:
He ne'er, like bullies, coward-hearted,
Attacks in public, to be parted.
Think not, raſh fool, to ſhare his fame;
Be his the honour, or the ſhame."
Thus ſaid, they ſwore, and rav'd like thunder,
Then dragg'd their faſten'd dogs aſunder;
While clubs and kicks from every ſide
Rebounding from the maſtiff's hide.
All reeking now with ſweat and blood,
A while the parted warriors ſtood;
Then pour'd upon the meddling foe,
Who, worried, howl'd and ſprawl'd below.
He roſe; and limping from the fray,
By both ſides mangled, ſneak'd away.

FABLE XXXV.

The Barley-mow and the Dunghill.

How many saucy airs we meet
From Temple-bar to Aldgate-street!
Proud rogues, who shared the South-sea prey,
And sprung like mushrooms in a day!
They think it mean to condescend
To know a brother or a friend;
They blush to hear their mother's name,
And by their pride expose their shame.
As cross his yard, at early day,
A careful farmer took his way,
He stopp'd; and, leaning on his fork,
Observ'd the flail's incessant work.
In thought he measur'd all his store,
His geese, his hogs, he number'd o'er;
In fancy weigh'd the fleeces shorn,
And multiply'd the next year's corn.
A barley-mow, which stood beside,
Thus to its musing master cry'd:
"Say, good Sir, is it fit or right
To treat me with neglect and slight?
Me, who contribute to your cheer,
And raise your mirth with ale and beer?
Why thus insulted, thus disgrac'd,
And that vile dunghill near me plac'd?
Are those poor sweepings of a groom,
That filthy sight, that nauseous fume,
Meet objects here? Command it hence;
A thing so mean must give offence."
The humble dunghill thus reply'd:
"Thy master hears, and mocks thy pride:
Insult not thus the meek and low;
In me thy benefactor know;
My warm assistance gave thee birth,
Or thou hadst perish'd low in earth;
But up-starts, to support their station,
Cancel at once all obligation."

FABLE XXXVI.

Pythagoras and the Countryman.

Pythagoras rose at early dawn,
By soaring meditation drawn;
To breathe the fragrance of the day,
Through flowery fields he took his way,
In musing contemplation warm,
His steps misled him to a farm,
Where on a ladder's topmost round
A peasant stood; the hammer's sound
Shook the weak barn. "Say, friend, what care
Calls for thy honest labour there?"
The clown, with surly voice replies,
"Vengeance aloud for justice cries.
This kite, by daily rapine fed,
My hens' annoy, my turkeys' dread,
At length his forfeit life hath paid;
See on the wall his wings display'd:
Here nail'd, a terror to his kind,
My fowls shall future safety find;
My yard the thriving poultry feed,
And my barns' refuse fat the breed."
"Friend, says the sage, the doom is wise;
For public good the murderer dies:
But, if these tyrants of the air
Demand a sentence so severe,
Think how the glutton, man, devours;
What bloody feasts regale his hours!
O impudence of power and might,
Thus to condemn a hawk or kite.
When thou, perhaps, carnivorous sinner,
Hadst pullets yesterday for dinner"
"Hold, cry'd the clown, with passion heated,
Shall kites and men alike be treated?
When Heaven the world with creatures stor'd,
Man was ordain'd their sovereign lord."
"Thus tyrants boast, the sage reply'd,
Whose murders spring from power and pride.
Own then this manlike kite is slain,
Thy greater luxury to sustain;
For "Petty rogues submit to fate,
"That great ones may enjoy their state*!"

FABLE XXXVII.

The Farmer's Wife and the Raven.

Why are those tears? why droops your head?
Is then your other husband dead?
Or does a worse disgrace betide?
Hath no one since his death apply'd;
Alas! you know the cause too well;
The salt is spilt, to me it fell;
Then, to contribute to my loss,
My knife and fork were laid across;
On Friday too! the day I dread:
Would I were safe at home in bed!
Last night (I vow to Heaven 'tis true)
Bounce from the fire a coffin flew.
Next post some fatal news shall tell:
God send my Cornish friends be well!
Unhappy widow, cease thy tears,
Nor feel affliction in thy fears;
Let not thy stomach be suspended;
Eat now, and weep when dinner's ended;
And, when the butler clears the table,
For thy desert I'll read my fable.
Betwixt her swagging panniers' load
A farmer's wife to market rode,
And, jogging on, with thoughtful care,
Summ'd up the profits of her ware;
When starting from her silver dream,
Thus far and wide was heard her scream.
"That raven on yon left hand oak
(Curse on his ill-betiding croak!)
Bodes me no good." No more she said,
When poor blind Ball, with stumbling tread,
Fell prone; o'erturn'd the pannier lay,
And her mash'd eggs bestrow'd the way.
She, sprawling in the yellow road,
Rail'd, swore, and curs'd. "Thou croaking toad,
A murrain take thy whoreson throat!
I knew misfortune in the note"
"Dame, quoth the raven, spare your oaths.
Unclench your fist, and wipe your cloaths,

* Garth's Dispensary.

But why on me thoſe curſes thrown?
Goody, the fault was all your own;
For, had you laid this brittle ware
On Dun, the old ſure-footed mare,
Though all the ravens of the Hundred
With croaking had your tongue out-thundered,
Sure-footed Dun had kept her legs,
And you, good woman, ſav'd your eggs."

FABLE XXXVIII.

The Turkey and the Ant.

In other men we faults can ſpy,
And blame the mote that dims their eye,
Each little ſpeck and blemiſh find;
To our own ſtronger errors blind.
A turkey, tir'd of common food,
Forſook the barn, and fought the wood;
Behind her ran an infant train,
Collecting here and there a grain.
"Draw near, my birds! the mother cries,
This hill delicious fare ſupplies;
Behold the buſy negro race,
See millions blacken all the place!
Fear not; like me, with freedom eat;
An ant is moſt delightful meat.
How bleſs'd, how envy'd, were our life,
Could we but 'ſcape the poulterer's knife!
But man, curs'd man, on turkeys preys,
And Chriſtmas ſhortens all our days.
Sometimes with oyſters we combine,
Sometimes aſſiſt the ſavoury chine;
From the low peaſant to the lord,
The turkey ſmokes on every board,
Sure men for gluttony are curs'd,
Of the ſeven deadly ſins the worſt."
An ant, who climb'd beyond his reach,
Thus anſwer'd from the neighbouring beech:
"Ere you remark another's ſin,
Bid thy own conſcience look within;
Controul thy more voracious bill,
Nor for a breakfaſt nations kill."

FABLE XXXIX.

The Father and Jupiter.

The man to Jove his ſuit preferr'd;
He begg'd a wife: his prayer was heard.
Jove wonder'd at his bold addreſſing;
For how precarious is the bleſſing!
A wife he takes: and now for heirs
Again he worries Heaven with prayers.
Jove nods aſſent; two hopeful boys
And a fine girl reward his joys.
Now more ſolicitous he grew,
And ſet their future lives in view;
He ſaw that all reſpect and duty
Were paid to wealth, to power, and beauty.
"Once more, he cries, accept my prayer;
Make my lov'd progeny thy care:
Let my firſt hope, my favourite boy,
All fortune's richeſt gifts enjoy.
My next with ſtrong ambition fire;
May favour teach him to aſpire,
Till he the ſtep of power aſcend,
And courtiers to their idol bend!
With every grace, with every charm,
My daughter's perfect features arm.
If Heaven approve, a father's bleſs'd."
Jove ſmiles, and grants his full requeſt.
The firſt, a miſer at the heart,
Studious of every griping art,
Heaps hoards on hoards with anxious pain,
And all his life devotes to gain.
He feels no joy, his cares increaſe,
He neither wakes nor ſleeps in peace;
In fancy'd want (a wretch complete)
He ſtarves, and yet he dares not eat.
The next to ſudden honours grew;
The thriving art of courts he knew;
He reach'd the height of power and place,
Then fell the victim of diſgrace.
Beauty with early bloom ſupplies
His daughter's cheeks, and points her eyes.
The vain coquette each ſuit diſdains,
And glories in her lovers' pains.
With age ſhe fades, each lover flies;
Contemn'd, forlorn, ſhe pines, and dies.
When Jove the father's grief ſurvey'd,
And heard him Heaven and Fate upbraid,
Thus ſpoke the god: "By outward ſhow
Men judge of happineſs and woe.
Shall ignorance of good and ill
Dare to direct th' eternal will?
Seek virtue; and, of that poſſeſt,
To Providence reſign the reſt."

FABLE XL.

The two Monkies.

The learned, full of inward pride,
The fops of outward ſhow deride;
The fop, with learning at defiance,
Scoffs at the pedant and the ſcience:
The Don, a formal ſolemn ſtrutter,
Deſpiſes Monſieur's airs and flutter;
While Monſieur mocks the formal fool,
Who looks, and ſpeaks, and walks, by rule.
Britain, a medley of the twain,
As pert as France, as grave as Spain,
In fancy wiſer than the reſt,
Laughs at them both, of both the jeſt.
Is not the poet's chiming cloſe
Cenſur'd by all the ſons of proſe?
While bards of quick imagination
Deſpiſe the ſleepy proſe narration.
Men laugh at apes: they men contemn;
For what are we but apes to them?
Two monkies went to Southwark fair;
No critics had a ſourer air;
They ſore'd their way through draggled folks,
Who gap'd to catch Jack Pudding's jokes;
Then took their tickets for the ſhow,
And got by chance the foremoſt row.
To ſee their grave obſerving face,
Provok'd a laugh through all the place.
"Brother, ſays Pug, and turn'd his head,
The rabble's monſtrouſly ill-bred."
Now through the booth loud hiſſes ran,
Nor ended till the ſhow began.

The tumbler whirls the flip-flap round,
With somersets he shakes the ground;
The cord beneath the dancer springs;
Aloft in air the vaulter swings;
Distorted now, now prone depends,
Now through his twisted arm ascends;
The crowd, in wonder and delight,
With clapping hands applaud the sight.
With smiles, quoth pug, "If pranks like these
The giant apes of reason please,
How would they wonder at our arts!
They must adore us for our parts.
High on the twig I've seen you cling,
Play, twist, and turn in airy ring;
How can those clumsy things, like me,
Fly with a bound from tree to tree?
But yet, by this applause, we find
These emulators of our kind
Discern our worth, our parts regard,
Who our mean mimics thus reward."
"Brother, the grinning mate replies,
In this I grant that man is wise:
While good example they pursue,
We must allow some praise is due;
But, when they strain beyond their guide,
I laugh to scorn the mimic pride;
For how fantastic is the sight,
To meet men always bolt upright,
Because we sometimes walk on two!
I hate the imitating crew."

FABLE XLI.

The Owl and the Farmer.

An owl of grave deport and mien,
Who (like the Turk) was seldom seen,
Within a barn had chose his station,
As fit for prey and contemplation:
Upon a beam aloft he sits,
And nods, and seems to think by fits.
So have I seen a man of news
Or post-boy or gazette peruse,
Smoke, nod, and talk with voice profound,
And fix the fate of Europe round.
Sheaves pil'd on sheaves hid all the floor:
At dawn of morn to view his store
The Farmer came. The hooting guest
His self-importance thus expresst:
"Reason in man is mere pretence:
How weak, how shallow, is his sense!
To tread with scorn the bird of night,
Declares his folly or his spite.
Then, too, how partial is his praise!
The lark's, the linnet's, chirping lays
To his ill-judging ears are fine;
And nightingales are all divine:
But the more knowing feather'd race
See wisdom stamp'd upon my face.
Whene'er to visit light I deign,
What flocks of fowl compose my train!
Like slaves, they crowd my flight behind,
And own me of superior kind."
The Farmer laugh'd, and thus reply'd:
"Thou dull important lump of pride,
Dar'st thou with that harsh grating tongue
Depreciate birds of warbling song?
Indulge thy spleen: know men and fowl
Regard thee, as thou art, an owl.
Besides, proud blockhead! be not vain
Of what thou call'st thy slaves and train:
Few follow wisdom or her rules;
Fools in derision follow fools."

FABLE XLII.

The Jugglers.

A juggler long through all the town
Had rais'd his fortune and renown;
You'd think (so far his art transcends)
The devil at his fingers ends.
Vice heard his fame, she read his bill;
Convinc'd of his inferior skill,
She sought his booth, and frown the crowd
Defy'd the man of art aloud.
"Is this then he so fam'd for sleight?
Can this slow bungler cheat your sight?
Dares he with me dispute the prize?
I leave it to impartial eyes."
Provok'd, the Juggler cry'd, "'Tis done;
In science I submit to none."
Thus said, the cups and balls he play'd;
By turns this here, that there, convey'd.
The cards, obedient to his words,
Are by a fillip turn'd to birds.
His little boxes change the grain:
Trick after trick deludes the train.
He shakes his bag, he shows all fair;
His fingers spread, and nothing there;
Then bids it rain with showers of gold;
And now his ivory eggs are told;
But, when from thence the hen he draws,
Amaz'd spectators hum applause.
Vice now stept forth, and took the place,
With all the forms of his grimace.
"This magic looking-glass, she cries,
(There, hand it round) will charm your eyes."
Each eager eye the sight desir'd,
And every man himself admir'd.
Next, to a senator addressing,
"See this bank-note: observe the blessing,
Breathe on the bill. Heigh, pass! 'Tis gone."
Upon his lips a padlock shone.
A second puff the magic broke;
The padlock vanish'd, and he spoke.
Twelve bottles rang'd upon the board
All full, with heady liquor stor'd,
By clean conveyance disappear,
And now two bloody swords are there.
A purse she to a thief expos'd;
At once his ready fingers clos'd.
He opes his fist, the treasure's fled;
He sees a halter in its stead.
She bids ambition hold a wand;
He grasps a hatchet in his hand.
A box of charity she shows.
"Blow here;" and a church-warden blows.
'Tis vanish'd with conveyance neat,
And on the table smokes a treat.
She shakes the dice, the board she knocks,
And from all pockets fills her box.
She next a meagre rake addrest.
"This picture see; her shape, her breast:

What youth, and what inviting eyes!
Hold her, and have her." With surprise,
His hand expos'd a box of pills,
And a loud laugh proclaim'd his ills.
A counter, in a miser's hand,
Grew twenty guineas at command.
She bids his heir the sum retain,
And 'tis a counter now again.
A guinea with her touch you see
Take every shape but charity;
And not one thing you saw, or drew,
But chang'd from what was first in view.
The Juggler now, in grief of heart,
With this submission own'd her art.
"Can I such matchless sleight withstand!
How practice hath improv'd your hand!
But now and then I cheat the throng;
You every day, and all day long."

FABLE XLIII.

The Council of Horses.

Upon a time a neighing steed,
Who graz'd among a numerous breed,
With mutiny had fir'd the train,
And spread dissension through the plain.
On matters that concern'd the state,
The council met in grand debate.
A colt whose eye-balls flam'd with ire,
Elate with strength and youthful fire,
In haste stept forth before the rest,
And thus the listening throng address.
"Good gods, how abject is our race,
Condemn'd to slavery and disgrace!
Shall we our servitude retain,
Because our sires have borne the chain?
Consider, friends! your strength and might;
'Tis conquest to assert your right.
How cumbrous is the gilded coach!
The pride of man is our reproach.
Were we design'd for daily toil,
To drag the ploughshare through the soil,
To sweat in harness through the road,
To groan beneath the carrier's load?
How feeble are the two-legg'd kind!
What force is in our nerves combin'd!
Shall then our nobler jaws submit
To foam and champ the galling bit?
Shall haughty man my back bestride?
Shall the sharp spur provoke my side?
Forbid it, heavens! reject the rein;
Your shame, your infamy, disdain.
Let him the lion first controul,
And still the tiger's famish'd growl.
Let us, like them, our freedom claim,
And make him tremble at our name."
A general nod approv'd the cause,
And all the circle neigh'd applause.
When, lo! with grave and solemn pace,
A steed advanc'd before the race,
With age and long experience wise;
Around he cast his thoughtful eyes,
And, to the murmurs of the train,
Thus spoke the Nestor of the plain.
"When I had health and strength, like you,
The toils of servitude I knew;
Now grateful man rewards my pains,
And gives me all these wide domains.
At will I crop the year's increase;
My latter life is rest and peace.
I grant, to man we lend our pains,
And aid him to correct the plains;
But doth not he divide the care,
Through all the labours of the year?
How many thousand structures rise,
To fence us from inclement skies!
For us he bears the sultry day,
And stores up all our winter's hay.
He sows, he reaps the harvest's gain;
We share the toil, and share the grain.
Since every creature was decreed
To aid each other's mutual need,
Appease your discontented mind,
And act the part by heaven assign'd."
The tumult ceas'd. The colt submitted,
And, like his ancestors, was bitted.

FABLE XLIV.

The Hound and the Huntsman.

Impertinence at first is borne
With heedless light, or smiles of scorn;
Teaz'd into wrath, what patience bears
The noisy fool who perseveres?
The morning wakes, the huntsman sounds,
At once rush forth the joyful hounds;
They seek the wood with eager pace,
Through bush, through brier, explore the chase:
Now scatter'd wide they try the plain,
And snuff the dewy turf in vain.
What care, what industry, what pains!
What universal silence reigns!
Ringwood, a dog of little fame,
Young, pert, and ignorant of game,
At once displays his bubbling throat;
The pack, regardless of the note,
Pursue the scent; with louder strain
He still persists to vex the train.
The huntsman to the clamour flies,
The smacking lash he smartly plies.
His ribs all welk'd, with howling tone
The puppy thus express'd his moan:
"I know the music of my tongue
Long since the pack with envy stung.
What will not spite? These bitter smarts
I owe to my superior parts."
"When puppies prate, the huntsman cry'd,
They show both ignorance and pride:
Fools may our scorn, not envy, raise;
For envy is a kind of praise.
Had not thy forward noisy tongue
Proclaim'd thee always in the wrong,
Thou might'st have mingled with the rest,
And ne'er thy foolish nose confest;
But fools, to talking ever prone,
Are sure to make their follies known."

FABLE XLV.

The Poet and the Rose.

I hate the man who builds his name
On ruins of another's fame.

Thus prudes, by characters o'erthrown,
Imagine that they raiſe their own.
Thus ſcribblers, covetous of praiſe,
Think ſlander can tranſplant the bays.
Beauties and bards have equal pride,
With both all rivals are decry'd.
Who praiſes Leſbia's eyes and ſcature,
Muſt call her ſiſter aukward creature;
For the kind flattery's ſure to charm,
When we ſome other nymph diſarm.
As in the cool of early day
A poet ſought the ſweets of May,
The garden's fragrant breath aſcends,
And every ſtalk with odour bends;
A roſe he pluck'd, he gaz'd, admir'd,
Thus ſinging, as the muſe inſpir'd:
"Go, roſe, my Chloe's boſom grace;
"How happy ſhall I prove,
"Might I ſupply that envy'd place
"With never-fading love!
"There, phœnix like, beneath her eye,
"Involv'd in fragrance, burn and die.
"Know, hapleſs flower! that thou ſhalt find
"More fragrant roſes there;
"I ſee thy withering head reclin'd
"With envy and deſpair!
"One common fate we both muſt prove;
"You die with envy, I with love."
"Spare your compariſons, reply'd
An angry roſe, who grew beſide.
Of all mankind you ſhould not flout us;
What can a poet do without us?
In every love-ſong roſes bloom;
We lend you colour and perfume:
Does it to Chloe's charms conduce,
To ſound her praiſe on our abuſe?
Muſt we, to flatter her, be made
To wither, envy, pine, and fade?

FABLE XLVI.

The Cur, the Horſe, and the Shepherd's Dog.

The lad of all-ſufficient merit
With modeſty ne'er damps his ſpirit;
Preſuming on his own deſerts,
On all alike his tongue exerts;
His noiſy jokes at random throws,
And pertly ſpatters friend and foes.
In wit and war the bully race
Contribute to their own diſgrace:
Too late the forward youth ſhall find
That jokes are ſometimes paid in kind;
Or, if they canker in the breaſt,
He makes a foe who makes a jeſt.
A village cur, of ſnappiſh race,
The perteſt puppy of the place,
Imagin'd that his treble throat
Was bleſt with muſic's ſweeteſt note;
In the mid road he baſking lay,
The yelping nuiſance of the way;
For not a creature paſs'd along,
But had a ſample of his ſong.
Soon as the trotting ſteed he hears,
He ſtarts, he cocks his dapper ears;
Away he ſcowers, aſſaults his hoof;
Now near him ſnarls, now barks aloof;
With ſhrill impertinence attends,
Nor leaves him till the village ends.
It chanc'd, upon his evil day,
A pad came pacing down the way;
The cur, with never-ceaſing tongue,
Upon the paſſing traveller ſprung.
The horſe, from ſcorn provok'd to ire,
Flung backward; rolling in the mire,
The puppy howl'd, and bleeding lay;
The pad in peace purſu'd his way.
A ſhepherd's dog, who ſaw the deed,
Deteſting the vexatious breed,
Beſpoke him thus: "When coxcombs prate,
They kindle wrath, contempt, or hate;
Thy teazing tongue had judgment ty'd,
Thou hadſt not like a puppy dy'd."

FABLE XLVII.

The Court of Death.

Death, on a ſolemn night of ſtate,
In all his pomp of terror ſate:
Th' attendants of his gloomy reign,
Diſeaſes dire, a ghaſtly train!
Crowd the vaſt court. With hollow tone,
A voice thus thunder'd from the throne:
"This night our miniſter we name,
Let every ſervant ſpeak his claim;
Merit ſhall bear this ebon wand."
All, at the word, ſtretch'd forth their hand.
Fever, with burning heat poſſeſt,
Advanc'd, and for the wand addreſt.
"I to the weekly bills appeal,
Let thoſe expreſs my fervent zeal;
On every ſlight occaſion near,
With violence I perſevere."
Next Gout appears with limping pace,
Pleads how he ſhifts from place to place;
From head to foot how ſwift he flies,
And every joint and ſinew plies;
Still working when he ſeems ſuppreſt,
A moſt tenacious ſtubborn gueſt.
A haggard ſpectre from the crew
Crawls forth, and thus aſſerts his due:
"'Tis I who taint the ſweeteſt joy,
And in the ſhape of love deſtroy:
My ſhanks, ſunk eyes, and noſeleſs face,
Prove my pretenſion to the place."
Stone urg'd his over-growing force;
And, next, Conſumption's meagre corſe,
With feeble voice that ſcarce was heard,
Broke with ſhort coughs, his ſuit preferr'd:
"Let none object my lingering way,
I gain, like Fabius, by delay;
Fatigue and weaken every foe
By long attack, ſecure, though ſlow."
Plague repreſents his rapid power,
Who thinn'd a nation in an hour.
All ſpoke their claim, and hop'd the wand.
Now expectation huſh'd the band;
When thus the monarch from the throne:
"Merit was ever modeſt known.
What, no phyſician ſpeak his right!
None here! but fees their toils requite.
Let then Intemperance take the wand,
Who fills with gold their zealous hand.

You. Fever, Gout, and all the reſt,
(Whom wary men, as foes, deteſt)
Forego your claim; no more pretend;
Intemperance is eſteem'd a friend;
He ſhares their mirth, their ſocial joys,
And as a courted gueſt deſtroys.
The charge on him muſt juſtly fall,
Who finds employment for you all."

FABLE XLVIII.

The Gardener and the Hog.

A GARDENER, of peculiar taſte,
On a young hog his favour plac'd,
Who fed not with the common herd;
His tray was to the hall preferr'd.
He wallow'd underneath the board,
Or in his maſter's chamber ſnor'd,
Who fondly ſtroak'd him every day,
And taught him all the puppy's play.
Where'er he went, the grunting friend
Ne'er fail'd his pleaſure to attend.
As on a time the loving pair
Walk'd forth to tend the garden's care,
The maſter thus addreſs'd the ſwine:
"My houſe, my garden, all is thine,
On turnips feaſt whene'er you pleaſe,
And riot in my beans and peaſe;
If the potatoe's taſte delights,
Or the red carrot's ſweet invites,
Indulge thy morn and evening hours;
But let due care regard my flowers:
My tulips are my garden's pride:
What vaſt expence thoſe beds ſupply'd!"
The hog by chance one morning roam'd,
Where with new ale the veſſels foam'd:
He munches now the ſteaming grains,
Now with full ſwill the liquor drains.
Intoxicating fumes ariſe;
He reels, he rolls his winking eyes;
Then ſtaggering through the garden ſcours,
And treads down painted ranks of flowers.
With delving ſnout he turns the ſoil,
And cools his palate with the ſpoil.
The maſter came, the ruin ſpy'd;
"Villain! ſuſpend thy rage (he cry'd.)
Haſt thou, thou moſt ungrateful ſot,
My charge, my only charge, forgot?
What, all my flowers!" No more he ſaid,
But gaz'd, and ſigh'd, and hung his head.
The hog with fluttering ſpeech returns:
"Explain, Sir, why your anger burns.
See there, untouch'd, your tulips ſtrown,
For I devour'd the roots alone."
At this the gardener's paſſion grows;
From oaths and threats he fell to blows.
The ſtubborn brute the blows ſuſtains,
Aſſaults his leg, and tears the veins.
"Ah, fooliſh ſwain! too late you find
That ſtyes were for ſuch friends deſign'd!"
Homeward he limps with painful pace,
Reflecting thus on paſt diſgrace:
"Who cheriſhes a brutal mate,
Shall mourn the folly ſoon or late."

FABLE XLIX.

The Man and the Flea.

WHETHER on earth, in air, or main,
Sure every thing alive is vain!
Does not the hawk all fowls ſurvey,
As deſtin'd only for his prey?
And do not tyrants, prouder things,
Think men were born for ſlaves to kings?
When the crab views the pearly ſtrands,
Or Tagus, bright with golden ſands,
Or crawls beſide the coral grove,
And hears the ocean roll above,
"Nature is too profuſe (ſays he),
Who gave all theſe to pleaſure me!"
When bordering pinks and roſes bloom,
And every garden breathes perfume;
When peaches glow with ſunny dyes,
Like Laura's cheek when bluſhes riſe;
When with huge figs the branches bend,
When cluſters from the vine depend;
The ſnail looks round on flower and tree,
And cries, "all theſe were made for me!"
"What dignity's in human nature!"
Says man, the moſt conceited creature,
As from a cliff he caſt his eye,
And view'd the ſea and arched ſky.
The ſun was ſunk beneath the main;
The moon and all the ſtarry train
Hung the vaſt vault of heaven. The man
His contemplation thus began:
"When I behold this glorious ſhow,
And the wide watery world below,
The ſcaly people of the main,
The beaſts that range the wood or plain,
The wing'd inhabitants of air,
The day, the night, the various year;
And know all theſe by heaven deſign'd
As gifts to pleaſure human-kind;
I cannot raiſe my worth too high;
Of what vaſt conſequence am I!"
"Not of th' importance you ſuppoſe,
Replies a flea upon his noſe.
Be humble, learn thyſelf to ſcan;
Know, pride was never made for man.
'Tis vanity that ſwells thy mind.
What, heaven and earth for thee deſign'd!
For thee, made only for our need,
That more important fleas might feed."

FABLE L.

The Hare and Many Friends.

FRIENDSHIP, like love, is but a name,
Unleſs to one you ſtint the flame.
The child, whom many fathers ſhare,
Hath ſeldom known a father's care.
'Tis thus in friendſhips; who depend
On many, rarely find a friend.
A hare who, in a civil way,
Comply'd with every thing, like Gay,
Was known by all the beſtial train
Who haunt the wood, or graze the plain;
Her care was never to offend;
And every creature was her friend.

As forth she went at early dawn,
To taste the dew-besprinkled lawn,
Behind she hears the hunter's cries,
And from the deep-mouth'd thunder flies.
She starts, she stops, she pants for breath;
She hears the near advance of death;
She doubles to mislead the hound,
And measures back her mazy round;
Till, fainting in the public way,
Half dead with fear she gasping lay.
What transport in her bosom grew,
When first the horse appear'd in view!
"Let me, says she, your back ascend,
And owe my safety to a friend.
You know my feet betray my flight;
To friendship every burden's light."
The horse reply'd, "Poor honest puss,
It grieves my heart to see thee thus:
Be comforted, relief is near,
For all your friends are in the rear."
She next the stately bull implor'd;
And thus reply'd the mighty lord:
"Since every beast alive can tell
That I sincerely wish you well,
I may, without offence, pretend
To take the freedom of a friend.
Love calls me hence; a favourite cow
Expects me near yon barley-mow;
And, when a lady's in the case,
You know, all other things give place.
To leave you thus might seem unkind;
But see, the goat is just behind."
The goat remark'd "her pulse was high,
Her languid head, her heavy eye:
My back, says he, may do you harm;
The sheep's at hand, and wool is warm."
The sheep was feeble, and complain'd
"His sides a load of wool sustain'd;
Said, he was slow, confess'd his fears;
For hounds eat sheep as well as hares."
She now the trotting calf address'd,
To save from death a friend distress'd.
"Shall I, says he, of tender age,
In this important care engage?
Older and abler pass'd you by;
How strong are those! how weak am I!
Should I presume to bear you hence,
Those friends of mine may take offence.
Excuse me, then; you know my heart;
But dearest friends, alas! must part.
How shall we all lament! Adieu;
For see the hounds are just in view."

PART II.

Advertisement.

These Fables were finished by Mr. Gay, and intended for the press a short time before his death; when they were left, with his other papers, to the care of his noble friend and patron the Duke of Queensberry. His Grace has accordingly permitted them to the press; and they are here printed from the originals in the author's own hand-writing. We hope they will please equally with his former Fables, though mostly on subjects of a graver and more political turn. They will certainly show him to have been (what he esteemed the best character) a man of a truly honest heart, and a sincere lover of his country.

FABLE I.

The Dog and the Fox.—To a Lawyer.

I know you lawyers can, with ease,
Twist words and meanings as you please;
That language, by your skill made pliant,
Will bend to favour every client;
That 'tis the see directs the sense,
To make out either side's pretence.
When you peruse the clearest case,
You see it with a double face:
For scepticism's your profession;
You hold there's doubt in all expression.
Hence is the bar with fees supply'd;
Hence eloquence takes either side.
Your hand would have but paltry gleaning,
Could every man express his meaning.
Who dares presume to pen a deed,
Unless you previously are fee'd?
'Tis drawn; and, to augment the cost,
In dull prolixity engrost.
And now we're well secur'd by law,
Till the next brother find a flaw.
Read o'er a will. Was't ever known
But you could make the will your own?
For, when you read, 'tis with intent
To find out meanings never meant.
Since things are thus, se defendendo,
I bar fallacious inuendo.
Sagacious Porta's skill could trace
Some beast or bird in every face.
The head, the eye, the nose's shape,
Prov'd this an owl, and that an ape.
When, in the sketches thus design'd,
Resemblance brings some friend to mind,
You show the piece, and give the hint,
And find each feature in the print;
So monstrous-like the portrait's found,
All know it, and the laugh goes round.
Like him I draw from general nature;
Is't I or you then fix the satire?
So, Sir, I beg you, spare your pains
In making comments on my strains.
All private slander I detest,
I judge not of my neighbour's breast:
Party and prejudice I hate,
And write no libels on the state.
Shall not my fable censure vice,
Because a knave is over-nice?
And, lest the guilty hear and dread,
Shall not the decalogue be read?
If I lash vice in general fiction,
Is't I apply, or self-conviction?
Brutes are my theme. Am I to blame,
If men and morals are the same?
I no man call or ape or ass;
'Tis his own conscience holds the glass.

Thus void of all offence I write:
Who claims the fable, knows his right.
A ſhepherd's dog unſkill'd in ſports,
Pick'd up acquaintance of all ſorts;
Among the reſt a fox he knew;
By frequent chat their friendſhip grew.
Says Reynard "'Tis a cruel caſe,
That man ſhould ſtigmatize our race.
No doubt, among us rogues you find,
As among dogs and human kind;
And yet (unknown to me and you)
There may be honeſt men and true.
Thus ſlander tries whate'er it can
To put us on the foot with man.
Let my own actions recommend;
No prejudice can blind a friend:
You know me free from all diſguiſe;
My honour as my life I prize."
By talk like this from all miſtruſt
The dog was cur'd, and thought him juſt.
As on a time the fox held forth
On conſcience, honeſty, and worth,
Sudden he ſtopp'd; he cock'd his ear;
Low dropt his bruſhy tail with fear.
"Bleſs us the hunters are abroad:
What's all that clatter on the road."
"Hold, ſays the dog, we're ſafe from harm,
'Twas nothing but a falſe alarm.
At yonder town 'tis market day;
Some farmer's wife is on the way;
'Tis ſo (I know her pyebald mare),
Dame Dobbins with her poultry-ware."
Reynard grew huff. Says he, "This ſneer
From you I little thought to hear:
Your meaning in your looks I ſee.
Pray, what's Dame Dobbins, friend, to me?
Did I e'er make her poultry thinner!
Prove that I owe the dame a dinner."
"Friend, quoth the cur, I meant no harm;
Then why ſo captious? why ſo warm?
My words in common acceptation,
Could never give this provocation.
No lamb (for aught I ever knew)
May be more innocent than you."
At this, gall'd Reynard wince'd, and ſwore
Such language ne'er was given before.
"What's lamb to me? this ſaucy hint
Shows me, baſe knave, which way you ſquint.
If th' other night your maſter loſt
Three lambs, am I to pay the coſt?
Your vile reflections would imply
That I'm the thief. You dog, you lie."
"Thou knave, thou fool! (the dog reply'd)
The name is juſt, take either ſide;
Thy guilt theſe applications ſpeak:
Sirrah, 'tis conſcience makes you ſqueak."
So ſaying, on the fox he flies:
The ſelf-convicted felon dies.

FABLE II.

The Vulture, the Sparrow, and other Birds.

TO A FRIEND IN THE COUNTRY.

Ere I begin, I muſt premiſe,
Our miniſters are good and wiſe;
So, though malicious tongues apply.
Pray what care they, or what care I?
If I am free with courts, be't known,
I ne'er preſume to mean our own.
If general morals ſeem to joke
On miniſters, and ſuch-like folk,
A captious fool may take offence;
What then? He knows his own pretence,
I meddle with no ſtate-affairs,
But ſpare my jeſt to ſave my ears.
Our preſent ſchemes are too profound,
For Machiavel himſelf to ſound:
To cenſure them I 'ave no pretenſion;
I own they're paſt my comprehenſion.
You ſay your brother wants a place,
('Tis many a younger brother's caſe)
And that he very ſoon intends
To ply the court, and teaze his friends.
If there his merits chance to find
A patriot of an open mind,
Whoſe conſtant actions prove him juſt
To both a king's and people's truſt,
May he, with gratitude, attend,
And owe his riſe to ſuch a friend!
You praiſe his parts, for buſineſs fit,
His learning, probity, and wit;
But thoſe alone will never do,
Unleſs his patron have them too.
I'ave heard of times (pray God defend us!
We're not ſo good but he can mend us)
When wicked miniſters have trod
On kings and people, law and God;
With arrogance they girt the throne,
And knew no intereſt but their own.
Then virtue, from preferment barr'd
Gets nothing but its own reward.
A gang of petty knaves attend 'em,
With proper parts to recommend 'em.
Then, if his patron burn with luſt,
The firſt in favour's pimp the firſt.
His doors are never clos'd to ſpies,
Who cheer his heart with double lies;
They flatter him, his foes defame,
So lull the pangs of guilt and ſhame.
If ſchemes of lucre haunt his brain,
Projectors ſwell his greedy train;
Vile brokers ply his private ear
With jobs of plunder for the year;
All conſciences muſt bend and ply?
You muſt vote on, and know not why:
Through thick and thin you muſt go on;
One ſcruple, and your place is gone.
Since plagues like theſe have curs'd a land,
And favourites cannot always ſtand,
Good courtiers ſhould for change be ready,
And not have principles too ſteady;
For, ſhould a knave engroſs the power,
(God ſhield the realm from that ſad hour!)
He muſt have rogues or ſlaviſh fools;
For what's a knave without his tools?
Wherever thoſe a people drain,
And ſtrut with infamy and gain,
I envy not their guilt and ſtate,
And ſcorn to ſhare the public hate.
Let their own ſervile creatures riſe,
By ſcreening fraud, and venting lies;

Give me, kind Heaven, a private ſtation *,
A mind ſerene for contemplation :
Title and profit I reſign;
The poſt of honour ſhall be mine.
My fable read, their merits view,
Then herd who will with ſuch a crew.
In days of yore (my cautious rhymes
Always except the preſent times)
A greedy vulture, ſkill'd in game,
Inur'd to guilt, unaw'd by ſhame,
Approach'd the throne in evil hour,
And ſtep by ſtep intrudes to power :
When at the royal eagle's ear,
He longs to eaſe the monarch's care.
The monarch grants. With pride elate,
Behold him miniſter of ſtate !
Around him throng the feather'd rout;
Friends muſt be ſerv'd, and ſome muſt out :
Each thinks his own the beſt pretenſion ;
This aſks a place, and that a penſion ;
The nightingale was ſet aſide,
A forward daw his room ſupply'd.
" This bird (ſays he) for buſineſs fit,
Hath both ſagacity and wit :
With all his turns, and ſhifts, and tricks,
He's docile, and at nothing ſticks:
Then with his neighbours one ſo free
At all times will connive at me."
The hawk had due diſtinction ſhown,
For parts and talents like his own.
Thouſands of hireling cocks attend him,
As bluſtering bullies to defend him.
At once the ravens were diſcarded,
And magpies with their poſts rewarded.
Thoſe fowls of omen I deteſt,
That pry into another's neſt.
State-lies muſt loſe all good intent,
For they foreſee and croak th' event.
My friends ne'er think, but talk by rote,
Speak what they're taught, and ſo to vote.
" When rogues like theſe (a ſparrow cries)
To honours and employments riſe
I court no favour, aſk no place ;
From ſuch preferment is diſgrace.
Within my thatch'd retreat I find
(What theſe ne'er feel) true peace of mind."

FABLE III.

The Baboon and the Poultry.

TO A LEVEE-HUNTER.

We frequently miſplace eſteem,
By judging men by what they ſeem.
To birth, wealth, power, we ſhould allow
Precedence, and our loweſt bow :
In that is due diſtinction ſhown;
Eſteem is virtue's right alone.
With partial eye we're apt to ſee
The man of noble pedigree :
We're prepoſſeſt my lord inherits,
In ſome degree his grandſire's merits;
For thoſe we find upon record,
But find him nothing but my lord.
When we, with ſuperficial view,
Gaze on the rich, we're dazzled too.
We know that wealth, well underſtood,
Hath frequent power of doing good;
Then fancy that the thing is done,
As if the power and will were one.
Thus oft the cheated crowd adore
The thriving knaves that keep them poor.
The cringing train of power ſurvey;
What creatures are ſo poor as they !
With what obſequiouſneſs they bend !
To what vile actions condeſcend !
Their riſe is on their meanneſs built,
And flattery is their ſmalleſt guilt.
What homage, reverence, adoration,
In every age, in every nation,
Have ſycophants to power addreſs'd !
No matter who the power poſſeſs'd.
Let miniſters be what they will,
You find their levees always fill :
Ev'n thoſe who have perplex'd a ſtate,
Whoſe actions claim contempt and hate,
Had wretches to applaud their ſchemes,
Though more abſurd than madmen's dreams.
When barbarous Moloch was invok'd,
The blood of infants only ſmok'd !
But here (unleſs all hiſtory lies)
Whole realms have been a ſacrifice.
Look through all courts : 'tis power we find
The general idol of mankind;
There worſhipp'd under every ſhape,
Alike the lion, fox, and ape,
Are follow'd by time-ſerving ſlaves ;
Rich proſtitutes and needy knaves.
Who then ſhall glory in his poſt ?
How frail his pride, how vain his boaſt !
The followers of his proſperous hour
Are as unſtable as his power.
Power, by the breath of Flattery nurſt,
The more it ſwells is nearer burſt;
The bubble breaks, the gewgaw ends,
And in a dirty tear deſcends.
Once on a time an ancient maid,
By wiſhes and by time decay'd,
To cure the pangs of reſtleſs thought,
In birds and beaſts amuſement ſought :
Dogs, parrots, apes, her hours employ'd;
With theſe alone ſhe talk'd and toy'd.
A huge baboon her fancy took (Almoſt a man in ſize and look)
He finger'd every thing he found,
And mimick'd all the ſervants round;
Then, too, his parts and ready wit
Show'd him for every buſineſs fit.
With all theſe talents 'twas but juſt
That pug ſhould hold a place of truſt;
So to her favourite was aſſign'd
The charge of all her feather'd kind.
'Twas his to tend them eve and morn,
And portion out their daily corn
Beh ld him now, with haughty ſtride,
Aſſume a miniſterial pride.
The morning roſe. In hope of picking,
Swans, turkeys, peacocks, ducks, and chicken,

---

* —" When impious men bear ſway,
The poſt of honour is a private ſtation."
ADDISON.

Fowls of all ranks ſurround his hut,
To worſhip his important ſtrut.
The miniſter appears. The crowd,
Now here, now there, obſequious bow'd.
This prais'd his parts, and that his face,
Th' other his dignity in place.
From bill to bill the flattery ran:
He hears and bears it like a man;
For, when we flatter ſelf-conceit,
We but his ſentiments repeat.
If we're too ſcrupulouſly juſt,
What profit's in a place of truſt;
The common practice of the great
Is to ſecure a ſnug retreat.
So Pug began to turn his brain
(Like other folks in place) on gain.
An apple-woman's ſtall was near,
Well ſtock'd with fruits through all the year:
Here every day he cramm'd his guts,
Hence were his hordes of pears and nuts;
For 'twas agreed (in way of trade)
His payments ſhould in corn be made.
The ſtock of grain was quickly ſpent,
And no account which way it went.
Then, too, the poultry's ſtarv'd condition
Caus'd ſpeculations of ſuſpicion.
The facts were prov'd beyond diſpute;
Pug muſt refund his hordes of fruit;
And, though then miniſter in chief,
Was branded as a public thief.
Diſgrac'd, deſpis'd, confin'd to chains,
He nothing but his pride retains.
A gooſe paſs'd by; he knew the face,
Seen every levee while in place.
"What, no reſpect! no reverence ſhown!
How ſaucy are theſe creatures grown!
Not two days ſince (ſays he) you bow'd
The loweſt of my fawning crowd."
"Proud fool! (replies the gooſe) 'tis true
Thy corn a fluttering levee drew;
For that I join'd the hungry train,
And ſold thee flattery for thy grain.
But then, as now, conceited ape,
We ſaw thee in thy proper ſhape."

FABLE IV.

The Ant in Office.—To a Friend.

You tell me that you apprehend
My verſe may touchy folks offend.
In prudence, too, you think my rhymes
Should never ſquint at courtiers crimes;
For though nor this nor that is meant,
Can we another's thoughts prevent?
You aſk me if I ever knew
Court chaplains thus the lawn purſue?
I meddle not with gown or lawn;
Poets, I grant, to riſe muſt fawn;
They know great ears are over-nice,
And never ſhock their patron's vice.
But I this hackney-path deſpiſe;
'Tis my ambition not to riſe.
If I muſt proſtitute the muſe,
The baſe conditions I refuſe.
I neither flatter nor defame,
Yet own I would bring guilt to ſhame.
If I corruption's hand expoſe,
I make corrupted men my foes;
What then? I hate the paltry tribe:
Be virtue mine; be theirs the bribe.
I no man's property invade;
Corruption's yet no lawful trade.
Nor would it mighty ills produce,
Could I ſhame bribery out of uſe.
I know 'twould cramp moſt politicians
Were they ty'd down to theſe conditions.
'Twould ſtint their power, their riches bound,
And make their parts ſeem leſs profound.
Were they deny'd their proper tools,
How could they lead their knaves and fools?
Were this the caſe, let's take a view
What dreadful miſchiefs would enſue.
Though it might aggrandize the ſtate,
Could private luxury dine on plate?
Kings might indeed their friends reward,
But miniſters find leſs regard.
Informers, ſycophants, and ſpies,
Would not augment the year's ſupplies.
Perhaps, too, take away this prop,
An annual job or two might drop.
Beſides, if penſions were deny'd,
Could avarice ſupport its pride?
It might ev'n miniſters confound,
And yet the ſtate be ſafe and ſound.
I care not though 'tis underſtood;
I only mean my country's good:
And (let who will my freedom blame)
I wiſh all courtiers did the ſame.
Nay, though ſome folks the leſs might get,
I wiſh the nation out of debt.
I put no private man's ambition
With public good in competition:
Rather than have our laws defac'd,
I'd vote a miniſter diſgrac'd.
I ſtrike at vice, be't where it will;
And what if great folks take it ill?
I hope corruption, bribery, penſion,
One may with deteſtation mention;
Think you the law (let who will take it)
Can ſcandalum magnatum make it?
I vent no ſlander, owe no grudge,
Nor of another's conſcience judge:
At him or him I take no aim,
Yet dare againſt all vice declaim.
Shall I not cenſure breach of truſt,
Becauſe knaves know themſelves unjuſt?
That ſteward, whoſe account is clear,
Demands his honour may appear:
His actions never ſhun the light;
He is, and would be prov'd, upright.
But then you think my Fable bears
Alluſion, too, to ſtate affairs.
I grant it does: and who's ſo great,
That has the privilege to cheat?
If then in any future reign
(For miniſters may thirſt for gain)
Corrupted hands defraud the nation,
I bar no reader's application.
An ant there was, whoſe forward prate
Controul'd all matters in debate;
Whether he knew the thing or no,
His tongue eternally would go;

For he had impudence at will,
And boasted universal skill.
Ambition was his point in view:
Thus by degrees to power he grew.
Behold him now his drift attain:
He's made chief treasurer of the grain.
But as their ancient laws are just,
And punish breach of public trust,
'Tis order'd (lest wrong application
Should starve that wise industrious nation)
That all accounts be stated clear,
Their stock, and what defray'd the year;
That auditors shall these inspect,
And public rapine thus be check'd.
For this the solemn day was sat;
The auditors in council met.
The granary-keeper must explain,
And balance his account of grain.
He brought (since he could not refuse them)
Some scraps of paper to amuse them.
An honest Pismire, warm with zeal,
In justice to the public weal,
Thus spoke: "The nation's hoard is low;
From whence does this profusion flow?
I know our annual funds amount;
Why such expence? and where's th' account?"
With wonted arrogance and pride,
The ant in office thus reply'd.
"Consider, Sirs, were secrets told,
How could the best schem'd projects hold?
Should we state mysteries disclose,
'Twould lay us open to our foes.
My duty and my well-known zeal
Bid me our present schemes conceal:
But, on my honour, all th' expence
(Though vast) was for the swarm's defence."
They past th' account as fair and just,
And voted him implicit trust.
Next year again, the granary drain'd,
He thus his innocence maintain'd.
"Think how our present matters stand,
What dangers threat from every hand;
What hosts of turkeys stroll for food,
No farmer's wife but hath her brood.
Consider, when invasion's near,
Intelligence must cost us dear;
And, in this ticklish situation,
A secret told betrays the nation:
But, on my honour, all th' expence
(Though vast) was for the swarm's defence."
Again, without examination,
They thank'd his sage administration.
The year revolves. Their treasure, spent,
Again in secret service went.
His honour, too, again was pledg'd,
To satisfy the charge alleg'd.
When thus, with panic shame possess'd,
An auditor his friends address'd.
"What are we? ministerial tools!
We little knaves are greater fools.
At last this secret is explor'd,
'Tis our corruption thins the hoard.
For every grain we touch'd, at least
A thousand his own heaps increas'd.
Then for his kin and favourite spies,
A hundred hardly could suffice.
Thus, for a paltry sneaking bribe,
We cheat ourselves and all the tribe;
For all the magazine contains
Grows from our annual toil and pains."
They vote th' account shall be inspected;
The cunning plunderer is detected;
The fraud is sentenc'd; and his hoard,
As due, to public use restor'd.

FABLE V.

The Bear in a Boat.—To a Coxcomb.

That man must daily wiser grow,
Whose search is bent himself to know;
Impartially he weighs his scope,
And on firm reason founds his hope;
He tries his strength before the race,
And never seeks his own disgrace;
He knows the compass, sail, and oar,
Or never launches from the shore;
Before he builds, computes the cost,
And in no proud pursuit is lost:
He learns the bounds of human sense,
And safely walks within the fence.
Thus, conscious of his own defect,
Are pride and self-importance check'd.
If then, self-knowledge to pursue,
Direct our life in every view,
Of all the fools that pride can boast,
A coxcomb claims distinction most.
Coxcombs are of all ranks and kind;
They're not to sex or age confin'd,
Or rich, or poor, or great, or small,
And vanity besots them all.
By ignorance is pride increas'd:
Those most assume, who know the least;
Their own false balance gives them weight,
But every other finds them light.
Not that all coxcombs' follies strike,
And draw our ridicule alike;
To different merits each pretends:
This in love vanity transcends;
That, smitten with his face and shape,
By dress distinguishes the ape;
Th' other with learning crams his shelf,
Knows books, and all things but himself.
All these are fools of low condition,
Compar'd with coxcombs of ambition:
For those, puff'd up with flattery, dare
Assume a nation's various care.
They ne'er the grossest praise mistrust,
Their sycophants seem hardly just;
For these, in part alone, attest
The flattery their own thoughts suggest.
In this wide sphere a coxcomb's shown
In other realms besides his own:
The self-deem'd Machiavel at large
By turns controuls in every charge.
Does commerce suffer in her rights?
'Tis he directs the naval flights.
What sailor dares dispute his skill?
He'll be an admiral when he will.
Now, meddling in the soldier's trade,
Troops must be hir'd, and levies made.
He gives ambassadors their cue,
His cobbled treaties to renew;

And annual taxes muſt ſuffice
The current blunders to diſguiſe.
When his crude ſchemes in air are loſt,
And millions ſcarce defray the coſt,
His arrogance (nought undiſmay'd)
Truſting in ſelf-ſufficient aid.
On other rocks miſguides the realm,
And thinks a pilot at the helm.
He ne'er ſuſpects his want of ſkill,
But blunders on from ill to ill;
And, when he fails of all intent,
Blames only unforeſeen event.
Leſt you miſtake the application,
The fable calls me to relation.

A bear of ſhag and manners rough,
At climbing trees expert enough;
For dext'rouſly, and ſafe from harm,
Year after year he robb'd the ſwarm.
Thus thriving on induſtrious toil,
He glory'd in his pilfer'd ſpoil.

This trick ſo ſwell'd him with conceit,
He thought no enterprize too great.
Alike in ſciences and arts,
He boaſted univerſal parts:
Pragmatic, buſy, buſtling, bold,
His arrogance was uncontroul'd:
And thus he made his party good,
And grew dictator of the wood.

The beaſts, with admiration, ſtare,
And think him a prodigious bear.
Were any common booty got,
'Twas his each portion to allot:
For why? he found there might be picking,
Ev'n in the carving of a chicken.
Intruding thus, he by degrees
Claim'd, too, the butcher's larger fees.
And now his over-weening pride
In every province will preſide.
No taſk too difficult was found:
His blundering noſe miſleads the hound.
In ſtratagem and ſubtle arts
He over-rules the fox's parts.

It chanc'd as, on a certain day,
Along the bank he took his way,
A boar, with rudder, ſail, and oar,
At anchor floated near the ſhore.
He ſtopt, and, turning to his train,
Thus pertly vents his vaunting ſtrain.

"What blundering puppies are mankind,
In every ſcience always blind!
I mock the pedantry of ſchools:
What are their compaſſes and rules?
From me that helm ſhall conduct learn,
And man his ignorance diſcern."

So ſaying, with audacious pride,
He gains the boat, and climbs the ſide.
The beaſts, aſtoniſh'd, line the ſtrand:
The anchor's weigh'd; he drives from land:
The ſlack ſail ſhifts from ſide to ſide;
The boat untrimm'd admits the tide.
Borne down, adrift, at random toſt,
His oar breaks ſhort, the rudder's loſt.
The bear, preſuming in his ſkill,
Is here and there officious ſtill;
Till, ſtriking on the dangerous ſands,
Aground the ſhatter'd veſſel ſtands.

To ſee the bungler thus diſtreſt,
The very fiſhes ſneer and jeſt:
Ev'n gudgeons join in ridicule,
To mortify the meddling fool.
The clamorous watermen appear;
Threats, curſes, oaths, inſult his ear:
Seiz'd, thraſh'd, and chain'd, he's dragg'd to land;
Deriſion ſhouts along the ſtrand.

FABLE VI.

The Squire and his Cur.—To a country Gentleman.

The man of pure and ſimple heart
Through life diſdains a double part:
He never needs the ſcreen of lies,
His inward boſom to diſguiſe.
In vain malicious tongues aſſail;
Let envy ſnarl, let ſlander rail,
From virtue's ſhield (ſecure from wound)
Their blunted venom'd ſhafts rebound.
So ſhines his light before mankind,
His actions prove his honeſt mind.
If in his country's cauſe he riſe,
Debating ſenates to adviſe,
Unbrib'd, unaw'd, he dares impart
The honeſt dictates of his heart.
No miniſterial frown he fears,
But in his virtue perſeveres.

But would you play the politician,
Whoſe heart's averſe to intuition,
Your lips at all times, nay, your reaſon,
Muſt be controul'd by place and ſeaſon.
What ſtateſman could his power ſupport,
Were lying tongues forbid the court?
Did princely ears to truth attend,
What miniſter could gain his end?
How could he raiſe his tools to place,
And how his honeſt foes diſgrace?

That politician tops his part,
Who readily can lie with art:
The man's proficient in his trade;
His power is ſtrong, his fortune's made.
By that the intereſt of the throne
Is made ſubſervient to his own:
By that, have kings of old, deluded,
All their own friends for his excluded:
By that, his ſelfiſh ſchemes purſuing,
He thrives upon the public ruin.

Antiochus *, with hardy pace,
Provok'd the dangers of the chaſe;
And, loſt from all his menial train,
Travers'd the wood and pathleſs plain.
A cottage lodg'd the royal gueſt;
The Parthian clown brought forth his beſt.
The king unknown his feaſt enjoy'd,
And various chat the hours employ'd.
From wine what ſudden friendſhip ſprings!
Frankly they talk'd of courts and kings.

"We country-folks (the clown replies)
Could ope our gracious monarch's eyes.
The king, (as all our neighbours ſay)
Might he (God bleſs him!) have his way,
Is ſound at heart, and means our good,
And he would do it if he could.

* Plutarch.

If truth in courts were not forbid,
Nor kings nor subjects would be rid.
Were he in power, we need not doubt him;
But, that transferr'd to those about him,
On them he throws the regal cares;
And what mind they? Their own affairs.
If such rapacious hands he trust,
The best of men may seem unjust.
From kings to coblers 'tis the same;
Bad servants wound their master's fame.
In this our neighbours all agree:
Would the king knew as much as we?"
Here he stopt short. Repose they sought,
The peasant slept, the monarch thought.

The courtiers learn'd at early dawn,
Where their lost sovereign was withdrawn,
The guards' approach our host alarms;
With gaudy coats the cottage swarms.
The crown and purple robes they bring,
And prostrate fall before the king,
The clown was call'd; the royal guest
By due reward his thanks express.
The king then, turning to the crowd,
Who fawningly before him bow'd,
Thus spoke. "Since, bent on private gain,
Your counsels first misled my reign,
Taught and inform'd by you alone,
No truth the royal ear hath known,
Till here conversing: hence, ye crew;
For now I know myself and you."

Whene'er the royal ear's engrost,
State-lies but little genius cost.
The favourite then securely robs,
And gleans a nation by his jobs.
Franker and bolder grown in ill,
He daily poisons dares instil;
And, as his present views suggest,
Inflames and sooths the royal breast.
Thus wicked ministers oppress,
When oft the monarch means redress.

Would kings their private subjects hear,
A minister must talk with fear;
If honesty oppos'd his views,
He dar'd not innocence accuse;
'Twould keep him in such narrow bound,
He could not right and wrong confound.
Happy were kings, could they disclose
Their real friends and real foes!
Were both themselves and subjects known,
A monarch's will might be his own.
Had he the use of ears and eyes,
Knaves would no more be counted wise.
But then a minister might lose
(Hard case!) his own ambitious views.
When such as these have vex'd a state,
Pursued by universal hate,
Their false support at once hath fail'd,
And persevering truth prevail'd.
Expos'd, their train of fraud is seen;
Truth will at last remove the screen.

A country squire, by whim directed,
The true staunch dogs of chase neglected.
Beneath his board no hound was fed:
His hand ne'er stroak'd the spaniel's head.
A snappish cur, alone caress,
By lies had banish'd all the rest;
Yap had his ear; and defamation
Gave him full scope of conversation.
His sycophants must be preferr'd;
Room must be made for all his herd:
Wherefore, to bring his schemes about,
Old faithful servants all must out.

The cur on every creature flew
(As other great men's puppies do)
Unless due court to him were shown,
And both their face and business known:
No honest tongue an audience found;
He worried all the tenants round;
For why? he liv'd in constant fear,
Lest truth by chance should interfere.
If any stranger dar'd intrude,
The noisy cur his heels pursued.
Now fierce with rage, now struck with dread,
At once he snarl'd, bit, and fled.
Aloof he bays, with bristling hair,
And thus in secret growls his fear:
"Who knows but truth, in this disguise,
May frustrate my best-guarded lies?
Should she (thus mask'd) admittance find,
That very hour my ruin's sign'd."

Now, in his howl's continued sound,
Their words were lost, the voice was drown'd.
Ever in awe of honest tongues,
Thus every day he strain'd his lungs.

It happen'd, in ill-omen'd hour,
That Yap, unmindful of his power,
Forsook his post, to love inclin'd;
A favourite bitch was in the wind.
By her seduc'd in amorous play,
They frisk'd the joyous hours away.
Thus by untimely love pursuing,
Like Antony he fought his ruin.

For now the squire, unvex'd with noise,
An honest neighbour's chat enjoys.
"Be free, (says he;) your mind impart;
I love a friendly open heart.
Methinks my tenants shun my gate;
Why such a stranger grown of late?
Pray tell me what offence they find:
'Tis plain they're not so well inclin'd."

"Turn off your cur (the farmer cries)
Who feeds your ear with daily lies.
His snarling insolence offends;
'Tis he that keeps you from your friends.
Were but that saucy puppy check't,
You'd find again the same respect.
Hear only him, he'll swear it too,
That all our hatred is to you.
But learn from us your true estate;
'Tis that curs'd cur alone we hate."

The squire heard truth. Now Yap rush'd in;
The wide hall echoes with his din;
Yet truth prevail'd; and, with disgrace,
The dog was cudgel'd out of place.

FABLE VII.

The Countryman and Jupiter.

TO MYSELF.

Have you a friend (look round and spy)
So fond, so prepossess'd as I?

Your faults, ſo obvious to mankind,
My partial eyes could never find.
When by the breath of fortune blown,
Your airy caſtles were o'erthrown,
Have I been ever prone to blame,
Or mortify'd your hours with ſhame?
Was I e'er known to damp your ſpirit,
Or twit you with the want of merit?
'Tis not ſo ſtrange that fortune's frown
Still perſeveres to keep you down.
Look round, and ſee what others do.
Would you be rich and honeſt too?
Have you (like thoſe ſhe rais'd to place)
Been opportunely mean and baſe?
Have you (as times requir'd) reſign'd
Truth, honour, virtue, peace of mind?
If theſe are ſcruples, give her o'er;
Write practiſe morals, and be poor.
The gifts of fortune truly rate,
Then tell me what would mend your ſtate.
If happineſs on wealth were built,
Rich rogues might comfort find in guilt.
As grows the miſer's hoarded ſtore,
His fears, his wants, increaſe the more.
Think, Gay, (what ne'er may be the caſe)
Should fortune take you into grace,
Would that your happineſs augment?
What can ſhe give beyond content?
Suppoſe yourſelf a wealthy heir,
With a vaſt annual income clear!
In all the affluence you poſſeſs,
You might not feel one care the leſs.
Might you not then (like others) find
With change of fortune change of mind;
Perhaps, profuſe beyond all rule,
You might ſtart out a glaring fool;
Your luxury might break all bounds:
Plate, table, horſes, ſtewards, hounds,
Might ſwell your debts: then, luſt of play
No regal income can defray.
Sunk is all credit, writs aſſail,
And doom your future life to jail.
Or, were you dignify'd with power,
Would that avert one penſive hour?
You might give avarice its ſwing,
Defraud a nation, blind a king:
Then, from the hirelings in your cauſe
Though daily fed with falſe applauſe,
Could it a real joy impart?
Great guilt knew never joy at heart.
Is happineſs your point in view?
(I mean th' intrinſic and the true)
She nor in camps or courts reſides,
Nor in the humble cottage hides;
Yet found alike in every ſphere;
Who finds content will find her there.
O'erſpent with toil, beneath the ſhade,
A peaſant reſted on his ſpade.
"Good gods! (he cries,) 'tis hard to bear
This load of life from year to year!
Soon as the morning ſtreaks the ſkies,
Induſtrious labour bids me riſe.
With ſweat I earn my homely fare,
And every day renews my care"
Jove heard the diſcontented ſtrain,
And thus rebuk'd the murmuring ſwain.

"Speak out your wants, then, honeſt friend:
Unjuſt complaints the gods offend,
If you repine at partial fate,
Inſtruct me what could mend your ſtate.
Mankind in every ſtation ſee.
What wiſh you? tell me what you'd be."
So ſaid, upborne upon a cloud,
The clown ſurvey'd the anxious crowd.
"Yon' face of care, (ſays Jove,) behold,
His bulky bags are fill'd with gold.
See with what joy he counts it o'er!
That ſum to-day hath ſwell'd his ſtore."
"Were I that man, (the peaſant cry'd)
What bleſſing could I aſk beſide?"
"Hold, (ſays the god;) firſt learn to know
True happineſs from outward ſhow.
This optic glaſs of intuition—
Here, take it, view his true condition."
He look'd, and ſaw the miſer's breaſt
A troubled ocean, ne'er at reſt;
Want ever ſtares him in the face,
And fear anticipates diſgrace:
With conſcious guilt he ſaw him ſtart;
Extortion gnaws his throbbing heart;
And never, or in thought or dream,
His breaſt admits one happy gleam.
"May Jove, (he cries,) reject my prayer,
And guard my life from guilt and care!
My ſoul abhors that wretch's fate.
O keep me in my humble ſtate!
But ſee, amidſt a gawdy crowd,
Yon' miniſter ſo gay and proud;
On him what happineſs attends,
Who thus rewards his grateful friends!"
"Firſt take the glaſs, (the god replies;)
Man views the world with partial eyes."
"Good gods! (exclaims the ſtartled wight,)
Defend me from this hideous ſight!
Corruption with corroſive ſmart
Lies cankering on his guilty heart:
I ſee him with polluted hand
Spread the contagion o'er the land.
Now avarice with inſatiate jaws,
Now rapine with her harpy claws,
His boſom tears. His conſcious breaſt
Groans with a load of crimes oppreſt.
See him, mad and drunk with power,
Stand tottering on ambition's tower.
Sometimes, in ſpeeches vain and proud,
His boaſts inſult the nether crowd;
Now, ſeiz'd with giddineſs and fear,
He trembles leſt his fall is near."
"Was ever wretch like this! (he cries;)
Such miſery in ſuch diſguiſe!
The change, O Jove! I diſavow;
Still be my lot the ſpade and plough."
He next, confirm'd by ſpeculation,
Rejects the lawyer's occupation;
For he the ſtateſman ſeem'd in part,
And bore ſimilitude of heart.
Nor did the ſoldier's trade inflame
His hopes with thirſt of ſpoil and fame.
The miſeries of war he mourn'd;
Whole nations into deſerts turn'd.
"By theſe have laws and rights been brav'd;
By theſe was free-born man enſlav'd:

When battles and invaſion ceaſe,
Why ſwarm they in the lands of peace?
Such change (ſays he) may I decline;
The ſcythe and civil arms be mine!"
Thus, weighing life in each condition,
The clown withdrew his raſh petition.
When thus the god; "How mortals err!
If you true happineſs prefer,
'Tis to no rank of life confin'd,
But dwells in every honeſt mind.
Be juſtice, then, your ſole purſuit:
Plant virtue, and content's the fruit."
So Jove, to gratify the clown,
Where firſt he found him, ſet him down.

FABLE VIII.

The Man, the Cat, the Dog, and the Fly.

TO MY NATIVE COUNTRY.

HAIL, happy land! whoſe fertile grounds
The liquid fence of Neptune bounds;
By bounteous nature ſet apart,
The ſeat of induſtry and art!
O Britain! choſen port of trade,
May luxury ne'er thy ſons invade!
May never miniſter (intent
His private treaſures to augment)
Corrupt thy ſtate! If jealous foes
Thy rights of commerce dare oppoſe,
Shall not thy fleets their rapine awe?
Who is't preſcribes the ocean law?
Whenever neighbouring ſtates contend,
'Tis thine to be the general friend.
What is't who rules in other lands?
On trade alone thy glory ſtands;
That benefit is unconfin'd,
Diffuſing good among mankind:
That firſt gave luſtre to thy reigns,
And ſcatter'd plenty o'er thy plains:
'Tis that alone thy wealth ſupplies,
And draws all Europe's envious eyes.
Be commerce, then, thy ſole deſign;
Keep that, and all the world is thine.
When naval traffic ploughs the main,
Who ſhares not in the merchant's gain?
'Tis that ſupports the regal ſtate,
And makes the farmer's heart elate:
The numerous flocks that clothe the land
Can ſcarce ſupply the loom's demand;
Prolific culture glads the fields;
And the bare heath a harveſt yields.
Nature expects mankind ſhould ſhare
The duties of the public care.
Who's born for ſloth? * To ſome we find
The ploughſhare's annual toil aſſign'd:
Some at the founding anvil glow;
Some the ſwift-gliding ſhuttle throw;
Some, ſtudious of the wind and tide,
From pole to pole our commerce guide:
Some (taught by induſtry) impart
With hands and feet the works of art;
While ſome, of genius more refin'd,
With head and tongue aſſiſt mankind.

* Barrow.

Each, aiming at one common end,
Proves to the whole a needful friend.
Thus, born each other's uſeful aid,
By turns are obligations paid.
The monarch, when his table's ſpread,
Is to the clown oblig'd for bread;
And, when in all his glory dreſt,
Owes to the loom his royal veſt.
Do not the maſon's toil and care
Protect him from th' inclement air?
Does not the cutler's art ſupply
The ornament that guards his thigh?
All theſe, in duty to the throne,
Their common obligations own.
'Tis he (his own and people's cauſe)
Protects their properties and laws.
Thus they their honeſt toil employ,
And with content the fruits enjoy.
In every rank, or great or ſmall,
'Tis induſtry ſupports us all.
The animals, by want oppreſs'd,
To man their ſervices addreſs'd:
While each purſu'd their ſelfiſh good,
They hunger'd for precarious food:
Their hours with anxious cares were vext;
One day they fed, and ſtarv'd the next:
They ſaw that plenty, ſure and rife,
Was found alone in ſocial life;
That mutual induſtry profeſs'd,
The various wants of man redreſs'd.
The cat, half famiſh'd, lean and weak,
Demands the privilege to ſpeak.
"Well, puſs, (ſays man) and what can you
To benefit the public do?"
The cat replies, "Theſe teeth, theſe claws,
With vigilance ſhall ſerve the cauſe,
The mouſe deſtroy'd by my purſuit,
No longer ſhall your feaſts pollute;
Nor rats, from nightly ambuſcade,
With waſteful teeth your ſtores invade."
"I grant, ſays man, to general uſe
Your parts and talents may conduce;
For rats and mice purloin our grain,
And threſhers whirl the flail in vain:
Thus ſhall the cat, a foe to ſpoil,
Protect the farmer's honeſt toil."
Then turning to the dog, he cry'd,
"Well, ſir, be next your merits try'd."
"Sir, (ſays the dog,) by ſelf-applauſe
We ſeem to own a friendleſs cauſe.
Aſk thoſe who know me, if diſtruſt
E'er found me treacherous or unjuſt?
Did I e'er faith or friendſhip break?
Aſk all thoſe creatures; let them ſpeak.
My vigilance and truſty zeal
Perhaps might ſerve the public weal.
Might not your flocks in ſafety feed,
Were I to guard the fleecy breed?
Did I the nightly watches keep,
Could thieves invade you while you ſleep?
The man replies. "'Tis juſt and right;
Rewards ſuch ſervice ſhould requite.
So rare, in property, we find
Truſt uncorrupt among mankind,
That, taken in a public view,
The firſt diſtinction is your due.

Such merits all reward tranſcend:
Be then my comrade and my friend."
Addreſſing now the fly: "From you
What public ſervice can accrue?"
"From me! (the fluttering inſect ſaid)
I thought you knew me better bred.
Sir, I'm a gentleman. Is't fit
That I to induſtry ſubmit?
Let mean mechanics, to be fed,
By buſineſs earn ignoble bread;
Loſt in exceſs of daily joys,
No thought, no care, my life annoys.
At noon (the lady's matin hour)
I ſip the tea's delicious flower.
On cates luxurioufly I dine,
And drink the fragrance of the vine.
Studious of elegance and eaſe,
Myſelf alone I ſeek to pleaſe."
The man his pert conceit derides,
And thus the uſeleſs coxcomb chides:
"Hence, from that peach, that downy feat;
No idle fool deſerves to eat.
Could you have ſapp'd the bluſhing rind,
And on that pulp ambroſial din'd;
Had not ſome hand, with ſkill and toil,
To raiſe the tree, prepar'd the ſoil?
Conſider, ſot, what would enſue,
Were all ſuch worthleſs things as you.
You'd ſoon be forc'd (by hunger ſtung)
To make your dirty meals on dung,
On which ſuch deſpicable need,
Unpitied, is reduc'd to feed.
Beſides, vain ſelfiſh inſect, learn,
(If you can right and wrong diſcern)
That he who, with induſtrious zeal,
Contributes to the public weal,
By adding to the common good,
His own hath rightly underſtood."
So ſaying, with a ſudden blow
He laid the noxious vagrant low.
Cruſh'd in his luxury and pride,
The ſpunger on the public dy'd.

FABLE IX.

The Jackall, Leopard, and other Beaſts.

TO A MODERN POLITICIAN.

I GRANT corruption ſways mankind;
That intereſt, too, perverts the mind;
That bribes have blinded common ſenſe,
Foil'd reaſon, truth, and eloquence:
I grant you, too, our preſent crimes
Can equal thoſe of former times.
Againſt plain facts ſhall I engage,
To vindicate our rightcous age?
I know that in a modern fiſt
Bribes in full energy ſubſiſt.
Since, then, theſe arguments prevail,
And itchi g palms are ſtill ſo frail,
Hence politicians, you ſuggeſt,
Should drive the nail that goes the beſt;
That it ſhows parts and penetration,
To ply men with the right temptation.
To this I humbly muſt diſſent,
Premiſing no reflection's meant.
Does juſtice or the client's ſenſe
Teach lawyers either ſide's defence?
The fee gives eloquence and ſpirit;
That only is the client's merit.
Does art, wit, wiſdom, or addreſs,
Obtain the proſtitute's careſs?
The guinea (as in other trades)
From every hand alike perſuades.
Man, ſcripture ſays, is prone to evil;
But does that vindicate the devil?
Beſides, the more mankind are prone,
The leſs the devil's parts are ſhown.
Corruption's not of modern date;
It hath been try'd in every ſtate;
Great knaves of old their power have fenc'd;
By places, penſions. bribes diſpens'd;
By theſe they glory'd in ſucceſs,
And impudently dar'd oppreſs;
By theſe deſpoticly they ſway'd,
And ſlaves extoll'd the hand that pay'd;
Nor parts nor genius were employ'd,
By theſe alone were realms deſtroy'd.
Now ſee theſe wretches in diſgrace,
Stript of their treaſures, power, and place;
View them abandon'd and forlorn,
Expos'd to ſuch reproach and ſcorn.
What now is all your pride, your boaſt?
Where are your ſlaves, your flattering hoſt!
What tongues now feed you with applauſe?
Where are the champions of your cauſe?
Now ev'n that very fawning train,
Which ſhar'd the gleanings of your gain,
Preſs foremoſt who ſhall firſt accuſe
Your ſelfiſh jobs, your paltry views,
Your narrow ſchemes, your breach of truſt,
And want of talents to be juſt.
What fools were theſe amidſt their power!
How thoughtleſs of their adverſe hour!
What friends were made? A hireling herd,
For temporary votes preferr'd.
Was it theſe ſycophants to get,
Your bounty ſwell'd a nation's debt?
You're bit: for theſe, like Swiſs, attend;
No longer pay, no longer friend.
The lion is (beyond diſpute)
Allow'd the moſt majeſtic brute;
His valour and his generous mind
Prove him ſuperior of his kind:
Yet to jackalls (as 'tis averr'd)
Some lions have their power transferr'd;
As if the parts of pimps and ſpies
To govern foreſts could ſuffice.
Once, ſtudious of his private good,
A proud jackall oppreſs'd the wood;
To cram his own inſatiate jaws,
Invaded property and laws.
The foreſt groans with diſcontent,
Freſh wrongs the general hate foment.
The ſpreading murmurs reach'd his ear;
His ſecret hours were vex'd with fear.
Night after night he weighs the caſe,
And feels the terrors of diſgrace.
"By friends (ſays he) I'll guard my ſeat,
By thoſe malicious tongues defeat;
I'll ſtrengthen power by new allies,
And all my clamorous foes deſpiſe."

To make the generous beaſts his friends,
He cringes, fawns, and condeſcends;
But thoſe repuls'd his abject court,
And ſcorn'd oppreſſion to ſupport,
Friends muſt be had. He can't ſubſiſt.
Bribes ſhall new proſelytes inliſt:
But theſe nought weigh'd in honeſt paws;
For bribes confeſs a wicked cauſe;
Yet think not every paw withſtands
What hath prevail'd in human hands.
A tempting turnip's ſilver ſkin
Drew a baſe hog through thick and thin:
Bought with a ſtag's delicious haunch,
The mercenary wolf was ſtaunch:
The convert fox grew warm and hearty,
A pullet gain'd him to the party:
The golden-pippin in his fiſt,
A chattering monkey join'd the liſt.
But ſoon expos'd to public hate,
The favourite's fall redreſs the ſtate.
The leopard, vindicating right,
Had brought his ſecret frauds to light.
As rats, before the manſion falls,
Deſert late hoſpitable walls,
In ſhoals the ſervile creatures run,
To bow before the riſing ſun.
The hog with warmth expreſs'd his zeal,
And was for hanging thoſe that ſteal;
But hop'd though low, the public hoard
Might half a turnip ſtill afford.
Since ſaving meaſures were profeſt,
A lamb's head was the wolf's requeſt.
The fox ſubmitted, if to touch
A goſling would be deem'd too much.
The monkey thought his grin and chatter
Might aſk a nut, or ſome ſuch matter.
"Ye hirelings! hence! (the leopard cries)
Your venal conſcience I deſpiſe.
He, who the public good intends,
By bribes needs never purchaſe friends.
Who acts this juſt, this honeſt part,
Is propt by every honeſt heart.
Corruption now too late has ſhow'd,
That bribes are always ill-beſtow'd;
By you your bubbled maſter's taught,
Time-ſerving tools, not friends, are bought."

FABLE X.

The degenerate Bees.

TO THE REV. DR. SWIFT, DEAN OF ST. PATRICK'S.

Though courts the practiſe diſallow,
A friend at all times I'll avow.
In politics I know 'tis wrong;
A friendſhip may be kept too long;
And what they call the prudent part,
Is to wear intereſt next the heart.
As the times take a different face,
Old friendſhips ſhould to new give place.
I know, too, you have many foes,
That owning you is ſharing thoſe;
That every knave in every ſtation,
Of high and low denomination.
For what you ſpeak, and what you write,
Dread you at once, and bear you ſpite.
Such freedoms in your works are ſhown,
They can't enjoy what's not their own.
All dunces, too, in church and ſtate,
In frothy nonſenſe ſhow their hate;
With all the petty ſcribbling crew
(And thoſe pert ſots are not a few),
'Gainſt you and Pope their envy ſpurt,
The bookſellers alone are hurt
Good Gods! by what a powerful race
(For blockheads may have power and place)
Are ſcandals rais'd, and libels writ!
To prove your honeſty and wit!
Think with yourſelf: thoſe worthy men,
You know, have ſuffered by your pen.
From them you've nothing but your due,
From hence, 'tis plain, your friends are few.
Except myſelf, I know of none,
Beſides the wife and good alone.
To ſet the caſe in fairer light,
My fable ſhall the reſt recite,
Which (though unlike our preſent ſtate)
I for the moral's ſake relate.
A bee of cunning, not of parts,
Luxurious, negligent of arts,
Rapacious arrogant, and vain,
Greedy of power, but more of gain,
Corruption ſow'd throughout the hive:
By petty rogues the great ones thrive.
As power and wealth his views ſupply'd,
'Twas ſeen in overbearing pride.
With him loud impudence had merit;
The bee of conſcience wanted ſpirit;
And thoſe who follow'd honour's rules
Were laugh'd to ſcorn for ſqueamiſh fools.
Wealth claim'd diſtinction, favour, grace,
And poverty alone was baſe.
He treated induſtry with ſlight,
Unleſs he found his profit by't.
Rights, laws, and liberties, give way,
To bring his ſelfiſh ſchemes in play.
The ſwarm forgot the common toil,
To ſhare the gleanings of his ſpoil.
While vulgar ſouls, of narrow parts,
Waſte life in low mechanic arts,
Let us (ſays he) to genius born,
The drudgery of our fathers ſcorn.
The waſp and drone, you muſt agree,
Live with more elegance than we.
Like gentlemen they ſport and play;
No buſineſs interrupts the day:
Their hours to luxury they give,
And nobly on their neighbours live.
A ſtubborn bee, among the ſwarm,
With honeſt indignation warm,
Thus from his cell with zeal reply'd:
"I ſlight thy frowns, and hate thy pride.
The laws our native rights protect;
Offending thee, I thoſe reſpect;
Shall luxury corrupt the hive,
And none againſt the torrent ſtrive?
Exert the honour of your race;
He builds his riſe on your diſgrace.
'Tis induſtry our ſtate maintains;
'Twas honeſt toil and honeſt gains
That rais'd our ſires to power and fame.
Be virtuous; ſave yourſelves from ſhame.

Know that, in selfish ends pursuing,
You scramble for the public ruin."
He spoke; and, from his cell dismiss'd,
Was insolently scoff'd and hiss'd.
With him a friend or two resign'd,
Disdaining the degenerate kind.
"These drones (says he), these insects vile,
(I treat them in their proper style)
May for a time oppress the state:
They own our virtue by their hate;
By that our merits they reveal,
And recommend our public zeal;
Disgrac'd by this corrupted crew,
We're honour'd by the virtuous few.

FABLE XI.

The Pack-horse and the Carrier.

TO A YOUNG NOBLEMAN.

BEGIN, my Lord, in early youth,
To suffer, nay, encourage truth;
And blame me not for disrespect,
If I the flatterer's style reject;
With that, by menial tongues supply'd,
You're daily cocker'd up in pride.
The tree's distinguish'd by the fruit.
Be virtue, then, your first pursuit;
Set your great ancestors in view,
Like them deserve the title too;
Like them ignoble actions scorn;
Let virtue prove you greatly born.
Though with less plate their sideboard shone,
Their conscience always was their own;
They ne'er at levees meanly fawn'd,
Nor was their honour yearly pawn'd;
Their hands, by no corruption stain'd,
The ministerial bribe disdain'd;
They serv'd the crown with loyal zeal,
Yet, jealous of the public weal,
They stood the bulwark of our laws,
And wore at heart their country's cause;
By neither place or pension bought,
They spoke and voted as they thought.
Thus did your sires adorn their seat;
And such alone are truly great.
If you the paths of learning slight,
You're but a dunce in stronger light.
In foremost rank the coward plac'd,
Is more conspicuously disgrac'd.
If you, to serve a paltry end,
To knavish jobs can condescend,
We pay you the contempt that's due;
In that you have precedence too.
Whence had you this illustrious name?
From virtue and unblemish'd fame.
By birth the name alone descends;
Your honour on yourself depends:
Think not your coronet can hide
Assuming ignorance and pride.
Learning by study must be won;
'Twas ne'er entail'd from son to son.
Superior worth your rank requires;
For that mankind reveres your sires:
If you degenerate from your race,
Their merits heighten your disgrace.

A carrier, every night and morn,
Would see his horses eat their corn:
This sunk the hostler's vails, 'tis true;
But then his horses had their due.
Were we so cautious in all cases,
Small gains would rise from greater places.
The manger now had all its measure;
He heard their grinding teeth with pleasure;
When all at once confusion rung;
They snorted, jostled, bit, and flung.
A pack-horse turn'd his head aside,
Foaming, his eye-balls swell'd with pride.
Good gods! (says he) how hard's my lot!
Is then my high descent forgot?
Reduc'd to drudgery and disgrace
(A life unworthy of my race),
Must I, too, hear the vile attacks
Of ragged scrubs and vulgar hacks?
See scurvy Roan, that brute ill-bred,
Dares from the manger thrust my head!
Shall I, who boast of noble line,
On offals of these creatures dine?
Kick'd by old Ball! so mean a foe?
My honour suffers by the blow.
Newmarket speaks my grandsire's fame;
All jockeys still revere his name:
There, yearly, are his triumphs told,
There all his massy plates inroll'd.
Whene'er led forth upon the plain,
You saw him with a livery train;
Returning, too, with laurels crown'd,
You heard the drums and trumpets sound.
Let it then, Sir, be understood,
Respect's my due, for I have blood."
"Vain-glorious fool!" (the carrier cry'd)
Respect was never paid to pride.
Know 'twas thy giddy wilful heart
Reduc'd thee to this slavish part,
Did not thy headstrong youth disdain
To learn the conduct of the rein?
Thus coxcombs, blind to real merit,
In vicious frolics fancy spirit.
What is't to me by whom begot,
Thou restive, pert, conceited sot?
Your sires, I reverence; 'tis their due;
But, worthless fool, what's that to you?
Ask all the carriers on the road,
They'll say, thy keeping's ill bestow'd;
Then vaunt no more thy noble race,
That neither mends thy strength or pace.
What profits me thy boast of blood?
An ass has more intrinsic good.
By outward show let's not be cheated;
An ass should like an ass be treated."

FABLE XII.

Pan and Fortune.

TO A YOUNG HEIR.

SOON as your father's death was known,
(As if th' estate had been their own)
The gamesters outwardly express
The decent joy within your breast.
So lavish in your praise they grew,
As spoke their certain hopes in you.

One counts your income of the year,
How much in ready money clear.
" No houſe (ſays he) is more complete;
The garden's elegant and great.
How fine the park around it lies!
The timber's of a noble ſize.
Then count his jewels and his plate.
Beſides, 'tis no entail'd eſtate.
If caſh run low, his lands in fee
Are, or for ſale or mortgage free."
Thus they, before you threw the main,
Seem to anticipate their gain.
Would you, when thieves are known abroad,
Bring forth your treaſures in the road?
Would not the fool abet the ſtealth,
Who raſhly thus expos'd his wealth?
Yet this you do, whene'er you play
Among the gentlemen of prey.
Could fools to keep their own contrive,
On what, on whom could gameſters thrive?
Is it in charity you game,
To ſave your worthy gang from ſhame?
Unleſs you furniſh'd daily bread,
Which way could idleneſs be fed?
Could theſe profeſſors of deceit
Within the law no longer cheat,
They muſt run bolder riſks for prey,
And ſtrip the traveller on the way.
Thus in your annual rents they ſhare,
And 'ſcape the nooſe from year to year.
Conſider, ere you take the bet,
That ſum might croſs your tailor's debt.
When you the pilfering rattle ſhake,
Is not your honour, too, at ſtake?
Muſt you not by mean lies evade
To-morrow's duns from every trade;
By promiſes ſo often paid,
Is yet your tailor's bill defray'd?
Muſt you not pitifully fawn
To have your butcher's writ withdrawn?
This muſt be done. In debts of play,
Your honour ſuffers no delay;
And not this year's and next year's rent
The ſons of rapine can content.
Look round, the wrecks of play behold,
Eſtates diſmember'd, mortgag'd, ſold!
Their owners now, to goals confin'd,
Show equal poverty of mind.
Some, who the ſpoil of knaves were made,
Too late attempt to learn their trade.
Some, for the folly of one hour,
Become the dirty tools of power;
And, with the mercenary liſt,
Upon court-charity ſubſiſt.
You'll find at laſt this maxim true,
Fools are the game which knaves purſue.
The foreſt (a whole century's ſhade)
Muſt be one waſteful ruin made:
No mercy's ſhown to age or kind;
The general maſſacre is ſign'd.
The park, too, ſhares the dreadful fate,
For duns grow louder at the gate.
Stern clowns, obedient to the 'ſquire,
(What will not barbarous hands for hire?)
With brawny arms repeat the ſtroke;
Fall'n are the elm and reverend oak,
Through the long wood loud axes ſound,
And echo groans with every wound.
To ſee the deſolation ſpread,
Pan drops a tear, and hangs his head:
His boſom now with fury burns;
Beneath his hoof the dice he ſpurns.
Cards, too, in peeviſh paſſion torn,
The ſport of whirling winds are borne.
" To ſnails inveterate hate I bear,
Who ſpoil the verdure of the year;
The caterpillar I deteſt,
The blooming ſpring's voracious peſt;
The locuſt, too, whoſe ravenous band
Spreads ſudden famine o'er the land.
But what are theſe? the dice's throw
At once hath laid a foreſt low.
The cards are dealt, the bett is made,
And the wide park hath loſt its ſhade.
Thus is my kingdom's pride defac'd,
And all its ancient glories waſte.
All this (he cries) is fortune's doing:
'Tis thus ſhe meditates my ruin,
By fortune, that falſe, fickle jade,
More havock in one hour is made,
Than all the hungry inſect race,
Combin'd, can in an age deface."
Fortune, by chance, who near him paſt,
O'erheard the vile aſperſion caſt.
" Why, Pan, (ſays ſhe) what's all this rant?
'Tis every country-bubble's cant.
Am I the patroneſs of vice?
Is't I who cog or palm the dice?
Did I the ſhuffling art reveal,
To mark the cards, or range the deal?
In all th' employments men purſue,
I mind the leaſt what gameſters do.
There may (if computation's juſt)
One now and then my conduct truſt.
I blame the fool, for what can I,
When ninety-nine my power defy?
Theſe truſt alone their fingers' ends,
And not one ſtake on me depends,
Whene'er the gaming-board is ſet,
Two claſſes of mankind are met;
But, if we count the greedy race,
The knaves fill up the greater ſpace.
'Tis a groſs error held in ſchools,
That fortune always favours fools.
In play it never bears diſpute;
That doctrine theſe fell'd oaks confute.
Then why to me ſuch rancour ſhow?
'Tis folly, Pan, that is thy foe.
By me his late eſtate he won,
But he by folly was undone."

FABLE XIII.

Plutus, Cupid, and Time.

Of all the burdens man muſt bear,
Time ſeems moſt galling and ſevere:
Beneath this grievous load oppreſs'd,
We daily meet ſome friend diſtreſs'd.
" What can one do? I roſe at nine?
'Tis full ſix hours before we dine;

Six hours! no earthly thing to do!
Would I had doz'd in bed till two!"
A pamphlet is before him ſpread,
And almoſt half a page is read;
Tir'd with the ſtudy of the day,
The fluttering ſheets are toſs'd away.
He opes his ſnuff-box, hums an air,
Then yawns, and ſtretches in his chair.
"Not twenty, by the minute-hand!
Good gods, ſays he, my watch muſt ſtand!
How muddling 'tis on books to pore!
I thought I'd read an hour or more.
The morning, of all hours, I hate.
One can't contrive to riſe too late."
To make the minutes faſter run,
Then, too, his tireſome ſelf to ſhun,
To the next coffee-houſe he ſpeeds,
Takes up the news, ſome ſcraps he reads.
Sauntering, from chair to chair he trails;
Now drinks his tea, now bites his nails.
He ſpies a partner of his woe;
By chat afflictions lighter grow;
Each other's grievances they ſhare,
And thus their dreadful hours compare.
Says Tom, "Since all men muſt confeſs,
That time lies heavy, more or leſs,
Why ſhould it be ſo hard to get,
Till two, a party at piquet?
Play might relieve the lagging morn:
By cards long wintery nights are borne.
Does not quadrille amuſe the fair,
Night after night, throughout the year?
Vapours and ſpleen forgot, at play
They cheat uncounted hours away."
"My caſe, (ſays Will), then muſt be hard,
By want of ſkill from play debarr'd.
Courtiers kill time by various ways;
Dependence wears out half their days.
How happy theſe, whoſe time ne'er ſtands!
Attendance takes it off their hands.
Were it not for this curſed ſhower,
The park had will'd away an hour.
At court, without or place or view,
I daily loſe an hour or two:
It fully anſwers my deſign,
When I have pick'd up friends to dine;
The tavern makes our burden light;
Wine puts our time and care to flight.
At ſix (hard caſe!) they call to pay.
Where can one go? I hate the play.
From ſix till ten! unleſs in ſleep,
One cannot ſpend the hours ſo cheap.
The comedy's no ſooner done,
But ſome aſſembly is begun;
Loitering from room to room I ſtray,
Converſe, but nothing hear or ſay:
Quite tir'd, from fair to fair I roam.
So ſoon! I dread the thoughts of home.
From thence, to quicken ſlow-pac'd night,
Again my tavern-friends invite:
Here, too, our early mornings paſs,
Till drowſy ſleep retard the glaſs."
Thus they their wretched life bemoan,
And make each other's caſe their own.
Conſider, friends, no hour rolls on
But ſomething of your grief is gone.

Were you to ſchemes of buſineſs bred,
Did you the paths of learning tread,
Your hours, your days, would fly too faſt;
You'd then regret the minute paſt.
Time's fugitive and light as wind:
'Tis indolence that clogs your mind:
That load from off your ſpirits ſhake,
You'll own, and grieve for—your miſtake.
A while your thoughtleſs ſpleen ſuſpend,
Then read, and, if you can, attend.
As Plutus, to divert his care,
Walk'd forth one morn to take the air,
Cupid o'ertook his ſtrutting pace.
Each ſtar'd upon the ſtranger's face,
Till recollection ſet them right,
For each knew th' other but by ſight.
After ſome complimental talk,
Time met them, bow'd, and join'd their walk.
Their chat on various ſubjects ran,
But moſt, what each had done for man.
Plutus aſſumes a haughty air,
Juſt like our purſe-proud fellows here.
"Let kings, (ſays he), let cobblers tell,
Whoſe gifts among mankind excel.
Conſider courts; what draws their train?
Think you 'tis loyalty or gain?
That ſtateſman hath the ſtrongeſt hold,
Whoſe tool of politics is gold;
By that, in former reigns, 'tis ſaid,
The knave in power hath ſenates led:
By that alone he ſway'd debates,
Enrich'd himſelf, and beggar'd ſtates.
Forego your boaſt. You muſt conclude,
That's moſt eſteem'd that's moſt purſued.
Think, too, in what a woeful plight
That wretch muſt live whoſe pocket's light.
Are not his hours by want depreſt?
Penurious care corrodes his breaſt.
Without reſpect, or love, or friends,
His ſolitary day deſcends."
"You might, (ſays Cupid), doubt my parts,
My knowledge, too, in human hearts,
Should I the power of gold diſpute,
Which great examples might confute.
I know, when nothing elſe prevails,
Perſuaſive money ſeldom fails;
That beauty, too, (like other wares)
Its price, as well as conſcience, bears.
Then marriage (as of late profeſt)
Is but a money-job at beſt.
Conſent, compliance, may be ſold;
But love's beyond the price of gold.
Smugglers there are, who, by retail,
Expoſe what they call love to ſale;
Such bargains are an arrant cheat:
You purchaſe flattery and deceit.
Thoſe who true love have ever try'd
(The common cares of life ſupply'd)
No wants endure, no wiſhes make,
But every real joy partake.
All comfort on themſelves depends;
They want nor power, nor wealth, nor friends.
Love, then, hath every bliſs in ſtore;
'Tis friendſhip, and 'tis ſomething more.
Each other every wiſh they give:
Not to know love, is not to live."

"Or love, or money, (Time reply'd)
Were men the queſtion to decide,
Would bear the prize: on both intent,
My boon's neglected or miſ-ſpent.
'Tis I who meaſure vital ſpace,
And deal out years to human race.
Though little priz'd, and ſeldom ſought,
Without me love and gold are nought.
How does the miſer time employ?
Did I e'er ſee him life enjoy?
By me forſook, the hoards he won
Are ſcatter'd by his laviſh ſon.
By me all uſeful arts are gain'd:
Wealth, learning, wiſdom, is attain'd.
Who then would think (ſince ſuch my power)
That e'er I knew an idle hour?
So ſubtle and ſo ſwift I fly,
Love's not more fugitive than I.
Who hath not heard coquettes complain
Of days, months, years, miſ-ſpent in vain?
For time miſus'd they pine and waſte,
And love's ſweet pleaſures never taſte.
Thoſe who direct their time aright,
If love or wealth their hopes excite,
In each purſuit fit hours employ'd,
And both by time have been enjoy'd.
How heedleſs then are mortals grown!
How little is their intereſt known!
In every view they ought to mind me,
For, when once loſt, they never find me."
He ſpoke. The gods no more conteſt,
And his ſuperior gift confeſs'd,
That time (when truly underſtood)
Is the moſt precious earthly good.

FABLE XIV.

The Owl, the Swan, the Cock, the Spider, the Aſs, and the Farmer.—To a Mother.

Conversing with your ſprightly boys,
Your eyes have ſpoke the mother's joys.
With what delight I've heard you quote
Their ſayings in imperfect note!
I grant, in body and in mind
Nature appears profuſely kind.
Truſt not to that. Act you your part;
Imprint juſt morals on their heart;
Impartially their talents ſcan:
Juſt education forms the man.
Perhaps (their genius yet unknown)
Each lot of life's already thrown;
That this ſhall plead, the next ſhall fight,
The laſt aſſert the church's right.
I cenſure not the fond intent;
But how precarious is th' event!
By talents miſapply'd and croſt,
Conſider, all your ſons are loſt.
One day (the tale's by Martial penn'd)
A father thus addreſs'd his friend:
"To train my boy, and call forth ſenſe,
You know I've ſtuck at no expence;
I've try'd him in the ſeveral arts;
(The lad, no doubt, hath latent parts)
Yet, trying all, he nothing knows,
But, crab-like, rather backward goes.
Teach me what yet remains undone;
'Tis your advice ſhall fix my ſon."
"Sir, (ſays the friend), I've weigh'd the matter
Excuſe me, for I ſcorn to flatter:
Make him (nor think his genius check'd)
A herald or an architect."
Perhaps (as commonly 'tis known)
He heard th' advice, and took his own.
The boy wants wit; he's ſent to ſchool,
Where learning but improves the fool.
The college next muſt give him parts,
And cram him with the liberal arts.
Whether he blunders at the bar,
Or owes his infamy to war;
Or if by licence or degree
The ſexton ſhare the doctor's fee;
Or from the pulpit by the hour
He weekly floods of nonſenſe pour;
We find (th' intent of nature foil'd)
A tailor or a butcher ſpoil'd.
Thus miniſters have royal boons
Conferr'd on blockheads and buffoons:
In ſpite of nature, merit, wit,
Their friends for every poſt were fit.
But now let every muſe confeſs
That merit finds its due ſucceſs.
Th' examples of our days regard;
Where's virtue ſeen without reward?
Diſtinguiſh'd and in place you find
Deſert and worth of every kind.
Survey the reverend bench, and ſee
Religion, learning, piety:
The patron, ere he recommends,
Sees his own image in his friend's.
Is honeſty diſgrac'd and poor?
What is't to us what was before?
We of all times corrupt have heard,
When paltry minions were preferr'd;
When all great offices, by dozens,
Were fill'd by brothers, ſons, and couſins.
What matter ignorance and pride?
The man was happily ally'd.
Provided that his clerk was good,
What though he nothing underſtood?
In church and ſtate the ſorry race
Grew more conſpicuous fools in place.
Such heads, as then a treaty made,
Had bungled in the cobler's trade.
Conſider, patrons, that ſuch elves
Expoſe your folly with themſelves.
'Tis yours, as 'tis the parent's care,
To fix each genius in its ſphere.
Your partial hand can wealth diſpenſe,
But never give a blockhead ſenſe.
An owl of magiſterial air,
Of ſolemn voice, of brow auſtere,
Aſſum'd the pride of human race,
And bore his wiſdom in his face;
Not to depreciate learned eyes,
I've ſeen a pedant look as wiſe.
Within a barn, from noiſe retir'd,
He ſcorn'd the world, himſelf admir'd;
And, like an ancient ſage, conceal'd
The follies public life reveal'd.
Philoſophers of old, he read,
Their country's youth to ſcience bred,

Their manners form'd for every ſtation,
And deſtin'd each his occupation.
When Xenophon, by numbers brav'd,
Retreated, and a people ſav'd,
That laurel was not all his own;
The plant by Socrates was ſown.
To Ariſtotle's greater name
The Macedonian ow'd his fame.
Th' Athenian bird, with pride replete,
Their talents equall'd in conceit.
And, copying the Socratic rule,
Set up for maſter of a ſchool.
Dogmatic jargon learnt by heart,
Trite ſentences, hard terms of art,
To vulgar ears ſeem'd ſo profound,
They fancy'd learning in the ſound.
The ſchool had fame; the crowded place
With pupils ſwarm'd of every race.
With theſe the ſwan's maternal care
Had ſent her ſcarce-fledg'd cygent heir:
The hen (though fond and loath to part)
Here lodg'd the darling of her heart:
The ſpider, of mechanic kind,
Aſpir'd to ſcience more refin'd:
The aſs learnt metaphors and tropes,
But moſt on muſic fix'd his hopes.
The pupils now, advanc'd in age,
Were call'd to tread life's buſy ſtage;
And to the maſter 'twas ſubmitted,
That each might to his part be fitted.
"The ſwan, (ſays he), in arms ſhall ſhine;
The ſoldier's glorious toil be thine.
The cock ſhall mighty wealth attain:
Go, ſeek it on the ſtormy main.
The court ſhall be the ſpider's ſphere:
Power, fortune, ſhall reward him there.
In muſic's art, the aſs's fame
Shall emulate Corelli's name."
Each took the part that he advis'd,
And all were equally deſpis'd.
A farmer, at his folly mov'd,
The dull preceptor thus reprov'd.
"Blockhead, (ſays he), by what you've done,
One would have thought them each your ſon;
For parents, to their offspring blind,
Conſult nor parts nor turn of mind,
But ev'n in infancy decree
What this, what th' other ſon ſhall be.
Had you with judgment weigh'd the caſe,
Their genius thus had fix'd their place:
The ſwan had learn'd the ſailor's art;
The cock had play'd the ſoldier's part;
The ſpider in the weaver's trade
With credit had a fortune made;
But for the foal, in every claſs,
The blockhead had appear'd an aſs."

FABLE XV.

The Cook-maid, the Turn-ſpit, and the Ox.

TO A POOR MAN.

Consider man in every ſphere,
Then tell me, is your lot ſevere?
'Tis murmur, diſcontent, diſtruſt,
That makes you wretched. God is juſt.

I grant, the hungry muſt be fed,
That toil, too, earns thy daily bread.
What then? Thy wants are ſeen and known;
But every mortal feels his own.
We're born a reſtleſs, needy crew:
Show me the happier man than you.
Adam, though bleſt above his kind,
For want of ſocial woman pin'd.
Eve's wants the ſubtle ſerpent ſaw,
Her fickle taſte tranſgreſs'd the law:
Thus fell our ſire; and their diſgrace
The curſe entail'd on human race.
When Philip's ſon, by glory led,
Had o'er the globe his empire ſpread;
When altars to his name were dreſs'd;
That he was man, his tears confeſs'd.
The hopes of avarice are check'd:
The proud man always wants reſpect.
What various wants on power attend!
Ambition never gains its end.
Who hath not heard the rich complain
Of ſurfeits and corporeal pain?
He, barr'd from every uſe of wealth,
Envies the ploughman's ſtrength and health.
Another, in a beauteous wife
Finds all the miſeries of life:
Domeſtic jars and jealous fear
Imbitter all his days with care.
This wants an heir; the line is loſt:
Why was that vain entail engroſt?
Canſt thou diſcern another's mind?
What is't you envy? Envy's blind.
Tell Envy, when ſhe would annoy,
That thouſands want what you enjoy.
"The dinner muſt be diſh'd at one.
Where's this vexatious turnſpit gone?
Unleſs the ſkulking cur is caught,
The ſurloin's ſpoilt, and I'm in fault."
Thus ſaid, (for ſure you'll think it fit
That I the cook-maid's oaths omit)
With all the fury of a cook,
Her cooler kitchen Nan forſook:
The broom-ſtick o'er her head ſhe waves;
She ſweats, ſhe ſtamps, ſhe puffs, ſhe raves;
The ſneaking cur before her flies;
She whiſtles, calls? fair ſpeech ſhe tries.
Theſe nought avail. Her choler burns;
The fiſt and cudgel threat by turns.
With haſty ſtride ſhe preſſes near;
He ſlinks aloof, and howls with fear.
"Was ever cur ſo curs'd! (he cry'd)
What ſtar did at my birth preſide!
Am I for life by compact bound
To tread the wheel's eternal round?
Inglorious taſk! of all our race
No ſlave is half ſo mean and baſe.
Had fate a kinder lot aſſign'd,
And form'd me of the lap-dog kind,
I then, in higher life employ'd,
Had indolence and eaſe enjoy'd;
And, like a gentleman, careſt,
Had been the lady's favourite gueſt:
Or were I ſprung from ſpaniel line,
Was his ſagacious noſtril mine,
By me, their never-erring guide,
From wood and plain their feaſts ſupply'd,

Knights, 'squires, attendant on my pace,
Had shar'd the pleasures of the chase.
Endued with native strength and fire,
Why call'd I not the lion sire?
A lion! such mean views I scorn:
Why was I not of woman born?
Who dares with reason's power contend?
On man we brutal slaves depend:
To him all creatures tribute pay,
And luxury employs his day."
An ox by chance o'erheard his moan,
And thus rebuk'd the lazy drone.
"Dare you at partial fate repine?
How kind's your lot compar'd with mine!
Decreed to toil, the barbarous knife
Hath sever'd me from social life;
Urg'd by the stimulating goad,
I drag the cumb'rous waggon's load:
'Tis mine to tame the stubborn plain,
Break the stiff soil, and house the grain:
Yet! without a murmur bear
The various labours of the year.
But then, consider, that one day
(Perhaps the hour's not far away)
You, by the duties of your post,
Shall turn the spit when I'm the roast;
And for reward shall share the feast,
I mean, shall pick my bones at least."
"Till now, (th' astonish'd cur replies),
I look'd on all with envious eyes.
How false we judge by what appears!
All creatures feel their several cares.
If thus yon mighty beast complains;
Perhaps man knows superior pains,
Let envy then no more torment:
Think on the ox, and learn content."
Thus said, close following at her heel,
With cheerful heart he mounts the wheel.

FABLE XVI.

The Raven, the Sexton, and the Earth-worm.

TO LAURA.

LAURA, methinks you're over-nice.
True; flattery is a shocking vice:
Yet sure, whene'er the praise is just,
One may commend without disgust.
Am I a privilege deny'd,
Indulg'd by every tongue beside?
How singular are all your ways!
A woman, and averse to praise!
If 'tis offence such truths to tell,
Why do your merits thus excel?
Since, then, I dare not speak my mind,
A truth conspicuous to mankind;
Though in full lustre every grace
Distinguish your celestial face;
Though beauties of inferior ray
(Like stars before the orb of day)
Turn pale and fade; I check my lays,
Admiring what I dare not praise.
If you the tribute due disdain,
The muse's mortifying strain
Shall, like a woman in mere spite,
Set beauty in a moral light.
Though such revenge might shock the ear
Of many a celebrated fair,
I mean that superficial race
Whose thoughts ne'er reach beyond their face;
What's that to you? I but displease
Such ever-girlish ears as these.
Virtue can brook the thoughts of age,
That lasts the fame through every stage.
Though you by time must suffer more
Than ever woman lost before,
To age is such indifference shown,
As if your face were not your own.
Were you by Antoninus taught?
Or is it native strength of thought
That thus, without concern or fright,
You view yourself by reason's light?
Those eyes, of so divine a ray,
What are they? Mouldering, mortal clay.
Those features, cast in heavenly mould,
Shall, like my coarser earth, grow old;
Like common grass, the fairest flower
Must feel the hoary season's power.
How weak, how vain, is human pride!
Dares man upon himself confide?
The wretch, who glories in his gain,
Amasses heaps on heaps in vain.
Why lose we life in anxious cares,
To lay in hoards for future years?
Can those (when tortur'd by disease)
Cheer our sick heart, or purchase ease?
Can those prolong one gasp of breath,
Or calm the troubled hour of death?
What's beauty? Call ye that your own?
A flower that fades as soon as blown.
What's man in all his boast of sway?
Perhaps the tyrant of a day.
Alike the laws of life take place
Through every branch of human race.
The monarch of long regal line
Was rais'd from dust as frail as mine.
Can he pour health into his veins,
Or cool the fever's restless pains?
Can he (worn down in nature's course)
New-brace his feeble nerves with force?
Can he (how vain is mortal power!)
Stretch life beyond the destin'd hour?
Consider, man; weigh well thy frame;
The king, the beggar, is the same.
Dust form'd us all. Each breathes his day,
Then sinks into his native clay.
Beneath a venerable yew,
That in the lonely church-yard grew,
Two ravens sate. In solemn croak
Thus one his hungry friend bespoke.
"Methinks I scent some rich repast;
The savour strengthens with the blast;
Snuff then, the promis'd feast inhale:
I taste the carcase in the gale.
Near yonder trees, the farmer's steed,
From toil and every drudgery freed,
Hath groan'd his last. A dainty treat!
To birds of taste, delicious meat!"
A sexton, busy at his trade,
To hear their chat suspends his spade.
Death struck him with no farther thought,
Than merely as the fees he brought.
"Was ever two such blundering fowls,
In brains and manners less than owls!

Blockheads, (says he), learn more respect;
Know ye on whom ye thus reflect?
In this same grave (who does me right,
Must own the work is strong and tight)
The 'squire, that yon fair hall possest,
To-night shall lay his bones at rest.
Whence could the gross mistake proceed?
The 'squire was somewhat fat indeed.
What then? the meanest bird of prey
Such want of sense could ne'er betray;
For sure some difference must be found
(Suppose the smelling organ sound)
In carcases (say what we can),
Or where's the dignity of man?"
With due respect to human race,
The ravens undertook the case.
In such similitude of scent,
Man ne'er could think reflections meant.
As epicures extol a treat,
And seem their savoury words to eat,
They prais'd dead horse, luxurious food!
The venison of the prescient brood.
The sexton's indignation, mov'd,
The mean comparison reprov'd;
Their undiscerning palate blam'd,
Which two-legg'd carrion thus defam'd.
Reproachful speech from either side
The want of argument supply'd:
They rail, revile; as often ends
The contest of disputing friends.
"Hold, (says the fowl); since human pride
With confutation ne'er comply'd,
Let's state the case, and then refer
The knotty point, for taste may err."
As thus he spoke, from out the mould
An earth-worm, huge of size, unroll'd
His monstrous length: they strait agree
To choose him as their referee:
So to th' experience of his jaws
Each states the merits of the cause.
He paus'd; and, with a solemn tone,
Thus made his sage opinion known:
"On carcases of every kind
This maw hath elegantly din'd;
Provok'd by luxury or need,
On beast, or fowl, or man, I feed:
Such small distinction 's in the savour,
By turns I choose the fancy'd flavour:
Yet I must own (that human beast!)
A glutton is the rankest feast.
Man, cease this boast; for human pride
Hath various tracts to range beside.
The prince who kept the world in awe,
The judge whose dictate fix'd the law,
The rich, the poor, the great, the small,
Are levell'd; death confounds them all.
Then think not that we reptiles share
Such cates, such elegance of fare;
The only true and real good
Of man was never vermins food;
'Tis seated in th' immortal mind;
Virtue distinguishes mankind,
And that (as yet ne'er harbour'd here)
Mounts with the soul we know not where.
So, Good-man, sexton, since the case
Appears with such a dubious face,
To neither I the cause determine,
For different tastes please different vermin."

AYE AND NO.

A FABLE *.

In Fable all things hold discourse,
Then words, no doubt, must talk of course,
Once on a time, near Cannon-row,
Two hostile adverbs, Aye and No,
Were hastening to the field of fight,
And front to front stood opposite;
Before each general join'd the van,
Aye, the more courteous knight, began.
"Stop, peevish Particle! beware!
I'm told you are not such a bear,
But sometimes yield when offer'd fair.
Suffer yon folks awhile to tattle;
'Tis we who must decide the battle.
Whene'er we war on yonder stage,
With various fate and equal rage,
The nation trembles at each blow
That No gives Aye, and Aye gives No;
Yet, in expensive long contention,
We gain nor office, grant, or pension.
Why then should kinsfolks quarrel thus?
(For two of you make one of us.)
To some wise statesman let us go,
Where each his proper use may know:
He may admit two such commanders,
And make those wait who serv'd in Flanders.
Let's quarter on a great man's tongue,
A treasury lord, not Maister Young.
Obsequious at his high command,
Aye shall march forth to tax the land;
Impeachments No can best resist,
And Aye support the Civil list:
Aye, quick as Cæsar, wins the day,
And No, like Fabius, by delay,
Sometimes in mutual fly disguise,
Let Aye's seem No's, and No's seem Aye's;
Aye's be in courts denials meant,
And No's in bishops give consent."
Thus Aye propos'd—and, for reply,
No, for the first time, answer'd Aye.
They parted with a thousand kisses,
And fight e'er since for pay, like Swisses.

DUKE UPON DUKE †:

AN EXCELLENT NEW BALLAD.—TO THE TUNE OF CHEVY-CHACE.

To lordlings proud I tune my lay,
Who feast in bower or hall:
Though dukes they be, to dukes I say,
That pride will have a fall.

Now that this fame it is right sooth,
Full plainly doth appear,

* Taken from the Miscellanies published by Swift and Pope.

† This humorous Ballad is ascribed to Gay on conjecture only. It is among the Miscellanies published by Swift and Pope; is there marked as not the Dean's and has never been considered as Pope's.

From what befel John Duke of Guiſe*,
And Nic of Lancaſtere †.

When Richard Cœur-de-Lion reign'd,
(Which means a lion's heart)
Like him his barons rag'd and roar'd;
Each play'd a lion's part.

A word and blow was then enough:
Such honour did them prick,
If you but turn'd your cheek, a cuff;
And, if your a—ſe, a kick.

Look in their face, they tweak'd your noſe,
At every turn fell to 't;
Come near, they trod upon your toes;
They fought from head to foot.

Of theſe the Duke of Lancaſtere
Stood paramount in pride:
He kick'd and cuff'd, and tweak'd and trod
His foes, and friends beſide.

Firm on his front his beaver ſate;
So broad, it hid his chin;
For why? he deem'd no man his mate,
And fear'd to tan his ſkin.

With Spaniſh wool he dy'd his cheek,
With eſſence oil'd his hair;
No vixen civet-cat ſo ſweet,
Nor could ſo ſcratch and tear.

Right tall he made himſelf to ſhow,
Though made ſuil ſhort by God:
And, when all other dukes did bow,
This duke did only nod.

Yet courteous, blithe, and debonnair,
To Guiſe's Duke was he:
Was ever ſuch a loving pair?
How could they diſagree?

Oh, thus it was: he lov'd him dear,
And caſt how to requite him;
And having no friend left but this,
He deem'd it meet to fight him.

Forthwith he drench'd his deſperate quill,
And thus he did endite:
"This eve at whiſt ourſelf will play,
"Sir Duke! be here to-night."

"Ah no! ah no!" the guileleſs Guiſe
Demurely did reply;
"I cannot go, nor yet can ſtand,
"So ſore the gout have I."

The duke in wrath call'd for his ſteeds,
And fiercely drove them on;
Lord! lord! how rattled then thy ſtones,
O kingly Kenſington ‡!

All in a trice he ruſh'd on Guiſe,
Thruſt out his lady dear;
He tweak'd his noſe, trod on his toes,
And ſmote him on the ear.

But mark, how midſt of victory
Fate plays her old dog trick!
Up leap'd Duke John, and knock'd him down,
And ſo down fell Duke Nic.

Alas, oh Nic! oh Nic, alas!
Right did thy goſſip call thee:
As who ſhould ſay, alas the day
When John of Guiſe ſhall maul thee!

For on thee did he clap his chair,
And on that chair did ſit;
And look as if he meant therein
To do —— what was not fit.

Up didſt thou look, oh woful duke!
Thy mouth yet durſt not ope,
Certes for fear of finding there
A t—d inſtead of trope.

"Lie there, thou caitiff vile!" quoth Guiſe,
"No ſheet is here to ſave thee:
"The caſement it is ſhut likewiſe;
"Beneath my feet I have thee.

"If thou haſt aught to ſpeak, ſpeak out,"
Then Lancaſtere did cry,
"Know'ſt thou not me, nor yet thyſelf?
"Who thou, and who am I?

"Know'ſt thou not me, who (God be prais'd)
"Have brawl'd and quarrell'd more,
"Than all the line of Lancaſtere,
"That battled heretofore?

"In ſenates fam'd for many a ſpeech,
"And (what ſome awe muſt give ye,
Though laid thus low beneath thy breach)
"Still of the council privy;

"Still of the duchy chancellor:
"Durante life I have it;
"And turn, as now thou doſt on me,
"Mine a—e on them that gave it."

But now the ſervants they ruſh'd in;
And Duke Nic, up leap'd he:
"I will not cope againſt ſuch odds,
"But, Guiſe! I'll fight with thee:

"To-morrow with thee will I fight
"Under the green-wood tree."
"No, not to-morrow, but to-night"
(Quoth Guiſe) "I'll fight with thee."

And now the ſun declining low
Beſtreak'd with blood the ſkies;
When, with his ſword at ſaddle-bow,
Rode forth the valiant Guiſe.

Full gently pranc'd he o'er the lawn,
Oft roll'd his eyes around,
And from the ſtirrup ſtretch'd to find
Who was not to be found.

Long brandiſh'd he the blade in air,
Long look'd the field all o'er:
At length he ſpy'd the merry-men brown,
And eke the coach and four.

From out the boot bold Nicholas
Did wave his wand ſo white,
As pointing out the gloomy glade
Wherein he meant to fight.

---

* Sir John Guiſe.

† Nicholas Lord Lechmere, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaſter.

‡ Lord Lechmere lived at Camden-houſe, near Kenſington.

All in that dreadful hour ſo calm
Was Lancaſtere to ſee,
As if he meant to take the air,
Or only take a ſee :

And ſo he did—for to New Court
His rolling wheels did run :
Not that he ſhunn'd the doubtful ſtriſe ;
But buſineſs muſt be done,

Back in the dark, by Brampton-park,
He turn'd up through the Gore !
So ſlunk to Camden-houſe ſo high,
All in his coach and four.

Mean while Duke Guiſe did fret and fume,
A ſight it was to ſee,

Benumb'd beneath the evening dew
Under the green-wood tree.

Then, wet and weary, home he far'd,
Sore muttering all the way,
" The day I meet him, Nic ſhall rue
" The cudgel of that day.

" Mean time on every piſſing poſt
" Paſte we this recreant's name,
" So that each piſſer-by ſhall read
" And piſs againſt the ſame."

Now God preſerve our gracious king,
And grant his nobles all
May learn this leſſon from Duke Nic.
That pride will have a fall !

DIONE.

A PASTORAL TRAGEDY.

" Sunt numina amanti.
" Sævit et injuſtâ lege relicta Venus.'

TIBUL. Eleg. v. Lib. I.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.	WOMEN.
EVANDER under the name of LYCIDAS.	DIONE under the name of ALEXIS.
CLEANTHES.	PARTHENIA.
SHEPHERDS.	LAURA.

Scene, Arcadia.

ACT I. SCENE I.

A Plain, at the Foot of a ſteep craggy Mountain.

DIONE. LAURA.

Laura.

WHY doſt thou fly me ? Stay, unhappy fair,
Seek not theſe horrid caverns of deſpair ;
To trace thy ſteps, the midnight air I bore,
Trod the brown deſert, and unſhelter'd moor :
Three times the lark has ſung his matin lay,
And roſe on dewy wing to meet the day,
Since firſt I found thee, ſtretch'd in penſive mood,
Where laurels border Ladon's ſilver flood.

Dione.

O let my ſoul with grateful thanks o'erflow !
'Tis to thy hand my daily life I owe.
Like the weak lamb, you rais'd me from the plain,
Too faint to bear bleak winds and beating rain ;

Each day I ſhare thy bowl and clean repaſt,
Each night thy roof defends the chilly blaſt.
But vain is all thy friendſhip, vain thy care ;
Forget a wretch abandon'd to deſpair.

Laura.

Deſpair will fly thee, when thou ſhalt impart
The fatal ſecret that torments thy heart ;
Diſcloſe thy ſorrows to my faithful ear,
Inſtruct theſe eyes to give thee tear for tear.
Love, love's the cauſe ; our foreſts ſpeak thy flame,
The rocks have learnt to ſigh Evander's name.
If faultering ſhame thy baſhful tongue reſtrain,
If thou haſt look'd, and bluſh'd, and ſigh'd in vain ;
Say, in what grove thy lovely ſhepherd ſtrays,
Tell me what mountains warble with his lays ;
Thither I'll ſpeed me, and with moving art
Draw ſoft confeſſions from his melting heart.

Dione.

Thy generous care has touch'd my ſecret woe,
Love bids theſe ſcalding tears inceſſant flow,

Ill fated love! O say, ye sylvan maids,
Who range wide forests and sequester'd shades,
Say where Evander bled, point out the ground
That yet is purple with the savage wound.
Yonder he lies; I hear the bird of prey;
High o'er those cliffs the raven wings his way;
Hark how he croaks! he scents the murder near.
O may no greedy beak his visage tear!
Shield him, ye Cupids; strip the Paphian grove,
And strow unfading myrtle o'er my love!
Down, heaving heart.

Laura.

—The mournful tale disclose.

Dione.

Let not my tears intrude on thy repose.
Yet if thy friendship still the cause request;
I'll speak, though sorrow rend my labouring breast.
Know then, fair shepherdess, no honest swain
Taught me the duties of the peaceful plain;
Unus'd to sweet content, no flocks I keep,
Nor browzing goats that overhang the steep.
Born where Orchomenos' proud turrets shine,
I trace my birth from long illustrious line,
Why was I train'd amidst Arcadia's court?
Love ever revels in that gay resort.
Whene'er Evander past, my smitten heart
Heav'd frequent sighs, and felt unusual smart.
Ah! hadst thou seen with what sweet grace he mov'd!
Yet why that wish? for Laura then had lov'd.

Laura.

Distrust me not; thy secret wrongs impart,

Dione.

Forgive the sallies of a breaking heart.
Evander's sighs his mutual flame confest,
The growing passion labour'd in his breast;
To me he came; my heart with rapture sprung.
To see the blushes, when his faultering tongue
First said, I love. My eyes consent reveal,
And plighted vows our faithful passion seal:
Where's now the lovely youth; he's lost, he's slain,
And the pale corse lies breathless on the plain!

Laura.

Are thus the hopes of constant lovers paid?
If thus—ye powers, from love defend the maid.

Dione.

Now have twelve mornings warm'd the purple east,
Since my dear hunter rous'd the tusky beast;
Swift flew the foaming monster through the wood,
Swift as the wind, his eager steps pursued:
'Twas then the savage turn'd; then fell the youth,
And his dear blood distain'd the barbarous tooth.

Laura.

Was there none near? no ready succour found?
Nor healing herb to staunch the spouting wound?

Dione.

In vain through pathless woods the hunters croft,
And sought with anxious eye their master lost;
In vain their frequent hollows echo'd shrill,
And his lov'd name was sent from hill to hill;
Evander hears you not. He's lost, he's slain,
And the pale corse lies breathless on the plain.

Laura.

Has yet no clown (who, wandering from the way,
Beats every bush to raise the lamb astray)
Observ'd the fatal spot?

Dione.

—— O, if ye pass
Where purple murder dyes the wither'd grass,
With pious finger gently close his eyes,
And let his grave with decent verdure rise.

[Weeps.

Laura.

Behold the turtle who has lost her mate;
Awhile with drooping wing she mourns his fate;
Sullen, awhile she seeks the darkest grove,
And cooing meditates the murder'd dove;
But time the rueful image wears away,
Again she's cheer'd, again she seeks the day.
Spare then thy beauty, and no longer pine.

Dione.

Yet sure some turtle's love has equal'd mine,
Who, when the hawk has snatch'd her mate away,
Hath never known the glad return of day.
When my fond father saw my faded eye,
And on my livid cheek the roses die;
When catching sighs my wasted bosom mov'd,
My looks, my sighs, confirm'd him that I lov'd.
He knew not that Evander was my flame,
Evander dead! my passion still the same!
He came, he threaten'd; with paternal sway,
Cleanthes nam'd, and fix'd the nuptial day:
O cruel kindness! too severely prest!
I scorn his honours, and his wealth detest.

Laura.

How vain is force! Love ne'er can be compell'd.

Dione.

Though bound my duty, yet my heart rebell'd.
One night, when sleep had hush'd all busy spies,
And the pale moon had journey'd half the skies,
Softly I rose and dress'd; with silent tread,
Unbarr'd the gates, and to these mountains fled.
Here let me soothe the melancholy hours!
Close me, ye woods, within your twilight bowers!
Where my calm soul may settled sorrow know,
And no Cleanthes interrupt my woe
With importuning love—

[Melancholy Music is heard at a distance.

On yonder plain
Advances slow a melancholy train;
Black cypress boughs their drooping heads adorn.

Laura.

Alas! Menalcas to his grave is borne.
Behold the victim of Parthenia's pride!
He saw, he sigh'd, he lov'd, was scorn'd, and dy'd.

Dione.

Where dwells this beauteous tyrant of the plains?
Where may I see her?

Laura.

—— Ask the sighing swains.
They best can speak the conquests of her eyes;
Whoever sees her, loves; who loves her, dies.

Dione.

Perhaps untimely fate her flame hath crost,
And she, like me, hath her Evander lost.
How my soul pities her!

Laura.

—— If pity move
Your generous bosom, pity those who love.
There late arriv'd among our sylvan race
A stranger shepherd, who with lonely pace

Viſits thoſe mountain-pines at dawn of day,
Where oft Parthenia takes her early way
To rouſe the chaſe; mad with his amorous pain,
He ſtops and raves; then ſullen walks again.
Parthenia's name is borne by paſſing gales,
And talking hills repeat it to the dales.
Come, let us from this vale of ſorrow go,
Nor let the mournful ſcene prolong thy woe.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II *.

Shepherds and Shepherdeſſes (crowned with garlands of cypreſs and yew) bearing the body of Menalcas.

1ſt Shepherd.

Here gently reſt the corſe—With faultering breath
Thus ſpake Menalcas on the verge of death.
" Belov'd Palemon, hear a dying friend;
" See, where yon hills with craggy brows aſcend,
" Low in the valley where the mountain grows,
" There firſt I ſaw her, there began my woes.
" When I am cold, may there this clay be laid!
" There often ſtrays the dear, the cruel maid;
" There as ſhe walks, perhaps you'll hear her ſay,
" (While a kind guſhing tear ſhall force its way)
" How could my ſtubborn heart relentleſs prove?
" Ah, poor Menalcas—all thy fault was love!"

2d Shepherd.

When pitying lion's o'er a carcaſe groan,
And hungry tigers bleeding kids bemoan;
When the lean wolf laments the mangled ſheep;
Then ſhall Parthenia o'er Menalcas weep.

1ſt Shepherd.

When famiſh'd panthers ſeek their morning food,
And monſters roar along the deſert wood;
When hiſſing vipers ruſtle through the brake,
Or in the path-way rears the ſpeckled ſnake;
The wary ſwain th' approaching peril ſpies,
And through ſome diſtant road ſecurely flies.
Fly then, ye ſwains, from beauty's furer wound.
Such was the fate our poor Menalcas found.

2d Shepherd.

What ſhepherd does not mourn Menalcas ſlain!
Kill'd by a barbarous woman's proud diſdain!
Whoe'er attempts to bend her ſcornful mind,
Cries to the deſerts, and purſues the wind.

1ſt Shepherd.

With every grace Menalcas was endow'd,
His merits dazzled all the ſylvan crowd.
If you would know his pipe's melodious ſound,
Aſk all the echoes of theſe hills around,
For they have learnt his ſtrains; who ſhall rehearſe
The ſtrength, the cadence of his tuneful verſe?
Go, read thoſe lofty poplars; there you'll find
Some tender ſonnet grow on every rind.

2d Shepherd.

Yet what avails his ſkill? Parthenia flies.
Can merit hope ſucceſs in woman's eyes?

1ſt Shepherd.

Why was Parthenia form'd of ſofteſt mould?
Why does her heart ſuch ſavage nature hold?
O ye kind gods! or all her charms efface,
Or tame her heart—ſo ſpare the ſhepherd race.

* This and the following ſcene are formed upon the novel of Marcella in Don Quixote.

2d Shepherd.

As fade the flowers which on the grave I caſt;
So may Parthenia's tranſient beauty waſte!

1ſt Shepherd.

What woman ever counts the fleeting years,
Or ſees the wrinkle which her forehead wears?
Thinking her features never ſhall decay,
This ſwain ſhe ſcorns, from that ſhe turns away.
But know, as when the roſe her bud unfolds,
Awhile each breaſt the ſhort-liv'd fragrance holds;
When the dry ſtalk lets drop her ſhrivell'd pride,
The lovely ruin's ever thrown aſide.
So ſhall Parthenia be.

2d Shepherd.

— See, ſhe appears,
To boaſt her ſpoils, and triumph in our tears.

SCENE III.

Parthenia appears from the mountain.

PARTHENIA. SHEPHERDS.

1ſt Shepherd.

Why this way doſt thou turn thy baneful eyes,
Pernicious baſiliſk? Lo! there he lies.
There lies the youth thy curſed beauty ſlew;
See, at thy preſence, how he bleeds anew!
Look down, enjoy thy murder.

Parthenia.

—Spare my fame;
I come to clear a virgin's injur'd name.
If I'm a baſiliſk, the danger fly,
Shun the ſwift glances of my venom'd eye:
If I'm a murderer, why approach ye near,
And to the dagger lay your boſom bare?

1ſt Shepherd.

What heart is proof againſt that face divine?
Love is not in our power.

Parthenia.

—Is love in mine?
If e'er I trifled with a ſhepherd's pain,
Or with falſe hope his paſſion ſtrove to gain;
Then might you juſtly curſe my ſavage mind,
Then might you rank me with the ſerpent kind:
But I ne'er trifled with a ſhepherd's pain,
Nor with falſe hope his paſſion ſtrove to gain:
'Tis to his raſh purſuit he owes his fate;
I was not cruel; he was obſtinate.

1ſt Shepherd.

Hear this, ye ſighing ſhepherds, and deſpair.
Unhappy Lycidas, thy hour is near! [doom,
Since the ſame barbarous hand hath ſign'd thy
We'll lay thee in our lov'd Menalcas' tomb.

Parthenia.

Why will intruding man my peace deſtroy?
Let me content and ſolitude enjoy;
Free was I born; my freedom to maintain,
Early I fought the unambitious plain.
Moſt women's weak reſolves, like reeds, will ply,
Shake with each breath, and bend with every ſigh;
Mine, like an oak, whoſe firm roots deep deſcend,
Nor breath of love can ſhake, nor ſigh can bend.
If ye unhappy Lycidas would ſave;
Go ſeek him, lead him to Menalcas' grave;
Forbid his eyes with flowing grief to rain,
Like him Menalcas wept, but wept in vain:

Bid him his heart-consuming groans give o'er:
Tell him, I heard such piercing groans before,
And heard unmov'd. O Lycidas, be wise,
Prevent thy fate.—Lo! there Menalcas lies.

1st Shepherd.

Now all the melancholy rites are paid,
And o'er his grave the weeping marble laid;
Let's seek our charge; the flocks, dispersing wide,
Whiten with moving fleece the mountain's side.
Trust not, ye swains, the lightning of her eye,
Lest ye, like him, should love, despair, and die.

[Exeunt Shepherds, &c. Parthenia remains in a melancholy posture, looking on the grave of Menalcas.

SCENE IV.

LYCIDAS, PARTHENIA.

Lycidas.

When shall my steps have rest? through all the wood,
And by the winding banks of Ladon's flood,
I sought my love. O say, ye skipping fawns
(Who range entangled shades and daisy'd lawns)
If ye have seen her! say, ye warbling race
(Who measure on swift wing th' aerial space,
And view below hills, dales, and distant shores)
Where shall I find her whom my soul adores!

SCENE V.

LYCIDAS, PARTHENIA, DIONE, LAURA.

[Dione and Laura at a distance.

Lycidas.

What do I see? no.. Fancy mocks my eyes,
And bids the dear deluding vision rise.
'Tis she. My springing heart her presence feels.
See, prostrate Lycidas before thee kneels.

[Kneeling to Parthenia.

Why will Parthenia turn her face away?

Parthenia.

Who calls Parthenia? hah!

[She starts from her melancholy: and, seeing Lycidas, flies into the wood.

Lycidas.

——Stay, virgin, stay.
O wing my feet, kind love. See, see, she bounds,
Fleet as the mountain roe, when prest by hounds.

[He pursues her, Dione faints in the arms of Laura.

Laura.

What means this trembling? All her colour flies,
And life is quite unstrung. Ah! lift thy eyes,
And answer me; speak, speak, 'tis Laura calls.
Speech has forsook her lips.—She faints, she falls.
Fan her, ye zephyrs, with your balmy breath,
And bring her quickly from the shades of death:
Blow, ye cool gales. See, she the forest shakes
With coming winds! she breathes, she moves, she wakes.

Dione.

Ah, false Evander!

Laura.

——Calm thy sobbing breast.
Say, what new sorrow has thy heart oppress?

Dione.

Didst thou not hear his sighs and suppliant tone?
Didst thou not hear the pitying mountain groan?
Didst thou not see him bend his suppliant knee?
Thus in my happy days he knelt to me,
And pour'd forth all his soul! See how he strains,
And listens to the sight o'er yonder plains,
To keep the fair in view! Run, virgin run,
Hear not his vows; I heard, and was undone!

Laura.

Let not imaginary terror fright;
Some dark delusion swims before thy sight.
I saw Parthenia from the mountain's brow,
And Lycidas with prostrate duty bow;
Swift, as the falcon's wing, I saw her fly,
And heard the cavern to his groans reply.
Why stream thy tears for sorrows not thy own?

Dione.

Oh! where are honour, faith, and justice flown?
Perjur'd Evander!

Laura.

——Death has laid him low.
Touch not the mournful string that wakes thy woe.

Dione.

That amorous swain, whom Lycidas you name,
(Whose faithless bosom feels another flame)
Is my once kind Evander—yes—'twas he.
He lives—but lives, alas! no more for me.

Laura.

Let not thy frantic words confess despair.

Dione.

What, know I not his voice, his mien, his air?
Yes, I that treacherous voice with joy believ'd,
That voice, that mien, that air, my soul deceiv'd.
If my dear shepherd love the lawns, and glades,
With him I'll range the lawns, and seek the shades,
With him through solitary deserts rove.
But could he leave me for another love?
O base ingratitude!

Laura.

——Suspend thy grief,
And let my friendly counsel bring relief
To thy desponding soul. Parthenia's ear
Is barr'd for ever to the lover's prayer;
Evander courts disdain, he follows scorn,
And in the passing winds his vows are borne.
Soon will he find that all in vain he strove
To tame her bosom; then his former love
Shall wake his soul; then will he sighing blame
His heart inconstant, and his perjur'd flame:
Then shall he at Dione's feet implore,
Lament his broken faith, and change no more.

Dione.

Perhaps this cruel nymph well knows to feign
Forbidding speech, coy looks, and cold disdain,
To raise his passion. Such are female arts,
To hold in safer snares inconstant hearts!

Laura.

Parthenia's breast is steel'd with real scorn.

Dione.

And dost thou think Evander will return?

Laura.

Forego thy sex, lay all thy robes aside,
Strip off these ornaments of female pride:
The shepherd's vest must hide thy graceful air,
With the bold manly step a swain appear;

Then with Evander may'ſt thou rove unknown,
Then let thy tender elegance be ſhown;
Then the new fury of his heart controul,
And with Dione's ſufferings touch his ſoul.

Dione.

Sweet as refreſhing dews, or ſummer ſhowers,
To the long parching thirſt of drooping flowers;
Grateful as fanning gales to fainting ſwains.
And ſoft as trickling balm to bleeding pains;
Such are thy words. The ſex ſhall be reſign'd,
No more ſhall braided gold theſe treſſes bind;
The ſhepherd's garb the woman ſhall diſguiſe.
If he has loſt all love, may friendſhip's ties
Unite me to his heart!

Laura.

—— Go, proſperous maid,
May ſmiling love thy faithful wiſhes aid!
Be now Alexis call'd. With thee I'll rove,
And watch thy wanderer through the mazy grove:
Let me be honour'd with a ſiſter's name;
For thee, I feel a more than ſiſter's flame.

Dione.

Perhaps my ſhepherd has outſtript her haſte.
Think'ſt thou, when out of ſight, ſhe flew ſo faſt?
One ſudden glance might turn her ſavage mind;
May ſhe like Daphne fly, nor look behind,
Maintain her ſcorn, his eager flame deſpiſe,
Nor view Evander with Dione's eyes!

ACT II. SCENE I.

LYCIDAS lying on the grave of MENALCAS.

Lycidas.

WHEN ſhall theſe ſcalding fountains ceaſe to flow?
How long will life ſuſtain this load of woe?
Why glows the morn? Roll back, thou ſource of light,
And feed my ſorrows with eternal night.
Come, ſable Death! give, give the welcome ſtroke;
The raven calls thee from yon blaſted oak,
What pious care my ghaſtful lid ſhall cloſe?
What decent hand my frozen limbs compoſe?
O happy ſhepherd, free from anxious pains,
Who now art wandering in the ſighing plains
Of bleſt Elyſium; where in myrtle groves
Enamour'd ghoſts bemoan their former loves.
Open, thou ſilent grave; for lo! I come
To meet Menalcas in the fragrant gloom;
There ſhall my boſom burn with friendſhip's flame,
The ſame our paſſion, and our fate the ſame;
There, like two nightingales on neighbouring boughs,
Alternate ſtrains ſhall mourn our fruſtrate vows.
But if cold death ſhould cloſe Parthenia's eye,
And ſhould her beauteous form come gliding by;
Friendſhip would ſoon in jealous fear be loſt,
And kindling hate purſue thy rival ghoſt.

SCENE II.

LYCIDAS, DIONE in a Shepherd's habit.

Lycidas.

Hah! who comes here? turn hence, be timely wiſe;
Truſt not thy ſafety to Parthenia's eyes.
As from the bearing falcon flies the dove,
So, wing'd with fear, Parthenia flies from love.

Dione.

If in theſe vales the fatal beauty ſtray,
From the cold marble riſe; let's haſte away.
Why lie you panting, like the ſmitten deer?
Truſt not the dangers which you bid me fear.

Lycidas.

Bid the lur'd lark, whom tangling nets ſurpriſe,
On ſoaring pinion rove the ſpacious ſkies;
Bid the cag'd linnet range the leafy grove;
Then bid my captive heart get looſe from love.
The ſnares of death are o'er me. Hence! beware;
Leſt you ſhould ſee her, and like me deſpair.

Dione

No. Let her come; and ſeek this vale's receſs,
In all the beauteous negligence of dreſs;
Though Cupid ſend a ſhaft in every glance,
Though all the Graces in her ſtep advance,
My heart can ſtand it all. Be firm, my breaſt;
Th' enſnaring oath, the broken vow deteſt:
That flame, which other charms have power to move,
O give it not the ſacred name of love!
'Tis perjury, fraud, and meditated lies.
Love's ſeated in the ſoul, and never dies.
What then avail her charms? My conſtant heart
Shall gaze ſecure, and mock a ſecond dart.

Lycidas.

But you perhaps a happier fate have found,
And the ſame hand that gave, now heals the wound.
Or art thou left abandon'd and forlorn,
A wretch, like me, the ſport of pride and ſcorn?

Dione.

O tell me, ſhepherd, hath thy faithleſs maid,
Falſe to her vow, thy flatter'd hope betray'd?
Did her ſmooth ſpeech engage thee to believe?
Did ſhe proteſt and ſwear, and then deceive?
Such are the pangs I feel!

Lycidas.

——The haughty fair
Contemns my ſufferings, and diſdains to hear.
Let meaner beauties, learn'd in female ſnares,
Entice the ſwain with half-conſenting airs;
Such vulgar arts ne'er aid her conquering eyes;
And yet, where'er ſhe turns, a lover ſighs.
Vain is the ſteady conſtancy you boaſt;
All other love at ſight of her is loſt.

Dione.

True conſtancy no time, no power, can move.
He that hath known to change, ne'er knew to love.
Though the dear author of my hapleſs flame
Purſue another; ſtill my heart's the ſame.
Am I for ever left? (excuſe theſe tears)
May your kind friendſhip ſoften all my cares!

Lycidas.

What comfort can a wretch, like me, beſtow?

Dione.

He beſt can pity who hath felt the woe.

Lycidas.

Since different objects have our ſouls poſſeſt,
No rival fears our friendſhip ſhall moleſt.

Dione.

Come, let us leave the ſhade of theſe brown hills,
And drive our flocks beſide the ſtreaming rills.

Should the fair tyrant to these vales return,
How would thy breast with double fury burn!
Go hence, and seek thy peace.

SCENE III.

LYCIDAS, DIONE, LAURA.

Laura.

——Fly, fly this place;
Beware of love; the proudest of her race
This way approaches: from among the pines,
Where from the steep the winding path declines,
I saw the nymph descend.

Lycidas.

——She comes, she comes;
From her the passing zephyrs steal perfumes,
As from the violet's bank with odours sweet
Breathes every gale; spring blooms beneath her feet.
Yes, 'tis my fairest; here she's wont to rove.

Laura.

Say, by what signs I might have known thy love?

Lycidas.

My love is fairer than the snowy breast
Of the tall swan, whose proudly swelling chest
Divides the wave; her tresses, loose behind,
Play on her neck, and wanton in the wind;
The rising blushes, which her cheek o'erspread,
Are opening roses in the lily's bed.
Know'st thou Parthenia?

Laura.

——Wretched is the slave
Who serves such pride! Behold Menalcas' grave!
Yet if Alexis and this sighing swain
Wish to behold the tyrant of the plain,
Let us behind these myrtles twining arms
Retire unseen; from thence survey her charms.
Wild as the chaunting thrush upon the spray,
At man's approach, she swiftly flies away.
Like the young hare, I've seen the panting maid
Stop, listen, run; of every wind afraid.

Lycidas.

And wilt thou never from thy vows depart?
Shepherd, beware—now fortify thy heart.

[To Dione.

[Lycidas, Dione, and Laura, retires behind the boughs.

SCENE IV.

PARTHENIA, LYCIDAS, DIONE, LAURA.

Parthenia.

This melancholy scene demands a groan.
Hah! what inscription marks the weeping stone?
"O power of beauty! here Menalcas lies,
"Gaze not, ye shepherds, on Parthenia's eyes."
Why did Heaven form me with such polish'd care?
Why cast my features in a mould so fair?
If blooming beauty was a blessing meant,
Why are my sighing hours deny'd content?
The downy peach, that glows with sunny dyes,
Feeds the black snails, and lures voracious flies;
The juicy pear invites the feather'd kind,
And pecking finches scoop the golden rind;
But beauty suffers more pernicious wrongs,
Blasted by envy, and censorious tongues.

How happy lives the nymph whose comely face
And pleasing glances boast sufficient grace
To wound the swain she loves! No jealous fears
Shall vex her nuptial state with nightly tears;
Nor amorous youths, to push their foul pretence,
Infest her days with dull impertinence.
But why talk I of love? My guarded heart
Disowns his power, and turns aside the dart.
Hark! from his hollow tomb Menalcas cries,
"Gaze not, ye shepherds, on Parthenia's eyes."
Come, Lycidas, the mournful lay peruse,
Lest thou, like him, Parthenia's eyes accuse.

[She stands in a melancholy posture, looking on the tomb.

Lycidas.

Call'd she not Lycidas?—I come, my fair;
See generous pity melts into a tear,
And her heart softens. Now's the tender hour;
Assist me, Love! exert thy sovereign power
To tame the scornful maid.

Dione.

——Rash swain, be wise;
'Tis not from thee or him; from Love she flies.
Leave her, forget her. [They hold Lycidas.

Laura.

——Why this furious haste?

Lycidas.

Unhand me; loose me.

Dione.

——Sister, hold him fast.
To follow her, is, to prolong despair.
Shepherd, you must not go.

Lycidas.

——Bold youth, forbear.
Hear me, Parthenia.

Parthenia.

——From behind the shade
Methought a voice some listening spy betray'd.
Yes, I'm observ'd. [She runs out.

Lycidas.

——Stay, nymph; thy flight suspend.
She hears me not—when will my sorrows end!
As over-spent with toil, my heaving breast
Beats quick. 'Tis death alone can give me rest.

[He remains in a fixt melancholy.

SCENE V.

LYCIDAS, DIONE, LAURA.

Laura.

Recall thy scatter'd sense, bid reason wake,
Subdue thy passion.

Lycidas.

——Shall I never speak?
She's gone, she's gone—Kind shepherd, let me rest
My troubled head upon thy friendly breast.
The forest seems to move—O cursed state!
I doom'd to love, and she condemn'd to hate!
Tell me, Alexis, art thou still the same?
Did not her brighter eyes put out the flame
Of thy first love? did not thy fluttering heart,
Whene'er she rais'd her look, confess the dart?

Dione.

I own, the nymph is fairest of her race,
Yet I unmov'd can oh this beauty gaze,
Mindful of former promise; all that's dear,
My thoughts, my dreams, my every wish is there.

Since then our hopes are loſt; let friendſhip's tie
Calm our diſtreſs, and ſlighted love ſupply;
Let us together drive our fleecy ſtore,
And of ungrateful woman think no more.

Lycidas.

'Tis death alone can 'raſe her from my breaſt.

Laura.

Why ſhines thy love ſo far above the reſt?
Nature, 'tis true, in every outward grace,
Her niceſt hand employ'd; her lovely face
With beauteous feature ſtampt; with roſy dyes
Warm'd her fair cheek; with lightning arm'd her eyes:
But, if thou ſearch the ſecrets of her mind,
Where ſhall thy cheated ſoul a virtue find?
Sure hell with cruelty her breaſt ſupply'd:
How did ſhe glory when Menalcas dy'd!
Pride in her boſom reigns; ſhe's falſe, ſhe's vain;
She firſt entices, then inſults the ſwain.
Shall female cunning lead thy heart aſtray?
Shepherd, be free; and ſcorn for ſcorn repay.

Lycidas.

How woman talks of woman:

Dione.

——Hence depart;
Let a long abſence cure thy love-ſick heart.
To ſome far grove retire, her ſight diſclaim,
Nor with her charms awake the dying flame.
Let not an hour thy happy flight ſuſpend;
But go not, Lycidas, without thy friend.
Together let us ſeek the cheerful plains,
And lead the dance among the ſportive ſwains,
Devoid of care.

Laura.

——Or elſe the groves diſdain,
Nor with the ſylvan walk indulge thy pain.
Haſte to the town; there (I have oft been told)
The courtly nymph her treſſes binds with gold,
To captivate the youths; the youths appear
In fine array; in ringlets waves their hair
Rich with ambroſial ſcents, the fair to move,
And all the buſineſs of the day is love.
There from the gaudy train ſelect a dame,
Her willing glance ſhall catch an equal flame.

Lycidas.

Name not the court.—The thought my ſoul confounds,
And with Dione's wrongs my boſom wounds.
Heaven juſtly vindicates the faithful maid;
And now are all my broken vows repaid.
Perhaps ſhe now laments my fancy'd death
With tears unfeign'd; and thinks my gaſping breath
Sigh'd forth her name. O guilt, no more upbraid!
Yes. I fond innocence and truth betray'd. [Aſide.

DIONE and LAURA apart.

Dione.

Hark! how reflection wakes his conſcious heart.
From my pale lids the trickling ſorrows ſtart.
How ſhall my breaſt the ſwelling ſighs confine!

Laura.

O ſmooth thy brow, conceal our juſt deſign:
Be yet awhile unknown. If grief ariſe,
And force a paſſage through thy guſhing eyes,
Quickly retire, thy ſorrows to compoſe;
Or with a look ſerene diſguiſe thy woes.

[Dione is going out. Laura walks at a diſtance.

Lycidas.

Canſt thou, Alexis, leave me thus diſtreſt?
Where's now the boaſted friendſhip of thy breaſt?
Haſt thou not oft ſurvey'd the dappled deer
In ſocial herds o'erſpread the paſtures fair?
When opening hounds the warmer ſcent purſue,
And force the deſtin'd victim from the crew,
Oft he returns, and fain would join the band,
While all their horns the panting wretch withſtand.
Such is thy friendſhip; thus might I confide.

Dione.

Why wilt thou cenſure what thou ne'er haſt try'd?
Sooner ſhall ſwallows leave their callow brood,
Who with their plaintive chirpings cry for food;
Sooner ſhall hens expoſe their infant care,
When the ſpread kite ſails wheeling in the air;
Than I forſake thee when by danger preſt.
Wrong not by jealous fears a faithful breaſt.

Lycidas.

If thy fair-ſpoken tongue thy boſom ſhows,
There let the ſecrets of my ſoul repoſe.

Dione.

Far be ſuſpicion; in my truth confide.
O let my heart thy load of cares divide!

Lycidas.

Know then, Alexis, that in vain I ſtrove
To break her chain, and free my ſoul from love:
On the lim'd twig thus finches beat their wings,
Still more entangled in their clammy ſtrings.
The flow-pac'd days have witneſs'd my deſpair,
Upon my weary couch ſits wakeful care;
Down my fluſh'd cheek the flowing ſorrows run,
As dews deſcend to weep the abſent ſun.
O loſt Parthenia!

Dione.

——Theſe wild thoughts ſuſpend;
And in thy kind commands inſtruct thy friend.

Lycidas.

Whene'er my faultering tongue would urge my cauſe,
Deaf is her ear, and ſullen ſhe withdraws.
Go then, Alexis; ſeek the ſcornful maid,
In tender eloquence my ſufferings plead;
Of ſlighted paſſion you the pangs have known;
O judge my ſecret anguiſh by your own!

Dione

Had I the ſkill inconſtant hearts to move,
My longing ſoul had never loſt my love.
My feeble tongue, in theſe ſoft arts untry'd,
Can ill ſupport the thunder of her pride;
When he ſhall bid me to thy bower repair,
How ſhall my trembling lips her threats declare!
How ſhall I tell thee that ſhe could behold,
With brow ſerene, thy corſe all pale and cold
Beat on the daſhing billow? Should'ſt thou go
Where the tall hill o'erhangs the rocks below,
Near thee the tyrant could unpitying ſtand,
Nor call thee back, nor ſtretch a ſaving hand.
Wilt thou then ſtill perſiſt to tempt thy fate,
To feed her pride, and gratify her hate?

Lycidas.

Know, unexperienc'd youth, that woman's mind
Oft ſhifts her paſſions, like th' inconſtant wind;

Sudden ſhe rages, like the troubled main,
Now ſinks the ſtorm, and all is calm again.
Watch the kind moment, then my wrongs impart,
And the ſoft tale ſhall glide into her heart.

Dione.

No. Let her wander in the lonely grove,
And never hear the tender voice of love.
Let her awhile, neglected by the ſwain,
Paſs by, nor ſighs moleſt the cheerful plain:
Thus ſhall the fury of her pride be laid;
Thus humble into love the haughty maid.

Lycidas.

Vain are attempts my paſſion to controul.
Is this the balm to cure my fainting ſoul?

Dione.

Deep then among the green-wood ſhades I'll rove,
And ſeek with weary'd pace thy wander'd love;
Proſtrate I'll fall, and with inceſſant prayers
Hang on her knees, and bathe her feet with tears.
If ſighs of pity can her ear incline,
(O Lycidas, my life is wrapt in thine)! [Aſide.
I'll charge her from thy voice to hear the tale,
Thy voice more ſweet than notes along the vale
Breath'd from the warbling pipe: the moving ſtrain
Shall ſtay her flight, and conquer her diſdain.
Yet if ſhe hear, ſhould love the meſſage ſpeed,
Then dies all hope—then muſt Dione bleed. [Aſide.

Lycidas.

Haſte then, dear faithful ſwain. Beneath thoſe yews,
Whoſe ſable arms the browneſt ſhade diffuſe,
Where all around, to ſtate the fervent ſky,
The panting flocks in ſerny thickets lie;
There with impatience ſhall I wait my friend,
O'er the wide proſpect frequent glances ſend
To ſpy thy wiſh'd return. As thou ſhalt find
A tender welcome, may thy love be kind!

[Exit Lycidas.

SCENE VI.

DIONE, LAURA.

Dione.

Methinks I'm now ſurrounded by deſpair,
And all my withering hopes are loſt in air.
Thus the young linnet on the rocking bough
Hears through long woods autumnal tempeſt blow,
With hallow blaſts the claſhing branches bend;
And yellow ſhowers of ruſtling leaves deſcend;
She ſees the friendly ſhelter from her fly;
Nor dare her little pinions truſt the ſky;
But on the naked ſpray in wintery air,
All ſhivering, hopeleſs, mourns the dying year.
What have I promis'd? raſh, unthinking maid!
By thy own tongue thy wiſhes are betray'd!

[Laura advances.

Laura.

Why walk'ſt thou thus diſturb'd with frantic air?
Why roll thy eyes with madneſs and deſpair?

Dione. [Muſing.

How wilt thou bear to ſee her pride give way?
When thus the yielding nymph ſhall bid thee ſay,
"Let not the ſhepherd ſeek the ſilent grave,
"Say, that I bid him live—if hope can ſave!"

Laura.

Hath he diſcern'd thee through the ſwain's diſguiſe,
And now alike thy love and friendſhip flies?

Dione.

Yes. Firm and faithful to the promiſe made,
I'll range each ſunny hill, each lawn and glade.

Laura.

'Tis Laura ſpeaks. O calm your troubled mind.

Dione.

Where ſhall my ſearch this envy'd beauty find?
I'll go, my faithleſs ſhepherd's cauſe to plead,
And with my tears accuſe the rival maid.
Yet ſhould her ſoften'd heart to love incline!

Laura.

If thoſe are all thy fears, Evander's thine.

Dione.

Why ſhould we both in ſorrow waſte our days?
If love unfeign'd my conſtant boſom ſways,
His happineſs alone is all I prize,
And that is center'd in Parthenia's eyes.
Haſte then, with earneſt zeal her love implore,
To bleſs his hours—when thou ſhalt breathe no more.

ACT III. SCENE I.

DIONE lying on the ground by the ſide of a Fountain.

Dione.

HERE let me reſt; and in the liquid glaſs
View with impartial look my fading face.
Why are Parthenia's ſtriking beauties priz'd?
And why Dione's weaker glance deſpis'd?
Nature in various moulds has beauty caſt,
And form'd the feature for each different taſte:
This ſighs for golden locks and azure eyes;
That, for the gloſs of ſable treſſes, dies.
Let all mankind theſe locks, theſe eyes deteſt,
So I were lovely in Evander's breaſt!
When o'er the garden's knot we caſt our view,
While ſummer paints the ground with various hue;
Some praiſe the gaudy tulip's ſtreaky red,
And ſome the ſilver lily's bending head;
Some the jonquil in ſhining yellow dreſt,
And ſome the fring'd carnation's varied veſt;
Some love the ſober violet's purple dyes,
Thus beauty fares in different lovers' eyes.
But bright Parthenia like the roſe appears,
She in all eyes ſuperior luſtre bears.

SCENE II.

DIONE, LAURA.

Laura.

Why thus beneath the ſilver willow laid,
Weeps fair Dione in the penſive ſhade?
Haſt thou yet found the over-arching bower,
Which guards Parthenia from the ſultry hour?

Dione.

With weary ſtep in paths unknown I ſtray'd,
And ſought in vain the ſolitary maid.

Laura.

Seeſt thou the waving tops of yonder woods,
Whoſe aged arms imbrown the cooling floods?
The cooling floods o'er breaking pebbles flow,
And waſh the ſoil from the big roots below;

From the tall rock the dashing waters bound.
Hark, o'er the fields the rushing billows sound!
There, lost in thought, and leaning on her crook,
Stood the sad nymph, nor rais'd her pensive look;
With settled eye the bubbling waves survey'd,
And watch the whirling eddies as they play'd.

Dione.

Thither to know my certain doom I speed,
For by this sentence life or death's decreed. [Exit.

SCENE III.

LAURA, CLEANTHES.

Laura.

But see! some hasty stranger bends this way;
His broider'd vest reflects the sunny ray:
Now through the thinner boughs I mark his mien,
Now veil'd, in thicker shades he moves unseen.
Hither he turns; I hear a muttering sound;
Behind this reverend oak with ivy bound,
Quick I'll retire; with busy thought possest,
His tongue betrays the secrets of his breast.
[She hides herself.

Cleanthes.

The skilful hunter with experienc'd care
Traces the doubles of the circling hare;
The subtle fox (who breathes the weary hound
O'er hills and plains) in distant brakes is found;
With ease we track swift hinds and skipping roes.
But who th' inconstant ways of woman knows?
They say, she wanders with the sylvan train,
And courts the native freedoms of the plain;
Shepherds explain their wish without offence,
Nor blush the nymphs—for love is innocence.
O lead me where the rural youth retreat,
Where the slope hills the warbling voice repeat.
Perhaps on daisy'd turf reclines the maid,
And near her side some rival clown is laid.
Yet, yet I love her.—O lost nymph return;
Let not thy sire with tears incessant mourn;
Return, lost nymph; bid sorrow cease to flow,
And let Dione glad the house of woe.

Laura.

Call'd he not lost Dione? hence I'll start,
Cross his slow steps, and sift his opening heart.
[Aside.

Cleanthes.

Tell me, fair nymph, direct my wandering way?
Where, in close bowers, to shun the sultry ray,
Repose the swains; whose flocks with bleating fill
The bordering forest and the thymy hill.
But if thou frequent join those sylvan bands,
Thyself can answer what my soul demands.

Laura.

Seven years I trod these fields, these bowers, and glades,
And by the lessening and the lengthening shades
Have mark'd the hours; what time my flock to lead
To sunny mountains, or the watery mead:
Train'd in the labours of the sylvan crew,
Their sports, retreats, their cares and loves I knew.

Cleanthes.

Instruct me, then, if late among your race
A stranger nymph is found, of noble grace,
In rural arts unskill'd, no charge she tends;
Nor when the morn and evening dew descends
Milks the big-udder'd ewe. Her mien and dress
The polish'd manners of the court confess.

Laura.

Each day arrive the neighbouring nymphs and swains,
To share the pastime of our jovial plains;
How can I there thy roving beauty trace,
Where not one nymph is bred of vulgar race!

Cleanthes.

If yet she breathes, what tortures must she find!
The curse of disobedience tears her mind.
If e'er your breast with filial duty burn'd,
If e'er you sorrow'd when a parent mourn'd;
Tell her, I charge you, with incessant groans
Her drooping sire his absent child bemoans.

Laura.

Unhappy man!

Cleanthes.

——With storms of passion tost,
When first he learn'd his vagrant child was lost,
On the cold floor his trembling limbs he flung,
And with thick blows his hollow bosom rung;
Then up he started, and with fix'd surprise,
Upon her picture threw his frantic eyes,
While thus he cry'd: In her my life was bound,
" Warm in each feature is her mother found!
" Perhaps despair has been her fatal guide,
" And now she floats upon the weeping tide;
" Or on the willow hung, with head reclin'd,
" All pale and cold she wavers in the wind.
" Did I not force her hence by harsh commands?
" Did not her soul abhor the nuptial bands?"

Laura.

Teach not, ye sires, your daughters to rebel.
By counsel rein their wills, but ne'er compel.

Cleanthes.

Ye duteous daughters, trust these tender guides;
Nor think a parent's breast the tyrant hides.

Laura.

From either lid the scalding sorrows roll;
The moving tale runs thrilling to my soul.

Cleanthes.

Perhaps she wanders in the lonely woods,
Or on the sedgy borders of the floods;
Thou know'st each cottage, forest, hill, and vale,
And pebbled brook that winds along the dale.
Search each sequester'd dell to find the fair;
And just reward shall gratify thy care.

Laura.

O ye kind boughs, protect the virgin's flight,
And guard Dione from his prying sight! [Aside.

Cleanthes.

Mean while, I'll seek the shepherd's cool abodes,
Point me, fair nymph, along these doubtful roads.

Laura.

Seest thou yon mountain rear his shaggy brow?
In the green valley graze the flocks below:
There every gale with warbling music floats,
Shade answers shade, and breathes alternate notes.
[Exit Cleanthes.
He's gone; and to the distant vale is sent,
Nor shall his force Dione's love prevent.
But see, she comes again with hasty pace,
And conscious pleasure dimples on her face.

SCENE IV.

LAURA, DIONE.

Dione.

I found her laid beſide the cryſtal brook,
Nor rais'd ſhe from the ſtream her ſettled look,
Till near her ſide I ſtood; her head ſhe rears,
Starts ſudden, and her ſhrieks confeſs her fears.

Laura.

Did not thy words her thoughtful ſoul ſurpriſe,
And kindle ſparkling anger in her eyes?

Dione.

Thus ſhe reply'd, with rage and ſcorn poſſeſt:
"Will importuning love ne'er give me reſt?
"Why am I thus in deſerts wild purſu'd,
"Like guilty conſciences when ſtain'd with blood?
"Sure boding ravens, from the blaſted oak,
"Shall learn the name of Lycidas to croak,
"To ſound it in my ears! As ſwains paſs by,
"With look aſkance, they ſhake their heads and cry,
"Lo! this is ſhe for whom the ſhepherd dy'd!
"Soon Lycidas, a victim to her pride, [glade,
"Shall ſeek the grave; and in the glimmering
"With look all pale, ſhall glide the reſtleſs ſhade
"Of the poor ſwain; while we with haggard eye
"And briſtled hair the fleeting phantom fly."
Still let their curſes innocence upbraid:
Heaven never will forſake the virtuous maid.

Laura.

Didſt thou perſiſt to touch her haughty breaſt?

Dione.

She ſtill the more diſdain'd, the more I preſt.

Laura.

When you were gone, theſe walks a ſtranger croſt,
He turn'd through every path, and wander'd loſt;
To me he came; with courteous ſpeech demands
Beneath what bowers repos'd the ſhepherd bands;
Then further aſks me, if among that race
A ſhepherdeſs was found of courtly grace;
With proffer'd bribes my faithful tongue eſſays;
But for no bribe the faithful tongue betrays.
In me Dione's ſafe. Far hence he ſpeeds,
Where other hills reſound with other reeds.

Dione.

Should he come back; ſuſpicion's jealous eyes
Might trace my feature through the ſwain's diſguiſe.
Now every noiſe and whiſtling wind I dread,
And in each ſound approaches human tread.

Laura.

He ſaid, he left your houſe involv'd in cares,
Sighs ſwell'd each breaſt, each eye o'erflow'd with tears;
For his loſt child thy penſive father mourns,
And, ſunk in ſorrow, to the duſt returns.
Go back, obedient daughter; hence depart,
And ſtill the ſighs that tear his anxious heart.
Soon ſhall Evander, wearied with diſdain,
Forego theſe fields, and ſeek the town again.

Dione.

Think, Laura, what thy haſty thoughts perſuade.
If I return, to love a victim made,
My wrathful ſire will force his harſh command,
And with Cleanthes join my trembling hand.

Laura.

Truſt a fond father; raiſe him from deſpair.

Dione.

I fly not him; I fly a life of care.
On the high nuptials of the court look round;
Where ſhall, alas, one happy pair be found!
There marriage is for ſervile intereſt ſought:
Is love for wealth, or power, or title bought?
'Tis hence domeſtic jars their peace deſtroy,
And looſe adultery ſteals the ſhameful joy.
But ſearch we wide o'er all the bliſsful plains,
Where love alone, devoid of intereſt, reigns.
What concord in each happy pair appears!
How ſondneſs ſtrengthens with the rolling years!
Superior power ne'er thwarts their ſoft delights,
Nor jealous accuſations wake their nights.

Laura.

May all thoſe bleſſings on Dione fall.

Dione.

Grant me Evander, and I ſhare them all.
Shall a fond parent give perpetual ſtrife,
And doom his child to be a wretch for life?
Though he bequeath'd me all theſe woods and plains,
And all the flocks the ruſſet down contains;
With all the golden harveſts of the year,
Far as where yonder purple mountains rear;
Can theſe the broils of nuptial life prevent?
Can theſe, without Evander, give content?
But ſee, he comes.

Laura.

—— I'll to the vales repair,
Where wanders by the ſtream my fleecy care.
May'ſt thou the rage of this new flame controul,
And wake Dione in his tender ſoul! [Exit Laura.

SCENE V.

DIONE, LYCIDAS.

Lycidas.

Say, my Alexis, can thy words impart
Kind rays of hope to clear a doubtful heart?
How didſt thou firſt my pangs of love diſcloſe?
Did her diſdainful brow confirm my woes?
Or did ſoft pity in her boſom riſe,
Heave on her breaſt, and languiſh in her eyes?

Dione.

How ſhall my tongue the faultering tale explain!
My heart drops blood to give the ſhepherd pain.

Lycidas.

Pronounce her utmoſt ſcorn; I come prepar'd
To meet my doom. Say, is my death declar'd?

Dione.

Why ſhould thy fate depend on woman's will!
Forget this tyrant, and be happy ſtill.

Lycidas.

Didſt thou beſeech her not to ſpeed her flight,
Nor ſhun with wrathful glance my hated ſight?
Will ſhe conſent my ſighing plaint to hear,
Nor let my piercing cries be loſt in air?

Dione.

Can mariners appeaſe the toſſing ſtorm,
When foaming waves the yawning deep deform?
When o'er the ſable cloud the thunder flies,
Say, who ſhall calm the terror of the ſkies?

Who shall the lion's famish'd roar assuage?
And can we still proud woman's stronger rage?
Soon as my faithful tongue pronounc'd thy name,
Sudden her glances shot resentful flame:
Be dumb, she cries, this whining love give o'er,
And vex me with the teazing theme no more.

Lycidas.

'Tis pride alone that keeps alive her scorn.
Can the mean swain, in humble cottage born,
Can poverty that haughty heart obtain,
Where avarice and strong ambition reign?
If poverty pass by in tatter'd coat,
Curs vex his heels, and stretch their barking throat;
If chance he mingle in the female crowd,
Pride tosses high her head, scorn laughs aloud;
Each nymph turns from him to her gay gallant,
And wonders at the impudence of want.
'Tis vanity that rules all womankind,
Love is the weakest passion of their mind.

Dione.

Though one is by those servile views possest,
O Lycidas, condemn not all the rest.

Lycidas.

Though I were bent beneath a load of years,
And seventy winters thin'd my hoary hairs;
Yet, if my olive branches dropt with oil,
And crooked shares were brighten'd in my soil,
If lowing herds my fattening meads possest,
And my white fleece the tawny mountain dreſt;
Then would she lure me with love-darting glance,
Then with fond mercenary smiles advance.
Though hell with every vice my soul had stain'd,
And froward anger in my bosom reign'd,
Though avarice my coffers cloth'd in rust,
And my joints trembled with enfeebled lust;
Yet, were my ancient name with titles great,
How would she languish for the gaudy bait!
If to her love all-tempting wealth pretend,
What virtuous woman can her heart defend?

Dione.

Conquests, thus meanly bought, men scon despise,
And justly slight the mercenary prize.

Lycidas.

I know these frailties in her breast reside,
Direct her glance, and every action guide.
Still let Alexis' faithful friendship aid,
Once more attempt to bend the stubborn maid.
Tell her, no base-born swain provokes her scorn,
No clown, beneath the sedgy cottage horn;
Tell her, for her this sylvan dress I took,
For her my name and pomp of courts forsook;
My lofty roofs with golden sculpture shine,
And my high birth descends from ancient line.

Dione.

Love is a sacred voluntary fire,
Gold never bought that pure, that chaste desire.
Who thinks true love for lucre to possess,
Shall grasp false flattery and the feign'd caress;
Can we believe that mean, that servile wife,
Who vilely sells her dear-bought love for life,
Would not her virtue for an hour resign,
If in her sight the prosser'd treasure shine.

Lycidas.

Can reason (when by winds swift fires are borne O'er waving harvests of autumnal corn)
The driving fury of the flame reprove?
Who then shall reason with a heart in love?

Dione.

Yet let me speak; O may my words persuade
The noble youth to quit this sylvan maid!
Resign thy crook, no more to plains resort,
Look round on all the beauties of the court;
There shall thy merit find a worthy flame,
Some nymph of equal wealth and equal name.
Think, if these offers should thy wish obtain,
And should the rustic beauty stoop to gain;
Thy heart could ne'er prolong th' unequal fire,
The sudden blaze would in one year expire;
Then thy rash folly thou too late shalt chide,
To poverty and base-born blood ally'd;
Her vulgar tongue shall animate the strife,
And hourly discord vex thy future life.

Lycidas.

Such is the force thy faithful words impart,
That like the galling goad they pierce my heart,
You think fair virtue in my breast resides,
That honest truth my lips and actions guides.
Deluded shepherd, could you view my soul,
You'd see it with deceit and treachery foul;
I'm base, perfidious. Ere from court I came,
Love singled from the train a beauteous dame;
The tender maid my fervent vows believ'd,
My fervent vows the tender maid deceiv'd.
Why dost thou tremble? why thus heave thy sighs?
Why steal thy silent sorrows from thy eyes?

Dione.

Sure the soft lamb hides rage within his breast,
And cooing turtles are with hate possest;
When from so sweet a tongue flow fraud and lies,
And those meek looks a perjur'd heart disguise.
Ah! who shall now on faithless man depend?
The treacherous lover proves as false a friend.

Lycidas.

When with Dione's love my bosom glow'd,
Firm constancy and truth sincere I vow'd;
But since Parthenia's brighter charms were known,
My love, my constancy and truth are flown.

Dione.

Are not thy hours with conscious anguish stung?
Swift vengeance must o'ertake the perjur'd tongue,
The gods the cause of injur'd love assert,
And arm with stubborn pride Parthenia's heart.

Lycidas.

Go, try her; tempt her with my birth and state,
Stronger ambition will subdue her hate.

Dione.

O rather turn thy thoughts on that lost maid,
Whose hourly sighs thy faithless oath upbraid;
Think you behold her at the dead of night,
Plac'd by the glimmering taper's paly light,
With all your letters spread before her view,
While trickling tears the tender lines bedew;
Sobbing she reads the perjuries o'er and o'er,
And her long nights know peaceful sleep no more.

Lycidas.

Let me forget her.

Dione.

O false youth, relent;
Think should Parthenia to thy hopes consent;

When Hymen joins your hands, and muſic's voice
Makes the glad echoes of thy domes rejoice,
Then ſhall Dione force the crowded hall,
Kneel at thy feet, and loud for juſtice call:
Could you behold her weltering on the ground,
The purple dagger reeking from the wound;
Could you, unmov'd, this dreadful ſight ſurvey?
Such fatal ſcenes ſhall ſtain the bridal day.

Lycidas.

The horrid thought ſinks deep into my ſoul,
And down my cheek unwilling ſorrows roll.

Dione

From this new flame you may as yet recede,
Or have you doom'd that guiltleſs maid ſhall bleed?

Lycidas.

Name her no more.—Haſte, ſeek the ſylvan fair.

Dione.

Should the rich proffer tempt her liſtening ear,
Bid all your piece adieu. O barbarous youth,
Can you forego your honour, love, and truth?
Yet ſhould Parthenia wealth and title ſlight,
Would juſtice then reſtore Dione's right?
Would you then dry her ever-falling tears;
And bleſs with honeſt love your future years?

Lycidas.

I'll in yon ſhade thy wiſh'd return attend;
Come, quickly come, and cheer thy ſighing friend.
[Exit Lycidas.

Dione.

Should her proud ſoul reſiſt the tempting bait,
Should ſhe contemn his proffer'd wealth and ſtate;
Then I once more his perjur'd heart may move,
And in his boſom wake the dying love.
As the pale wretch involv'd in doubts and fears,
All trembling in the judgment-hall appears;
So ſhall I ſtand before Parthenia's eyes,
For as ſhe dooms, Dione lives or dies.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

LYCIDAS, PARTHENIA, aſleep in a Bower.

Lycidas.

MAY no rude wind the ruſtling branches move;
Breathe ſoft, ye ſilent gales, nor wake my love.
Ye ſhepherds, piping homeward on the way,
Let not the diſtant echoes learn your lay;
Strain not, ye nightingales, your warbling throat,
May no loud ſhake prolong the ſhriller note,
Leſt ſhe awake; O ſleep, ſecure her eyes,
That I may gaze; for, if ſhe wake, ſhe flies.
While eaſy dreams compoſe her peaceful ſoul,
What anxious cares within my boſom roll!
If tir'd with ſighs beneath the beech I lie,
And languid ſlumber cloſe my weeping eye,
Her lovely viſion riſes to my view,
Swift flies the nymph, and ſwift would I purſue;
I ſtrive to call, my tongue has loſt its ſound;
Like rooted oaks, my feet benumb'd are bound;
Struggling I wake. Again my ſorrows flow,
And not one flattering dream deludes my woe.
What innocence! how meek is every grace!
How ſweet the ſmile that dimples on her face,
Calm as the ſleeping ſeas! but ſhould my ſighs
Too rudely breathe, what angry ſtorms would riſe!
Though the fair roſe with beauteous bluſh is crown'd,
Beneath her fragrant leaves the thorn is found;
The peach, that with inviting crimſon blooms,
Deep at the heart the cankering worm conſumes;
'Tis thus, alas! thoſe lovely features hide
Diſdain and anger and reſentful pride.

SCENE II.

LYCIDAS, DIONE, PARTHENIA.

Lycidas.

Hath proffer'd greatneſs yet o'ercome her hate?
And does ſhe languiſh for the glittering bait?
Againſt the ſwain ſhe might her pride ſupport.
Can ſhe ſubdue her ſex, and ſcorn a court?
Perhaps in dreams the ſhining viſion charms,
And the rich bracelet ſparkles on her arms;
In fancy'd heaps the golden treaſure glows:
Parthenia, wake; all this thy ſwain beſtows.

Dione.

Sleeps ſhe in theſe cloſe bowers?

Lycidas.

——Lo! there ſhe lies.

Dione.

O may no ſtartling ſound unſeal her eyes,
And drive her hence away. 'Till now, in vain
I trod the winding wood and weary plain.
Hence, Lycidas; beyond thoſe ſhades repoſe,
While I thy fortune and thy birth diſcloſe.

Lycidas.

May I Parthenia to thy friendſhip owe?

Dione.

O rather think on loſt Dione's woe!
Muſt ſhe thy broken faith for ever mourn,
And will that juſter paſſion ne'er return?

Lycidas.

Upbraid me not; but go. Her ſlumbers chaſe;
And in her view the bright temptation place.
[Exit Lycidas.

SCENE III.

DIONE, PARTHENIA.

Dione.

Now flames the weſtern ſky with golden beams,
And the ray kindles on the quivering ſtreams;
Long flights of crows, high-croaking from their food,
Now ſeek the nightly covert of the wood;
The tender graſs with dewy cryſtal bends,
And gathering vapour from the heath aſcends.
Shake off this downy reſt; wake, gentle maid,
Truſt not thy charms beneath the noxious ſhade.
Parthenia, riſe.

Parthenia.

——What voice alarms my ear?
Away. Approach not. Hah! Alexis there!
Let us together to the vales deſcend,
And to the folds our bleating charge attend;
But let me hear no more that ſhepherd's name,
Vex not my quiet with his hateful flame.

Dione.

Can I behold him gaſping on the ground,
And ſeek no healing herb to ſtaunch the wound?
For thee continual ſighs conſume his heart,
'Tis you alone can cure the bleeding ſmart:
Once more I come the moving cauſe to plead,
If ſtill his ſufferings cannot intercede,
Yet let my friendſhip do his paſſion right,
And ſhow thy lover in his native light.

Parthenia.

Why in dark myſtery are thy words involv'd?
If Lycidas you mean; know, I'm reſolv'd.

Dione.

Let not thy kindling rage my words reſtrain.
Know then, Parthenia ſlights no vulgar ſwain.
For thee he bears the ſcrip and ſylvan crook,
For thee the glories of a court forſook.
May not thy heart the wealthy flame decline!
His honours, his poſſeſſions, all are thine.

Parthenia.

If he's a courtier, O ye nymphs, beware;
Thoſe who moſt promiſe are the leaſt ſincere.
The quick-ey'd hawk ſhoots headlong from above,
And in his pounces bears the trembling dove;
The pilfering wolf o'erleaps the fold's defence.
But the falſe courtier preys on innocence.
If he's a courtier, O ye nymphs, beware:
Thoſe who moſt promiſe are the leaſt ſincere.

Dione.

Alas! thou ne'er haſt prov'd the ſweets of ſtate,
Nor known that female pleaſure, to be great.
'Tis for the town ripe cluſters load the poles,
And all our autumn crowns the courtier's bowls;
For him our woods the red-ey'd pheaſant breed,
And annual coveys in our harveſt feed;
For him with fruit the bending branch is ſtor'd,
Plenty pours all her bleſſings on his board.
If (when the market to the city calls)
We chance to paſs beſide his palace-walls,
Does not his hall with muſic's voice reſound,
And the floor tremble with the dancer's bound?
Such are the pleaſures Lycidas ſhall give,
When thy relenting boſom bids him live.

Parthenia.

See yon gay goldfinch hop from ſpray to ſpray,
Who ſings a farewell to the parting day;
At large he flies o'er hill and dale and down;
Is not each buſh, each ſpreading tree his own?
And canſt thou think he'll quit his native brier,
For the bright cage o'er-arch'd with golden wire?
What then are honours, pomp and gold to me?
Are thoſe a price to purchaſe liberty?

Dione.

Think, when the Hymeneal torch ſhall blaze,
And on the ſolemn rites the virgins gaze;
When thy fair locks with glittering gems are grac'd,
And the bright zone ſhall ſparkle round thy waiſt;
How will their hearts with envious ſorrow pine,
When Lycidas ſhall join his hand to thine!

Parthenia.

And yet, Alexis, all that pomp and ſhow
Are oft the varniſh of internal woe.
When the chaſte lamb is from her ſiſters led,
And interwoven garlands paint her head;
The gazing flock, all envious of her pride,
Behold her ſkipping by the prieſteſs' ſide;
Each hopes the flowery wreath with longing eyes;
While ſhe, alas! is led to ſacrifice!
Thus walks the bride in all her ſtate array'd,
The gaze and envy of each thoughtleſs maid.

Dione.

As yet her tongue reſiſts the tempting ſnare,
And guards my panting boſom from deſpair.
[Aſide.
Can thy ſtrong ſoul this noble flame forego?
Muſt ſuch a lover waſte his life in woe?

Parthenia.

Tell him, his gifts I ſcorn; not all his art,
Not all his flattery ſhall ſeduce my heart.
Courtiers, I know, are diſciplin'd to cheat,
Their infant lips are taught to liſp deceit;
To prey on eaſy nymphs they range the ſhade,
And vainly boaſt of innocence betray'd;
Chaſte hearts, unlearn'd in falſehood, they aſſail,
And think our ear will drink the grateful tale.
No. Lycidas ſhall ne'er my peace deſtroy,
I'll guard my virtue, and content enjoy.

Dione.

So ſtrong a paſſion in my boſom burns,
Whene'er his ſoul is griev'd, Alexis mourns!
Canſt thou this importuning ardor blame? [fame?
Would not thy tongue for friendſhip urge the

Parthenia.

Yes, blooming ſwain. You ſhow an honeſt mind;
I ſee it, with the pureſt flame refin'd.
Who ſhall compare love's mean and groſs deſire
To the chaſte zeal of friendſhip's ſacred fire?
By whining love our weakneſs is confeſt!
But ſtronger friendſhip ſhows a virtuous breaſt.
In folly's heart the ſhort-liv'd blaze may glow,
Wiſdom alone can purer friendſhip know.
Love is a ſudden blaze which ſoon decays,
Friendſhip is like the ſun's eternal rays;
Not daily benefits exhauſt the flame,
It ſtill is giving, and ſtill burns the ſame;
And could Alexis from his ſoul remove
All the low images of groſſer love;
Such mild, ſuch gentle looks thy heart declare,
Fain would my breaſt thy faithful friendſhip ſhare.

Dione.

How dare you in the different ſex confide?
And ſeek a friendſhip which you ne'er have try'd?

Parthenia.

Yes, I to thee could give up all my heart.
From thy chaſte eye no wanton glances dart;
Thy modeſt lips convey no thought impure,
With thee may ſtricteſt virtue walk ſecure.

Dione.

Yet can I ſafely on the nymph depend,
Whoſe unrelenting ſcorn can kill my friend!

Parthenia.

Accuſe me not, who act a generous part;
Had I, like city maids, a fraudful heart,
Then had his proffers taught my ſoul to feign,
Then had I vilely ſtoopt to ſordid gain,
Then had I ſigh'd for honours, pomp and gold,
And for unhappy chains my freedom ſold.
If you would ſave him, bid him leave the plain,
And to his native city turn again;

There, ſhall his paſſion find a ready cure,
There not one dame reſiſts the glittering lure.

Dione.

All this I frequent urg'd, but urg'd in vain.
Alas! thou only canſt aſſuage his pain!

SCENE IV.

DIONE, PARTHENIA, LYCIDAS.

Lycidas. [Liſtening.

Why ſtays Alexis? can my boſom bear
Thus long alternate ſtorms of hope and fear?
Yonder they walk; no frowns her brow diſguiſe,
But love-conſenting ſparkles in her eyes;
Here will I liſten, here, impatient wait.
Spare me, Parthenia, and reſign thy hate. [Aſide.

Parthenia.

When Lycidas ſhall to the court repair,
Still let Alexis love his fleecy care;
Still let him chooſe cool grots and ſylvan bowers,
And let Parthenia ſhare his peaceful hours.

Lycidas.

What do I hear? my friendſhip is betray'd;
The treacherous rival has ſeduc'd the maid.
[Aſide.

Parthenia.

With thee, where bearded goats deſcend the ſteep,
Or where, like winter's ſnow, the nibbling ſheep
Clothe the ſlope hills; I'll paſs the cheerful day,
And from thy reed my voice ſhall catch the lay.
But ſee, ſtill evening ſpreads her duſky wings,
The flock, ſlow-moving from the miſty ſprings,
Now ſeek their fold. Come, ſhepherd, let's away,
To cloſe the lateſt labours of the day.
[Exeunt hand in hand.

SCENE V.

LYCIDAS.

My troubled heart what dire diſaſters rend?
A ſcornful miſtreſs, and a treacherous friend!
Would ye be cozen'd, more than woman can,
Unlock your boſom to perfidious man.
One faithful woman have theſe eyes beheld,
And againſt her this perjur'd heart rebell'd:
But ſearch as far as earth's wide bounds extend,
Where ſhall the wretched find one faithful friend?

SCENE VI.

LYCIDAS, DIONE.

Lycidas.

Why ſtarts the ſwain? why turn his eyes away,
As if amidſt his path the viper lay?
Did I not to thy charge my heart confide?
Did I not truſt thee near Parthenia's ſide,
As here ſhe ſlept?

Dione.

——She ſtraight my call obey'd,
And downy ſlumber left the lovely maid;
As in the morn awakes the folded roſe,
And all around her breathing odour throws;
So wak'd Parthenia,

Lycidas.

——Could thy guarded heart,
When her full beauty glow'd, put by the dart?
Yet on Alexis let my ſoul depend;
'Tis moſt ungenerous to ſuſpect a friend.
And thou, I hope, haſt well that name profeſt,

Dione.

O could thy piercing eye diſcern my breaſt!
Could'ſt thou the ſecrets of my boſom ſee,
There every thought is fill'd with cares for thee.

Lycidas.

Is there, againſt hypocriſy, defence.
Who clothes her words and looks with innocence!
[Aſide.
Say, ſhepherd, when you proffer'd wealth and ſtate,
Did not her ſcorn and ſupplied pride abate?

Dione.

As ſparkling diamonds to the feather'd train,
Who ſcrape the winnow'd chaff in ſearch of grain;
Such to the ſhepherdeſs the court appears:
Content ſhe ſeeks, and ſpurns thoſe glittering cares.

Lycidas.

'Tis not in woman grandeur to deſpiſe,
'Tis not from courts, from me alone ſhe flies.
Did not my paſſion ſuffer like diſgrace,
While ſhe believ'd me born of ſylvan race?
Doſt thou not think, this proudeſt of her kind
Has to ſome rival ſwain her heart reſign'd?

Dione.

No rival ſhepherd her diſdain can move;
Her frozen boſom is averſe to love.

Lycidas.

Say, art thou ſure, that this ungrateful fair
Scorns all alike, bids all alike deſpair?

Dione.

How can I know the ſecrets of her heart?

Lycidas.

Anſwer ſincere, nor from the queſtion ſtart.
Say, in her glance was never love confeſt,
And is no ſwain diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt?

Dione.

O Lycidas, bid all thy troubles ceaſe;
Let not a thought on her diſturb thy peace.
May juſtice bid thy former paſſion wake;
Think how Dione ſuffers for thy ſake:
Let not a broken oath thy honour ſtain,
Recal thy vows, and ſeek the town again.

Lycidas.

What means Alexis? where's thy friendſhip flown?
Why am I baniſh'd to the hateful town?
Hath ſome new ſhepherd warm'd Parthenia's breaſt?
And does my love his amorous hours moleſt?
Is it for this thou bid'ſt me quit the plain?
Yes, yes, thou fondly lov'ſt this rival ſwain.
When firſt my cheated ſoul thy friendſhip woo'd,
To my warm heart I took the viperous brood.
O falſe Alexis!

Dione.

——Why am I accus'd?
Thy jealous mind is by weak fears abus'd.

Lycidas.

Was not thy boſom fraught with falſe deſign?
Didſt thou not plead his cauſe, and give up mine?

Let not thy tongue evaſive anſwer ſeek;
The conſcious crimſon riſes on thy cheek:
Thy coward conſcience by thy guilt diſmay'd,
Shakes in each joint, and owns that I'm betray'd.

Dione.

How my poor heart is wrong'd! O ſpare thy friend!

Lycidas.

Seek not detected falſehood to defend.

Dione.

Beware, leſt blind ſuſpicion raſhly blame.

Lycidas.

Own thyſelf then the rival of my flame.
If this be ſhe for whom Alexis pin'd,
She now no more is to thy vows unkind.
Behind the thicket's twiſted verdure laid,
I witneſs'd every tender thing ſhe ſaid;
I ſaw bright pleaſure kindle in her eyes,
Love warm'd each feature at thy ſoft replies.

Dione.

Yet hear me ſpeak.

Lycidas.

——In vain is all defence.
Did not thy treacherous hand conduct her hence?
Haſte, from my ſight. Rage burns in every vein;
Never approach my juſt revenge again.

Dione.

O ſearch my heart; there injur'd truth thou'lt find.

Lycidas.

Talk not of truth; long ſince ſhe left mankind.
So ſmooth a tongue! and yet ſo falſe a heart!
Sure courts firſt taught thee fawning friendſhip's arts!
No. Thou art falſe by nature.

Dione.

——Let me clear
This heavy charge, and prove my truſt ſincere.

Lycidas.

Boaſt then her favours; ſay what happy hour
Next calls to meet her in the appointed bower;
Say, when and where you met.

Dione.

——Be rage ſuppreſt.
In ſtabbing mine, you wound Parthenia's breaſt.
She ſaid, ſhe ſtill defy'd Love's keeneſt dart;
Yet purer friendſhip might divide her heart,
Friendſhip's ſincerer bands ſhe wiſh'd to prove.

Lycidas.

A woman's friendſhip ever ends in love.
Think not theſe fooliſh tales my faith command;
Did not I ſee thee preſs her ſnowy hand?
O may her paſſion like thy friendſhip laſt!
May ſhe betray thee ere a day be paſt!
Hence then. Away. Thou'rt hateful to my ſight,
And thus I ſpurn the fawning hypocrite.

[Exit Lycidas.

SCENE VII.

Dione.

Was ever grief like mine! O wretched maid!
My friendſhip wrong'd! my conſtant love betray'd!
Misfortune haunts my ſteps where'er I go,
And all my days are overcaſt with wo.
Long have I ſtrove th' increaſing load to bear,
Now faints my ſoul, and ſinks into deſpair.
O lead me to the hanging mountain's celf,
In whoſe brown cliffs the fowls of darkneſs dwell;
Where waters, trickling down the rifted wall,
Shall lull my ſorrows with the tinkling fall.
There ſeek thy grave. How canſt thou bear the light,
When baniſh'd ever from Evander's ſight!

SCENE VIII.

DIONE, LAURA.

Laura.

Why hangs a cloud of grief upon thy brows?
Does the proud nymph accept Evander's vows?

Dione.

Can I bear life with theſe new pangs oppreſt!
Again he tears me from his faithleſs breaſt:
A perjur'd lover firſt he fought theſe plains,
And now my friendſhip like my love diſdains.
As I new offers to Parthenia made,
Conceal'd he ſtood behind the woodbine ſhade.
He ſays, my treacherous tongue his heart betray'd,
That my falſe ſpeeches have miſled the maid;
With groundleſs fear he thus his ſoul deceives;
What frenzy dictates, jealouſy believes.

Laura.

Reſign thy crook, put off this manly veſt,
And let the wrong'd Dione ſtand confeſt;
When he ſhall learn what ſorrows thou haſt borne,
And find that nought relents Parthenia's ſcorn,
Sure he will pity thee.

Dione.

——No, Laura, no.
Should I, alas! the ſylvan dreſs forego,
Then might he think that I her pride foment,
That injur'd love inſtructs me to reſent;
Our ſecret enterpriſe might fatal prove:
Man flies the plague of perſecuting love.

Laura.

Avoid Parthenia; leſt his rage grow warm,
And jealouſy reſolve ſome fatal harm.

Dione.

O Laura, if thou chance the youth to find,
Tell him what torments vex my anxious mind;
Should I once more his awful preſence ſeek,
The ſilent tears would bathe my glowing cheek;
By riſing ſighs my faultering voice be ſtay'd,
And trembling fear too ſoon confeſs the maid.
Haſte, Laura, then; his vengeful ſoul aſſuage,
Tell him, I'm guiltleſs; cool his blinded rage;
Tell him that truth ſincere my friendſhip brought,
Let him not cheriſh one ſuſpicious thought.
Then, to convince him his diſtruſt was vain.
I'll never, never ſee that nymph again.
This way he went.

Laura.

——See, at the call of night,
The ſtar of evening ſheds his ſilver light
High o'er yon weſtern hill: the cooling gales
Freſh odours breathe along the winding dales;
Far from their home as yet our ſhepherds ſtray,
To cloſe with cheerful walk the ſultry day.
Methinks from far I hear the piping ſwain;
Hark, in the breeze now ſwells, now ſinks the ſtrain!

Thither I'll seek him.

Dione.

——While this length of glade
Shall lead me pensive through the sable shade;
Where on the branches murmur rushing winds,
Grateful as falling floods to love-sick minds;
O may this path to death's dark vale descend!
There only can the wretched hope a friend.
[Ex. severally.

ACT V. SCENE I.

A Wood.

DIONE, CLEANTHES (who lies wounded in a distant part of the stage).

Dione.

THE moon serene now climbs th' aerial way;
See, at her sight ten thousand stars decay:
With trembling gleam she tips the silent grove,
While all beneath the chequer'd shadows move.
Turn back thy silver axles, downward roll,
Darkness best fits the horrors of my soul.
Rise, rise, ye clouds: the face of heaven deform,
Veil the bright goddess in a sable storm:
O look not down upon a wretched maid!
Let thy bright torch the happy lover aid,
And light his wandering footsteps to the bower
Where the kind nymph attends th' appointed hour.
Yet thou hast seen unhappy love like mine;
Did not thy lamp in heaven's blue forehead shine,
When Thisbe sought her love along the glade?
Didst thou not then behold the gleaming blade,
And gild that fatal point that stabb'd her breast?
Soon I, like her, shall seek the realms of rest.
Let groves of mournful yew a wretch surround!
O soothe my ear with melancholy sound!
The village-curs now stretch their yelling throat,
And dogs from distant cots return the note;
The ravenous wolf along the valley prowls,
And with his famish'd cries the mountain howls.
But hark! what sudden noise advances neat?
Repeated groans alarm my affrighted ear!

Cleanthes.

Shepherd, approach; ah! fly not through the glade.
A wretch all dy'd with wounds invokes thy aid.

Dione.

Say then, unhappy stranger, how you bled;
Collect thy spirits, raise thy drooping head.
[Cleanthes raises himself on his arm.
O horrid sight! Cleanthes gasping lies;
And death's black shadows float before his eyes.
Unknown in this disguise, I'll check my wo,
And learn what bloody hand has struck the blow.
[Aside.
Say, youth, ere fate thy feeble voice confounds,
What led thee hither? whence these purple wounds?

Cleanthes.

Stay, fleeting life; may strength a while prevail,
Lest my clos'd lips confine th' imperfect tale.
Ere the streak'd east grew warm with amber ray,
I from the city took my doubtful way;
Far o'er the plains I sought a beauteous maid,
Who, from the court, in these wide forests stray'd;
Wanders unknown; as I, with weary pain,
Try'd every path, and opening glade, in vain;
A band of thieves, forth rushing from the wood
Unsheath'd their daggers warm with daily blood;
Deep in my breast the barbarous steel is dy'd,
And purple hands the golden prey divide. [swain,
Hence are these mangling wounds. Say, gentle
If thou hast known among the sylvan train
The vagrant nymph I seek?

Dione.

——What mov'd thy care,
Thus, in these pathless wilds, to search the fair?

Cleanthes.

I charge you, O ye daughters of the grove,
Ye Naïads, who the mossy fountains love,
Ye happy swains, who range the pastures wide,
Ye tender nymphs, who feed your flocks beside;
If my last gasping breath can pity move,
If e'er ye knew the pangs of slighted love,
Show her, I charge you, where Cleanthes dy'd;
The grass yet reeking with the sanguine tide.
A father's power to me the virgin gave,
But she disdain'd to live a nuptial slave;
So fled her native home.

Dione.

——'Tis then from thee
Springs the foul source of all her misery
Could'st thou, thy selfish appetite to please,
Condemn to endless woes another's peace?

Cleanthes.

O spare me; nor my hapless love upbraid,
While on my heart death's frozen hand is laid!
Go, seek her, guide her where Cleanthes bled;
When she surveys her lover pale and dead,
Tell her, that, since she fled my hateful sight,
Without remorse I sought the realms of night.
Methinks I see her view these poor remains,
And on her cheek indecent gladness reigns!
Full in her presence cold Cleanthes lies,
And not one tear stands trembling in her eyes!
O let a sigh my hapless fate deplore!
Cleanthes now controuls thy love no more.

Dione. [Aside.
How shall my lids confine these rising woes?

Cleanthes.

O might I see her, ere death's finger close
These eyes forever! might her soften'd breast
Forgive my love with too much ardour prest!
Then I with peace could yield my latest breath.

Dione.

Shall I not calm the sable hour of death,
And show myself before him!—Ha! he dies.
See from his trembling lip the spirit flies! [Aside.
Stay yet a while. Dione stands confest.
He knows me not. He faints, he sinks to rest.

Cleanthes.

Tell her, since all my hopes in her were lost,
That death was welcome—— [Dies.

Dione.

What sudden gusts of grief my bosom rend!
A parent's curses o'er my head impend,
For disobedient vows; O wretched maid,
Those very vows Evander hath betray'd,

See, at thy feet, Cleanthes bath'd in blood!
For love of thee he trode this lonely wood;
Thou art the cruel authoreſs of his fate;
He falls by thine; thou by Evander's hate.
When ſhall my ſoul know reſt? Cleanthes ſlain
No longer ſighs and weeps for thy diſdain.
Thou ſtill art curſt with love. Bleed, virgin, bleed.
How ſhall a wretch from anxious life be freed!
My troubled brain with ſudden frenzy burns,
And ſhatter'd thought now this, now that way turns.
What do I ſee thus glittering on the plains?
Ha! the dread ſword yet warm with crimſon ſtains! [Takes up the dagger.

SCENE II.

DIONE, PARTHENIA.

Parthenia.

Sweet is the walk when night has cool'd the hour.
This path directs me to my ſylvan bower. [Aſide.

Dione.

Why is my ſoul with ſudden fear diſmay'd?
Why drops my trembling hand the pointed blade?
O ſtring my arm with force! [Aſide.

Parthenia.

——Methought a noiſe
Broke through the ſilent air, like human voice. [Aſide.

Dione.

One well-aim'd blow ſhall all my pangs remove,
Graſp firm the fatal ſteel, and ceaſe to love. [Aſide.

Parthenia.

Sure 'twas Alexis. Ha! a ſword diſplay'd!
The ſtreaming luſtre darts acroſs the ſhade. [Aſide.

Dione.

May Heaven new vigour to my ſoul impart,
And guide the deſperate weapon to my heart! [Aſide.

Parthenia.

May I the meditated death arreſt! [Holds Dione's hand.
Strike not, raſh ſhepherd; ſpare thy guiltleſs breaſt.
O give me ſtrength to ſtay the threaten'd harm,
And wrench the dagger from his lifted arm!

Dione.

What cruel hand with-holds the welcome blow?
In giving life, you but prolong my wo.
O may not thus th' expected ſtroke impend!
Unlooſe thy graſp, and let ſwift death deſcend.
But if yon murder thy red hands hath dy'd;
Here. Pierce me deep; let forth the vital tide.
[Dione quits the dagger.

Parthenia.

Wait not thy fate; yet this way turn thy eyes:
My virgin hand no purple murder dyes.
Turn then, Alexis; and Parthenia know,
'Tis ſhe protects thee from the fatal blow.

Dione.

Muſt the night-watches by my ſighs be told?
And muſt theſe eyes another morn behold
Through dazzling floods of tears? Ungenerous maid,
The friendly ſtroke is by thy hand delay'd;
Call it not mercy to prolong my breath;
'Tis but to torture me with lingering death.

Parthenia.

What moves thy hand to act this bloody part?
Whence are theſe gnawing pangs that tear thy heart?
Is that that thy friend that lies before thee ſlain?
Is it his wound that reeks upon the plain?
Is't Lycidas?

Dione.

——No. I the ſtranger found,
Ere chilly death his frozen tongue had bound.
He ſaid, "As at the roſy dawn of day,
He from the city took his vagrant way,
A murdering band pour'd on him from the wood,
Firſt ſeiz'd his gold, then bath'd their ſwords in blood."

Parthenia.

You, whoſe ambition labours to be great,
Think on the perils which on riches wait.
Safe are the ſhepherd's paths; when ſober even
Streaks with pale light the bending arch of heaven,
From danger free, through deſerts wild he hies,
The riſing ſmoke far o'er the mountain ſpies,
Which marks his diſtant cottage; on he fares,
For him no murderers lay their nightly ſnares;
They paſs him by, they turn their ſteps away;
Safe poverty was ne'er the villain's prey.
At home he lies ſecure in eaſy ſleep,
No bars his ivy-mantled cottage keep;
No thieves in dreams the fancy'd dagger hold,
And drag him to detect the buried gold;
Nor ſtarts he from his couch aghaſt and pale,
When the door murmurs with the hollow gale.
While he, whoſe iron coffers ruſt with wealth,
Harbours beneath his roof deceit and ſtealth;
Treachery with lurking pace frequents his walks,
And cloſe behind him horrid murder ſtalks.
'Tis tempting lucre makes the villain bold:
There lies a bleeding ſacrifice to gold.

Dione.

To live, is but to wake to daily cares,
And journey through a tedious vale of tears.
Had you not ruſh'd between, my life had flown;
And I, like him, no more had ſorrow known.

Parthenia.

When anguiſh in the gloomy boſom dwells,
The counſel of a friend the cloud diſpels.
Give thy breaſt vent, the ſecret grief impart,
And ſay what wo lies heavy at thy heart.
To ſave thy life, kind Heaven has ſuccour ſent,
The gods by me thy threaten'd fate prevent.

Dione.

No. To prevent, it is beyond thy power;
Thou only canſt defer the welcome hour.
When you the lifted dagger turn'd aſide,
Only one road to death thy force deny'd;
Still fate is in my reach. From mountains high,
Deep in whoſe ſhadow craggy ruins lie,
Can I not headlong fling this weight of wo,
And daſh out life againſt the flints below?
Are there not ſtreams, and lakes, and rivers wide,
Where my laſt breath may bubble on the tide?
No. Life ſhall never flatter me again,
Nor ſhall to-morrow bring new ſighs and pain.

Parthenia.

Can I this burden of thy soul relieve,
And calm thy grief?

Dione.

——If thou wilt comfort give,
Plight me thy word, and to that word be just;
When poor Alexis shall be laid in dust,
That pride no longer shall command thy mind,
That thou wilt spare the friend I leave behind.
I know his virtue worthy of thy breast.
Long in thy love may Lycidas be blest!

Parthenia.

That swain (who would my liberty controul,
To please some short-liv'd transport of his soul)
Shows, while his importuning flame he moves,
That 'tis not me, himself alone he loves.
O live, nor leave him by misfortune prest:
'Tis shameful to desert a friend distrest.

Dione.

Alas! a wretch like me no loss would prove,
Would kind Parthenia listen to his love.

Parthenia.

Why hides thy bosom this mysterious grief?
Ease thy o'erburden'd heart, and hope relief.

Dione.

What profits it to touch thy tender breast,
With wrongs, like mine, which ne'er can be redrest?
Let in my heart the fatal secret die,
Nor call up sorrow in another's eye!

SCENE III.

DIONE, PARTHENIA, LYCIDAS.

Lycidas.

If Laura right direct the darksome ways,
Along these paths the pensive shepherd strays.
[Aside.

Dione.

Let not a tear for me roll down thy cheek,
O would my throbbing sighs my heart-strings break!
Why was my breast the lifted stroke deny'd?
Must then again the deathful deed be try'd?
Yes. 'Tis resolv'd.
[Snatches the dagger from Parthenia.

Parthenia.

——Ah, hold; forbear, forbear!

Lycidas.

Methought distress with shrieks alarm'd my ear.

Parthenia.

Strike not. Ye gods, defend him from the wound!

Lycidas.

Yes. 'Tis Parthenia's voice, I know the sound.
Some sylvan ravisher would force the maid,
And Laura sent me to her virtue's aid.
Die, villain, die; and seek the shades below.
[Lycidas snatches the dagger from Dione, and stabs her.

Dione.

Whoe'er thou art, I bless thee for the blow.

Lycidas.

Since Heaven ordain'd this arm thy life should guard,
O hear my vows! be love the just reward.

Parthenia.

Rather let vengeance, with her swiftest speed,
O'ertake thy flight, and recompense the deed!
Why stays the thunder in the upper sky?
Gather, ye clouds; ye forky lightnings, fly:
On thee may all the wrath of Heaven descend,
Whose barbarous hand hath slain a faithful friend.
Behold Alexis!

Lycidas.

——Would that treacherous boy
Have fore'd thy virtue to his brutal joy?
What rous'd his passion to this bold advance?
Did e'er thy eyes confess one willing glance?
I know, the faithless youth his trust betray'd;
And well the dagger hath my wrongs repaid.

Dione [Raising herself on her arm.

Breaks not Evander's voice along the glade?
Ha! is it he who holds the reeking blade!
There needed not or poison, sword, or dart;
Thy faithless vows, alas! had broke my heart.
[Aside.

Parthenia.

O tremble, shepherd, for thy rash offence,
The sword is dy'd with murder'd innocence!
His gentle soul no brutal passion seiz'd,
Nor at my bosom was the dagger rais'd;
Self-murder was his aim; the youth I found
Whelm'd in despair, and stay'd the falling wound.

Dione.

Into what mischiefs is the lover led,
Who calls down vengeance on his perjur'd head!
O may he ne'er bewail this desperate deed,
And may, unknown, unwept, Dione bleed.
[Aside.

Lycidas.

What horrors on the guilty mind attend!
His conscience had reveng'd an injur'd friend,
Hadst thou not held the stroke. In death he sought
To lose the heart-consuming pain of thought.
Did not the smooth-tongu'd boy perfidious prove,
Plead his own passion, and betray my love?

Dione.

O let him ne'er this bleeding victim know;
Lest his rash transport, to revenge the blow,
Should in his dearer heart the dagger stain!
That wound would pierce my soul with double pain.
[Aside.

Parthenia.

How did his faithful lips (now pale and cold)
With moving eloquence thy griefs unfold!

Lycidas.

Was he thus faithful? thus, to friendship true?
Then I'm a wretch. All peace of mind, adieu!
If ebbing life yet beat within thy vein,
Alexis, speak; unclose those lids again.
[Flings himself on the ground near Dione.
See at thy feet the barbarous villain kneel!
'Tis Lycidas who grasps the bloody steel,
Thy once-lov'd friend.—Yet, ere I cease to live,
Canst thou a wretched penitent forgive?

Dione.

When low beneath the sable mould I rest,
May a sincerer friendship share thy breast!
Why are those heaving groans? ah! cease to weep!)
May my lost name in dark oblivion sleep;

Let this ſad tale no ſpeaking ſtone declare,
From future eyes to draw a pitying tear.
Let o'er my grave the levelling ploughſhare paſs,
Mark not the ſpot; forget that e'er I was.
Then may'ſt thou with Parthenia's love be bleſt,
And not one thought on me thy joys moleſt!
My ſwimming eyes are overpow'rd with light,
And darkening ſhadows fleet before my ſight:
May'ſt thou be happy! ah! my ſoul is free. [Dies.

Lycidas.

O cruel ſhepherdeſs, for love of thee [To Parthenia.
This fatal deed was done.

SCENE THE LAST.

LYCIDAS, PARTHENIA, LAURA.

Laura.

——Alexis ſlain!

Lycidas.

Yes. 'Twas I did it. See this crimſon ſtain!
My hands with blood of innocence are dy'd.
O may the moon her ſilver beauty hide
In rolling clouds! my ſoul abhors the light;
Shade, ſhade the murderer in eternal night!

Laura.

No rival ſhepherd is before thee laid;
There bled the chaſteſt, the ſincereſt maid
That ever ſigh'd for love. On her pale face,
Cannot thy weeping eyes the feature trace
Of thy once dear Dione? With wan care
Sunk are thoſe eyes, and livid with deſpair!

Lycidas.

Dione!

Laura.

——There pure conſtancy lies dead!

Lycidas.

May Heaven ſhower vengeance on this perjur'd head!
As the dry branch that withers on the ground,
So, blaſted be the hand that gave the wound!
Off; hold me not. This heart deſerves the ſtroke;
'Tis black with treachery. Yes: the vows are broke. [Stabs himſelf.
Which I ſo often ſwore. Vain world, adieu!
Though I was falſe in life, in death I'm true.
[Dies.

Laura.

To-morrow ſhall the funeral rites be paid,
And theſe love-victims in one grave be laid.

Parthenia.

There ſhall the yew her ſable branches ſpread,
And mournful cypreſs rear her fringed head.

Laura

From thence ſhall thyme and myrtle ſend perfume,
And laurel ever-green o'erſhade the tomb.

Parthenia.

Come, Laura, let us leave this horrid wood,
Where ſtreams the purple graſs with lovers blood;
Come to my bower. And, as we ſorrowing go,
Let poor Dione's ſtory feed my woe
With heart-relieving tears.——

Laura. [Pointing to Dione.

——Unhappy maid!
Hadſt thou a parent's juſt command obey'd,
Thou yet hadſt liv'd—But who ſhall Love adviſe?
Love ſcorns command, and breaks all other ties.
Henceforth, ye ſwains, be true to vows profeſt;
For certain vengeance ſtrikes the perjur'd breaſt.

THE

POETICAL WORKS

OF

THOMAS TICKELL, Esq.

Containing

THE PROSPECT OF PEACE,
THE ROYAL PROGRESS,
OXFORD,
LETTER TO AVIGNON,
KENSINGTON GARDENS,

ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF ADDISON,
COLIN AND LUCY,
ODES,
EPISTLES,
TRANSLATIONS,

&c. &c. &c.

To which is prefixed

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR.

If e'er from me thy lov'd memorial part,
May ſhame afflict this alienated heart;
Of thee forgetful if I form a ſong,
My lyre be broken, and untun'd my tongue,
My grief be doubled, from thy image free,
And mirth a torment, unchaſtis'd by thee.

ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF ADDISON.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED BY MUNDELL AND SON, ROYAL BANK CLOSE.

Anno 1794.

THE LIFE OF TICKELL.

Of Thomas Tickell, it is to be regretted, that the particulars which have been tranſmitted by his contemporaries, are inſufficient to gratify the curioſity which his reputation muſt excite, and diſproportionate to his rank in poetry and literature.

He was the ſon of the Rev. Richard Tickell, who poſſeſſed a conſiderable living in Cumberland; and was born at Bridekirk, near Carliſle, in 1686.

He was educated in his native country; and in April 1701, he became a member of Queen's College in Oxford.

In 1707, he expreſſed his gratitude to the Univerſity, in a poem, intituled Oxford, addreſſed to Lord Viſcount Lonſdale.

> Which thus my thanks to much-lov'd Oxford pays,
> In no ungrateful, though unartful lays.

In 1708, he took the degree of Maſter of Arts; and two years afterwards he was choſen Fellow. As he had not complied with the ſtatutes which required him to be in orders before he could be choſen to a Fellowſhip, he obtained a diſpenſation from the Crown.

At the univerſity he acquired the character of excelling in claſſical learning, and in academical exerciſes; and was diſtinguiſhed for his ability in verſification.

He entered early into life, and became known to Addiſon and Steele, and other men of high character for talents and literature.

He is ſaid to have firſt gained the notice of Addiſon, by his verſes in praiſe of Roſamond; in which he cenſures the Italian opera as a vehicle of melodious abſurdity, and compares his ſoftneſs to Corelli, and his ſtrength to Virgil.

> The opera firſt Italian maſters taught,
> Enrich'd with ſongs, but innocent of thought;
> Britannia's learned theatre diſdains
> Melodious trifles, and enervate ſtrains;
> And bluſhes, on her injur'd ſtage to ſee
> Nonſenſe well tun'd, and ſweet ſtupidity.
> No charms are wanting to thy artful ſong,
> Soft as Corelli, and as Virgil ſtrong.

The cenſure of the Italian opera is well founded and ſtrong; and the panegyric on Roſamond does not very much exaggerate its merits, except perhaps, in the concluſion.

To thoſe verſes, Dr. Johnſon obſerves, it would not have been juſt to deny regard, for they contain ſome of the moſt elegant encomiaſtic ſtrains; and among the innumerable poems of the ſame kind, it will be hard to find one with which they need to fear a compariſon.

It may deſerve obſervation, that when Pope wrote long afterwards in praiſe of Addiſon, he has copied, at leaſt has reſembled, Tickell.

> Let joy ſalute fair Roſamonda's ſhade,
> And wreaths of myrtle crown the lovely maid.

While now perhaps with Dido's ghoſt ſhe roves,
And hears and tells the ſtory of their loves.
Alike they mourn, alike they bleſs their fate,
Since love which made them wretched made them great.
Nor longer that relentleſs doom bemoan,
Which gain'd a Virgil, and an Addiſon.——Tickell.

When future ages with delight ſhall ſee,
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, looks agree;
Or in fair ſeries laurell'd bards be ſhown,
A Virgil there, and here an Addiſon.——Pope.

When Steele began the Spectator, with the aſſiſtance of Addiſon and the other wits, Tickell is believed to have contributed frequently to it; but his papers have not been aſcertained. Thoſe marked with the letter R, are all Steele's, as are many of thoſe marked with T. It has been ſaid that the latter mark was ſometimes uſed by Tickell. There are more papers marked with R and T, than with any other ſignature; of theſe, it is probable, Tickell wrote many, as he was very much with Steele, as well as with Addiſon, and might be often ſolicited, as Steele was often in a hurry, to eke out the ſcanty materials which he had time to provide. He wrote a copy of Verſes to the ſuppoſed author of the Spectator, inſerted in No. 632, in which a high praiſe is beſtowed on Steele's papers in the "Tatler," againſt ſharpers, which produced moſt beneficial effects.

From felon gameſters the raw ſquire is free,
And Britain owes her reſcued oaks to thee.

He was alſo a contributor to the Guardian. All the papers on Paſtoral Poetry, except one by Pope, in his own praiſe, are written by Tickell.

When the Tory Miniſtry were negociating with France, before the concluſion of the peace of Utrecht, he publiſhed The Proſpect of Peace, a poem, addreſſed to Dr. Robinſon, Biſhop of Briſtol, the Lord Privy-Seal, one of the negociators, the tendency of which was to reclaim the nation from the pride of conqueſt, to the pleaſures of tranquillity.

To the Whigs, who diſapproved of the peace then negociating, the tendency of Tickell's poem could not be pleaſing. Addiſon, however, in the candor of liberal criticiſm, overlooking the politics, beſtowed in the "Spectator" very great praiſe on the poetry.

It was read at that time with ſo much eagerneſs, that ſix editions were ſold. The quick ſale of a compoſition on a temporary ſubject is no teſt of its intrinſic merit; the deſpicable bigotry of Sacheverell had a much more extenſive ſale, than Tickell's poem, which deſerved a favourable reception, though Dr. Johnſon "found it a piece to be approved rather than admired."

On the appearance of Cato, when ſo many made offerings of verſes to the author, Tickell, who loved and venerated Addiſon as a father, contributed a copy of verſes, ſuperior, perhaps, to any written on the ſubject, except the prologue by Pope, and the verſes by Jeffries.

Tickell had been a ſtrenuous ſupporter of the Hanover ſucceſſion, and other meaſures, reſulting from principles of freedom; and on the acceſſion and arrival of King George, he produced a poem, intituled the Royal Progreſs, which was inſerted and praiſed in "the Spectator," No. 620. The pleaſing emotions excited in a benevolent king, by the view of national induſtry and proſperity, conſtitute the moſt beautiful and intereſting parts of the poem.

When the friends of the reigning family were apprehenſive of deſigns to its prejudice, he wrote An Epiſtle from a Lady in England to a Gentleman at Avignon, againſt the Pretender and his abettors, which, Dr. Johnſon ſays, "ſtands high among party poems; it expreſſes contempt without coarſeneſs, and ſuperiority without inſolence. It had the ſucceſs which it deſerved, being five times printed."

He was now patroniſed at Court; and when Addiſon went into Ireland as Secretary to Lord Sunderland, he took him thither, and employed him in public buſineſs.

At the time of the publication of the firſt volume of Pope's "Homer," he publiſhed the firſt Book of the Iliad, as tranſlated by himſelf, in apparent oppoſition to Pope's tranſlation, with an elegant dedication, to the memory of Halifax.

To apologiſe for preſenting his verſion to the public at ſuch a juncture, this advertiſement was prefixed: "I muſt inform the reader, that when I began this firſt book, I had ſome thoughts of tranſlating the whole Iliad; but I had the pleaſure of being diverted from that deſign, by finding the work was fallen into a much abler hand; I would not, therefore, be thought to have any other view in publiſhing this ſmall ſpecimen of Homer's Iliad, than to beſpeak, if poſſible, the favour of the public to a tranſlation of Homer's Odyſſey, wherein I have already made ſome progreſs."

Addiſon declared that the verſions were both good, but that Tickell's was the beſt that ever was made; and with Addiſon, the wits, his adherents and followers, concurred in opinion.

Pope did not long think Addiſon an impartial judge; for he conſidered him as the writer of Tickell's verſion, and appealed to the people as his proper judges, "and if they are not inclined to condemn me," ſays he, "I am in little care about the highfliers at Button's."

The reaſons for his ſuſpicion have been tranſcribed by Dr. Johnſon, from Spence's MS. Collections.

"There had been a coldneſs (ſaid Mr. Pope,) between Mr. Addiſon and me for ſome time; and we had not been in company together for a good while, any where but at Button's Coffeehouſe, where I uſed to ſee him almoſt every day.—On his meeting me there one day in particular, he took me aſide; and ſaid he would be glad to dine with me at ſuch a tavern, if I ſtaid till thoſe people were gone (Budgell and Philips). He went accordingly; and, after dinner, Mr. Addiſon ſaid, that he had wanted for ſome time to talk with me; that his friend Tickell had formerly, whilſt at Oxford, tranſlated the firſt Book of the Iliad; that he deſigned to print it; and had deſired him to look it over; that he muſt therefore beg that I would not deſire him to look over my firſt book; becauſe, if he did, it would have the air of double dealing. I aſſured him, that I did not at all take it ill of Mr. Tickell, that he was going to publiſh his tranſlation; that he certainly had as much right to tranſlate any author as myſelf; and that publiſhing both was entering on a fair ſtage. I then added, that I would not deſire him to look over my firſt book of the Iliad, becauſe he had looked over Mr. Tickell's; but could wiſh to have the benefit of his obſervations on my ſecond, which I had then finiſhed, and which Mr. Tickell had not touched upon. Accordingly, I ſent him the ſecond book the next morning; and, Mr. Addiſon, a few days after, returned it, with very high commendations. Soon after, it was generally known that Mr. Tickell was publiſhing the firſt Book of the Iliad, I met Dr. Young in the ſtreet; and, upon our falling into that ſubject, the Doctor expreſſed a great deal of ſurpriſe at Tickell's having had ſuch a tranſlation ſo long by him. He ſaid, that it was inconceivable to him; and that there muſt be ſome miſtake in the matter; that each uſed to communicate to each other whatever verſes they wrote, even to the leaſt things; that Tickell could not be buſied in ſo long a work there, without his knowing ſomething of the matter; and that he had never heard a ſingle word on it, till on this occaſion. This ſurpriſe of Dr. Young, together with what Steele has ſaid againſt Tickell, in relation to this affair, make it highly probable, that there was ſome underhand dealing in that buſineſs; and indeed, Tickell himſelf, who is a very fair, worthy man, has ſince, in a manner, as good as owned it to me. When it was introduced into a converſation between Mr. Tickell and Mr. Pope, by a third perſon, Tickell did not deny it; which, conſidering his honour and zeal for his departed friend, was the ſame as owning it."

Upon theſe ſuſpicions, Pope, always in his "Art of Sinking," quotes this verſion as the work of Addiſon; though the circumſtances of the publication, not only do not prove that Addiſon was the tranſlator, but do not even render probable the charge of meanneſs and diſingenuity alleged by Pope againſt him; the opinions of Young and Steele are no proof.

Addiſon had a very great affection for Tickell, and might have reviſed his verſion, and approved of the publication, to confer a pecuniary obligation on him, by promoting a ſubſcription for his Odyſſey. But, it is evident, that he had no intention to oppoſe Pope; for, at the time of the appearance of Tickell's verſion, oppoſition to Pope could not do him any material injury. His ſubſcription was full, and his contract with his bookſeller completely performed. Had Addiſon wiſhed to obſtruct Pope's tranſlation, the time for effecting his purpoſe, would have been when the ſubſcription was beginning. He might then have promoted a ſubſcription for Tickell, which would have interfered with Pope's. The influence of Addiſon with the Whigs, was fully equal to that of Swift with the Tories. With thoſe, who were of neither party, his recommendation would have had more weight than Swift's, becauſe he was in greater eſtimation, for elegant literature in general, and particularly for claſſical knowledge.

The circumſtance of the time of publication, which provoked the irritable diſpoſition of Pope, who ſuppoſed his character and intereſt ſo much concerned, is ſufficiently explained by the advertiſement above quoted. This advertiſement was induſtriouſly ſuppreſſed, in Pope's publication on the ſubject. That Addiſon had any intention of publiſhing a verſion of the Iliad, there is no evidence even probable. Had he been actuated by jealouſy, envy, or malevolence, it is not probable he would have ſpoke ſo highly of Pope's Iliad as he did in "The Freeholder."

"The tranſlation of the firſt book of the Iliad," ſays Mr. Nichols, "which has been aſcribed to Tickell, was ſaid to be in reality the production of Addiſon, to prejudice that which Pope had undertaken; a notion certainly without foundation. Mr. Watts the printer, aſſured a friend of mine, that the tranſlation of the firſt book of the Iliad was in Tickell's hand-writing, but much corrected and interlined by Addiſon.

To compare the two tranſlations would be tedious; the ſuperiority is univerſally allowed to Pope. Tickell has, perhaps, more of the ſimple majeſty of Homer; but his verſion is inferior to that of Pope, in force, animation, elegance, and harmony.

In 1717, when Addiſon was appointed Secretary of State, he made Tickell under-ſecretary. When Addiſon's ill health obliged him to reſign, he ſo effectually recommended Tickell to the patronage of Craggs, his ſucceſſor, that he was continued in place till that gentleman's death.

Addiſon's appointment of Tickell to be his under-ſecretary, is ſaid to have been diſpleaſing, on ſome account, to Steele, who warmly oppoſed it; and his oppoſition having been reported to Tickell, produced a coldneſs between them, which might be aggravated by the controverſy between Addiſon and Steele, on the Peerage bill.

His friendſhip with Addiſon ſeems to have continued without abatement; for when that great man died, he left him the charge of publiſhing his works, which, on his death-bed, he had dedicated to Craggs.

To the works of Addiſon, which appeared ſoon after his death, in 4 vols. 4to, he prefixed an account of his life, and an elegy on his death, addreſſed to the Earl of Warwick, his ſon-in-law, replete with genuine tenderneſs. It is the effuſion of a refined mind, lamenting the death of a friend of the higheſt intellectual and moral excellence; whoſe value it completely comprehended, and whoſe loſs it poignantly felt.

In his life of Addiſon he charged Steele with aſſuming the credit of Addiſon's papers in the "Spectator," an imputation from which Steele vindicated himſelf in the dedication of "the Drummer," to Congreve.

It is a remarkable circumſtance, that Craggs, to whom Addiſon had dedicated his works, died before they were publiſhed; and that Lord Warwick, to whom the verſes on Addiſon were dedicated, died likewiſe before their publication.

Tickell's intereſt with the great did not expire with his friend. His merit enabled him to retain and improve the footing on which he had been placed by Addiſon. In 1725, he was appointed ſecretary to the Lord Juſtices of Ireland, a place of great honour, truſt, and emolument, in which he continued till his death, which happened at Bath, April 23, 1740, in the 54th year of his age.

He was married, and had children; the eldeſt of whom was the father of Richard Tickell, Eſq. one of the Commiſſioners of the Stamp-office, and author of "The Wreath of Faſhion," a poem; "Anticipation of the Debates of the Houſe of Commons," 1778; "The Carnival of Venice," an opera; and other ingenious performances.

He died at Hampton Court, Nov. 4. 1793, univerſally beloved and lamented, leaving three children by his wife, Miſs Linley, the ſiſter of the lovely Mrs. Sheridan, wife of the celebrated Richard Brinſley Sheridan, Eſq. who died in 1787.

His poems were printed in the ſecond volume of "The Minor Poets," 1749, and have been frequently reprinted.

Tickell is ſaid to have been a man of moſt pleaſing manners, and of unqueſtioned honour and integrity. His converſation was gay and lively; he was a very agreeable companion, at leaſt a temperate lover of wine and conviviality, and in domeſtic relations without cenſure. His writings diſcover a good underſtanding, an extenſive knowledge of claſſical literature, a refined taſte, and a feeling heart.

As a poet, he is characteriſed by elegance of diction, correctneſs of judgment, tenderneſs of ſentiment, opulence of alluſion, and harmony of numbers.

His verſification exceeds Addiſon's, and is inferior to few of the Engliſh poets, except Dryden and Pope.

Moſt of his pieces, particularly the Proſpect of Peace; the Royal Progreſs; the Letter to Avignon; Oxford; Kenſington Gardens; Epiſtle to a Lady before Marriage, and the Elegy on the death of Addiſon, are diſtinguiſhed by a judicious combination of ornament and ſimplicity; a happy mixture of ſentiment and deſcription, and a rare union of the beauties of ſtyle, and the elegancies of verſification, with the niceties of method, connection, and arrangement.

Of Tickell, it has been ſaid by Goldſmith, that through all his poetry, there is a ſtrain of Ballad-thinking to be found: The remark is juſt, and to that ſtrain he is not a little indebted for the reception he has met with; whether he had it from reading, or from nature, cannot now be known, as no memoirs of his life are ſatisfactory enough to inform us of his particular ſtudies. His beautiful ballad of Colin and Lucy, probably aſſumed a tincture of tenderneſs and ſimplicity, from his taſte for our obſcurer writers; a taſte which his friend Addiſon undoubtedly poſſeſſed in a degree ſuperior to any of his contemporaries, except Rowe, as appears by his elegant critique on "Chevy Chace," and various ſcattered notices of a congenial nature in his periodical papers.

"In the few things that Tickell wrote," ſays Dr. Warton, "there appear to be a peculiar terſeneſs and neatneſs. Highly elegant and poliſhed are his Verſes on Addiſon's death."

"The Elegy on Addiſon," ſays Dr. Johnſon, "could owe none of its beauties to the aſſiſtance which might be ſuſpected to have ſtrengthened or embelliſhed his earlier compoſitions; but neither he nor Addiſon ever produced nobler lines than are contained in the third and fourth paragraphs; nor is a more ſublime or more elegant funeral poem to be found in the whole compaſs of Engliſh literature.

"Of his Royal Progreſs, it is juſt to ſay, that it is neither high nor low. Of his Kenſington Gardens, the verſification is ſmooth and elegant, but the fiction unſkilfully compounded of Grecian deities and Gothic fairies. Neither ſpecies of theſe exploded beings could have done much; and when they are brought together, they only make each other contemptible.

"To Tickell, however, cannot be denied a high place among the minor poets; nor ſhould it be forgotten that he was one of the contributors to the Spectator."

If by the term minor poet, the quantity of his poetry is meant, he is not improperly ſo called; but if the quality is thereby underſtood, it is a diſparagement. If he cannot be placed in the firſt rank of poets, he has at leaſt an unexceptionable claim to the ſecond.

POEMS.

On Queen Caroline's rebuilding the Lodgings of the Black Prince, and Henry V. at Queen's College, Oxford.

WHERE bold and graceful ſoars, ſecure of fame,
The pile, now worthy great Philippa's name,
Mark that old ruin, Gothic and uncouth, [youth;
Where the Black Edward paſs'd his beardleſs
And the Fifth Henry, for his firſt renown,
Out-ſtripp'd each rival in a ſtudent's gown.
In that coarſe age were princes fond to dwell
With meagre monks, and haunt the ſilent cell:
Sent from the monarch's to the muſe's court,
Their meals were frugal, and their ſleeps were ſhort;
To couch at curfeu-time they thought no ſcorn,
And froze at matins every winter morn;
They read, an early book, the ſtarry frame,
And liſp'd each conſtellation by its name;
Art after art ſtill dawning to their view,
And their mind opening as their ſtature grew.
Yet, whoſe ripe manhood ſpread our fame ſo far,
Sages in peace, and demi-gods in war!
Who, ſtern in fight, made echoing Creſſi ring,
And, mild in conqueſt, ſerv'd his captive king!
Who gain'd, at Agincourt, the victor's bays;
Nor took himſelf, but gave good heaven, the praiſe!
Thy nurſelings, ancient dome! to virtue form'd;
To mercy liſtening, whilſt in fields they ſtorm'd;
Fierce to the fierce; and warm th' oppreſt to ſave;
Through life rever'd, and worſhip'd in the grave!
In tenfold pride the mouldering roofs ſhall ſhine,
The ſtately work of bounteous Caroline;
And bleſt Philippa, with unenvious eyes,
From heaven behold her rival's fabric riſe.
If ſtill, bright ſaint, this ſpot deſerves thy care,
Incline thee to th' ambitious muſe's prayer:
O! could'ſt thou win young William's bloom to grace
His mother's walls, and fill thy Edward's place,
How would that genius, whoſe propitious wings
Have here twice hover'd o'er the ſons of kings,
Deſcend triumphant to his ancient ſeat,
And take in charge a third Plantagenet!

TO THE

SUPPOSED AUTHOR OF THE SPECTATOR.

In courts licentious, and a ſhameleſs ſtage,
How long the war ſhall wit with virtue wage?
Inchanted by this proſtituted fair,
Our youth run headlong in the fatal ſnare;
In height of rapture claſp unheeded pains,
And ſuck pollution through their tingling veins?
Thy ſpotleſs thoughts unſhock'd the prieſt may hear;
And the pure veſtal in her boſom wear.
To conſcious bluſhes and diminiſh'd pride, [hide;
Thy glaſs betrays what treacherous love would
Nor harſh thy precepts, but infus'd by ſtealth,
Pleas'd while they cure, and cheat us into health.
Thy works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,
And with his tailor ſhare the fopling's heart:
Laſh'd in thy ſatire, the penurious cit
Laughs at himſelf, and finds no harm in wit:
From felon gameſters the raw 'ſquire is free,
And Britain owes her reſcued oaks to thee.
His miſs the frolic viſcount dreads to toaſt,
Or his third cure the ſhallow templar boaſt;
And the raſh fool, who ſcorn'd the beaten road,
Dares quake at thunder, and confeſs his God.
The brainleſs ſtripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the ſtiff college and pedantic gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb, and thrice a week
Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek.
A ſauntering tribe! ſuch born to wide eſtates,
With yea and no in ſenates hold debates:
At length deſpis'd each to his fields retires,
Firſt with the dogs, and king amidſt the 'ſquires;
From pert to ſtupid, ſinks ſupinely down,
In youth a coxcomb, and in age a clown.
Such reader's ſcorn'd, thou wing'ſt thy daring flight,
Above the ſtare, and tread'ſt the fields of light;
Fame, heaven, and hell, are thy exalted theme,
And viſions ſuch as Jove himſelf might dream;
Man ſunk to ſlavery, though to glory born, [ſcorn.
Heaven's pride when upright, and deprav'd his
Such hints alone could Britiſh Virgil lend,
And thou alone deſerve from ſuch a friend;
A debt ſo borrow'd is illuſtrious ſhame,
And fame, when ſhar'd with him, is double fame.
So, fluſh'd with ſweets by beauty's queen beſtow'd,
With more than mortal charms Æneas glow'd:
Such generous ſtrifes Eugene and Marlborough try,
And as in glory, ſo in friendſhip vie.
Permit theſe lines by thee to live—nor blame
A muſe that pants and languiſhes for fame;
That fears to ſink when humbler themes ſhe ſings,
Loſt in the maſs of mean forgotten things:

Receiv'd by thee, I propheſy, my rhymes,
The praiſe of virgins in ſucceeding times: [ſee,
Mix'd with thy works, their life no bounds ſhall
But ſtand protected, as inſpir'd, by thee. [riſe,
So ſome weak ſhoot, which elſe would poorly
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the ſkies;
Through the new pupil ſoftering juices flow,
Thruſt forth the gems, and give the flowers to blow
Aloft; immortal reigns the plant unknown,
With borrow'd life, and vigour not his own.

A POEM,

To his Excellency the Lord Privy Seal, on the Proſpect of Peace.

" ——— Sacerdos
" Fronde ſuper Mitram, et felici comptus Oliva."——VIRG.

TO THE LORD PRIVY SEAL.

CONTENDING kings, and fields of death, too long
Have been the ſubject of the Britiſh ſong.
Who hath not read of fam'd Ramillia's plain,
Bavaria's fall, and Danube choak'd with ſlain!
Exhauſted themes! a gentler note I raiſe,
And ſing returning peace in ſofter lays.
Their fury quell'd, and martial rage allay'd,
I wait our heroes in the ſylvan ſhade:
Diſbanding hoſts are imag'd to my mind,
And warring powers in friendly leagues combin'd,
While eaſe and pleaſure make the nations ſmile,
And heaven and Anna bleſs Britannia's iſle.

Well ſends our queen her mitred Briſtol forth,
For early counſels fam'd, and long-try'd worth;
Who, thirty rolling years, had oft withheld
The Swede and Saxon from the duſty field;
Completely form'd to heal the Chriſtian wounds,
To name the kings, and give each kingdom bounds;
The face of ravag'd nature to repair,
By leagues to ſoften earth, and heaven by prayer,
To gain by love, where rage and ſlaughter fail,
And make the croſier o'er the ſword prevail.

So when great Moſes, with Jehovah's wand,
Had ſcatter'd plagues o'er ſtubborn Pharaoh's land,
Now ſpread an hoſt of locuſts round the ſhore,
Now turn'd Nile's fattening ſtreams to putrid gore;
Plenty and gladneſs mark'd the prieſt of God,
And ſudden almonds ſhot from Aaron's rod.
O thou, from whom theſe bounteous bleſſings flow,
To whom, as chief, the hopes of peace we owe,
(For next to thee, the man whom kings contend
To ſtyle companion, and to make their friend,
Great Stafford, rich in every courtly grace,
With joyful pride accepts the ſecond place)
From Britain's iſle, and Iſis' ſacred ſpring,
One hour, oh, liſten while the muſes ſing!
Though miniſters of mighty monarchs wait,
With beating hearts to learn their maſters fate,
One hour forbear to ſpeak thy queen's commands,
Nor think the world, thy charge, neglected ſtands;
The bleſſful proſpects, in my verſe diſplay'd,
May lure the ſtubborn, the deceiv'd perſuade:
Ev'n thou to peace ſhalt ſpeedier urge the way,
And more be haſten'd by this ſhort delay.

ON THE PROSPECT OF PEACE.

THE haughty Gaul, in ten campaigns o'erthrown,
Now ceas'd to think the weſtern world his own.
Oft had he mourn'd his boaſting leaders bound,
And his proud bulwarks ſmoking on the ground:
In vain with powers renew'd he fill'd the plain,
Made timorous vows, and brib'd the ſaints in vain;
As oft his legions did the fight decline,
Lurk'd in the trench, and ſkulk'd behind the line.
Before his eyes the fancied javelin gleams,
At feaſts he ſtarts, and ſeems dethron'd in dreams;
On glory paſt reflects with ſecret pain,
On mines exhauſted, and on millions ſlain.

To Britain's queen the ſcepter'd ſuppliant bends,
To her his crowns and infant race commends,
Who grieves her fame with Chriſtian blood to buy,
Nor aſks for glory at a price ſo high.
At her decree, the war ſuſpended ſtands,
And Britain's heroes hold their lifted hands;
Their open brows no threatening frowns diſguiſe,
But gentler paſſions ſparkle in their eyes.
The Gauls, who never in their courts could find
Such temper'd fire with manly beauty join'd,
Doubt if they're thoſe, whom dreadful to the view
In forms ſo fierce their fearful fancies drew;
At whoſe dire names ten thouſand widows preſt
Their helpleſs orphans clinging to the breaſt.
In ſilent rapture each his foe ſurveys;
They vow firm friendſhip, and give mutual praiſe.
Brave minds, howe'er at war, are ſecret friends;
Their generous diſcord with the battle ends;
In peace they wonder whence diſſenſion roſe,
And aſk how ſouls ſo like could e'er be foes.

Methinks I hear more friendly ſhouts rebound,
And ſocial clarions mix their ſprightly ſound.
The Britiſh flags are furl'd, her troops diſband,
And ſcatter'd armies ſeek their native land.
The hardy veteran, proud of many a ſcar,
The manly charms and honours of the war,
Who hop'd to ſhare his friends illuſtrious doom,
And in the battle find a ſoldier's tomb,
Leans on his ſpear to take his farewell view,
And, ſighing, bids the glorious camp adieu.

Ye generous fair, receive the brave with ſmiles,
O'erpay their ſleepleſs nights, and crown their toils;
Soft beauty is the gallant ſoldier's due,
For you they conquer, and they bleed for you.
In vain proud Gaul with boaſtful Spain conſpires,
When Engliſh valour Engliſh beauty fires;
The nations dread your eyes, and kings deſpair
Of chiefs ſo brave, till they have nymphs ſo fair.

See the fond wife, in tears of tranſport drown'd,
Hugs her rough lord, and weeps o'er every wound,
Hangs on the lips that fields of blood relate,
And ſmiles, or trembles, at his various fate.
Near the full bowl he draws the fancy'd line,
And marks feign'd trenches in the flowing wine,
Then ſets th' inveſted fort before her eyes,
And mines, that whirl'd battalions to the ſkies:
His little liſtening progeny turn pale,
And beg again to hear the dreadful tale.

Such dire atchievements ſings the bard, that tells
Of palfrey'd dames, bold knights, and magic ſpells,

Where whole brigades one champion's arms o'erthrow,
And cleave a giant at a random blow,
Slay paynims vile, that force the fair, and tame
The goblin's fury, and the dragon's flame.
Our eager youth to diſtant nations run,
To viſit fields, their valiant fathers won; [trace,
From Flandria's ſhore their country's fame they
Till far Germania ſhows her blaſted face.
Th' exulting Briton aſks his mournful guide,
Where his hard fate the loſt Bavaria try'd;
Where Stepney grav'd the ſtone to Anna's fame,
He points to Blenheim, once a vulgar name;
Here fled the houſehold, there did Tallard yield,
Here Marlborough turn'd the fortune of the field,
On thoſe ſteep banks, near Danube's raging flood:
The Gauls thrice ſtarted back, and trembling ſtood:
When, Churchill's arm perceiv'd, they ſtood not long,
But plung'd amidſt the waves, a deſperate throng,
Crowds whelm'd on crowds daſh'd wide the watery bed,
And drove the current to its diſtant head.
As when by Raphael's, or by Kneller's hands
A warlike courſer on the canvas ſtands,
Such as on Landen bleeding Ormond bore,
Or ſet young Ammon on the Granic ſhore;
If chance a generous ſteed the work behold,
He ſnorts, he neighs, he champs the foamy gold:
So, Hocſtet ſeen, tumultuous paſſions roll,
And hints of glory fire the Briton's ſoul,
In fancy'd fights he ſees the troops engage,
And all the tempeſt of the battle rage. [bright,
Charm me, ye powers, with ſcenes leſs nobly
Far humbler thoughts th' inglorious muſe delight,
Content to ſee the honours of the field
By ploughſhares levell'd, or in flowers conceal'd.
O'er ſhatter'd walls may creeping ivy twine,
And graſs luxuriant clothe the harmleſs mine.
Tame flocks aſcend the breach without a wound,
Or crop the baſtion, now a fruitful ground;
While ſhepherds ſleep, along the rampard laid,
Or pipe beneath the formidable ſhade.
Who was the man? Oblivion blaſt his name,
Torn out, and blotted from the liſt of fame!
Who, fond of lawleſs rule, and proudly brave,
Firſt ſunk the filial ſubject to a ſlave,
His neighbour's realms by frauds unkingly gain'd,
In guiltleſs blood the ſacred ermine ſtain'd, [heart,
Laid ſchemes for death, to ſlaughter turn'd his
And fitted murder to the rules of art.
Ah, curſt ambition! to thy lures we owe
All the great ills that mortals bear below.
Curſt by the hind, when to the ſpoil he yields
His year's whole ſweat, and vainly ripen'd fields;
Curſt by the maid, torn from her lover's ſide,
When left a widow, though not yet a bride;
By mothers curſt, when floods of tears they ſhed,
And ſcatter uſeleſs roſes on the dead.
Oh, ſacred Briſtol! then, what dangers prove
The arts, thou ſmil'ſt on with paternal love?
Then, mix'd with rubbiſh by the brutal foes,
In vain the marble breathes, the canvas glows;
To ſhades obſcure the glittering ſword purſues
The gentle poet, and defenceleſs muſe.

A voice like thine, alone, might then aſſuage
The warrior's fury, and controul his rage;
To hear thee ſpeak, might the fierce Vandal ſtand,
And fling the brandiſh'd ſabre from his hand.
Far hence be driven to Scythia's ſtormy ſhore
The drum's harſh muſic, and the cannon's roar;
Let grim Bellona haunt the lawleſs plain,
Where Tartar clans and grizly Coſſacks reign;
Let the ſteel'd Turk be deaf to matrons cries,
See virgins raviſh'd with relentleſs eyes,
To death gray heads and ſmiling infants doom,
Nor ſpare the promiſe of the pregnant womb,
O'er waſted kingdoms ſpread his wide command,
The ſavage lord of an unpeopled land.
Her guiltleſs glory juſt Britannia draws
From pure religion, and impartial laws,
To Europe's wounds a mother's aid ſhe brings,
And holds in equal ſcales the rival kings:
Her generous ſons in choiceſt gifts abound,
Alike in arms, alike in arts renown'd.
As when ſweet Venus (ſo the fable ſings)
Awak'd by Nereids, from the ocean ſprings,
With ſmiles ſhe ſees the threatening billows riſe,
Spread ſmooth the ſurge, and clears the louring ſkies.
Light, o'er the deep, with fluttering Cupids crown'd,
The pearly couch and ſilver turtles bound;
Her treſſes ſhed ambroſial odours round.
Amidſt the world of waves ſo ſtands ſerene
Britannia's iſle, the ocean's ſtately queen;
In vain the nations have conſpir'd her fall,
Her trench the ſea, and fleets her floating wall:
Defenceleſs barks, her powerful navy near,
Have only waves and hurricanes to fear.
What bold invader, or what land oppreſt,
Hath not her anger quell'd, her aid redreſt!
Say, where have e'er her union-croſſes ſail'd,
But much her arms, her juſtice more prevail'd!
Her labours are, to plead th' Almighty's cauſe,
Her pride, to teach th' untam'd barbarian laws:
Who conquers wins by brutal ſtrength the prize;
But 'tis a godlike work to civilize.
Have we forgot how from great Ruſſia's throne
The king, whoſe power half Europe's regions own,
Whoſe ſceptre waving, with one ſhout ruſh forth
In ſwarms the harneſs'd millions of the north,
Through realms of ice purſued his tedious way
To court our friendſhip, and our fame ſurvey!
Hence the rich prize of uſeful arts he bore,
And round his empire ſpread the learned ſtore:
(T' adorn old realms is more than new to raiſe,
His country's parent is a monarch's praiſe.)
His bands now march in juſt array to war,
And Caſpian gulfs unuſual navies bear;
With Runick lays Smolenſko's foreſts ring,
And wondering Volga hears the muſes ſing.
Did not the painted kings of India greet
Our Queen, and lay their ſceptres at her feet?
Chiefs who full bowls of hoſtile blood had quaff'd,
Fam'd for the javelin, and invenom'd ſhaft,
Whoſe haughty brows made ſavages adore,
Nor bow'd to leſs than ſtars or ſun before.
Her pitying ſmile accepts their ſuppliant claim,
And adds four monarchs to the Chriſtian name.

Bleſt uſe of power! O virtuous pride in kings
And like his bounty, whence dominion ſprings!
Which o'er new worlds makes heaven's indulgence ſhine,
And ranges myriads under laws divine!
Well bought with all that thoſe ſweet regions hold,
With groves of ſpices, and with mines of gold.
Fearleſs our merchant now purſues his gain,
And roams ſecurely o'er the boundleſs main.
Now o'er his head the polar bear he ſpies,
And freezing ſpangles of the Lapland ſkies;
Now ſwells his canvas to the ſultry line,
With glittering ſpoils where Indian grottos ſhine,
Where fumes of incenſe glad the ſouthern ſeas,
And wafted citron ſcents the balmy breeze.
Here nearer ſuns prepare the ripening gem,
To grace great Anne's imperial diadem,
And here the ore, whoſe melted maſs ſhall yield
On faithful coins each memorable field,
Which, mix'd with medals of immortal Rome,
May clear diſputes, and teach the times to come.
In circling beams ſhall godlike Anna glow,
And Churchill's ſword hang o'er the proſtrate foe;
In comely wounds ſhall bleeding worthies ſtand,
Webb's firm platoon, and Lumley's faithful band,
Bold Mordaunt in Iberian trophies dreſt,
And Campbell's dragon on his dauntleſs breaſt,
Great Ormond's deeds on Vigo's ſpoils enroll'd,
And Guiſcard's knife on Harley's Chili gold.
And if the muſe, O Briſtol, might decree,
Here Granville noted by the lyre ſhould be,
The lyre for Granville, and the croſs for thee.
Such are the honours grateful Britain pays;
So patriots merit, and ſo monarchs praiſe.
O'er diſtant times ſuch records ſhall prevail,
When Engliſh numbers, antiquated, fail:
A trifling ſong the muſe can only yield,
And ſooth her ſoldiers panting from the field.
To ſweet retirements ſee them ſafe convey'd,
And raiſe their battles in the rural ſhade,
From fields of death to Woodſtock's peaceful glooms,
(The poet's haunt) Britannia's hero comes—
Begin, my muſe, and ſoftly touch the ſtring:
Here Henry lov'd; and Chaucer learn'd to ſing.
Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elyſian ſoil!
Thou faireſt ſpot of fair Britannia's iſle!
Where kings of old, conceal'd, forgot the throne,
And beauty was content to ſhine unknown;
Where love and war by turns pavillions rear,
And Henry's bowers near Blenheim's dome appear;
The weary'd champion lull in ſoft alcoves,
The nobleſt boaſt of thy romantic groves.
Oft, if the muſe preſage, ſhall he be ſeen
By Roſamonda fleeting o'er the green,
In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty ſhades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades,
O'er the fam'd echoing vaults his name ſhall bound,
And hill on hill reflect the favourite ſound.
Here, here at leaſt thy love for arms give o'er,
Nor, one world conquer'd, fondly wiſh for more.
Vice of great ſouls alone! O thirſt of fame!
The muſe admires it, while ſhe ſtrives to blame.
Thy toils be now to chaſe the bounding deer,
Or view the courſers ſtretch in wild career.
This lovely ſcene ſhall ſoothe thy ſoul to reſt,
And wear each dreadful image from thy breaſt.
With pleaſure, by thy conqueſts ſhalt thou ſee
Thy queen triumphant, and all Europe free,
No cares, henceforth, ſhall thy repoſe deſtroy,
But what thou giv'ſt the world thyſelf enjoy.
Sweet ſolitude! when life's gay hours are paſt,
Howe'er we range, in thee we fix at laſt;
Toſt through tempeſtuous ſeas (the voyage o'er)
Pale we look back, and bleſs thy friendly ſhore.
Our own ſtrict judges our paſt life we ſcan,
And aſk if glory hath enlarg'd the ſpan;
If bright the proſpect, we the grave defy,
Truſt future ages, and contented die.
When ſtrangers from far diſtant climes ſhall come,
To view the pomp of this triumphant dome,
Where rear'd aloft diſſembled trophies ſtand,
And breathing labours of the ſculptor's hand,
Where Kneller's art ſhall paint the flying Gaul,
And Bourbon's woes ſhall fill the ſtory'd wall;
Heirs of thy blood ſhall o'er their bounteous board
Fix Europe's guard, thy monumental ſword,
Banners that oft have wav'd on conquer'd walls,
And trumps, that drown'd the groans of gaſping Gauls.
Fair dames ſhall oft, with curious eye, explore
The coſtly robes that ſlaughter'd generals wore,
Rich trappings from the Danube's whirpools brought,
(Heſperian nuns the gorgeous broidery wrought,
Belts ſtiff with gold, the Boian horſeman's pride,
And Gaul's fair flowers, in human crimſon dy'd)
Of Churchill's race, perhaps, ſome lovely boy
Shall mark the burniſh'd ſteel that hangs on high,
Shall gaze tranſported on its glittering charms,
And reach it ſtruggling with unequal arms,
By ſigns the drum's tumultuous ſound requeſt,
Then ſeek, in ſtarts, the huſhing mother's breaſt.
So, in the painter's animated frame,
Where Mars embraces the ſoft Paphian dame,
The little loves in ſport his fauchion wield,
Or join their ſtrength to heave his ponderous ſhield:
One ſtrokes the plume in Tityon's gore embrued,
And one the ſpear, that reeks with Typhon's blood:
Another's infant brows the helm ſuſtain,
He nods his creſt, and frights the ſhrieking train.
Thus, the rude tempeſt of the field o'erblown,
Shall whiter rounds of ſmiling years roll on,
Our victors, bleſt in peace, forget their wars,
Enjoy paſt dangers, and abſolve the ſtars.
But, oh! what ſorrows ſhall bedew your urns,
Ye honour'd ſhades, whom widow'd Albion mourns!
If your thin forms yet diſcontented moan,
And haunt the mangled manſions, once your own!
Behold what flowers the pious muſes ſtrow,
And tears which in the midſt of triumph flow;
Cypreſs and bays your envy'd brows ſurround,
Your names the tender matrons heart ſhall wound,
And the ſoft maid grow penſive at the ſound.

Accept, great Anne, the tears their memory draws,
Who nobly periſh'd in their ſovereign's cauſe:
For thou in pity bid'ſt the war give o'er,
Mourn'ſt thy ſlain heroes, nor wilt venture more.
Vaſt price of blood on each victorious day!
(But Europe's freedom doth that price repay)
Lamented triumphs! when one breath muſt tell,
That Marlborough conquer'd, and that Dormer fell.
Great Queen! whoſe name ſtrikes haughty monarchs pale,
On whoſe juſt ſceptre hangs Europa's ſcale,
Whoſe arm like mercy wounds, decides like fate,
On whoſe decree the nations anxious wait:
From Albion's cliffs thy wide-extended hand
Shall o'er the main to far Peru command;
So vaſt a tract whoſe wide domain ſhall run,
Its circling ſkies ſhall ſee no ſetting ſun.
Thee, thee an hundred languages ſhall claim,
And ſavage Indians ſwear by Anna's name;
The line and poles ſhall own thy rightful ſway,
And thy commands the ſever'd globe obey.
Round the vaſt ball thy new dominions chain
The watery kingdoms, and controul the main;
Magellan's ſtraits to Gibraltar they join,
Acroſs the ſeas a formidable line;
The ſight of adverſe Gaul we fear no more,
But pleas'd ſee Dunkirk now a guiltleſs ſhore;
In vain great Neptune tore the narrow ground,
And meant his waters for Britannia's bound;
Her giant genius takes a mighty ſtride,
And ſets his foot beyond the encroaching tide;
On either bank the land its maſter knows,
And in the midſt the ſubject ocean flows.
So near proud Rhodes, acroſs the raging flood,
Stupenduous form! the vaſt Coluſſus ſtood,
(While at one foot their thronging gallies ride,
A whole hour's ſail ſcare reach the farther ſide)
Betwixt his brazen thighs, in looſe array,
Ten thouſand ſtreamers on the billows play.
By Harley's counſels Dunkirk now reſtor'd
To Britain's empire, owns her ancient lord.
In him transfus'd his godlike father reigns,
Rich in the blood which ſwell'd that patriot's veins,
Who boldly faithful met his ſovereign's frown,
And ſcorn'd for gold to yield th' important town.
His ſon was born the raviſh'd prey to claim,
And France ſtill trembles at an Harley's name.
A fort ſo dreadful to our Engliſh ſhore,
Our fleets ſcarce fear'd the ſands or tempeſts more,
Whoſe vaſt expences to ſuch ſums amount,
That the tax'd Gaul ſcarce furniſh'd out th' account,
Whoſe walls ſuch bulwarks, ſuch vaſt towers restrain,
Its weakeſt ramparts are the rocks and main,
His boaſt great Louis yields, and cheaply buys
Thy friendſhip, Anna, with the mighty prize.
Holland repining, and in grief caſt down,
Sees the new glories of the Britiſh crown:
Ah! may they ne'er provoke thee to the fight,
Nor foes, more dreadful than the Gaul, invite,
Soon may they hold the olive, ſoon aſſuage
Their ſecret murmurs, nor call forth thy rage,
To rend their banks, and pour, at one command,
Thy realm, the ſea, o'er their precarious land.

Henceforth be thine, vice-gerent of the ſkies,
Scorn'd worth to raiſe, and vice in robes chaſtiſe,
To dry the orphan's tears, and from the bar
Chaſe the brib'd judge, and huſh the wordy war,
Deny the curſt blaſphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age.
Bleſt change! the ſoldier's late deſtroying hand
Shall rear new temples in his native land;
Miſtaken zealots ſhall with fear behold,
And beg admittance in our ſacred fold;
On her own works the pious queen ſhall ſmile,
And turn her cares upon her favourite iſle.
So the keen bolt a warrior angel aims,
Array'd in clouds, and wrapt in mantling flames;
He bears a tempeſt on his ſounding wings,
And his red arm the forky vengeance flings;
At length, heaven's wrath appeas'd, he quits the war,
To roll his orb, and guide his deſtin'd ſtar,
To ſhed kind fate, and lucky hours beſtow,
And ſmile propitious on the world below.
Around thy throne ſhall faithful nobles wait,
Theſe guard the church, and thoſe direct the ſtate.
To Briſtol, graceful in maternal tears,
The church her towery forehead gently rears,
She begs her pious ſon t' aſſert her cauſe,
Defend her rights, and reinforce her laws;
With holy zeal the ſacred work begin,
To bend the ſtubborn, and the meek to win.
Our Oxford's earl in careful thought ſhall ſtand,
To raiſe his queen, and ſave a ſinking land.
The wealthieſt glebe to ravenous Spaniards known,
He marks, and makes the golden prize our own,
Content with hands unſoil'd to guard the prize,
And keep the ſhore with undeſiring eyes.
So round the tree, that bore Heſperian gold,
The ſacred watch lay curl'd in many a fold,
His eyes uprearing to th' untaſted prey,
The ſleepleſs guardian waſted life away.
Beneath the peaceful olives, rais'd by you,
Her ancient pride ſhall every art renew,
(The arts with you, ſam'd Harcourt, ſhall defend,
And courtly Bolingbroke the muſe's friend.)
With piercing eye ſome ſearch where nature plays,
And trace the wanton through her darkſome maze,
Whence health from herbs; from ſeeds how groves begun,
How vital ſtreams in circling eddies run.
Some teach why round the ſun the ſpheres advance,
In the fix'd meaſures of their myſtic dance,
How tides, when heav'd by preſſing moons, o'erflow,
And ſun-born Iris paints her ſhowery bow.
In happy chains our daring language bound,
Shall ſport no more in arbitrary ſound,
But buſkin'd bards henceforth ſhall wiſely rage,
And Grecian plans reform Britannia's ſtage:
Till Congreve bids her ſmile, Auguſta ſtands
And longs to weep when flowing Rowe commands.
Britain's ſpectators ſhall their ſtrength combine
To mend our morals, and our taſte refine,
Fight virtue's cauſe, ſtand up in wit's defence,
Win us from vice, and laugh us into ſenſe.
Nor, Prior, haſt thou huſh'd the trump in vain,
Thy lyre ſhall now revive her mirthful ſtrain,

New tales shall now be told; if right I see,
The soul of Chaucer is restor'd in thee.
Garth, in majestic numbers, to the stars
Shall raise mock heroes, and fantastic wars;
Like the young spreading laurel, Pope, thy name
Shoots up with strength, and rises into fame;
With Philips shall the peaceful vallies ring,
And Britain hear a second Spenser sing. [fine,
That much-lov'd youth, whom Utrecht's wall con-
To Bristol's praises shall his Strafford's join:
He too, from whom attentive Oxford draws
Rules for just thinking, and poetic laws,
To growing bards his learned aid shall lend,
The strictest critic, and the kindest friend.
Ev'n mine, a bashful muse, whose rude essays
Scarce hope for pardon, not aspire to praise,
Cherish'd by you in time may grow to fame,
And mine survive with Bristol's glorious name.
Fir'd with the views this glittering scene displays,
And smit with passion for my country's praise,
My artless reed attempts this lofty theme,
Where sacred Isis rolls her ancient stream;
In cloister'd domes the great Philippa's pride;
Where learning blooms, while fame and worth preside,
Where the fifth Henry arts and arms was taught,
And Edward form'd his Cressy, yet unfought,
Where laurel'd bards have struck the warbling strings,
The seat of sages. and the nurse of kings.
Here thy commands, O Lancaster, inflame
My eager breast to raise the British name,
Urge on my soul, with no ignoble pride,
To woo the muse, whom Addison enjoy'd,
See that bold swain to heaven sublimely soar,
Pursue at distance, and his steps adore.

TO MR. ADDISON,

ON HIS OPERA OF ROSAMOND.

" ———Ne fortè pudori
" Sit tibi musa lyræ solers, et cantor Apollo."

The opera first Italian masters taught,
Enrich'd with songs, but innocent of thought;
Britannia's learned theatre disdains
Melodious trifles, and enervate strains;
And blushes, on her injur'd stage to see
Nonsense well-tun'd, and sweet stupidity.
No charms are wanting to thy artful song,
Soft as Corelli, and as Virgil strong,
From words so sweet new grace the notes receive,
And music borrows helps she us'd to give.
Thy style hath match'd what ancient Romans knew,
Thy flowing numbers far excel the new.
Their cadence in such easy sound convey'd,
The height of thought may seem superfluous aid;
Yet in such charms the noble thoughts abound,
That needless seem the sweets of easy sound.
Landskips how gay the bowery grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds!
What art can trace the visionary scenes,
The flowery groves, and everlasting greens,
The babbling sounds that mimic echo plays,
The fairy shade, and its eternal maze?
Nature and art in all their charms combin'd,
And all Elysium to one view confin'd!
No further could imagination roam,
Till Vanbrugh fram'd, and Marlborough rais'd the dome.
Ten thousand pangs my anxious bosom tear,
When drown'd in tears I see th' imploring fair;
When hards less soft the moving words supply,
A seeming justice dooms the nymph to die;
But here she begs, nor can she beg in vain
(In dirges thus expiring swans complain);
Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And every tear in lines so mournful flows;
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live.
Let joy salute fair Rosamonda's shade,
And wreaths of myrtle crown the lovely maid.
While now perhaps with Dido's ghost she roves,
And hears and tells the story of their loves,
Alike they mourn, alike they bless their fate,
Since love, which made them wretched, makes them great.
Nor longer that relentless doom bemoan,
Which gain'd a Virgil, and an Addison,
Accept, great monarch of the British lays,
The tribute song an humble subject pays.
So tries the artless lark her early flight,
And soars, to hail the god of verse and light.
Unrival'd as unmatch'd be still thy fame,
And thy own laurels shade thy envy'd name:
Thy name, the boast of all the tuneful quire,
Shall tremble on the strings of every lyre;
While the charm'd reader with thy thought complies
Feels corresponding joys or sorrows rise,
And views thy Rosamond with Henry's eyes.

TO THE SAME,

ON HIS TRAGEDY OF CATO.

Too long hath love engross'd Britannia's stage,
And sunk to softness all our tragic rage:
By that alone did empires fall or rise,
And fate depended on a fair-one's eyes:
The sweet infection, mix'd with dangerous art,
Debas'd our manhood, while it sooth'd the heart.
You scorn to raise a grief thyself must blame,
Nor from our weakness steel a vulgar fame:
A patriot's fall may justly melt the mind,
And tears flow nobly, shed for all mankind.
How do our souls with generous pleasure glow!
Our hearts exulting, while our eyes o'erflow,
When thy firm hero stands beneath the weight
Of all his sufferings venerably great;
Rome's poor remains still sheltering by his side,
With conscious virtue, and becoming pride!
The aged oak thus rears his head in air,
His sap exhausted, and his branches bare;
'Midst storms and earthquakes, he maintains his state,
Fixt deep in earth, and fasten'd by his weight:
His naked boughs still lend the shepherds aid,
And his old trunk projects an awful shade

Amidſt the joys triumphant peace beſtows,
Our patriots ſadden at his glorious woes;
Awhile they let the world's great buſineſs wait,
Anxious for Rome, and ſigh for Cato's fate.
Here taught how ancient heroes roſe to fame,
Our Britons crowd, and catch the Roman flame,
Where ſtates and ſenates well might lend an ear,
And kings and prieſts without a bluſh appear.
France boaſts no more, but fearful to engage,
Now firſt pays homage to her rival's ſtage,
Haſtes to learn thee, and learning ſhall ſubmit
Alike to Britiſh arms, and Britiſh wit:
No more ſhe'll wonder, forc'd to do us right,
Who think like Romans, could like Romans fight.
Thy Oxford ſmiles this glorious work to ſee,
And fondly triumphs in a ſon like thee.
The ſenates, conſuls, and the gods of Rome,
Like old acquaintance at their native home,
In thee we find: each deed, each word expreſt,
And every thought that ſwell'd a Roman breaſt,
We trace each hint that could thy ſoul inſpire
With Virgil's judgment, and with Lucan's fire;
We know thy worth, and, give us leave to boaſt,
We moſt admire, becauſe we know thee moſt.

THE ROYAL PROGRESS.

When Brunſwick firſt appear'd, each honeſt heart,
Intent on verſe, diſdain'd the rules of art;
For him the ſongſters, in unmeaſur'd odes,
Debas'd Alcides, and dethron'd the gods,
In golden chains the kings of India led,
Or rent the turban from the ſultan's head.
One, in old fables, and the Pagan ſtrain,
With nymphs and tritons, wafts him o'er the main;
Another draws fierce Lucifer in arms,
And fills th' infernal region with alarms;
A third awakes ſome druid, to foretel
Each future triumph, from his dreary cell.
Exploded fancies! that in vain deceive,
While the mind naufeates what ſhe can't believe.
My muſe th' expected hero ſhall purſue
From clime to clime, and keep him ſtill in view;
His ſhining march deſcribe in faithful lays,
Content to paint him, nor preſume to praiſe;
Their charms, if charms they have, the truth ſupplies,
And from the theme unlabour'd beauties riſe.
By longing nations for the throne deſign'd,
And call'd to guard the rights of human-kind;
With ſecret grief his godlike ſoul repines,
And Britain's crown with joyleſs luſtre ſhines,
While prayers and tears his deſtin'd progreſs ſtay,
And crowds of mourners choke their ſovereign's way.
Not ſo he march'd, when hoſtile ſquadrons ſtood
In ſcenes of death, and fir'd his generous blood;
When his hot courſer paw'd th' Hungarian plain,
And adverſe legions ſtood the ſhock in vain.
His frontiers paſt, the Belgian bounds he views,
And croſs the level fields his march purſues.
Here pleas'd the land of freedom to ſurvey,
He greatly ſcorns the thirſt of boundleſs ſway.
O'er the thin ſoil, with ſilent joy, he ſpies
Tranſplanted woods, and borrow'd verdure riſe
Where every meadow won with toil and blood,
From haughty tyrants and the raging flood,
With fruit and flowers the careful hind ſupplies,
And clothes the marſhes in a rich diſguiſe.
Such wealth for frugal hands doth heaven decree,
And ſuch thy gift, celeſtial Liberty!
Through ſtately towns, and many a fertile plain,
The pomp advances to the neighbouring main,
Whole nations crowd around with joyful cries,
And view the hero with inſatiate eyes.
In Haga's towers he waits, till eaſtern gales
Propitious riſe to ſwell the Britiſh ſails.
Hither the fame of England's monarch brings
The vows and friendſhips of the neighbouring kings;
Mature in wiſdom, his extenſive mind
Takes in the blended intereſts of mankind,
The world's great patriot. Calm thy anxious breaſt,
Secure in him, O Europe, take thy reſt;
Henceforth thy kingdoms ſhall remain confin'd
By rocks or ſtreams, the mounds which heaven deſign'd;
The Alps their new-made monarch ſhall reſtrain,
Nor ſhall thy hills, Pirene, riſe in vain.
But ſee! to Britain's iſle the ſquadrons ſtand,
And leave the ſinking towers, and leſſening land.
The royal bark bounds o'er the floating plain,
Breaks through the billows, and divides the main.
O'er the vaſt deep, great monarch, dart thine eyes,
A watery proſpect bounded by the ſkies:
Ten thouſand veſſels, from ten thouſand ſhores,
Bring gums and gold, and either India's ſtores:
Behold the tributes haſtening to thy throne,
And ſee the wide horizon all thy own.
Still is it thine; though now the cheerful crew
Hail Albion's cliffs; juſt whitening to the view.
Before the wind with ſwelling ſails they ride,
Till Thames receives them in his opening tide.
The monarch hears the thundering peals around,
From trembling woods and echoing hills rebound,
Nor miſſes yet, amid the deafening train,
The roarings of the hoarſe-reſounding main.
As in the flood he ſails, from either ſide
He views his kingdom in his rural pride;
A various ſcene the wide ſpread landſkip yields,
O'er rich encloſures and luxuriant fields;
A lowing herd each fertile paſture fills,
And diſtant flocks ſtray o'er a thouſand hills.
Fair Greenwich hid in woods with new delight,
Shade above ſhade, now riſes to the ſight;
His woods ordain'd to viſit every ſhore,
And guard the iſland which they grac'd before.
The ſun now rolling down the weſtern way,
A blaze of fires renews the fading day;
Unnumber'd barks the regal barge enfold,
Brightening the twilight with its beamy gold;
Leſs thick the finny ſhoals, a countleſs fry,
Before the whale or kingly dolphin fly.
In one vaſt ſhout he ſeeks the crowded ſtrand,
And in a peal of thunder gains the land.
Welcome, great ſtranger, to our longing eyes,
Oh! king deſir'd, adopted Albion cries.
For thee the eaſt breath'd out a proſperous breeze,
Bright were the ſuns, and gently ſwell'd the ſeas.
Thy preſence did each doubtful heart compoſe,
And factions wonder'd that they once were foes.

That joyful day they loſt each hoſtile name,
The ſame their aſpect, and their voice the ſame.
